Census
2020

The U.S. Census 2020 started and everyone counts

It's an invitation we only get every 10 years and yours is on its way. Census Bureau employees started checking addresses and will continue the meticulous process of verifying them across the country, through mid-October.

Required by the U.S. Constitution, the census started when Thomas Jefferson directed the first one in 1790. Every 10 years, the Census Bureau oversees surveys that collect information from households, businesses, schools, hospitals, and other organizations. The information we provide to the Census Bureau is strictly confidential and protected.

Data the Census Bureau collects is used to determine the number of seats each state holds in the U.S. House of Representatives and how more than

"Everyone needs to be counted: Citizens, residents and undocumented. You matter. You need to be counted. Fill out the census."

Executive Director,
Women's Intercultural Center

$675 billion in federal funds are distributed, each year, to states and local communities. These funds are used by local communities to provide services and support infrastructure, such as health care, jobs, schools, roads and businesses.

In fact, federal funding for local infrastructure and financial assistance programs is guided by the information about people, places and the economy, derived from the most recent census. Census responses guide distribution of federal funds to states, counties, cities and households for programs like Medicare, Medicaid, school breakfast programs, infrastructure, Section 8 housing, Pell grants, low-income housing tax credits, the Workforce Innovation and Opportunity Act, and HUBZones—to name a few.

"Schools throughout our county, including the Hatch Valley, receive federal funding based on census data. The data determines how much federal funding our schools and kids get for such things as school lunches and other vital programs to aid in the achievement of their educational goals," said Brandy Holguin, a principal with the Hatch Valley Public School District. "It is critical for schools that everyone completes the federal census."

The Doña Ana Board of County Commissioners unanimously passed a resolution directing the creation of a local complete count committee and is part of the 2020 Regional Census Complete Count Committee (CCC). All local governments and external stakeholders participate and are developing plans to communicate the importance of the federal census to the public, especially in areas considered "hard to count."

Regrettably, the Census Bureau reports that Doña Ana County's participation rate in the 2010 Census was only 67 percent, which significantly impacts federal funding to our communities. According to the University of New Mexico, just one percent undercount in our county means a $64 million, 10-year revenue loss in federal funds.

"Everyone needs to be counted: Citizens, residents and undocumented. You matter. You need to be counted. Fill out the census," emphasized Mary Carter, Executive Director, Women's Intercultural Center and member of the CCC. "If you don't respond to the census, you basically do not exist. That means that for the next ten years, New Mexico loses $20,000 for each member of your household that could be used for infrastructure, healthcare programs, and so much more."

How the 2020 Census will invite everyone to respond

Every household will have the option of responding online, by mail, or by phone.

Nearly every household will receive an invitation to participate in the 2020 Census from either a postal worker or a census worker.

95% of households will receive their census invitation in the mail.

Almost 5% of households will receive their census invitation when a census taker drops it off. In these areas, the majority of households may not receive mail at their home's physical location (like households that use PO boxes or areas recently affected by natural disasters).

Less than 1% of households will be counted in person by a census taker, instead of being invited to respond on their own. We do this in very remote areas like parts of northern Maine, remote Alaska, and in select American Indian areas that ask to be counted in person.

Note: We have special procedures to count people who don't live in households, such as students living in university housing or people experiencing homelessness.

She got her nickname from Bob Hope and once played gin rummy with John Wayne.

"I could tell you story after story," retired New Mexico State University Special Events Director Barbara "Mother" Hubbard told the NMSU Pioneers at their 2019 summer luncheon, held Tuesday, Aug. 20 at the NMSU golf course.

Beginning in 1968 and continuing through her retirement in 1998 and beyond, Hubbard brought performers like Hope, Tina Turner, Neil Diamond, the Osmond Brothers, Charley Pride, Whitney Houston and Garth Brooks to the Pan American Center. Now 92, Hubbard continues to travel the United States raising money for her American Collegiate Talent Showcase (ACTS) scholarship program, which includes more than a dozen scholarships available to NMSU students.

Among the guests at the lunch was Venue Today magazine founder Linda Deckard, who is writing a book about Hubbard. Hubbard received the magazine's first-ever Women of Influence award in 2006 and was the top vote-getter when entertainment industry professionals were asked to nominate and vote on that first award recipient, Deckard said.

Also speaking at the lunch were NMSU Chancellor Dan Arvizu and Provost Carol Parker.

"We're very excited about the opportunities that are in front of us," Arvizu said. NMSU's strategic plan is in place, he said, and included input from one-third of the university's faculty and staff. The plan, Arvizu said, "reflects who we are as a land grant, Hispanic-serving institution."

The plan focuses on student success, developing and expanding research and partnerships, elevating outreach and creating a robust university, the chancellor said. NMSU, he said, should "serve the

I have a co-pay?

This week I'm going to diverge a bit from the usual type of topic. This comes following an interaction that we had several weeks ago in our front office. A person came in with a physician's order for physical therapy. When setting up the first appointment the staff member reviewed the insurance coverage, and informed the new patient that they would have a $40 per visit co-payment for service. This pretty-much ended the conversation, as she left frustrated, stating "Why are you charging me? I already pay a huge premium!"

One of the biggest difficulties in operating a medical practice is navigating health insurance coverage. Plans differ in the coverage they provide, the cost to the insured, the providers who participate in the plan, and a myriad of other features which seem to confuse a lot of people.

Health insurance benefits vary in how they are delivered. Some plans limit access to certain providers or healthcare systems, and also control access to certain services. Managed care organizations use various techniques to control costs and manage health service use. They may restrict access to certain providers (in-network providers), require primary-care-physician approval for access to specialty care (gatekeeping), coordinate care for people with certain conditions (disease/case management), or require "prior authorization" for certain care.

Each health plan defines how providers are paid for services, as well as the amounts that the patient is responsible for paying for services. In our experience, three terms introduce a lot of confusion: Deductible, Co-insurance, and Co-payment. A deductible is the amount that you agree to pay for covered services each year before your plan starts to pay. Deductible amounts may range from a few hundred to several thousand dollars.

Dennis Prickett
Physical Therapist and co-owner of Atrium Physical Therapy.

Co-insurance is the percentage of costs of a covered service you agree to pay (20%, for example) after you've paid your deductible. Co-payment is a fixed amount ($40, for example) you pay for a covered service after you've paid your deductible. Co-payments (co-pays) can vary for different services within the same plan, like drugs, lab tests, or visits to specialists.

Here are some simple things which we would like for all potential patients to understand.

- Health insurance is a contract between you and the insurance company, in which the company agrees to pay, in whole or in part, your medical expenses. Your coverage is not a contract with the provider.
- The amount that the provider is paid is usually determined by a contract between the insurance company and the provider (the "allowable" amount). The insurance company pays the allowable amount minus the amount due from the patient.
- Health care providers expect patients know that they have a financial liability prior to receiving services. Many times, people question us with "what do you mean I have a $40 copay?", when the copayment amount is clearly printed on the insurance card that they handed us. Imagine the shock on the face of a cashier at a grocery store if a customer questioned why they have to pay $2.50 for a gallon of milk, when the price is clearly marked on the container! Deductible, co-insurance, and co-pay amounts are on the insurance card.
- The amount due to be paid to the provider by the patient, in the form of deductibles, co-insurance, or co-pays, is determined by the insurance company, not the provider. The provider must collect the amount due from the patient - doing otherwise is, in most cases, a violation of federal law.

I hope this helps you to understand a little more about health insurance!

needs of our faculty, who are here to serve the needs of our students."

"I can't tell you how happy I am to be here," said Parker, who became provost in July. Parker, who grew up on a dairy farm in Michigan, has previous service as the provost at the University of Texas at El Paso and as senior vice provost at the University of New Mexico. NMSU, Parker said, "is just the most exciting story in higher education."

Also attending the lunch were NMSU President John Floros, Chancellor Emeritus and former New Mexico Gov. Garrey Carruthers and NMSU Associate Vice President for Alumni Engagement, Participation and Stewardship Leslie Cervantes.

The lunch also included recognition of the NMSU students who are recipients of this year's four Pioneers book scholarships. The four are psychology major Clarisa Casillas, mechanical engineering major Adam Flores, computer science major Jeffrey Lansford and athletic training major Destiny Vielma. All four are from Las Cruces.

"You're being a part of our journey and you're helping us succeed," Vielma, a freshman, told the Pioneers.

The scholarship "goes a long way," Casillas said. "It's incredible how much it helps."

"We're very proud to have you here today," Pioneers President Emmet Brooks told the students.

The Pioneers have been awarding book scholarships to NMSU students since 1995.

The organization was created by then-NMSU President Dr. Gerald Thomas in 1984 "to preserve the relationship between NMSU and its former employees," said Pioneers President Emeritus Denise Welsh.

"If you are an employee who has worked for at least 20 years at NMSU, or have retired from NMSU, and you have made a gift to NMSU in the past year, you are (already) a Pioneer," Welsh said. The Pioneers host three luncheons each year, in the spring, summer and fall, "to break bread, hear stories and listen to guest speakers," Welsh said.

LCPS mired in turmoil

I hope Las Cruces Public Schools teachers have good focusing skills. A lot of distracting things are flying around above them. For example:

- There is an effort by a group called Enough! seeking to recall school board members Maria Flores, Terrie Dallman and Ray Jaramillo, whose positions would expire in 2021.

- For the other two positions, there is an election Nov. 5 with several candidates vying.

- Superintendent Gregory Ewing resigned, effective Sept. 9.

- LCPS recently agreed to pay $250,000 to settle a suit against the district by former Head Start facilitator Lillian Duran.

- Former human resources director Elizabeth Marrufo sued the district for discrimination and wrongful termination.

- There is an outstanding lawsuit against the district by former employee Kathy Norris.

- Former Desert Hills Elementary principal Jamie Vance sued the district for discrimination, after the New Mexico Human Rights Bureau found no probable cause in her claim with them.

- Former public information officer Jo Galvan filed a claim with the state Workforce Solutions department after she was terminated by Ewing.

- Former executive assistant Tina Gonzalez filed a human rights complaint.

- Other potential claims could come from Ewing himself. In his resignation letter to the state education department, Ewing said he planned to file human rights complaints against the district for gender-based discrimination and retaliation. Ewing's letter, written by an attorney, said the district is "put on notice" not to destroy all manner of records of communication regarding him, and that the letter itself is a request under the New Mexico Inspection of Public Records Act. The letter states Ewing would drop his claims if the schools paid two years of his salary in a lump sum. He added that, if the school system wished, he would serve the district on a consultant basis at an hourly rate commensurate with his $180,000 salary.

From the Publisher

- LCPS is suing Trinity Properties for $772,000 for overpaid rent in a dispute over an agreement in which the district rented building and land for 10 years with an option to buy.

- After naming deputy superintendent Steven Sanchez as acting superintendent in Ewing's absence, the district then announced it would bring in Karen Trujillo to be interim superintendent after Sept. 9. Trujillo, a Las Cruces and New Mexico State University graduate, had served for about six months as New Mexico's Public Education Department Secretary before Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham terminated her in July.

That adds up to a lot of chaos and distraction.

It also adds up to a lot of money.

If even some of the employee claims and suits turn into settlements in the price range of the one for Duran, it could easily cost the district more than $1 million, not including attorneys' fees. No matter how the separation with Ewing turns out, it will likely cost the district at least a quarter of a million dollars. And with Trinity, the district believes it spent $772,000 it shouldn't have.

All of that comes to about $2 million.

I'm sure the district (meaning us taxpayers) could do a lot more productive things with $2 million.

Trolling for buffalo

Buffalo Bob took the call on his cellular phone. I caught the last of the conversation, "and if that don't work try a shot. No . . . not a tranquilizer, a 30-30. At least you'll be able to eat the meat."

"Escaped buffalo pose a problem," he said after hangin' up. "That fellow was callin' from West Virginia. I told him a trick that worked for me . . . trolling."

Bob explained that a few years back he and Dave bought 12 head of buffalo from a grain farmer on the plains of Colorado. Bought 'em over the phone. The price was right. They arrived in the small town of Flagler and took a motel room. Three days later they were still tryin' to gather the twelve head.

The first day they built a trap out of panels in the 1/4 section pasture. The trap was big enough to fit the U.S.S. Eisenhower. They baited it with alfalfa and spent all afternoon tryin' to coax, drive and trick the suspicious buffalo herd into the trap. They ignored it like fat trout in a well-fished stream.

That night they called a noted wildlife veterinarian who had buffalo experience. The vet arrived the next day armed with a tranquilizer gun and enough ammo to put Yellowstone Park to sleep for a fortnight. They drove out to the herd and re-enacted the stampede from Dances with Wolves but hit nary a buffalo. Concerned with the expense of the tranquilizer, Bob and Dave built a buffalo blind outta tumbleweeds.

They parked the vet with his trusty musket behind the tumbleweeds and chased buffalo by him for two hours. Unfortunately, "Dr. Dead Eye" couldn't hit the top of his head with a chafing dish. Not one bullseye.

The third morning found Bob and Gary making excuses to the grain farmer. "Well," he said, "do what you can. They're yours. I've got to go to dad's place and haul a dead calf to the dump."

A light flickered somewhere in Buffalo Bob's desperate brain. He remembered tryin' to drag a dead buffalo calf out of a field. The herd went crazy and followed the calf through some primitive protective instinct. He actually had to get the tractor into 4th high to stay ahead and get out of the gate!

"Bring that dead calf over here. I want to try somethin'."

The farmer complied, even though it was a Hereford cross. Bob stationed a man by the trap gate and circled the herd draggin' the dead calf behind his pick-up. The buffalo cows went berserk and started chasin' the calf. Bob made a couple more circles stirrin' 'em up and on the third pass drove straight into the trap. The herd followed like greyhounds chasin' the mechanical rabbit!

"Wow!" I said, as the light dawned, "Trolling for buffalo. So that's what you advised your caller from West Virginia."

"Yeah. I don't know if it'll work, though," said Bob. "His buffalo is loose in a lady's backyard on the nice side of town."

Contemplating a truce with my long-rooted nemesis

During the last three years, my relationship with the weeds in my backyard has gone from indifference to a burning antipathy.

It got to the point where it was personal long ago. An existential struggle. Mano-a-la mala hierba.

My indifference, perhaps better described as neglect, during what was a particularly wet summer resulted in weeds the size of redwoods. My fear was that I'd have to chop 'em down with an ax and deal with the stumps later.

I got a warning left on my door from a Codes officer about weeds in the front yard and did enough from then on to maintain some semblance of control out there. But I just let the backyard go. By fall, the weeds were way taller than I. I decided that was enough.

WALT RUBEL

The View

I didn't really need an ax, but I was afraid my electric weed whacker wouldn't cut it. And, they'd just grow back anyway. So, I started pulling.

Pretty much every morning. It got to be a daily routine. When I started, the weeds seemed endless and the task hopeless. But they were so big and clustered together that I was able to make a dent, while at the same time building some impressive mounds of dead weeds.

I just left everything sit in piles until this year, when I decided to start filling clear plastic yard bags. During the past several months I have sent more than 40 35-gallon bags of weeds to the landfill, via the city's Green Grapppler.

And then one morning a few weeks ago, it happened. I went out just like always but had to search to find any weeds. There weren't nearly enough to fill my bag. Victory!

Oh sure, I knew it wouldn't last. All over my backyard, little sprouts of weeds are poking through the dirt, just waiting for the next rainstorm. The weeds were here long before me and will be here long after I'm gone. I knew all that. But for this tiny moment in time I felt triumphant.

I was still feeling that way last week when I went to a City Council meeting on this very subject. More specifically, the debate was about whether to stop using the weed killer Roundup, which just added to me feeling of triumph. I cleared my whole backyard without one drop of poison.

Then, at some point in the meeting, my worldview toward weeds was challenged. Not all weeds are evil, the experts were insisting. They add vegetation to barren landscapes. They provide pollen for bees. Some even have medicinal purposes.

Great, now I'm the bad guy. Well, somebody needs to tell the Codes officer hanging threatening notices on my door.

This all kind of reminds me of the recent debate at the county about what to do with nuisance animals. In both cases, it is about how we co-exist with our desert environment.

After months of discussion, the county voted to restrict lethal methods of removal, without fully understanding what the impacts of that decision would be. When the restrictions proved to be unworkable, they were repealed.

After months of discussion, the city voted to ban Roundup, without fully understanding what the impacts of that decision will be. They may just switch to another chemical. They may do more mowing or weed whacking. Or they may, as the experts suggest, decide that not all weeds must be killed.

But I doubt it. The more likely scenario would seem to be a back-track, just like at the county.

As for me, I'm ready for a truce with the weeds, I'm just not sure how to negotiate it.

Solis announces mayoral bid

BULLETIN REPORT

Editor's note: Doña Ana County Commissioner Isabella Solis announced her campaign for mayor of Las Cruces Aug. 22 – at the time expanding that race in the November election to six candidates. With her announcement, Commissioner Solis released the following statement, which has minimal editing:

SOLIS

“Las Cruces is more than a city. It is our home. We have all the

ingredients for prosperity right here in our backyard: incredible natural beauty, a first-class university, hardworking citizens, tremendous federal installations, proximity to an international border and two interstate highways, great weather, an established agricultural industry, multiple national monuments – the list goes on and on!

“But truth be told, this home that we all love, that has so much to offer, is not reaching its potential. It’s embarrassing that our home was recently ranked the worst city in America to find a job. It’s tough to watch as communities like El Paso and Tucson experience tremendous prosperity while the Las Cruces economy remains stagnant. It’s disturbing to see infrastructure projects that force small businesses to close instead of giving them a boost. It’s heartbreaking to see lives lost to increasing crime. And it’s frustrating to see our young people who want a better life leave our community for greater opportunities.

“It’s time to change all that. But to do so, new leadership is required.

“Our city needs to help our small businesses create jobs, not force them to close. “Reduce – not increase – our community’s dependence on the government. Keep our roads in good shape, without hurting the economy like we did on Valley Drive. Make sure Las Cruces attracts good-paying private sector jobs that provide economic security, so our young people don’t have to choose between staying home and having a bright future. Collaborate with federal, state and local agencies to promote a reasonable immigration system that honors the rule of law. Keep our citizens safe, enforce our laws, and support our law enforcement. In short: Let’s get back to the basics of good local government!

“This is why I’m running for mayor of Las Cruces. It will take leadership to unite our city around these goals and help us reach our potential as a city. We need to move on from the partisanship that divides our community and get to work making it a better place for our families. I’m ready to step up and truly serve as your mayor to ensure we get the city government we deserve as Las Cruceans.”

Do you know how to identify a natural gas leak? You might smell sulfur or rotten eggs, you may notice dirt or debris shooting up out of a hole in the ground, dead or dying vegetation in an otherwise green area, and a loud hissing or roaring sound near pipeline markers. These and many more are all telltale signs of a natural gas or pipeline leak. Use all your senses, even common sense and report any possible leaks to Zia Natural Gas Company. When in doubt call us out!

As always, Zia personnel are available 24/7 for all natural gas emergencies. Call (575) 526-4GAS (427) if you have a natural gas emergency.

J. Paul Taylor

He's had the opportunity to live our history in a personal way

By MIKE COOK
Las Cruces Bulletin

"I remember the life and it's grand," Mesilla-Las Cruces icon J. Paul Taylor said a few days before celebrating his 99th birthday.

The long-time educator and legislator was born Aug. 24, 1920, in Chamberino, New Mexico, grew up on a farm and attended a small county school there, graduating from the eighth grade with four other students.

"I was a country boy," Taylor said. His mother was Hispanic and from Mexico and his father was an Irish American born in Texas.

Today, Taylor continues to live in the home he has owned on the Mesilla plaza since 1952. He maintains a strong interest in politics at all levels and travels to Santa Fe every other month as a member of the Museum of New Mexico Board of Directors.

"I feel ancient," Taylor said, reflecting on nearly a century of life. "I can't ambulate without a walker or a wheelchair." But he continues to be surrounded and supported by a loving family and community. He and his wife, Mary, who died in 2005, raised seven children. His 5,000-square-foot home, built in 1858, contains art and artifacts dating to the 18th century, said

Leslie Bergloff, manager of the Mesilla state Historic Site that includes the Taylor home.

Taylor, who spent 18 years in the New Mexico House of Representatives, retiring in 2005, said Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham is "a really nice person. She's a very credible girl," said Taylor, who served on the House Education, Finance and Health and Human Services committees.

Taylor said he envies current legislators because of the state's record revenue. "We had to scrimp on a whole lot of things and be very frugal," he said. "At the same time, I felt a great deal was done."

At one point during his service in the legislature, Taylor sued then-Gov. Gary Johnson because of a welfare reform proposal. The case was decided in Taylor's favor by the New Mexico

Supreme Court. In spite of the disagreement, Taylor, a Democrat, and Johnson, a Republican, remained friends.

Taylor actually has strong ties to both major political parties in New Mexico. His mother's grandfather was Miguel Romero y Baca (1798-1880), who met Abraham Lincoln and helped start the Republican Party in New Mexico. His son, Trinidad Romero (1835-1918), was elected as a delegate to Congress representing the Territory of New Mexico 1877-79 and later was appointed a U.S. marshal by Republican President Benjamin Harrison. Taylor's mother's family had come to New Mexico with the Oñate expedition in 1598.

Taylor said his biggest concern throughout his legislative service "was for the poor, sick, and hungry." He was often called "the Conscience of the Legislature."

As a Mesilla resident, Taylor won't get to vote in the hotly contested Las Cruces mayor's race, but said he thinks ranked-choice voting, which Las Cruces will use in city elections this November for the first time ever, is a good thing. "In the long run, it's going to be the way to go," said Taylor, who defeated incumbent Republican Patricia Dominguez in a close race to claim the District 33 House seat in 1986 and was often unopposed for re-election thereafter.

"I follow very closely what's going on," he said. "I am amazed and I am concerned." Nationally, he said, "It's about Trump. I'm concerned about the future. I hope that we can have a steady hand and a more thoughtful hand."

Community Conversation to focus on early childhood ed

BULLETIN REPORT

The second of 11 open invitation Community Conversations about early childhood education in New Mexico will be held 3-5 p.m. Wednesday, Sept. 4 at Las Cruces City Hall, 700 N. Main St.

"These Community Conversations are part of a statewide needs assessment being conducted by the New Mexico Early Childhood Development Partnership (NMECDP) in partnership with the state to develop a strategic plan for the newly created Early Childhood Education and Care Department (ECECD)," said NMECDP Communication Specialist Lynn E. Paulson.

"The ECECD will guide early childhood programs across New Mexico brought together under a single agency in 2019 in order to offer a more coordinated and efficient system for meeting the needs of New Mexico's pre-K children," Paulson said in a news release.

"As part of the statewide early learning needs assessment, the State and NMECDP will engage with families, early childhood providers and stakeholders through 11 community forums across the state," Paulson said in a separate news release. She said there will also be a statewide early learning survey on the issues of equitable access, workforce, state and local governance and financing options.

To further community engagement and reach diverse stakeholders, NMECDP will also host focused listening sessions with specific groups, including Native American communities, immigrant families, teen parents and families with children with developmental delays and disabilities, Paulson said.

"There are several good candidates" among the large crop of Democratic presidential hopefuls," Taylor said, including former U.S. Rep. Beto O'Rourke of El Paso. Democrats need to "find a really good candidate to repair the wreckage that has been done," Taylor said.

Taylor opposes Trump's plan for a wall between the U.S. and Mexico, citing close ties between families and organizations in the two countries and remembering an exchange program he set up between teachers in Las Cruces and Ciudad Juarez. (Taylor was instrumental in starting Las Cruces Public Schools' bilingual and migrant education programs.) "I still carry in my thoughts and in my heart a little speech" given by a fifth-grade student from Juarez offering condolences from Mexico following the November 1963 assassination of President John F. Kennedy, he said. "I think those relationships are just so important."

Taylor said he has followed the plight of asylum seekers making the journey from Central America to the U.S.-Mexico border through the work of his grandson, a photojournalist, who "paints a picture of the tragedy of those families who are disregarded by many after having traveled from Central America."

Taylor said his father's family was divided by the Civil War. His grandfather left the family conflict behind in Missouri and moved to El Paso in 1864, opening a small store and working for the railroad.

From the horse-drawn carts of the Oñate expedition to the coming of the railroad nearly 200 years later to the historic plaza that is at the heart of Mesilla-Las Cruces, Taylor's family has "lived the whole story of the settlement of New Mexico in a very personal way," Bergloff said.

For the Bulletin

The new Las Cruces Utilities (LCU) Water Quality Laboratory (Lab) has the pleasant new-building smell, and in mid-August giddy employees welcomed the public to tour the facility.

District 6 City Councilor Yvonne Flores was part of the tour who walked the halls with LCU Deputy Director for Wastewater John Mrozek. "It's a fabulous new building," Councilor Flores said. "This will be a great asset for the city."

It's not just a resource for the city. The new Water Quality Lab, at nearly five times the size as the former lab, will help smaller utilities in the surrounding area. In efforts to learn more, Bruce Smaga and Geoff Robert from the National Solar Observatory drove down from the Sunspot Observatory outside Cloudcroft, about two hours away.

Smaga explained that they also do testing that might be done more efficiently in Las Cruces instead of sending material to Alamogordo and then to Albuquerque, especially with tests that might be time sensitive. Luis Guerra, LCU water quality lab manager, was happy to hear that.

"We're looking to foster relationships with other organizations, and if we can help, we're happy to figure out what that would look like," Guerra said.

Guerra and his crew are delighted to finally have more space for their work; in the new wastewater lab section some of the testing was being done as the tours moved through the two differ-

LCU Senior Lab Technician Yadira Reyna demonstrated how testing is done for the E. coli. bacteria using a pre-prepared test strip of water sealed in small plastic bubbles, which glow fluorescent under UV light. Of utmost importance: the new building provides separate water and wastewater laboratory spaces, which eliminates opportunities for cross contamination. "It's just so much more space," Reyna said, "and really give us an even better ability to make sure our local water and wastewater that we release into the Rio Grande is safe for the environment."

Filing Day

November races swell with multiple candidates, including 10 for mayor

By MIKE COOK

Las Cruces Bulletin

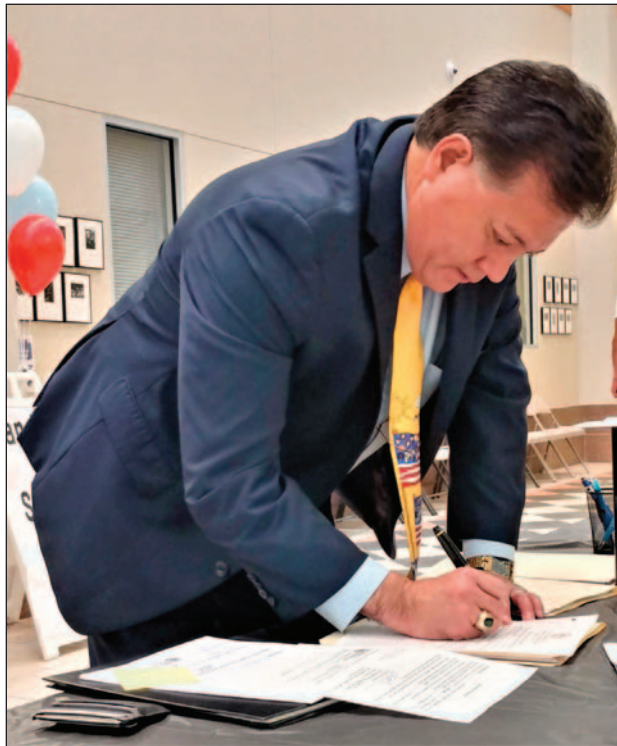

If there was a ring at the Doña Ana County Government Building, it would be full of hats.

More than three dozen candidates filed Tuesday, Aug. 27 to run for City of Las Cruces, Las Cruces school board and Doña Ana Soil and Water Conservation District (DASWCD) Board of Supervisors positions on November's ballot.

There will be 10 candidates for mayor of Las Cruces, nine candidates for three seats on the city council and two for presiding municipal judge; 11 total candidates for two seats on the Las Cruces Public Schools (LCPS) Board of Education; and six candidates for three seats on the seven-member Doña Ana Soil and Water Conservation District (DASWCD) Board of Supervisors, which represents Las Cruces and southern Doña Ana County.

All the positions will be on a single, combined ballot, along with a $16 million general obligation bond for Doña Ana Community College and a three-mill levy for LCPS.

Election Day is Tuesday, Nov. 5. Early voting begins Tuesday, Oct. 8, and continues through Saturday, Nov. 2. Same-day voter registration Ballot positions were scheduled to be drawn Wednesday afternoon,

Aug. 28, by staff from the New Mexico Secretary of State's office at the state capitol building in Santa Fe. Candidates did not have to be present.

Candidates for offices in other Doña Ana County communities also filed Aug. 27 at the county building in Las Cruces. Those races are for seats on the Village of Hatch Board of Trustees and municipal judge, Sunland Park mayor and city council, Hatch Valley Public Schools and Gadsden Independent School District school boards, Anthony Water and Sanitation Board and the Lower Rio Grande Public Works Authority (Irgauthority.org). The water runs down

Painter Marie Siegrist discovered her medium at an early age

By MIKE COOK
Las Cruces Bulletin

"One of my earliest recollections (probably age 4) of painting was when my parents gave me a little pail of water and a paintbrush and asked me to paint the garage," Las Cruces artist Marie Siegrist said during an August interview.

"I painted the boards as high as my arms could reach with the brush dunked in water and I delighted in the pattern the water made as it ran down the brown paint of the garage," Siegrist said. "Painting has been a passion ever since."

And, is it any wonder her favorite medium as an accomplished artist is watercolor?

"It's spontaneous," Siegrist said, allowing for both "loose" and very detailed work in the same painting. She also works in acrylics – mostly on paper but occasionally on canvas – and with mixed media.

Siegrist is a member of the New Mexico Watercolor Society (NMWS). Her work has shown in local galleries and will be displayed in a solo exhibition in September at the Doña Ana Arts Council gallery, where she will also teach a watercolor workshop in mid-September. Siegrist also continues to be represented at a gallery in Neenah, Wisconsin, her home state.

Siegrist and her husband of 55 years, Mike, moved to Las Cruces in 2002 after visiting many times.

"I carry a sketchbook just about everywhere I go," said Siegrist, who often paints from her drawings and from photo-

Nancy Joy

NMSU Music professor honored

By AMANDA ADAME
For the Bulletin

New Mexico State University horn professor Nancy Joy recently received the International Horn Society Service Medal of Honor. It is one of the top three awards the society gives to recognize its members.

Joy was honored at the organization's July symposium in Ghent, Belgium.

"Since I have been a behind-the-scenes type of person at all of these symposiums, I was absolutely shocked when the Advisory Council bestowed this honor on me," Joy said.

The medal recognizes those who have made major contributions to the society over time.

"Nancy was specifically honored for her many years as the International Workshop Coordinator for the society," said IHS President Andrew Pelletier, "It is a position that sees her in communication and collaboration with horn teachers and music schools across the globe as they prepare to host an IHS Symposium."

The organization was founded in 1970. Joy has been a member since 1977 and attended her first symposium in 1980. "Being part of the horn family changed my life for the better," she said.

"[My] goal is making sure that first-time IHS symposium participants had the same incredible life-changing experiences as I did in 1980."

"I paint by freeform," Siegrist said; "anything that interests me, anything that intrigues me." She paints a lot of landscapes and loves to paint "jumbles of grasses." Siegrist often wanders with a friend into the desert near her Picacho Hills home to find subjects. She sometimes adds birds to her paintings and occasionally small, abstract images of people. Siegrist also likes painting textures, including rocks, weathered wood and adobe.

Siegrist learned to paint through an in-depth study of watercolor on her own.

She also was an art

"Ardea Herodias Bosque"

teacher at the Watertown, Wisconsin, campus of Madison Area Technical College.

Siegrist's advice to would-be artists is to draw or paint "something you enjoy. If it pleases you," she said, "just enjoy it for its own sake" without being concerned about selling it. "It's amazing what people can do if they put their minds to it," Siegrist

Community college program stars across media platforms

By MIKE COOK
Las Cruces Bulletin

The next great American filmmaker, animator or game designer could at this moment be learning and creating in a classroom, lab or film set that's part of the Creative Media Technology (CMT) program on Doña Ana Community College's East

Mesa campus.

The program offers associates of applied science degrees in CMT, digital graphics technology and game development, and certificates of completion in creative media, digital audio, digital video, film crew training, graphics and animation; digital graphics and web design; and game design.

"It really is a great place to get started," said DACC Arts Department Chair and assistant professor Matt Byrnes.

CMT students can explore filmmaking, photography, programming for the web, 3-D character design and other cutting-edge and high-paying fields at a fraction of the cost and time investment of a bachelor's degree, and then transfer into a four-year program or go directly into the workforce.

DACC's career and technical ed programming can also link students to different industries, Byrnes said, like applying skills learned in a set-construction class into a career as a building contractor, or transferring the basics learned in ceramics into solid modeling and digital sculpting with clay. Forensic animation training has helped other DACC grads find engineering, architectural, construction technology and even agricultural jobs.

CMT's film crew training program is helping to train the state's film and TV workforce and "getting people union ready," Byrnes said. That's critical because being a member of New Mexico's largest film union, IATSE Local 480, is a requirement for working on many film and TV productions in the state.

DACC offers world-class photography workshops

Doña Ana Community College will offer three advanced photography workshops open to the community during the fall 2019 semester. Each one-credit workshop will be led by DACC instructor and world-class photographer Paul Ratje, and will be held in DADM 101 on DACC's East Mesa Campus, 2800 Sonoma Ranch Blvd. All workshops are three days: 6-9 p.m. Tuesdays/Thursdays and 9 a.m.-3:30 p.m. Saturdays. Each is $74. Call 575-528-7310 for registration assistance.

- Environmental Portraiture: Sept. 5, 7, 10. The principles of portraiture to develop technical and social skills used in creating effective portraits.

- Introduction to Lightroom Photo Processing: Sept. 12, 14, 17. "Learn what you need to know to make lightroom your main tool for photo workflow and image delivery," according to a course description.

- Mobile Photography: Nov. 14, 16, 19. Create professional quality images with your smart device.

Ratje has a bachelor's degree in photojournalism from New Mexico State University. He lived in Taiwan for five years and has taken photos throughout Southeast Asia.

"He continues to do a lot of really cool documentary work in El Paso, Juarez and Las Cruces," said DACC Arts Dept. Chair Matt Byrnes.

And more major productions are coming to New Mexico, Byrnes said, bringing high-paying jobs with them. “We’re at that point,” he said. “We’re making waves in the industry. There are so many advantages to shooting here. Las Cruces is poised to be, hopefully, the next big breakthrough. It’s just a matter of time.”

In early 2018, DACC signed a partnership agreement with the non-profit Film Las Cruces (FLC) and the owner of the property on Valley Drive that is now Las Cruces Film Studios. DACC pays rent on the building and its CMT students get to “train in a real-world environment,” said FLC President and Las Cruces state Sen. Jeff Steinborn.

DACC is training students who will work in film and television production, Steinborn said, the majority of whom are “not the directors, the writers, the actors; they’re everybody else that makes the movie, from the camera operators to people who do hair and makeup. And that’s what DACC trains. So, it’s incredibly important in developing a film workforce here.”

Steinborn said FLC “couldn’t be more thrilled” with the partnership among DACC, FLC and the owner of the building that houses Las Cruces Studios.

That kind of hands-on experience is common for all CMT students, who utilize industry-leading hardware and software in a range of disciplines. “We compete at the Hollywood level,” Byrnes said, adding that programming can adapt quickly to changing trends within the industry.

Byrnes is especially excited about CMT’s new associate degree in game development, the only game design program within a 200-mile radius. It’s the career gateway in a field that is “bigger than TV, film and music combined,” said Byrnes, who worked in the industry for 10 years before joining DACC. Game developers have expanded way beyond war games, sports and entertainment, he said, to include math, science and other educational fields. “They’re hiring my students too,” Byrnes said.

And, with its unique partnerships with FLC, New Mexico State University’s Creative Media Institute (CMI), Ganymede Games of Las Cruces and the public schools, “I think we’re living up to our name and truly being a community college,” said Byrnes, who has been Arts Department head for the past 10 years.

“The Creative Media Technology Program has been a DACC mainstay for almost two decades,” said DACC President Monica Torres. “We’ve been very fortunate to have Matt Byrnes leading the way since 2009. Clearly, film and creative media production are becoming more and more important to economic development in our state and in our county. At DACC, we are pleased we contribute to those efforts.”

CMT also reaches out to nontraditional students of varied backgrounds with classes and workshops offering a taste of everything from photography and video production to computer drafting and web design without having to commit to a program.

“There’s really something for everyone who is creative,” Byrnes said. “There’s something you can do in this industry.” DACC and its NMSU parent “have an impact all across the state (and are) starting to reach out to every single community,” Byrnes said. “I’m a huge fan of the whole NMSU system.”

Byrnes has a bachelor’s degree in independent studies and a masters in ag extension education from NMSU. He also has an associate degree in digital graphics from DACC. He worked as a full-time game designer and animator at NMSU and as a part-time 2D animation instructor at DACC.

Mesilla Valley Fine Arts Gallery 'jumps' into September

BULLETIN REPORT

The Mesilla Valley Fine Arts Gallery, 2470-A Calle de Guadalupe, Mesilla, features two local artists in September, Patricia Black and Richard Spellenberg.

Patricia Black creates one-of-a-kind, meticulously crafted art pieces from gourds. Each piece emphasizes detail utilizing pyrography, carving, painting, beading and pine needle coiling. She is drawn to form and color – utilizing bold lines and tight brushwork.

Woodturner Richard Spellenberg, a retired biology professor from NMSU, first used a small lathe in his father's shop as a young teenager but became active in woodturning after retirement. His source of wood is mostly "found" wood given by friends or family from trees removed on forested family land in California. Each of his pieces includes a description of the species of tree that provided the wood.

The Mesilla Valley Fine Arts Gallery will have a "Jump into Fall" celebration for its 25th anniversary party Saturday, Sept. 28, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Four $25 gift certificates will be given away during the open house. Meet the artists of the gallery. Light refreshments will be served.

Gallery hours are 10 a.m.-5 p.m. daily. Call 575-522-2933 or visit www.mesillavalleyfinearts.com.

Raise a toast to the Las Cruces Harvest Wine Festival

By ALEXIA SEVERSON

Las Cruces Bulletin

Grab a glass because it's time for the annual Las Cruces Harvest Wine Festival.

The event, featuring 17 New Mexico wineries, takes place from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. throughout Labor Day weekend – Saturday, Aug. 31, through Monday, Sept. 2, at the Southern New Mexico State Fairgrounds, 12125 Robert Larson Blvd.

And those who attended New Mexico Wine's Las Cruces Wine Festival in the spring over Memorial Day Weekend can expect new things to both taste and see at the Harvest Wine Festival.

"What you saw in May will not be the same as what you see in September," said Chelsea Canon, assistant director of New Mexico Wine. "It will be different food vendors and different arts and crafts vendors; you'll be sure to find something new.

"Each of the wineries will have new wines as well – new vintages, new varietals," she said.

The festival's participating Las Cruces-area wineries are: Amaro Winery, D.H Lescombes Winery & Bistro, Rio Grande Vineyard & Winery, Luna Rossa Winery and Heart of the Desert Pistachios & Wines. Other participating New Mexico wineries include La Esperanza Vineyard and Winery in Hanover, Black's Smuggler Winery in Bosque, Tularosa Vineyards in Tularosa, Sheehan Winery in Albuquerque and Sombra Antigua Winery in Anthony, just to name a few.

In addition to sampling the many wine varieties in red and white, dry and sweet and everything in between, festival guests can peruse the event's 27 vendors and purchase food and beverages at 11 food trucks from Las Cruces, El Paso and Silver City.

"We'll have all kinds of different foods, from quesadillas and tacos to brie-stuffed dates, and Asian-fusion street food to the classic turkey leg," Canon said. "We've pretty much got it all."

Vendors at the festival will include Las Cruces Candy Company, TLC Crafts, Kettle Corn, Old Barrel Tea Co., Henna Bri, The Quirky Bee, Dapper Doughnuts, Bath Planet NM and more.

Grape stomping competitions and the grape stomping photo booth will return this year and take place throughout each day of the festival, beginning around 1:30 p.m.

"The person who wins gets a bottle of wine from a participating winery and gift card for items from one of the vendors at the festival," Canon said. "So, you can get a meal voucher for one of the food trucks or a gift card to a jewelry vendor and get yourself a nice bracelet."

Those who don't want to compete on stage can still stomp grapes at the photo booth, Canon said.

"You don't have to take a photo, but it's kind of fun," she said.

Canon said this year's festival may also include grape tasting, in which people can try some of the grapes used to make different varieties of wine and learn about the wine-making process and how different kinds of grapes can affect taste.

mances will take place throughout the event and feature Baracutanga from Albuquerque, Damian Issac from El Paso, Chris Baker from Las Cruces and Frank Zona and Urban Edge from El Paso.

Canon said the Las Cruces Harvest Festival has grown over the years, steadily attracting more people to the fairgrounds.

"We've been bringing some activities back and there are some things that we're looking at to grow the festival, growing the acts, growing the events within the festival," she said. "Slowly but surely, we're bringing things in."

Canon said she encourages people to come out and enjoy the weekend.

"[The festival is an] all-around good thing to do over the weekend, whether you like wine or food, there's going to be something for everyone," she said.

Tickets for the Las Cruces Harvest Wine Festival are $20 when purchased online in advance or $25 at the gate for those 21 and older. Ticket price includes a complimentary tasting glass for sampling great wines. Wines are also available for purchase by the glass, bottle, or case. Designated driver/kids 15+ tickets are $10 and include a complimentary water, soft drink or Topo Chico Sparkling Mineral Water. Discounts are available for military and kids under 15.

Revisiting the radical call to community

“Blessed are you poor, for yours is the kingdom of God.”

That’s Luke’s version. Matthew writes, “Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.”

It’s hard to get away from the idea that this is the most important Beatitude. It comes first on the list, and many commentators have noted that the order is important. This primary conviction leads to those that follow.

Many sayings of Jesus have been questioned as to their authenticity, but this is the real deal: The so-called Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5 through 7) is a composite of sayings which probably came from Jesus’s heart and mouth over the course of his ministry, and this one is foundational.

GABRIEL ROCHELLE

Tales from the Cassock

Along with this Beatitude, many more of Jesus’ sayings call into question the amassing of riches and possessions, some of which sayings are embedded in that Sermon on the Mount (the Sermon on the Plain in Luke’s version). We are called to a lifestyle of spiritual and, yes, material poverty. When Jesus uses the term, “kingdom of God,” he is not referring to a spiritual realm apart from this world, but to the transformation of this world through faith and action. One sees the kingdom coming into reality in his wake. Where he goes, that kingdom is both proclaimed and enacted; that’s what the healings are about. He invited his followers to extend the kingdom beyond his life; the New Testament book of Acts records that extension. A straight line connects the work and words of Jesus with the shape of the early Church as a mutually beneficial society.

In the early centuries of Christianity, therefore, people shared their wealth to build a new community independent of and beyond the distinction between rich and poor. Sayings to this effect are sprinkled through the writings of luminaries like Basil of Caesarea, Ambrose of Milan, John Chrysostom and Augustine of Hippo. This communitarian spirit is emblematic of the kingdom; it is a fellowship of mutual love and support both spiritual and physical.

As the centuries wore on, institutionalization set in and the Church made its peace with the secular order. So new witnesses sprang up to reassert the basic message by gathering in communities, first in the desert with Antony and then in monastic movements inaugurated by people like Benedict and John Cassian, on through Francis of Assisi and Clare. The witness never completely went away, but it became a special way of life.

Worse, in the West it was the “religious” life while all the rest of the folks were consigned to the “secular.”

Jesus’ radical call to communitarian life was marginalized as a possible, but not normal, way to live, when it was part of the original call to “poverty” the Beatitude blesses. Monasteries were schools in which to learn and enact the poverty, simplicity and chastity at the heart of Christian calling.

The marginalization continues today in various ways. Try talking of communitarianism and feel the hostile responses to “socialism.” Monasteries East and West may get a pass, as do outstanding movements like the Bruderhof (look it up online), but the rest of us are supposed to be satisfied with business as usual.

There will always be attempts to establish the beloved community here and there. In every generation are those who discover this core message and its attendant action, but their numbers remain few. At the very least, the rest of us who bear the name Christian ought to pay attention to such efforts and try, in our own way, to enable such beachheads of community where we are.

Taqueria Chavez: From food truck to sit-down restaurant

By MIKE COOK
Las Cruces Bulletin

It's all about three things at Las Cruces' newest restaurant: family, customer service and quality food, especially tacos.

Taqueria Chavez will have its grand opening Tuesday, Sept. 3, at 1400 E. Lohman Ave., at the intersection of Lohman and Española Street, just east of Jake's Café and south of the Circle K that sits between Lohman and Amador.

The restaurant is the outgrowth of the food truck by the same name that the family has operated for 15 years.

"I'm so excited," said owner Gonzalo Chavez Sr. He is joined in the business by his children, daughters Yaney and Jacqueline and sons Gonzalo Junior and Antonio Chavez Flores. The family is also the res-taurant's culinary team: Gonzalo Senior and Yaney will share duties as head chef, Gonzalo Junior is general manager and Jacqueline is social media manager.

After losing his wife, Alejandra Chavez Macedo, to cancer in 2002, Chavez quit his job as a welder to rear Yaney, Jacqueline and Gonzalo Junior. The family moved to Las Cruces from Modesto, California, in 2004 and started the Taqueria Chavez food truck, which has become a Las Cruces tradition.

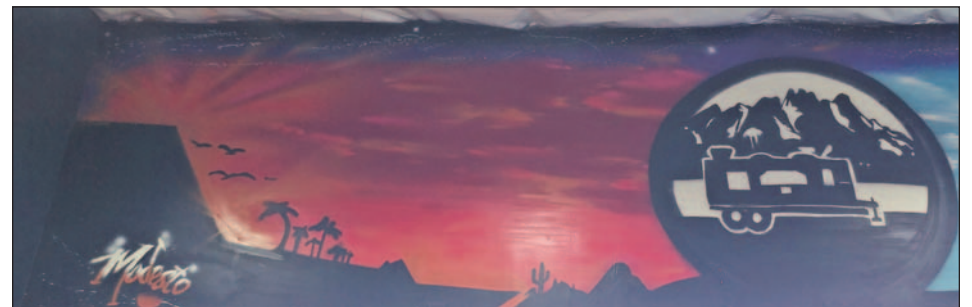

"Throughout these past 15 years we have met many people and have watched families grow," the Chavez family said on its Facebook page. "What started as a simple way to keep our family together has turned into a lifelong passion and an opportunity to grow strong."

Construction on the restaurant began in May. Watching it go up and "seeing my family dream come true" was quite an experience for the entire family, Gonzalo Senior said.

The Chavez family asked for suggestions from its customers throughout the construction process to get input on everything from new items on the menu (they added carne asada fries) to the interior color scheme. "We want them to be part of it," Gonzalo Junior said. "We want this to be theirs." The family is "very active online," Gonzalo Junior said, and responds to "every single comment" received on Facebook or by email. "A restaurant is about hospitality," he said. "Give us feedback."

Schumacher animal clinic remains open for full services

For the Bulletin

Editor's note: 27th in a series on businesses impacted by ongoing Valley Drive road reconstruction.

Dr. Kyle Schumacher is on the phone, easing the concerns of a patient's family, in particular the care for a drain tube.

She requests that the family makes sure the canine patient does not lick the tubing, as a dog might do.

Schumacher Large and Small Animal Clinic at 701 South Valley Drive is still a hive of activity as a New Mexico Department of Transportation (NMDOT) contractor ramps up the final phase of Valley Drive road reconstruction outside the clinic doors.

"The good news is that we're a long-standing clinic with a dedicated staff that goes above and beyond for our patients and their owners," says Dr. Kyle, the daughter of Dr. William Schumacher who started the clinic 40 years ago and retired in 2015.

"Parking might be an issue when the construction is right in front of our door," she said, "But even with trailers coming in and out, we're open for full services."

That's from the tiniest creature to the largest beloved beast.

Those services include laser treatments for sports injuries or worn muscles, and surgeries for large and small animals.

"We also get referrals for advanced dental care, along with orthopedic treatments and endoscopies on companion animals," said Dr. Kyle.

Ultrasound, electrocautery, and digital

X-Ray (in-house and portable) are also available.

Their truck with a Portavet box is ready for house calls, stable calls and farm calls.

Schumacher Large and Small Animal Clinic is available for emergencies for established clients 24/7 by calling 575-524-2894.

They will also scan a lost or stray pet to see if it's been "chipped" free of charge.

And, for those shopping for medications, the clinic currently has a special: a $75 rebate for a 12-month supply of NexGard and Heartgard brand heartworm pills.

Phases 1 and 3 of the NMDOT Valley Drive road reconstruction project are complete and open to traffic; scheduled completion of Phase 2 is early 2020. The City of Las Cruces encourages residents to continue sup-filled with light due to all the windows, but the family found space for a special mural high on the west wall. Drawn by Las Cruces artist and long-time food truck customer Robert Azure, it depicts the family's move from California to Las Cruces and includes the iconic Taqueria Chavez food truck that has become the restaurant's logo.

The restaurant will be open 9 a.m.-8 p.m. seven days a week and includes a drive-up window.

The menu, developed in the food truck, features tacos, burritos, tortas, quesadillas, nachos and a variety of seafood dishes, with shrimp (camaron) added to tostadas, quesadillas and tacos, along with shrimp cocktail. The choice of meats includes carne asada (steak), al pastor (marinated pork), pollo (chicken), and barbacoa (beef cheek). Specialty plates (platicos) include Camarones Rancheros, Camarones a la Diabla, Steak Ranchero and Fajitas de Pollo.

The specialty of the house, tacos, includes garnishes of cilantro, onions and a special red hot sauce with lime on the side. The family will also add its own creation, quesadilla tacos, to the menu, Gonzalo Junior said. And, they will add crunchy tacos tripas to the menu as well.

Yaney Chavez said the restaurant will include inside and outside dining, and a children's play area will be added on the west side. There's a salsa bar for customers, and the restaurant will soon get a beer-and-wine license.

Gonzalo Senior said his family has many to thank for their success in Las Cruces – in particular contractors Randy Farmer, Barry Prahal and Jesus Chacon, along with banker Norma Valdez.

"They put a lot of faith in us," Jacqueline Chavez said. "We can't wait to show them."

Las Cruces travel afar to document sunflowers

By MIKE COOK

Las Cruces Bulletin

Las Cruces authors, artists and retired biologists and husband and wife Richard “Rich” Spellenberg and Naida Zucker have published the definitive guide to sunflowers.

“The Sunflower Family” is “the only comprehensive guide to the sunflower family of North America that is aimed at the non-professional, although professional botanists should also find the book very useful and informative,” Spellenberg said.

Spellenberg and Zucker spent thousands of hours and traveled hundreds of thousands of miles taking photographs of sunflowers, which are part of the diverse colorful Asteraceae family that also includes thistles, artichokes, ragweed and daisies.

“At the start we questioned whether this project was feasible,” Spellenberg said. “Once we realized it was, we certainly took to heart that adage derived from a Chinese proverb, “A journey of a thousand miles begins with but a single step.”

Desert marigold (Baileya multiradiata), a common and showy annual in the deserts around Las Cruces.

“We enjoyed this project tremendously, the main goal is to attempt to bring understanding of the Sunflower Family to wildflower enthusiasts, students, land managers and anyone interested in plant diversity,” he said. “As we worked on the project, we saw the marvelous diversity and beauty of our huge and varied country.”

Spellenberg conceived the idea for the book in the late-1980s, he said, when he was participating in organizational meetings for the technical compendium of all the plants in North America north of Mexico, which he called “a huge project still under production.” The project was tentatively begun in 2009, with “several stops and starts as difficult-to-find species were missed, then found,” he said. The book was completed at the end of 2018 and published in July 2019.

The multivolume “Flora of North America” provided species information, along with massive online databases from plant museums, said Spellenberg, who curated the herbarium at NMSU for 32 years. It now has more than 85,000 specimens, he said.

Spellenberg and Zucker drove more than 200,000 miles through most U.S. states, northern Mexico and eastern and western Canada to obtain photos, with about 15 photos of uncommon species

The sunflower’s confusing structure

By RICH SPELLENBERG

For the Bulletin

Technically called the Asteraceae, an old name, still in use, is the Compositae, in reference to the often showy flowerhead being a “composite” of many tiny flowers. This is a widely used common name, “composites.”

The sunflower family is notorious for its difficulty for the amateur because of the confusing structure of its flowerhead, thousands of species and technical terminology.

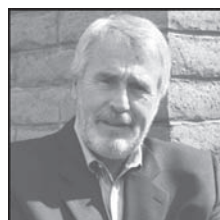

Often called DYCs (the “darned (or worse) yellow composites”) in frustration, identification is often left at that. This even reverberates in Mexican Spanish as

PCAs, “p----- compuestas amarillas.”

Showy, often striking, the sunflower family has useful species and, from a human perspective, detrimental ones. It includes sunflowers, marigolds, daisies, cosmos, asters, blackeyed-susan, thistles, artichokes, ragweed, goldenrod, cudweed, lettuce, etc.

Several native species are used in Las Cruces as ornamentals in dry landscapes (xeriscape), such as Desertbroom, Damianita, Palmleaf Thoroughwort, Sunflower.

Sunflowers are found in all habitats worldwide. It is probably the largest family of flowering plants at 25,000-30,000 species.

The irises are coming to Farm & Ranch Museum

BULLETIN REPORT

The New Mexico Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum is partnering with iris societies throughout the state and growers throughout the country to help add some beauty to the museum campus.

The process of planting about 175 different types of irises in the raised beds in front of the museum's Bruce King Building has begun. Led by the Mesilla Valley Iris Society, the planting is in preparation for the National Iris Convention to be held in Las Cruces in 2021.

The plants should begin to flower next spring and should be in full bloom for the national show in the spring of 2021.

The museum began planning the project last spring with Howie Dash, president of the Mesilla Valley Iris Society. They also worked with Visit Las Cruces to bring the convention to Las Cruces.

"We are delighted to partner with the Mesilla Valley Iris Society and to serve as the location for one of their Convention Gardens for the 2021 National Iris Convention," said Farm & Ranch Museum Director Mark Santiago. "Their efforts will not only help beautify the museum's entryway during the convention but will continue to serve as a stunning visual reminder of the wonderful variety of New Mexico's agricultural communities."

Working in conjunction with Farm & Ranch Museum landscaper Alfredo Hernandez and others on the staff, soil was brought in for the flowers and a watering system was installed. Members of the local iris society have worked for days preparing the beds and planting the flowers.

Irises have been sent to Las Cruces from as far away as Massachusetts and Washington. Once in the ground, each plant is labeled with the name of the flower and the name of the hybridizer.

"There's such a huge variety and with so many colors and patterns," said Scarlett Ayers, co-chair for the national show and regional vice-president. "They should begin blooming in mid-March."

The museum is open 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday-Saturday and noon-5 p.m. Sunday. Admission is $5 adults, $4 senior citizens, $3 children ages 4 to 17 and $2 for active and veteran U.S. military members.

obtained from other photographers. "All genera in the continuous U.S. are covered" in the book, he said, which includes about 425 genera and about 2,400 species.

"Throughout the U.S., people were helpful in locating plants, reading the manuscript, rendering opinions on classification and helping with computer programs," he said. The project also received support for publication from the estate of Maxie G. Templeton in El Paso.

"The book aims to help a user identify any particular genus of Asteraceae north of Mexico, using one or more representative species as examples," Spellenberg said.

A California native, Spellenberg came to Las Cruces in 1968. Zucker, a native of New York, arrived in 1973. Both were biology professors at New Mexico State University, Spellenberg in botany and Zucker in zoology. He retired in 2000, followed by Zucker a year later, and both pursued their interest in art at Mesilla Valley Fine Arts gallery.

Zucker also enjoys home design and drafting, as well as computer programs. She learned InDesign from scratch so that she could design and lay out the sunflower book.

Spellenberg has written plant books for amateur gardeners, including "Field Guide to Wildflowers, North America Western Region," "Sonoran Desert Wildflowers" and "Trees of Western North America."

"The Sunflower Family" is available from the Botanical Research Institute of Texas at shop.brit.org/products/sunflower-family.

BCOM program trains students for careers in health care

By ALEXIA SEVERSON
Las Cruces Bulletin

Local high school students interested in the healthcare field will have the opportunity to get hands-on experience and advice from second-year medical students when they apply for the Youth Medical Explorers Program offered through the Burrell College of Osteopathic Medicine.

The BCOM student-run program, heading into its fourth year, is accepting applications through Sept. 16 and runs October 2019 through April 2020. Students accepted into the program meet from 5:30-7 p.m. one or two evenings a month throughout the academic year. The program, funded by BCOM, is free.

“Our mission is to encourage students in the area to pursue careers in health care in many aspects – becoming a doctor, nurse, working in an ambulance, EMT, helicopter pilot anything encompassed in health care,” said Virginia Stoddard-Merriam, a second-year BCOM student and Youth Medical Explorers co-chair. “We want to encourage students to pursue healthcare fields and come back to serve the Las Cruces community because we have such a shortage of health care in the area.”

“We think it’s important for people to know they can pursue those fields here and stay here,” she said.

Stoddard-Merriam, who runs the program with fellow second-year students and Co-Chairs Lee Boyle and Nicholas Chajec, said the Medical Explorers Program caters to junior and senior high school students. Juniors, generally first year students in the program, receive wilderness medical training, such as learning how to treat wounds or what to do for a spider or snake bite. When students complete the training, they earn a Wilderness First Aid Certification.

Seniors, generally second-year students in the program, receive more advanced medical training, earning a Basic Life Support (BLS) Certificate, which includes CPR training.

All students in the program participate in hands-on medical activities and fieldtrips, and local medical professionals give presentations to students about the different areas of health care. Most presentations and activities take place at BCOM, located on the New Mexico State University campus.

“While this is all going on, students are paired with [second-year] medical students from the Burrell College of Osteopathic Medicine, so they have a one-on-one mentee-mentor relationship throughout the year,” Stoddard-Merriam said.

The mentorship aspect of the program is part of what makes it successful, said Dr. Richard Selinfreund, BCOM associate professor of physiology and pathology and founder of the Youth Medical Explorers Program in Las Cruces.

“The medical students look like high school students so there’s an immediate bond between the medical students and high school students,” Selinfreund said.

Selinfreund started Youth Medical Explorers at BCOM in 2016, when the college opened for its inaugural class. The idea for the program came from one of Selinfreund’s former professors, who was running a similar program in Albuquerque.

“They worked on it for quite a long time and we wanted to carry on the program here in Las Cruces,” he said. “We figured out a couple things they didn’t understand, and one was using the students as mentors instead of the faculty.”

The Las Cruces program began with 12 high school students and has since doubled to 24. The total, however, is 48, with the program’s expansion into Jemez Pueblo, about 50 miles northwest of Albuquerque and home to more than 3,400 tribal members.

Founded by Selinfreund and BCOM faculty and staff members Adela Lente, Justin McHorse, Nancy Minugh-Purvis and David Rodenbaugh, the Jemez-Pathways for Advancing Tribal Health (J-PATH) program launched in July of this year.

NM Department of Health discourages vape cartridges

BULLETIN REPORT

The New Mexico Department of Health (NMDOH) is investigating possible cases of lung disease associated with vaping. A 29-year old male from Bernalillo County was determined to have vaping-associated lung disease and three additional cases are under investigation. All reported use of vape cartridges. Similar cases are reported in at least 14 other states.

All cases under investigation have been hospitalized with severe breathing problems, including cough, shortness of breath and fatigue. NMDOH, other states and the Centers for Disease Control are still investigating the possible causes of these illnesses. The names and types of products under investigation are substances such as nicotine, THC, synthetic cannabinoids or a combination of these.

"In light of this disease, we discourage vaping of any cartridges with THC," said NMDOH Cabinet Secretary Kathy Kunkel. "People who have trouble breathing or experience chest pain after vaping – in the weeks or months prior to the development of these symptoms – should seek immediate medical attention."

The NMDOH is asking healthcare providers to report possible vaping associated lung disease cases to the Epidemiology and Response Division at 505-827-0006.

to other cities besides Las Cruces," Selinfreund said. "... We're going to continue the one in Las Cruces and expand to the pueblos in New Mexico."

While J-PATH focuses on tribal communities, the goal is the same as Youth Medical Explorers – keeping students in school, encouraging them to pursue higher education in the medical field and encouraging them to practice in underserved areas.

"The big push is to keep (students) in New Mexico and have them come back to the home where they were born to become health workers – that is our vision," Selinfreund said.

Selinfreund also hopes that students who participate in the program implement it in other places as they move forward in their career paths.

"When our students leave to go do residencies in other cities, we want them to take the program with them and that's how we want it to grow," he said. "We want them to start a Medical Explorers Program with their high school associated with their residency."

Space in the Youth

Medical Explorers Program is limited. Students who wish to apply can pick up an application at their high school's counselor's office or through their science department. For more information, contact Stoddard-Merriam at virginia.stoddard@mybcm.org.

Things are never finished with horses

It is difficult to admit, but the reality of life with horses means that every day is either an adventure or a repeat of yesterday. Each day requires enthusiasm to accomplish what needs to be done and a bit of adrenaline can help, but some adventures are more fun than others. Most of the time, we are repeating tasks and projects that are truly noticeable if they are NOT done. Mucking (cleaning up manure), cleaning and filling water tubs, hauling hay, feeding hay – all important tasks that are never ending.

At our Sanctuary,

KATHARINE CHRISLEY-SCHREIBER

we revel in monotony and calmness. The big adventures are not so welcome if they are things like loose horses, injuries, broken equipment or wind-damaged buildings! Each morning as we walk out to feed the herd, we hold the form for health, safety and joy. By thinking ahead and troubleshooting, we can set things up for success in the stable and prevent accidents and surprises. And part of that exact process means that we are always putting a fence back up or tweaking something on the tractor or finding wads of mold in a big bale of hay we were counting on! No matter how much hay we can afford to buy, we will always need more. It must be stored safely and inspected as it is fed. Last year, we were gifted with enough lovely grass hay to get all the Dharma Horses through the winter! We even had to store most of it in a friend's barn. It was so nice; the horses loved it and got fat. But, as we fed the last bales, we were changing the horses over to other, expensive hay and searching for funds and suppliers for the spring and summer.

It is ongoing, in a hundred different ways. Thirty years ago, a student of mine was building his stable. He used surveying tools to get everything perfect, from the pipe pens to his level arena. It was a sight to behold. My mare (boarded there as we worked his horses) was the first to rearrange things, of course. There were small gaps at each pen to let a human squeeze through without having to open the gate. Pica watched us slip through and, during one night, she got her shoulders through but her rear end wouldn't fit. At this point she couldn't back out either. My friend had to cut the pipes with her standing there, trapped. Fortunately, she was the most laidback horse I've ever known, and she allowed the extrication without a fuss, then she just walked out to find a patch of grass.

Life is rarely boring when you take care of horses, but when things are going routinely and there's not much excitement, it's time to revel in monotony.

Mark and I marvel at the ways our horses find to bend and crush pipe panels, squash rubber feeders, stand in water tubs. It is all because they are often bored. These are our reasons for expanding to the second facility with much more room to roam and be a herd. Yet, still, horses find ways to keep us on our toes.

If a person needs purpose, focus and entertainment in life, I would suggest they become involved with horses. We are never bored. We hear screeching of metal tubs against stall walls as they try to get that last stem of hay from under the feeder at 3 in the morning. When Andy, our pony, hears one of us speak or hears Mark grinding coffee beans at sunrise, he begins yelling at the house. We call him the "pony alarm". And if I DON'T hear him, I have to run out and make sure he's okay.

We can start a project, such as rebuilding the hay barn, and have to shift to more pressing matters as weeds short out the electric fence and allow Sage to reach over to bite Vega. We can pile all the manure to be dragged into the arena, and then have the tractor make an odd noise that must be addressed. So, we all walk around the pile for however many days it takes to get a tractor part.

I usually believe that I can get a quick shower after we feed breakfast. Two days later, I eventually eek out time for a bath in Epsom salts. And I wouldn't change a thing. I might wish for more funds so that I'm not having anxiety attacks over dwindling hay stores or bills gathering on the fridge. But, if it meant not living with horses, I would rather have the anxiety than the loneliness.

And horses heal us. While the work is never done with horses, neither is the opportunity for fresh air, exercise, companionship and connection. Being with horses will slow our heart rate, expand our awareness and give us insight into our own emotions as horses respond honestly to what we project.

New Mexico State players Kris'sean Edwards and Jaylon Williams-Reese enjoy their walk with jubilant teammates into Plaza de Las Cruces during a communitywide celebration of the Aggies' December 2017 Arizona Bowl victory over Utah State. For the NMSU program, the high was short-lived, as the Ags crashed to a 3-9 record the following season.

Sometimes a football team must play for itself and no one else

When New Mexico State beat Utah State in the Arizona Bowl on Dec. 30, 2017, the victory touched off a communitywide euphoria that foresaw a turnaround in the long-beleaguered Aggie football program. In the aftermath, the head coach received a contract extension, and the Arizona Bowl and the school from Las Cruces, which attracted a bowl-record crowd to Tucson, signed a participation agreement for future matchups.

The vibe went national.

So, in October 2018 the ESPN cameras rolled into a suddenly trendy desert outpost to document the resurgence in the season opener against hapless Wyoming before a telegenic crowd on a lovely, balmy evening, with the crimson-clad home team's bid for relevance set up neatly on the kicking tee. The Ags never led in losing 29-7.

Reality set in as the 2018 season slipped into the win-

The waiting game: Tour golfers take too long

*Editor's note:
First of two parts.*

It all started back in February when J. B. Holmes took a full five minutes to size up an approach shot before hitting it, in the final round of the Genesis Open in L. A. Later, the notoriously slow player stalked a 1-foot putt for over a minute.

Fast-forward to the Northern Trust tournament at Liberty National, the first FedEx playoff event, when the “mad scientist,” Bryce DeChambeau, spent over four minutes pacing off a 70-yard shot to the green; only then did he start his multi-step pre-shot routine, consuming another minute. Then he dawdled for 150 seconds pacing, circling and reading his greens book on an 8-foot putt, which he missed.

These and other notable episodes have fueled a social media brush-fire about slow play on tour. You might think that tour officials, stopwatches in hand, are closely timing each player and group, with red and yellow penalty cards at the ready. Not even close.

Justin Thomas, winner if the BMW at Medina CC (Aug. 18) stated: “This is my third year on the [PGA Tour Player Advisor Council] and we’ve talked about [slow play] every single meeting.” Ron Green, Jr. of global-golfpost.com notes, “This issue simmers just below the surface most weeks on the PGA Tour, but it has reached full boil now.”

Finally, big-name tour stars are voicing frustration and calling out other players. Brooks Koepka, world’s No. 1, quipped, “I don’t understand why they’re taking a minute and a half. I mean, I take 15 seconds and go ... figure it out and penalize somebody.”

On Aug. 10 former Aggie golfer and 2002 PGA Champion Rich Beem tweeted this angry demand: “This has got to stop!!! PGA Tour if you don’t do something about this SHAME ON YOU!!! As a member, I’m OUTRAGED you can tolerate this. You talk about ‘protecting the field,’ then protect it by penalizing/DQing this type of behavior!! ENOUGH!!!”

Even back in March at the Players Championship, which he won, Rory McIlroy complained about pace of play: “It’s becoming somewhat of an epidemic on tour. So, it should be a warning and then a shot [penalty].”

Frankly, I’m surprised that all this furor didn’t erupt sooner. TV viewers watching the Memorial in Dublin, Ohio, might remember Matt Kuchar summoning an official to look at his ball on the 18th fairway in round 1, which he claimed came to rest in its own pitch mark. A TV cameraman, with Kuchar’s group, replayed a closeup of the ball landing and bouncing and not embedded in the ball’s own mark. No drop. Kuchar requested a second opinion from an official, with the same result – no. Kuchar then brazenly wanted a third opinion but was refused. Meanwhile, the whining, arguing and examining took over 10 minutes, backing up the course.

As the brouhaha with DeChambeau, the slow-play villain du jour, was unfolding, the PGA Tour was unfolding, the PGA Tour issued a statement that certain incidents of late have caused the Tour to take a “deeper look at its policy” on slow play, and perhaps review players who “take an excessive amount of time to hit a shot.” They should also consider the eternity it takes for a ruling.

Lately it has become harder for the slowpokes to hide from TV cameras and social media. In early August golf.com warned, “As the media landscape continues to get more fractured, the TV telecast will be consumed by fewer people, and streaming and other a la carte options will make pace-of-play more important. So, the very product is at stake for the Tour.”

Next week: What slow play means for recreational golfers.

ter of its discontent and seemed to drag forever through a 3-9 record that numbed us to any hopes for a second consecutive bowl invitation.

Forget expectations. Forget your brand. Forget your friends and your fans and your image on campus. The 2019 season, which kicks off Saturday at Washington State, is straight-up hardcore balling in the trenches. It's about survival but also taking a stand.

Comes a moment in the life of a football team when every man scans the locker room and decides to be accountable, to play only for your brothers – because that's all you got. The bandwagoners and the talking heads have left the building.

You belong to nobody, certainly not to the cozy confines of the Sun Belt Conference, which provided a home, an identity and regular opposition. You're an Independent now, and the schedule-maker has you facing what seems like all-comers – starting out against a 23rd ranked Pac-12 squad on the road, followed by 2nd ranked and multiple national champion Alabama, also on the road. There's another SEC road game against Ole Miss, and a couple more roadies versus always-physical Central Michigan and former Sun Belt nemesis Georgia Southern. The Eagles went 10-3 last year and won a bowl game.

Though he went on to a stellar season, running back/wide receiver Jason Huntley was bottled up in the 2018 season opening loss at home against Wyoming, portending a disappointing campaign.

At home, there's Fresno State, which went 12-2 and beat Arizona State in the 2018 Las Vegas Bowl; and San Diego State, which started out 6-0 last season, reached No. 19 in the national poll and finished 7-6, with a trip to the Frisco Bowl. UIW also had a winning season at 6-5.

Some of that might be balanced by interstate rivals New Mexico and UT-El Paso, who went a combined 4-20 last year. But that would require expectations. And we know how that worked out last time.
