City approves demolition of Center Drive residence

Nick Wilson nwilson@jrp.com

The razing of a condemned house on the city's east side was approved Wednesday during a public hearing at a Board of Public Works & Safety meeting.

The building at 35 Center Drive in Crawfordsville has been a source of unsanitary conditions for more than two years, according to testimonies given by neighbors and city officials.

Property owner Jenny Sarti said Wednesday she had plans to rebuild the home. Finances, winter weather and the pandemic have hindered her efforts of late, she said.

The building suffered a partial burn in November 2019 prior to Sarti purchasing the property July 29, 2020 at a sheriff's sale.

Sarti said she has "protected and sealed" the building multiple times as she has waited for engineers to inspect the property and provide appropriate plans to rebuild.

However, Code Enforcement Officer Barry Lewis, Building Inspector Jeff Davenport and Mayor Todd Barton said otherwise following visits to the property.

"I was there yesterday. It's not sealed," Barton said.

Photos taken of the property by Lewis and Davenport were presented and affirmed its condition.

"You can see all the way through the windows all the way through the back of the house," Lewis said.

Asked by city attorney Kent Minnette if, in his opinion, the house was uninhabitable, Davenport said "not at this time."

"It's in unstable condition," he said. "It either needs to be rebuilt or torn down."

Neighbor Melinda Young also testified, saying herself and others living in the neighborhood have contacted Sarti multiple times. However, no further action has been taken to make repairs or maintain the property since Sarti first

Biden aims to reduce cancer deaths

Presidents seeks 50% reduction over next 25 years

Josh Boak Associated Press

President Joe Biden is committing to reduce the cancer death rate by 50% — a new goal for the "moonshot" initiative against the disease that was announced in 2016 when he was vice president.

Biden

President Joe Biden is committing to reduce the cancer death rate by 50% — a new goal for the "moonshot" initiative against the disease that was announced in 2016 when he was vice president.

Biden has set a 25-year timeline for achieving that goal, part of his broader effort to end cancer as we know it, according to senior administration officials who previewed Wednesday's announcement on the condition of anonymity.

The issue is deeply personal for Biden: He lost his elder son, Beau, to brain cancer in 2015. Yet the rollout comes without any new funding elements at a time when the gains from new research can be uneven, such that Biden is setting an aspiration for the country more than 50 years after President Richard Nixon signed the National Cancer Act and launched a war on the disease. The benefits of that act were seen recently in areas outside of cancer as well as vaccines that were developed for the coronavirus.

The pain experienced by Biden is shared by many Americans. The American Cancer Society estimates that there will be 1,918,030 new cancer cases and 609,360 cancer deaths this year. What the president is aiming to do is essentially save more than 300,000 lives annually from the disease, something the administration believes is possible because the age-adjusted death rate has already fallen by roughly 25% over the past two decades. The cancer death rate is currently 146 per 100,000 people, down from nearly 200 in 2000.

"The progress in cancer research is slow — some of the fruits of Nixon's 1971 declaration were only harvested with the development of the COVID mRNA vaccine," said Dr. Otis Brawley, a professor of oncology and epidemiology at Johns Hopkins University and former chief medical and scientific officer for the American Cancer Society. The research progress that has occurred has led to a "better understanding of the biology of cancer and will do even more for us in the future."

Better public health practices, reducing cancer risks such as smoking and informing people about the best cancer research could reduce deaths.

Gov. urges caution, limited travel during storm

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Indiana Gov. Eric Holcomb urged Hoosiers to use caution Wednesday as the state braced for a winter storm that could bring a foot or more of snow and significant ice to parts of the state.

The Republican governor said a multiagency response was being mounted to respond to the storm and its aftermath, which he said will likely last three to four days.

Holcomb implored Hoosiers to avoid travel if possible and to "use common sense" if they do venture out onto the roads. He urged residents not to "over do it" when it comes to shoveling, and to check on neighbors, especially if power outages occur.

"We have the resources to weather this storm. What we really need is cooperation. Stay safe," Holcomb said during a Wednesday news conference.

Indiana Department of Transportation commissioner Joe McGuinness noted that road crews will not be able to pretreat roads as much as they would like due to rain that's expected to fall just before the snow and ice arrives.

Officials said 54 Indiana National Guard teams will be out to rescue stranded motorists, but Indiana State Police Superintendent Doug Carter called on Hoosiers "to stay off the roads."

Up to one foot of snow was forecast to fall by late Thursday or early Friday over much of the northern half of Indiana, with several inches of snow predicted for central Indiana and moderate to heavy ice accumulations forecast over southern Indiana.

Food fight results in friendship's bitter end

DEAR ABBY: When a friend of mine "makes dinner" for invited guests, it's either takeout Chinese food or delivered pizza. Frankly, I am sick of it. Last Thanksgiving, they invited me and several others over for dinner. You guessed it! Chinese food. I told my friend I was surprised and not in the mood for Chinese food, offered my apologies and left. We didn't talk for four months.

DEAR ABBY

This past year I was again invited to Thanksgiving dinner. I declined and, when asked why, said, "I'm sick and tired of what is being offered." The response was, "Then I guess I'll stop inviting you. And I don't need your friendship." I replied, "Glad we are on the same page!"

Abby, this "friend" knows how to cook and could certainly order something different. Was I out of line? I have no regrets the friendship has ended. — FED UP IN THE WEST

DEAR FED UP: When someone accepts an invitation to someone's home, rather than criticize the menu, they should be grateful for the hospitality being extended. Were you out of line? The way you phrased your reason for declining was rude. You could have inquired about the menu and asked if you could bring something more "traditional." It's fortunate you have no regrets that your relationship with your former host has ended. I'm pretty sure the feelings are mutual.

DEAR ABBY: On Sunday evening, a much older woman I'd never met came to my door saying she was a neighbor and was there to recruit me to participate in a political lobbying event her church was sponsoring. This is not something I wish to do.

I tried to refuse nicely. But then she said several times she required my name, email address and phone number so she could send me more information as well as opportunities to pass the information to other people. I asked for her information instead, but saying "no, thank you" and trying to excuse myself to get back to my children didn't lessen her persistence. Eventually, I apologized and closed the door on her.

People should not be harassed in their home, even though she may very well be a neighbor in this small neighborhood. How could I have handled this better? — NO SOLICITING

DEAR NO SOLICITING: The person who came to your door had an agenda; it wasn't a social call. In a situation like the one that was thrust upon you, good manners did not require you to offer an apology. Frankly, you should have closed your front door SOONER.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 65-year-old woman who has never enjoyed sex. I've had lovers, and I'm a very affectionate person, but the act itself has never been comfortable for me. Now that I'm post-menopausal, it's practically impossible.

I have never been married, but I want to find someone. In fact, I yearn for a life partner. I'm on dating sites, and my question is: How should I describe myself? It seems most men want sex. Should I include my lack of interest in sex in my profile so they know what they're getting? I don't want to waste anyone's time, especially not my own. But this feels so weird and awkward to address. — EVERYTHING BUT THAT IN NEW YORK

DEAR EVERYTHING BUT: It would benefit you to go online and search for dating sites for people who want romance only, without sex. These sites do exist, and it may comfort you to know that you are DEFINITELY not alone. If you do try one, I hope you find the man you are looking for.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Contact Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

BRIDGE

Need courage and partner's help

Phillip Alder

Today's deal was played in a one-day team event in Sydney, Australia. It was the decisive deal from the last round between the two teams vying for first place. It contained instructive points at both tables.

Bridge is a bidder's game. The more you bid, the more pressure you put your opponents under, and the more mistakes they will make. True, occasionally you will suffer a penalty, but the good results will outweigh the bad.

At the table under observation, North's aggressive double was negative, showing at least four spades. South, needing little more than four spades to the king-queen opposite, jumped straight to four spades.

West led the club ace and switched to the heart two, which even the valet parker knew was a singleton. Now East gave a suit-preference signal to help West. He played the heart nine under dummy's 10, to indicate an entry in diamonds. Declarer continued with the ace and another spade. West won with the king while East discarded the encouraging diamond nine. But West lost his nerve: He cashed the diamond ace, whereupon declarer claimed. If West had underled his diamond ace, East would have won the trick and given his partner a heart ruff to defeat the contract.

At the other table, North cautiously passed over two clubs. Then East, who liked his singleton and four-card trump support, raised to three clubs. West went on to game. As you can see, five clubs was easy to make with the aid of the winning diamond finesse. One team scored plus 420 and plus 600, the swing that won the tournament.

CANCER

Brawley said that one of his studies found that 130,000 people die annually from cancer because they do not benefit from known science. Dr. Barron Lerner, a professor of medicine and population health at New York University Langone Health, said that "hyperbolic goals" can be needed to attract public attention but achieving the 50% reduction is "extremely unlikely." Biden was scheduled to give remarks Wednesday from the East Room of the White House, along with his wife, Jill, and Vice President Kamala Harris. Also scheduled to attend the speech: members of Congress and the administration and about 100 members of the cancer community including patients, survivors, caregivers, fami-

But after hearing multiple testimonies from officials, inspectors and neighbors, all condemning the property (officially condemned by Davenport in October last year), a motion to affirm the requested demolition order was approved. In other business, the board: • Approved an agreement with HWC Engineering to rebuild Northside Park, located at North Street and Grant Avenue, for an amount not to exceed $35,500. • Approved an agreement between the city and HWC Engineering for design services related to the Alley Activation Project. The city is working with the Montgomery County Community Foundation to construct a gathering space by the East Main Street alleyway mural. Total costs are not to exceed $8,500. • Heard from Street Department Director Scott Hesler, who urged residents not to park on city streets during the snow storm, if possible, saying cars could become entrapped during the snow removal process. He also said fines will be issued to residents who throw shoveled snow into roadways.

Paying the price of power theft

Thieves sometimes think of it as a crime that won't hurt anybody. Someone illegally hooks up a power supply, hooks up a line that has been disconnected, or tampers with a meter to avoid recording electricity usage. The truth is that tampering with electrical equipment or attempting to steal electric power carries the potential to harm many people. The innocent consumers on the same line and utility personnel that work on those lines are all at risk when someone tampers with electricity or electrical equipment. An overload of electricity could result in extremely high voltages that may damage the appliances of paying customers.

Excessive current that is not safeguarded by a fuse is especially dangerous. In emergency situations such as fires, power has to be shut off to help firefighters and emergency medical personnel to enter a building safely. If lines have been interfered with illegally, the lines could remain energized, endangering the lives of the first responders. From a reliability standpoint, illegal connections to power sources and attempts to divert metering devices can overload the system, cause interruptions, and compromise power quality.

CEL&P urges everyone to help prevent and reduce power theft:

- Notify CEL&P immediately at 765-362-1900 if you know of an illegally connected consumer.
- Do not cut the seal on your meter base or tamper with your own meter for any reason.
- Remain aware of your surroundings and report any suspicious activities to CEL&P.

Everyone is affected by power theft, and detecting and reporting illegal activity will help reduce the price paid. For more electrical safety information, visit celp.com and SafeElectricity.org.

Crinoids?!

You may have heard the word crinoid, but been unsure as to what it is. Crinoids are historically fossilized echinoderms (an invertebrate animal, one lacking a backbone), related to today's starfish sea urchins, sea cucumbers, and sea lilies. Geologically speaking, Montgomery County and all of Indiana was a shallow inland sea about 438 million years ago, before the last glaciation covered much of our state. Throughout this sea that covered most of North America before the onset of glaciers, crinoids thrived at every level and depth of the water.

Today, only 600 species of Crinoids survive in deep seas and on coral reefs. What makes crinoids so unique is that they fix themselves to a solid surface via a calyx or button-shaped base stalk, that acts as an anchor or roots; and they feed on suspended plankton and detritus floating through the water. Through time, new segments of stems are formed and grow upward, extending the crinoid further up in the ocean currents. Their water vascular system or series of tubes that run throughout the animal keep hydraulic pressure in check and help the organism remain upright in the currents. On the crown of the crinoid is a feathery head with five to ten jointed arms, or rays, that are capable of curling up in order to move food towards the mouth cavity in the center of the head. On the sides of each of these arms are short branches, or pinnules, that increase surface area to maximize food consumption. Crinoids are capable of regeneration, which means they can grow new body parts. Crinoids also are divided into males and females of the species and do not reproduce clonally.

Most crinoids died in the past great extinction events we have had over the course of millions of years. Today, the majority of crinoids are buried under layers of sedimentary rock, like shale, siltstone, and limestone, their bodies mineralized into the fossil record. Montgomery County, and particularly Sugar Creek, have been and still are crinoid hot spots for fossil hunters. Historically, scientists such as geologists, came to this area of the state specifically to collect crinoid specimens. In 1842 a nine-year-old boy named Horace Hovey found the first crinoid section and thus the fever to discover more crinoids began. More than 60 species of these fossils have been found right here in Crawfordsville. The most predominant locations are along Corey's Bluff and along Indian Creek.

If your curiosity is now piqued, plan a visit to the Crawfordsville District Public Library to check out our crinoid display on the second floor. Many specimens found in and around Crawfordsville are on display from a donation of the William Jones Family. The detail in these fossils is amazing! Once you have seen a crinoid head, stem, or calyx, you will know exactly what you have found. They will become easy to identify, and easier to find after a good rain, as bits and pieces of fossils will wash up each time. You can also pay a visit to the Carnegie Museum for more in-depth information on crinoids. Additionally, you can take a look at our books A Collector's Guide to Crawfordsville Crinoids by William Morgan (563.92 Mor), Audubon Society Field Guide to North American Fossils (560.973 Tho), or Roadside Geology of Indiana (557.72 Cam). And now you are ready to go on your own crinoid fossil excursion along Sugar Creek!

Stephanie Morrisette is a Library Assistant at the Reference & Local History Department at CDPL.
