WILL TECH LAYOFFS IMPACT US?

County’s growing economy, location boosts optimism

BY BILL HORNER III
News + Record Staff

Large-scale layoffs among U.S. technology companies — including more than 58,000 cuts in January alone — and recession fears are painting a gloomy jobs forecast across the U.S. Not here, though. That’s even after 3M Co., which owns a 95,000-sq.-ft. plant just south of Pittsboro, became the latest company to announce layoffs. In its case, 3M said two weeks ago it would cut 2,500 manufacturing jobs — just over 2.6% of its workforce — after seeing its profits in the last fiscal year drop from $1.34 billion to $541 million.

The company didn’t say where jobs would be eliminated. Given rising interest rates and a widespread slowdown in the housing boom that’s helped drive the economy since mid-2020, though, the Chatham plant — it produces materials used in making asphalt shingles — could be a target.

200,000 jobs gone

3M isn’t alone: rising interest rates, inflation and a pullback from a pandemic-driven hiring splurge has led some of the nation’s largest tech companies to cut payrolls. Google’s parent company, Alphabet, announced recently it was cutting 12,000 jobs — about 6% of its workforce. It joined Amazon (18,000), Facebook parent company Meta (11,000), Microsoft (10,000), Twitter (4,000) and IBM (3,900) in making job cuts.

Technology firms have eliminated nearly 200,000 jobs since the start of 2022, according to Layoffs.fyi, which tracks the tech industry. Many of those 58,000 January layoffs came from companies that underwent hiring binges in the latter part of 2020 and 2021.

“We hired for a different economic reality than the one we face today,” Alphabet CEO Sundar Pichai wrote in a note to employees posted on the company’s website.

A different reality here

But that’s tech. The reality in Chatham County looks different, observers in the county contend — and it’s not just because of the large-scale hiring VinFast and Wolfspeed plan here.

“Our existing industries, along with

PITTSBORO’S LAWSUIT

Town sues 20 manufacturing companies over contamination

BY LISA SORG
N.C. Policy Watch

PITTSBORO — The town of Pittsboro has sued more than 20 companies, including Chemours, DuPont and 3M, BASF and several other manufacturers of PFAS, for allegedly polluting its water supply with the toxic compounds.

The lawsuit was filed last Thursday in Chatham County Superior Court. It asks the court to force the companies to reimburse the town for expenses related to reducing PFAS in drinking water, plus damages related to “loss of use” and the degradation of natural resources.

The town is requesting a trial to determine additional punitive damages, which can be assessed if a judge or jury finds the conduct was intentional, fraudulent or malicious.

PFAS, also known as perfluorinated and polyfluoroalkyl substances, are widespread in the environment. They are used in manufacturing or are byproducts of that process. The compounds are present in Teflon-coated cookware, water- and stain-proof clothing, cosmetics, furniture, fast food packaging, microwave popcorn bags, pizza boxes and some types of firefighting foam, known as AFFF.

Pittsboro’s drinking water supply, the Haw River, have some of the highest levels of PFAS in the state, according to sampling conducted by scientists with the NC PFAS Testing Network.

PITTSBORO — At the southwest corner of the town’s traffic circle, SoCo Pittsboro aims to bring a return to the bustling downtown lifestyle that “originally put Pittsboro on the map,” in the words of its developer.

With the additions of Havoc Brewing Company in July and Doherty’s Irish

Pub and Restaurant — announced last week — coming to the complex, SoCo developer and co-owner Greg Stafford hopes to continue his vision of creating a lively downtown scene.

“We hope that corner would become really, really a neat place to be and keep downtown Pittsboro a neat place to be,” Stafford said. “They’re [his tenants] putting a very significant investment in downtown Pittsboro and turning that corner into an even more inviting space ... it’s going to be pretty cool.”

The SoCo space previously housed the Justice Motor Company, which was owned by brothers Frank and Fred Justice. Stafford and his wife Paula bought the building from the Justice family in 2016. Since then, the Staffords have worked to bring unique eateries to downtown Pittsboro, including The Mod and now, Havoc and Doherty’s.

“Mr. Justice decided to sell the property and was kind enough to sell it to us,” Stafford recounted. “What he wanted and what we want is a place to do something in Pittsboro ... We want it to become a

In his new role, he’s still patrolling — only now as the town’s code enforcement officer, responsible for ensuring its rules and ordinances are observed.

Gallimore was seeking a job with a more regular work schedule, so when the town transitioned away from having code enforcement services performed by an outside contractor, he

Assault charges dropped against Hudson

BY BEN RAPPAPORT
News + Record Staff

PITTSBORO — A Chatham County District Court judge dropped all five charges of assault with a deadly weapon against a Pittsboro Elementary School teacher last Wednesday after reviewing the case and hearing character references from his neighbors.

On July 30, Eric Hudson was arrested and charged after an incident that had occurred on July 10. Two teens involved — a brother and a sister — told the News + Record that on that day, Hudson chased after the car in which they and three others were traveling on Pleasant Hill Road. Hudson is accused of chasing the teens, passing them in his car, and stopping suddenly in front of them, causing a collision. The teens say Hudson appeared to brandish a gun in the process of confronting them. Hudson continued to follow the teens, they say, until they were able to elude him.

After further investigation into the incident, the District Attorney’s Office said it was unlikely Hudson had a gun in the incident. While the Chatham County Sheriff’s Office’s listed a handgun as a “weapon” on its official report, a copy of the original arrest warrant for Hudson, dated July 30, lists the “deadly weapon” as a gray Lexus and doesn’t refer to a gun.

At a Jan. 25 court appearance, the assault charges were dropped, but Hudson did accept the charges of injury to personal property.

SILER CITY PARKS & RECREATION

New ‘master plan’ set to help study programs, amenities

BY TAYLOR HEEDEN
News + Record Staff

SILER CITY — Anticipated growth from new economic development projects have given town staff in Siler City the opportunity to re-examine its roadmap for the future.

The town’s Parks and Recreation Department is one of the primary beneficiaries.

Director Jack Clelland said his department selected — and commissioners approved — a contractor to assist in drafting a new comprehensive master plan to lay out parks and recreation goals for the next 30 years.

“The comprehensive master plan is going to take a look at the parks and recreation department as a whole,” Clelland said. “It’s going to look at our programs, our special events, our current amenities, and it’s going to compare that to a national standard, as well as other areas of similar populations.”

The Siler City Parks and Recreation Comprehensive Master Plan will be drafted over the next year or so through a process involving community engagement, analyzing Siler City’s recreation amenities and needs, and assessing best practices in comparable communities.

Clelland said the resulting plan will also look at incoming growth from economic development — especially from Wolfsped’s proposed Siler City facility — to see how parks and recreation will need to adapt.

“We want to make sure that we’re complementing the community as well,” he said. “So the master plan really is a roadmap — it’s really cool, and they’re fun to do because you learn a lot from them.”

He and his staff will meet in coming weeks with the contractor — WithersRavenel Civil & Environmental Engineering, based in Cary — to lay out the process for drafting the plan. That meeting will officially kick off the process and lay out the steps needed to draft the plan, including surveying the community, hosting information sessions, analyzing what other growing municipalities are doing and more.

“We want to get a baseline of where the community is with these facilities or amenities, or what they’re looking for in the department,” Clelland said. “Then, they (WithersRavenel) will take that information and compile it into a report with recommendations, potential financial costs of amenities or programs, etc.”

Clelland said the plan will include a list of milestones to complete, ranging from building new parks and amenities to renovating current facilities and more.

“You want to try to achieve or need to strive to achieve certain benchmarks within those years,” Clelland said. “This gives us the tools and information to guide you on that path of developing our department.”

Benchmark achievements within the master plan range from renovations to adding new facilities (such as a recreation center) or new programming and athletics teams. To prioritize projects, Clelland said it’s crucial for residents to provide input on what they want in parks and recreation opportunities.

“It’s very crucial to have public input, crucial to have your commissioners involved with the process and understand what’s being suggested as we go through the process as well,” he said. “We want them (the public) to come to parks and recreation for stuff that they enjoy ... We don’t want to create something or design something that doesn’t benefit the community.”

Clelland said he hopes to be able to have a final draft of the comprehensive plan in front of commissioners for approval within 18 months.

“It’s good to hear your community members and what they’re wanting from the department and what we may be missing and what we need to work on,” Clelland said. “We want to make sure that what we’re anticipating and what we’re going to offer is what the residents and community want.”

Public input for the master plan hasn’t been announced yet, but if residents have ideas or concerns regarding the town’s Parks and Recreation Department, they can email recreation@silercity.org or call 919-742-2699.

sought the opportunity.

“I’m still in what I would call the transition phase,” Gallimore said. “I’m not used to the office type of work, so it’s been a learning experience.”

Gallimore’s role with the town is to enforce codes and ordinances, so the job is to ensure code and ordinances are adhered to, and to step in to tackle violations when he sees them or when they’re reported.

Siler City’s “code of ordinances” is a lengthy list of the town’s laws and regulations addressing such issues as building standards, noise, abandoned and junked cars, solid waste collection, the use of guns or fireworks in town limits, whether smoking is permitted in town-owned vehicles (it’s not), littering, loitering, regulations that govern pawnbrokers and cab drivers and much more.

The town’s municipal code, found on its website, is 27 chapters long, some of which have more than 100 sections.

Before Gallimore was named the code enforcement officer, his job was done through a third party — State Code Enforcement Inc. — contracted by the town.

Town Manager Hank Raper approached the board of commissioners with a proposal to create a code enforcement officer position in town hall, bringing the process back in house. The board approved the motion on Oct. 3 last year.

Gallimore’s new job is to ensure residents and businesses adhere to the long list of dos and don’ts, and addressing violators and violations — in part by doing what he did in his old position:

enforcing the law of the land.

“Somebody may call in and say their neighbor has a junk car in their yard that looks bad, and I go out there to see if there’s a violation,” Gallimore said. “Different violations have different timeframes for fixing them. If there’s a junk pile in somebody’s front yard or something like that, they’ve got 10 days to clean it up, or I would start sending them civil penalties or hire a contractor to go out there and bill the residents for that.”

As a patrolman, Gallimore would hand out violations in the form of tickets or make arrests.

In the new role, he does things like posting citations on condemned buildings, mailing warnings to homes with unkempt yards and finding ways to fix things that negatively impact the health and safety of the town and its residents.

“When I was in the police department, there was this different kind of relationship (with residents),” Gallimore said. “They didn’t want to talk to you because I could arrest them ... Now I can get out of the car and talk to them about how they can correct these civil violations.”

Gallimore said his previous experience as a police officer comes in handy. He knows local residents and town staff, and knows his way around town hall.

“It feels like I’ve had to deal with everybody in town on one way or the other, whether it’s been a traffic stop or just going to their house to respond to a 911 call,” he said. “Now, I’m able to get rapport with people in a different way.”

Gallimore wants to establish a regular routine to go out with town commissioners to visit their respective districts, and to host town hall-style meetings with residents to hear concerns.

“It might be one church in this district one time, and then another church or another district,” he said. “They can come, and it’s a way for the community to ask questions once every other month.”

Ultimately, he wants residents to take pride in their community. Ensuring buildings and green spaces adhere to high standards is a first step to making that happen.

“I want to make it so when somebody is driving through town, they don’t look at it and think this is a trashy town,” Gallimore said. “I don’t want that to be said, so that’s one reason why I think it’s a good position to be in ... I want people to take pride in our communities.”

GUEST COLUMN | DENNIS STREETS

An unrealized vision

I will soon be traveling to Seminole, Florida, where I spent my youth. As you might imagine, I am filled with memories.

I will be attending the wedding of the daughter of one of my best childhood friends who passed away several years ago.

In 1970, he heard me give the graduation address to our high school class. As seniors, we had witnessed the assassinations of Martin Luther King Jr. and Robert Kennedy. We felt and feared the divisive Vietnam War. We heard U.S. Astronaut Neil Armstrong say, “That’s one small step for a man, one giant leap for mankind,” as he became the first human to plant his feet on the moon.

I used my remarks that day to express my hopes and share words to inspire our future endeavors.

I expressed my desire to see an end to war, yearning for peace around the world.

I also challenged us to come to know what we had not experienced. My Florida high school was all-white (even though we had students of color in our district) and most of us baby boomers lived in middle-class families.

Among what I suggested was that we needed to know what it means or doesn’t mean to:

- be old and discarded by labor and family;
- have a skin that is not white; and
- eat or not eat the same meager foods every day.

I cautioned my classmates that until we understand such things, we will neither have the will nor create the means to change what needs changed and preserve that warranting preservation.

Although more than 50 years have passed, sadly we still face many of the same issues.

Per the Council on Foreign Relations, there are currently more than 25 conflicts around the world, including the war in Ukraine. We also regularly feel the pain of mass shootings, including those in schools.

According to an October 2020 report of the Schwartz Center for Economic Policy Analysis, “Unemployment rates for workers 55 and older exceeded those of mid-career workers for the length of the pandemic — the first time since 1973 such an unemployment gap has persisted for six months or longer.” The analysts found that “older workers who are Black, female, or lack a college degree experienced higher rates of job loss and are more exposed to retirement risks.”

While families really are the backbone of long-term care; it cannot be ignored that the perpetrators of nearly 6 in 10 cases of elder abuse and neglect are family members.

And then there is the lingering issue of malnutrition. As the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture reported in 2021, 33.8 million people lived in food-insecure households. It is estimated that 12.5% of households with children are food insecure. The risk is twice as high among Black and Hispanic children.

While we have seen progress since 1970 — and in some cases may have helped bring it about — this boomer remains committed to helping our younger generations achieve greater success.

I concluded my graduation address by paraphrasing words of the late U.S. Senator Robert Kennedy. “The future is not a gift; it is an achievement” — a challenge and struggle to be won.

Furry little rodent vs. high-tech gadgets

BOB WACHS
Movin’ Around

Throughout my young life, there have been many things I wanted to be and do, both professionally and personally.

It’s been interesting how some of them turned out happening while others were far from the mark.

For instance, on the professional level, as a youngster when I realized I would never pitch in Yankee Stadium or even be on the grounds crew or sweep the stands or clean the toilets, I decided I wanted to be the next great sports writer. I did write some sports stories as a youngster, most notably Pittsboro High School football and basketball game recaps for the Chatham Record in the 1960s when Mr. Willie Morgan was the editor.

In the early 1970s, after I had flunked out of Carolina for the umpteenth time and Alan Resch had hired me to replace Mr. Willie, I covered Northwood games. When the late Jack Shaner was coaching football there, he called me “Grantland Rice” (look it up if you don’t know). I, in turn, called him Knute Rockne (again, look it up if you don’t know who he was). While in that period of my life, I saw what I think is the best high school football game I ever saw — Northwood vs. Jordan-Matthews in 1971. Northwood came back from a 13-7 fourth-quarter deficit to win 20-13. All the stands were packed and fans were standing around the field five- and six-deep.

As things turned out, I never made it to my dream job upon graduating from high school — a job with the Durham Morning Herald to cover UNC football, sit in the Kenan Stadium press box on Saturday afternoons, eat fried chicken box lunches and get paid for it all. Forty years in vocational ministry was nowhere on my radar at the time.

I’ve often wondered about that turn of events, not that I’m unhappy. Quite the opposite. But as Ol’ Man Winter cranks up toward high gear, I wonder about some other professions, namely Weather Geek, especially as folks pay attention to the groundhog around now.

You know the story. When Punxsutawney Phil in Pennsylvania or Sir Walter Wally in Raleigh or whomever sticks his furry little nose out of the ground on Groundhog Day, if he sees his shadow we’re in for six more weeks of winter. If he doesn’t, well, then, better days are coming. The issue with all that is some folks put more stock in the little guy than in the weather forecasters with all their high-tech gadgets. That has to drive them bonkers.

In an effort to do my part and be a good citizen, I would like to suggest a more accurate forecasting system than the groundhog. I call it “Bob’s Weather String” and it works like this:

I have a piece of string tied to a tree limb right outside my study window. That way I can forecast the day’s weather without having to go outside; instead I just sneak a peek at the string.

If it’s hanging sideways, that means we’re going to have high winds. If it’s wet, expect rain. If it’s hanging all frayed, that means dry conditions. If it’s all white, we’re having snow. If there is smoke coming from it, it’s hot enough to fry an egg on the sidewalk. If it’s gone, watch out for tornadoes or hurricanes.

I hope this brief explanation will be a help to those considering meteorology as a career and to the rest of us who just want to know tomorrow’ weather.

Black Poetry Month — Lucille Clifton

ANDREW
TROUTMAN
Hope Matters

How do you read poetry?

This February, I’d like to help you explore that question through the work of four of my favorite Black poets. First up is Lucille Clifton (1936-2010).

Encountering a Clifton poem on the page, you might first observe the brevity. As the mother of six children, her early poems were written in her head throughout the day as she cooked, cleaned and cared for others. The poems had to be short enough to memorize!

But don’t let the apparent simplicity fool you; anyone who has held a seashell in the palm of her hand knows something small can be intricate. In a few words, Clifton plumbs the profound. For instance, in describing chopping collard greens, she senses “the bond of living things everywhere.” Her phrase “poem this” attests to the mystic encounter of discovering the extraordinary in the ordinary.

The phrase “poem this” also makes a noun into a verb. It breaks the standard rules of English.

Clifton’s poems often lack punctuation or capitalization. The deeper meaning is that, writing from her racial and social location, she broke the rules of a language that so often denigrated Black people, particularly Black women: “how dangerous it is to be born with breasts ... how dangerous it is to wear dark skin.” Clifton sought new forms and expressions of language to affirm Black life — “listen you a wonder.”

In her poem “slaveships,” Clifton notes that the names of ships in the Transatlantic slave trade were often theological, such as Jesus, Angel and Grace of God. In response, Clifton used her poetic imagination and inhabited the voice of religious figures, like John the Baptist and Mother Mary, to invent new metaphors like “blackness of a star” and “green of jesus” (an image of rebirth in spring).

In turn, Clifton’s poetry frequently invites readers to use their imaginations and consider her experience as a Black woman. Her poem “homage to my hips” is a delightful example! In the poem “won’t you come celebrate with me,” she proudly declares, “i have shaped ... a kind of life.”

While innovative with her language, Clifton was a student of tradition and rooted in the wider community. I am indebted to my study with scholar J. Kameron Carter for elucidating Clifton’s use of lower-case “i” throughout her work. In terms of the Afro-Caribbean worldview, the oft-repeated “i” generally meant “we” and was indicative of the belief that the divine connects all of life — “the bond of living things everywhere.”

In an interview, Clifton remarked, “Writing ... is a way of remembering I am not alone.” Reading Clifton can provide this reminder for all of us. In perhaps her most famous poem, “blessing the boats,” Clifton encouraged readers, “may the tide ... carry you out beyond the face of fear.” Clear-eyed about the historical abuses and present racial injustices, Clifton also evokes words of hope for every month of the year — “today we are possible.”

LETTER

Questions for a grim anniversary in Ukraine

TO THE EDITOR:

As the grim anniversary approaches of the tragic Russian invasion of Ukraine, mental health almost requires numbness. We train our eyes to flash quickly past disturbing headlines, such as “Ukraine Under New Missile Barrage as Russia Warns West about Tank Pledges.” After all, upsetting events abound right here in the U.S.

But some questions about this disastrous war seem urgent. For me, these questions boil down essentially to this startling uncertainty: What actually are our government’s aims in Ukraine, and how are they being justified by our leaders?

Unfortunately, clarity is hard to come by. President Biden and his administration maintain that their aim is solely to enable Ukraine to defend itself against a brutal invasion — surely a noble goal. The purpose, these leaders say, of allocating over $100 billion and pouring increasingly controversial weapons into Ukraine has been to put our ally in a strong position for peace negotiations.

This fall, however, Ukraine was “winning,” by many accounts, having retaken key cities and pushed the Russian army back. Why, then, didn’t the U.S. and NATO use this “inflection point” to press for a cease-fire and serious peace negotiations? Why, instead, has the U.S. started encouraging Ukraine to attack Crimea, an essential part of Russia for most of the past 300 years? Why have NATO countries pressured Germany to abandon its post-World War II stance of military restraint and to send its Leopard tanks into battle against Russia — a move that is clearly awakening painful memories in both nations of the historic Soviet battles against the Nazis in which some 20 million Russians died?

Current events within Ukraine also raise some thorny questions. Since Ukrainian journalist Yuriy Nikolov broke a story recently about massive corruption in the Ukrainian defense department, four deputy ministers and five regional governors have resigned or been fired. Ukrainian democratic structures also appear increasingly sketchy. Even before the war, President Zelensky had banned most TV stations; now he has also banned 11 political parties and has rolled back important labor protections. Why is the U.S. willing to escalate support under these conditions?

These questions bring us back to where we started: What, truly, ARE our government’s aims? Only to support a vulnerable ally? Or — as Biden and Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin both said openly back in the spring — to “weaken Russia” and unseat Putin? I feel I must demand a response from our leaders. I need them to answer, also, how many innocent lives these goals are worth, and exactly how far they are willing to push the risk of nuclear Armageddon.

North Carolina economy continues to excel

JOHN HOOD

John Locke Foundation

North Carolina faces many challenges. You and I may disagree with how to rank those challenges, or what to do about them, but we share a belief that our state could be a better place than it is today. This reformist impulse is proper and useful. But we shouldn't let it make us unduly and unrealistically dour. Few states can match what North Carolina already has to offer — which is why few states match or exceed our growth rate.

The latest population data from the U.S. Census Bureau, for example, show that North Carolina's population grew by some 133,000 last year, to 10.7 million residents. Only Texas (471,000) and Florida (417,000) increased more in population during the period. In terms of annual growth rate, North Carolina ranked 9th at 1.3%, with Florida (1.9%) topping the list.

America's fastest-growing states are primarily in the Southeast and Mountain West. That's been true for some time now. Similarly, the places with the largest drops in population last year were also rather predictable. There were six-figure population declines in New York, California, and Illinois. In percentage terms, the fastest-declining states were New York, Illinois and Louisiana.

As for gross domestic product, North Carolina's economy has since the beginning of 2020 posted a compound annual growth rate of 2.8%, adjusted for inflation. That's significantly higher than the national (1.6%) and regional (2.1%) averages. Idaho (4.2%) ranked first in this category, followed by Tennessee (3.8%), Florida (3.6%), Utah (3.6%) and New Hampshire (2.9%). Our state ranked 8th.

Which states are slackers in economic growth? Well, Louisiana's GDP actually shrank by an average annual rate of 3%. Other places with net negative growth since January 2020 included Alaska, Wyoming, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Hawaii, New Mexico, West Virginia and Maryland.

As should come as no surprise to no one, I believe that the past decade of free-market reforms and fiscally conservative policies made North Carolina a more attractive place to live, work, invest and create new jobs. We went from having one of the worst-designed tax systems in the country to one of the best. Under laws already enacted by the General Assembly, our tax rate on personal income will decline to 3.99% by 2027. Our corporate tax will disappear entirely by 2029. I also credit infrastructure improvements and a series of regulatory-reform measures for improving North Carolina's business climate.

A Canadian think tank, the Fraser Institute, provides a handy way to track these changes over time. In the most recent iteration of its Economic Freedom of North America index, North Carolina ranked 9th. That represents a marked improvement from its 2010 rank of 19th. By the way, what state currently ranks first in economic freedom by Fraser's measure? Florida.

It is important to keep in mind, however, that government is not the primary driver of economic decisions — whether for good or for ill. All other things being equal, states with smaller, less-intrusive, and more-effective governments tend to grow faster than average. That's the finding of most (though not all) academic studies published over the past several decades.

Where the rubber meets the road, however, all other things are never equal. States differ significantly in geography, natural resources, population density and economic structure. Many factors that determine growth over time can only be modestly influenced by public policy, if at all.

Look again at that list of states with shrinking economies. While some of them are "blue" states with relatively high tax and regulatory burdens, others such as Wyoming and North Dakota don't fit that description. States overly reliant on industries such as oil drilling, mining and tourism have had a rough few years. Even Texas, a popular destination for migrating families and business alike, managed only to match the national average in GDP growth (1.6%).

North Carolina's economic portfolio is more diverse — and becoming more so over time. Is there room for improvement? Sure. But we already have a lot to be thankful for.

Why did we elect Thom Tillis?

TOM CAMPBELL

N.C. Spin

go along with everything the far right espouses. If you won't quote scripture and verse on demand you can't be in their club. You have obviously deserted the Grand Old Party.

Make no mistake. Thom Tillis is a Republican, a conservative Republican, and not for one minute should we believe he will forsake his bedrock beliefs. But neither is Thom a "go-along to get-along" guy. A former business consultant, Tillis became House Speaker in 2012 and immediately demonstrated he knew how to make the trains run in our legislature. Never the flashy, back-slapping pol, Tillis eschewed the klieg lights in order to work more effectively. It was no secret he was a Republican and made no apologies for it. As Speaker, Thom was adept at knowing the pulse of his Republican caucus and counting votes with the best of them. He knew what he could and couldn't get passed on the N.C. House floor and wouldn't allow a floor vote if he wasn't sure about its outcome. He is respected as one of the best House Speakers we've had in recent years, even by many Democrats.

In his first term in the U.S. Senate, it took Tillis a while to find his footing and voice. He took some controversial stands, specifically opposing President Trump about declaring a national emergency so he could build a wall along the border. Later he reversed his position after strong opposition and vitriol from Republicans. I believe this episode was a moment of truth for the freshman Senator. Maybe I'm reading too much into it, but I think this was the moment Thom Tillis realized he didn't have to be just a voice for the Right but was sent to Washington to voice what he thought was right.

Yes, Tillis' voting record will show he supported Trump and voted the Republican way on a high percentage of votes. He certainly followed the party line enough to have earned his bona fides as a party loyalist. If anything, the stinging criticism from the far-right wing of his tribe should be a badge of honor, not shame.

The Senator believed that immigration demanded more than just a slogan to build a wall, so he joined forces with Democrats and other Republicans to find a solution for those wanting to enter our country, crafting a resolution that ultimately failed in the dying moments of 2022. But in this failure, Thom Tillis earned a large measure of respect among leaders in both parties. They recognized a new leader was emerging, discovering that Tillis is straightforward, tells his truth, isn't a grandstander seeking media attention or favor. He's pretty much of a "what you see is what you get" kinda guy.

The Senator believed that immigration demanded more than just a slogan to build a wall, so he joined forces with Democrats and other Republicans to find a solution for those wanting to enter our country, crafting a resolution that ultimately failed in the dying moments of 2022.

Over the past year Senator Tillis has moved from the back bench into becoming a leader, a conciliator and mediator, willing to reach across the aisle for honest, civil discussion, finding agreement where possible and seeking compromise to pass legislation on issues like immigration, same-sex marriage and guns. And don't be surprised to hear his name among those finding a consensus position for passing the budget and dealing with the debt ceiling debate.

So why did we elect Thom Tillis? For that matter, why do we elect anyone to public office? I am convinced there are some (I hope very few) who vote for someone, hoping they will get elected and go burn the place down, figuratively and literally. Others perhaps cast their ballots in hopes that the individual will further gum up the already slow-moving wheels of government, believing the less done is better. But I believe the majority of us vote for a person because we hope he or she will play a part in actually getting things done for the betterment of all. Isn't that why we have a representative government in the first place?

It is apparent that our Senator, in his quiet, respectful and even-tempered way, is morphing from politician to statesman.

Stay on course, Senator. You are making a difference.

Vivian Howard plans her return

D.G. MARTIN

One on One

Are the days of the roadside eateries gone? My book, "North Carolina's Roadside Eateries," celebrated the barbecue and country cooking family friendly restaurants near the interstates.

Now, one of North Carolina's most famous restaurateur and food expert argues that the days of restaurants as we know them may be over.

Vivian Howard, famous across the country for her television program, "A Chef's Life," and as author of two beautiful books about food ("Deep Run Roots: Stories and Recipes from My Corner of the South" and "This Will Make It Good,") tried to explain why food establishments across the country are struggling. Writing in The New York Times on Jan. 20, she explained, "I recently closed my flagship restaurant in Kinston, N.C. For more than 15 years, Chef & the Farmer was a star in the farm-to-table sky. Our food exalted my region's little-known cuisine, and the level of service we provided was an anomaly for miles.

"Even so, Chef & the Farmer closed, in large part because the inefficiencies, stress and fatigue brought by an unsustainable business model became impossible to ignore. Our industry needs to evolve or else more full-service, cuisine-driven restaurants like mine will languish their way to extinction."

Her New York Times essay was not her first warning about the unsustainability of restaurants like Chef & the Farmer.

In "This Will Make It Good," she wrote, "In 2019 my professional life was a vat of turmoil. The mountain of projects I had taken on had slowly distanced me from the day-to-day operations at my restaurants, and my prolonged absence was notable in every part of the business. The restaurants were understaffed, guest counts were down across the board, and morale was at an all-time low. My team members used to feel they were part of something.

"Now that 'something' just felt like a job. I had hired a consultant and a chef with a pedigree to help figure things out, but somehow that made it worse. I fired people, rehired people, and to save a marriage decided I could no longer work with my husband. We moved under a tall mountain of debt that caused finger-pointing, infighting and backstabbing, and I couldn't tell who was doing what."

Howard has acknowledged that she is now divorced.

"All of it was stuff that, on some level, I was doing for other people. I had never wanted to run a restaurant empire, and suddenly I was running one into the ground. Every day I let more and more people down. I felt lost."

She is planning for a sustainable future for her restaurant.

She plans to reopen Chef & the Farmer this year. "We won't rely on the diners to pay servers; the chefs will serve, cafeteria style, at our retrofitted kitchen bar. The energy we put into elevated service and its trappings will flow directly into the only 'program' we have chosen to keep — our food."

The restaurant will open just four days a week, because, she says, "that's the kind of schedule that nurtures staff retention."

Howard is looking at other ways to reduce the costs of serving prepared food. For instance, under the brand name "Viv's Fridge," she is stocking high-end food packages in refrigerators at convenient locations in cities near Kinston ready to be picked up, paid for, taken home, and reheated.

Are there lessons from Howard's experience that can help my favorite country cooking and barbecue places survive these tough times?

Maybe they can expand their carry-out options to reduce staff costs just a little bit.

But they should remember that many of their country cooking and barbecue fans come not only for the good food but also for the social experience of visiting with other customers and staff.

It is something I hope Howard will remember, too.

destination where you'll find something you like."

Havoc will be housed at 39 West St. next to The Mod. The brewery is set to open its flagship location at SoCo early this year, according to Havoc's Facebook page.

The Chatham County-based brewery will have a large outdoor patio where patrons can get a view of the historic county courthouse nearby and a venue for local musicians to play. Stafford said Havoc will bring a unique experience to downtown and complement many surrounding businesses.

"We hope that it makes downtown cool because there's room for several hundred people on that patio," Stafford said. "It's a big outdoor seating area, and so there will be a lot of room to do a lot of cool stuff on there — live music, bouncy castles, car shows or whatever they want to do. It will be really awesome."

Doherty's will be located on the other side of The Mod and is expected to open later this year, according to Stafford. Doherty's is known for its Irish pub fair, ranging from brisket to fish and chips, as well as a wide array of Irish-inspired cocktails and Guinness beer.

Doherty's co-owner Donavon Favre said before the COVID-19 pandemic, he and his business partner Sami Taweel were looking to open a third location of their award-winning restaurant. When Favre walked through downtown Pittsboro toward SoCo, he said he felt the environment was perfect.

"Our restaurant has a family feel to it," Favre said. "As soon as we got to Pittsboro and started walking downtown, meeting with friendly people, it fit with exactly what we do and who we are."

Favre said he, along with Stafford and the owners of The Mod and Havoc, want to work to have collaborative events to create a one-of-a-kind experience downtown. That could include working with Havoc to deliver food to their customers, holding joint events on the patio space outside of SoCo and more.

"We don't want it to be competitive, we want it to be collaborative because the more we can make it a destination spot for all of us, the better off we all will be," Favre said.

Favre said another factor in choosing Pittsboro as the location for the new Doherty's was incoming growth. Stafford's dedication to his town, Favre said, also helped him and his business partner decide to call Pittsboro their third home.

"One of the big things Greg and I connected on was he said he wanted something people are going to want to go to that's higher end, delicious food that's going to be different than what we have right now," Favre said. "He has enthusiasm for downtown Pittsboro and he wants this to be a destination spot, not just for us, but for the community."

Stafford said Chatham Park, the massive planned community north of downtown, had a role in what types of businesses he hoped to draw to SoCo; he wants to create a place where both long-time residents and new ones can enjoy.

"There are times when people want to go to the kind of restaurant that's going to be in a major development, like Chatham Park, and there are times when people want to go to the hipster, all downtown, cool place," Stafford said.

"One of the mistakes I made was when I started this, I was seeing it as 'us' versus 'them' ... It's not us or them because the same people are going to be going to both."

SoCo now has all its tenants, but Stafford said he still owns other properties he's looking to lease out. While Stafford and his wife have plans for their remaining development properties and projects in the Pittsboro area, they can't do anything until Pittsboro fixes its pause on additional sewer allocation.

"There isn't any sewer left in Pittsboro so unless and until Pittsboro can provide infrastructure, nothing else is coming downtown," he said. "If we can get the infrastructure we need, we are in a position where downtown Pittsboro is in a position to be a great complement to Chatham Park, and vice versa."

SoCo will provide a special space for these new restaurants to work together, Stafford says. What's most important to him, though, is SoCo's ability to bring added life to a downtown area and to enhance the incoming growth coming to the Pittsboro community.

"When the Christmas parade goes by, you can stand on the patio and watch the whole thing, or when Carolina beats Duke each and every time they play, it's a place to gather and enjoy their demise ... It should be a cool place, and I hope people love it," Stafford said.

Blood sampling of 206 Pittsboro residents who are on public water showed PFAS levels well above the national median, and even higher than that found in people living downstream or near the Chemours plant in Fayetteville, according to a 2021 study.

“Defendants knew or should have known that PFAS present significant risks to human health and welfare if released to the environment,” the filing reads.

“Nonetheless, they continued manufacturing, distributing and selling large volumes of PFAS products to industrial facilities and consumers in the Haw River watershed, knowing that ordinary use and disposal of those products would result in significant PFAS contamination” of the river, the town and its drinking water.

A 3M spokesperson provided a statement to Policy Watch via email:

“3M acted responsibly in connection with products containing PFAS – including AFFF (aqueous film-forming foam) – and will vigorously defend its record of environmental stewardship. AFFF was a critical tool developed to serve an important need for military service members and other responders facing potentially life-threatening challenges.”

A Chemours spokesperson said the company can’t comment on litigation.

PFAS are toxic at extremely low concentrations — at parts per quadrillion — according to recent EPA health advisory levels. Exposure to PFAS has been linked to kidney and testicular cancer, low birth weight, high blood pressure during pregnancy, thyroid disorders, elevated cholesterol and other serious health conditions.

There are at least 10,000 types of PFAS. They are known as “forever chemicals” because they don’t break down in the environment, where they can linger for hundreds of years.

These compounds enter the Haw River from upstream sources, such as industrial dischargers, wastewater treatment plants and biosolids — sludge from those plants that is applied on land as fertilizer. PFAS can then seep into the groundwater and when it rains, can enter rivers and streams.

Airports are also a source of PFAS because of firefighting training exercises that use AFFF.

Traditional water and wastewater treatment technologies can’t remove PFAS. Last year Pittsboro installed a granular activated carbon system, known as a GAC, which reduced PFAS levels in drinking water by 86-88%, according to town sampling data.

However, those systems are expensive. Pittsboro spent $3.5 million on the system; the funding came from grants and town coffers — taxpayer money.

The lawsuit alleges that the defendant companies knew their products were toxic. Yet they still marketed and sold large volumes of PFAS Products” to industry and consumers in the Haw River watershed, “while simultaneously concealing and misrepresenting the human health and environmental risks posed by those products.”

As early as 1960, 3M knew that PFAS could leach into groundwater and contaminate the environment, according to the court filing. An internal memo from that year concluded that PFAS manufacturing “would eventually reach the water table and pollute domestic wells.”

3M announced last month that it would no longer manufacture PFAS and “work to discontinue the use” of the compounds in its products by the end of 2025.

Likewise, DuPont knew in the 1960s and 1970s that PFOA, one of the thousands of types of PFAS, could harm human health, according to internal company data cited in the filing. By 1980, DuPont “had internally confirmed that PFOA is ‘toxic,’ and that ‘continued exposure is not tolerable.’”

Facing millions of dollars in damages from previous lawsuits in Ohio and West Virginia. DuPont spun off a separate company, Chemours, in 2015. Chemours is responsible for polluting the Lower Cape Fear River Basin, from Fayetteville to Wilmington, with GenX, a type of PFAS, and other similar compounds.

The NC Attorney General’s office has sued Chemours and “Old DuPont” — the entity before the break up — demanding that they pay “all past and future costs to assess, remediate and remedy environmental harms” as a result of operations at the Fayetteville Works plant.

CHATHAM CHAT | DR. AMANDA MORAN, CHATHAM COUNTY SCHOOLS

‘One Chatham’ has 12 goals and 111 strategies. Here’s how it’s coming together.

‘By far the most rewarding, most comprehensive approach to strategic planning that I have ever seen’

Editor’s note: first of two parts.

Chatham County Schools’ strategic initiative, called “One Chatham,” is an ambitious five-year plan with 111 specific strategies used to measure progress toward achieving goals in five key areas. This week we speak with Dr. Amanda Moran, the assistant superintendent for academic services & instructional support for Chatham County Schools, about One Chatham — and to get a progress report on the plan.

Moran has also a resident of Chatham for almost 20 years. She received her undergraduate degree in elementary education from UNC-Greensboro and has a Master’s degree from Lincoln Memorial University in Tennessee and a Doctoral degree from East Carolina University.

Moran has served in education for the past 26 years as a classroom teacher, lead teacher, instructional technology facilitator, assistant principal, principal, technology director, chief academic officer, MTSS director, and assistant superintendent. She’s worked in five districts across N.C. including Chapel Hill Carrboro City Schools and Orange County Schools.

For those unfamiliar with “One Chatham,” can you provide a refresher overview about what it is and how it became the framework for Chatham County Schools’ strategic plan?

One Chatham is the name of our new strategic plan that we launched in August of this school year. It outlines the direction for the district for the next five years. It provides our mission and vision for what we want to be and where we want to go. It has a set of core beliefs central to what we believe about our work. Finally, we have goals for the outcomes we hope to achieve and the specific steps on how we plan to get there.

The “One Chatham” theme came from Superintendent Dr. Anthony Jackson. From the moment he arrived, he kept saying “One Chatham,” reflecting his desire to ensure all students had the same educational opportunities and pathways to find success in school. Prior to his arrival and before ever meeting him, I had also been working on a theme for the year that would focus on the Power of One, examining the difference one person can make in the lives of others and in improving our community. Over the years, we have heard feedback that Chatham has different areas or zones in the district, and some individuals have felt that these different areas are treated differently. We have seen schools all operate in different ways, which made it feel like we were more a district of schools and not one school district. We wanted this new plan to be about unifying the district and helping us work together on a single vision ensuring ALL our students are successful.

“Preparing ALL students for a bright and prosperous future” — what will that look like for students, and for the community?

Our vision is that we want all students to be prepared and ready for whatever their future holds. That can mean many different things. As we worked to develop our vision, we had many words that we thought about using — “college-and-career ready, future ready,” etc.

The bottom line is we want students to be ready to do whatever it is they aspire to do. For some that might be going right into the workplace. For those students, we have industry credentialing programs and certification programs — what educators once called vocational education — that can allow them to be ready to leave high school and be prepared for the workplace. Other students might aspire to attend a two-year college program where they explore a specific interest or pathway to the workplace.

We are fortunate to have amazing partnerships with the Community College system to provide these opportunities. With the Chatham Promise opportunity, all students can receive two free years of college.

And finally, some students may want to go to a four-year university and pursue their bachelor’s degree. We have programs in place to help students achieve college rigor in high school through Advanced Placement classes, and we have the ability to allow students to receive college credits in high school through programs like College Career Promise. We have some students who leave us with their associate’s degree and high school diploma through our Early College program, as well.

Through programs like Dual Language, we have students who are leaving us with biliteracy skills. We have 100% college acceptance rates through programs like AVID. All of these options are designed to prepare our students for a bright and prosperous future.

During our One Chatham community event, we had more than 200 people in one room working on developing this plan. One of the activities was to paint a portrait of a graduate — not in the literal sense, but the characteristics of what a graduate would look like if they were leaving us successfully prepared for the next chapter in their future. Each group had to present its portrait and explain the various skills and abilities they felt were most important. There were so many creative ideas and quite a bit of agreement on what those skills and traits should be. We then took all those pieces and came up with what our students would possess, leaving us successfully. You can find that here.

How were the five priority areas developed, and why are they so important? (And did you leave anything off that list that might be addressed later?)

Our strategic plan has five priority areas. During the input-gathering phase, we had surveys, focus groups and listening sessions where we asked for feedback and what stakeholders wanted our district to prioritize. We worked with our data analysis team to compile all those pieces of feedback and synthesize that information into themes. Five categories clearly emerged as the most important to our community. Each area is a critical aspect of our core mission of ensuring students are successful.

Curriculum and Innovation is the heartbeat of our work. I am a little biased because this is the area I oversee! We know quality instruction and innovative programs will ensure our students are ready for their futures.

Faculty and Staff is critical because we know that research tells us that a high-quality teacher is one of the most important factors that ensures students’ success. So we must invest in developing our workforce through professional development and support programs. We must also work to recruit and retain high-quality staff. Staff will not thrive in an environment that is not healthy and supportive.

Student Health and Safety was a category that came up consistently in focus groups and surveys. We also have seen growth in mental health needs in our community, in addition to concerns across the country about school security and violence in the world today. We want our stakeholders to know that we take security, health and safety seriously.

Facilities and Infrastructure is a very timely focus area. Chatham is on the cusp of unprecedented growth, and we need to have facilities and the infrastructure to support this growth. This can mean the facilities themselves as we build new schools, and it can also mean ensuring we have appropriate cybersecurity measures in place or the most up-to-date fiscal systems in place.

Communication and Information Sharing is an area that our listening sessions made clear we needed to do a better job in. Parents asked for more two-way modes of communicating. We also recognized we needed to do a better job educating the community about what we have to offer and sharing the success of our students. We have amazing community partners and this focus area also looks at how we can best leverage those resources for our students and the community.

If you look at all the feedback we received from the community, you can find a way to link it all to one of these five areas. In the end we came up with five areas that will help strengthen an already strong district and meet expectations for what our students, families and staff want our district to become over the next five years. We did have some debate about including technology or equity as individual focus areas. As we talked through our core beliefs and received feedback, it became clear that technology is embedded in all we do now. It is how we do business, and it is authentically built into all aspects of our work. Equity is also something that we feel is not a stand-alone area, but a way of looking at things to ensure that we are ensuring multiple perspectives, that we are ensuring access, and we are elevating all voices. That is something that should be a common thread through all of our priority areas. It should be who we are and how we do our work. So we made a conscious decision to embed technology and equity across all five of our focus areas.

How’s it going? How’s it coming together?

Throughout my career in education, I have worked in five districts from the western part of the state to the Triad. Across all of these districts and various roles I have participated in strategic planning processes in every district

“He came in and he pled and took responsibility for careless and reckless driving and injury to personal property,” Assistant District Attorney Lynn Kelly told the News + Record. “He has been ordered to do an anger management class and community service.”

The injury to personal property amounted to about $200 worth of damage to a vehicle driven by one of the teens.

The DA’s office also said it received several letters and references from people who live in Hudson’s neighborhood on River Bend Road. Neighbors also vigorously defended Hudson in letters to the editor in the News + Record. They said youngsters had been encroaching upon their property in cars and speeding along the private gravel roadway for decades, trespassing and vandalizing.

“I don’t think that the evidence showed that he (Hudson) tried to run them off the road rose to the level of assault with a deadly weapon, which is one of the reasons that we did what we did,” Kelly said.

Kelly said Hudson, who had no previous criminal record, acknowledged wrongdoing in the incident. She also acknowledged that decades of curious trespassers — some exploring rumors of an alleged Satanic church along the road, a falsehood Hudson’s neighbors say has plagued them and their tranquility — played a role in Hudson’s actions.

Pursuant to Hudson’s engagement in community service and anger management courses, the five counts of assault with a deadly weapon will be dropped.

Hudson had worked as a 4th-grade teacher at Pittsboro Elementary until around Jan. 6, when he was apparently suspended from his position after Chatham County Schools officials learned of his case. Hudson’s employment status with Chatham County Schools is unclear as of Tuesday. CCS would not comment on Hudson’s employment status.

Pittsboro Youth Theater co-founders opt to sell business, cite financial hardship

BY BEN RAPPAPORT
News + Record Staff

PITTSBORO — After 10 years of providing a home on the stage to youth across Pittsboro and the entire Chatham community, Tammy Matthews and Craig Witter have decided to sell Pittsboro Youth Theater.

The couple announced the intention to sell the business after returning from a stellar performance at the Junior Theater Festival in Atlanta where PYT earned multiple awards for their performances of Peter Pan Jr.

Matthews and Witter said they no longer have the financial resources or “personal energies” to continue the program.

“We are very sorry that our decision to close Pittsboro Youth Theater will cause sadness for a great many kids, parents and other supporters,” the couple wrote on the PYT website. “We love you very much.”

The impending sale of the business means all spring 2023 shows at PYT will be canceled and deposits made for those shows will be refunded to supporters.

PYT was also intending to move into a new space in Bynum — North Chatham Performing Arts

CRAIG WITTER AND TAMMY MATTHEWS, co-founders of Pittsboro Youth Theater

Center — later this year. The co-founders had been fundraising for the move to the new facility but fell short of their fundraising goal. They said, however, they hope the future buyers will continue with NCPAC, and that all donations made toward the effort will go to the new owners.

“If no buyer is found who wants to continue with NCPAC by Feb. 20, 2023, then all donations made to help build NCPAC will be refunded to those who donated as soon as possible thereafter,” Witter said.

All assets of PYT are currently for sale, according to the organization’s website. This includes the theater company, Center for the Arts Music School, the 15-year lease on the unfinished NCPAC facility and all necessary equipment for continuing operations.

Taking on the lease for NCPAC would be $3,000 per month with a 1% annual increase for the duration of the lease for the 5,000-square-foot building.

Witter said he aims to have the business sold by Feb. 20. According to the overview of sale plans, PYT hopes to sell the assets in bulk, rather than individually. He said the goal of the sale is to transfer ownership to “new, younger and more capable owners and/or operational staff.”

In the pitch to potential buyers, PYT said its currently has close to zero debt because the entire effort has been self-funded by Matthews and Witter.

“We’re sorry that things came to this so suddenly, and we hope that we can find some way for PYT to continue to provide services to our patrons soon,” Matthews and Witter wrote.

For more information on the sale visit www.pittsboroyouththeater.com. For serious sale inquiries contact Craig Witter at CFTA. Cwitter1@gmail.com.

those throughout N.C., are having some challenges with attracting workforce,” said Michael Smith, the president of the Chatham Economic Development Corporation. “We continue to work with Central Carolina Community College and the school system to find ways to help educate the public on what jobs are available, and the free training that exists to help people gain new skills to then work for a number of our industries here in Chatham County.”

VinFast, an electric vehicle manufacturer, and Wolfspeed, which makes semiconductors — and their combined 2022 announcements, bringing $9 billion in investment and 9,000 new planned jobs here — are only a part of Chatham’s 2023 formula, he said. In addition to workforce training provided by CCCC, the county has the benefit of the large number of four-year colleges and universities in close proximity, highly-trained military personnel leaving Ft. Bragg and new residents seeking opportunity. They contribute to making the region, and the state, attractive for those who are hiring.

“North Carolina gained the third-most new residents [in the U.S.] in 2022 and we do not see that trend changing,” Smith said.

Fox

come over the next several years — they’re all positive reasons for our citizens to be hopeful for this new year.”

‘The brightest horizon’

Still, the new jobs projected for Chatham (not including 300 at FedEx’s shipping hub under construction near the future home of VinFast) in the coming years are certainly a boost and a safeguard. Mike Fox, the president and CEO of the Piedmont Triad Partnership, paints a sunny employment picture — beginning with this year.

“We see the brightest horizon for Chatham County and the Carolina Core region in 2023,” he said. “With state and national attention on the record-breaking year of new job and capital investment attraction, the job opportunities in Chatham County are more well-known than ever.”

Economist Mike Walden, the Reynolds Distinguished Professor Emeritus at N.C. State, told the News + Record he’s predicting a “mild and short” recession at the end of 2023, and that he sees the local unemployment rate “rising between 1 and 2 percentage points.”

It’s a jump he described as “very modest.”

“Long-run economic growth in the Triangle region — including Chatham County — is still very robust,” Walden said.

The Core’s boost

The county benefits from being a part of the Carolina Core, a 120+ mile stretch of central North Carolina stretching from west of Winston-Salem to Fayetteville, all along future Interstate 685. It includes Greensboro and High Point, has close proximity to Charlotte and the Research Triangle, and is home to four megasites — including Moncure’s Triangle Innovation Point, where VinFast will build, and Siler City’s Chatham Advanced Manufacturing site, where Wolfspeed’s newly-named John Palmour Manufacturing Center for Silicon Carbide will be located.

Attention from Chatham’s record-setting announcements and the innovation VinFast and Wolfspeed will drive, Fox believes, will keep the interest, and the focus, on Chatham and the region for years to come.

“I believe that existing companies there will benefit from the talent and suppliers that those two ‘mega-projects’ can attract,” Fox said.

“We hear from the state that North Carolina’s pipeline of potential new business is strong, and with well-positioned industrial real estate like the Chatham-Siler City Advanced Manufacturing site” — where there’s still 1,700 acres available for development — “there is no reason to doubt that additional employers will be attracted to the excellent location and business environment in Chatham County,” he added. “While we are hearing that recruiting and retaining talent remains a concern of our employers, we know that growing the regional economy, especially with innovative technology employers, is the path to continued prosperity for our region.”

The role of CCCC, universities

Like Smith, Fox noted the contributions of nearby community colleges and universities — which are responding in their own ways to the state’s positioning in the job market.

They are also working to “attract talent to their programs, some developed with these innovative new employers,” Fox said. And while massive projects like VinFast and Wolfspeed are driving the training programs, there is no reason, he said, “that other local employers cannot benefit from the new and growing training programs serving Chatham County.”

“Anytime we are investing resources in upskilling our residents,” Fox said, “this is an investment that is bound to pay off in the short term and long run.”

Dr. Lisa Chapman, the president of CCCC — with campuses in Chatham, Lee and Harnett counties — said she’s not seeing broad impact from the tech layoffs, noting the immediate staffing needs some local and regional companies have.

“Our region has a diversity of employers who have talent needs now and talent need projections going forward,” she said. “The projects [VinFast, Wolfspeed] obviously will include growth of varied suppliers, but in addition to that we have a growing biotech sector as well as ongoing needs in the construction and logistics-related industries. Healthcare workforce also continues to be a need in our region.”

Chapman added it was important to recognize CCCC’s footprint area has “strong incumbent employers who have made this region their home for many years and they have excellent careers in which our local residents can engage.”

“Most of these careers require education and training beyond high school, but not all of them require the same type of credential,” she said. “We want to ensure our community knows about and is prepared to participate in these opportunities. The college is working alongside our secondary and university partners to provide the needed education options.”

Workforce development

CCCC’s and Chatham County Schools’ commitment to adding value to workforce development can only help keep Chatham’s future positive, according to Cindy Poindexter, the president of the Chatham Chamber of Commerce.

“Much of the work that needs to be done does center around educating the public about opportunities and training available and working with regional and local partners,” she said. “We all need to part of the solution. There has been a bit of a stigma associated around manufacturing jobs, but these jobs create great opportunities and room for advancement.”

The national seasonally-adjusted unemployment rate was 3.5% in December. The Bureau of Labor Statistics put Chatham’s December unemployment rate at just over 3%, up from 2.8% last January. It had reached a recent high of 9.3% in April of 2020 as the COVID-19 pandemic shuttered many businesses.

Even so, Chatham’s wage gap — which contributes to the county’s affordable housing conundrum and high food insecurity in some pockets of the county — tempers the jobs picture, at least for now. Helping it: VinFast said its average annual wages will be $51,100, while Wolfspeed said its employees would earn an average of $77,753 annually. Both are well above existing average wages in the western portion of Chatham of around $41,600, which is more than $15,000 a year under average wages across North Carolina.

Knowing that the jobs picture will improve, and bring higher wages, is even more reason to be optimistic.

“Chatham County has much to offer,” Poindexter said. “We have a bright future ahead of us.”

and each of them was different. This process has by far been the most rewarding and the most comprehensive approach to strategic planning that I have ever seen.

We sought to develop a living, breathing document that would become the guiding light for who we are as a district, and we see that happening already in the short amount of time since the plan was adopted. We have almost every strategy in our plan underway and many completed. Of the 111 strategies we are using to measure our progress to achieving our goals, 72 we’ve begun work on and 25 we have completed. We have also worked to ensure that every board item, meeting items for various departments, and professional development sessions all begin with our why. We try to identify what area of our strategic plan we are working to address and what that goal is. In other words, we are trying to connect the dots so people see the connections to this plan and the things we are doing. We didn’t write this plan to sit on a shelf. We wrote it to be used and actually change the way we think about our work we do together.

Northwood junior Powell, county's most recent 1,000-point scorer, continues rise

Northwood junior Drake Powell (32) is averaging 18.9 points, 7.0 rebounds and 4.1 assists per game this season.

PITTSBORO — One of the best basketball players in Chatham County, and one of the hottest prospects in the Class of 2024, Northwood junior Drake Powell passed a major personal milestone last week.

Playing in front of a raucous home crowd last Tuesday, Powell scored a game-high 24 points, passing 1,000 for his career and leading the Chargers' boys basketball team to a 70-17 win over conference opponent Cedar Ridge.

In 65 career games at Northwood, the junior guard has 1,026 career points, an average of 15.8 per game.

"Going into the game, my coach told me I needed 23 points to surpass 1,000," Powell said. "I really wasn't too worried about it. I just wanted to play my game, rebound, pass, score, play defense, do everything I normally do and let it come naturally. I didn't want to go out there gunning for it, really. But when it happened, and I scored the point leading to 1,000, it was a great moment. All my teammates congratulated me and the fans

Seaforth freshman Rosenmarkle turning heads as one of top girls in state

BY DAN E. WAY
News + Record Correspondent

PITTSBORO — Keira Rosenmarkle laughs and blushes a bit when asked whether she's a trendsetter for girls wrestling in North Carolina.

A blonde bulldog at center circle, the Seaforth freshman is decidedly more timid discussing her mat prowess. After a pause to reflect, she humbly admits that her success has made some waves in the wrestling world.

"I guess at the beginning of the season I was winning most of my matches against the guys and you don't normally see that around here," Rosenmarkle said.

Her victory against cross-county rival Northwood put a punctuation mark on her wrestling resume. As her opponent stood up, Rosenmarkle followed. Staying close, she tightened a body lock from behind, lowered her level and dropped straight backwards, her foe helplessly being tossed head over heels into the air and onto his back for the pin. It was the sort of acrobatic, crowd-thrilling throw one might expect from a seasoned freestyle or Greco-Roman grappler.

"That's how people started to find out about me, through that match," she said.

In addition to her varsity role with Seaforth, Rosenmarkle has been a pinning machine on the girls tournament trail this year. Indeed, it's a rare opponent that can go the distance with her. So far this season, she has seized the gold at the Jolly Roger Girls Invitational, the Wakefield Girls Winter Rumble, the Elite Resolution for 15 and Under Girls and the Elite Resolution for High School Girls, the Tiger Holiday Classic and the Red Wolf Girls Invitational.

"My season has been pretty successful," she said in a classic case of understatement.

Ossai's error offers a lesson in empathy

JEREMY VERNON
Sports Editor

The aftermath of Sunday's AFC Championship game between the Kansas City Chiefs and Cincinnati Bengals offered a clear glimpse into what it means to be both a good and a bad teammate.

The game — which ended in favor of the Chiefs, 23-20 — was a welcome competitive contest after Philadelphia blew out San Francisco, 31-7, in the NFC Championship earlier in the day. But it was mired by a costly late mistake by Bengals' defensive end Joseph Ossai, who was called for a late hit on Kansas City quarterback Patrick Mahomes with less than 10 seconds left, setting up the Harrison Butker's game-winning field goal.

Ossai was visibly upset right after the play, and it truly hurt watching him cry at the end of the bench as Kansas City lined up for the kick that sent his team home. You could plainly see Ossai understood the gravity of his mistake, and the emotions of Cincinnati being so close to making a second Super Bowl undoubtedly weighed heavy in those moments.

In the immediate aftermath of the game, as the Bengals returned to their locker room, Cincinnati linebacker Germaine Pratt shouted out to no one in particular as cameras rolled.

"Why would you touch the f---ing quarterback?," Pratt yelled, obviously referencing Ossai's penalty.

Pratt eventually apologized for his remarks Monday morning, but deserves every bit of criticism thrown his way in the first place. Good teammates are supposed to build each other up and empathize when they make mistakes. Instead, Pratt decided to light up Ossai, knowing a camera would likely pick up what he said.

Luckily, a few minutes later, Cincinnati defensive lineman B.J. Hill stepped to the plate and showed Pratt and the rest of the NFL what it means to stand by one of your brothers. As media swarmed around Ossai, trying to get his comments on the penalty that led to the game-winning kick, Hill stood right beside him, daring any reporter to ask an unfair question or place blame on Ossai for the team's season ending.

I would encourage any local athletes reading this to act as a Hill, and not a Pratt. If your teammate makes a mistake, be the first

Chatham Central upsets Seaforth

BY JEREMY VERNON
News + Record Sports Editor

Fighting to stay alive for the Mid-Carolina Conference regular season title, the Chatham Central boys basketball team pulled off one of the upsets of the season Friday night by defeating Seaforth, 74-68.

The Bears were led by a career-high 33 points from senior Brandon Toomer, who knocked down 12-of-19 shots, including seven-of-13 three-pointers. Joining Toomer with at least 10 points were junior Wesley Clewis (21) and sophomore Reid Albright (10). The win improved Central to 11-6 overall and 5-3 in league play.

"It felt great," said Bears head coach Robert Burke. "The guys came out and had a really strong offensive night. And the difference, I thought, was that we played a lot better defense than the last time we played them."

In their first matchup with the Hawks (13-6, 8-1 MCC) on Jan. 3, the Bears lost 69-56. Burke admitted his team put too much of an emphasis

Missed opportunities haunt Seaforth in 2nd round of dual team state playoffs

BY DAN E. WAY
News + Record
Correspondent

PITTSBORO — The Seaforth wrestling team had glory on their minds, but lead in its shoulders. After advancing to the second round of the N.C. High School Athletic Association team dual state tournament for the first time in the school’s short history Saturday afternoon, the Hawks lost a 36-34 heart-breaker to Manteo which bounced them from their chase for the crown.

Wrestling on their home mats, the No. 4 seed Hawks dominated Pitt County’s Ayden-Grifton, 54-25, in the first round, while Dare County’s No. 6 Manteo crushed Pasquotank County foe North-eastern, 70-9, in the first round to set up the second round match.

Seaforth’s Judge Lloyd (left) defeated Manteo’s Dylan Polatty, 11-7, in the second round of the 2A dual team state tournament on Saturday.

teo each won seven individual bouts, five of the Hawks’ upper weight wrestlers were unable to stay off their backs, handing their opponents 30 bonus points that determined the outcome. Seaforth collected only four wins by fall for 24 bonus points.

“We’re a championship-caliber team and we just can’t stay off our back,” said a dejected Seaforth coach Ryan Armstrong. “We’ve been fighting with the boys all year: If we don’t get pinned, we win. If we get them in that third period we win. ... There’s no reason we’re not going into the third round.”

In a team showdown replete with “what-ifs,” Alex Hinchman at 170 and Palmer Moad at 285 were both controlling their bouts, but both ended up decked. Had they won, there would have been at least an 18-point shift in the scoring, giving the Hawks an easy victory.

The outcome also could have been different if 145-pound standout freshman Keira Rosenmarkle had been in the lineup. Armstrong held her out of competition after she had a bruising women’s regional tournament where she captured gold Thursday. He wanted to make sure she was healthy and focused for this weekend’s state tournament, and substituted Caden Brewer in the lineup.

“It probably would have made a difference with her in the lineup today,” Armstrong said. “Caden wrestled very hard, but came up just short.”

The Hawks also juggled their lower weights, which might have cost them points. Armstrong put backup Jordan Miller in at 106, moved Gabe Rogers up to 113, Josh Miller to 120, and Layne Armstrong to 126.

If Miller had been able to pin his opponent, Seaforth would have walked out of Saturday’s second round with the victory. Instead, he won by major decision against Thalia Aguirre Gomez, who qualified for the women’s state tournament with a bronze at Thursday’s East Regional Tournament.

“I think we underestimated her,” Armstrong said. “We probably could have made a “Definitely a hip toss,” she said.

Last Thursday, Jan. 26, Rosenmarkle added to her impressive credentials by winning gold at the Mideast Regional Tournament, qualifying her for the NCHSAA’s third annual girls wrestling invitational state tournament.

“She had two pins and a very decisive finals match with a girl that kind of used her head to talk, gave her two black eyes, but the (9-5) score looks closer than what the match was,” said Seaforth coach Ryan Armstrong. “That girl placed second at state last year, so we have high hopes for Keira.”

“That girl” is Sumaiya Aamoud of Jack Britt, this year’s No. 1 seed and champion at the United 8 Conference tournament who was runner-up at the 2022 NCHSAA Invitational at 145. It was the second victory Rosenmarkle claimed over Aamoud this season, along with an 8-3 victory at the Tiger Holiday Classic.

Armstrong held Rosenmarkle out of the state team duals over the past weekend to allow her to recover from her bruising regional tournament and to stay mentally sharp for her state tournament. But she found a way to stay involved. She worked a scoring table while sporting a pair of shiners.

The two-day state tournament will be split between preliminary matches at the RISE Sports Complex in Bermuda Run in Davie County on Friday, with the final rounds taking place at the Greensboro Coliseum on Saturday.

“We’re excited to watch her wrestle this weekend,” Armstrong said. “The work she’s putting in in the room, I’m not going to jinx her, but I think her chances are good.”

“Hopefully I’ll place at girls state,” Rosenmarkle said. “I need to work on my mindset — a lot, definitely — before my matches. That’s the main thing. As far as my technique goes, I need to be more aggressive.”

She does not believe she is at a disadvantage wrestling against the boys in terms of upper-body power, but concedes more strength would be beneficial. She is not afraid of stepping onto the mat with a boy, but is looking forward to next season when the NCHSAA will have sanctioned girls teams.

Seaforth started this season with eight girls wrestlers, but the numbers have fallen off as the season progressed. Armstrong expects to put a good squad together next year and get a girls coach.

Rosenmarkle said she has been welcomed into the Seaforth wrestling family.

“I love being on the team. I definitely feel a part of it,” she said. “It’s like I’m one of the guys. They don’t treat me any differently.”

Rosenmarkle doesn’t come from a wrestling family. But her father owns a jiu-jitsu dojo in Wisconsin where she used to hang around.

“One of the coaches there, when I was 9, said you ought to get into wrestling. So I tried it and I’ve been doing it for about five years now,” said Rosenmarkle, who moved to North Carolina in 2020.

Armstrong is happy she landed at Seaforth. “She’s going to be something. This young lady is beating boys at her weight, if not above her weight,” Armstrong said. “She’s undefeated in girls wrestling this year. We’ve got high hopes for her. We’re going to see her on the podium at states for the girls this year.”

GIRLS BASKETBALL

Seaforth on fire as season draws to close; Chargers, Knights not far behind

BY JEREMY VERNON
News + Record Sports
Editor

With only a handful of games left in the regular season, the girls basketball team with the best record in Chatham County is Seaforth, which carried a 16-2 overall record and a 9-0 conference mark into its matchup with Jordan-Matthews on Tuesday, which occurred after press time. Competing as a varsity squad for the second season, the Hawks have far surpassed expectations under head coach Charles Byrd. Last season, Seaforth also had a solid showing, going 19-8 overall and winning the Mid-Carolina Conference with a 12-0 league record. This year's Hawks will be able to clinch their second straight regular season conference title with a win against North Moore at home on Friday at 6 p.m.

Seaforth's top scorer this season has been sophomore Gabby White, who is currently leads the team in points (15.5), rebounds (9.5), assists (3.1) and steals (3.8) per game. Also averaging double-digit points is fellow sophomore Peyton Collins (12.1), while junior Hannah Ajayi and freshman Katherine Leonard are both averaging 8.5 points per game.

The Hawks have been particularly stingy on the defensive end, allowing their opponents an average of 29.2 points per game, by far the best mark in the county. Across their current six-game winning streak, Seaforth has allowed less than 20 points four times and less than 30 in all six games.

The highlight of Seaforth's remaining schedule is its regular-season finale on Feb. 11 against Chatham Charter, which is 15-4 overall and 6-0 in conference play. The Knights entered Tuesday's game against Southern Wake Academy on a four-game winning streak, during which they've outscored their opponents by an average of 30.3 points per game.

Chatham Charter has had the top individual player in the county this season in senior Tamaya Walden. The 5-foot-7 guard recently passed 1,500 career points, and in 19 games this season she is averaging a county-high 21.4 points per game to go with 4.9

assists and 3.4 steals. One other Knight — junior Meah Brooks (13.1) — is currently averaging at least 10 points per game.

Led by head coach Jeff Patterson, Chatham Charter is just a few wins away from clinching the conference regular season title for the fourth straight season. Last season, the Knights made it into the second round of the 1A state tournament before falling to Clover Garden School. But in two meetings with CGS this season, Chatham Charter is 2-0 with an average margin of victory of 16.5 points.

The only other Chatham County girls basketball team other than Seaforth and Chatham Charter with at least 15 wins is Northwood, which entered Tuesday's game against the Burlington School with a 16-4 record and a 9-0 mark in Central 3A Conference play.

Powell was the fourth Chatham County basketball player to pass 1,000 career points this season, and he was the third to do so in a one-week span. On Jan. 18, Seaforth junior Jarin Stevenson hit 1K in the Hawks 53-36 win over North Moore, and three days later Northwood senior Te'Keyah Bland passed the mark in a 69-35 win over New Hanover.

Powell has been part of successful Northwood teams before. As a freshman in 2020-21, he averaged 11.4 points per game for the Charger team which made it all the way to the 3A semifinals before falling to Weddington. And last winter Powell upped his scoring average to 16.4 points per game while leading Northwood to the fourth round of the state tournament.

“This is normally the time where some may get tired physically and mentally,” Powell said. “We just need to stay locked in and keep stacking days like we’ve been doing.”

Powell recently rose to No. 35 nationally in ESPN's player rankings for the Class of 2024, a jump that can be attributed to several different factors. The first and foremost is his lock-down defense, which has been on display against some high-quality competition this season, including D.J. Wagner — the No. 1 player in the Class of 2023 who is committed to Kentucky.

The offensive parts of Powell's game haven't been ignored, though, and he's continuing to make strides both as a shooter and a distributor. In 20 games, he's made 24-of-71 threes (33.8%). He's also been a fixture at the free-throw line, where he has made 79.2% of his 106 attempts, more than twice the next closest player.

Powell figures to be a key piece whenever he arrives in Chapel Hill, along with the other members of the Tar Heels' 2024 recruiting class, which is ranked No. 1 in the nation. Powell is one of four top-50 recruits currently committed to UNC, along with Ian Jackson (No. 3), Elliot Cadeau (No. 13) and James Brown (No. 48).

North Carolina is also after another Chatham County junior to pair alongside Powell and the others — Seaford's Jarin Stevenson. The 6-foot-10 forward is ranked as the No. 16 player in the class, according to ESPN, and he owns an offer from UNC, as well as ones from Virginia, N.C. State, Georgetown and Missouri, among others.

Joining Powell and Stevenson — who were teammates at Northwood as freshmen back in 2020-21 — would be a coup for the Tar Heels when it comes to in-state recruiting. But before then, both Stevenson and Powell will play the rest of this season, and the next, for hundreds of excited local fans in Pittsboro and the surrounding area.

Those who wish to see Powell play this season have a few more opportunities left in the regular season. Northwood's next game is this Friday at home against Orange at 7 p.m. The Chargers defeated the Panthers, 72-47, back on Dec. 14.

The gameplan worked to perfection, as Seaforth players outside of Stevenson — who scored 39 points on 15-of-18 shooting to go with 14 rebounds — combined to shoot just 11-of-32 (34.4%) from the field. The Bears also totaled 13 steals while turning the ball over just six times themselves.

Burke, for his part, has plenty of postseason experience. Prior to the 2021-22 season, Central has won at least one playoff game in each of the previous four seasons with Burke as head coach. As far as this year is concerned, Burke believes his team is starting to find its stride.

A big part of Central's success this season has been the play of Albright, who leads the team in points (18.9), rebounds (9.9), assists (4.6) and steals (2.5) per game as a sophomore. A 6-foot-1, 175-pound guard, Albright is shooting 54.2% from the field and 36.4% from 3-point range this season. He started his season with at least 20 points in four of his first five games, and he recently hit a season high with 33 points in a 96-93 loss to Eastern Randolph on Jan. 25.

“He’s probably going to be one of the best shooters that’s come out of Central by the time he leaves here,” Burke said of Albright. “Last year as a freshman, I think he just wasn’t quite in his element, and he didn’t totally understand his role, as a lot of young guys don’t. But he’s the catalyst of the team this year. I’m glad he’s a sophomore. I’ll have him for two more years.”

Playing on the road Thursday

night at Clover Garden, the Chatham Charter boys basketball team kept its undefeated record intact with an 84-24 victory over the Grizzlies. Ahead of this Tuesday's game against Southern Wake Academy, which happened after press time, the Knights were 24-0 overall and 6-0 in conference play.

Sporting the best record of any Chatham County team this winter, Chatham Charter have been getting it done on both ends of the floor. The Knights are averaging 73.8 points per game — the top mark in the county — and are shooting 53.5% from the field and 31.4% from 3-point range. Defensively, the Knights are allowing their opponents just 30.2 points per game this season.

Leading the way statistically for Chatham Charter this season has been senior Adam Harvey, who is averaging a team-high 17.2 points per game to go with 3.8 rebounds, 3.2 assists and 3.0 steals. Sophomore Brennen Oldham (12.7) and senior Aamir Mapp (10.5) are also averaging double-digit points, while sophomore Beau Harvey is averaging 8.9 points, 5.1 assists and 4.5 steals per game.

The Knights hope to once again play as late into the post-season as possible. Last winter, Chatham Charter lost just one game all season before falling to Hayesville, 54-43, in the 1A state championship game. This year's Knights are ranked as the No. 4 team in the 1A East region by MaxPreps, behind Bertie, Washington County and Wilson Prep.

Ossai, for his part, stood there and answered every question posed, fighting through tears the entire time.

Ossai didn't intend to commit a penalty on the final offensive snap Sunday. He was just trying to make a play, one he thought could be the difference between playing for a title in Arizona or heading back to the couch in Cincinnati.

This one dark moment should not define Ossai's season. Playing in his first NFL campaign after missing 2021 with an injury, Ossai provided key depth for Cincinnati along the defensive line, totaling 17 tackles, 3.5 sacks and two fumble recoveries in 2022.

As he continues his career, this moment should serve Ossai well. At the very least, it has shown him who his true friends on the team are. I hope he's able to find a little bit of peace in that, and understand that there will be plenty of more opportunities to make an impact in big games.

The Bengals are coming off back-to-back AFC Championship games, and enter the offseason with the third-most cap space of any team behind Chicago and Atlanta. Cincinnati should be a major player in free agency, as it looks to bolster its roster for another deep playoff run next fall.

Expect Ossai to be part of the plan going forward. And I would count on him to make the right play when the time comes.

The Chargers extended their win streak to 11 games Friday night with a 70-9 victory over Person. Head coach Kerri Snipes' team has won 16 of its last 17 games overall after starting out the year 0-3.

Northwood is getting contributions from several players this season, including seniors Gianna McManaman (13.0 points per game) and Te'Keyah Bland (12.4) and junior Skylar Adams (10.7). The Chargers currently lead all Chatham County girls teams with 58.5 points per game this season, which is down slightly from the 62.5 they averaged last winter en route to winning the 2022 3A state championship.

Watch Out For Tax Season Scams

It’s that time of year when we do our taxes — but it’s also the same time that tax scammers go to work. What scams should you watch for — and how can you avoid being victimized?

Sadly, the list of scams is pretty long, including demands for payment or requests for “additional information” pertaining to your tax refund, in which the sender asks for your Social Security number and other personal information. These scam emails can look quite official, often incorporating the IRS logo. You might also receive scam text messages containing bogus links claiming to be the IRS website or an online “tool” that can help process your refund faster.

But keep these points in mind:

- The IRS generally won’t contact you by phone and won’t contact you by email, text messages or social media channels to ask for personal or financial information. The IRS begins most correspondence to taxpayers through regular mail delivered by the U.S. Postal Service.

- The IRS won’t call to demand you make an immediate payment through a pre-paid debit card or wire transfer. If you owe taxes, the IRS generally will mail you a bill. And the IRS won’t threaten to bring in the police or another law enforcement group to arrest you for not paying your taxes.

In general, be extremely skeptical about any type of communication purporting to be from the IRS that sounds bullying or over-inquisitive — and certainly don’t give out any personal or financial information. But these fake messages aren’t the only tax-season scams out there. You might even receive a direct deposit from what appears to be the U.S. Treasury Department — but if you weren’t expecting it, something’s likely not right. This payment could be a sign that a fraudulent tax return was filed in your name, and it might be followed by a communication from a supposed IRS agent requesting this overpayment be sent to them. If this happens to you, you’ll want to contact the IRS right away, and you could also ask your bank to return the deposit to the government.

Other scams don’t claim to originate directly from the IRS, as scammers pretend to be from real or imaginary tax organizations. For example, you could get a message from the Taxpayer Advocate Service, an independent organization within the IRS, but this agency won’t contact you without a legitimate reason. Or you could receive a message from the nonexistent “Bureau of Tax Enforcement.” Your best bet is to delete these messages immediately or send them to your spam folder.

Not all tax season scams originate from fraudulent IRS representatives or fake agencies. You also need to be careful about whom you hire to prepare your taxes. If possible, get a recommendation from a trusted friend or family member. And keep in mind that a legitimate tax preparer must have a valid Preparer Tax Identification Number and must sign your tax return. If someone doesn’t have this number or is reluctant to sign your return, it may well be a sign that this individual is a “ghost preparer” who only wants to pocket your fee.

Tax scammers are, unfortunately, here to stay — but remaining vigilant can help you keep them from causing problems for you in this tax season and all the ones in the future.

different call (on who to put against her), but it was the call we made. I stick with it. I own it.”

MANTEO 36, SEAFORTH 34

Manteo jumped out to a 6-0 lead with wins at 145 and 152. Brewer fought Sam Cage to a 5-5 tie in the second period, but then gave up a pair of 3-point near falls and was outscored, 9-2, down the stretch to drop a 14-7 decision. At 152, William Bass tied Caleb Harris, 3-3, in the final period, but gave up the winning escape with seven seconds left in the bout.

At 160, Judge Lloyd upset Manteo’s Dylan Polatty, 11-7. Polatty is one of three 40-win members of the Manteo team and set the school’s career takedown record earlier this year. Lloyd fought back from a 7-2 second-period deficit, matching Polatty’s takedown output with two of his own. Lloyd also benefited from a locking hands penalty point, as well as two stalling points against Polatty.

Manteo then rattled off five straight wins to lead 36-3, starting with Jeremiah LaCentra decking Hinchman at 170. Hinchman was leading, 6-3, but got too high on his ride, reversed and pinned at 3:40. At 182, Seaforth’s

Cole Seder suffered a 30-second fall to John Riley Perciful, a career 100-win wrestler, with more than 40 of those coming this year, and Manteo’s all-time pin leader with 35 entering the duals.

At 195, Nick Brewster, Manteo’s third 40-win wrestler this year, was locked in a 6-4 battle with Seaforth’s Harrison Compton when he hit a takedown and half-nelson for the pin at 5:24. Landon Spencer clamped Seaforth’s Zachary Klingel in 49 seconds at 220, and Manteo heavyweight Erlin Zavala showed Moad the lights at 5:17 after trailing 5-1 after two periods.

Seaforth won all the remaining matches. At 106, Jordan Miller scored five unanswered points in the third period with a double leg takedown and cradle for the 12-4 major decision over Gomez. Then, Rogers got a first period takedown against Ben Hajtun and slapped on a half nelson for a 36-second fall at 113, while 120-pounder Josh Miller rocked Hector Calderon to sleep with a cradle at 1:21 and Armstrong nailed a single leg against Zach Burgess at 126, slipped in a reverse half and trapped the far arm for a fall in 45 seconds.

Chance Cody picked up a pair of takedowns and a reversal for a 6-1 win over Jackson Donahue at 132, and Ben Johnson racked up four takedowns against Tony Domingo, snaking in a half nelson for a fall with just 3 seconds remaining in the bout.

“Ben was getting pinned at the beginning of the year, and he really turned it on,” Armstrong said.

SEAFORTH 54, AYDEN-GRIFTON 25

Starting at 138, Johnson dropped a 3-0 decision to the Chargers’ Conor Loflin, and Ben Allen pinned the Hawks’ Caden Brewer at 145 to jump out to a 9-0 lead. William Bass got Seaforth on the board at 152 despite trailing the entire bout, as he reversed Sawyer Norville, loaded up a reverse half and decked his opponent at 5:10.

“I kind of thought I was gone, but coach was saying keep going. Keep fighting. Don’t give up,” Bass said. “So I just kept going. I kind of just got his head and tried to turn him.”

Lloyd gave the Hawks their first team lead, 12-9, when he powered through a double leg trip for a takedown and fall with a half nelson against 160-pounder Dashawn Folks at 2:44. Hinchman extended the lead to 18-9 at 170 when he crushed Keaton Guthrie with a far side cradle for a fall at 2:42.

Cole Seder won by forfeit at 182 to push the Hawks’ lead to 24-9, but at 195 Ayden-Grifton’s Jack Ewell earned a 16-7 major decision against Roger Eubanks. At 220, Compton widened Seaforth’s lead to 30-13, picking up a pair of second-period near falls before hammering a power half to flip Nasir Ingram to his back, switching to a reverse half for the fall.

Moad led Josh McCoy the entire 285-pound match, but was twice called for stalling before getting taken down, getting turned to his back and giving up the ghost with a half-minute remaining, as the Chargers crept to within 30-19.

The Hawks breezed to a trio of falls and a 48-19 lead in response. Rogers decked Makayla Wallace in 31 seconds at 106, Josh Miller used a balance check into a half nelson for a second period fall at 113 and Armstrong squeezed a headlock onto Bailor Peebles to end the 120-pound bout at 5:37.

Cody ended the match on a high note for the Hawks at 132. Trailing 8-2 in the final period against Jemarion Folks, Cody came standing, Folks fell backwards, and the Hawk pounced, lacing up a double grapevine and double underhook for the fall at 5:48.

‘THE BEAUTY OF DUSK’

Frank Bruni’s new perspective on life

NYT columnist will visit Fearington Village on Feb. 11 to discuss his new book

BY BEN RAPPAPORT
News + Record Staff

When you’re a reporter, your whole life is a potential copy. The sentiment from journalist Nora Ephron rang in Frank Bruni’s mind when he woke up one morning in 2017 and suddenly couldn’t see out of his right eye.

He’d suffered a rare stroke that caused permanent vision loss in the eye. And he soon learned from doctors the same disorder could ravage his other eye, too. He could lose his sight altogether.

Out of habit, the New York Times columnist began taking notes on his experiences. What started as a coping skill soon became the basis for his recently released book, “The Beauty of Dusk: On Vision Lost and Found.”

Bruni’s memoir captures the struggle of relearning how he sees the world. But more than that, the book is a testament to the neuroplasticity of humanity and an ode to our ability to overcome what may feel like insurmountable challenges.

Bruni, a UNC graduate and Chapel Hill resident, has been a prominent journalist for more than three decades; he’s worked more than 25 years at the New York Times, the last 10 of them as a columnist. He was also a White House correspondent, Rome bureau chief and chief restaurant critic. In July 2021, he became a professor at Duke University, teaching media-oriented classes in the Sanford School of Public Policy. He continues to write a weekly newsletter for the New York Times and write essays as one of the newspaper’s Contributing Opinion Writers.

“The Beauty of Dusk” has already seen widespread success, reaching fifth on the hardcover nonfiction and the combined print and e-book nonfiction New York Times bestsellers lists. To accompany the release of the paperback version, on Feb. 11 Bruni will visit McIntyre’s Books in Fearington Village to discuss his writing process and meet with readers.

The News + Record talked with Bruni ahead of the event about his writing process and what he learned through his memoir. The following has been edited for clarity and brevity:

What was your process in writing this book? What made you believe your personal story would stick with people?

When you go through something unusual enough, upsetting enough, challenging enough, you realize that’s a story. And as a storyteller, you don’t overlook that stuff.

I had something really dramatic happen to me, which is I woke up and couldn’t see clearly. Within a matter of days I was told I’d had this very rare stroke of my right optic nerve, and was told that I would live from that moment forward. I wouldn’t have vision in that eye, and still live in danger of the same thing happening in my other eye.

So as I went through this medical odyssey of that and its emotional challenges, I instinctively just started taking notes. Pretty soon I realized that this dramatic event was worth writing about because it’s also universal enough.

Almost all of us have these junctures where life deals us a physical setback or challenge that requires us to learn new things about ourselves. It can be an emotional or psychological thing, everybody has Frank Bruni’s memoir, ‘The Beauty of Dusk’ discusses his new perspective on life after learning to live with monocular vision.

IF YOU’RE GOING

Frank Bruni will be providing this discussion at 11 a.m. on Saturday, Feb. 11, at McIntyre’s Books in Fearington Village. To attend this reading, the store requires proof of paperback book purchase ($19) from McIntyre’s. For more information and to purchase tickets, visit www.fearington.com/events/frank-bruni-the-beauty-of-dusk.

these forks in the road. I felt like hopefully I could write something that would have resonance for any number of challenges we face in our lives.

How does writing a book differ from your other reporting and writing work? What makes it unique?

It’s about such intimate and personal journeys, which differs from most of what I write because I’m not normally the star. As a columnist I mostly focus on politicians or educators or society, but rarely-center myself in that narrative.

My previous memoir also differs from this because it dealt with my younger self and how that impacts me today.

(Note: the other memoir by Bruni, “Born Round,” discusses his struggles with eating disorders as a child and how he changed his relationship with food to eventually become a restaurant critic for the New York Times.)

This writing also felt different to me because I tried to talk with a lot of people throughout the process who had similar, yet definitively different struggles that at one time felt insurmountable. I talked with folks who experienced chronic pain, Parkinson’s disease, hearing loss, any variety of things. All their struggles held lessons that resonated with me, and hopefully the readers. So it’s bifurcated in that way — it’s my story, but also other people’s, too.

The premise of the memoir feels very based in resilience, and it seems that’s a clear message you want people to gather. What other lessons do you hope people walk away with from this book?

I didn’t want to write something that felt too self-indulgent. I wanted to write something that I felt would be instructive. I want people to see that we, as humans, are much more elastic than we realize.

This physiological concept of neuroplasticity is hugely underestimated in our day to day lives, except when we are confronted with these curveballs, like losing our vision for example, that force that process to take shape. And of course, this concept is metaphorically true, too. You will find yourself more able to enjoy things and open up when you realize we have this astounding ability to adjust and adapt.

We can adjust in ways that maximize our joy. I think we fail to appreciate that until we are called to do it, but knowing it’s there should be a great source of comfort and reassurance.

As doors close you really have a choice: you can tally the slights, or you can realize there’s no joy in wallowing in that and there’s no joy in it either. You can instead focus on the serious, emotional work of focusing on what remains, and all the blessings you still have. The ability to “accentuate the positives and eliminate the negatives,” as Johnny Mercer would say, exists in many of us and is a real key to contentment in life.

What can people who attend the Fearington Village event on Feb. 11 expect?

When I do events like this, especially when they’re near where I live, I really let them be guided by the participants. My expectation based on experience is that they’ll want to talk about the content of the book for about 20 minutes, but then the rest really dives anywhere and everywhere, which is the fun part for me.

People will want to talk about being a restaurant critic, some will want to talk about the media in the age of Donald Trump, others about the 2024 Presidential Election. It just varies widely and I look forward to seeing what the people of Fearington and Chatham have on their minds.

COUNCIL ON AGING | 1ST OF 4 PARTS

For Dietrich, Senior Games is nothing but net

BY JIMMY LEWIS
Chatham County Council on Aging

No matter where life has steered Rodney Dietrich, basketball is his universal language.

Whether strengthening the bonds with his older brother, reaching the at-risk youth population or building relationships in his current role as integrated services specialist and aging social worker at the Chatham County Council on Aging, every shot taken by the Buffalo, New York, native has been steeped in purpose.

Given Dietrich’s position in the “50 or better” category — those who are eligible for Chatham County Senior Games — he was quickly approached by an interested party upon beginning work at the Council in January of last year.

It was Liz Lahti, manager of the Eastern Chatham Senior Center and co-coordinator for the Games, which set a participation record of 262 athletes in 2022.

“When I first started, Liz of course, she said, ‘Why don’t you join the Senior Games?’” Dietrich recalled. “I asked what they had, and she said that they had different categories. I said I liked the basketball, so I said I’ll sign up for basketball.”

While Dietrich never played on an organized team, he could be found putting shots up with his older brother constantly in the Buffalo driveway. The Harlem Globetrotters were frequent visitors to the area, allowing opportunities to see someone other than the hapless Washington Generals. From 1970-1978, the Buffalo Braves called the city home as an NBA franchise before ultimately becoming what are the modern-day Los Angeles Clippers.

“I was always fascinated by the way they handled the basketball,” Dietrich said of the Globetrotters. “I could never do anything like that!”

The many hours of shooting in the driveway — albeit with more misses than makes for the younger Dietrich — paid off in his first Chatham County Senior Games experience. He won a gold medal in his age group for basketball shooting, which follows the “around the world” format from different areas on the court.

“It’s around the world, but I’ll tell you I didn’t shoot it too well,” Dietrich said.

On that day, it didn’t matter. Dietrich, a military veteran, was busy forming relationships — something that has served him well throughout his professional career. At least one long trip was undertaken to see a competitor.

“The whole thing is doing it together with other people,” Dietrich assured. “There was a lady who was doing it as well with me, and her family drove all the way from Virginia to come and support her. They had little signs for her. I like the togetherness of the games, but my older brother, he played. I looked up to my brother a lot growing up; he was a great guy.”

CCS honors Education Foundation's Detzi with 'Power of One' award

From Chatham County Schools

PITTSBORO — Jaime Detzi, executive director of the Chatham Education Foundation, is the most recent recipient of Chatham County Schools' Power of One award.

The award is made monthly to honor an individual who has made an extraordinary difference through their actions.

"Ms. Detzi has worked tirelessly in support of Chatham County Schools," said Superintendent Dr. Anthony Jackson. "She is extremely deserving of this award and her advocacy work has had a tremendous impact on what we can do for our students. For instance, the Foundation is working to raise funds now to help our district expand our college readiness AVID program to include all middle and high schools."

In addition to fundraising for District needs, the Foundation also issues annual grants to assist teachers with innovative, engaging classroom resources and supports literacy in partnership with CCS through its Chatham Reads and Books on Break. Books on Break puts approximately 14,000 new, high-interest books into the hands of 2,200 Chatham County Schools' students each May.

Despite that, the younger Dietrich would never sneak a one-on-one victory from his brother, the pride of Buffalo's Kensington High School. Every time there was a one-on-one battle, Dietrich would be the one retrieving the basketball after it swished through the net.

"Every time I played against him, he would never miss a shot," Dietrich said of his brother. "People, they do things, and it reminds them of something they did, the good times that they had. Whenever I watch basketball or play basketball, it just reminds me of my time with my brother."

While Dietrich was growing up in Buffalo in the '60s and '70s, the city was undergoing a background of change. The son of a Black father and white mother, Dietrich's class was one of the first groups to go into an integrated school. His father was a bus driver for the city, and happened to be the driver for his son's first day of integration.

It was admittedly different for the multiracial Dietrich, but his family still experienced some of the pushback to integration in the schools.

"My father was Black, but my mother was white," Dietrich said. "So it was a little different for me, but being in their family, I suffered the same things they had to go through. It was tough sometimes, but people were together and families were together."

Before arriving at the Council on Aging, Dietrich served as a facility director for at-risk teens. He was a unicorn in this particular field.

The turnover rate was high, with many unable to cope with the aggressiveness of youth just one step away from the prison system. But Dietrich, despite being punched and spat upon in the course of his duties, became indispensable to operations and remained for 12 years.

Indeed, basketball became a primary vehicle for communication. Dietrich oversaw what was known as a Level 3 facility, which meant the next escalation involved lockup in a detention center.

The kids were quickly running out of time — and options. Some were kicked out of seven different schools and brought back report cards of all failing grades.

Via basketball, Dietrich intervened and turned failing students into A/B honor roll recipients. They would then be allowed to play for their middle school and high school basketball teams.

"I think I got more out of them than a lot of the therapists did," Dietrich said. "In therapy, they're just sitting there across from somebody. But when you're playing a sport like basketball one-on-one or just shooting Around the World, you're playing and their minds are more at ease. They are more open to tell you things."

Dietrich interacted with a diverse population, and it was a ball and basket, plus the on-court antics, that de-escalated many situations.

"You talk about traveling, I used to have one kid that would just run around the whole court," Dietrich recalled. "He'd just hold the ball and start running. And then, he'd go and shoot it up and think that was it. None of the kids said anything to him, they just laughed."

Once Dietrich was discharged from the military, he had to spend some time in a VA hospital. His brother visited, and they went outside to a basketball court on site.

"We went out there, and we're still shooting, playing basketball," Dietrich said.

Years later, the elder Dietrich never missed a shot.

The first cut is the hardest

DEBBIE MATTHEWS
The Curious Cook

It's common wisdom that a dull knife is more dangerous than a sharp one. The reason is that you must struggle to get the blade through. When that takes place, accidents can happen. As a savant level klutz, I can speak to cuts. It looks like I've had scarification tattoos from a particularly incompetent artist.

But let me clue ya. A very sharp knife can cut you so fast and so cleanly that you don't even know you've been sliced for hours.

Sur La Table (stores in Raleigh and Greensboro) has a knife sharpening service. I went, but was a little nervous, because some people who sharpen tools are aggressive and will take a blade from dull to sharp to stump.

But my prized possessions were in awful shape. Whenever The Kid used one, I could hear my culinarily-trained child muttering, "Holy frack, these knives are ding-dong-dull."

So I took a leap of faith and dropped them off. I took my paring knife, de-boner, Santoku, chef's knife, and meat slicer. In about two hours, I picked them up.

Those puppies had become scary sharp. Within a week, I'd cut myself three times, with no more effort on my part than accidentally touching a blade. I always hand-wash my knives, and they sliced my poor kitchen sponge to ribbons. It was like sharing my kitchen with swashbuckler Douglas Fairbanks Jr.

No hassle baked potatoes

8 medium-large red skin potatoes, washed and dried
1/4 cup olive oil + 1 tablespoon
1/2 teaspoon Chinese 5-spice
1-2 tablespoons Dijon mustard
1 tablespoon flour
1 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon pepper
Water to thin sauce

Place potatoes on a large serving spoon. Slice down using the spoon to keep from cutting all the way through. Make parallel cuts 1/4 inch apart.

Whisk up the rest of the ingredients, adding enough water to make it the thickness of heavy cream.

Using gloves, and one at a time, place potatoes in sauce, and rub them it over them. Then, very carefully, spread open slices and rub a little sauce into each cut.

Pour a tablespoon of olive oil into baking dish. Place in coated potatoes. Brush any remaining sauce over the potatoes, carefully getting into cuts. If desired, lightly dust with smoked paprika.

Bake for one hour. Serves 4.

'Hasselback' spuds ready to eat.

and replace with something more to your liking.

I was pretty nervous about cutting the spuds. I had 10 pounds on hand, and I figured I'd go through a large majority of them before I got enough cut correctly just for Petey and me.

Well, the combo of the sharp knife and using the spoon as training wheels worked like a charm. I used four potatoes to get four successfully sliced potatoes. So I think the moral to this story is to close your eyes, hold your nose, and jump in. As long as you know how to swim, or you have a very sharp knife. Thanks for your time.
