New budget upsets sheriff

By Todd G. Dickson Las Cruces Bulletin

An early Doña Ana County budget proposal appears to not add money the sheriff's department has asked for, which led to a meeting Tuesday, April 28, in which Sheriff Enrique "Kiki" Vigil and his supporters faced off with some county commissioners and administrators.

The heart of the dispute stems from the commission earmarking a portion of its three-eighths of a percent gross receipts tax (GRT) to needs in the sheriff's department for better pay, improved communication equipment, new vehicles and upgraded record keeping – amounting to about a third of the estimated $12 million a year in new revenue.

At a recent budget work session, however, two budgets were presented – one that included the tax increase and one that didn't. Both versions reflected a total budget of $20.4 million for the sheriff's department.

In essence, Vigil said his department would not be seeing any increase and may be even left with a tighter budget.

After being told by a county administration that his department would not be seeing any of the new GRT, Vigil said he was also told not to meet with commissioners about his concerns because they could be seen as violations of the Open Meetings Act. Vigil disputed this take in the law because he would not have met with more than one commissioner at a time.

Vigil was told about the "sub-SEE SHERIFF, PAGE A11

Astronomy conference coming to Las Cruces

By Todd G. Dickson Las Cruces Bulletin

ALCON – the annual conference for the Astronomical League – will come to Las Cruces in early July, a first for an area with good dark skies and a rich astronomical history.

That's why Ron Kramer said he urged conference organizers to meet here after attending past conferences in large cities. ALCON has been held in more isolated locations in the past, but never in Las Cruces, he said. Come July 6-11, Kramer will get his wish. ALCON can attract from 100 to 500 members and draw astronomical devotees of all kinds, from the scienceoriented enthusiast who has an expensive backyard telescopes to experts in their fields who get access to the some of the most advance technology peering into the universe.

Kramer has been working with Bert Stevens and more than 14 volunteers to prepare a slate of conference

Treasurer: Taxes must be paid by May 10

Doña Ana County Treasurer David Gutierrez has mailed the second-half property tax installment notices, and he reminds property owners that they have until May 10 to pay their second-half property taxes before state-mandated interest and penalties begin to accumulate.

Gutierrez said his office has placed a priority on convenience for the public, noting that payments can be made a number of ways, such a s:

* By mailing your payment to the Treasurer's Office using the self-addressed envelope provided with the tax notice,

If your taxes are paid by an escrow holder, the company will receive the tax notice.

"We make every effort to notify every property owner of their tax obligations," Gutierrez said.

"We have already sent out more than 36,000 second-half reminders. If for some reason you haven't paid your property taxes, please don't miss the May 10 deadline."

Property owners can avoid penalties and interest by making arrangements to pay their property taxes on time. Once penalty and interest are incurred, there are no provisions in the property tax code to remove them from an account.

Property owners who have not paid their taxes in full and did not receive reminders should immediately contact the Treasurer's Office at (575) 647-7433.

Sheriff: Blistering temps warrant safety tips

Temperatures are beginning to climb steadily toward triple digits throughout Doña Ana County, and the Doña Ana County Sheriff's Office is reminding residents to talk to their kids, be on guard against crime, and keep pets out of the searing summer heat.

Summer months are typically spent enjoying the outdoors, and if those activities involve swimming, parents are urged to take their children to facilities that have full-time certified lifeguards. Swimming at private pools should only be done under close supervision.

This is also the time to talk to your children about stranger danger. Doña Ana County residents can also sign up for email notifications through the sheriff's online sex offender notification system by visiting www.donaanacounty.org/sheriff. Including your home, it is advised that you register for email notifications in areas that your children will be during the summer, such as parks, local pools, daycare facilities or summer camp locations.

If your summer months include travel plans, it's a good idea to always notify a neighbor that you will be away. Remember to leave lights on inside your home and near entryways and clear shrubbery from windows to keep them visible.

As a reminder, pets or children should never be left unattended in parked cars. Temperatures inside a vehicle can rapidly rise to dangerous levels, creating a potentially deadly environment for pets and people. As an example, on an 85-degree day, the temperature inside a car with the windows opened slightly can reach 102 degrees within 10 minutes. After 30 minutes, temperature will reach 120 degrees.

To report an animal in distress from the heat or lack of shade or water, contact the Doña Ana County Animal Control Office via central dispatch at (575) 526-0795. or call the Doña Ana County Community Development Department at (575) 647-7350 during regular business hours.

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

One of the mysteries of life

Why is it that we know couples that beg the question, "What does she see in him?" I'm not going to use names for the sake of privacy. I can't actually say 'to protect the innocent'. I'm just going to use the aliasi of Geraldo and Lucinda.

I was on the phone with one of my good friends, Geraldo Uno. He had thrown a team roping party and asked our mutual friend, Geraldo Dos to come and help. "He's the best there is at what he does."

"You bet," I agreed. "He sure got lucky." I was referring to Lucinda Dos, his second official wife. After what seemed years of relationships and children, child support and houses, she showed up in his life. Now he has a business, grandkids and the "Doses" are happy. "I never could figure out what she saw in him?"

Geraldo Uno said, "Well, look at you!" I had to agree. A failed marriage, two failed proposals, miles of alimony, a victim of mergers that cost my jobs, frivolous relationships, lack of discipline and no real concept of a happy home. Then out of the blue my own Lucinda stuck an arrow in my heart that has lasted for years.

I did point out that he, Geraldo Uno, had no room to talk; married once, alimony, child support payments, she kept his mother's wedding ring, had job after job, fell in love with a lady that was fatally ill, then Lucinda Uno found him. They are a power couple today and

"Why?" I asked, "did we get so lucky?"

In our circle of friends there seems to be a preponderance of flawed Geraldos, as I refer to them, "People you wouldn't have in your home on a holiday." Some of us have not found their Lucinda. When you look at our accomplishments you begin to understand why. Captured with a stun gun, been in a Mexican jail, officially detained for molesting a stamp machine in the John Wayne airport, owns a bank but can't get a date, is a charter member of Alcoholics Anonymous, crashed his helicopter trying to dive under a power line, has been run over by a jeep while hunting and sold used cars ... and they are still out there!

But there is a legitimate handful who, like myself, has somehow found true happiness.

Geraldo Uno said, "I think I know how it happens. Look at what they endured before we came along."

He was right. Most all of the Lucindas that found us Geraldos have come from a previous life so unhappy and unfulfilled that we looked good! We're not abusive or stingy or overbearing or mean, we're just not quite housebroken.

Our Lucindas simply had lesser expectations the second time around and we fit the bill.

The center for the conference will be Hotel Encanto de Las Cruces, with conference attendees taking trips to the Very Large Array in Socorro, White Sands Missile Range and Leasburg State Dam, which has its own observatory that opened in 2013. There also will be nightly star parties, held at EMI Technologies at 2200 N. The conference's hosts are the Astronomical Society of Las Cruces and the Astronomical League. Cost for attending the conference is $50 a day, $80 for all three days and $20 for students. Some of the conference speakers are being finalized, but will cover such topics as technical as the "Nearinfrared Brightness Measurements of Venus" or as interesting to the lay person as "The 2017 Great American Eclipse."

Stevens said he had hoped to be able to take conference attendees to the observatories in the Sacramento Mountains east of Alamogordo, but both the Sunspot and Apache Point will be down for maintenance at the time of the conference.

Just what the doctor ordered

Whether or not you have 20-20 vision, if you live in Las Cruces and are interested in this community's future, the year 2020 should be in your line of sight.

That spring, we will have the first medical school graduates at the Burrell College of Osteopathic Medicine walking down an aisle right here in Las Cruces.

Those first 150 or so students will represent a great deal for our community. They will represent promise. Young people in our region will see these medical students all over. That tangible evidence will show our local kids it's possible to study to be a doctor. They will represent a need fulfilled. New Mexico needs doctors and medical professionals. Particularly in the rural areas. According to Robert Juhasz, the president of the American Osteopathic Association, who was in Las Cruces Monday, April 27, for the school's foundation ceremonies, osteopathic doctors place importance on serving rural areas.

They will represent a coming together of our region. Those new doctors can fulfill needs not only in New Mexico, but in west Texas and northern Mexico as well. It is something we all can agree on.

They will represent jobs. It takes many people to operate a medical school. It is estimated when the college is up and running, it will support about 350 jobs. Right away, it will also support jobs, closer to 400 as construction ramps up. Mickey Clute of GenCon, who is working on the project, said he has been tasked with completing the 80,000 square foot building in just about a year. His company has done things similarly, and he thinks he can do this one as well.

They will represent a new chapter in the story of New Mexico State University. The public-private partnership between NMSU and Burrell College's investors is unique. There are 141 allopathic (M.D.) hospitals in the U.S., and Burrell makes the 31st osteopathic (D.O.) hospital in the U.S., but none previously have had this type of collaboration. Plus, the beautiful facility, in the shadow of "A" Mountain and Aggie Memorial Stadium, will make an indelibly positive impact on the landscape of the NMSU campus.

They will represent the value of collaboration, conversation and timing. Before the opening ceremonies, a dancer and a flautist from the Zuni Pueblo entertained the assembling crowd at the construction site. It was a little chilly but clouds were beautiful in a blue New Mexico sky above the Organ Mountains. A wonderful setting for a celebration. None of that would have happened if several key people had not said, "What if?" and several other key people had not said, "Why not?" Several people said both. Those include George Mycahaskiw, a D.O. and anesthesiologist; John Hummer, local real estate broker and original CEO of MountainView Regional Medical Center; and Dan Burrell, a Santa Fe businessman. Their discussions went the right direction and found some other key people and those three now make up the key officers of Burrell College. Mycahaskiw is the dean and dhief academic officer. Hummer is an executive board member and CEO. Burrell is the executive chairman. Other key people they found were Garrey Carruthers, president of NMSU, Gov. Susana Martinez and a host of others.

Letter to the editor Walmart great partner

We understand that taking care of families in our community is a complex issue. We also understand that sometimes decisions and judgement are made hastily. We want to share our experience with Walmart on a local level.

Walmart has been and continues to be great community partner. It has been very supportive of Casa de Peregrinos Emergency Food Program, our nonprofit that provides meals to hungry families in Doña Ana County. Recently, the Walmart Foundation awarded our nonprofit $37,000, which enabled us to purchase our first refrigerated food truck to use in our food rescue program. This truck is already allowing us to accept and deliver more fresh and frozen food to needy Las Cruces families.

Not only did Walmart make our refrigerated truck possible, but it also donated the most food to the Casa de Peregrinos Emergency Food Program. Last year, we received nearly 270,000 pounds of food from Walmart. That's almost 225,000 meals for the families we serve and more than 90 percent of the food we collected. This year, we have collected more than 100,000 pounds of food from Walmart and more than that through our Food Rescue Program.

This opportunity allows us to take care of the hungry in our community with more food to take home.

We are proud to work and partner with the Walmart Foundation and the local stores in Las Cruces. Walmart truly is a community partner and we are blessed and grateful.

> Lorenzo Alba Casa de Peregrinos executive director

Park rudeness

Recently, we took out of town guests to visit Las Cruces' wonderful Veterans Mememorial Park.

I noticed a young woman playing with her dog, who was not on a leash. She was kicking a ball around the park while the dog chased it.

I commented that the dog should be on a leash, and about that time, the dog attacked one of my guests and bit her on the knee and leg.

We told the young woman that if the skin was broken. she would need to quarantine the dog. I advised her about leash laws. I also think that her actions were disrespectful in a memorial park. There were several

Treaty debate

Solar energy shines for all New Mexicans

Let's keep in that way

By Lucas Herdon For the Las Cruces Bulletin

You might wonderwho is benefitting from solar photovoltaic (PV) systems being installed on homes, businesses, schools and cities in New Mexico.

Is it wealthy individuals with lots of spare cash or average New Mexicans?

Recent studies show that working class New Mexicans benefit in two significant ways – job creation and reduced energy costs. Consider that the solar industry added jobs nearly 20 times faster than the national average in 2014.

Right now, 1,600 New Mexicans make their living in the solar industry. By contrast, the state's largest utility, PNM, employs 2,100 people.

Employment in the solar field has increased 86 percent in the past five years. The solar boom in New Mexico is creating good jobs for working class Americans during the worst economic downturn in modern times.

These are livable wages: solar installers make an average of $20 to $24 per hour: solar project managers make $50,000 to $70,000 a year; and designers $40,000 to $70,000 a year. Along with these positions, there are also warehouse people, salespeople, marketing people, administrative staff and managers – creating a range of opportunities for New Mexicans.

Solar jobs are generally more accessible to minorities and to those without advanced degrees. Nationally, the solar industry employs more than 120,000 workingclass Americans in all 50 states. These jobs are fueled in large part by other middle class folk who are making smart investments in going solar for their homes and businesses.

According to the Center for American Progress, the largest groups investing in rooftop solar systems is middle-income and working-class homeowners – folk whose median household incomes range from $30,000 to $90,000 per year.

New Mexicans from all walks of life are realizing that the cost of solar keeps going down while the cost of grid energy continues to rise. Investing in solar for a home or business allows the average homeowner to save money on their monthly electric bill – an investment that pays off handsomely in the long term.

While not everyone has the money to invest in stocks or bonds, everyone pays an electric bill.

For middle class folk, eliminating that monthly cost can have a profound effect on the economics of local community as that money can be spent locally in other outlets.

Despite these benefits to our community, this past legislative session saw numerous attempts to limit the unprecedented solar boom that New Mexico is experiencing.

These attempts ranged from a proposal to do away with the tax incentives that help make solar attractive to everyone to a repeal of our commitment to incorporate 20 percent renewable energy by 2020.

There seems to be a group of people more interested in large corporate profits than the well-being of New Mexicans.

When we have an industry that's cranking out great jobs and providing a service that middle class folk can use to stabilize their energy bills, it's disheartening to see such motivation from some of our elected officials.

The visionary leaders who enacted solar power incentives on the national and state level did so for the very best of reasons: to make clean, affordable and sustainable solar energy accessible to as many people as possible and thereby create jobs and control energy costs.

Working class folk of New Mexico deserve to continue to have access to solar technology and to good jobs and affordable energy.

Lucas Herdon is a solar ambassador for Postive Energy Solar.

Passport Day

The El Paso Passport Agency will open its doors at 303 N. Oregon St. from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday, May 2, for a special Passport Day.

No appointments are needed to apply for a passport, and customers can request routine or expedited service (expedited service incurs an additional fee).

To reduce waiting times on May, 2, customers are encouraged to complete applications online at travel.state.gov and bring their completed, unsigned forms to the agency.

U.S. citizens traveling on passports that expire in less than six months have increasingly been denied airline boarding or have been detained upon arrival in certain foreign destinations. To avoid such delays, U.S. passport holders who will have less than six months validity on their passport for upcoming international travel should consider renewing their passports.

U.S. citizens must present a valid passport book when entering the United States by air. U.S. citizens entering the United States from Canada, Mexico, the Caribbean and Bermuda at land borders and sea ports of entry must present a passport book, passport card, or other travel documents approved by the U.S. government.

More information on how to apply for a U.S. passport, including necessary documents and fees, is available at travel.state.gov.

U.S. citizens may also obtain passport information by phone, in English and Spanish, by calling the National Passport Information Center toll-free at 877-487-2778.

Chihuahua de Mayo special

The Animal Services Center of the Mesilla Valley, 3551 Bataan Memorial West, will hold a Chihuahua de Mayo special.

Through the month of May, Chihuahuas can be spayed or neutered $18.62 each, but owners must be Doña Ana County residents. For more information, call 382-0018.

Cord ceremony

New Mexico State University's Military and Veterans Programs will host a student veteran graduate cord ceremony at 6 p.m. Friday, May 1, at Pete V. Domenici Hall.

Veterans and active-duty military members who are 2015 spring graduates will be presented red, white and blue cords to wear with their academic regalia at the NMSU commencement ceremonies May 9 at the Pan American Center.

This semester, NMSU has 79 military and veteran students graduating, including 53 undergraduate and 26 graduate students, who have posted an average GPA of 3.42. Approximately 30 percent are graduating from science, technology, engineering and mathematics programs, while another 30 percent are in public service-related fields.

"Classified as 'non-traditional' students, the average age of our graduating students is 33," said Jacobo Varela, director of Military and Veterans Programs.

For more information on Military and Veterans Programs at NMSU, visit http://mvp.nmsu.edu.

Pay forums

In 2013, the New Mexico Legislature passed the Fair Pay for Women Act, making it easy and inexpensive for employees to file a claim if they believe they have been paid less than their co-workers doing the same work, solely on the basis of gender. However, few claims have been filed and public awareness of the law is minimal.

Two forums will be held in Las Cruces on Friday, May 1 at the Doña Ana County Government Center at 845 Motel Blvd.

The first session, from 7:30 to 9 a.m., with a $15 continental breakfast, will inform employers, human resource professionals and the legal community about the provisions of the law and compliance responsibilities. CLE credit is available to attorneys for $20.

The second session, from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., with no admission charge, will provide details to the general public on who is covered by the law and how much in unpaid wages might be recovered under the law.

The forums are sponsored by the American Association of University Women (AAUW)-New Mexico, the Southwest Women's Law Center, Professional Business Women of New Mexico and the Santa Fe Professional Business Women in conjunction with the New Mexico Human Rights Bureau.

For information on all of the forums go to http://aauw-nm.aauw.net.

Since 2011, 80 young people have had a once-in-a-lifetime experience at the New Mexico Youth Ranch Management Camp.

Registration deadline is Friday, May 1, for the five-day camp held May 31 to June 5 at the Valles Caldera National Preserve.

Camp participants ages 15 to 19 are selected for the program, and come from across the state to learn science-based skills used successfully on modern-day ranches to improve beef production, natural resource stewardship, wildlife management and fiscal management.

The youth ranch management program focuses on providing hands-on training for future ranch managers and stewards of New Mexico's natural resources. The program is an expansion of the research and education contractual agreement between Instructors from New Mexico State University's Cooperative Extension Service and the Valles Caldera Trust.

The participants are challenged 12 hours a day with a college-level curriculum of hands-on activities and lectures. The camp culminated with the youth presenting their ranch plan to a panel of judges made up of successful New Mexico ranch managers.

"With an electric guitar strapped on, Bagwell's raucous roadhouse vibe convincingly oozed blazing, bluesy tones in songs such as the unreleased 'Boots.' Closing out her set with 'Whiskey,' a slow-burning yet epically swelling tune, Bagwell showed herself as an artist who should make the summer of 2015 her breakout season."

planted" budget by County Commissioner Ben Rawson, who has been saying County Commission Chairman Billy Garrett and County Commissioner Wayne Hancock want the new GRT money for other county needs.

"I never intended this to be a contest of wills," Vigil said.

Vigil tried to reach out to all the commissioners, but said he has just found three of them - Rawson, Leticia Benavidez and David Garcia - willing to acknowledge the department's needs.

"We need major surgery, not a Band Aid solution," Vigil said.

Hancock said he has repeatedly spoken in support of using the new GRT money for roads, the detention center and sheriff's department. The problem is how to implement that new money for those purposes, he said.

"It's a lot more complicated than just sticking a number in," Hancock said. "It just doesn't happen that way. It's not that easy. I wish it was, but it's not.'

Increasing pay for employees at the sheriff's department and detention center has consequences, Hancock said, such as raising the question of pay parity for other employees.

Garrett said he supported Vigil's campaign when he ran for sheriff, so he was disappointed by the breakdown in communications about the budget process.

"When I hear you, I feel like I'm being treated like the enemy, and nothing could be further from the truth," Garrett said. "We have to look out for all the employees of the county and all of the needs of the county."

Garrett questioned whether $4 million would be adequate for the improvements needed in the sheriff's department. But the county also has a lot of other needs in other departments, he said.

Garrett said there are questions also of how much and when to spend on the efforts such as buying new patrol cars.

Garrett attributed the dispute to "misunderstandings and miscommunications," saying he believed the final budget will have more money for public safety than ever before. However, the increased GRT also provides an opportunity to bring better balance to the county's overall budget, he said.

Rawson said the commission passed a resolution detailing the earmarks because the GRT reflected the largest tax increase in the county's history and people demanded to know how that money was going to be spent.

Garcia said he believed everybody in the county is working to a common purpose, but the public wants to know how the GRT increase is going to improve public safety. The county's budget, however, is complex, he said.

"I believe with time, and time will prevail, we'll get there," Garcia said.

Benavidez had proposed offering a new resolution to further clarify how the GRT money was to be spent, but Garrett, Hancock and Garcia voted to table it indefinitely. Garrett said there will be future steps in the budgeting process that will get the sheriff's department the resources it needs.

Rawson said he believes Garrett and Hancock are using the budget process – and concerns about promised pay increases to the collective bargaining process with other employee groups – to back out of the promised money to sheriff's department "so they can spend the money on anything they want to, and it's wrong.

Bill Grigaliuans with the project said the new station should not be confused with KRWG or any National Public Radio station.

"We're different than NPR," Grigaliuans said. "We're not an NPR affiliate."

He said that, while NPR offers international and national as well as local content, the new community radio station will offer solely Las Cruces programming.

"We'll have very local kind of programs," Grigaliuans said.

Rubin said four pillars will support the radio station's content: education, economy, environment and entertainment.

The nonprofit is also open to suggestions for programs.

"We hope people will give us ideas," Rubin said. "We want to reflect the local voice."

Both Rubin and Grigaliuans said they have worked in the radio field for years. Rubin has experience with community radio stations, but had no plans to help start another one when she moved to Las Cruces in 2013.

Within a week she heard about the plan to start a new station.

"(I felt) this is what I'm supposed to be doing," she said.

The nonprofit received a construction permit from the FCC which means it can purchase a transmitter and turn it on. The station has an agreement to pay for space on KGRT's radio tower on Picacho Avenue, near the Rio Grande River.

"There are a lot of things to do yet," Grigaliuans said. "We have to organize a staff and raise money.'

He said the staff will probably consist of two to three full-time employees as we well as volunteers.

As for the call letters, there are ten choices to pick from: KZEA (Zia Radio); KNBL (Noble Radio); KVXP (Vox Populi – Voice of the People); KEVL (Education, Entertainment, Environment Voice of Las Cruces); KPQT (Radio Piquante); KLQS (Las Qruces); KMZV (Mezilla Valley); KFLH (Faith, Love, Hope); KAYN (Cayenne Radio); KISJ (Social Justice Radio).

Morales is LCPS Teacher of the Year, other awards announced ears when Las Cruces Public Schools Superintendent Stan Rounds announced that he has been selected as the 2015-2016 LCPS Teacher of the Year.

The announcement came at the end of the recent Celebration of Excellence in Education Awards Dinner, sponsored by the LCPS Foundation, Century Bank and the school district. Morales teaches social studies at Mayfield High School and has been with LCPS since 2005.

As Teacher of the Year, Morales received a $1,000 check from FirstLight Federal Credit Union, said Nyeta Haines, LCPS Foundation executive director. Morales was credited for his level of commitment as a girls' soccer coach and his mentorship to many students in the ENLACE (Engaging Latino Communities for Education) program. He is now eligible to compete in the New Mexico Teacher of the Year competition.

Morales was selected from among 45 teacher applications. The finalists in this year's Teacher of the Year program also were presented cash awards. They were:

- First runner-up Rachel Knight, agriculture teacher from Centennial High School, who received $500 from Jim Hawk, Horace Mann Insurance
- Second runner-up Laura Bryant, kindergarten teacher from Central Elementary School, who received $325 from former Teacher of the Year Tommy Esparza and the National Education Association of Las Cruces
- Third runner-up Lonna Andrews, 7th-grade teacher from Mesa Middle School, who received $100 from Asombro Institute for Science Education and Bill Byford, Carter Bain Wealth Management.

The 2014-15 Bilingual teacher awards were also announced. Mari Rincon, the LCPS director of dual language and bilingual education, announced that Andrew Atencio is this year's LCPS Bilingual Teacher of the Year. Atencio is a second grade teacher from Conlee Elementary School and received $250 from Andrea Schoellkopf of Imagine Learning and an anonymous donor.

Selected as first runner-up was Fran-

The second runner-up was Noelle Murillo, fifth-grade bilingual teacher of Columbia Elementary School; she received $75, also from Rounds and Sanchez.

> Also honored at the dinner were the five LCPS seniors who are either finalists or semifinalists in the 2015 National Merit Scholarship competition. They are among 1.5 million students nationwide who took the Preliminary SAT exam while they were juniors.

Sanchez said approximately 3 percent of those students - 50,000 - are then identified as top scorers. From there, only 16,000 are notified they are semifinalists because they are the state's highest-scoring entrants in their state.

Sanchez said four students have been selected as finalists, winning a National Merit Scholarship, which also depended on their academic record, PSAT and SAT scores, extracurricular and leadership experiences and an essay. They are:

- Saleem Iqbal, 17, Las Cruces High School, who has a 4.3 grade point average (GPA). He has not decided which university that he is going to attend. He plans to major in mathematics or physics.
- John Paul Andersen, 18, Arrowhead Park Early College High School, who has a 4.15 GPA. He plans to attend Brigham Young University where he will major in mechanical engineering.
- Angela Marie Kearns, 18, Mayfield High School, who has a 4.14 GPA. She is planning to attend New Mexico State University where she will major in mathematics and computer science.
- Sophia Sanchez-Maes, 17, Mayfield High School, whose GPA exceeds 4.0, is considering multiple university offers including Yale, Columbia and MIT. She plans to pursue a double major in mathematics and computer science.

Distinguished Friend of Education Award to be given to Pat Sisbbarro

The Council for Advancement and Support of Education (CASE) will present longtime New Mexico State University supporter Pat Sisbarro with the Distinguished Friend of Education Award, an honor given to just one person in the nation each year.

NMSU nominated Sisbarro in recognition of her years of service to the university.

"This is very a competitive award," NMSU President Garrey Carruthers said. "The fact that Pat was selected shows how important her work is and how deeply committed she is to the university. NMSU is fortunate to have someone like Pat Sisbarro as a friend and supporter. The contributions that she and her husband, Lou, have made help support our community and make NMSU a better place."

CASE is the primary professional association for fundraising professionals in higher education. The recognition is part of CASE's 2015 Distinguished Service Awards, which honor individuals and organizations for their extraordinary service to education and the field of educational advancement. The award will be presented July 13 in Chicago.

In 2007, Sisbarro helped create the NMSU Aggies Are Tough Enough to Wear Pink breast cancer awareness and fundraising campaign. The all-volunteer community effort, which she continues to co-chair, works hand-and-hand with the university. To date, the effort has raised more than $3.5 million and funds nationally recognized cancer research conducted by NMSU and the University of New Mexico.

Sisbarro has also served for three years on NMSU's President's Associates board of directors, which raises money to support scholarships for outstanding students. She also helped create the American Southwest Theatre Company at NMSU and served on its board for eight years.

Last year, she and her husband established the Pat and Lou Sisbarro Current Use Fund to support critical projects at NMSU in a timely manner during the next five years. Pat and Lou Sisbarro also established a separate, substantial legacy gift for the university.

In March, NMSU held a grand opening for Pat and Lou Sisbarro Community Park, named for the couple in recognition of their continued generosity.

Honoring Jack Petrowsky Spaceport America hosts two educational launches

Bulletin Staff Report

On Saturday April 25, the New Mexico Space Grant Consortium (NMSGC) sponsored a student launch at Spaceport America with seven experiments built by students and teachers from Las Public Cruces Schools, Doña Ana Com-College, Hot munity Springs Middle School and High School and Roswell Middle school.

The rocket achieved an altitude of approximately 12,600 feet and was assisted by the Fellowship of Las Cruces Area Rocketry Enthusiasts (FLARE).

After the launch, students and their teachers used the Virgin Galactic Gateway to Space hangar area to disassemble their rocket payload experiments.

"This was a small event to test a number of projects we are working in collaboration with all our partners," said Pat Hynes, director of the New Mexico Space Grant and sponsor of the launch.

The 8-foot-long fiberglass rocket contained seven experiment canisters, including an onboard Geiger counter to measure atmospheric radiation during ascent and a variety of sensors and meters.

"This is the fourth NMSGC student launch since 2009 that Spaceport America is proud to be able to host," said Spaceport America CEO Christine Anderson. "Spaceport America is dedicated to providing launch opportunities for our next generation." NMSGC's Student Launch Program funded a summer institute in 2014 for teachers to learn how to teach science, technology, engineering and math (STEM) curriculum and build the experiments as part of the classroom experience. The launch, along with the year-long education program, is part of the ongoing efforts in the state to provide more students, teachers, parents and interested citizens more launch activity at the spaceport.

A week earlier, apaceport officials also announced the launch of the New Mexico Institute of Mining and Technology Rocket Design Team's experimental rocket. The nearly 10-foot-long experimental rocket was designed and built by the students in the Mechanical Engineering Department at New Mexico Tech. The launch took place from Spaceport America's Vertical Launch Area.

The student rocket lifted off at 8:03 a.m., which was within the dedicated launch window, and flight data indicates the rocket attained its predicted 11,500-foot altitude.

"Spaceport America is very excited to be working with New Mexico Tech engineering students as they design, build and launch their new rocket," said Spaceport America Director of Aerospace Operations Bill Gutman. "We're proud to provide launch services for groundbreaking experiments like this and to be able to provide technical assistance." The launch was part of a program at New Mexico Tech's Mechanical Engineering Department that requires each student to participate in an intensive design team activity, a requirement for graduation from the school's engineering program. The rocket carried instruments to measure parameters associated with the rocket's performance and carried two experimental flight computers developed by the school's Electrical Engineering Department. The 40-pound rocket reached a top speed of approximately Mach 0.8. With the exception of the motor, essentially every element of the rocket is the work of the students who will also be analyzing the in-flight data to validate if their rocket design met their performance expectations.

NMSU Model UN team again takes top award

Going into the annual Model United National Conference, the students representing New Mexico State University had a simple strategy: remain a team of placated dolphins among aggressive sharks. The plan seemed to work as the team took home the Distinguished Delegation award at the Model United Conference, Nations where they competed against other teams from around the world.

"A shark in the ocean tends to live by itself, whereas dolphins work in groups. We're not sharks, so we don't try to exclude or attack people, but we did have to step up and meet them head-on," said Isaac Morales, government senior, who served on the Security Council representing Lithuania. "The smaller committees need a different strategy than the bigger committees that are more developed. The delegates are a lot more intense. You have to not be afraid to speak up and go toe-to-toe with them. The Security Council lends itself more to hardball politics.³

"We became aggressive dolphins," added Theadora Trejo, NMSU Model U.N. president.

Model U.N. is an academic simulation intended to educate students on effective communication and multilateral diplomacy. The program is supported by academic coursework organized by the Department of Government in the College of Arts and Sciences, but open to students of all majors at the university.

This is the ninth year in a row that NMSU's Model U.N. team has brought home the award.

Preserving the past and planning for the future

Arianna Parsons Executive director, Downtown Las Cruces Partnership

In order to attract innovative companies, you need to be an innovative city. In order to keep your homegrown talent in place, you need to have a compelling reason for your talent to stay.

It is therefore easy to sympathize with those who once took an "out with the old, in with the new" approach to revitalization. Fortunately, understanding the thinking behind the approach and agreeing with it are two very different ideas.

Today, we know that what builds a lasting community is the creation of a unique sense of "place." This Place (which is so important we can elevate it to a proper noun) holds a spot in the hearts and minds of the collective citizenry. It is unlike any other place.

The foods are unique, the artwork is unique, the people are unique and the experiences are unique.

E

The Place is an evolving, living, adaptable entity. At its best, it is firmly rooted in the time and space in which it was breathed into life by those who first created it, providing an instinctive guidance. At its worst, the roots are completely severed and the struggle for reclamation is lost. Downtown Las Cruces may seem perilously close to the "lost" side of the spectrum, having destroyed so many of its landmark structures through the years, but I feel we're better positioned than many think.

Though we mourn the loss of many of our historic properties, we celebrate the restoration of the Rio Grande Theatre and its newly installed, state-of-the-art sound system and projector.

As we cheer on the progress of the Amador Hotel and the Armijo House we use terms such as "adaptive reuse" and "crowd funding" - words that had no meaning when the buildings were originally constructed.

We record the oral histories from those who have been here the longest and we honor the area's tribal stewards with our art and literature while looking to attract "maker spaces" and co-working.

Meanwhile, we lay the groundwork for our future.

I often scour the internet for insight into what is to come what movements are on the horizon that could position us, not as a contemporary city, but as a forward-reaching community. We look to the incorporation of design elements for the sake of nothing but enjoyment, and we incorporate the creative into our economic positioning plans.

The goal of the Downtown Las Cruces Partnership, and our partners, is to use the wealth of resources, talents and beauty intrinsic and specific to the area to create that Place. the one you and your family and area students and our professionals will find so welcoming and unique that it will not beg comparison to any other place.

This Place will stand above and on its own.

Rural development investment in county is $52 million in 5 years

By Mike Cook Las Cruces Bulletin

The U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development Administration's (USDARD) New Mexico Director, Terry Brunner, was in Las Cruces Thursday, April 23 to help dedicate the agency's new service center at 760 Stern Drive, Suite 139.

In the past five years, Brunner said, USDARD has invested more than $52 million in a wide range of programs and facilities in Doña Ana County, including more than $31 million in rural business development and $21 million-plus for housing.

The statewide impact since 2009 has been about $1.2 billion.

Southern New Mexico has seen "a consistent flow of activity" from

'N Comp

USDARD in recent years, said Brunner. "We're doing a lot of good stuff here."

Some of the business development funds have gone to support waste water systems in colonias located in southern Doña Ana County through grants and loans, he said.

Brunner spent Earth Day (April 22) helping to dedicate new water treatment systems in La Union and Mesquite. USDARD provided $1.2 million in loans and grants to the La Union Mutual Domestic Sewer and Water Association to pay for a new filtering system that eliminates arsenic from the water system. The agency provided $5.4 million to upgrade the water system in Mesquite, which includes reducing arsenic levels.

City receives highest possible fire safety rating

Bulletin Staff Report

Effective July 1, many Las Cruces businesses will pay less for fire insurance, thanks to the city's new rating as one of the best communities in the U.S. for fire safety.

The upgraded fire safety classification may even have implications for economic development.

Las Cruces Fire Chief Travis Brown recently reported to city council his department was evaluated in December for its ability to respond to and suppress fires, as well as to communicate during emergencies.

As a result of that evaluation, the city is the first New Mexico community to receive the highest possible Insurance Services Office Inc. (ISO) rating.

Brown said the city is one of just 97 communities nationwide to receive the No. 1 classification.

"For the past three or four years, we have been working to improve insurance rates in the community," he said. "Generally, the impact on residential fire insurance rates will be minimal. Businesses may see a greater increase in savings."

"This puts us on a par with El Paso, which could be an economic development advantage."

"Las Cruces is our poster child," New Mexico State Fire Marshal John Standefer said in announcing the new classification.

Brown said the Las Cruces Fire Department would notify insurance companies by mail, advising them of the change in rating. LCFD further encourages residents and business owners to contact their insurance agents to determine how the improved ISO rating may affect insurance premiums. Brown said the evaluation covers a number of factors, including the city's water system, dispatch and community fire prevention efforts.

"We have highly trained personnel and a top-notch utility system," Brown said.

In 2012, Las Cruces' classification improved from Class 4 to Class 2.

Brown said the city asked for a review again in 2014 because the ISO had changed its rating system, while at the same time Las Cruces had made improvements, including the opening of station No 7 on the West Mesa, which is specially equipped to respond to emergencies at Las Cruces International Airport and the West Mesa Industrial Park. The station also has a training facility where firefighters can practice responding to fires at multi-story buildings.

Brown said the department's training is excellent. For example, Las Cruces provides 240 hours of new driver training, four times the required 60 hours.

"What all this means is we're providing tremendous service for our citizens," Brown said, adding there still is room for improvement. For the few properties located more than 1,000 feet from a hydrant, the classification will be 1X.

The department will continue to upgrade service as the city grows and changes, he said.

To fill in the gaps, station No. 8 is projected for the East Mesa and possibly No. 9 for the Elks Drive area and No. 10 in North Sonoma Ranch.

"Maybe we don't need a traditional station," Brown said. "Maybe we need to look into smaller residential neighborhood stations that fit in better in the neighborhood and save on costs.

"Fire service historically has been a one-size model. My hope is we can be open to new ideas."

Brunner said more than 150 families in the county have been impacted by funds allocated for housing, which includes home loans and repairs.

"We're putting people that are in lower incomes into homes."

Funds have been allocated to Tierra del Sol Housing Corp; Rio Grande Council of Governments in Anthony, NM; New Mexico State University (to study energy efficiency); Village of Hatch (for new fire trucks, a street sweeper and waste water treatment); Doña Ana County (for wastewater collection); Leasburg, and Organ for water systems; Rio Valley Biofuels; Sunland Nursery; and others across the county.

One of USDARD's major hurdles in accomplishing its mission? Getting the word out about the services it offers.

"We're always struggling to spend the resources we're given and make sure the pipeline is full," Brunner said.

While USDARD is "the go-to funding agency in some states," in New Mexico, "we encourage people to call us if they have an idea. The economy is still pretty stagnant. We need to consistently pursue these ideas."

Sometimes, Brunner said, communities and organizations have good ideas, but they struggle with execution or administration.

"We want to help them help themselves" through loan funds, grants and development assistance, he said.

Many people do not know all the USDARD programs available. They include: single-family home ownership, preservation and repair loans and grants; community facilities loans and grants; community development initiatives; business and industry loan guarantees; rural business development grants; rural economic development loans and grants; small socially disadvantaged producer grants; value-added producer grants; rural energy program loans and grants; water and waste disposal grants and loans; sold waste management grants; technical assistance programs; rural broadband loans and loan guarantees; electric and telecommunications loans; and others.

Some people struggle with financial literacy, Brunner said. Many applications for loans from families are rejected because of poor credit scores. USDARD can help with the credit cleanup process, he said.

"We are helping get younger folks educated on financial literacy, including how to handle a checkbook, a credit card and a home loan."

Brunner said USDARD has been around since the administration of President Harry Truman to provide grants and loans, advice and technical assistance to rural communities across the nation.

BUSINESS A22 | FRIDAY, MAY 1, 2015 LAS CRUCES BULLETIN Governor helps pour foundation for new medical school

By Mike Cook Las Cruces Bulletin

BCOM is coming.

With New Mexico Governor Susana Martinez, the mayors of Las Cruces and El Paso, New Mexico State University President Dr. Garrey Carruthers and a host of other community, business and health care leaders on hand, a "pouring of the foundation" ceremony was held Monday morning, April 27 as work began on the Burrell College of Osteopathic Medicine, or BCOM.

The 80,000 square-foot facility, located on seven acres in NMSU's Arrowhead Research Park, will be the 31st osteopathic college in the United States and the first ever public-private partnership of its kind. It represents a $103 million investment by BCOM, which also will contribute nearly $30 million to the NMSU Foundation during the 60-year life of the NMSU-BCOM lease.

The school, which already has provisional accreditation, will open to an estimated 160 students in August 2016 and will reach a maximum of 600 students within four years. BCOM hopes to create 600 or more residency slots in the Las Cruces-El Paso-Chihuahua, MX region during the next 10 years.

BCOM will generate an estimated $80 million for the regional economy in each of its first two years and $60-$70 million each year after that, said Dan Burrell, BCOM executive chairman.

The school is expected to create almost 400 local jobs in its first two and one-half years, including construction and on-site employment.

At full operation, BCOM will support about 350 jobs in the region, including 100 to 150 faculty and staff positions.

"Las Cruces hasn't seen a project of this magnitude in quite some time," said Burrell.

The school is a collaboration among Burrell, NMSU, the state, regional leaders and medical community and the Commission on Osteopathic College Accreditation.

"NMSU is delighted to play a role in this publicprivate educational partnership to benefit the health and well-being of people across the region,' said Carruthers. "The future of higher education will involve more of these kinds of partnerships, where public universities and the private sector work together to benefit the communities we serve."

William T. Baker, DO (for Doctor of Osteopathy), who is the NMSU team physician, is "the first physician we spoke to," said John Hummer, BCOM CEO and executive board member.

Baker, who is a member of the BCOM board, is one of about 92,000 DOs in the United States. He and his father, the late Lory Baker, DO, have had a practice in Las Cruces since 1950. "This school is the greatest thing that's going to happen in Las Cruces, NMSU, the State of New Mexico, West Texas and Chihuahua," said Baker.

"Without the vision and hard work of George Mycahaskiw, DO (BCOM dean and chief academic officer), John Hummer, Dan Burrell and Garrey Carruthers, this would never have happened," said Baker.

Governor Martinez said the opening of BCOM will help address a health care shortage that currently exists in 32 of the state's 33 counties. She called the school "a milestone for Doña Ana County," and said, "It's important to have a facility like this. As our health care system continues to change, our demand for health care professionals will only continue to is celebrating seven years in Las Cruces.

At the April 23 ceremony, Gov. Susana Martinez announced Convergys will add "200 new jobs that pay well and have great benefits."

"It's the people of this state and how they treat customers on the phone that made this happen," she said.

Bill Williams, senior operations director for Convergys, said the Las Cruces contact center supports one of the largest telecommunications companies in the world. A second client, a major hospitality company, will be served from the Las Cruces facility.

"One thing I can't overemphasize as a factor in our success in the talented residents of this community," Williams said.

He said when callers receive a high level of customer service, Convergys clients "want to grow at that location."

Alan Baker, site leader, said 95 percent of the center's leadership team was hired from within, and Covergys intends to grow that team by 20 positions as a result of the upcoming expansion.

Martinez said Convergys will receive more than $180,000 in JTIP funding to offset the cost of training new hires.

Practice how to deal with wind on the golf course

Wind, will it ever end? Dry windy days will persist for some time to come. Golf professionals agree that extremely windy and blustery conditions provide the most difficult challenge to scoring.

To play their best, recreational and amateur golfers need to grasp how to accommodate difficult circumstances that are beyond their control. One's awareness and adjustment to blustery conditions can make a big difference in their ability to cope and play smart golf.

Most tour pros describe the links courses played in the British Open as the most demanding in terms of wind play. Those classic courses are relatively flat, subject to wind coming off the water, with an abundance of sand bunkers adding to the complication.

Many links courses, like St. Andrews in Scotland, require low running shots with accurate placement in terms of line and distance. That's why many players have an opportunity to do well on those courses since it is not a "bomb-andgouge" type of play.

Then comes one of the trickiest holes in major tournament golf – I'm speaking of the par-3, 12th hole at Augusta National in the Masters. If you've watched any of the Masters – which takes place in Augusta, Ga. – you know that the 12th is a shortish par 3 defining "Amen Corner" with Rae's Creek guarding the shallow green and a confusing breeze coming from several directions, causing golfers plenty of consternation.

My favorite wind hole on tour, though, is the 137-yard, par-3 17th hole at TPC Sawgrass, the island green, in Ponte Vedra Beach Fla.

At the 2007 Players' Championship, with thousands of spectators ringing the borders of the hole, more than 100 of the best players in the world, battling 35-mph winds coming in from the Atlantic, put 50 balls in the water in one day.

Two years earlier, veteran Bob Tway was sitting at No. 10 in the standings when he came to the windy island green.

Tway put four balls in the water that day and carded a 12, still the highest score recorded by a pro at 17.

Generally speaking, for long shots, golfers need to keep the ball somewhat low when hitting into the wind, even if they're usually a high-ball hitter. When hitting a driver into a stiff breeze, the best bet is to get the ball running hard on the ground on the short grass, usually done by delofting the club and keeping the angle of attack from the inside.

One of the smart things to do is to go to a practice range that is set up to hit into the prevailing wind.

Note that shots launched downwind will probably go farther, but be aware that a tail wind often knocks the ball down robbing you of the full carry distance.

Modifying a swing to hit a lower or higher trajectory and reduce the spin takes plenty of practice.

Essentially the same technique goes for iron shots as it does with the driver and fairway woods.

By Zak Hansen Las Cruces Bulletin

In its three years, the New Mexico Brewers Guild's Blazin' Brewfest, has grown leaps and bounds, from a modest, but raucous, gathering held at The Grapevine to a full-fledged festival at always been about supthe heart of Las Cruces. and upon its return to Las Cruces this year — from 4 to 9 p.m. Friday, May 2 it comes to a Las Cruces changed.

"Our whole thing has porting local beer" said guild Executive Director Chris Goblet. "What's interesting about this year's festival is that we have four official brew pubs now in open and operating in Las Cruces Spotted Dog, High Desert, Bosque and De La Vega's (Pecan Grill & Brewery) — and we hear two more are coming. When we started this festival, it was just High Desert. Now, three short vears later. four functioning breweries and two more on the way. It's a college town, looking to have more locally owned business and lots of local support for craft beer. The landscape's really changed.

"We came to Las Cruces knowing it's going to be an emerging beer market — the next big market in New Mexico — and we're seeing it happen in just three years."

Featuring 13 breweries from around the Land of Enchantment — locals High Desert Brewing Co., Spotted Dog, Bosque Brewing and Pecan Grill & Brewery along with Ponderosa Brewing, Red Door Brewing. Little Toad Creek Brewery &

Distillery, Taos Mesa, Tractor, Marble, Santa Fe, Turtle Mountain, La Cumbre, Second Street, Monks Ale and New Mexico Hard Cider — the Blazin' Brewfest is perfectly geared toward those who think — and drink - local, unlike, ahem, other beer festivals that feature products readily available on a national scale, at liquor and convenience stores abundant.

In addition to great, locally produced beer, liquor and cider, the Blazin' Brewfest will feature eats from Luchador, 138 Sanwiches, The Greenhaus and Green Chile Paddy Wagon food trucks - and entertainment from Santa Fe blues band Man No Sober and locals Gold-Hearted Crows.

While previous years had been largely devoted to spreading the name and mission of the New Mexico Brewers Guild, this year's festival, with the guild's name and reputation cemented, is all about celebration.

"This year, it's a lot less about getting our name out there and more about, we want you to know who the New Mexico Brewers Guild is, and we want you to celebrate New Mexico craft beer," Goblet said. "We want you to come out and show your support. Local people like to drink local beer, and in Las Cruces, I hope, people are become more excited with the scene down there.

"This is the place you want to go for beers you've never tried before and you want to support locals. We're getting to a point now that it's really fun to be a part of the New Mexico Brewers Guild tribe, to be part of our supporters, and this is a great way to do that on your home turf. We promise to have a great time — food trucks, bands and beer."

Tickets to the Blazin' Brewfest are $20 at the gate. For more information, visit www.nmbeer.org.

Weighty World War II topic proves unwieldy for LCCT's soft "Shoulders"

By David Salcido

Fact: More than 127,000 United States citizens were imprisoned during World War II, their only crime being that they were of Japanese ancestry. Fact: President Theodore Roosevelt signed an executive order in 1942 creating concentration camps for these would-be threats to national security on American soil. Fact: When the executive order was finally repealed in 1944, many of the detainees were not allowed to return to their homes, but instead were treated as pariahs.

For a country that prides itself on the respect of civil liberties and cultural differences, those years stand as one of the darkest moments in American history. Heady stuff for any playwright and a promising premise for audiences eager to explore the underside of whitewashed yesteryears. Such is the proposition put forth in Las Cruces Community Theatre's latest production, "Shoulders," by Jeffrey Kinghorn. It's a pity the bid never achieves its potential.

Sadly, uneven performances and a weak, overwrought script hinder what could be a powerful study of human kindness in the face of crippling adversity. A shame, really, because director David Edwards understands the message, as reflected in his Directors Note. He points out,

"there is not much awareness of this period in our history." He's right. There's not. Unfortunately the material on display here doesn't really do its part to bring about such enlightenment.

Perhaps the most disturbing quality of author Kinghorn's cliché-ridden script is the fact that. rather than tackle the topic of forced privation faced by Japanese Americans during World War II, it sidelines the only Japanese American character into a platitude-spouting cipher. Natsuko, who should have been the focus of this study, spends her time on stage, folding clothes and regurgitating fortune cookie bromides. Rather than give Natsuko her due, the stage is given over, instead, to the whiny tribulations of poor, burdened white women, a la "Mildred Pierce" or "The Best Years of Our Lives."

KC Cherksasky and Bridget Andersen star in the Las Cruces Community Theatre production of "Shoulders," now playing through Sunday, May 10.

Some of the best plays ever written have had their genesis in one all-too-common truth: War, despite nationalist fervor and patriotic pride, inevitably and by its very nature, brings out the worst in humanity. It's a compelling topic, when handled deftly. That is not the case here. Instead, the overarching storyline is a doomed love story between Rosie the Riveter and every likeable goodfella played by Hollywood's mobster-era elite. Natsuko, the Japanese American housewife who is being forced to abandon her home and the life she has built with her husband, is simply a catalyst for inevitable change in the lives of her Anglo American or neighbors.

But the stereotypes don't end there. Throw in a spoiled, tantrum-throwing younger sister, a stern, long-suffering widowed mother fighting to overcome the loss of her wealthy station and a wise-cracking next-door-neighbor who acts as surrogate guardian for the clan and you've got all the ingredients for a hackneyed 1940s tearjerker. Even the ending is dredged up from every war-era weeper written between 1942 and 1950, complete with soulful wishes on a cold, uncaring moon. It's just unfortunate that the author's talents weren't up to the task of turning such sudsy fare into a compelling character study.

Bright spots in the production include strong performances from veteran actress Gail Wheeler, as the tough-as-nails Harriet, and Naomi Nakano Rupp as Natsuko, who makes the best of her western geisha role with an easy grace and eyes that speak volumes about the pain she is suffering, even if the script doesn't do anything to help her convey it. Equally impressive is Joseph Lopez as Sal, the gangster attempting to go legit for the love of a woman. His straightforward mannerisms and soulful expressions add weight to the feather light stock role.

It speaks volumes when one of the most memorable scenes in the production is a comic bit in which Harriet relieves Sal's back pain by twisting him into a human pretzel. Considering the play is touted as an examination of dispossession and the effects of "armed aggression" on the people left behind, one would expect resonance from a more sober passage. Even Alan Parker's glossy 1990 war epic "Come See the Paradise" provided more pathos.

Perhaps if Kinghorn had studied the actual history of the time, rather than immersing himself in black and white melodramas, Shoulders would be a stronger and much more truthful play. Instead, the only response these "Shoulders" elicit is a helpless shrug of detachment and promises unfulfilled.

OPENS FRIDAY, MAY 1

'Kumiko' is bleak but darkly funny

Review by Jeff Berg For the Las Cruces Bulletin

If you've never seen the movie version of "Fargo" — not the TV show you might want to do so, or perhaps see it again if you've not seen it, before checking out the interesting Japanese-made production "Kumiko, the Treasure Hunter."

Kumiko is an office girl who hates her life in the big city. She has to dress the same as other office girls, do the same boring work and wait on a bored and stupid boss who does nothing all day except sit at his desk. Her only revenge is to spit into his daily tea, which must be brewed just so, otherwise he admonishes her which he does anyway. She is not married or dating and has a mother who calls and belittles her at every opportunity.

The picture opens with Kumiko finding a "treasure" in a small cove by the sea.

This valuable item is a sand- and grit-covered VHS copy of the 1999 Ethan and Joel Cohen film "Fargo." She takes it home and pops it in the VHS player.

We only see one scene over and over; one in which Steve Buscemi is seen burying a briefcase full of cash in a snowdrift by a wire fence.

His face is a bit mangled and Kumiko, our treasure hunter, watches it numerous times, trying to pinpoint the exact spot where the money might be.

It is completely non-descript, but she stitches a map of sorts, using the positioning of the fence posts as guides. It is a dry, well-written scenario, one that can really hold one's attention. She returns to her mind-numbing job day after day, being grilled by her boss about any future plans. She has none.

Her mother harangues her about a boyfriend and marriage, but the dour, usually silent Kumiko is not interested. Her only source of life is her pet rabbit.

Her rebellion starts when sent to pick up her bosses dry cleaning, which she summarily tosses in the garbage.

Enough has become enough. Stealing his company credit card, she ends up in the Minneapolis area in the dead of winter, luggage-free, English language-free and, soon, money free, when the credit card is cut off. But she still manages to find her way further north toward the elusive Fargo.

Kumiko's adventures, for her part, are mostly dialogue free. Her tormentors only use their voices to further their torment and in America, she does find some helpful people, but of course never connects with them.

However, her American encounters, especially a helpful policeman, all tell her the same thing — it was just a movie, there is no money. The DVD of the film that she bought is carried off by an ornery dog and soon she is alone and standing in the snow in her office uniform and sweatshirt.

I really liked this film, as it is different and well done on all counts. There are enough plot holes to drive numerous Renaults through, but the dry wit and humor and Kumiko being likable in spite of her sour attitude about everything and penchant for petty crime makes up for it.

Kumiko the Treasure Hunter is a pleasant film and those of you from the snowy climes will certainly appreciate spring in New Mexico that much more while viewing the iciness of the great white north ... albeit from afar.

'Mad Gravity' opens Friday, May 1, at Black Box Theatre

No Strings Theatre Company presents the Southwest premiere of "Mad Gravity," a kooky new comedy by William Missouri Downs, the author of "Cockeyed," previously produced by No Strings Theatre Company.

The plot centers on two Dada performance artists who have built a theatre in their living room and who are hosting a dinner party. Things go quickly awry when they discover an asteroid is headed their way which threatens to demolish the earth.

They and the audience are forced to answer existential questions: Can humans be good if no one is watching? What is the meaning of life? What is performance art?

Veteran actors Marissa Bond, Rafael Medina, Emily Parr, Donny Prosise, and Britney Stout bring the delightful comedy to life. Peter Herman is Lighting and Scenic Designer, Jeanne Luper designed the costumes, Debra Knapp is the Choreographer and Algernon D'Ammassa is the Fight Choreographer. The Crew includes Karen Ross (Stage Manager), Rebekkah Riley (Light and Sound Board Operator), and Carmen Call (Backstage Crew.) Tommy Medina is the drummer.

"Mad Gravity" opens Friday, May 1, and runs through Sunday, May 17. Performances are 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday, 2:30 p.m. Sundays May 10 and 17, and 7 p.m. Thursday, May 14. Tickets are $12 regular, $10 students and seniors older than 65 and all seats on Thursday are $8. For reservations. call 523-1223.

AA STUDIOS presents the innovative paintings of Steven Monget for the month of May. Monget is a high school senior at Alma d'Arte Charter High School who has been creating art for about a year and a half. He has shown his work three different times before, and in April won three awards of excellence for his work at the 2015 All-City High School Senior Show held at the Las Cruces Museum of Fine Arts. Monget uses art as an outlet to expel his frustrations, emotions and worries he holds inside. In the future, he sees himself working towards a bachelor's in fine arts and eventually a master's in fine arts. He plans to travel the world and make art for as long as he physically can. "Steven shows a level of artistic maturity that I usually do not see until an artist is in their 30s," said gallery owner Roy van der Aa. "I am delighted to give him his first solo exhibit. He will go far." Monget's show opens the second weekend of the month in May and June. UNSETTLED GALLERY presents "Chance and Shadow" by J.D. Jarvis. The exhibit represents two separate bodies of digital art; that is, art made directly by hand using digital painting and imaging tools, more like traditional painting and printmaking. "Chance" explores random occurrences and the vagaries of chance. In creating this body of work, Jarvis used a ten-sided dice to select "bones" (seed images) and to set 10 options found in a Photoshop plugin named "Scatter." From there and while maintaining a detachment with the results, he employed painting and imaging tools to clarify and depict what the random composition suggested. The second body of work, "Shades Of Noir" explores the mysterious play of light and shadow. "Film noir" as in "Shades Of Noir" use light and shadow to manipulate our gut reactions to the telling of the a story. "Chance and Shadow" opens with an artist's reception from 4 to 6 p.m. Saturday, May 9, and will remain on display through June 6. Unsettled Gallery is located at 905 N. Mesquite St. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and by appointment. For more information, call 635-2285.

SITY ART GALLERY presents "In Between," featuring the work of the semester's graduating students from the Master of Fine Arts program in the NMSU Department of Art. This year's MFA graduates are Aubrey de Cheubell, Lea WiseSurguy-Sophiliazo and Kristopher Wilson. De Cheubell asks that we use all of our senses to explore remnants of past biographies, evoking within us emotions from memories that perhaps never existed. WiseSurguy-Sophiliazo invites visitors to leave their imprint in a petri dish on their journey through the gallery. She integrates the viewer into her "landscapes of life" by challenging the visitor to come back repeatedly to see how their touch is transformed into beautiful microscopic landscapes that evoke the cosmic landscapes of our universe. Wilson's paintings, although seemingly static visual objects, reward the patient viewer with phantom shapes and colors that move forward and recede in space, like musical notes that time weaves into a performance. "In Between" will remain on display through Saturday, May 9.

Through the garden gates

By Marissa Bond The Las Cruces Bulletin

For 20 years, the Las Cruces Tour of Gardens has unlatched the garden gates of local greenskeepers, making unsecret the magic of sweat, sun and soil. From 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday, May 2, residents and visitors again have the opportunity to visit some of the most beautiful and unique gardens in Las Cruces.

"I think it is one of the best things we do in Las Cruces," said tour coordinator Jackye Meinecke.

"It's a fun day for everybody. It doesn't cost a lot of money. The money that we raise goes toward garden beautification and garden education. It's a win-win on just about any direction you look."

While the garden selection committee doesn't go into the process with a specific theme in mind, Meinecke said they often end up with one. This year, a green concept grew organically.

"A lot of the gardens do things like recycling and reusing different materials, or recycling things in different ways," Meinecke said.

"At least three of them have water collection systems to collect rainwater. So we did end up with an interesting garden tour, although we just go out looking for pretty gardens."

Another gardener on the tour, Jeff Anderson, has a beautiful Mediterranean-style garden that features the glass mulch being created by the new glass recycling program at the South Central Solid Waste Authority, 2865 W. Amador Ave. He also has an extensive rainwater collection system he installed with the help of the Doña Ana County Extension Master Gardeners.

"It's an education space for that kind of thing," Meinecke said.

Not only do most of the gardens have a sustainability element, many of them have an artistic element.

Faith Hutson, one of the gardeners on the tour, said she has two criteria for her garden.

"One, it should be drought-tolerant and able to survive without a lot of water," Hutson said. "That's been my focus over the years."

"And two, it must include a lot of recycled art – things I've found or made."

Hutson's garden contains many found-object pieces, creating juxtaposition between the living growth and discarded objects – forgotten, rusty bits meant for decay and given new purpose among her plants.

"I think it is important in this world to look at things and see if it can have another purpose before it goes to a landfill. Can I reuse it, can it have another life?" Huston said.

Linda Gendall, an artist with a garden on the tour, has painted Native American rugs on the walls around her garden. Her home art studio will also be open for viewing on the day of the tour.

"I like creative gardens that reflect the personality

Tour of Gardens, Saturday, May 2. of the gardener," us Meinecke, who was on the an selection committee, said. lit

"So these are small, intimate gardens, and they reflect the personalities of the gardeners. There's no big outdoor kitchens, or fancy hot tubs and pools. It's not those kinds of gardens – they weren't designed by fancy landscape architects and installed and clipped within an inch of their lives," Meinecke said.

"These are very personal, intimate gardens that reflect the gardener. To me, that's what makes them special. I hope it will to other people as well."

All of the gardens are located in the Downtown area, within a convenient distance of one another.

"They are fairly close together," Meinecke said.

"You could actually go and see all the gardens in half a day, and then go out for lunch or afternoon coffee – or spend more time if you like."

Refreshments for tour-goers will be offered 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Amador Hotel, 180 W. Amador Ave.

"We're delighted to have an indoor place with available water where people can enjoy our cookies – we usually put out cookies and lemonade, so it's a nice little pleasant stop," Meinecke said.

The Amador Hotel will also be providing tours for visitors to see the work the Amador Hotel Foundation has accomplished during its ten years of restoration work. The brief tours will show all the rooms set up and one room currently under construction.

"The building is furnished with historic furniture, all of which has been donated," said Heather Pollard, president of the Amador Hotel Foundation. "We are restoring room by room, so there are plenty of opportunities for the public to see the restoration work.

"The Amador Hotel is one of the last historic properties need restoration in downtown Las Cruces," Pollard said.

This year, the tour also highlights the combined beauty of the Munson Center vegetable garden and the adjacent Emma B. Heske Community Garden.

The Munson Center community vegetable garden provides fresh vegetables to area seniors, and any additional vegetables are donated to the El Caldito Soup Kitchen or Meals on Wheels.

Right next to the vegetable garden is the Emma B. Heske Community Garden, a formal garden of flowers, trees, shrubs, benches and paths.

"Emma B. Heske was a woman who lived here and left more than $500,000 to the city to put in a garden where people could meet and talk and sit and just enjoy trees and flowers," Meinecke said.

The Emma B. Heske Community Garden is open to the public yearround, but its inclusion on the tour brings awareness to this hidden gem.

No matter what your plant-fancy, the Tour of Gardens has something for everyone.

"A lot of them have native plants, the one garden has a succulent collection," Meinecke said.

"So there are all different kinds of plants. If you are a plant person, there's a lot of fun stuff, if you are an art person, there's some fun stuff.

"If you are just looking for ideas for what you can do in your garden, you're bound to find some inspiration somewhere on the tour, somebody who solved the problem you've been fussing on for a while. It always happens – I love that part. "

The Las Cruces Tour of Gardens will be from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday, May 2. Tickets are $7 per person; children 12 and under are free. For more information, visit www. ltog.org or call 521-0521.

Enjoy Cinco de Mayo with your own feast

Whacking colorful piñatas filled with goodies is just one of the many traditional activities children and adults enjoy during Cinco de Mayo festivities on the Plaza in Old Mesilla. This year the celebration, which observes the victory of Mexican forces against the French in 1862, will be a two-day event on Saturday and Sunday, May 2-3. Parades, mariachi music, folkloric dancing, fireworks and scrumptious feasts are part of the celebration. Or you can throw your own Cinco de Mayo fiesta. Serve guests traditional hot-andspicy dishes or give my recipes a try. Viva Mesilla!

Health Well Being NMSU honors the legacy of nurses

By Marissa Bond The Las Cruces Bulletin

This year, May 6-12 comprises National Nursing Week, but New Mexico State University has found a way to stretch the stories and appreciation of nursing work into a permanent installment through the Smith Family Nursing Legacy Wall.

Carved into a birch tree's measure of years, the messages vary but the theme is constant. All of the plaques represent nurses and the contributions they have made to their profession and community.

"In memory of an amazing human being whose healing forever touched many lives and will continue to do so through the work of her students," reads one.

"The patient always comes first," announces another in all capital letters.

Pictures — some new, some smiles softened through the sepia glow of time — are embedded in many of the plaques. Families are present as a list of names and faces sharing a circle, or as two or more connected plaques.

The Smith Family Nursing Legacy Wall is borne out of another initiative — the Nursing History of Excellence wall.

"We sought to create this 3-D interactive wall where it preserves the history of the school of nursing," said Jennifer Cervantes, assistant dean for advancement in NMSU's College of Health and Social Services.

"As we were finishing up that project, we thought it felt so limited in so many ways and we had a really hard time trying to decide who to include on that wall — so many nurses made such incredible contributions to our community."

The program decided to carry the theme into the new initiative, which would allow the college to recognize the work and lives of nurses past and present.

"It is a way to honor nurses, their contributions and their stories," Cervantes said. "It really helped expand our storytelling efforts."

History is what drew the artist, NMSU art professor Gatis Cirulis, to the project. His family stories have given him an appreciation for nursing and history — one of his great-aunts was a high-ranking surgeon nurse in Latvia during World War II.

"(The project) seemed on some level close to home and some level distant," Cirulis said.

"I'm just trying to reflect upon what I receive and give the full respect as much as possible."

The round birchwood plaques can be purchased for $500 with an engraving, or for $1,000 with an engraving and photo.

The legacy of the nurses honored helps benefit the nurses of the future.

"All the proceeds go into a student travel fund which will allow our undergraduate nursing students to attend professional development conferences," Cervantes said.

"They often don't get that opportunity to participate in that kind of networking. So it's really a win-win."

The first part of the initiative kicked off with the Nightingale Circle, which acknowledges the support of 20 individuals from the community and from NMSU, including President Carruthers, whose mother and daughter are nurses.

"And they were really the first part of the wall and now ... we're moving into the second phase of the wall, opening it up to the public for those who want to honor a nurse or nurses," Cervantes said.

While the plaques may honor nurses who have passed on, the wall is not only a memorial. Neither do the nurses honored on the wall have to be NMSU alums.

"We really just want to highlight and honor the legacy of nurses everywhere," Cervantes said.

The Nursing Legacy Wall is on the first floor of the College of Health and Social Services building, just around the corner from the Nursing History of Excellence Wall in the lobby.

"We have limited space, and once the plaques are sold, that's it," Cervantes said. "There's really no more wall space in the college."

Cervantes said she expects the wall to fill up within the next eight months to a year, with an estimate of 100 plaques total.

Help for recovering from the unexpected

By Penney McClarin For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Sitting at my desk, engrossed in the day's tasks, my office phone rang. It was my daughter-in-law — my son had been in a motorcycle accident.

Feelings of panic immediately encompassed my entire being. As I raced to the hospital, fear of the unknown quickly took over my body, leading me into emotional turmoil. My son's injuries were quite severe, yet not life threatening. They required a two-week hospital stay, with rehabilitation to follow.

Unfortunately, the rehabilitation facility we'd planned on taking him to was full. As a family, we made the decision to take him home, transporting him back and forth daily to therapy appointments. This was a very taxing experience as our whole family worked. We pulled together as a team, yet the logistics of this situation was extremely stressful. I share this story because we, like so many other members of the Las Cruces Community, were not aware that the Good Samaritan Society Las Cruces Village has an excellent rehabilitation unit. Services available include physical, occupational and speech therapy using state-of-the-art equipment. Also available are inpatient and outpatient services as well as homecare services. Additionally, the Las Cruces Village has a full time chaplain, an asset our family desperately needed during that stressful time.

I hope you are never faced with this experience. However, if you are, please keep in mind the wonderful staff and excellent facilities of the rehabilitation unit of Good Samaritan – Las Cruces Village.

Penney McClarin is the director of resource development and marketing for Good Samaritan — Las Cruces Village.

Once the wall is complete and all the plaques have been sold, Cervantes said they plan to put together an extensive brochure detailing the nurses on the wall.

Each person on the wall will have one page in the brochure, elaborating the rich life stories or the contributions that the plaques can only hint at.

"I think what's really interesting about it is we've noticed a lot of students stopping and reading the plaques and looking at the photos," Cervantes said.

"It's just really touching. I've had a couple of people who, when they see the plaque of the honored nurse, they've cried. It can be very emotional."
