Giving some relief to drought conditions over the past couple of weeks has been the return of a close to normal monsoon rainy season. The Las Cruces Bulletin asked readers to send their weather photos and here are three, starting with Mary Zawacki's capturing the storm clouds gathering behind the Organ Mountains, Virginia Maria Romero capturing the storm's lightning and downpour and Gary Duttle recording the resulting flash-flooding in drainage arroyos. Campaigning picks up as general election looms Voting concerns could snag two races

By Todd G. Dickson

as Cruces Bulletin

Editor's note: In the time leading up to the general election, the Las Cruces Bulletin will run a series of stories looking at the different races. This first story gives an overview of the contested races, but doesn't include the uncontested races.

With the Nov. 4 general elections three months away, campaigning is gearing up into full swing as the primaries narrowed down candidates, except possibly in two races in which close vote counts are being challenged.

State Rep. Mary Helen Garcia, who lost her District 34 seat in the primary by 16 votes to Bealquin "Bill" Gomez, will get to make her case in court Thursday, Aug. 15, that there was an unusually high number of absentee ballots cast in Sunland Park. She also is questioning the validity of many of those ballots.

What Garcia saw has reportedly given Public Regulation Commission (PRC) candidate Merrie Lee Soules reason to contest absentee ballots from Sunland Park, which could change her primary loss to Sandy Jones of Sierra County by 128 votes.

The difference between the two races is that the House District 34 didn't have a Republican challenger. In the PRC District 5 race, however, incumbent Ben Hall is running for re-election.

Chavez Kelley retires after more than 25 years at NMSU Administrator reflects on advancements

By Todd G. Dickson

After taking on a lead role in the most contentious and challenging issues that have faced New Mexico State University for more than a quarter century, Christina Chavez Kelley retired from NMSU Friday, Aug. 1.

A native of Las Cruces, Chavez Kelley said her parents' intense belief in education providing a path to a better life brought her from Alameda Elementary School to Washington, D.C., and Santa Fe, but she was called home to serve NMSU, putting her at times in the center of controversies to correct student athletic lapses, shore up equal employment opportunities and nurture a climate of tolerance for marginalized students.

"We've come a long way, but we still have a long way to go," she said.

Chavez Kelley first arrived at NMSU as a student in 1971, but even then she was no ordinary student and the tumult of the times sparked an activism streak in her that never really left, she said. She was more than a local girl as her father's work with U.S. Agency for International Development took her to live for periods in Caracas, Mexico, and Rio De Janeiro - making Brazil's loss in this summer's World Cup upsetting to her.

A2 | News Las Cruces Bulletin Friday, August 8, 2014 Schools praise community donations

Thousands of donated backpacks filled

As the first day of school approaches, school district social workers are busily organizing the thousands of school supplies that have been donated over the past couple of weeks. Yoli Silva, Las Cruces Public Schools (LCPS) lead social worker, said hundreds of low-income children will be able to start the year on an equal footing with their peers.

"The generosity has been amazing," Silva said. "I can already see the smiles on our students' faces when they get their supplies."

The most recent donations were made Wednesday, Aug. 6, when the Rodrunners Car Club brought their classic vehicles to the LCPS administration building and dropped off 40 backpacks full of pencils, paper, crayons, glue and many other standard school items.

On Tuesday, Aug. 5, in front of the LCPS Administration Building, the SVT Mustang Elite Car Club donated 100 backpacks and supplies for students at Central and Fairacres elementary schools. Principals Eloisa Solis and Kathy Norris, respectively, were on hand.

Also on Tuesday, the Sun Country de Las Cruces Kiwanis Club brought boxes stuffed with items valued at more than $400. Traditionally, the club has provided pencils to LCPS students. This year's donations also included paper, pencil boxes, folders, glue sticks, erasers

On Monday, Aug. 4, the employees of Memorial Medical Center (MMC) donated 408 colorful backpacks filled with supplies. It's the 10th year the hospital staff has conducted the school supplies drive, bringing the total num-ber of donated backpacks to 3,100, said district officials. Among the staff who worked to get all the items loaded into trucks were MMC CEO John Harris and LCPS Associate Superintendent Dane Kennon.

"There are so many examples of individuals, businesses and clubs that have stepped up by giving supplies so that students are ready for the first day," said Brigitte Zigelhofer, LCPS community outreach liaison.

Also on July 30, multiple businesses including Walmart, Pepsi and Frito-Lay gave every Doña Ana Elementary student a backpack, supplies, food and treats during a back-toschool bash. Zigelhofer said the event gave teachers and staff a chance to meet every family in a fun setting that set a positive tone for the entire year.

Getting the supplies loaded onto trucks Monday, Aug. 4, at left, were Memorial Medical Center (MMC) Cancer Program Director Lynn Arnold, Las Cruces Public Schools (LCPS) Title 1 Coordinator Jesus Herrera, MMC Employee Health Nurse Crystal Davis-Whited and LCPS Associate Superintendent Dane Kennon. GARYMARKSTEIN

From the publisher The Other Border Concern...

BY RICHARD COLTHARP

Tourism campaign rings true Keep on discovering your New Mexico

We New Mexicans are a little defensive about anything from the state of Texas. A couple of years ago the New Mexico Department of Tourism farmed out the creative for a new ad campaign to an agency from Austin, Texas, called Vendor Inc. I, and every ad agency in the Land of Enchantment, released audible groans.

We have tons of creativity in New Mexico. Lots and lots of brilliant marketing minds who actually know the difference between chile and chili. People who understand why this is the Land of Enchantment.

Now, more than two years into the New Mexico True advertising campaign, I have to begrudgingly admit it's a damn good one. That's based both on my 30 years in advertising and marketing and my status as a New Mexican.

Even though I've only lived in the state for 19 years, I consider myself a true New Mexican. Here's my confirmation story.

A few years back, traveling on Interstate 25, I was saddled with hunger and strapped for time. The most practical thing seemed to be to pop off the Interstate at Truth or Consequences, reluctantly stop into McDonald's, then head on down the highway.

A menu banner said, "Add green chile to any sandwich for 50 cents." I ordered some kind of burger with no ketchup, no mayonnaise, add mustard and green chile.

Repeating my order in the chaotic restaurant, the clerk rattled off a bunch of stuff I didn't quite hear.

"I didn't really hear everything you just said," I told him. "But the important part is don't forget the green chile."

That's when the young clerk ordained me.

He said, "Spoken like a true New Mexican."

2012 "General Excellence" Award

The New Mexico True campaign has struck a brilliant chord. Not hokey or pointlessly humorous, it illustrates the uniqueness and the majestic beauty of our state, and the many different experiences available here.

David Wilson of Wilson Binkley Advertising and Marketing here in Las Cruces agrees the campaign is solid. He also likes the way it integrates well with different marketing opportunities. For example, some Mesilla Valley Transportation trucks have New Mexico True billboards on their trailers.

'I think it's well done," Wilson said. "And it enforces New Mexico's diversity."

Diversity, whether you're talking people, terrain or experiences, is indeed one of the most authentic things about our state.

Here are three New Mexico scenes I've enjoyed just in the past month with my 11-year-old daughter, my great traveling companion.

- In Las Vegas, N.M., on a stormy night, sitting in the back of my open SUV, watching a drive-in movie - yes! A drive-in movie! I think there's also one in Carlsbad. Behind the screen was another show, some of those great New Mexican clouds, highlighted by thunder and lightning as the evening sun descended.
- In Albuquerque, on a perfect night, sitting in the grass beyond the outfield at Isotopes Park, stretched out barefoot on a blanket, enjoying a beverage and watching some great professional baseball. More great New Mexico clouds illustrating a beautiful sunset over the grandstand along the third base line.
- At nearby White Sands National Monument, on a semi-cloudy night, watching the full moon rise over the Sacramento Mountains. Lady Luna popping out of the clouds so big and bright you could actually read a book by it. You think it couldn't get any better? Add the great New Mexican sounds of Mariachi Fuego del Sol. If heaven's anything like that, you won't get any complaints from me.

Those are three wonderfully relaxing experiences, three wonderfully simple experiences, three wonderfully true New Mexican experiences.

Get out and go find your own enchanting experiences. Then spread the gospel of New Mexico True.

The other encounter that same month was from a woman who knew Obama was a socialist. On the national scene, we have been subjected to a search for Obama's birth certificate, in spite of his releasing a Hawaii birth certificate. In my opinion, much of the outright lies and even threats have their basis in the fact that our president's father was born in Kenya, Africa, and gave his son an African name.

My letter today will not change Mr. Sellinger's beliefs. Those who have beliefs like his do not respond to facts. No one is perfect and no president of either party has been perfect.

tion - Obama has been terribly bad for jobs, for taxes, for oil prices, food, utilities, immi-gration and on and on. Where are the facts? Does Mr. Sellinger read actual news sources or does he depend on those crazy emails that list Obama's "czars" and that are all about fabricated "scandals."

I noticed that Mr. Sellinger uses a Bill O'Reilly trick of asking off-the-wall questions about Óbama, thus planting erroneous ideas in the minds of the public, ideas that have no foundation whatsoever.

Friday, August 8, 2014 Las Cruces Bulletin Opinions | A5 Time, the great destroyer of students

Mañana attitude can be the road to academic ruin

Last week I wrote about standing in line at college. So this week I pondered the lessons from my time in college. During my career at college I came to understand that time is the great destroyer of college students. Understand, it is not having too much time or, as most think, too little time doing the damage.

Rather, it is the act of saying, "I don't have to do this assignment now, I have plenty of time." When we say that to ourselves, one part of our brain thinks, "Wait a second, you just don't feel like doing it now."

While we mull this over, the north and south parts of our brain go through some rationalizations: "If I don't spend the evening studying, I'll flunk the test."

Letter to the editor

Win, win or ... something?

One hundred years ago, Henry Ford more than doubled the wage for the workers who were building his automobiles. He raised it from $2.37 per day to $5. Although the competition didn't like it, they were forced to do the same. What followed was good for everybody. Ford got a more productive and reliable work force, which produced a better car, and the workers could now afford to buy the product they built, as well as many other things not even related to the auto industry. Thus the economy grew and everybody benefitted.

Fast forward to 2008, President Barack Obama says spread it around. Joe The Plumber tells Obama that sounds like socialism. Obama later wins the election and gets his way. So why then has the economy been treading water for the last six years? I mean Obama, and Mr. Ford both spread it around, did they not? Yes, they did.

This however is where human nature comes into play. People don't like being forced by the government or anybody else to spend their hard-earned resources in ways not of their own choosing. And when forced to do so, will resist in many ways, with the results being less than positive for everyone.

On the one side, wise old Henry spread it around of his own volition, knowing he was making an investment in the long-term future of Ford Motor Co. Henry invested his money wisely, and as they say "the rest is history."

Obama invested, too, however the trillions he invested were not his. He stole the money from us, the American people, and invested it in, why, I can't remember, what did he invest it in anyway?

One hundred years ago was a win, win. What we have today is ... ? Oh, I'm sorry, just had a brain freeze, so I'll close now, and leave it up to you folks reading this to decide.

Before I go, there is one more observation I would like to make. Never has there been such a huge income gap between the 0.5 percent and the rest of us, as today. A look at history will show this turns out badly if not addressed. Dennis Stone

This is countered by "No, you won't, you really want to go out tonight." Hmmm, "I want to go out tonight, but I don't want to flunk the test."

That lazy brain says, "You can study when you get back, there's plenty of time." Well, "After the party I won't feel like studying." College logic, "You don't feel like studying now!" But, "But I don't want to flunk."

One voice gets the upper hand, "You won't flunk. Besides right now everyone else in the class is out partying, you will do at least as good as them and since the course is graded on the curve you will get a C and heck, a C is OK."

"Well, maybe you are right; I'll go for a little time."

Time passes.

It is now 2 a.m. and you sit at your desk. You have recreated until closing time. The words in the book swim before your eyes when north and south speak again: "I have to read the material." Yawn, "You don't want to read the book. You want to go to bed so you will be fresh for the test in just six hours. Go to bed now and get up an hour early, you'll still have plenty of time?

As you drag into class at 8:32 a.m., a friend asks if you studied. You say, "A little."

What you don't say to your classmate is that you woke up at 8:23 a.m., which didn't leave much time to do all of the studying you had been avoiding.

You begin writing. As you scan the test questions you recognize a word here and there, but you wonder if you sat down in the wrong classroom.

While grading your paper the professor notices your fine work such as, "Christopher Columbus discovered America with his ships the Nina, the Ford Pinto and the Santa Fe."

Your professor is not amused and rewards your work with the grade of an F minus, minus, minus. When you get your paper back you say to yourself, "Well, I still have other tests. I can pull my grade up to a C if I get an A on a couple of them.

I'll start studying tonight." There's that voice, "But I thought you were going to go out tonight. ... I don't want to flunk the course?

You won't, you have plenty of time to study ... Yeah, you're right, I have plenty of time to study, but I'm going to start studying tomorrow so I can ace the other tests."

In the Southwest we have a term for this kind of thinking: Mañana. While the dictionary reports "mañana" means "tomorrow," in colloquial usage the word means, "not today."

"When are you going to start on that report?"

Mañana. It is not a promise to do the action tomorrow; it is only the statement that the action is not going to be done today. The semester is like a parachute jump. It seems you have a long time and then the ground comes rushing up.

If you make a mistake in the amount of time it will take to do all of the things you have to do this semester, your only hope is that some soft-hearted professors may cancel some assignments due to whimpering of students who thought they had plenty of time.

I wouldn't count on professors being soft-hearted.

Well, all I did was rope that sorry, no good, fightin' bull with the crooked horn and tie him to a post in the corral, then throw another rope on him and tied it to the other side, then pulled him tight 'cause I was by myself, you know.

I had him out there in the middle of the corral, sort of stabilized to where I thought I could sneak up and lance that abscess. He was fightin' it of course, but I figgered I could at least take a stab at it, but I must have had too much slack in the line, or I underestimated how strong he was, 'cause when I got within a body length, he charged! I don't know if I underestimated my body length or what, but he came at me like a freight train. I jumped, and somehow got him by the tail. He kept tryin' to hook me and pullin' on those posts till they were leanin' in. It gave him enough slack to come clear around, I'm still hanging on to his tail, but now both posts had been jerked plum outta the ground.

I was lucky, though. I just missed the windmill toolbox. I could'a been hurt.

It gets worse. Now I have to do a C-section before I can even think about replacing the prolapse. Thirty minutes later we've taken the calf. The cow sags in the chute, I'm down in behind her to put this prolapse back in. I'm on my hands and knees trying to push it, the prolapse, I mean, up hill and it won't go. So, I decide we'll let her out and do it on the ground.

I open the back gate ... accidentally, she backs up one cow length and goes down. We end up actually unchaining the squeeze chute, pulling it out of the way with a tractor, then using 1-inch cotton rope we drag the cow out. I'm crawling over her to get my rope back. I have one boot in the open loop of the bowline knot trying to push it when she rises like a Titan missile.

I'm jerked under her and she drags me across the pen, I'm right between her hind legs, my head banging up and down and flopping back and forth from starboard to port. It could'a been worse, I guess, if I hadn't come loose when she jumped the cattle guard. Billy slammed on the brakes to avoid

LCPS students return to classes Aug. 11 and 12

Students attending Las Cruces Public Schools will be returning to classes Monday, Aug. 11, for grades first through 12.

Kindergarten students start classes Tuesday, Aug. 12. An estimated 24,700 students are expected to attend the district's 41 schools this fall semester.

With the start of school, Las Cruces Police are reminding motorists to drive with caution particularly when traveling through school zones and near bus stops.

Basic back-to-school safety tips for motorists include:

- Obey all traffic laws and speed limits, especially the 15 mph limit in school zones.
- Stop for school buses that are loading or unloading children.
- Watch for and obey signals from school crossing guards.
- Be alert and watch for children near schools, bus stops and in school parking lots.
- Do not pass other vehicles in school zones or at crosswalks.
- Do not change lanes in school zones.
- Do not make U-turns in school zones. Do not text or otherwise use a cell phone
- unless it is completely hands-free.
- Unless licensed to do so, do not park in handicap spaces to drop off or pick up children.
- Do not use curbside lanes (in front of school buildings) that are designated for emergencv vehicles only. Safety tips for students include:
- Parents of younger students who ride a school bus should consider escorting their children to and from their scheduled bus stop.

- Children should not stand or play in the roadway while waiting for, or leaving, a school bus.
- Students who ride the bus should follow all safety rules and avoid distracting the driver.
- Students who walk should do so in pairs, or groups, and follow safety rules for pedestrians.
- Cross streets only at crosswalks and follow the directions given by school crossing guards.
- Students who ride a bike should wear a helmet and follow all safety rules for bicyclists. Walk - don't ride - a bicycle across streets
- and only in designated crosswalks.
- Students who drive to school should avoid speeding and minimize distractions from cell phone usage, eating, loud music or disruptive passengers.
- Never overload a vehicle. Every passenger must use a safety belt.
- Always act as a positive role model for younger siblings and fellow students. Avoid horseplay on sidewalks, while riding a bus or bicycle and while traveling in a vehicle.

Senators balk at plan to cut post office hours

U.S. Sens. Tom Udall and Martin Heinrich sent a letter Wednesday, Aug. 6, to U.S. Postal Service (USPS) Postmaster General Patrick Donahoe to express their concerns about the service's multi-year Post Plan to reduce costs and streamline operations, which may impact more than 140 post offices in New Mexico.

USPS announced the Post Plan in 2012 in response to financial challenges, including declining revenues and mail volume. The Post Plan cuts operating costs for smaller post offices by reducing hours, delivering mail via rural carriers or highway contract routes, creating village post offices by contracting with local establishments or consolidating post offices.

While the Postal Service has reconsidered an initial proposal to close more than 50 New Mexico post offices, residents of many rural communities across the state, where post offices are already sparsely located, have expressed concerns about reducing service hours, the senators wrote.

"We were pleased to learn that The United States Post Office (USPS) reconsidered its initial plan to close over 50 post offices in New Mexico in 2011 and announced the Post Plan as an alternative," the senators wrote. "However, we have heard from many constituents who are anxious about reduced service hours in their communities. Reductions in hours or consolidation into another nearby office can be especially hard hitting in rural areas, where customers often have to drive for miles to reach their closest post office."

Udall and Heinrich said they have received complaints from constituents about the accessibility of community meetings held to get local feedback on the plan. The senators urged USPS to heavily weigh input received at the local meetings in its decision-making process, and to ensure the meetings are transparent, accessible and scheduled at convenient times.

Finally, the senators outlined their concerns about the postmasters who did not elect early retirement and may be seriously impacted by any reduction in hours or benefits.

Suspects still sought for armed robbery of Chilitos Customers also threatened at restaurant

Las Cruces Crime Stoppers is offering a $1,000 reward for information that helps identify two armed suspects who threatened customers of a popular restaurant and held up the business last November.

Shortly after 9 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 2, 2013, Las Cruces Police were dispatched to the report of an armed robbery at Chilitos restaurant at 2405 S. Valley Drive.

This surveillance photo shows one of two suspects in the Nov. 2, 2013, armed robbery of the Chilitos restaurant at 2405 S. Valley Drive.

Witnesses told detectives that two men, both armed with handguns, entered the restaurant shortly after 9 p.m. One of the suspects stayed near the front doorway and ordered around 10 customers to keep their heads down place their hands on top of the tables. The other suspect confronted employees of the restaurant and demanded they hand over cash from the register.

The two suspects then fled the restaurant heading southbound.

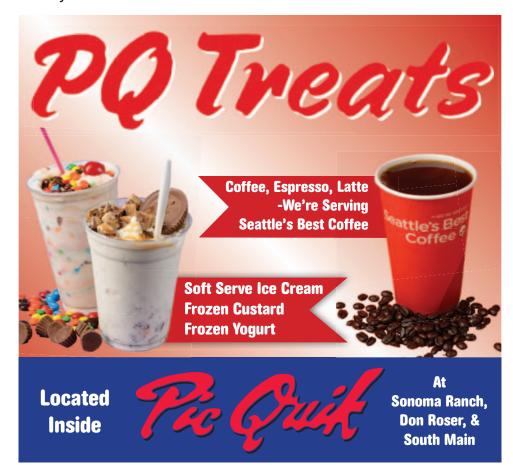

Both suspects were described as either white or Hispanic men with thin builds. One of the suspects was said to be approximately 5-feet-6-inches tall and the other, photographed by a surveillance camera in the store, is believed to be approximately 5-feet-11-inches tall.

Both men were dressed in black hoodies and ski masks.

Anyone with information that can help identify the two suspects who committed this armed robbery is asked to contact Las Cruces Crime Stoppers at 800-222-TIPS (8477) or send a tip via text message to CRIMES (274637), keyword LCTIPS.

House races

In other House races, District 37 is a rematch of Republican incumbent Terry McMillan being challenged by Democrat Joanne Ferrary, who lost to McMillan by only eight votes two years ago.

Attempting to win back House District 53, Republican Ricky Little will have to overcome the grassroots support behind Mariaelena Johnson, who was active in Comunidades en Acción y de Fé (CAFé), an organization whose voter turnout efforts resulted in his loss to Democrat Nate Cote. Johnson was picked by Cote to succeed him after Cote decided to retire from the Legislature.

The House District 36 race should be lively with Andy Nuñez – who formerly held the seat as both a Democrat and an independent – now running as a Republican to challenge current incumbent Phillip Archuleta. Health problems kept Archuleta from attending the last session, creating challenges in passing the state budget in the House that has a narrow Democrat majority.

Some races, which haven't received much attention because there was no primary opposition, will now be trying to get the attention of voters. For example, redistricting resulted in longtime Rep. Rodolpho "Rudy" Martinez of Silver City picking up a portion of Doña Ana County in the new District 39. But the Republican challenger remains John Zimmerman of Las Cruces.

Redistricting also brought Jeff Steinborn back to the Legislature, this time representing District 35, long held by Democrat Antonio Lujan. Steinborn will be challenged by Republican Betty Bishop.

Bill McCamley is the first-term Democratic incumbent for District 33, formerly held by Joni Gutierrez and J. Paul Taylor before her, and he is being challenged by Republican Neal Hooks.

Even though her parents had emphasized the mastery of English, Chavez Kelley said living in other countries gave her an appreciation for other languages and cultures.

At NMSU, Chavez Kelley said she quickly became drawn to campus politics, serving as student senator and eventually the first female ex-officio student regent. Chavez Kelley credits the late NMSU President Gerald Thomas for recruiting her to at least begin her higher education career at NMSU, even though she knew she was going to eventually go on to law school. Her heroes were Cesar Chavez, Martin Luther King Jr. and John F. Kennedy.

Interestingly enough, while the rest of the nation had campus unrest over the Vietnam War, the only real rioting she was witness to at NMSU during that time was for co-ed visitation in the dorms, which were unrealistically very limiting in how much fraternization between the sexes was allowed, she said.

After graduating in 1975 with a bachelor's degree in government, she went to Washington, D.C., to attend the Columbus School of Law, where she earned her law degree in 1978.

Her next stop was Santa Fe, where for a year she clerked for Dan Sosa Jr., who was then the chief justice of the New Mexico Supreme Court. She practiced law in Santa Fe for four years before joining Gov. Toney Anaya's cabinet to head the Regulation and Licensing Department.

In 1989, Chavez Kelley was recruited by President James Halligan to serve as his legal assistant, during which she oversaw the university's real estate dealings, police and parking department and, in what would turn out to be her most challenging duty, athletics, because she helped uncover academic fraud in the department. Her early actions to correct the situation in athletics, she said, helped NMSU avoid suffering severe sanctioning by the National Collegiate Athletic Association, laying the groundwork for the current focus of ensuring players are living up to the name of "student athletes."

Chavez Kelley said she endured the ire of fans that even escalated to the level of her house being egged and her car tires slashed.

After leading the effort to raise $150,000 for the university's centennial celebration, Chavez Kelley was also given a strong role in helping raise money for NMSU, something she said is still a favorite part of the work she did for NMSU.

She would continue performing these roles under presidents Bill Conroy and Mike Orenduff. Under President Jay Gogue, her role changed more to handling relations with the regents, community and government entities, as well as minority recruitment – roles she also held under interim President Bill Flores.

When Mike Martin became president in 2005, Chavez Kelley took more of a lead role in overseeing the Office of Institutional Equity, which pushed for a greater diversity of gender and ethnicity in faculty and staff. Her efforts in these areas didn't always make her popular, she admits, and she felt the hatred from some who objected to her creation of a Sexual and Gender Diversity Resource Center (SGDRC) that would support and advocate for students who are gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender and queer (GLBTQ) and their allies.

In recognition of her leadership on their behalf, the students of the SGDRC established the Christina Chavez Kelley Award, which is presented every year at the Lavender Graduation Ceremony to a strong supporter of GLBTQ efforts.

Chavez Kelley partnered with Chicano Programs in the development of the Danny Villanueva Scholarship Breakfast. In great part because of her connections in the community and her fundraising abilities, the Danny Villanueva Scholarship achieved the goal of establishing a half-million-dollar endowment for scholarships for student leaders at NMSU.

Chavez Kelley also worked with Justin McHorse, director of the American Indian Program, to facilitate the opening of the American Indian Student Center and the acquisition of furniture for the new building. Chavez Kelley and Black Programs Director Festus Addo-Yobo sponsored a ceremony honoring former Black Programs Director Andrew Wall. At the ceremony, a campus street was renamed "Andrew Wall Place." Chavez Kelley said she is leaving NMSU better than she found it, but it still needs to make better progress in attracting – and providing tenure for – faculty of color and women. However, Chavez Kelley said she has faith that Provost Dan Chavez Kelley said her retirement will give her the opportunity now to do things she didn't have enough time to do before, such as writing. Not only does she have a couple of biographical projects in mind, she said she has few novels in her as well.

When it came to football mouthpieces, my mother was a genius.

When I played at Ligonier Valley High School back in the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in the 1980s, my mom would soak my mouthpiece in peach schnapps overnight.

Not only did the alcohol kill germs – at least we told ourselves that – but the dang thing had a great taste the next day at practice.

While I do not recommend this practice – I don't want anyone to get in trouble – the memory makes me smile.

I grew up in Appalachia and was always very proud when I and some of my cousins would catch a ride down into town and show up from Chestnut Ridge – or just "The Ridge," for most folks – in the back of a beat-up pickup truck that my uncle bought for maybe 75 bucks and fixed himself.

The town kids would smile and say, "the ridge runners are here."

We had fun, but I always dreaded fall camp.

We had two weeks of two-a-day practices before the start of school. They were tough, of course, and they ruined the end of my summer because, even weeks before they started, I would obsess over the fact that they loomed.

Still, as a young man, football was something akin to a religion for me, and wild horses could not have kept me away. I learned that prayer, curse words and analgesic heat rub could get you through.

Now, this time of year, I have a different routine.

Some mornings, while sunrise is still in the future, the coffee pot is bubbling and I'm switching channels back and forth between Headline News and ESPN2, high school football re-enters my life.

The time is 5:30 a.m., I've been up for 10 minutes or so and practice looms.

Soon I'll have to go in and wake my 16-year-old son and listen to him groan like an old man as he sits up in bed and slowly stands with eyes half-lidded. Luckily he goes by the "clothes-pile system" – I taught him well – so that his black-and-silver workout clothes are always nearby, which saves him 30 seconds of rooting through a drawer.

Las Crucen Kim Carlsen kneels next to her Look bicycle. She will ride the bike in the Ironman World Championship triathlon in Hawaii in October.

Crucen trains for Ironman Triathlete swims, bikes, runs as October event approaches

By Brook Stockberger Las Cruces Bulletin

The butterflies are always there with a vengeance before a race. Yet when Las Cruces triathlete Kim Carlsen parks her Look KG 486 bike at the first transition station and heads back to the starting line, she likes to crank some rock and roll to psych herself up.

"Foo Fighters, that's my go-to music," Carlsen said. "That's what I turn on really loud right before a race as we're driving to the site."

A New Mexico State University graduate and former elementary school teacher, Carlsen, 54, has worked as a massage therapist for more than two decades.

She has been an athlete, though, for just the past eight years.

"I didn't realize I was so competitive until I started doing these," she said. "They lit that little fire in me."

That little fire will take her all the way to Hawaii in October for the Ironman World Championship. The event is scheduled for Oct. 11. Carlsen will compete with about 1,900 athletes from around the world.

The Ironman triathlon events consist of a 2.4-mile swim, a 112-mile bicycle race capped off by a marathon – 26.2 miles.

'I was hooked'

Carlsen, an Albuquerque native who has been in Las Cruces since 1977, said there was nothing in her past would have pointed toward this path.

"I always enjoyed running, but I never ran on a team and was never athletic or competitive at all," she said.

The change came in 2006 when she decided to run a marathon to help Team In Training – a group that raises money for The Leukemia & Lymphoma Society.

"While I was training I got a stress fracture in my foot," Carlsen said. "After being home for several months, driving my husband crazy, he said 'Why don't you go swim?' So I started swimming. (Then) a friend of mine gave me a bike. I really developed a love for it."

So she thought she would try a triathlon.

"I did an Olympic distance race in 2006 and have been competing since then," she said. "I loved it. I was hooked."

Training

Carlsen started with shorter races before she moved up to half Ironman races. In 2010 she ran her first full Ironman in Phoenix. When she returned last year, she won her age division and qualified for this year's world championship.

With about two months to go, she is building up to the Ironman distances. She has a trainer who develops her program.

"Depending on where we are in the season, I might do a lot of biking and very little running, then vice-versa," she said. "As I'm getting closer to the race, I'm doing lots of long miles. My long run is about 15 miles right now and my long bike is like 70."

Carlsen said she usually swims and bikes four days a week and runs five days a week.

"I do something every day," she said. "I usually take one day off every 10 to 14 days."

Transitions

The races have transition stations where athletes can switch from swimming to biking and then again to running. So the bike needs to be parked before the race, a change of shoes, a helmet, water and whatever else is needed must be ready to go.

Plus you better be able to find your bike. "When I did the Ironman in Phoenix, there

Twenty minutes later, with coffee in hand, I'm driving him up the road – although he can drive himself and will do so frequently - as we crank some hard rock music to try and get him pumped up, or at least conscious.

Ah, the American tradition of high school football.

Sweat stings your eyes and grass is matted in your mouthpiece. Water breaks are heaven - heck you can even take a knee, sometimes, while you rehydrate.

Rain can cool things down, but if it stops and the sun reappears, steamy, oppressive humidity becomes your enemy. On Monday, Aug. 4, the local high schools started fall practice. The Las Cruces High football program hopes to defend its state title and Mayfield High hopes to build on its near miss. Oñate, meanwhile, has new and not-so-new faces on its sideline, Centennial, in just its third season as a program, plans to build on its 9-3 record a year ago.

The Las Cruces Bulldawgs begin their title defense on Thursday, Aug 28 – the same night as the New Mexico State University home opener - at home against Montwood High from El Paso.

The Mayfield Trojans, who fell just short in the state title game against rival Las Cruces, opens up against Hobbs at home on Friday, Aug. 29 while Oñate, with new head coach Brent Jaquess at the helm and former head coach Kelly McKee on the staff, plays at Centennial on the same day. Mesilla Valley Christian opens on Aug. 29 too, at Anthony, Texas.

My son is always sore, but he takes vitamins and works out extra on his own. I'm very proud of him and cannot wait to watch him play again this fall.

If you are the parent, supporter or fan of any local team, don't hesitate to email me this fall with suggestions, story ideas etc. I cannot guarantee all ideas will be used, but communication will be key. Coaches are free to send in results and statistics and suggest players for profile stories.

were 2,700 people in that race and just a sea of bikes," Carlsen said. "At bigger races they have people find your bike for you."

The final transition comes 112 miles later when the time comes to get off the bike and hit the ground running for the final event, the marathon.

'There's actually a fine art to transitions," Carlsen said. "You have to have a system and keep it very simple and calm."

Carlsen has done it enough times that she will even give a talk just about transitions at a shoe store in El Paso later this month.

Nutrition

The stories about carbohydrate loading are true. Carlsen said she does not put away an entire bowl of spaghetti the night before a race, although pasta has its purpose.

"I carb load a few days before the race and the day before," she said.

She eats pretzels, breads, pasta and rice. Her favorite snack the morning of a race is a bagel with peanut butter.

"The day of the race I carb load in the morning then add some protein throughout the day," she said.

When she is training she said she eats a lot of chicken and fish. "Chicken and rice is a good go-to meal," she said. "I do like a good steak too."

When she's up on the bike, though, her options are limited and she usually puts away 10 to 12 packets of energy gel, which she said are made up of carbs and sugar. "They're not too good," she said.

Competition

Carlsen admits she does not start right up at the water's edge to begin a race.

'Everybody starts at once," she said.

"The stronger swimmers will be up at the front and swimmers like me, who are not so confident, will be a little to the back, maybe off to the side so you don't get run over in the water.

NMSU names former Aggie as new baseball coach

It took 19 years for Brian Green to return to his 1995 alma mater as more than a student, but the former Kentucky coach has landed at last and will lead New Mexico State University's baseball program into the coming years, following the termination of the school's contract with former coach Rocky Ward.

"I have always believed this program could be great," Green said.

"It has always been my goal to become a head coach, but it also has always been my dream to someday return to my alma mater as its lead

NMSU Athletics Director Dr. McKinley Boston said Green was coming in on a glowing record and exceptional last season, having led the University of Kentucky Wildcats to take the crown for 2014 for the best offense in college baseball, leading the Southeastern Conference in seven of its 13 categories and placing second or third in another three.

Boston also credited Green with the exceptional development of his players, such as AJ Reed, who was named the Dick Howser Trophy Award winner, the Baseball America College Player of the Year, Collegiate Baseball's Player of the Year and the American Baseball Coaches Association National Player of the Year in 2014.

Moving forward, Green said he planned to focus on three main points with the college's baseball program - recruiting and developing new talent to the team "at a high level," teaching new players with a network of coaches that emphasize communication and, fundamental to the whole program, inspiring and engaging the community "by becoming visible as a staff and team and getting our kids to understand that we will be competing for more than ourselves. "You will get a very special effort from me.," he said.

Ag women No. 6 in WAC preseason soccer poll

The New Mexico State University women's soccer team was voted No. 6 out of eight teams in the Western Athletic Conference preseason coaches' poll.

Seattle University was selected as the favorite to win the 2014 WAC title.

The Aggies were picked sixth with 21 points after placing seventh in the WAC last season with a 2-9-1 record.

NMSU senior forward Layla Todd was named to the Preseaon All-WAC Team.

The Seattle Redhawks return six of their 11 starters from a team that went 17-3-2 in 2013 and finished first in WAC play with a perfect 12-0-0 record.

The team also claimed the WAC Tournament title and made its first-ever appearance at the NCAA Division I Tournament.

Utah Valley ranks second in the poll, receiving 41 points with a first- place vote. The Wolverines placed third in WAC play last season with a 7-4-1 record. Missouri-Kansas City received 35 points to place third in the preseason poll. The 'Roos went 8-4-0 in league play last season and placed sec-ond in the regular season standings. UMKC dropped a 2-0 decision to Seattle U in the WAC Tournament championship match in 2013.

Bakersfield ranks fourth in the poll with 29 points after finishing fifth in the WAC last year with a 3-8-1 mark. Grand Canyon is fifth after receiving 24 points. GCU placed fourth in the WAC last season with a 4-7-1 record. Texas-Pan American and Chicago State were selected seventh and eighth, respectively. UTPA and CSU enter their inaugural seasons with women's soccer programs this year.

"They will knock you (out of the way)," she said. "Arms and legs are flying.'

Carlsen said she's not sure what she will do after the world championship triathlon in October.

She will continue to compete and train, but she said that getting to Hawaii is the top goal and she will soon have that under her belt.

Until then, though, she'll continue to swim, ride and walk or some combination thereof – every day.

GREEN

She's not kidding.

Onthegreen Golf was more 'green' back in the day

Advancements are nice, but old school worked well

Charlie Blanchard Golf Doctor

Fifty or more years ago, we golfers may not have been "green," but we did sling our canvas bags over our shoulders and walk around the golf course.

We didn't guzzle gas or deplete big batteries tooling along in lazy-man golf carts. We caddied for rich folks at the posh country clubs and they didn't ride in carts either. Some of us worked at local golf courses on the greens-keeping crew. Back in the day, most of the greens up north were bent grass and we mowed them with hand mowers. Today hand mowers are relics, but they didn't use any gas and didn't spew long trails of hydraulic oil over the greens when some bozo should have been paying attention.

Plus we got a lot of exercise mowing. Back then there were no automatic, electronically controlled sprinklers that over-irrigated every square meter of the golf course property, regardless of whether anybody plays from the most remote spaces. Those of us who were on duty to water the greens did so at night by going around connecting hoses to pipes and either showering the grass by hand or placing a revolving sprinkler on the green, while we set up the next green, before turning off the previous one.

Everyone knew water was precious and we didn't waste it.

If you consider personal health and well-being to be "green" – which it doubtless is because public health affects all of us - then a lot of young and middle-aged men and women would be better off walking the golf course. You don't need to carry a heavy bag. Pull carts are mostly inexpensive, while using no energy other than your own. A caddy makes the most sense from the standpoint of getting kids into golf, carrying on the traditions of golf, drawing the pedestrian game closer to the professional game, at least in spirit, while causing the least impact on the environment. Unfortunately golf courses make so much money from motorized carts that they can't do without them. That's an anti-green thing as far as junior golfers are concerned.

Another thing that befuddles me is how many golf courses are left to essentially go to seed and yet remain open for play. In the northern states ryes, bent grass and other popular fescues of non-Bermuda varieties would certainly get dry in the fiercest of the summer heat, since you couldn't water everywhere. The exception being the posh ultra-private country clubs, such as Firestone Country Club in Akron, Ohio, where I played a couple of years ago. No drought there. But the grass on the municipal courses would turn back to green with late summer rains. No self-respecting golf course owner or manager would dare let his greens bake and die. Those people may not have had the "green" thing in mind but they maintained high standards of workmanship and maintenance.

I'm not sure what category the modern day beverage cart falls into. Until I arrived here in 1986, I had never seen a beverage cart, and I don't think they started until the early 1990s.

There was plenty of drinking on the golf course to be sure, but fellows often carried flasks in their golf bags for "medicinal purposes."

Beverage carts guzzle a lot of gas and encourage drinking on the golf course, which leads to some folks to being overserved and can result in damage to carts.

There is no doubt about it, golf is far more expensive today than it was back in the day. Those greenbacks are really the "green."

Keeping up

A full season of cross country last year was perfect timing for Sal Wright.

After a difficult freshman season, the Oñate High School graduate developed into one of Siena College's most consistent runners.

"He had a lot of room to grow," said John Kenworthy, the second-year head coach at the school in Loudonville, N.Y. "He had a great run through August and September. It was gaining a lot of experience."

His first season, Wright had trouble adjusting to the spike in mileage from high school.

'My first (former) coach was big on high mileage and not necessarily concerned with progress," the junior said, noting that he was running upward of 70 miles a week.

The longer distance of the college run – 8 kilometers instead of 5 kilometers – was another challenge.

"It feels twice as long," he said. "You have to be a lot more aerobically fit."

Under Kenworthy, Wright was able to focus on conditioning, building his core strength to endure the demands of the season. More core work.

That's how you hold your form later in the race," said Wright, who competed in three events. "The better all-the steep learning curve and trying to get experience, he was always even-keeled," the coach said.

Wright was among eight or nine vying for the top five on the squad and flourished. The time of his first 8K was nearly two minutes lower than his time of his first race the year before. He finished the 8K in slightly more than 27 minutes at the James Earley Invitational during October. His time of 27:23.10 was second among the Saints at the Metro-Atlantic Athletic Conference Cross Country Championships.

A22 | News Tape artist begins installation Local artists, students sought for room-sized neon piece

Christie Blizard, an artist from San Antonio, Texas, will be in Las Cruces Monday through Thursday, Aug. 11-14, to install one of her glow-tape pieces in the New Mexico State University Art Gallery – part of the gallery's upcoming exhibit "Off the Wall," which debuts Friday, Aug. 29 – and she needs the community's help.

Blizard's tape paintings are all about collaboration, and she hopes work together with NMSU students, local artists and local high school students to make a room-sized drawing with glow tape.

Blizard's tape-based installations combine her influences of videogame design and traditional textile design with her interest in spirituality, social practice and fragmentation. Often reminiscent of tribal or shamanistic drawings, her work pulsates from the walls and ground due in part to her use of blacklight and her neon pink, hot teal and day-glow purple color palette.

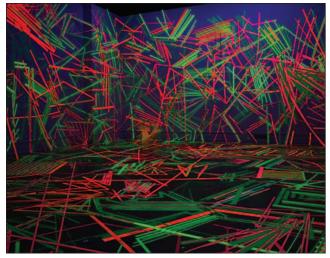

Interested artists and students can attend and aid Blizard in shifts, for an hour or for a full day. All are welcome. Installation shifts are from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 1 to 5 p.m.

"I am intrigued by the connective tissues between painting and performance, public and private and the spectacle and the hidden," Blizard said in regards to her work.

"Off the Wall" is an exhibition inspired by the minimal wall drawings and sculptures of Sol LeWitt. This two-part exhibition will trace the history of LeWitt's relationship with NMSU as well as show the extent of his influence on a new generation of artists who use the surface of the wall as their canvas.

In addition to the work of both Blizard and LeWitt, "Off the Wall" features the work of Allie Rex, Judith Braun and Nathan Green – contemporary artists from across the country who've

Deadbeats given warrant deadline Child support dodgers given month to pay up

For the third year in a row, Gov. Susana Martinez announces a two-part crack-down on non-custodial parents who aren't paying child support.

The child support bench warrant operation began Monday, Aug. 4, and continues through the end of August.

Before September, non-custodial parents with an outstanding bench warrant due to unpaid child support obligations may visit one of the 14 child support offices across the state, pay the full amount of the bond and get the warrant quashed or cancelled without fear of arrest. During the final week of August, New Mexico State Police and local law enforcement partners, will begin the round-up portion of the Bench Warrant Program, where non-custodial parents face arrest.

If an individual is unable to pay the full amount of the bond set by the court, a reduced bond payment or payment plan toward the amount of past due child support may be negotiated, with the consent of the parent to whom the support obligation is owed and the approval of the court that issued the warrant. Non-custodial parents with a written job offer may also request to negotiate a lower bond payment with wage withholding payments. A list of all non-custodial parents having outstanding

A list of all non-custodial parents having outstanding bench warrants issued throughout the state is posted on the state Health and Human Services Department website at http://www.hsd.state.nm.us/bench-warrant-program. aspx and will be kept up-to-date throughout the program. There are approximately 600 bench warrants issued by New Mexico Courts related to child support cases.

The emergency funding bill that the U.S. House of Representatives passed before its August break addresses the immediate needs of the border crisis, Congressman Steve Pearce said during a visit to Las Cruces Monday, Aug. 4.

The House almost didn't pass a bill responding to a surge of immigrants from Central America of mostly women and children before the break because the language in the original bill gave President Barack Obama too much latitude in how to spend the money, Pearce said.

lawmakers to return to the House from the airport - centered on tightening up the language, he said.

'We wanted a solution, but not have it abused," Pearce said.

The House did eventually pass the revised bill, which Pearce said is a balanced approach to the crisis because it addresses both national security and humanitarian concerns. H.R. 5230, the House Border Crisis Supplemental Package, will provide $405 million for the Department of Homeland Security to boost border security and law enforcement, $22 million to accelerate judicial proceedings for immigrants, $70 million for National Guard border efforts, $197 million for the Department of Health and Human Services to provide temporary housing and humanitarian assistance to unaccompanied minors and $40 million in repatriation assistance to Guatemala, Honduras, and El Salvador.

The bill also amends the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2008, so unaccompanied children from all countries are treated the same. Much of the appropriation funding made in this bill is offset through reductions in foreign aid.

Pearce, who is part of a Congressional working group that visited Guatemala and Honduras, said officials in those countries told the U.S. lawmakers that the best way to keep people from fleeing to the United States, under the expectation of being allowed to stay as their request for asylum is processed, is to have those who most recently left be returned immediately.

"It's the only way to stop the flow," he said.

The legislation would allow those with credible reasons for seeking asylum would be given a hearing under the legislation, Pearce said. The National Guard presence would be to support the Border Patrol's processing of the immigrants so agents can focus on border security, he said.

The serious and long-term issues of immigration reform and border security legislation remain. We must strive to get that work done," Pearce said. "Our nation needs these issues to be addressed. We owe it to our nation."

Quotes attributed to Pearce after the fact-finding trip to Central America resulted in him receiving satirical attention from the Comedy Channel's Stephen Colbert. Pearce was quoted as saying that economic reasons, not fear of violence, are the real reasons for the influx. Colbert contrasted that with another published report that stated Pearce and the rest of the congressional delegation did not venture out of their hotel much to see the true living conditions in Central America.

Pearce disputed the interpretation that the delegation did not venture far from their hotel rooms. The group did go out during the day to villages and met with officials, he said. After the meetings, traveling congressmen usually go out shopping or sight-seeing, he said, but the group didn't do that on this trip because of concerns about safety.

"Sometimes our activities are as simple as sitting with someone on the porch & having a cold drink & talking for half an hour or more. The important point is to value and reinforce our resident's worth, and to encourage our seniors & those with Alzheimer's and Dementia to continue living fulling & dignified lives as they are worthy of living."

Mo Valko, marketing manager of Mountain View Market Co-Op, collaborated with designer Gabriel Tomas Mendez and general manager Shahid Mustafa to plan and fundraise for a $1 million renovation to the El Paseo Road store.

MVM members helping to fund $1 million renovation

By Alta LeCompte Las Cruces Bulletin

Mountain View Market Co-Op members are putting their money where their mouths are – investing in a $1 million renovation to upgrade their natural foods store at 1300 El Paseo Road.

Supporting the project will be $250,000 in cash reserves, loans from members totaling $250,000 and a bank loan, Mo Valko, marketing manager, said.

The Grow with Us! fundraising campaign, initiated in spring 2014 has been low key to date and already has accrued more than $110,00 in member commitments, Valko said.

The co-op is offering members promissory notes valued at a total of $250,000, which will pay 3 percent simple interest, maturing in five or six years. Each note is for $500.

"This is a great way for us to offer members a great return on investment and at the same time give members a feeling of being more invested in the remodeling," Valko said.

Growth spurs renovation

She said the renovation designed by ASA Architects will not add space but rather will reconfigure existing space and upgrade equipment in response to consumer demand. "We are a consumer-owned co-op," Valko said. "Every year our members fill out a survey and the board takes that feedback. What we've consistently seen is a growing demand for the kitchen, produce and fresh meat programs.

"Our sales have corroborated those findings."

"From 2007 until our last full fiscal year of 2013, the co-op has grown 33 percent in total sales," said board president Paul Heiberger. "With an average annual growth of more than 8 percent, this is time to capitalize on our continued success and our members' interest in an improve shopping experience."

Valko said sales increased from $3 million per year to $4.5 million during that time frame.

Consumer awareness contributes to growth

Valko attributed the co-op's brisk growth in an otherwise sluggish local economy in part to changes in consumer awareness.

"One of the biggest factors is more people are turning to food as an avenue to healthier lifestyles," she said. "Not only organic foods are in demand but also locally produced foods, and we have the largest selection of locally

United Way promotes financial literacy Mission expands to provide direct services

By Alta LeCompte

Las Cruces Bulletin

Amanda Morales, community impact director for United Way of Southwest New Mexico, had an aha moment when she attended the first in a series of financial literacy workshops she has planned for the public.

"I didn't realize how much it matters that you pay more than the minimum payment on your credit card," she said following the workshop, which was held Monday, July 28, at Thomas Branigan Memorial Library. "It would take years and cost me thousands of dollars to pay off my balance if I did that."

Giving Morales and workshop attendees the wake-up call was Pete Llena, Wells Fargo Bank business banking specialist.

"A lot of people get overwhelmed with things like interest rates and minimum payments," Morales said.

Llena's task included acquainting attendees with the importance of annual credit score checks and the importance of protecting one's identity.

"They had a lot of questions about how to build credit," Llena said. "If you keep your card use to less than 30 percent of the amount available, creditors will see you want to build your credit responsibly."

A local expert will give each of the nine workshops in the Passport to Financial Success series Morales is scheduling for summer and fall 2014.

Donna Stoller of US Bank will speak on "Get out of Debt" from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. Thursday, Aug. 28.

Other speakers will include Eldelisa Nava of LegalShield on identity theft, Rick Supple of Washington Federal Savings with information for first-time homebuyers, Claudia Clements of US Bank on creating a budget plan and developing better spending and saving habits and Bob Harrington of Credit Repair New Mexico.

All workshops will be held at Branigan, 200 E. Picacho Ave.

Filling a void

Morales said United Way at the international level has decided to provide direct service in the fields of education, income and health in addition to its traditional mission of raising and distributing money to community agencies in each locality.

Since each office is its own entity, each will choose the service most needed in its community.

"We want to get in on the action as well," she said. "Income is one of our (community) issues."

Morales said the origin of the financial literacy series can be traced back to a time about two years ago when the office was involved in the process of distributing funds raised in local workplaces to charitable organizations active in the area. "We noticed a lot of agencies focused on education and health, but very few, maybe only five, focused on income," she said. "For our income initiative, we wanted to help people reach financial stability. For us, that was our way of moving toward community impact."

She said United Way's new initiative is designed to focus on the long term, helping people create good financial habits so

She said growth has included an increase in attendance at classes the market offers as well as the number of class offerings.

"We ask what people want and we try to de-liver," Valko said. "We are owned by 4,500 Las Crucens.

She added more people seem to be cooking at home, which is good for the market and good for people.

During the past five years there has been a 5 percent increase in sales at the MVM's Café and Grab 'n' Go sales.

"They really appreciate being able to eat in a place that doesn't charge a premium for glutenfree or vegan choices," she said.

Store to take on new look

Valko said the renovations will include:

- Expanding the commercial kitchen and creating a new deli counter with soup and salad bar
- Installing more efficient refrigeration equipment and building a cold room for preparation of local and organic meat
- Creating space for more meat and dairy selections and the addition of fresh seafood

Maria Vasquez, executive director of Habitat, said financial literacy is crucial in the success of first-time home buyers.

She said Habitat families attended similar workshops at the YWCA before it pulled out of Las Cruces.

"We are pleased the United Way is bringing these opportunities to our communities," she said. "Like us, United Way is trying to help our families."

She said the two agencies have an ongoing relationship, with Habitat attending monthly United Way meetings.

"Families are trying to get self-sufficiency skills, mainly how to budget, how to maintain their homes and how to manage credit," Vasquez said. "Most are not knowledgeable about credit. For many, this is the first time they have budgeted."

She said Habitat's future home buyers also have attended Tierra del Sol classes to learn about homeowners insurance, property taxes and other topics of importance when purchasing a home.

Food options to expand

Among the fresh food choices MVM will be able to offer following the renovations are fresh seafood and more fresh meat. These additions will be made possible in part because area distributors are making the products available.

Caitlin Karrenberg, deli manager, said La Montanita Co-Op in Albuquerque has expanded and will provide antibiotic and hormone-free sweet grass fed beef from northern New Mexico and Colorado, as well as Kizer Farms pork.

"We will be introducing more seafood," Karrenberg said. "The fresh seafood will arrive daily from Seattle and Alaska at a Seattle Seafood plant in El Paso."

gains over the year. Leisure and hospitality also added 1,500 jobs, while retail trade, up 900, and transportation, warehousing, and utilities, up 500, contributed smaller increases.

Government employment fell by 3,200 from a year earlier, with losses at all three component levels: federal, state, and local.

Also reporting losses were manufacturing, down 2,000 jobs, miscellaneous other services, down 600, construction, down 500, professional and business services, down 400, information, down 300, and wholesale trade, down 100.

The state's seasonally adjusted unemploy-

Data show New Mexico's 75 farmers markets are growing

Twenty years ago, you were lucky to have lived near the approximately 20 farmers markets that existed in the state at that time. Today, the number of markets has grown to 75.

Markets throughout the state, including the Farmers & Crafts Market of Las Cruces, currently are observing National Farmers Market week Aug. 3-10.

Denise Miller, executive director of the New Mexico Farmers Marketing Association (NMFMA), which serves as a centralized resource center for markets across the state, said the list of fresh produce at the market this time of year includes New Mexico's signature green chile, as well as apples, kale, grapes and tomatoes. Also available are eggs, honey, meat and goat cheese, to name a few non-produce items.

According to the NMFMA, one factor feeding into the growth of New Mexico farmers markets is the increasing convenience of buying items from them. Many markets have begun to accept credit and debit cards, as well as benefits related to programs such as the Women, Infants and Children (WIC) Program, the Senior Farmers' Market Nutrition Program and the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP).

Virgin Galactic resumes tests

Virgin Galactic's SpaceShipTwo, a six-passenger, two-pilot suborbital vehicle, resumed test flights Tuesday, July 29, following a six-month hiatus for modifications, according to Discovery News.

SpaceShipTwo hadn't been airborne since a Jan. 14 glide flight. It previously made three powered flights before Virgin Galactic decided in May to switch to an alternative plastic fuel in hopes of boosting the hybrid engine's performance.

The company hopes SpaceShipTwo will make its first foray beyond the atmosphere this year at Spaceport America in Sierra County, Discovery said.

Virgin Galactic is the spaceport's first and biggest tenant.

The spaceship and its carrier jet, WhiteKnightTwo, took off from the Mojave Air and Space Port, located about 100 miles north of Los Angeles, shortly after 10 a.m. PDT. About 30 minutes later, SpaceShipTwo was released for an unpowered glide back to the runway.

At the controls were Scaled Composites pilots Pete Siebold and Michael Masucci.

"It went really well," Siebold told Discovery News after the flight. "We learned a lot."

SpaceX plans commercial launch facility in Texas

SpaceX, the No.2 tenant at New Mexico's Spaceport America, plans to bring its commercial rocket launch facility to Cameron County, Texas.

David Wilson of Spaceport America media relations said there is no change in the status of the SpaceX lease with Spaceport America, which is for three years with a two-year renewal option for up to five years.

"SpaceX will start their test launch phase of the Falcon 9R booster at Spaceport America soon," Wilson said. "SpaceX's newly announced Texas spaceport is being constructed to handle future SpaceX orbital launch missions like they are currently conducting at the Cape Canaveral in Florida and at the Vandenberg AFB launch facility in California.

The company signed its Spaceport America lease in 2013 and has tested its reusable Grasshopper rocket at the New Mexico facility. It moved those tests from McGregor, Texas, because higher altitude testing was needed.

SpaceX designs, manufactures and launches advanced rockets and spacecraft, and is the world's fastest-growing provider of launch services. It is the only private company ever to return a spacecraft from low-Earth orbit, which it first accomplished in December 2010.

Las Cruces Bulletin photos by David Salcido The building at 1024 S. Main St. sits office, shop or gallery-ready and filled with Southwestern charm.

Heart and sole proprietorship

The former home of Jude's Birkenstock Footprints is back on the market

By David Salcido Las Cruces Bulletin

There was a time, not so long ago, when the building at 1024 S. Main St. was alive with the sound of laughter, music and the shuffle of Birkenstocked feet.

From 1985-2009, the building was the location of Jude's Birkenstock Footprints and, for a brief six years within that time frame, was also home to a popular coffeehouse that launched the careers of several notable figures in the entertainment field. Today, the building sits empty, a large rambling structure with, as retired business owner Jude Fiebert puts it, "a lot of potential."

Originally built in 1929 as a residence, the structure encompasses 10 rooms of varying sizes for a total of around 2,000 square feet, and features such attractions as original wooden floors, cove ceilings and exposed wooden lintels in the doorways of the main reception area, as well as thick adobe walls, ironwork on all the windows and doors, tiled floors in hallways and some rooms and skylights throughout.

"I have a lot of skylights here," Fiebert said. "In the daylight, this building is fabulous. You want to turn off lights when the sun is shining, but even when it's raining, it's never really dark."

Another prime selling point is the outside covered patio, with access from several points in the structure, including the double doors that once led into the coffeehouse and a wooden double gate leading out to the driveway. A thick adobe wall and a tin ramada, supported by hand-carved beams – all built by local artisan Hector Telles – enclose the private patio.

"When we first opened the coffee shop, there was nothing here," Fiebert said. "It was flat. Afterwards Hector built the wall with real adobe. He made the bricks himself. He also did the hand-carved beams and the lintels in the front. I just love his work."

Fiebert's appreciation for local artistry can be seen in other areas of the structure, as well. And each one has its own story. Outside, near the ditch that runs along the south side of the building, are two sculptures, carved from a tree stump – one an eagle, the other a burrowing owl.

"They're carved by Richard Gonzalez, the same guy who does the bears on Snow Road," Fiebert said proudly. "It was a stump that I didn't want to pull out, so I asked him to come do something with them. Later, when the psychologists moved in next door, I told them, 'Here's your owl. Welcome home."

Inside the coffeehouse, small murals still remain on the walls, painted in the late 1980s by local artists Bob Diven, Polly Reidhead and Rose McLaughlin.

"We let all the artists paint the walls," Fiebert said. "They were all people who used to frequent the place. These are the only ones that survive."

Another part of the legacy was the music.

"Oh, we had so much music," Fiebert said. "I had Steve Smith. This was his first gig when he moved here from Virginia. I had Randy Granger, right out of high school. I had Gordon Butler, the violinist. He's with the Las Cruces Symphony now. I had Bob Diven. He used to hang out here a lot and he used to buy warm woolen socks from me. I had Bob Burns. I love that man. He used to do the best commercials for me during his Jazz show on the radio. I had everybody. They all performed regularly."

The heart of the business, however, was Fiebert's Birkenstock shop, which catered to a wide variety of clients, from college students to respected business owners. What few recall, these days, is that before finding its permanent home in this building, she had rented in several locations across town. Even that story is alive with historical reference points.

"The first building I was in was across from the big wooden Indian at the corner of Apodaca Park," she said. "That was in 1983, I think. Then I moved to old Mesilla and rented the building which is now Andele's Dog House. Then I moved on to a place on Miranda, I think it's now a health food store. I tried to buy all those buildings, but nobody would sell to me. I finally bought this place in 1985. We started the coffeeshop in 1986 and that went for six years until my friend who was running it decided to go back to school. Footprints was really my bread and butter." Even so, all good things must come to an end and Jude's Birkenstock Footprints was no exception.

"The Birkenstock business was fantastic, but I got really tired of it by 2009," Fiebert said. "I was ready to retire, so I could do some traveling."

Once the decision was made, Fiebert sold the building to a local attorney, who owned it for three years before personal problems led to a default on the contract and she had to take possession once again. Since then, she has searched for the right owners to take the rambling structure, with local history literally etched into the walls, on to its next phase of existence.

"I've had four contracts signed in the past four years, but each one fell through," Fiebert said. "I'd really just like to find somebody who will love it as much as I do, so I can get on with my retirement. I put the sign up a few days ago and had three phone calls the first day. Two wanted to rent the place and another isn't sure this is the right location, but I'm hoping. The right person is out there. I guess I just have to be patient."

A water ordinance heading for a city council vote Monday, Aug. 18, may sound like minor bureaucratic shuffling, but the city's water conservation coordinator on Friday, Aug. 1, urged the community to get behind it.

Leslie Kryder, water conservation coordinator and author of the proposed legislation, said it would shift responsibility for fining water wasters from the municipal court to city administration.

Krdyer said change is needed because the court has been reluctant to enforce ordinances restricting the wasting of water.

"Let your elected representatives know you support conservation and are willing to pay for it," she told an audience attending the Las Cruces Green Chamber of Commerce First Friday information session.

Currently, a violation is subject to a citation issued by Codes Enforcement and then the case is heard in municipal court.

Under the proposed process, a first violation would lead to education about the need to conserve. A repeat offense would

USDA implements crop insurance provision

The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) has announced continued progress in implementing provisions of the 2014 Farm Bill that will strengthen and expand insurance coverage options for farmers and ranchers.

The new Supplemental Coverage Option (SCO), available through the federal crop insurance program and set to begin with the 2015 crop year, is designed to help protect producers from yield and market volatility.

"Following the 2014 Farm Bill signing, USDA has made it a priority to ensure the Supplemental Coverage Option was available to help farmers in this upcoming crop year," said USDA Secretary Tom Vilsack.

The 2014 Farm Bill provides more risk management options for farmers and ranchers, and by making crop insurance more affordable for beginning farmers. SCO, which is administered by the Risk Management Agency (RMA), further strengthens the farm safety net.

SCO will be available for corn, cotton, grain sorghum, rice, soybeans, spring barley, spring wheat and winter wheat in selected counties for the 2015 crop year.

RMA plans to make SCO more widely available by adding more counties and crops.

SCO is a county-level policy endorsement that is in addition to an underlying crop insurance policy, and covers a portion of losses not covered by the same crop's underlying policy. Producers who elect to participate in Agricultural Risk Coverage (ARC), which is offered by the Farm Service Agency (FSA), are not eligible for SCO for the crop and farm participating in ARC.

Kryder said the compliance system is similar to those enacted in Santa Fe and Albuquerque.

While the Green Chamber's First Friday talk was relocated to 221 N. Main St. due to a leak caused by heavy rainfall at the usual location, Kryder assured attendees the need to conserve water has not ended with a few monsoon showers.

She said current annual precipitation levels since the socalled drought in the past few years are indeed a return to average conditions experienced over the past 1,000 years.

"We are using more water than there is a sustainable supply," she said. "In the past 100 years, we have been taking up fresh water that's been in the ground for thousands of year. At the same time, the population is growing and will likely continue to grow."

Although the water table historically rebounds after periods of drought, that stopped happening in 2004, she said.

No cheap options

At the level of individual businesses and households, as well at the city level, conservation is less costly than infrastructure changes.

The El Paso desalinization plant, for example cost $500 million, Kryder said.

When communities succeed in conserving, there are associated costs because the cost per gallon goes up, but it is the much cheaper alternative, she said.

Kryder said studies show conservation of water used outdoors can save between 30 and 80 percent of business and residential usage.

The biggest single infrastructure changes businesses and residents can make is to replace toilets with low-flow alternatives available for about $100. Landscaping and irrigation choices also are important ways to cut usage, she said.

"The shower is one area where habit changes are more effective than low-flow infrastructure," she said, adding the city has a small number of low-flow showerheads available for distribution.

Attendees, who jumped in with suggestions and questions throughout Kryder's presentation, suggested placing a pail in the shower to collect water while the shower is heating up. The water can be re-used on plants.

The larger problem

Las Cruces water wasting restrictions

In addition to restrictions on when outdoor watering is allowed, the city has other water-wasting restrictions. They include:

- Washing vehicles and other types of mobile equipment, except with a handheld bucket or a handheld hose equipped with a functioning shutoff nozzle for quick rinses
- Allowing water to flow onto adjacent property or onto any street, alley or other public right-of-way
- Watering outdoor vegetation excessively so that water ponds on site
- Failing to repair a water leak within five working days of the discovery of the leak
- Washing sidewalks, driveways, parking areas, tennis courts, patios and other impervious surfaces with a hose, except in emergencies to remove spills of hazardous materials or to eliminate dangerous conditions that threaten the public health, safety or welfare For more information, contact Leslie Kryder, conservation coordinator, at 528-3549 or lkryder@las-cruces.org.

To report a violation, call the waste-water hotline at 528-4444 or visit www.las-cruces.org and go to departments/utilities.

how effective city conservation measures can be since agriculture accounts for 70 to 80 percent of usage in Doña Ana County.

One issue no one in New Mexico wants to deal with, including the New Mexico First Town Hall held in April, is water use by the state's farmers and ranchers, he said.

"No one wants to deal with it," McCamley said. "No one wants to site down and have that conversation with pecan farmers."

Kryder said a regional planning process will begin in the fall, and urged attendees to get involved.

A tale of three airlines Competition forces businesses to adopt best practices or die

Chris Erickson State of the Economy

The best airline I ever flew on was Swiss Air in 1999, leaving Zurich and arriving Mumbai.

Roomy seats, delicious food, friendly and attentive staff. We were given slippers for walking around the cabin that we could keep. Did I mention this was economy class?

Back then, Swiss Air was not a profitable airline, surviving only thanks to large subsidies from the Swiss government. The highservice strategy was a last gasp attempt to stave off bankruptcy. The airline had ceased flights by 2001.

The worst airline I ever flew was Air Baltic just last month, leaving Vilnius and arriving Riga. The experience was a gauntlet of fees and poor service. Seats were crowded and employees unpleasant. Total hidden cost was more than $300 for myself and my wife.

When we complained, employees were quick to point out they didn't work for the airline but were subcontractors, as if that should matter to the customer. The pièce de résistance came when we were informed that we couldn't pay the extra fee at the counter but had to go to a separate office located on another floor.

Air Baltic is currently on the edge of bankruptcy, surviving only thanks to massive infusions of taxpayer dollars by the Lithuanian government. Most analysts doubt it will survive next year.

Thus we have two government-owned airlines, both in financial distress, each taking a radically different strategy – one trying to win customers with luxury service, the other trying to trick people with hidden fees. Both airlines, at the time I flew them, were effectively insolvent, that is, unable to obtain private sector loans – surviving only through government handouts.

At both airlines, government subsidies distorted management decisions. In the private sector, a bankrupt airline is forced into Chapter 11 re-organization, or even, gasp, Chapter 7 liquidation. This is bad news for management, as they lose their jobs. But sovereign carriers, relying on government subsidies, can put off bankruptcy, giving management time to try to "save" the airline.

Saving the airline often takes the form of high-risk, off-the-wall strategies that any objective observer would give little chance of working. But management need give little thought to losses. After all, if the desperation strategy happens to work, the airline continues to fly. If the strategy fails, taxpayers bear the cost. Heads, the airline wins; tails, the taxpayers pay.

We know how to run an airline right. Take Southwest Airlines, which runs a courteous, no frills operation. No tricks; no slippers; Southwest delivers day-in, day-out a profitable product.

Southwest has struggled a little lately, earning returns lower than industry averages, but the reason is not because its model is flawed. Just the opposite.

Seeing Southwest's success, competitors are adopting Southwest Airlines' business model, Southwest finds competing more difficult.

The same thing happened to the Ford Model T and Apple computer.

Meanwhile, you don't see other airlines rushing to adopt Swiss Air's, or Air Baltic's model.

I almost always buy my ticket based on price. The cheapest flight between Zurich and India, thanks to Swiss government subsidies, just happened to be Swiss Air.

Will I ever fly Air Baltic again? Certainly not – but not because of the poor service, and the service was mind-blowingly bad, but because of the hidden fees transformed the low-cost provider into the high-cost provider.

Happy tax holiday

The nice thing is that the dynamics of the marketplace will result in other airlines adopting Southwest's business model – which will make me happy, as I will have more choices. Although I do miss those Swiss Air slippers.

Christopher A. Erickson, Ph.D., is a professor of economics at New Mexico State University. He flies for one reason or another about three times a year. The opinions expressed my not be shared by the regents and administration of NMSU. Erickson can be reached at chrerick@nmsu.edu.

Hatch chile crop looks promising Company sets up a new shop in Las Cruces

By Marvin Tessneer

Hatch chile may be a little late this year.

Dickie Ogaz of Hatch said his crop is a little behind in its development. He is looking for chile harvest in mid-August.

"It's been because of the long heat," he said. "But the quality looks good."

Statistics tell the story of how important chile is to New Mexico's agriculture industry.

In 2013, growers planted 9,000 acres of chile and harvested 8,600 acres that produced 65,000 tons of pods, said Katie Goetz of the New Mexico Department of Agriculture.

Meanwhile, the chile industry is expanding its retail operations to spread the good word about the area's signature product.

Produce clerk Sean Bond begins his third year roasting mild, medium and hot chiles organically grown locally for Mountain View Market Co-op, 1300 El Paseo Road.

A Hatch company has acquired the Biad Chili Products green chile business and has set up the Hatch Chile Store on West Picacho Avenue in the former Dickerson Auction barn. The store is selling green chile and roasted green chile pods.

The store also is retailing chile over a website, www.hatchgreen-chile.com, owner Preston Mitchell said.

The store is offering six varieties of mild, medium and hot, or picante.

Mitchell operates a 300-acre diversified farm in the Hatch Valley, raising alfalfa, cotton and corn – with about 35 acres in chile. "We harvest about 10 tons of chile per acre," he said.

Jodie Brdecko reads the proclamation welcoming Green Line Accounting to Las Cruces.

Beat the heat with these suds Tour de Beer returns with scores of summer brews

By Zak Hansen Las Cruces Bulletin

From noon to 7 p.m. Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 16-17, the Las Cruces Tour de Beer returns, departing the Southern New Mexico State Fairgrounds and making its new home at the New Mexico Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum, 4100 Dripping Springs Road.

As Las Cruces' third-annual full-scale beer festival, the Las Cruces Tour de Beer brings some of the best brews – more than 60 in all – from around the country, even the world, and puts them in the hands of thirsty Las Crucens. From old favorites to new and exciting tastes, the Las Cruces Tour de Beer has something to please every palate.

Organized by Helping Hands Event Planning and inviting three of the area's distributing companies – Admiral Beverage Corp., Premier Distributing Co. and National Distributing Co. – this year's Tour de Beer will feature several New Mexico brews alongside its national and international flavors, among them Tractor, Santa Fe and Monk's Ale, to name a few. In the past year, a number of beer festivals have been held by the New Mexico Brewers Guild – last fall's Día de la Cerveza and June's Blazin' Brewfest – each highlighting brews and spirits crafted here in the Land of Enchantment. There's a lot of great beer coming out of New Mexico, but unfortunately, some of it isn't available locally, meaning a road trip is in order every time you want to crack open a cold one.

Tour de Beer, however, has another goal in mind: to bring in brews from all over many people haven't tried – and are readily available for purchase locally, if and when thirsty samplers find something they love.

Aside from the world-class beers on tap, the Las Cruces Tour de Beer will again feature loads of arts, crafts and food vendors along with live, local music both days. On Saturday, Taking Over will perform its high-energy covers of 1970s and '80s classic rock hits from noon to 2 p.m. From 2 to 4 p.m., Crooked Beaver Creek brings its unique brand of country rock, and the evening's entertainment closes with the Chris Baker Band from 4 to 7 p.m. Sunday's stage will feature ARDK – singersongwriters Alison Reynolds and Deborah Kuhn – from noon to 2 p.m. The DAMN Union takes the stage from 2 to 4 p.m., playing its singular blend of Americana, rock and folk, and Derrick Harris Band will close the weekend from 4 to 7 p.m. with three hours of rock, blues and soul.

Tickets to the Las Cruces Tour de Beer are $12 in advance and are available online at www. lascrucestourdebeer.com/tickets or locally at Celebrate on Valley, 855 S. Valley Drive; Celebrate on Telshor, 900 S. Telshor Blvd.; Toucan Market, 1701 E. University Ave.; Kelly Liquors, 3850 E. Lohman Ave.; Ump 88, 1338 Picacho Hills Drive; and Helping Hands Event Planning, 300 N. Main St. Please note these locations accept cash only. Tickets will also be available the day of the event at the gate for $15.

By Zak Hansen Las Cruces Bulletin

From an early age, George Mendoza wouldn't – couldn't – stay still.

Always an active child, Mendoza involved himself in athletics at an early age, taking a special liking to running and, more than anything, basketball.

A promising high school star, things began to change for Mendoza when, at 15, while shooting hoops, the basket began to fade. Mendoza was going blind.

Diagnosed with a form of macular degeneration, Mendoza's central vision was soon gone and, in its place, he saw things that weren't there – vivid, changing, moving colors – a condition he refers to as "kaleidoscope eyes."

As his vision went, so did Mendoza's hopes of a future in basketball. Bereft of his sight and left in a world of deepening shadow and vivid, frightening color, Mendoza recalls being angry, afraid and, at times, even hopeless.

Where most would find defeat, however, Mendoza found drive, transferring his athletic ability – and perhaps that same inability to stay still – to the track, where he soon excelled.

In the years since he lost his sight, George Mendoza has been a lot of things.

He's been a world-class runner and Olympic contender, competing in the 1980 and '84 Olympics for the Disabled. In 1980, Mendoza broke the world record for blind athletes, running the mile in just 4:28.

He's been an author, penning several novels, as well as an inspirational speaker, sharing his story of overcoming adversity with audiences around the country.

He's also been an award-winning artist, starting to paint in the years after he lost his vision, depicting, odd as it may sound, exactly what he sees. The resulting canvases are rich, stunning swirls of color and movement. His paintings have hung in galleries across the U.S. and beyond, and his signature exhibit, "Colors of the Wind," travels the country as a National Smithsonian Affiliates traveling exhibit.

Nearly 50 years later, Mendoza still hasn't slowed down, and while his latest outing – children's literature – may be new, it combines the many facets of who George Mendoza is.

Now, Mendoza is both illustrator and subject of "Colors of the Wind: The Story of Blind Artist and Champion Runner George Mendoza."

Working with author J.L. Powers, an El Paso native and graduate of the New Mexico State University English Department, Mendoza's inspirational life story has been distilled and condensed, told in a way accessible to young children and richly illustrated with the artist's own work.

While "Colors of the Wind" will be officially released to bookstores and online sellers Sept. 1, Mendoza and Powers are holding a special prerelease book party from 10:30 a.m. to noon that same day in the Roadrunner Room of Thomas Branigan Memorial Library, 200 E. Picacho Ave.

The event will be the public's first chance to get a sneak-peek of the book – and to buy an early copy – as well as a chance to meet the author-artist duo. Mendoza and Powers will discuss art, books, blindness and running, subjects near and dear to both of them, and an art project themed around "Colors of the Wind" will give kids a chance to dive even deeper.

For more information, visit www.georgemendoza.com and www.jlpowers.net.

Zak Hansen can be reached at 680-1958 or zak@lascrucesbulletin.com.

Legally blind artist and record-setting athlete George Mendoza of Las Cruces is subject and illustrator of "Colors of the Wind" by NMSU graduate and El Paso author J.L. Powers. A prerelease party will begin at 10:30 a.m. Saturday, Aug. 16, at Thomas Branigan Memorial Library, 220 E. Picacho Ave.

Las Cruces painter Bonnie Mandoe will open an exhibit of 36 of her works - including "Cochiti Moon" - titled "New Mexico Land & Landscapes" Friday, Aug. 15, at the New Mexico Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum, 4100 Dripping Springs Road. An opening reception with the artist will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 21.

NMFRHM hosts Mandoe exhibit Las Cruces artist to display 36 paintings

Bonnie Mandoe knew she wanted to be a painter since her teens - but it took a while to realize her dream.

The Las Cruces artist grew up in California, and studied art at the University of California, Berkeley. After that came children, a move to Hawaii and a career as a writer and author, but Mandoe's desire to paint remained strong.

Thirty-six oil paintings that capture the beauty of New Mexico's land are featured in a new exhibition at the New Mexico Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum. Mandoe's "New Mexico Land & Landscapes" will be on display in the museum's Arts Corridor from Friday, Aug. 15, through Sunday, Nov. 30. There will be an opening reception for the exhibit from 6 to 8 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 21. "I always knew I'd paint myself silly when the time came, and the time finally came," Mandoe said.

Mandoe renovated an old adobe farmhouse in Las Cruces, where she now paints full time and often hosts her own solo art shows. At one such show, Mandoe's paintings of cotton gins caught the eye of Mesilla educator and former state representative J. Paul Taylor, who has helped promote her work.

She captures the rugged beauty of New Mexico in her paintings and many of them feature the state's diverse agriculture, from irrigated fields to orchards and cotton gins.

Of all the things I love to do, painting New Mexico tops the list," Mandoe said. "Desert, forest, planted fields ... lakes, mountains, rivers, churches, colors, extraordinary light. Here, you see what I can't say with words, my heart's vision of the place I love."

Complete disclosure

The cast and crew of LCCT's latest stage production, 'The Full Monty' balance reality with raw humor

By David Salcido Las Cruces Bulletin

How do you make a play, adapted from a hit movie, about a group of guys who decide to become strippers, palatable to a community theater audience?

If you're Megan McQueen and are faced with bringing "The Full Monty" to the Las Cruces Community Theatre stage, you pull out all the stops and concentrate less on the titillation factor and more on the heart of the production. Something of which, she said she believes, there is plenty.

"The story is incredibly moving, in addition to being bawdy," she said. "There is some really touching and authentic storytelling in the show. You're ultimately asking six men to get naked and bare themselves on stage in what we all know is the highlight of the show – it's the first thing that everybody asks about – so the temptation is to be silly and goofy, but actually what makes the show so appealing is that it's real. It's got a lot of heart, though I admit it may not be for everybody."

Las Cruces Bulletin

Eric Brekke, who takes on the role of Jerry in the play, agrees with McQueen's assessment.

"It has a lot of heart," he said. "Even though it has a lot of singing and dancing, it has moments that feel so real and honest. It's about a group of guys who are really down on their luck, who are willing to do something drastic to save what little bit of dignity they have left from their former lives.

"At least one out of three people has experienced a period in their lives where absolutely everything goes wrong. When that happens, you have people relying on you to figure something out and you find yourself exploring directions you would never have considered before. Who can't relate to that?"

Overcoming the obvious hurdle – finding six men who would be willing to bare more than their soul for the audience – was actually easier than the logistics of the production, McQueen said. To begin with, though there have been several examples of successful Broadway musicals adapted from big screen entertainment, they are often so broad it becomes difficult to pull them down to a point that they will fit within the constraints of a stage.

"When they asked me to do it, I thought it sounded like a challenge, because there are 20 something locations, there are 30 set changes, it's just not the kind of thing you should try to do with community theater," she said. "You know me. I love a challenge. It sounded like fun to take something that probably shouldn't be done in such a small space and make it work."

To do so, she called upon the expertise of others she has worked with in the past. Among them were Sam Tyson, whose inspired lighting effects on Scaffolding Theater Company's debut performance of "Nine" were a highlight of the production; Doug Robey, whose set designs have created atmosphere for many of LCCT's most successful shows; and local legend Bob Diven, who was given the challenge of making the set changes realistic, yet simple.

"With "The Full Monty," one of the complications is the story has to be realistic," McQueen said. "The thing that makes it good is that these are real people in a real circumstance, it's not a farce. So, even though you have to do 25 locations, you can't do it in a cartoony or super stylized way – there has to be something that makes it seem realistic. That's one of the things that has been interesting in working closely with Bob and Sam. We have to be creative, but we have to have a certain type of aesthetic in mind for a specific effect. This show, in a lot of ways, has been the most challenging I've ever done in that respect."

Brekke, himself, was also faced with a challenge. Though he has become a recognizable face in the local theater scene and regularly receives kudos for his intense portrayals, offset by subtle character quirks, "The Full Monty" marks his musical debut in a semi-professional production. The challenge, however, wasn't in lending is voice to the musical, so much as it was fitting that voice to the vocal range of the character.

"I had to do a lot of advance preparation because of the ranges I'm having to sing," he said. "It's supposed to be a bunch of men, but apparently they want a bunch of men who can sing like women, because it's way up there."

His first order of business was to get a vocal coach to help him expand his range, which, McQueen said, has paid off magnificently.

"He's never done a musical before, but he gained all of that range that he needed," she said. "He worked so hard with his voice teacher that his range has completely expanded in the short period of time he had. Before we even got started he did a ton of work and that will be very evident in his performance. He's a hard working guy."

Adding to the fun is choreographer Karlos Saucedo, who also worked his magic in "Nine," as well as the last two incarnations of McQueen's annual Divas show; Ginny May on piano, as well as taking on one of the speaking roles in the play; Danny Wade on percussion; and a cast of 17 who go above and beyond to create the atmosphere necessary to make the show believable.

"They're a great, flexible ensemble who are willing to do whatever it takes, even if it means throwing on a wig and a mumu to play senior citizens," McQueen said. "They really take it and run with it, too. There is some exceptional character work going on in what could easily be throwaway parts. I'm really proud of them for that."

Even so, she understands that the greatest challenge of all may be in finding the right audience for the play.

"I can't really stress enough that this play is rated R," she said. "There is full nudity and quite a bit of language and they talk about sex. It's definitely an adult show, but at the same time, if people use discretion in bringing their teens to see it, they'll probably be pretty comfortable with them being there. It's a well-intended show. It's not gratuitous, but people should use their discretion. It's sweet and funny and inappropriate at times. Just like life."

"The Full Monty" runs at 8 p.m. Fridays, Aug. 15, 22 and 29, and Saturdays, Aug. 16, 23 and 30; as well as 2 p.m. Sundays, Aug.17, 24 and 31. That mythical mid-morning meal

Double Eagle hosts weekly champage brunch

By Zak Hansen Las Cruces Bulletin

I've never been a brunch guy.

I've heard stories of brunch – that mythical mid-morning meal with all-you-can-eat bacon and bottomless glasses of champagne – but I'd never experienced it myself. I've wasted a lot of years neglecting the finer things – it was 24 years until I first tried carrot cake and four more until I tasted an apricot – but no more.

While for many of my peers a late-morning meal after Sunday services has been a way of life, a rambunctious childhood all but excommunicated my family from the brunch scene.

After one particularly damning experience involving a filet of salmon, a bowl of chocolate mousse and a tantrum of epic proportions at an upper-crusty Indianapolis yacht club, my parents abandoned the enterprise entirely. I wouldn't blame them, either; the looks on those blue-bloods' faces must still haunt them.

Las Cruces Bulletin photo by Zak Hansen Double Eagle's Travis Welsh prepares omelets to order during the restaurant's Sunday champage brunch Aug. 3. The restaurant offers two seatings for the all-youcan-eat brunch buffet, at 11 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. I'm all grown up now, though, at least numbers-wise, and far less likely to instigate without avail a food fight – though it's not out of the question – so I thought I'd give this whole brunch thing a go, and perhaps nowhere in the Mesilla Valley is more renowned for its Sunday brunch than the Double Eagle.

Every Sunday, with seatings at 11 a.m. and 1:30 p.m., Double Eagle hosts its Sunday champagne brunch, a cornucopia of freshly made breakfast foods, more-substantial lunch fare and endlessly flowing wine.

According to general manager Jerry Harrell, Sunday brunch has been a part of Double Eagle's repertoire since it opened in 1972. Harrell said that while the meal is popular with locals, a large number of its diners make the trip up from El Paso and even Juárez, increasingly so as the situation south of the border got worse.

To hear Harrell tell it, Sunday champagne brunch at Double Eagle is an institution, and my brunch companion and I followed his lead, starting with a Green Chile Bloody Mary.

Made with premium vodka infused seven days with roasted Hatch green chile, the savory drink has just enough heat – but not overwhelming – making it the perfect way to ease in to a Sunday afternoon after a Saturday night's carousing.

Each week, executive chef Justin Sears and his crew prepare a bounty of breakfast and lunch items, and while the standards are always available, Sears keeps the menu fresh with new selections each week.

On this day, Sears' menu featured eggs benedict with country ham and green-chile hollandaise, pecan coffee cake, red chile pork stew, braised kale, fried catfish with spicy tartar sauce, green and red enchiladas, salmon nicoise salad and chicken and sausage etouffee, among many others.

Of course, breakfast basics are always a favorite, and they're in no short supply. Trays piled high with cheddar biscuits and gravy, bacon, sausage links, potato hash and more adorn each table. On one wall, a carved watermelon overflows with grapes, fresh-cut berries and melon; along the other, a chocolate fountain bubbles away, around it trays of skewered strawberries, cherries, marshmallows and bits of pastry ready for dipping.

At a carving station in one corner, an applewood-smoked ham with a rich pineapple glaze lies steaming and ready to slice. Adjacent, Sears' crew has a small sauté station set up where Travis Welsh prepares eggs to order and omelets loaded with ham, bacon, green chile, mushrooms, onions and peppers.

Back in the luxuriously adorned dining room, our lovely waitress Eileen Bermudez kept the drinks flowing, promptly providing us bottomless mimosas, frozen peach Bellinis and Double Eagle's signature margaritas – perfect any time of day but appropriate with breakfast as long as you call it brunch. In an article in an 1895 issue of "Hunter's Weekly," English au-

In an article in an 1895 issue of "Hunter's Weekly," English author Guy Beringer wrote, "Brunch is cheerful, sociable and inciting. It is talk-compelling. It puts you in a good temper, it makes you satisfied with yourself and your fellow beings, it sweeps away the worries and cobwebs of the week." I couldn't agree more.

Review by Zak Hansen Las Cruces Bulleti

With "Guardians of the Galaxy," the latest release in the ever-expanding Marvel Universe and by far the studio's biggest gamble yet, filmmaker James Gunn has made a big, ballsy, swashbuckling space epic hearkening back to the golden age of popcorn moviemaking, its closest analogues "Buckaroo Banzai" and the original and still-revered entries in both the "Indiana Jones" and "Star Wars" canons.

Simply put, it's perfect summer entertainment, full of spectacular action set pieces and stunning visuals with plenty of heart and humor to spare.

As "Guardians" opens, it is 1988, and young Peter Quill is having one hell of a traumatic day. Moments after his mother succumbs to cancer and takes her last breath, he's tractor-beamed into an intergalactic vessel piloted by the Ravagers, a band of interstellar thieves led by the blue-skinned, metal-toothed Yondu (Michael Rooker), with on his back and his mother's "Awesome Mix 1" winding away on his Walkman.

Twenty-six years later, and Quill (Chris Pratt) - or Starlord, as he prefers to be called - is all grown up, lurking through the ruins of planet Morag in search of a mysterious and coveted metal orb. He finds his mark, but is quickly ambushed by Korath (Djimon Honsou), the lackey of Ronan (Lee Pace), a fanatical warlord of the Kree people, a militaristic alien race, also in pursuit of the orb.

Quill makes his escape – though not without a few bungles and bruises - but soon, he's at the top of quite a few interstellar most wanted lists.

Back on the Nova Corps home world of Xandar, after attempting and failing to sell the orb to an intermediary, Quill is ambushed from all sides. Dispatched by Ronan, the greenskinned assassin Gamora (Zoe Saldana) takes the upper hand, but soon it's a free for all when a genetically engineered raccoon named Rocket (voiced by Bradley Cooper) and his hired muscle/tree-person Groot (Vin Diesel) come to collect the hefty bounty on Quill's head.

It's not long before the rumble is busted up by the Nova Corps, and this less-than-fantastic four is sent to waste away in interstellar prison.

GUARDIANS OF THE GALAXY Rated: PG-13 Running Time: 121 minutes Starring: Chris Pratt, Zoe Saldana Director: James Gunn tista), a powerful psychopath bent on avenging himself against Ronan, who slayed his family.

This motley crew of interstellar outlaws become the galaxy's final hope, until the orb falls into the hands of Ronan, hell bent on using its ancient and staggering powers to wipe the galaxy free of those races and places he sees as unfit. Together, bound by a common cause, these five will become the Guardians of the Galaxy.

Several superhero movies of late have suffered from origin-story overload - any questions on how Peter Parker became Spider-Man, still? - but by selecting a lesser-known cult classic tale from its expansive archives, the team at Marvel avoid that entirely. The story seems fresh from the start, and even the more familiar aspects of the superhero ascension story are turned on their ear or eschewed entirely.

While the story arc may be obvious spoiler alert, the protagonists come out on top – "Guardians of the Galaxy" doesn't just seem like the first time you've heard this movie; it's closer to rediscovering the magic of the first time you fell in love with a movie.

I'm too young to know myself, but that wonder - that true distillation of movie magic - previous generations got from "A New Hope" and "Raiders of the Lost Ark" is right here for a new generation. It's truly that good.

The main reason "Guardians" is so good is that it takes itself so unseriously. In a genre increasingly populated by mopey Nolan clones, director Gunn dared to be different, taking the irreverence and sense of humor on display in "Iron Man" and "The Avengers" and ramping it up, but never at the expense of the emotional heft his film carries. Its jokes careen back and forth from the broad to the cerebral, ping-ponging across four decades of pop culture with precision, dashed with just enough 1980s nostalgia to get at the heart of a Gen X-er like me.

It's a tightrope act, balancing serious and silly this way, and "Guardians" does so on the back of its greatest strength, its cast. Opting to cast its three lead roles with less-than superstars - and placing its A-listers in voice and motion capture roles alone - the producers took a gamble, and it paid off.

What very easily could have been the film's Jar Jar Binks – a talking raccoon and a grumbling tree-person - instead turns out to be one of its finest assets. Rocket, always the wiseass, gets just the right amount of snark from Cooper without losing the charm. As Groot, Diesel manages to get a lot of mileage out of a threeword vocabulary. They're not just comedic relief, though – by halfway through, you'll empathize more with a rodent and a root than a thousand soulless Michael Bay creations.

One of the unlikeliest surprises is Bautista as the madman Drax. What seems initially to be a terrible casting decision quickly turns into one of "Guardians" strongest roles. As a muscle-bound, revenge-minded maniac with no understanding of metaphor ... oh, never mind, I don't want to ruin it.

Strong backing aside, the heft of "Guardians" falls squarely on Pratt's shoulders, and he carries it all the way. The "Parks & Recreation" resident goofball tones down the buffoonery, but not all the way, making Quill exactly the kind of hero we want to root for. He's channeling Harrison Ford's best-loved characters; he's got Han's swagger, never comes out unscathed like Indiana and has the wisecracks to best them both.

The visual effects are stunning, truly some of the best to grace the silver screen, and the worlds created, from the antiseptic suburban lines of Xandar to the nebulae mining world of Knowhere - built into the floating head of a long-dead galactic giant - "Guardians" brings to the screen a fully realized world, one populated with some of the most interesting characters this side of the Mos Eisley cantina.

'Empty Hours' aptly named Patience pays off with languid pacing all the more important.

Review by Jeff Berg

For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Combining a fiction of loneliness, boredom and coming of age, "The Empty Hours" at times feels like an empty hour and a half, due to its languid pacing - but viewers with patience will find a tale mostly well told.

Taking place entirely in a somewhat rundown motel where lovers often come to pay by the hour and indicate occupancy by pulling a cloth curtain to close off their carport space, 17-year-old Sebastian arrives to temporarily watch over his uncle's enterprise.

The motel is set in a desolate area of Mexico's gulf coast, somewhere near Veracruz, and is not exactly a hot spot for tourists who want to visit the beach. It is a hot spot, if you'll excuse the pun, for those wanting a quickie.

Sebastian is given brief instruction and keys and told by his uncle that he will be back soon. He also shares his plans to renovate the place, subtly suggesting to Sebastian that he might just have the time to start in on said decorating skills.

With Sebastian are two other employees – an older man who serves as night manager and a laundress. A maid is conspicuously absent and it falls upon Sebastian to take up the cleaning chores.

It is all very casual and Sebastian is not very moved by the lovers who come and go, sometimes with an embarrassing infrequency. Business is slow.

There is one regular however, the lovely Miranda, who meets her lover, when he decides to show up, at the "No Tell Motel." Miranda lives in the area, trying to sell nottoo-exciting condos to potential buyers. The tedium makes the arrival of Mario, her lover,

She strikes up a casual friendship with Sebastian and if you look hard, you can see Sebastian slowly develop a serious crush on the somewhat older Miranda. That fuse burns longer, albeit still too slowly, when he finds out that his stay will be extended, due to Uncle Gerry's continued absence.

Miranda's frustration and loneliness builds, as Mario breaks date after date and business for the condos is slower than slow.

To help pass the time, Sebastian starts to invent stories about the motel's patrons, trying to figure out who they are and why they are there. The funniest one involves what one might say is a look at a "gay caballero."

The film's pacing is deliberately slow, since the place and characters lives are also very slow. Miranda has little success with the few condo clients that happen by and Sebastian spends most of his time cleaning rooms, looking for better cell phone coverage and listening to his iPod.

Watch carefully, however, as the slow

The film could easily be 15 minutes shorter and there is a fair amount of mostly off-screen sex, with the female participants being quite boisterous. Direction is more than adequate and the setting is perfect.

flame ignites within him.

'The Empty Hours" won't stay with you long, but it is a perfectly acceptable way to relax near the beach for 90 minutes.

Winged wonders take center stage at the Chihuahuan Desert Nature Park, 56501 N. Jornada Road, when the Butterfly Flutterby draws attention to the wide variety of butterflies living in the desert from 9.a.m. to noon Saturday, Aug. 16.

On the wings of wonderment Asombro Institute hosts 12th annual Butterfly Flutterby

By Zak Hansen Las Cruces Bulletin

"Asombro" in Spanish means wonder or amazement, and of all the creatures that make their homes in the wide deserts of southern New Mexico, none are more wondrously beautiful than the variety of species of butterfly that populate the Chihuahuan Desert.

To that end, the Asombro Institute for Science Education holds its Butterfly Flutterby one morning a year dedicated to all things butterfly. From 9 a.m. to noon Saturday, Aug. 16, at the vast Chihuahuan Desert Nature Park, 56501 N. Jornada Road, comes alive with games, activities, arts and crafts and educational booths centered on the lovely Lepidoptera.

The Butterfly Flutterby started small with a group of census takers counting butterflies in the area for a national count conducted by the North American Butterfly Association, similar to bird counts held by the Audubon Society. With so much information gained, several of the counters – who were also associated with the Asombro Institute – wanted to share what they'd learned about local butterfly populations with a larger audience.

Thus the Butterfly Flutterby was born and, in the 12 years since, "it's grown and expanded and become an incredibly popular event every year for people of all ages, especially families," said Asombro Institute Executive Director Stephanie Bestelmeyer.

Bestelmeyer said the Butterfly Flutterby typically draws 200 to 300 visitors each year, many of them visiting the nature park for their first time. In recent years, though, she said she's seen an uptick in the number of those coming back year after year.

"After their first visit, a lot of families have made the Butterfly Flutterby and annual tradition and come out every time," she said.

Among this year's attractions are presentations given by park experts on what populations of butterfly exist within the region and how to identify them. Also, area master gardeners will give a course on what to plant at home to draw beautiful butterflies to your own backyard, with seeds on hand to get your butterfly garden started.

In addition, Las Cruces children's author Patricia Mihok will be on hand. Mihok is an educator at the Asombro Institute and the author of "A Glimpse of the Chihuahuan Desert: Una Vislumbre del Desierto Chihuahuense," which introduces readers to the unique desert region, written in both English and Spanish.

Not only does the annual Butterfly Flutterby serve as a way to learn more about the diverse butterfly populations in southern New Mexico, but helps to draw visitors out to the Chihuahuan Desert Nature Park, which holds much more than just butterflies within its boundaries.

"Butterflies are one of those things people always love to look at, and the more you learn about them, the more fascinating they become," Bestelmeyer said. "This is a chance to get outside a little bit, get out to the park and learn more about all of what is out here."

The Asombro Institute for Science Education is a nonprofit organization dedicated to increasingly and improving scientific literacy by fostering an understanding of the Chihuahuan Desert, an area of more than 140,000 miles on the U.S.-Mexico border that includes parts of Arizona, Texas and New Mexico as well as the Mexican states of Chihuahua, Coahuila, Durango, Zacatecas and Nuevo León.

The organization currently serves more than 19,000 K-12 students in New Mexico and west Texas each year, with programs taking place in the classroom, in the schoolyard and at the park itself.

The park itself makes up nearly 1,000 acres of land in the Doña Ana Mountains situated north of Las Cruces. Its diverse topography and biology makes it the perfect learning tool found right in the city's backyard.

Remains of the roast

Giving spicy new life to Crock-Pot leftovers

Sunny Conley Chile Knights

It had been several months since I made a pot roast in a Crock-Pot, so when I spotted a three pounder on sale at a local grocery store, I didn't resist.

Unless feeding a houseful, there will be leftovers – an ideal excuse to get creative. Rather than serving "straight" with Mom's carrot and taters, consider whipping up a batch of red sauced roast beef enchiladas, roast beef chile emblazoned tacos or spicy roast beef and cream cheese stuffed poblanos – mouth searing experiences that promise an unforgettable Mesilla Valley endorphin high.

Sunday's Leftover Pot Roast Enchiladas

Leftover pot roast shredded

- 4 to 6 roasted green chiles, stemmed, seeded and chopped
- 1 (10-ounce) can hot enchilada sauce
- 1 (20-ounce) can mild enchilada sauce
- 10 (6-inch) corn tortillas
- 1/2 cup cilantro, chopped
- 2 cups Monterey Jack cheese, shredded

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Place the leftover pot roast, chiles and cilantro in a bowl and stir together. Mix the two cans of enchilada sauce together in a bowl. Pour sauce in a 9-by-13-inch baking dish to cover the entire bottom.

Place the beef mixture at the edge of each tortilla, roll up tightly and layer in the dish seam side down. Continue until the dish is filled.

Pour the remaining sauce over the enchiladas. Make sure to cover the enchiladas entirely so they don't dry up in the oven. Sprinkle the cheese over the top.

Place in oven for 40 minutes, until the cheese is browned and bubbling. Serve with sour cream on the side. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Peppered Pot Roast Tacos

- 1/2 cup sweet onion, chopped
- 2 garlic cloves, minced 1 1/2 teaspoons chili powder
- 1 1/2 teaspoons chill powde 1 teaspoon ground cumin
- 1/2 teaspoon smoked paprika
- 1/2 teaspoon snoked papirka 1/2 teaspoon crushed red pepper flakes
- 1/4 teaspoon salt 4 medium-hot green chile peppers,
- roasted, peeled, stemmed and chopped About two pounds leftover pot roast shredded
- 1 tablespoon extra virgin olive oil for stir fry

Taco shells or 8-inch flour tortillas Garnish: chopped tomatoes, shredded lettuce and shredded Mexican cheese blend Add olive oil to a skillet and heat over medium-hot stove burner until oil sizzles. Add onion and garlic. Brown, stirring often with a wooden spoon.

In a small bowl, combine remaining ingredients. Add to skillet and stir fry until ingredients are heated.

Place 1/2 cup meat mixture on each taco shell. Top with tomatoes, lettuce and cheese. Makes 8 tacos.

Stuffed Poblano Pepper Pot Roast

8 large poblano peppers 4 dried ancho chiles 2 tablespoons canola oil 3 cups onion, chopped 10 garlic cloves, minced 1 teaspoon kosher salt, divided

1 teaspoon black pepper About 12 ounces leftover pot roast, shredded and chopped

4 ounces cream cheese, softened 1 1/2 cups precooked brown rice

(such as Uncle Ben's Ready Rice) 6 ounces queso fresco, crumbled and divided (about 1 1/2 cups) 1/4 cup fresh-squeezed lime juice

1 tablespoon ground cumin

- 2 teaspoons sugar
- 2 (14.5-ounce) cans petite diced tomatoes with green chile, undrained

Cooking spray 1/4 cup cilantro leaves Preheat broiler. Place poblanos on a foil-lined baking sheet. Broil three inches from heat for 12 minutes or until blackened, turning after six minutes. Place in a paper bag; fold to close tightly. Let stand 15 minutes. Peel and discard skins. Cut a lengthwise slit in each pepper; discard seeds and membranes. Set aside.

While poblanos broil, place ancho chiles in a bowl. Cover with boiling water and let stand 10 minutes. Drain. Reduce oven temperature to 400 degrees.

Heat a large skillet over medium heat. Add oil to pan and swirl to coat. Add onion and garlic, then cook four minutes or until crisp-tender. Reserve half of onion mixture. Add 1/2 teaspoon salt, black pepper and beef and cook for eight minutes or until beef is done, stirring to crumble. Remove from heat. Add cream cheese, stirring until well combined. Stir in rice and half of queso fresco.

Place ancho chiles, reserved onion mixture, juice, cumin, sugar, tomatoes and remaining 1/2 teaspoon salt in a blender and process until smooth. Pour one cup sauce into each of two (8-inch) square glass or ceramic baking dishes coated with cooking spray.

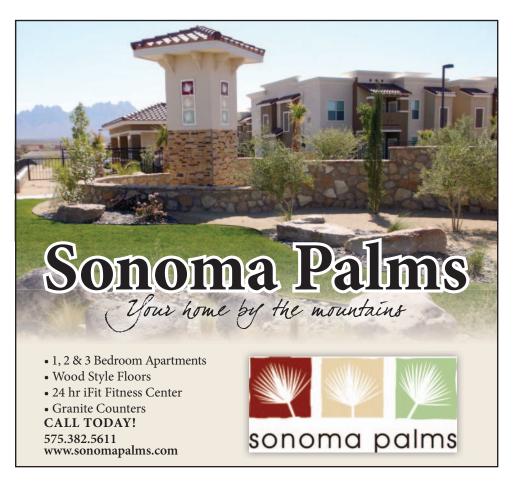

Open each poblano chile and flatten slightly with hand. Divide pot roast mixture evenly among chiles. Arrange four chiles in each dish and top evenly with remaining sauce and queso. Bake at 400 degrees for 20 minutes or until bubbly. Sprinkle with cilantro after cooking. Makes 8 peppers.

The reasonableness of virtue Project Oak Tree aims to make America good again

Rev. Mr. Tom Baca Dwelling Places

Project Oak Tree is a Las Cruces-based project that demonstrates the virtue of "hospitality" to the lost and forgotten immigrants fleeing from violence and poverty in their homelands.

The project gets its name from the story in the book of Genesis in which Abraham welcomes three strangers.

He had no idea who they really were. They could have been angels, the Holy Trinity, men from outer space or whatever appeals to you if you are a Scientologist.

He welcomes them by the "shade of an oak tree" and decides to set up tents for each of them. He asks his wife, Sara, to bring them refreshment, as they must have come a long way in the desert.

In this sense, Bishop Oscar Cantu's overture on behalf of the church is not a political statement, but rather a recognition of the God-created dignity of all human beings. Borders do not attenuate dignity. Poverty does not attenuate dignity. Our country can claim its overabundance not by our own efforts to acquire or grasp at prosperity, but rather to afford the fruited plain and purple mountains' majesty to 'your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free, the wretched refuse of your teeming shore, send these, the homeless, tempest-tost to me, I lift my lamp beside the golden door!"

Those great words by Emma Lazarus, etched on Ellis Island's Statue of Liberty (not statue of immigration), document the basis of our greatness. The words reflected a welcome to the unsolicited masses coming with all their poverty, their anxiety and also their potential. Those words reflected a respect for that cry from the Declaration of Independence which says, "All men are created equal with the inalienable right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

The forefathers wrote these words so it would not be forgotten that liberty is not a "law" endowed right but a God-given right.

On the social and in the printed media there are stories of resentment and vitriol over the manner in which our government has dealt with the challenge of dealing with the mass movement of peoples northward. Perhaps it is God's way of making up for the damage we have created in the wholesale support of aborting our future leaders in the denial of their right to life.

This is sending us into what has been termed "demographic winter," wherein there will not be enough of a work force to pay the taxes to support the need when the Boomers, Gen X and the Millenials get to retirement age. That saga has already begun.

Let me say that if anything has proven the ineffectiveness of the ridiculous wall built to insulate us from this phenomenon, this mass movement of people is proof enough. Demolish the wall and use the steel to build homes and factories instead. But I digress.

I keep hearing: "These people are breaking the law. We can't pick and choose." Well some laws are based upon unjust causes, deriving their powers, instead, from "light and transient causes."

Alexis deTocqueville writes, "I sought for the key to the greatness and the genius of America in her harbors ... in her fertile fields and boundless forests ... in her public school system and institutions of learning ... in her democratic Congress and in her matchless Constitution. Not until I went into the churches of America and heard her pulpits flame with righteousness did I understand the secret of her genius and power. America is great because America is good, and if America ever ceases to be good, America will cease to be great."

Cantu, Lonnie Briseno, Ruben Garcia and the interfaith community of Las Cruces are making America good again. Our greatness will be a foregone conclusion. Anything less will result in our own demise.

In the latter fifth century, Bishop Augustine of Hippo knew this well. He watched as the Vandals sought to defeat a Roman Empire that had deteriorated to a nation of unjust laws based upon "light and transient causes." Still, Augustine preferred terms for peace among reasonable men of good will.

Reason and virtue must be the basis of policy, laws and social action. Project Oak Tree is indeed reasonable and virtuous.

Does language really matter?

Rorie Measure The Reading Solution

Anyone who reads this column regularly knows that the importance of talking to and sharing books with young children is a recurring theme. Parents who don't read English

Parents who don't read English sometimes wonder how they can share books with their children because they have been told to avoid confusing their children with two languages. Unfortunately, this out-dated thinking actually interferes with important literacy skill development.

Taking part in family conversation is a valuable opportunity for children to develop their language skills. A family's first language is the scaffolding on which literacy is built, no matter which language is spoken. In fact, mastery of a second language thrives on a good foundation in the language spoken at home. A child's language development is built on listening to and communicating with the family. A talk-rich environment, whatever the language, is the key factor in language development. The American Speech-Language

The American Speech-Language and Hearing Association says parents should support and build the first language as children learn the second.

According to Marlene B. Salas-Provance of the Garrett Speech and Hearing Center at New Mexico State University, "The first language is the foundation for the second language. In addition, it is the language of 'love'; the language in which parents, grandparents, cousins and aunts communicate. If a young child is separated from that circle of communication, a valuable developmental tool is taken away."

According to literature from the Garrett Center, "There are some additional things to be aware of as your child is developing language. Your 1-year-old should be alert to her surroundings, follow simple commands, such as 'come to mama or ven a mama,' and try to make babbling sounds like 'mama and dada.'

"Two-year-old children should be putting two words together, such as 'no quiero or up now;' however, the sounds in the words may not all be clear. By 3 years of age, your child should be using short phrases and sentences to communicate."

Joseph Paz began his battle with methicillinresistant staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) at 16, resulting in multiple surgeries on his heart and leg. As part of Paz's internship with MRSA Survivors Network, he organized Miles for MRSA, a 5K fun run and walk to raise awareness about MRSA in the community. Miles for MRSA will be held at 8 a.m. Saturday, Aug. 9, at La Llorona Park.

Las Crucen raises MRSA awareness 5K fun run and walk to be held Saturday in La Llorona Park

By Tara Melton Las Cruces Bulletin

After open heart and leg surgeries at age 16, planning a 5K doesn't seem so scary to Joseph Paz.

While at a family reunion in Cloudcroft in 2011, Paz began having leg pain severe enough to send him to the emergency room. After being released, he followed up with his primary care doctor, who had him checked for a blood clot. Paz, a cross-country runner and basketball player at Mayfield High School, indeed had a blood clot.

"At that point, there was a lot of confusion as to what could be going on because it's not very common for a 16-year-old who runs cross country and plays basketball to contract a blood clot – it just doesn't happen," Paz said.

I was told I was going to need a pacemaker without a doubt. Well, I'm not on a pacemaker now.

> JOSEPH PAZ, MRSA survivor and Miles for MRSA organizer

After a series of tests, it was concluded that Paz had methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus (MRSA), a bacteria resistant to most antibiotics and a type of staph that has mutated in the past 50 years. The tests also showed that MRSA had spread to Paz's heart.

At University Medical Center in El Paso, doctors operated a few times on Paz's leg and did an open heart surgery, where the aortic valve was replaced. When symptoms and vitals improved, things seemed to be looking up, but sudd enly Paz's condition plummeted.

Paz was airlifted to Texas Children's Hospital, where he had a second open heart surgery to replace his aortic valve again.

"I was told I was going to need a pacemaker without a doubt," Paz said. "Well, I'm not on a pacemaker now."

A few miracles happened along the way, but it wasn't over.

Paz developed a hematoma, which is a collection of blood outside of a blood vessel. He most likely developed the hematoma from the blood thinners he was taking to keep from developing clots, but this also complicated the frequent surgeries.

"If they operate and I've been on blood thinners consecutively and I'm at a therapeutic level, than I run the risk of continuing to bleed when they close me up," Paz said.

The entire experience lasted for three months, which Paz said he considers fairly short considering the number of surgeries he'd undergone in that time.

Three years later, the battle still isn't over. Paz had a reoccurrence of MRSA this summer and now has osteoarthritis as a result of the infection. "It kind of just ate up all the cartilage on the inside of my knee and so I saw a lot of orthopaedic doctors to see what kind of treatment options were available, because that's what's really keeping me from running again or playing basketball again," Paz said, noting that he has not found anything promising but is hopeful.

Now age 19, Paz is currently a chemical ngineering student at the University of New Mexico and an intern at the MRSA Survivors Network. Having been a part of the active community during his running days, Paz felt the best way to reach out to the community was to hold a 5K fun run and walk, so he planned and organized Miles for MRSA, a 5K fun run and walk on Saturday, Aug. 9, in La Llorona Park.

Danny Gonzalez of the Mesquite Volunteer Fire Department was one of the last to give blood at Mesilla Valley Mall Sunday, Aug. 3, at the end of a three-day blood drive called the Battle of Badges. For the second year in a row, the Doña Ana County Sheriff's Office won the battle with 88 votes – given following blood donations – compared to 65 for the Las Cruces Fire Department and 35 for Las Cruces Police Department. The drive highlights the need for adequate blood supply during the summer months when increased traffic contributes to higher numbers of motor vehicle crashes. "In our area, about 5 percent of the population provides for 100 percent of our blood needs," said Monique Hilverding, a donor recruitment representative for United Blood Services. "Every two seconds, someone needs blood. That's why blood drives like Battle of the Badges are so crucial."

Paz said he hopes this event raises as much awareness of MRSA as possible and educates Las Crucens about what MRSA is capable of.

"When I tell people I've had MRSA they're like 'Oh, OK,' not knowing necessarily what it is, but then when I tell them I've had two open heart surgeries then it's a big deal," Paz said. "People need to hear that, people need to understand what this bacteria is capable of doing and most importantly, are the basic precautions they can take."

Paz said MRSA and antibiotic-resistance in general are important because they have reached epidemic levels in the nation.

"The rate of antibiotic-resistance-bacteria are popping up and the rate of new antibiotics are not equal," Paz said. "Antibiotic-resistant bacteria are shooting up in numbers and different types of strains and so it's very important for people to realize that this is something that needs to be worked on and needs a lot of focus, time and energy."

Tickets for Miles for MRSA are $20 for students, $25 for adults and free for children. Registration begins at 6:45 a.m. Saturday. All proceeds of Miles for MRSA will go to MRSA Survivors Network, a global leader in raising awareness for the cause.

C24 | Health & Well Being Las Cruces Bulletin Friday, August 8, 2014 Immunization clinics offered around town Back-to-school shots administered for no cost Details

The Las Cruces Central Public Health Office will be hosting back-to-school immunization clinics from 8:45 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Monday, Aug. 11 and Tuesday, Aug. 12. at the Cineport 10 movie theater in Mesilla Valley Mall, 700 S. Telshor Blvd.

Childhood immunizations are the most effective preventive health intervention, resulting in a 90 percent reduction in vaccine preventable diseases since the 1950s. Immunizations are required for children attending day care and school.

The clinic is open to the public and immunizations will be administered at no cost. All parents have to do is bring a copy of their child's shot record and Medicaid or private health insurance card if they have one.

The special clinic is part of the Got Shots? Protect Tots! immunization campaign. The New Mexico Department of Health, the New Mexico Immunization Coalition, the New Mexico Primary Care Association and health care providers from across the state are partnering again to host immunization clinics from August 2-16 for children 18 years old and younger.

For more information on the no-charge immunization clinic, call 523-7991, Ext. 110.

The New Mexico Department of Health announced its Las Cruces Central Public Health Office, 1170 N. Solano Drive also began accepting appointments for adult immunizations on Tuesday, Aug. 4, at its Preventive Medicine Clinic.

Immunizations include the Tdap vaccine, recommended for all pregnant women at each pregnancy. Tdap vaccine protects against tetanus, diphtheria and pertussis, better known as whooping cough.

Anyone who is going to be around an infant should also make sure they have been vaccinated with Tdap before coming in contact with an infant. This strategy, known as "cocooning," was first recommended by United States Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in 2006. The principle behind this strategy is by assuring everyone around an infant has been vaccinated, the risk of transmission of whooping cough to the vulnerable infant can be reduced.

Other adult vaccinations available include vaccines for hepatitis A and B for at-risk persons. There is also a pneumonia vaccination available for residents ages 65 and older or any adult 19 years and older who is a cigarette smoker or has pre-existing respiratory issues such as asthma, lung disease or COPD.

The immunization services within the Preventive Medicine Clinic are available to the public every week from 8 a.m. to noon and 1 to 5 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday from 8 a.m. to noon and 1 to 7 p.m. Wednesdays. Bring insurance, Medicaid and Medicare cards.

For more information on adult immunizations, call 523-7335.
