Martinez, King race wraps up

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

Tuesday, Nov. 4, is Election Day, which could change the balance of power in the U.S. Senate for the last two years of Barack Obama's presidency, but will determine the tenor of the next four years in state government.

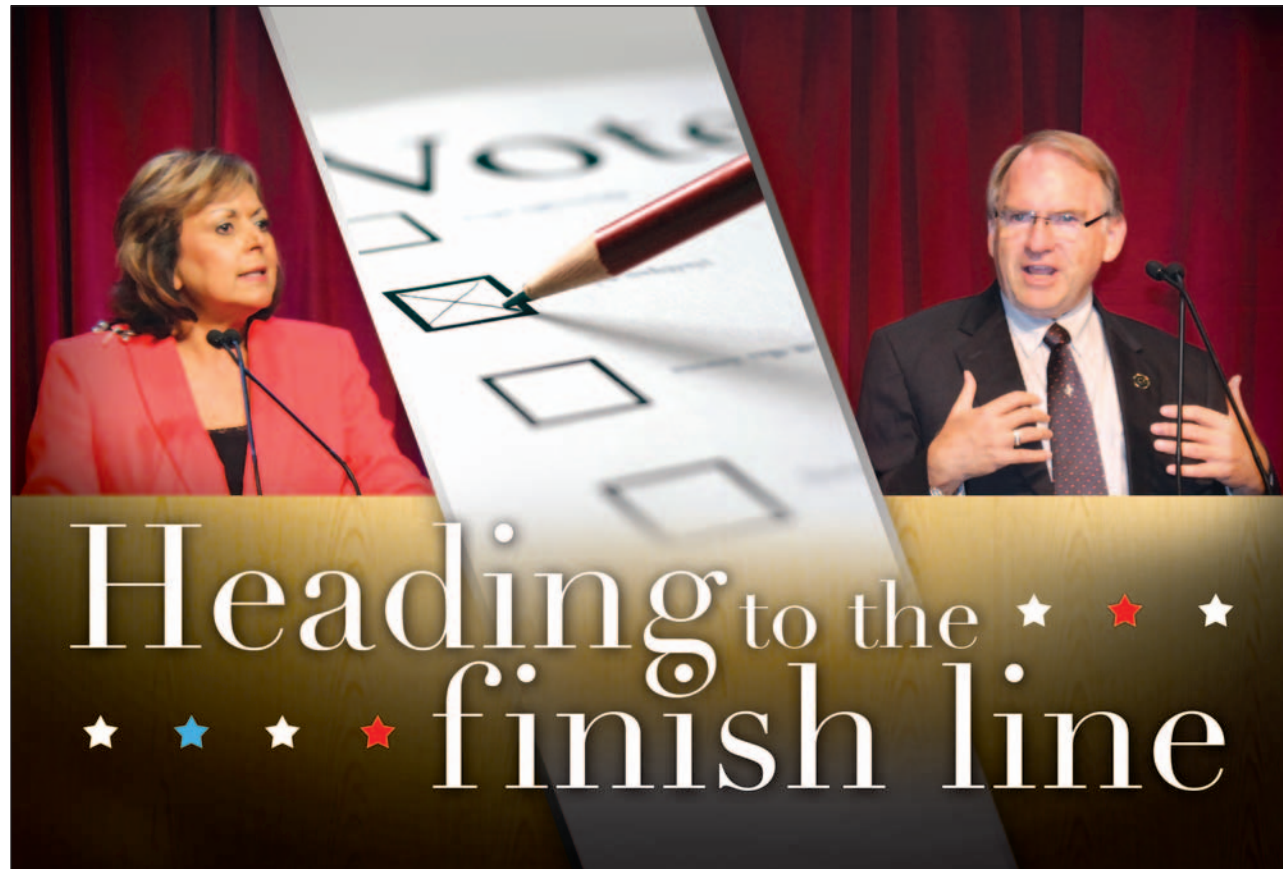

The most recent polling has Republican Gov. Susana Martinez enjoying a comfortable lead in her re-election bid over Democratic challenger Attorney General Gary King. Both have made appearances in Las Cruces.

Martinez, Doña Ana County's former district attorney, has been emphasizing her successes in education, job creation and balancing the budget. King has been critical of her emphasis on the low rating for child welfare given to New Mexico and said not enough jobs have been created. While she cites balanced budgets as evidence of her ability to gain bipartisan results, he dismisses it as the Legislature's duty to produce a balanced budget regardless of who is in office.

Martinez said she still believes the Legislature needs to pass her proposal to hold students back if they aren't reading proficiently by the third grade. Lawmakers resistant to the proposal ignore that she also calls for intensive early intervention for bringing students up to reading proficiency before they enter the third grade.

King favors putting more money into early childhood education and supports using money from the state permanent funds for it.

Council moves to $10.10 wage path

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

In a work session, Monday, Oct. 27, a majority of the Las Cruces City Council favored going ahead with the most recent minimum wage proposal it passed and repealing its earlier more moderate increase.

But that doesn't mean the minimum wage will inevitably reach $10.10 by 2017, as proposed by what was originally a ballot initiative championed by Comunidades en Acción y de Fé (CAFé). The wage will first increase from $7.50 an hour to $8.40 on Jan. 1, 2015. A year later, the wage would increase to $9.20 an hour. After reaching $10.10 an hour in 2017, future increases would be determined by the cost of living index, ac-

UP Aerospace launches again from spaceport

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

At sunrise Thursday, Oct. 23, UP Aerospace successfully launched from Spaceport America, carrying experiments for NASA, as well as a payload of ash remains.

The launch was postponed from Monday, Oct. 20, because of weather, which worked in favor of the flight. With clear, nearly windless condition, Aerospace's SpaceLoft rocket SL-9 reached its highest elevation to date – an estimated 407,862 feet, or about 77 miles above the Earth's surface.

This was only the second time weather has delayed launch at Spaceport America out of 21 total launches so far, said Bill Gutman, technical operations manager for Spaceport America. One of the selling points for the spaceport in the desert 45 miles north of Las Cruces is

Now's the time to treat – or test for – diabetes

Brook Stockberger
Taking a look

A phone call came from my doctor in April 2001, right to my desk at work. She confirmed what she already suspected: I had type 2 diabetes.

I felt a pit in my stomach. I immediately starting to beat myself up. "This is my own fault," the angry part of my brain said. "I brought this on myself."

"Will I lose my eyesight?" the scared part of my scared brain asked. "Will I lose toes?"

"What's next?" the confused part of my brain asked.

I made up my mind to not tell anyone, even though that was unrealistic. Within minutes I was already calling family members. Years later, my mother, who kept an even voice 1,800 miles away in Pennsylvania when I called her with the news, told me she was devastated and prayed for me throughout the night.

I visited my doctor the next day and, with a prescription for pills and a pamphlet in hand, I walked out the door to live my first full day as an official diabetic.

Thirteen-and-a-half years later and multiple medicine changes later, I'm on insulin and can control my blood sugar with proper diet.

November is American Diabetes Month and the perfect time to learn more about, be tested for and/or start to treat diabetes.

About 1 in 10 adults in New Mexico have diabetes according to statistics from a 2013 study titled "The State of Obesity in New Mexico."

There are two types of diabetes. They are type 1, when your body does not produce enough insulin or stops producing the hormone altogether, or type 2, when your body does not process insulin correctly.

I'm obviously not a medical professional and everyone is different, however, standard treatments include oral medications and/or insulin along with diet control and exercise.

If you suspect you have diabetes or are in danger of getting the disease or if you have a family history, check in with your doctor for a blood test. You can call the hospitals to ask about classes.

You can also contact Southern New Mexico Diabetes Outreach at 522-0289. The website is www.snmdo.org. The group has a Diabetes Wellness Day Seminar scheduled from 8 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 15, at Alma D'Arte School, 402 W. Court Ave.

Information on diabetes is available from the state online at www.nmhealth.org/about/phd/cdb/dpcp.

Negative ads: The American way?

As in every election season, the majority of political ads tout not the positive attributes of the candidate, but the negative aspects of the opponent. What if other products marketed themselves this way?

Which burger would you vote for?

(Black-and-white film. Fade in to a dilapidated merry-go-round with warped callope music.)

VOICE OVER: Their sign says billions and billions served. But just what and who are they serving? (Close-up on clown with tattered clothes, a deep frown.) How can you trust an organization whose primary figurehead is, quite literally, a clown? This organization's persistent use of Mc and Mac for its products furthers the oppression on non-Irish ethnicities. The American way, as we all know from our backyard cookouts celebrating our Independence and our fallen soldiers, is to cook a hamburger over an open flame. Yet this organization refuses, time and again to cook their burgers this way. How can you trust them?

(Scene turns to color, with a benevolent, smiling king patting the head of small children of many cultures, in a field of lush green grass as orchestral music by American composer Aaron Copland plays.)

VO: Burger King loves America. We'll never serve a burger that's not been cooked over an open flame, maybe sprinkled with a little salt, pepper and a whole lot of love. We've told you again and again, you can have it your way. That, my friends, is what democracy is all about.

Cola conundrum: What's right for America?

(Fade to a crumbling asphalt road, littered with tattered, plastic Coke bottles and battered aluminum Coke cans. Sound effects: Dramatic, scattered rain and wind blowing rattling cans.)

VO: Coca-Cola wants you to believe it's the "real thing." Or "Coke is it." Those are two of many slogans Coca-Cola has used. Well, which is it? "It" or the "real thing." With all the flip-flopping, you just can't trust Coca-Cola. And what about "Coca-Cola Classic?" They want us to believe Coke Classic is like the Coke from the old days. The old Coke had real cane sugar. Now the supposedly "classic" Coke is loaded with high fructose corn syrup, abusing government subsidies on corn. The stuff with the red logo (Hmmm, red, the same color commonly associated with communism ...) also has a sordid past, including numerous well-known collaborations with cocaine and Jack Daniel's whiskey.

(Fade in as road quality improves, rain lets up, sun begins to shine as small wooden stand appears on side of road with RC Cola logo. Birds begin chirping as a rainbow comes into view.)

VO: Royal Crown Cola makes no false pretenses about its product, "great taste since 1905," and a taste fit for royalty. If you have any doubts about RC Cola's veracity, check the colors: red, white and blue. Royal Crown Cola: Right for America, right for you.

It sounds over the top, but compared to ads we've heard, these are perfectly ordinary.

Many thanks

El Caldito Soup Kitchen's Board of Directors would like to thank the Potters' Guild of Las Cruces for sponsoring the 22nd Empty Bowls fundraiser. Each year the event grows and gets better and better. We are grateful to St. Paul's United Methodist Church, for continuing to donate the space for Empty Bowls.

Many restaurants throughout Las Cruces and in Mesilla generously donated three to five gallons of soup. New Mexico State University students were out early picking up the donated soup and delivering it to the church.

Several local businesses sold tickets, provided other in-kind services and helped to promote Empty Bowls. Two more groups of people who need be thanked are the volunteers who worked all day and the individuals who made monetary contributions. Last, but not least, you, the people of our community, who bought tickets and attended Empty Bowls also helped to make this event a success.

A special thank you to Todd Dickson and the Las Cruces Civitan Club for washing dishes throughout the day of Empty Bowls and for Todd's ability to put photographs and articles in the Las Cruces Bulletin.

Doña Ana County 'Your Partner in Progress'

Workshops benefit area non-profits

Doña Ana County, in partnership with several federal banking regulators, hosted workshops last week aimed at identifying the financial needs of the community and strengthening relationships between lenders and the communities they serve.

The workshops were held Oct. 21-22 at the Doña Ana County Government Center. Doña Ana County Manager Julia T. Brown characterized them as "a rousing success that matched resources with need and enabled a level of networking that we have not before seen locally."

Both meetings featured representatives from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas, and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, as well as local banking officials and representatives of several non-profit.

Brown, who arranged the workshops, said she did so to position county government to proactively strengthen partnerships with community organizations who serve the county in a variety of areas, such as social services, housing, education and business development and to directly involve county government in economic development.

"These workshops were the first steps in achieving that goal," Brown said. "We're invested in leading the way toward better financial planning and better services, and we are moving toward those goals."

The 2014 Doña Ana County employees' costume contest will get underway at 2:30 p.m. today in the main rotunda of the Doña Ana County Government Center, with winners receiving prizes donated by the Employee Activity Committee.

Refreshments will be available for participants and the public in the employee break-room at the north end of the building following the judging of the costume contest.

Several offices in the Government Center will be decorated for the day. Judging for the best-decorated office will begin at 10:30 a.m.

Representatives from Geo-Test, the Las Cruces Public Schools Operations Center, and Farm Credit of New Mexico have agreed to judge both contests.

The Doña Ana County Employee Activity Committee raises funds throughout the year to facilitate employee-morale initiatives without the use of taxpayer funds.

Each year, the costume event draws dozens of employee contestants from both Doña Ana County and the Third Judicial District Attorney's Office. Categories for prizes include Funniest Costume, Scariest Costume and Most Original Costume.

The public is encouraged to attend.

Amigo Airsho patrons advised of traffic, parking protocols

Motorists are advised to use caution along two widely-traveled southern Doña Ana County roads next weekend as the Doña Ana County International Jetport in Santa Teresa hosts the 2014 Amigo Airsho this weekend. Westbound traffic along Artcraft is expected to be congested from 8 a.m. to dark on Saturday and Sunday. Airport Road from Pete Domenici to McNutt will be closed, and Airsho patrons will be routed to the parking area.

Roping Roy, the wonderful western mascot

Michael Swickard
In My Opinion

Sometimes things matter little in the grand scheme of things but matter much to me. Historical truth is one of those things. Last week, Oklahoma State University and New Mexico State University got officially crossways over their mutual mascot Pistol Pete.

Truth be known, I know the story better than most, since it is my article from the 1980s that touched this dispute off. You might wonder: Why did it take 25 years to come to lawyers?

That is not what bothers me. For me the problem is: when NMSU was made aware, they decided to lie their way out rather than be a stand-up institution.

As to Pistol Pete, I thought years ago NMSU would say, "Whoops," and pick a better mascot such as my suggestion "Roping Roy, the wonderful western mascot." Best I can tell, the name is still open if NMSU can muster a "Whoops" about Pistol Pete.

Pistol Pete is one of five historical issues I have had with NMSU over the years. One was NMSU celebrating its centennial on the wrong year. Seriously. Worse, they were two years off. The way I discovered it was that I was hired to write an article about how NMSU celebrated in the then year of 1988, along with 1938 and 1913. I was supposed to document how institutional celebrating changed over the years.

To my surprise, in the 1930s and the 1950s NMSU (known then by a different name) quietly moved their start date back a year each time. The undisputed fact is NMSU was started by Hiram Hadley, the first university president. And, he was in charge of the 25th year celebration, which he held in 1915.

That is a fact. He knew when the university started because he was there. And the 40th anniversary celebration was held in 1930. Nothing but facts.

Both stolen years were done for a "good reason" much like stealing Pistol Pete along with stealing "Crimson Pride" from the Crimson Tide. Not that it really matters. It just looks stupid.

Another controversy involved the NMSU yearbook, The Swastika. In 1983 the "flan hit the fan" about NMSU having a yearbook named The Swastika. I was the head photographer of the 1969 Swastika, so I thought I knew all about it.

The Albuquerque Journal's Impact Magazine hired me to cover the controversy. Seems the first yearbook in 1907 had no Swastikas in it, rather, the name was a Sanskrit word meaning "an auspicious beginning." Along the way Swastika symbols were added and, when Hitler ruined the name, most organizations quietly cast it off. Not NMSU. The made up a new history: It was a Navajo word meaning "peace and harmony for all people."

The Navajo Language Dictionary says it is a symbol with no meaning. The core issue is that no one thought of NMSU when they saw the Swastika. But there was a brisk battle between the people thinking they were supporting the Native Americans and people wanting to support the protesting Jewish community. After my story came out, NMSU changed the name of the yearbook to the Phoenix, and killed it off shortly thereafter.

About the same time, I noticed the NMSU's War Memorial had one name that should not be there and was missing a very important name. It had the name of a graduate killed in the Pancho Villa Raid, but wasn't in the military, so he should not be there. Eugene Casey from the Class of 1898, who died in the Spanish American War, however, was entirely left out. I was told it was too expensive to correct it.

There is a Kent Hall on campus named for Harry Kent, a beloved president who had a credential problem that showed up his 14th year as president. The powers that be let him leave quietly and named a building for him.

Each of these historical issues are not particularly egregious, but they do tarnish the reputation of a research university. Worse, in each case the NMSU leaders have known the truth but decided to lie rather than just say "Whoops" and then correct the issue.

I like Roping Roy, the wonderful western mascot.

Pass GO Bond C

On the back of the ballot this November you will find the question for General Obligation Bond C. The total amount of the bond is $139,755,000, of which $19.2 million is allocated for renovations of existing buildings on New Mexico State University's main campus. The buildings to be upgraded are Jett Hall, Jett Annex and Rentfrow Hall.

There are many reasons that I would encourage you to vote in favor of GO Bond C.

First, these buildings are in desperate need of repair. They were built in the late 1950s and the facilities are quite outdated.

Jett Hall is the current home of the chemical, aerospace and mechanical engineering departments. These programs are some of the fastest-growing degrees currently offered by NMSU. When these students graduate, they are finding jobs with starting pay of more than $90,000 in New Mexico. However, if our institution cannot offer adequate facilities to educate these students and allow them to do research, the growth in these programs may come to a halt.

Rentfrow Hall is an old gymnasium that is currently being used by the Department of Human Performance, Dance and Recreation under the College of Education. Enrollment in the department has tripled in the last six years. Rentfrow Hall even has tiles falling from the roof and lacks air conditioning (great for dancing).

We would like all of our fellow students to have access to the best facilities that we can. The funds provided by GO Bond C will allow us to modernize and improve these buildings so that students have a great learning experience.

Deceptive numbers

As I sit here drinking my Sunday morning coffee and watch the news propagandists tout the latest economic numbers, I cannot help but be dismayed by how incomplete the picture is. 240,000 jobs added sounds great, but how many were lost, and are these new jobs as good as the ones lost?

The overall job participation rate continues to fall, and is now under 63 percent, which means 37 percent of the work force (population within the age group not the total population) is not working. This is still a far cry from the 5.9 percent the administration is pushing. I find it amazing how just before an election the number magically drops below 6 percent, just as it dropped below 8 percent the month before the last election. This is the same illusion retail stores use by marking an item at $5.99 instead of $6, and it works, sales increase. In the case of elections, votes increase. At the store it's only a trick, from the government it's not only a trick, but an outright lie as well.

As far as quality goes, a part-time job is not as good as a full-time job. A temporary job is not as good as a permanent job. And, finally, an $8 per-hour job is not as good as a $12 per-hour job. This, however, is not how this administration chooses to look at things.

According to their numbers, there is almost no inflation either. Keep telling yourself that the next time you buy groceries or fuel. Under this single administration the national debt will double to $20 trillion – numbers so high it's like counting drops of water in the ocean.

It matters little the topic, ISIS, Ebola, open borders, IRS, Obamacare, etc., we are being lied to, and to believe anything we hear requires as Hillary Clinton once said, "a willing suspension of disbelief." George Orwell called this "double speak" in his novel 1984.

Retain Schultz

A few years ago, when Judge Lisa Schultz became aware of a "pay to play" scandal at the District Court in Las Cruces, she had the courage and integrity to stand up for all of us by speaking out against corruption in our judicial system. Since then she has been vilified by those whom she exposed and their associates. Now, we have the opportunity to stand with her in this fight. As she stood up for us, so let us stand with her now by voting yes to retain Judge Lisa Schultz and keep a wise, compassionate and honest judge on the bench.

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

Her name's on the note at the Valley Bank, boys,
Though she might have questioned the loan
She signed her John Henry 'neath yours on the line
And she will 'til the kids are all grown.

Nobody's counted the pickups she's pulled
Or measured the miles she's put on the rake
Kept track of the pancakes or lunches she's packed
Or the number of times she lay there awake

Praying her prayers for the man in her bed.
God only knows, 'cause He's keepin' track.
She's buildin' up interest somewhere down the line
To use in a trade on your first cardiac.

She puts up with cows she knows you should cull
Scourin' calves on the livin' room floor,
Tracks in the bathroom and mud on the sheets,
Flies in the kitchen from broken screen doors.

She patiently listens to stories you tell
Recounting the skill of your blue heeler mate.
She wishes, herself, if that dog was so smart
You could teach that pot licker to open a gate!

She offers opinions that seldom sink in
'Til time, off' as not, proves she was right.
But it's darn hard to figger how she could'a known?
You're not the only one who worries at night.

She's old as the mountain and young as the spring
Timeless in labor and wisdom and love.
Of all of God's creatures that man gets to share
The wife of a cowman was sent from above.

So lay there tonight when you go to bed.
Remember your partner, she's tried and she's true.
You're lucky, my man, to have such a friend
Take care of her, 'cause she takes care of you..

La Clinica supports transit district

I am writing to recommend support for funding for the South Central Regional Transit District (SCRTD) in the upcoming election. As CEO of La Clinica de Familia, I am aware, every day, of the impact a regional transit district can have.

Missed appointments are common, especially for patients in rural areas. Missing preventative care or ongoing treatments can mean more acute needs – and costly care – later on. A robust regional transit system can help patients get to those appointments.

Lowering “no shows” is also important to the economic health of our organization. In the first eight months of 2014, La Clinica served 19,912 patients, but also had more than 10,500 “no shows” to its regularly scheduled appointments and lab work.

Our staff is looking forward to increased bus service at all of our locations. We are ready to make appointments that coincide with SCRTD schedules and encourage our patients to use the service. If we can reduce “no shows,” we will be able to provide care to more people. We will also be able to hire more people and contribute to the economic health of our region. It's possible to succeed in both areas.

Advocates provide courtroom comfort for children in need

By Fernando Macias
Las Cruces Bulletin

Each holiday season, we are reminded of the needs of children. There are volunteer coat drives, toy drives and food drives, among other initiatives that come together to assist the most vulnerable among us through an emotionally charged period of time.

But all year around, some of those children are navigating a far more stressful process, and the general public is mostly unaware of the nature and magnitude of the strife these children face. The public also does not see the faces or hear the stories of the everyday state-employed and volunteer heroes who help to shepherd these children through their legal journey.

I refer to children who have been taken from their homes and placed into the custody of the state. It happens all the time, and while the employees of the state Children, Youth and Families Division (CYFD) do a terrific job each day, it is the Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASAs) who voluntarily play such a critical role in the outcomes for these children and for their families, and for the community at large.

Much attention is rightly paid in our society to murderers. In fact, a first-degree murder case is routinely the most time-consuming case to come before a district judge. But the cases that routinely take the second-most amount of time are the cases of children whose families have either abandoned them or who have provided such a dangerous environment that the children have been removed.

The cases of the children are sealed, and neither the public nor the media is allowed into the courtroom while the proceedings are under way. The process consists of many different hearings and determinations, all of which build on one another until a final determination can be issued. Each case can take 18 months to many years to resolve.

In each complex case, the future of an innocent child is involved and the stakes are high. Children can come into the custody of the state because they tested positive for methamphetamine at birth; or because their living conditions are inherently dangerous; or because their parents are mentally unstable; or have been incarcerated; or because they've been left for sustained periods without supervision, nutrition or basic hygiene; or because their parents will not attend to their medical needs; or physical and/or sexual abuse by members of their family: The list is horrific, and these are just a few examples.

In every case, a child – or a set of siblings – is placed into a legal process that must be meticulously deliberate about whether families can be fixed enough to be reunited. Sometimes the child is best served by being placed in foster care, the parent's legal right to the child terminated and the child ultimately placed for adoption. Usually, the system works as it's intended, and the hard work of placing the child in the very best circumstances is achieved.

The worst-case scenarios involve children who enter the system at such an age and in such a level of complexity surrounding their cases that they reach the age of 18 before the issues are resolved or an adoption can be finalized.

Even in the best outcomes, it would be more challenging for the children if not for the CASAs, whose sole sworn duty is to help the court help the child. Each of them takes a solemn oath to guard the child's best interests and communicate that view in the courtroom.

I wish I could share specific stories that would drive this point home as hard as it deserves to be received by the general public, but these matters can only be spoken of in generalities.

What the system needs to work better is far more healthy families and far fewer abused, neglected and abandoned children. Until we reach that lofty goal, we desperately need people who care about children to come forward as foster parents, adoptive parents and CASAs.

Come into the lives of these children, and make a difference for them in their time of need, which is not seasonal – like coat, toy and food drives. This need is ongoing, and it can literally change the entire arc of a young, vulnerable life.

These children walk among us. We need more people willing to stand up for them, and to hold their hands, and to show them we care.

Chief District Judge Fernando R. Macias oversees the Third Judicial District Court and is assigned all civil-abuse and neglect cases.

Santa Fe deputy killed in drunken argument, fellow deputy charged

A Santa Fe County warrant officer suspected of shooting and killing a fellow deputy Tuesday, Oct. 28, has been charged with an open count of murder.

Tai R. Chan, 27, a warrant officer with the Santa Fe County Sheriff's Office, was charged and booked into the Doña Ana County Detention Center without bond.

Chan is suspected of shooting fellow Santa Fe County Sheriff's deputy Jeremy Martin, 29, on the seventh floor of Hotel Encanto de Las Cruces some time before 12:30 a.m. Tuesday. Las Cruces Police officers located Martin in the lobby of the hotel, on the ground near the elevator doors. Martin was suffering from multiple gunshot wounds to his back and arm. He was transported to MountainView Regional Medical Center where he was pronounced dead.

Las Cruces Police investigators learned the deputies were passing through Las Cruces after transporting a prisoner to a detention facility in Arizona. As the two were on their return trip to Santa Fe, they rented a room at Hotel Encanto, 705 S. Telshor Blvd., at around 4 p.m. Monday, Oct. 27. Some time Monday evening, the two went to three restaurants, including Dublin's Street Pub, where it's believed they consumed alcohol and got into a heated argument.

At around midnight, Chan and Martin returned to Hotel Encanto and to their shared seventh floor room. Investigators learned that witnesses heard what they believed to be an argument between two men prior to hearing gunfire. Witnesses also claim to have seen Chan armed with a handgun. Several rounds were fired as Martin attempted to flee, police said.

Las Cruces Police officers cordoned off the hotel lobby and conducted a systematic search for the suspected shooter. At the time, officers did not know the victim and shooter were law enforcement officers. Police located Chan in a stairwell at the hotel.

“willing to invest in ourselves and our future”

An open letter to County Commissioner Wayne Hancock

The words in the title of this article were taken from your commentary in the Las Cruces Sun-News of 10/26/14 and to which I feel compelled to respond. Let me start with some prefacing comments. Frankly, I find “the question” you put “before us” rather insulting. Citizens of Doña Ana County, inclusive of Las Cruces, have a long history of supporting worthy, legitimate needs. Please do not make such statements implying otherwise. And to further demean informed voters by personally attacking their prayerful message of “Taxed Enough Already,” is disingenuous. Let me remind you, as a representative of “We the people” you took an Oath Of Office on Dec. 28, 2012, before the Honorable Douglas Driggers to “support and uphold the Constitution,” and to furthermore, “faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of the office of Doña Ana County Commissioner, District 4, into which I am about to enter, to the best of my ability, so help me God.” Maybe “the question” should be, are you upholding your sworn Oath Of Office? Surely you are cognizant of the First Amendment’s rights of “freedom of speech ... and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.” As stated in Article VI, “This Constitution ... shall be the supreme Law of the Land.” Do not confuse, supplant and superimpose (your) wants with the openly expressed needs and constitutional rights of those you apparently do not wish to represent.

With that said, now let’s look at some interesting notations in your article. In the first paragraph, please explain why “we were, as commissioners, obligated to take this action.” Was your obligation due to membership on the Las Cruces Metropolitan Planning Organization (MPO) Policy Committee – along with Commissioners Leticia Benavidez and Billy Garrett, who is the Chairman? This committee “is the governing body for the MPO.” It “decides how best to direct MPO staff help meet the transportation needs of the MPO area.” It has “oversight” of advisory committees. One is the Technical Advisory Committee (TAC), which provides planning and engineering input regarding transportation projects. Jack Valencia, of the South Central Regional Transit District (SCRTD) is Chairman. This can be verified on google by entering “Las Cruces MPO.” MPOs are regulated by United States Code (USC) 23. So, are our local officials relinquishing our sovereignty to Washington? If one wishes to obtain more of what MPOs are about and where they are taking not only Las Cruces, but the entire County, then read the 274 pages of “Transport 2040 Doña Ana County.” Or you can get a condensed presentation by viewing YouTube videos available at mendingamerica.com.

By stating that “The SCRTD is a separate taxing authority...” implies it has the power/ right to tax, and is contradictory to your choice of the word “petitioned” in your opening sentence. A Service and Financial Plan, as prepared by A&R Consulting Solutions for the SCRTD, examines transit organizations in South Central New Mexico by “the use of a SWOT analysis” – an acronym for Strength, Weaknesses, Opportunities and Threats. Local and regional funding was cited as weaknesses, and lack of funding stability was described as a threat. However, “should a regional revenue source emerge, local funding could be reduced ...” Section 3 of the Plan provides detailed analysis of “Revenue Options” on expanding local transit services. Two revenue options were offered: “the Gross Receipts Tax and a possible interim approach.” Well, we have experienced both. The GRT (sales tax increase) is on our Nov. 4 general election ballot and, if passed, will financially encumber our children and our children’s children. The interim approach was through a W.K. Kellogg Foundation Grant (Southern New Mexico Community Foundation) obtained by the Ocotillo Institute on Social Justice as a “Quality of Life Initiative,” orchestrated by Mr. Billy Garrett and Jake Rollow. The buses have been on our roads since June 9, advertised as a “Pilot Project,” and offer rides “FREE/SIN COSTO.” If you are available to get a copy of this year’s county budget, interestingly, under Unrestricted Funds on page 10 there is a line item “Funding SCRTD” listed as an expenditure of $42,158.

Finally, in visiting with voters for the past 3 months, I have not witnessed a “clear appetite for public transportation.” What I have experienced are the serious, urgent requests for serviceable roads, better control of flooding, more lighting, traffic modulation, protection/security of property and person, governmental honesty and responsiveness and the list goes on. What I have experienced are eye-rolling reactions as to why the Commission continues to dip into savings to balance the budget and asks for approval to generate $10.3 million by increasing the sales tax ¼% to 8.2%. They took $24 million from reserves this year, $15 million last year while increasing the budget 11% and with decreasing revenues. It also has paid out millions in settling lawsuits. In this year’s budget, they deleted the internal auditor and risk management positions. Sales tax is regressive. Paying 8.2% will be felt more by those purported to be helped by SCRTD expansion. The cost of living is noticeably increasing, and to expect voters to approve an additional ¼% sales tax to the cost of their purchases to fund expansion of the City’s SCRTD is not justifiable and realistic. Didn’t you read the Sun-News’s opinion? Taxing and spending without prioritizing with specific, empirical, factual data is no way to run business and government is big business. Government entities are to be frugal stewards of taxpayers’ hard-earned money.

In summary, how about using some good old “Common Sense” in tending to your elected office, and consider being more forthright, transparent, honest and virtuous in its administration? Yes, we are “willing to invest in ourselves and our future” – but with our needs, not your wants.

Respectfully,
Charles Wendler

As for criticisms of too much focus on testing under her administration, Martinez said the data is needed to know where to put resources.

“Our focus on reforming education is to make sure our kids are progressing,” she said at a recent Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce luncheon. “We all take tests. That’s how we know if we’re progressing.”

At a recent appearance at a candidates forum sponsored by the local NAACP chapter, King said part of New Mexico’s low ranking for child welfare is a result of Martinez cutting funds to the state Children, Youth and Families Department.

Instead of addressing the state’s child welfare and economic problems, King said Martinez’s campaign has chosen to misrepresent his record as a legislator and attorney general.

“We need to recognize that government should have a heart,” he said. “You should be able to go to government to get some help when you need it.”

Martinez said her administration has been able to successfully attract new manufacturing jobs to New Mexico. Changes to corporate tax rates in the state that Martinez championed have turned around New Mexico’s ranking for business friendliness and New Mexico is now importing more goods to Mexico, she said.

Martinez said the state’s unemployment rate has been reduced from 8 percent, when she took office in 2011, to 6.5 percent.

As attorney general, King said his office has gone after predatory lenders. To improve the state’s economy, King said economic development would produce more jobs by supporting small businesses and helping them export their goods and services out of state than trying to lure large employers.

King acknowledged his office has been criticized for being slow to prosecute cases, but he said investigating a case to ensure that prosecution is warranted is important to him.

Martinez said criticism of her policies stems from how difficult it is to make changes, but they need to be made so the state is more competitive. She said King’s policies would take the state back to the challenges faced by the state at the end of Gov. Bill Richardson’s administration.

“His plans are a recipe for mediocrity and a retreat of the Richardson approach,” she said.

Senate contest tightens in polling

Bulletin Staff Report

U.S. Sen. Tom Udall, D-NM, may still lead in the polls over his Republican challenger Allen Weh, chief executive officer of an aviation company and a retired colonel in the Marine Corps Reserve, but that lead has narrowed in recent weeks.

Udall’s campaign has focused on accomplishments since he was elected six years ago to the seat vacated by retired U.S. Sen. Pete Domenici.

In southern New Mexico, one of Udall’s main accomplishments was his guidance through the Washington, D.C., process of an effort to establish the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument.

Weh’s campaign has given voice to the outspoken critics of the nearly 500,000-acre designation made this past summer by President Barack Obama.

At a campaign stop in Las Cruces Friday, Oct. 24, Weh said he is confident that he can overtake Udall. People are frustrated with the federal government, Weh said.

The former state GOP party chairman said he hopes he’ll be part of a new Republican majority in the Senate to end congressional gridlock.

Udall has been making a variety of stops around the state, emphasizing economic development efforts and other constituent service efforts, such as flood damage relief in Carlsbad.

A former state attorney general and Congressman, Udall now seems less certain to win as recent polling shows Weh gaining as the two head into a debate Thursday, Oct. 30. Udall remains strong with Hispanic voters, but has seen support weaken with rural voters.

Pearce challenged by Lara for District 2 seat

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

In a televised debate taped Wednesday, Oct. 15, by KRWG-TV at New Mexico State University, U.S. Rep. Steve Pearce defended his record against Democratic challenger Roxanne Lara of Carlsbad who repeatedly accused him of frequently voting along tea party lines.

Pearce said Lara was mischaracterizing his voting record and touted his bipartisan legislative efforts on issues such as immigration reform.

On immigration, however, the two differed on how to resolve the issue of millions of immigrants who are in the country illegally. Lara favors a bill passed by the Senate that would create a "pathway to citizenship" with conditions that require them to pass background checks, learn English, pay back taxes and put them at the end of the line for applying for citizenship.

"A pathway to citizenship is not a free pass," she said.

Pearce characterized the pathway as amnesty, which he predicted would result in another rush of illegal immigration similar to what occurred this summer.

"Saying, 'Come here and we'll take care of you,' is not the solution," he said.

Pearce said favors making the process of gaining citizenship quicker, offering a guest worker program for those who don't desire citizenship but are willing to do jobs not being filled by citizens.

Lara said bringing those people "out of the shadows" would make them contributing members of society and that the broken immigration system needs a total overhaul, not minor fixes.

"Just passing comprehensive immigration reform alone will bring more than $1 trillion into the economy over two decades," she said.

Throughout the one-hour debate moderated by retired broadcaster Sam Donaldson, both Pearce and Lara tried to take moderate positions. For example, Lara promised to cut wasteful spending and balance the budget, while Pearce said the New York Times and Wall Street Journal had cited him as willing to work with Democrats more than other Republicans.

One of those efforts resulted in an immigration reform bill that he cosponsored with progressive Democrat Beto O'Rourke of El Paso.

Lara focused on Pearce's voting record, saying he voted 92 percent of the time along tea party lines, which has contributed to the gridlock in Congress.

"As I travel (the second congressional district), I see the same thing every place I go," she said. "People are fed up with Congress."

Lara said one thing that hurt the state's ability to recover from the recession was the federal government shutdown, which she contends Pearce essentially voted to allow happen.

Lara, a former Eddy County commissioner, said she has a record of bipartisanship.

Pearce said he is against raising taxes and said cutting spending is a better fiscal policy.

Lara said she supports a constitutional amendment requiring Congress to pass balanced budgets, but with the condition to spare Medicare. She accused Pearce of voting for a House budget bill that would have killed Medicare.

Pearce countered that the Affordable Care Act (ACA) has done more to take money away from Medicare.

Lara said she supported the Medicare savings in ACA, but acknowledged there are aspects of it that need fixing.

While Pearce would like to retain some aspects of ACA, such as not denying insurance to people with preexisting conditions, he said President Barack Obama promised people would be able to keep their insurance, which has proved to be untrue in some cases, and it has resulted in job losses.

Pearce said he wants Obamacare repealed because it's doing great damage.

"Turning it over to the federal government has been a mistake," he said.

After Lara said Pearce is participating in a "war on the poor" because he voted for budgets that would have cut Head Start and Pell Grant funding while preserving tax breaks for the rich, Pearce said Obama's fiscal policies have done more to hurt the poor. In the end, nothing was done to make those cuts to programs for poor, he said, dismissing his votes by saying a budget is only "a blueprint."

"This race is not about Rep. Pearce versus President Obama, this race is about Rep. Pearce versus me," Lara responded.

On what to do about the terrorism threat of ISIS, Lara said she supports Obama's strategy of targeted air strikes but she is leery of sending troops.

Pearce said ISIS is a result of Obama not following the wishes of his generals who warned him about the threat.

On same-sex marriage, Lara said she supports giving equal protection "no matter who we love."

Pearce said he is against redefining marriage.

Lara described Pearce's position on gay marriage as behind the times.

"That train has already left the station," she said.

State bond issues include multiple NMSU projects

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

With contested elections getting all the attention, New Mexico State University officials are reminding voters there are two statewide bond questions that they would like to see voters approve.

General Obligation Bond (GOB) C will provide more than $139 million in higher education funding, with $25.1 million earmarked for projects in the NMSU system. GOB C will ask voters statewide to approve more than $11 million in funding for the state's public, school, tribal, college and university libraries to update their collections, equipment and databases.

Should GOB C pass, $19.2 million will go toward the upgrade and renovation of Jett Hall, Jett Annex and Rentfrow Hall on the Las Cruces main campus. The rest is for infrastructure renewal and expansion at NMSU's community colleges: $2 million for Doña Ana, $1.6 million for Carlsbad, $1.3 million for Grants and $1 million for Alamogordo.

Most critically needed are the improvements to Jett Hall, said NMSU

President Garrey Carruthers.

Originally constructed in 1956, Jett Hall has been home to chemical engineering, which has seen great growth in recent years, especially in the area of bio-fuel development. Jett Hall now has many labs in a building in which ventilation, water and other utilities needed for safe lab operations were not centrally planned.

Transporting chemicals through the busy hallways can be hazardous, Carruthers said.

Jett Hall Annex has been used for mechanical engineering, but its age and limitations are showing, as well.

Rentfrow Hall, a former gymnasium built in 1957, has become the main location for NMSU's growing kinesiology program, which for many students has become a stepping stone to a health care career. Robert Wood, professor and head of the Human Performance, Dance and Recreation Department, said the building, as it is now being used by 400 students and five faculty, could be put to better use if the dance program didn't have to share the gym floor with kinesiology classes.

Even at more than $19 million, Carruthers said the university may have to ask the Legislature for a little more money to do the projects right.

First, voters must approve GOB C. A similar bond question failed in 2010 because it would have resulted in a tax increase. This time, the bond's passage won't change the portion of property taxes that pay off the bonds, so passage won't raise property taxes.

The 2010 failure, however, has resulted in a lowering the total money available for higher education bonds in future.

Regional public transportation district asking for a GRT increase

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

In addition to voting on candidates, voters Nov. 4 in Doña Ana County will be asked to approve a gross receipts tax (GRT) increase of .25 percent to support a rural public transportation system.

The South Central Regional Transit District (SCRTD) began providing bus services from Chaparral and Anthony, N.M., to Truth or Consequences this summer with support from municipal and county governments in both Doña Ana and Sierra counties. A GRT question is also on the ballot in Sierra County for the general election.

Jack Valencia, a former Las Cruces city councillor tasked with setting up SCRTD after successfully creating regional transportation district in northern New Mexico, said the proposed GRT increases are estimated to generate $9.8 million in Doña Ana County and $500,000 in Sierra County.

The increase would add 25 cents to every $100 spent on taxable goods and services.

SCRTD has been able to start the service through contracting with existing regional transportation companies, along with a few buses of its own. There are no fares charged for most of the routes, except $1 to take ZTrans service to White Sands Missile Range or $3 to take ZTrans to Alamogordo, because Otero County opted to not join the district, Valencia said. It will be up to a board of directors and ridership if fares are charged once the district is established, Valencia said.

Along with subsidizing the rural routes, Valencia said the plan is to give $3 million to the City of Las Cruces' Roadrunner Transit system, which is providing connecting service within city limits, with the city's intermodal center being the central hub.

After the third year, the contribution to Road-RUNNER Transit would increase to $4 million, which, he said, is the equivalent to Road-RUNNER's annual budget.

"This will allow Road-RUNNER to enhance its services, because the rural residents will increase its ridership," Valencia said. "The focus is to maximize service."

Since the SCRTD began providing the service as a pilot program, Valencia said it has seen more than 2,000 riders a month.

The GRT increase has garnered support from most policymakers in Doña Ana County as well as rural community activist groups, who want rural residents to have transportation to new job opportunities in Santa Teresa and at Spaceport America, as well as improving access to medical care by residents on limited incomes, such as seniors.

But the GRT increase has also attracted opposition from local conservatives who question if the cost is worth the benefit.

A newly formed group, Move Forward New Mexico (MFNM), has been actively campaigning against the increase, saying the pilot program should have a full run before asking voters to increase GRT to support. Also, the proposed increase comes after the City of Las Cruces increased its GRT to make up for future loss of funding from the state.

In addition to some signs opposing the tax, the opposition became more public when Russell Allen, vice president of operations for Allen Theaters and former Doña Ana County Republican Party chairman, objected to the City of Las Cruces including a flyer supporting the GRT increase in utility bills.

In an email Sept. 18 to City Manager Robert

Garza, Allen questioned whether including the flyer in the mailing reflected the city's official support for the GRT increase.

In response, Garza wrote to Allen that the regional transit district has been funded and supported by the Metropolitan Planning Organization (MPO), Mayor Ken Miyagishima and the City Council. "The city is in the third year of a three-year commitment to contribute funding to assess the viability of expanding the (regional transit district)," Garza wrote. Garza said the city is allowed to endorse another government entity's work, noting that SCRTD was created by the Legislature.

Fall back, check smoke detectors

With the end of daylight saving time this weekend, the Las Cruces Fire Department is encouraging residents to install new batteries in their smoke detectors when they set their clocks to "fall back" one hour.

Daylight saving time ends at 2 a.m. Sunday, Nov. 2, and the LCDF urges residents to install fresh batteries in their smoke detectors when clocks are adjusted to standard time. Most people tend to change their clocks before bedtime Saturday evening.

LCFD also suggests homeowners test smoke detectors to ensure they're in proper working order. To check the operation of a smoke detector, simply press and hold the alarm's "test" button. If it beeps or rings loudly, it's properly working.

Consumers should avoid testing a detector by using a candle or matches placed under the alarm, as repeated use of smoke to activate the device can cause them to fail when an actual fire occurs.

Smoke alarms are present in 95 percent of American homes, but national studies show that 20 percent do not work due to worn or missing batteries. That means nearly 19 million homes are needlessly at risk, since the peak time for home fire fatalities is between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m., when most families are sleeping.

For more information on smoke alarms, contact the Las Cruces Fire Department at (575) 528-4150.

its weather, as compared to more frequent weather delays at costal launch facilities.

It was UP Aerospace's 13th launch from Spaceport America and the third carrying experiments as part of NASA's Flight Opportunities Program. Three of the technologies were flown in collaboration with NASA's Game Changing Development Program: an advanced micro sun sensor from NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif.; a radiation-tolerant computer system from Montana State University at Bozeman; and a vibration isolation platform from Controlled Dynamics Inc. of Huntington Beach, Calif.

The vibration isolation platform has also been selected by the Center for the Advancement of Science in Space (CASIS) for further development on the International Space Station. This system will cushion experiments from fluctuations and disturbances that occur aboard spacecraft.

The fourth experiment from the Universitat Politècnica de Catalunya, Spain, was investigating the effect of controlled vibrations on multiphase flow systems such as those found in environmental systems and fuel tanks. Gutman said this experiment was important for liquid-fuel rocket motors to fire correctly in zero gravity.

NASA's Flight Opportunities Program selects promising technologies from industry, academia and government to provide access to testing on commercial suborbital launch vehicles.

The other payload has been a frequent flyer with UP Aerospace – cremation memorial rides provided by Celestis.

At the launch were the daughters of Nicky Lee, who died March 2013. Originally from New Mexico, Lee was married and raised the family in Indiana before moving to Las Cruces to retire. Niki Lee Mott, one of her daughters, said they first became aware of the possibility of sending their mother's ashes to space during a tour of Spaceport America.

Mott said it was a fitting tribute because her mother was from Santa Rita, a town that no longer exists because of a large copper mine. Astronaut Harrison Schmitt, also from Santa Rita, has deemed those from the no longer existing town as being "born in space" as there is nothing but space where the town once stood.

Mott added that her mother was also very adventurous, flying with pilots out of Silver City who were training for World War II missions.

As a long stream of rocket exhaust lingered in the sky, daughter Margaret Grant said,

"Mom loved contrails."

Among those honored aboard the Conestoga Flight were CJ Twomey, a former U.S. Airman whose sudden and unexpected passing in 2010 inspired an international effort to send him places he was unable to visit in life. Since the "Scattering CJ" effort began, people from around the world have spread his ashes in more than 400 locations ranging from Afghanistan to Zimbabwe.

Each flown capsule, with the cremated remains still sealed inside, will be presented to family and other loved ones as a permanent keepsake.

The parachute recovery system brought the SpaceLoft rocket and its payload safely onto grounds within the White Sands Missile Range 25 miles away. All payloads were recovered intact.

"With Celestis, the dream of spaceflight and desire to be a part of the next era of human exploration is available for everyone," said Celestis CEO Charles Chafer. "The experience of viewing a launch from Spaceport America is an unforgettable memory for the friends and family of all memorial spaceflight participants."

"UP Aerospace is very proud to again partner with Celestis to introduce the global public to the world of space travel." said UP Aerospace President Jerry Larson. "Our ongoing relationships with both Celestis and Spaceport America are essential elements in a growing commercial space industry."

The October Conestoga memorial launch is named in honor of the world's first private rocket launch into space – the Conestoga 1 – conducted by Celestis heritage company Space Services Inc. of America from Matagorda Island, Texas, in 1982.

"It's great to see NASA return to Spaceport America for another successful 'Flight Opportunities' sub-orbital launch mission today," said New Mexico Spaceport Authority Executive Director Christine Anderson. "We also want to congratulate UP Aerospace, who has been launching with us for eight years."

Also on the flight was a payload from the Ninkasi Brewing Co.

Great Pumpkin Candy Drop

PHOTOS BY MICHAEL C. DUNN AND TODD DICKSON

Thousands of children took part in the annual Great Pumpkin Candy Drop Sunday, Oct. 26, at Maag Park inside the Meerscheidt Recreation Complex. Sponsored by the City of Las Cruces Park and Recreation Department, Weaver's Welding and Crane Service and Friends of the Community, this year's drop was nearly $10,000 worth of candy.

ording to the ordinance passed by the council on Sept. 8.

Back on June 2, the council had passed another minimum wage ordinance that would have first increased the minimum wage to $8 an hour in July 2015 and then to $8.50 an hour by Jan. 1, 2016.

Keeping both ordinances on the books could have resulted in the wage going up to $8.40 in January 2015, then back down to $8 in July 2015, then two conflicting wage amounts in January 2016.

So, one of the ordinances has to be repealed, and City Manager Robert Garza proposed repealing the $8.50-an-hour ordinance as a starting place for the work session. Eventually, most of the councillors agreed, but not before debating other options, including possibly repealing both ordinances.

Mayor Pro Tem Greg Smith said he was concerned about the city setting its own minimum wage without having a clear idea of whether it would improve the economy or hurt it. Las Cruces is a small city with a 100,000 population not far from a much larger city – El Paso, which already has a slightly lower minimum wage than New Mexico’s $7.50 an hour, he said.

Smith said he felt the desire to raise the minimum wage in Las Cruces was not well thought out.

“Las Cruces is not a place that you can mess around and see if it works,” he said.

Supporters of raising the minimum wage contend it would help the local economy by giving low-wage earners more expendable income that would support local small businesses. Opponents counter that raising the minimum wage too drastically could force some small businesses to close their doors or curtail expansion, as well as discourage new businesses from moving to Las Cruces.

Smith rhetorically asked how it would help the poor to drive away jobs.

Councillor Nathan Small said it would be a “dark day” for the council if it repealed the CAFé ordinance because thousands of residents signed the original petition. It would create distrust and play to people’s worst fears, he said.

Mayor Ken Miyagishima said the business community was already preparing for the $8.50 an hour increase in the previous ordinance, so $8.40 an hour is close to that, but just six months earlier. Miyagishima said councillors should monitor the effects of the first wage increase and the council could act on stopping the future increases.

Councillor Miguel Silva said he was comfortable with that approach so long as the council committed to assessing the impacts in six months. Silva said he didn’t want to follow the course of Santa Fe County that had to retreat on a wage increase.

Smith said he still wasn’t comfortable with giving businesses only a couple of months to prepare for a 90-cent increase. Councillor Olga Pedroza reminded Smith that he voted for the CAFé proposal in September. Smith responded that he feels the council is “experimenting” with something that might turn out to be detrimental to the community.

“If it works out great, I’ll be the first one to admit I was wrong,” Smith said.

Councillor Gill Sorg said the long debate leading up to both the June and September votes has given businesses plenty of notice that a minimum wage increase is coming.

Silva said the council should work on a more comprehensive, long-range economic development planning as he’s heard that the city has already lost jobs because companies looking to locate in Las Cruces backed out when they learned the City Council was considering raising the minimum wage.

Small said he favored keeping the law as it was passed Sept. 8, but wasn’t against the idea of monitoring the effects.

The council has two meetings to repeal the first ordinance and make changes to the second ordinance – a first reading on Nov. 17 and action on Dec. 1.

Miyagishima urged the councillors to look at adding the same exemptions to the minimum wage that’s found in federal law. For example, it exempts workers with disabilities, he said, and Tresco raised concerns early on about how a higher minimum wage could hurt the ability for their workers to find jobs.

“In all fairness, I hope that we all can agree on this,” Miyagishima said.

After the work session, CAFé Executive Director Sarah Nolan said she was pleased with the direction the council is taking.

“However this is only the first step and we will remain vigilant to preserve the law,” Nolan said. “The mayor made it clear that the next two increments improving wages for our hardworking individuals and families are still in jeopardy. Moreover, his recommendation to draft a new ordinance concerns us, and we will continue to meet with city administrators for a clear understanding of their intentions moving forward.

“We’re not at the finish line yet, but we remain hopeful and will celebrate the first raise for our hardworking individuals and families who deserve it.”

Making a difference on your County Commission

What do former District 3 County Commissioners say about Ben Rawson?

KAREN PEREZ (Democrat, 2006-2013)

“I support Benjamin Rawson in his role as County Commissioner for District 3. He has common sense, a practical approach to complicated issues, and he listens carefully. His record shows that he is ethical and has a strong sense of conviction that carries into this role. He is not afraid to stand alone on issues. He has the ability to truly hear both sides of a question and evaluate on merit, not politics. He decisions are careful and considered and he provides a sense of balance to the rest of the Commission.”

NMSU hosts first Aggies Are Brave Enough to 'Stache Up event

By Tiffany Acosta
For the Las Cruces Bulletin

For New Mexico State University Aggies, it can be argued that Pistol Pete sets the standard for mustaches with his perfectly shaped, black mustache. In November, NMSU faculty, staff and students along with local community members can give Pete a run for his money thanks to an American Cancer Society fundraiser.

The first-ever "Aggies Are Brave Enough to 'Stache Up" is a partnership between NMSU Colleges Against Cancer and NMSU Greek Life. Participants commit to embrace their facial hair during the entire month of November in order to promote awareness for men's health, while raising funds to support the American Cancer Society.

The "Aggies Are Brave Enough to 'Stache Up" initiative begins with

The Clean Shave event from 2-4 p.m. Friday, Oct. 31, at Corbett Center outdoor stage. Local barbers will be available to participants for their clean shave.

After registering, which is a $10 fee, men must have a clean-shaven face on Oct. 31. To enter the competition, participants who cannot attend the Clean Shave event must submit a date-stamped before photo and post on the "Aggies are Brave Enough to 'Stache Up"

Facebook page.

Throughout the month of November, each participant must grow a mustache or beard.

Local state House races illustrate distinctions between political parties

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

The potential of Gov. Susana Martinez's re-election and the local debate on minimum wage are coloring the issues being debated by area candidates for the Legislature.

Democrats are criticizing the level of testing in the schools, the effects of the behavioral health shake-up and support raising the minimum wage. Republicans are supporting Martinez's call to hold back third-graders who can't read well and blame government regulations and taxes for stifling business growth.

At a League of Women Voters of Greater Las Cruces forum Oct. 14, about the only thing the southern New Mexico candidates agreed on was the state needs to get serious about addressing water issues.

The contrast was most clear in District 37, which is a rematch between Republican incumbent Terry McMillan and Democratic challenger Joanne Ferrary, who lost to McMillan two years ago by only eight votes.

On education, for example, Ferrary said children are finding school to be overly stressful because of the regimen of testing. She accused McMillan of voting for giving new teachers a raise while leaving experienced teachers out of an increase.

Although he agreed there is too much testing going on in the schools, McMillan said that Ferrary was distorting the pay issue, saying he voted for a budget that gave a 3-percent increase to all teachers and 10 percent for new teachers.

While it's common sense that "you can't fatten the cow by putting it all on the scales every day," McMillan said it also is common sense a third-grade retention should be ended if the child cannot read.

In District 39, Rudy Martinez, the Democratic incumbent, said the other problem with testing is that the Gov. Susana Martinez's administration wants to also use the results to evaluate teacher performance.

"Teachers don't object to being evaluated, but they want a fair system and not just be judged on one criteria," he said.

John Zimmerman, his Republican challenger, said he didn't understand the resistance to holding a student back if they can't read at grade level.

"It never hurt anyone to be retained for one grade," he said.

Bill McCamley, the Democratic incumbent for District 33, said he has heard from teachers about how using testing to evaluate teachers isn't taking into consideration difficult students, such as those in special education or middle-schoolers who are having a hard time focusing on school because of the stage of life that they're in.

Neal Hooks, McCamley's Republican challenger, blamed entrenched teachers for the state's education failures and said the best solution would be giving parents the choice – through vouchers or tax credits – to send their children to private schools, which have better educational success on leaner budgets.

Hooks accused the Democrats of engaging in demagoguery on their criticism of Arizona companies taking over behavioral health services over alleged Medicaid fraud.

Hooks' comments followed criticisms from Democratic incumbents Jeff Steinborn of District 35 and Phillip Archuleta of District 36.

Steinborn said the system taken over by Arizona companies was based on erroneous findings of a "cherry-picked" audit that lacked transparency and has not improved overall services. Archuleta said the behavioral health actions were all politically motivated with disregard to the need for services.

Steinborn is being challenged by Betty Bishop, who said the dominance of the Democratic Party over the Legislature for more than 50 years is the real culprit behind poor educational performance and the state's struggling economy.

Steinborn said he supported raising the minimum wage to $10.10 statewide and setting future increases by a cost-of-living indexing.

Bishop said the best way to raise wages is to improve the economy. Hooks said he didn't support raising the minimum wage because he believes it would result in more job loss and less economic opportunities.

Archuleta is being challenged by Andy Nuñez, a former Democrat, turned independent and now Republican. Nuñez is the mayor of Hatch and could not attend the League of Women Voters forum but was able to attend a forum held by the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce Oct. 9 that Archuleta did not attend. Nuñez said the state needs to be more business-friendly through reduced regulations and ought to pass right-to-work legislation.

Republican Rick Little, who is trying to regain the District 53 seat he lost to Nate Cote two years ago, said one only needs to visit the New Mexico-Texas state line in Anthony to see the differences in businesses between the economies of the two states.

Mariaelena Johnson, the Democratic candidate for District 53, said New Mexico's tax structure gives too many breaks to large companies and puts too much of the tax burden on small businesses and the middle class in the state.

Fiscal concerns dominate County Commission races

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

How to stop Doña Ana County budgetary shortfalls that are currently forcing county government to lean on cash reserves is the main question in two County Commission seats up for election.

Most vocal about those concerns has been County

Commission District 3 incumbent Ben Rawson, a Republican. Fiscal management has been a top priority for him since being appointed to the commission by Gov. Susana Martinez to fill a vacancy, he said. At the time, the budgetary shortfall was $15 million, but Rawson said it has since grown to $24 million, based on figures in the current county budget.

“What we have is a county government that is spending more than it takes in,” Rawson said.

Challenging Rawson is Democrat Beth Bardwell, who said the county needs to set clear priorities and ensure the money coming in goes to high priority needs.

District 1 incumbent Billy Garrett, a Democrat and current chairman of the commission, said constant attention has been given to the budget since an impending shortfall was realized. He is being challenged by Republican Chuck Wendler, whose emphasis is on returning manufacturing to the county to improve the economy in general.

Rawson said the county

is spending $24 million a year more than it brings in, forcing the government to lean on its reserves to balance the budget.

At the current pace, he said the county will deplete those reserves in three years. Rawson said the county isn't tightening its belt enough and he estimates that county spending has increased since 2010 by more than 30 percent.

Garrett disagreed that the county's budget is in dire straits. The county maintains its A+ bond rating and has received awards for its financial management, he said. Garrett said he has seen figures indicating that the county ended its last fiscal year with a budgetary surplus of $4 million.

Wendler said the county should be setting its budget by prioritizing essential services and eliminating unessential services. One of the most basic functions of the county is maintaining roads, he said, and the county is rife with poor road conditions.

Garrett said he has brought a more deliberative process to decision-making in the county. Some of the stress on county services, he said, is the result of the county growing too fast.

Rawson blames what he calls “the anti-growth establishment” for hindering economic progress in the county. Garrett said he believes the answer to improving the economy is to provide services, such as regional public transportation, to free up household incomes.

Bardwell agrees with Garrett that bringing public transportation to the county will help residents get better access to jobs, such as those in Santa Teresa that are going to too many El Pasoans.

Rawson said the county is not holding up its end to improve road conditions in Santa Teresa, where economic opportunities are “exploding.”

Wendler said job creation needs to be a stronger focus of county government. Its current 8.6 percent unemployment rate is higher than the state and national averages, he said.

Ballot includes state constitution changes

Included on the ballot are five state constitutional amendments.

One amendment would allow the State Investment Council to diversify its investments.

Another amendment relates to the timing of school elections.

Though confusingly worded, the amendment to Article 7, Section 1 would hold school elections at the same time as partisan elections to save costs.

Amending Article 12, Section 13, would allow for a student to sit on the board of regents for Northern New Mexico State School.

Amending Article 6 of the Constitution of New Mexico would allow the Legislature to set the date for filing declarations of candidacy for judicial retention elections.

Amending Article 10, Section 10, would allow certain counties to become urban counties and to clarify the majority vote needed to adopt a county charter. This would allow Valencia and Curry counties to have “home rule” once they reach 300,000 residents.

Reward doubles in LCHS construction site burglary

The reward for information identifying the men suspected of burglarizing the Las Cruces High School construction site has doubled with Wooten Construction contributing $1,000.

Las Cruces Crime Stoppers and Wooten Construction are offering a combined $2,000 for information that identifies the men who stole an estimated $35,000 in equipment.

At about 10 a.m. Sunday, Oct. 19, two men entered the gated area where construction equipment is stored for the remodeling of Las Cruces High School. They gained access to a Polaris all-terrain vehicle and used it to steal a Bobcat welder mount-

One of the suspects is believed to have left the construction site driving the red Polaris ATV pulling the trailer-mounted welder. The suspect is believed to have driven the ATV along the canal on the south side of the school, and is believed to have headed south along Valley Drive at around noon on Sunday.

Anyone with information that can help identify the suspects – or knows the whereabouts of the stolen construction equipment – is asked to call Las Cruces Crime Stoppers at 800-222-

Penultimate football week to set tone

The Las Cruces area is accustomed to dominating the state high school football scene on the higher levels. In years past, Las Cruces High and Mayfield High were the standard bearers with multiple state championships each and have twice met head to head to decide the title, including last year.

Oñate also grabbed a title a little more than a decade ago, but has not found much success since.

Centennial has been in existence for just three years.

As we head into the second-to-last weekend of the regular season of high school football, all four Las Cruces schools are in contention.

Despite playing one class level lower, the Centennial Hawks have defeated Oñate and Las Cruces this year and are 8-0 as they head to Belen for a game Friday, Oct. 31.

The Mayfield Trojans were 7-1 heading into a game at Gadsden Thursday, Oct. 30 (the game was not finished by press time).

The annual Cruces-Mayfield showdown is scheduled for Friday, Nov. 7. The big game of the weekend, though, is the Oñate Knights against the Las Cruces Bulldawgs at the Field of Dreams 7 p.m. Friday, Oct. 31.

Las Cruces, defending state champs, has a rare three losses already (5-3) and is now without starting quarterback Kameron Miller, who will sit out the rest of the season with an injury.

The Knights (6-3) are very much in the mix for a playoff berth. Oñate is 5-1 in its past six games.

Postseason brackets are scheduled to be released Saturday, Nov. 8.

So snap on those chinstraps extra tight, things are getting interesting.

Ags back in action at home

NMSU football hosts Texas State Bobcats, looks to end skid

Bulletin Staff Report

A famous saying imparts the wisdom, "There is nothing like home cooking."

The Aggies (2-6 overall, 1-3 Sun Belt) have not won a game since Sept. 6. They'll try to right their ship at 2 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 1, when they play host to the Texas State Bobcats (4-3 overall, 2-1 Sun Belt).

Six-straight losses quickly put a damper on a 2-0 start to the season. In particular, back-to-back road defeats at the hands of previously winless Troy and Idaho, respectively, have sapped momentum from the 2014 campaign.

Still, with three straight games at home on the schedule, there is time for NMSU to stop its skid.

Texas State brings a balanced offense with an average of 231 yards rushing per game and 215 yards passing. The Aggies defense is surrendering an average of 331 yards rushing per game but just 143 yards passing.

The top rusher for Texas State is Robert Lowe who, with six games played, has 529 yards on the ground as well as eight touchdowns.

Quarterback Tyler Jones has 14 touchdown passes and has been intercepted just five times.

Larry Rose III leads NMSU with 530 yards rushing.

The Aggies have played two quarterbacks this season, with junior college-transfer Tyler Rogers taking most of the snaps. He has 1,755 yards passing but has been picked off 15 times compared to 11 touchdowns. Freshman Andrew Allen started the last game against Idaho and has completed 10 passes on 16 attempts for 120 yards, no touchdowns and one pick.

The game also marks Military Appreciation Day.

New Mexico State University wide receiver Joseph Matthews runs after hauling in a reception against the University of New Mexico Sept. 20. Matthews, the team's second-leading receiver, and the rest of the Aggies take on Texas State Saturday, Nov. 1, at Aggie Memorial Stadium.

Las Cruces soccer teams ready for playoffs

LCHS girls feel prepared

By Lewis Harry
For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Area prep soccer teams have concluded their regular seasons and are gearing up for the playoffs.

The Las Cruces High School boys' soccer team has earned a first-round bye and will meet an opponent Thursday, Nov. 6. The Oñate High boys take on Eldorado at home at 3 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 1, while the Centennial boys' soccer team hosts Valencia at 7 p.m. Friday, Oct. 31.

In the girls' bracket, Las Cruces plays host to Albuquerque High at 1 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 1.

The LCHS girls are seeded No. 8 in the field of 12. Coach Jacquelyn Paz believes the Bulldawgs are in a good position to make a run to the top.

"I think we have prepared really well," she said.

"We have worked on a lot of our weaknesses and by doing that we can capitalize on everything and make it come together"

Led by five seniors, the LCHS girls are strong both on offense and defense. Through 20 games, the Bulldawgs have scored 63 goals, while surrendering just 27 to opponents. Freshman Kirsten Udero has provided a spark on offense, scoring 17 goals this season. The Bulldawgs have enjoyed a streak of recent success, winning eight of their last nine with a lone 0-0 tie at Albuquerque Academy.

"Our girls do well with most games," Paz said. "I think with the tougher teams we go against, our girls tend to go a little bit harder and we show what we are capable of."

The Bulldawgs have allowed just three goals during their recent streak of success.

"We've been working on the midfield, working with wings and forwards getting in the attack. We're all trying to work together, but our main focuses have been getting the midfield and the forwards more opportunities to score,"

Paz said.

Senior midfielder Gwen Holtzman said the team has come together at the right time.

"I think we have a really strong bond on and off the field and it really shows at practice," Holtzman said. "It's really important to communicate in soccer and we really do talk a lot on the field.

"When we make mistakes in a game situation, we try and bring each other up and stay positive."

Also leading the charge for the Bulldawgs are juniors Ariel Roybal and Julia Harty, also pace the team in with 12 and nine goals respectively.

"I think we have a really good chance," Holtzman said. "I've always said that state is about how well you play four games, so it really comes down to our work ethic. If we come out and we believe in ourselves and really work hard, I think we will have good results."

NMSU narrows AD search field

- Gerard Koloskie, former deputy director of athletics/senior associate athletics director, University of Nevada, Las Vegas

Charlie Blanchard
Golf Doctor

I recently stumbled on a great quote by the legendary fitness guru, the late Jack Lalanne: "I didn't start playing golf until I was 50. I didn't get down to a 4 handicap until I was 80."

It gave me pause and led me to think, yet again, about golf and aging.

Golfers in their 20s or 30s may not realize it, but golf is one of those rare endeavors where we can actually get better with age, kinda like fine wine. In tennis, if you lose a step or two due to aging, you can't play with the younger guys. Not so with golf. As older men and women golfers, we may not hit it as long as the kids, but there's more to the game than bombing drives a mile.

I have been playing golf for more than 60 years. I played my first nine holes when I was 11 with my grandfather at the Lyndhurst, Ohio, municipal golf course, which has since been turned into condos. Grandpa was an accomplished golfer and truly believed that his idol, Ben Hogan, held the "secret" of the golf swing, but it was up to us pedestrians to figure it out ourselves.

In the mid-1970s, I was a member at the beautiful Birmingham Country Club in Birmingham, Mich., a suburb of Detroit, site of the 1953 PGA Championship. In those days, I was a nervous 13 handicap, striving to little avail to get good. Frustrated with golf, I took up marathon running and then long triathlons. Eventually, I won two Ironman Triathlon Masters (40+) Championships (1982 and 83) in Hawaii. But I did still play golf on the Big Island while there.

When I moved to Las Cruces in 1988, I started playing more golf again. In 1993, I began working with the Aggie men's golf team as their sport psychologist and instantly realized that I had to ratchet up my game to avoid embarrassment as I was having to go out and play with the flat bellies.

Coach Herb Wimberly helped me improve my skills and confidence. I went from a ho-hum average golfer to an aging player who went out and passed the PGA Playing Ability Test. I can still shoot a sub-par round from the appropriate tees. My point is if I can do it, you can, too. Here are some tips on how to start playing the golf you never thought you could play:

Work out: Exercise physiologists explain that you can build muscle, get stronger and become more flexible even into your 90s.

Don't let it slide. Try to become disciplined about strength workouts at the gym, aerobic exercise such as running, walking and bicycling and flexibility. Watch your diet and your weight in addition.

Get an attitude: Don't accept that you're going to lose talent as you get older. Become a student of the game and work on new shots and appropriate swing changes. Refuse to be intimidated by the long-hitting young studs. Become a deadly putter and chipper.

Play for something: One of the ways to get better is to compete. Sure, we want to have fun, and playing for something is usually more fun than just beating balls around with no purpose, even if it's just for chump change or drinks.

Take lessons: You'll be amazed what your PGA pro can do for you. Old golfers can learn new tricks, so don't resist real instruction or radical change. Work with your teacher to set challenging goals and measure your progress. Mine is to shoot my age every time I go out.

Practice: Big surprise here, you need a plan and some discipline with your game preparation. Pay close attention to your short game – chipping, putting and bunkers – and the mental game. Maybe you've lost some distance; so develop better touch and score better.

I'm reminded of the late Pablo Casals when challenged by an interviewer who inquired: "Mr. Casals, you're 95 and the greatest cellist the world has ever known. Why do you still practice six hours a day?"

Casals paused and replied, "I think I'm beginning to notice some improvement."

Former Trojan transfers, decides to redshirt season

Barbara Boxleitner
Keeping up

Eric Burton is a redshirt this soccer season.

The Mayfield High School graduate joined Colorado Mesa University after playing two years at Chandler-Gilbert Community College. During preseason in August, however, the junior decided to redshirt because, he said, "the back line is full of seniors," meaning it would be difficult to receive playing time.

He's using this season to "learn from them" to be ready to begin his final two years of eligibility next fall.

"I go to practices, and I kind of push the guys," he said. "I give them a lot of competitiveness."

He doesn't attend away games, instead practicing while the team travels. He does attend home games, though.

Burton saw Fort Lewis College junior forward Trevor Gibbons, also from Mayfield, when Fort Lewis lost Friday, Oct. 24, at Colorado Mesa. Gibbons was a substitute.

More men's soccer

Colorado Mesa senior forward Alan Hernandez had two goals and two assists through 16 games, including seven starts. He played for Oñate High School.

Women's soccer

Eastern New Mexico University senior Alyssa Prince was named the Lone Star Conference offensive player of the week Wednesday, Oct. 15. Through 14 games, Prince tied for the team lead with five goals and was the points leader with 11.

Former PRC commissioner seeks to regain seat

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

In the state Public Regulation Commission (PRC) District 5 race, Republican incumbent Ben Hall is being challenged by Sandy Jones, a Democrat who had previously held the position.

When he was on the PRC, Jones said he launched the ethics committee in response to scandals that had plagued the commission that oversees business and utility regulation in the state. Jones said he wrote the rules calling for 20 percent of the state electricity to come from renewable energy resources by 2020.

In addition to utilities, the PRC regulates telecommunications and motor carrier industries to ensure fair and reasonable rates, and to assure reasonable and adequate services to the public. The PRC also promotes public safety through the offices of state fire marshal, the firefighter training academy, pipeline safety bureau and transportation division.

Hall said the PRC was still a "mess" when he was elected to office in 2010 and the PRC hasn't been the source of scandals since. Hall said he is running for re-election to continue making PRC a respectable agency and that he brings business and common sense to commission decisions.

Because he is currently on the commission, Hall is exempt from new educational or professional requirements for PRC members. Hall, a former lawmaker, said he makes a point to thoroughly review proposed regulations and seeks PRC staff consultation on those aspects of a regulation he isn't clear about.

Jones said the PRC must balance consumer and business needs, but should consider "the long view" in certain areas, especially energy and telecommunications.

Hall said New Mexico needs a diversified energy portfolio, which includes traditional energy sources along with renewable energy.

Jones said the PRC plays an important regulatory role for industry safety the state and, if elected, he would push for bringing back rail inspectors.

In terms of setting utility rates, Hall said he studies the proposals carefully listens to concerns raised by PRC staff and intervenes.

Jones said one of the PRC's main missions is to ensure delivery of safe, reliable energy, but the utilities shouldn't make more profit than needed. If elected, Jones said he would call for a full audit on how fuel costs are set by utilities.

Hall said every business – including utilities – is entitled to some kind of profit.

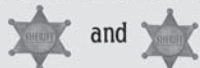

Although PRC must balance business and consumer concerns, Jones said when he was on the commission, he fought against phone companies to provide better rates for consumers. He said communication technology is becoming more important as wireless devices become more prevalent.

New Mexico attorney general candidates Susan Riedel, Republican, and Hector Balderas, Democrat, listen to a question at the League of Women Voters of Greater Las Cruces forum Sept. 9 in Las Cruces City Council Chambers.

Balderas v. Riedel for attorney general

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

New Mexico's current Attorney General Gary King can't run for that office again because of term limits, which is why he is running for governor.

State Auditor Hector Balderas is term-limited, which is why the Democrat with a law degree is running for attorney general.

The GOP candidate is retired prosecutor and judge Susan Riedel, a Las Cruces, is running at the request of Republican Gov. Susana Martinez.

Balderas is touting his experience as both the state auditor and a lawmaker. Riedel, a Republican, is running on her experience in the courtroom as a lawyer, prosecutor and judge.

Riedel has promised that politics won't influence how the AG's office is run, if she is elected.

"I'm going to do what's right,"

Riedel said. "I have no greater aspirations than AG and I want to leave a legacy that will be hard to match by others who follow me."

Balderas said his focus as a lawmaker and state auditor has always been driven by a desire for providing public service.

"I want to make a difference for the right reasons," he said.

"I have a solid track record of accountability."

As state auditor, Balderas said he provided some of the best service from one of the smallest offices in state government. If elected, Balderas said one goal would be for the office to issue legal opinions faster and respond to requests for action more quickly.

While issuing opinions is one of many tasks provided by the office, the AG acts as the state's attorney, representing New Mexico in court and in all appellate cases, Riedel said. That's why it's important for the AG to know what it takes to prosecute a criminal case, she said.

Balderas said the office also performs an important government watchdog role, such as going after abuses by public officials or taking on scam artists.

As state auditor, Balderas said he has experience "taking on those bad actors."

The attorney general also represents New Mexico in interstate disputes, such as the current fight over Rio Grande water with Texas. Balderas said the office needs to have a solicitor general focused on water rights to handle such disputes, as well as other water adjudication cases.

Riedel said the case against Texas is critical for New Mexico, but could have been avoided through negotiations, rather than through court actions that led to Texas challenging New Mexico.

Doña Ana County sheriff candidates Craig Buckingham, Republican, and Enrique "Kiki" Vigil, Democrat, listen to questions at the local NAACP chapter's candidate forum Thursday, Oct. 23, in Las Cruces City Council Chambers.

Sheriff's race debates law enforcement roles

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

During the primary election, the field for Doña Ana County sheriff was the most crowded with seven candidates in the field.

With the candidates now down to Democrat Enrique "Kiki" Vigil and Republican Craig Buckingham, the issues also have narrowed.

A lot of the primary election forums discussed the controversial issue of how much the sheriff's department should get involved in immigration enforcement. That question still comes up.

Vigil asserts that immigration status should only be a concern for field officers when it's relevant to a call, but he also said he has a good relationship with immigration officials from his days as a federal law enforcement officer.

Buckingham leads the department's efforts in the Chaparral-Anthony, N.M., area and said the residents in those communities don't fear the officers under his command, but added that law enforcement officers have a duty to assist each other, noting that Border Patrol will pull over and detain someone driving recklessly or impaired.

But the more recent debate has centered on the proper management and focus of the department in light of the county's limited funds.

Shoring up the budget has required belt-tightening that has come with a cost, Buckingham said.

Vigil said the county has only 50 deputies when it should have more than 160, and they are paid about $10,000 less a year than Las Cruces police officers.

Buckingham put the blame for the deputy shortage on the County Commission, which he said has frozen its budget the past three years. Vigil said problems also stem from the department having too many high-ranking, better paid officers doing desk duty rather than putting resources out in the field. He also blamed low morale for the shortage.

Movie travels light years in 35mm to Las Cruces

Early release of 'Interstellar' headed to Cineport 10

Bulletin Staff Report

A futuristic movie will be shown in a retro way at Allen Theatres starting Wednesday, Nov. 5.

Allen Theatres' Cineport 10 is one of just 171 screens nationwide selected to show a 35-millimeter film version of the movie "Interstellar."

"Christopher Nolan, the director of the movie, is what you could call a purist," said Russell Allen, vice president of operations of Allen Theatres. "Even though most all movies are digital now, he wanted to do a limited release of the movie on film."

Nolan, the director of the "Dark Knight" trilogy and other films, has enough clout in Hollywood to pull it off.

The movie opens nationwide Friday, Nov. 7, but Cineport 10 and the other screens showing it in 35mm will open "Interstellar" two days early.

The PG-13-rated movie stars Matthew McConaughey, Anne Hathaway, Jessica Chastain and Michael Caine. It's a science fiction film about astronauts using wormholes to travel in space.

In 2007, Allen said, Allen Theatres were among the first 10 percent of theaters to convert to digital projectors. In addition to Cineport 10, the Telshor 12 and Video 4 in Las Cruces, Allen Theatres also operates theaters in Alamogordo, Carlsbad,

"There are a few directors and a certain audience that will appreciate film over digital."

RUSSELL ALLEN

Vice President of Operations, Allen Theatres

Clovis, Farmington, Gallup, Hobbs, Roswell and Ruidoso as well as Cortez and Durango, Colo.

The Video 4 was the last to convert to digital, doing so in January.

"But every one of our theaters has kept at least one 35-millimeter film projector," he said.

That decision enabled Allen Theatres to receive the invitation, one it quickly accepted.

"We said, 'Hey, if we can, we should,'" Allen said.

After the early opening, Allen said, the film version will likely remain in the theater for at least a week, maybe two weeks.

"There are a few directors and a certain audience that will appreciate film over digital," Allen said.

He likened it to music groups who still produce vinyl LPs for aficionados who like the warm sound of needle on groove.

Specific times for the Wednesday, Nov. 5, premiere were not set by presstime.

Crisis Triage Center contract goes to La Frontera

The Doña Ana County Commission on Tuesday, Oct. 28, awarded a contract to La Frontera New Mexico to start up services at the Crisis Triage Center.

The county could pay La Frontera up to $1.4 million a year to run the facility, but a final amount will be negotiated.

The Crisis Triage Center is for law enforcement to take offenders who may be mentally ill, rather than booking them into the county's Detention Center. The Crisis Triage Center is located next to the Detention Center should the person detained be deemed to not be experiencing a psychiatric crisis. People brought to the Crisis Triage Center will be held in protective custody on a short-term basis for psychiatric care and referral to community services.

The Crisis Triage Center is aimed at reducing costs and liabilities to the county related to jailing people with mental illnesses, as well as freeing up police officer available who would have to accompany a person being admitted to a local behavioral hospital facility.

La Frontera plans to have at least two people staffing the center at any given time with a psychiatrist and a nurse on call.

Ron Gurley, president of the local chapter of the National Alliance on Mental Illness, told commissioners he was comfortable with the contract, though there are some who have concerns about La Frontera, an Arizona-based company hired by the state in a controversial takeover of nonprofit behavioral health providers in New Mexico.

County Commissioner Billy Garrett said he plans to hold a County Commission work session about the contract.

High school transfer requests being accepted

Any high school student in the Las Cruces Public Schools (LCPS) who wants to transfer to a different school for the second semester has until 5 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 20, to submit a transfer request application.

Completed forms should be submitted to Wendi Miller-Tomlinson, director of secondary instruction, from Nov. 3-20. She is located in the LCPS Administration Building, 505 S. Main, Loretto Towne Centre.

"This time period is created specifically for students who want to enroll in a different high school beginning in January," Miller-Tomlinson said. "But students need to know it's not an automatic approval and they need to provide a good rationale as to why they feel they need to attend a different school."

Students who are already attending a school based a previous transfer cannot apply for a second change to another school. The only option left open to them is to return to their original "home" school, Miller-Tomlinson added.

The "Request for Change of School Assignment" form is on the LCPS website at <http://lcps.k12.nm.us/forms/#T> and at all high schools. Students will be informed in December as to whether their application was approved, LCPS officials said.

Students who participate in athletics should first consult with their school's athletic coordinator before applying for a transfer, Miller-Tomlinson said. The New Mexico Activities Association sets eligibility requirements and moving to another high school could impact the student's eligibility, she said. Additional information is also available from the LCPS Athletics Office at 527-5812.

The transfer period for elementary and middle school students does not open until February 2015, which is applicable to the 2015-16 school year. High school students can also apply for a transfer next spring to be effective in August 2015, officials added.

Miller-Tomlinson can be contacted at 527-6657 or wmiller-tomlinson@lcps.k12.nm.us for more information.

Week of Remembrance set at DACC

The Cultural Diversity Committee of Doña Ana Community College (DACC) will celebrate the passing of those who have gone before by holding a Week of Remembrance, decorating ribbons and hanging them in the patio area of the East Mesa Campus through Wednesday, Nov. 5.

Students, faculty, staff and the public may participate by visiting the Cultural Diversity table located outside the Student Resources Building in the East Mesa courtyard. All are encouraged to take a moment and write the name of loved ones on a ribbon to be displayed in their memory. The ribbons will be displayed through Nov. 5.

This weeklong celebration comes at the same time as Dia de los Muertos, a holiday from Mexico, South and Central America, and many cities in the United States typically celebrated Nov. 1. The holiday honors the spirits of loved ones that have passed and instead of looking at death as a time to mourn, Dia de los Muertos treats the occasion as a time for celebration with parties, parades, dances and other activities. Death is treated as part of life. On this day celebrants hope deceased loved ones will awake and share in the festivities.

County Labor Board appointment disputed

An applicant for Doña Ana County's Labor Relations Board has filed a complaint with the New Mexico Attorney General's Office, saying the appointment of another applicant was in violation of state statutes and county ordinance.

In his complaint, Charles Huestis said he had been informed that he was the only applicant prior to the Doña Ana County Commission's July 8 meeting, which had an action item on its agenda to make the appointment.

At the meeting, another applicant,

Merilee Soules, was added and the commission approved her as the management representative on the board.

In addition to lacking prior public notification of the other applicant, Huestis said Soules was not formally recommended by the county manager as required. Instead, County Manager Julia Brown deferred that recommendation to the commission, which Huestis said is contrary to the county's ordinance for the board appointment. In his complaint, Huestis said state statute does not give the commission the authority to consider an alternative applicant.

Las Cruces Doña Ana County Sierra County Transit Keeps Our Region Moving Forward!

Regional Transit Benefits Everyone

•Expanded, inexpensive bus and shuttle service in Doña Ana and Sierra Counties will add routes within and between communities. Create routes to and from Las Cruces and Anthony, Chaparral, Sunland Park, Santa Teresa, and Alamogordo, Truth or Consequences, Hatch and more.

•Rural south central New Mexico needs regional transit. Many residents spend more than 30 percent of their annual income on transportation alone due to lack of transportation options.

•Regional transit helps people getting to their jobs, students going to school at our community colleges and NMSU, seniors and people with disabilities gaining independence, and rural residents getting the opportunity to build better lives.

•Keeps our communities moving in the right direction. Investments in public transit are key to job growth, quality of life and livability as our region grows.

•For less than 10 cents a day per average household, we can create a public transit service that will unite our community, contribute to economic growth, and attract new jobs and businesses to our region.

- Freedom and Independence for Senior Citizens
- Opening Education & Careers for Young People
- Creating a Better Life for Rural Residents
- Safer Roads and Less Congestion in the Future
- Make it to the Game & Special Events with Ease

For less than 10 cents per day*, we can create a reliable, inexpensive public transit service that serves all the residents of Las Cruces, and Dona Ana and Sierra counties. It will unite our community, bring needed jobs and economic growth, and improve our quality of life. Passing Regional Transit is the single most important step we can take to move our region and communities in the right direction.

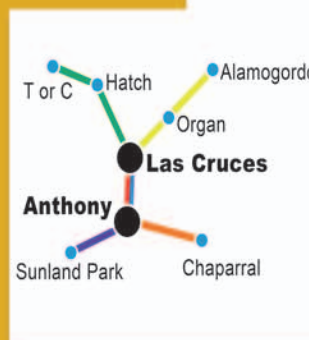

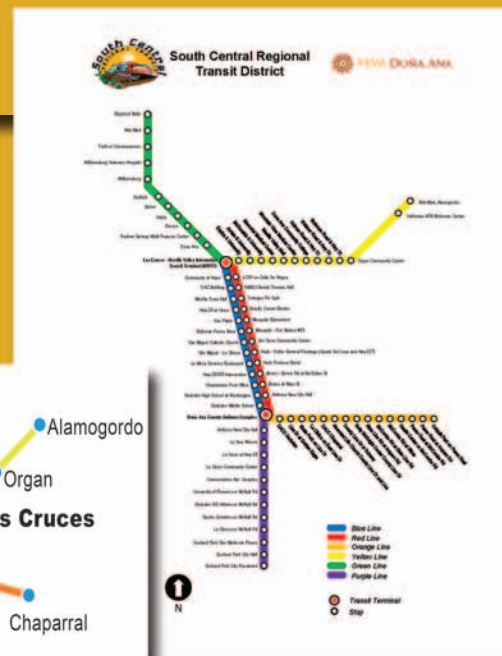

Everyone benefits – seniors and people with disabilities gaining independence, people getting to their jobs, students going to school at our colleges, and rural residents getting the opportunity to build better lives. Vote on Regional Transit for the future of our community.

*Cost per day per household - Estimated impact of 1% of 1% GRT on taxable expenditures for median income households ($37,566) is $36.26 or less than 10 cents per day per household. (James Peach PhD and Anthony Popp PhD, NMSU economists)

VoteOnRegionalTransit.com

Early Voting is underway.
Election Day on November 4th

• Las Cruces RoadRUNNER Transit will see an increase of $3 - 4 million annually to vastly improve its services - more buses, routes, evenings, weekends, and frequency.

Steve Bukowski, director of the Southwest Technology Development Institute (SWTDI) at New Mexico State University, opens the door of the data acquisition system that measures panel performance for SWTDI's long-term solar equipment evaluation.

NMSU shifts focus to energy delivery

By Alta LeCompte
Las Cruces Bulletin

Southwest Technology Development Institute (SWTDI), founded at New Mexico State University in 1977, led the way in photo-voltaic research. But that's so 20th century.

The solar industry has matured and the work done at the little cluster of buildings at the end of Research Road is slipping into history. The legacy, however, remains.

Steve Bukowski, SWTDI's new director and the man with a vision for the institute's future, points out three large solar panels that are visible and impressively techie to motorists on I-10.

The panels are part of a long-term evaluation of the three generations of photo-voltaic technology SWTDI is conducting for a corporate client.

"This is something SWTDI got real good at – collecting data," Bukowski said as he opened the door of the data acquisition system behind the panels. Long term evaluation for clients will continue, he said. SWTDI's focus, however, will shift to the design of a grid with control and communication technology for greater sustainability and resiliency.

Bukowski accepts the challenge

Federal funding for solar research began to decline in recent years. Three years ago, SWTDI moved into NMSU's Klipsch School of Electrical and Computer Engineering and its key staff later retired.

About a year and half ago, Bukowski applied for the job as director. He joined SWTDI just two months ago, after earning his PhD at NMSU and designing developing micro systems at Sandia National Laboratory.

An electrical engineer by training, he had had a 20-year career as a communication specialist in the data and telecommunications industry before returning to school to earn a doctorate. As a doctoral student, he wanted to stretch and got into power systems, his new specialty.

"I was NMSU's first example of power systems and communication," he said.

The mission evolves

"We need to look at the bigger picture," Bukowski said. "How does solar fit into the grid as a whole? We now need to look at integrated, sustainable operation of the grid."

He said recent events have caused government policy makers and regulators to look at the future of energy supply differently. Natural disasters such as Hurricane Sandy have raised questions about the grid's lack of resiliency, its inability to keep the power on in large cities during emergencies, he said.

The answers lie in public policy and regulation as well as the integration of new technology into a delivery system that has evolved over the past 100 years, Bukowski said.

As a research institute, SWTDI is designing its own micro-grid that can function as an island unto itself or be interconnected with a larger grid.

"This is an opportunity to change how the system works as a whole," Bukowski said.

He said technology is emerging that enables consumers to control their demand for electricity with devices such as his home thermostat that knows nobody's home and can turn down the AC. It has an Ethernet interface he can control with a variety of devices, including his cell phone.

"As consumers learn to control demand, utilities will become the enabler," he said. "But large utilities do not turn on a dime. How do we engage the utility companies and the industry and get everybody to work together?"

Utilities have been forced to build capacity to meet peak demand, Bukowski said. They may be using that capacity four or five days a year. A revolution in communication and control – similar in concept to his thermostat but national in scope – could change everything.

"How do we take advantage of communication and control to make the system more sustainable?" he asked. "How can we better build a network to meet every body's reliability expectations and deliver energy without following the pace at which we

Teresa Tolonen and Elaine Sasnow have joined the Las Cruces Bulletin staff as marketing consultants.

Sasnow, who enjoyed a globe-spanning career in marketing in the hospitality industry, came on board in October. Tolonen, with a background in sales and management in a variety of industries, joined the Bulletin last year as circulation manager. Her role has expanded to include assisting customers with marketing their businesses.

Sasnow puts down roots

Although her first job out of college was as a computer programmer, Elaine Sasnow quickly discovered she wasn't on the right path.

"Shortly thereafter, I discovered hotels," she said. "That was a great fit for me because I am a people person."

For much of her marketing career, she was with Hilton and Radisson hotels, re-branding properties and opening new ones.

Sasnow said her sister has lived in Las Cruces more than 20 years, and as a frequent visitor she has enjoyed watching the city grow while maintaining its character. She moved to the city 11 years ago.

Prior to joining the Bulletin, she was new business director for Mountain Dreams Publishing and marketing director for the Dickerson Group.

For six years, she served on the boards of La Casa and the Doña Ana Arts Council (DAAC). She served as co-chair for the grand opening of the Rio Grande Theatre. Sasnow is the 2014 sponsorship director for DAAC.

Contact Sasnow at 680-1860 or elaine@lascrucesbulletin.com.

Tolonen combines family and career

A single mother of three school-age children, Tolonen has been selling everything from automobiles to phone book ads since 1997.

Her background also includes stints managing a movie theater, restaurants and stores. She is a former support coordinator for the nonprofit Tresco Inc.

Although born in Las Cruces, Tolonen attended schools and began her career in Ohio. She returned to the City of the Crosses 13 years ago.

"This was always home to me," she said. "It's where I want to be."

She praised the group of 20 newspaper carriers she supervises.

"We work as a team, and we have gotten very efficient," she said.

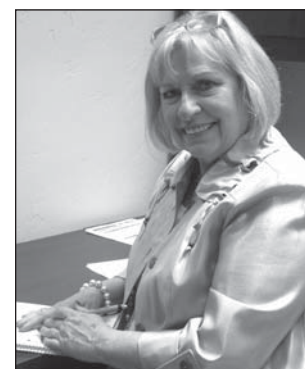

In her first year as Bulletin circulation manager, Tolonen reorganized the circulation department and expanded her already extensive circle of contacts in the community. She realized she also could do sales and marketing for the newspaper.

"Being from Las Cruces made the circulation position easier," she said. "Being bi-lingual has really been an asset in both advertising and circulation."

Tolonen the Bulletin publication "HouseHunt" is gaining wider recognition, including in southern Doña Ana Community, where communities are growing rapidly.

"I am reaching out to expand our relationship with residents and businesses from here to Santa Teresa," she said. "My thing is personal relationships."

Tolonen said she's always available for a call from a business or resident. Reach her at the Bulletin at 680-1841.

Advertising manager Shellie McNabb said the department, which includes marketing consultants Claire Frohs and Pam Rossi, has reorganized to better meet clients' needs. No longer restricted to a geographical territory, each consultant assists clients throughout the community.

"We have opened up the way we serve our clients," McNabb said.

She said she welcomes calls on her direct line, 680-1979.

"I'll be the first to advise on proper media mix," McNabb said. "We want to do what's best for each client."

have been building our generating capacity?"

Bringing experts together

To find some answers at NMSU, SWTDI will look beyond its compound of small wooden buildings.

"My biggest push is integration within the electrical engineering department," Bukowski said.

He said a $5.2 million National Science Foundation grant is helping SWTDI to do outreach within and outside NMSU, bringing a whole suite of specialties to bear on the power delivery challenge.

Collaborative projects are planned with the national laboratories, the University of New Mexico, El Paso

Electric and PNM.

"From our perspective, the big players are the utility industry, the regulatory bodies," he said. "The Public Regulation Commission needs a long-term vision of sustainability."

"The utilities have to be the driver. They're the experts, the ones that keep the lights on and are looking at what's on the horizon that will change their industry."

Where are the students?

Bukowski said SWTDI's evolving mission won't leave students behind. Seven are working at the institute and Bukowski is mentoring others. He also is teaching a class at NMSU and doing outreach in the public schools.

Meanwhile, since SWTDI is all about renewable and sustainable, some student entrepreneurs from the Arrowhead Center incubator will contribute sweat equity to updating three of the structures in the SWTDI compound for use as their offices.

It's a win-win, because they will be consumers of electrical power supplied by SWTDI's micro-grid.

In effect, they will be both researchers (on unrelated projects) and research subjects.

Bukowski said he's hoping they'll bring not just computers, but also refrigerators to their new quarters.

"We need people using our energy," he said.

Billionaires are fascinating people

Chris Erickson
State of the Economy

People are fascinated by wealth. To wit: The popularity of billionaire lists published by business weeklies around the world.

The oldest of these lists, compiled by Forbes since 1987, purports to include every billionaire in the world.

According to Forbes, there were 140 billionaires in 1987. The number had grown to 1,400 by 2013.

That's not very many people. It works out to about 30 per 100 million adults by 2013. A typical person can go their whole life without meeting one. I've met two – both were self-made, both seemed like very nice people.

All this is interesting, but not very enlightening, as we don't know if there are more billionaires because of increased concentration of wealth or because of economic growth.

One way to get around this problem is to look at the wealth of a fixed percentage of the population. An economist who has done this is Thomas Piketty.

Piketty first looked at the richest twenty-millionth – about 150 people out of 3 billion adults in 1987 and about 225 people out of 4.5 billion adults in 2013. Using the Forbes list to determine who to include, he found that the average wealth of these people increased from $1.5 billion in 1987 to $15 billion in 2013. This works out to an average growth rate of 6.4 percent after inflation.

Meanwhile, average global wealth per capita increased 2.1 percent per year between 1987 and 2013; per capita income increased at 1.4 percent per year.

Between 1987 and 2013, wealth increased faster than income and the largest fortunes grew even faster.

Many of us would be fine with this if we thought the very rich earned their fortunes, but there is little relation between entrepreneurial skill and billionaire status. The most common source of great wealth is inheritance. The Walton grandchildren will occupy a spot on the Forbes list just the same as the most innovative entrepreneur.

Even when one restricts attention to entrepreneurial types, it's not clear that wealth reflects contribution to society. Most observers, for example, view Steve Jobs' contribution to be at least as great as Bill Gates, yet Jobs was worth only $8 billion when he passed away. Forbes has Bill Gates at $80 billion. There appears to be a lot of luck as to who is very rich and who is richest.

All this assumes that the Forbes billionaire list is a reliable source, which it almost certainly isn't. It's likely to over-represent entrepreneurial wealth as people who make their fortune by dint of effort are likely to have their wealth concentrated in publicly traded firms. Inherited wealth, which is more likely to be diversified, is much easier to hide. No doubt there are billionaires lurking out there, unknown to Forbes, and most of those hidden billionaires inherited their wealth.

Concentration of wealth isn't good for democracy. Persecution of the wealthy isn't good for democracy, either. What is needed is a system in which merit is rewarded. When massive wealth is inherited rather than earned, the result will be an aristocracy rather than a meritocracy.

Christopher A. Erickson, Ph.D., is a professor of economics at New Mexico State University. Erickson began working at NMSU in 1987, but has never appeared on the Forbes list. The opinions expressed may not be shared by the regents and administration of NMSU. He can be reached at cerickson@nmsu.edu.

NM brewery co-op seeks members to start venture

Los Alamos, New Mexico will soon be among only a handful of cities in the country to open a cooperative craft brewery, and is brewing up tasty incentives to attract 300 new member/owners and investors to make that happen.

The Los Alamos Beer Co-op (LABC) estimates that the future brewery will open its new location early in 2015.

With 300 more memberships in the next few months, the co-op hopes to hire a professional brewer and eventually produce four varieties of beer, along with root beer and cider.

Each member has the power to vote on how the business should be run, what types of beers should be offered and other questions. Unlike traditional breweries, revenue has to be reinvested or returned to the members/owners.

There are currently only three co-op breweries in the country, but the idea is fast becoming the preferred business model for startup breweries tapping their communities for the funds and sweat equity it takes to get the brewery off the ground.

To encourage new memberships, the LABC is offering six ways to invest – ranging from a $50 annual membership to a $25,000 Angel Share investment. "Breweries have been shown to be great for the local economy – they provide well-paying jobs and a place for community cohesiveness where families, friends and visitors can listen to live music and enjoy handcrafted brews," said LABC board member/owner Amy Engle.

To open as a craft brewery, the LABC has applied for a craft brewery license from the state and expects to receive the license this year.

The future site of the brewery is located at a former bar and grille in Los Alamos that has been completely gutted, except for the original fireplace. The LABC chose not to construct a new facility, but instead, to make use of the pre-existing space in the center of town, in the interest of sustainability.

For more information or to become a member/owner or investor with the LABC, visit www.losalamosbeer-coop.com or email info@losalamosbeer.com.

SpringBoard! announces new recipients

By Charlotte Tallman
For the Las Cruces Bulletin

The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico (CFSNM) has announced this year's SpringBoard! and Over the Rainbow Scholarship recipients. SpringBoard! Scholarship recipients are Cristela Anchondo, Juliana Hernandez, Trisha Narvaez, Claudia Granados, Molly Miragliuolo, Elizabeth Antholzner, Larissa Chavez, Abigail Seward, Jackelyne Rosales, Jessica Guereque, Rosa Herrera, Adriana Ortiz, Sandra Vargas, Rosa Alaniz and Vianey Luna.

Paulina Orozco is the Over the Rainbow Scholarship recipient.

The SpringBoard! Scholarship program was established in 2004 to help improve the lives of women in southern New Mexico by providing opportunities for advanced education.

Each year SpringBoard! awards the scholarships, including the Over the Rainbow Scholarship, established by Nancy Baker to honor the memory of her mother, Dorothy Ellen Baker, a daughter of an Appalachian coal miner who valued higher education for women. The scholarships are awarded to deserving women ready to return to school.

"A SpringBoard! Scholarship committee composed of southern New Mexico women reviewed 44 applications and interviewed 19 semi-finalists this year," said Ammu Devasthali, who helped create the scholarships.

The scholarship is gaining notice, with this being the largest number of applications received to date.

This year, an anonymous donor provided $7,500, allowing the committee to award 11 $1,000 scholarships.

The program specifically targets young women who face difficulty returning to the Doña Ana Community College or vocational school, often because they dropped out of school to have children or had to go to work. In addition, SpringBoard! provides scholarships so women can apply for and pay for their GED examinations, often a cost hindrance that keeps them from exploring the option of higher education.

Scholarship applications are available on the CFSNM website, www.cfsnm.org, as well as at the foundation office.

Charlotte Tallman is a regular contributor to the Las Cruces Bulletin. She can be reached at 635-6833.

'Better Life' found on Telshor

Ace
Ace in the hole

Note: The following is purported to be the opinion of Ace, an 11-year-old Labrador mix who recently visited the new Better Life Natural Pet Foods on Telshor Boulevard..

Sniff.

Sniff.

Over here. It's a bin of treats – even a Chihuahua could reach them. Here goes.

Wow.

When your human takes you, tell them the treats are healthy. They are Oven baked. Grain free. With vegetables and fruit.

I usually leave healthy treats on the floor for Chica. She'll eat anything. But these?

One more – nobody's looking.

I'm on a leash, but my human's well trained. I'll head for some other good smells.

They're in cans and bags, but I can sniff.

The lady tells my human there's 10 different lines of natural food for dogs and (grrrrr) cats. Even senior for me and puppy for the guys I'm teaching to play at the pond.

My human's asking questions. I'll lie down.

The lady says there's two new lines – Wild Calling foods (multiple and single-source protein) and the Canadian-made go! – grain-free – and now! (only fresh meats). I could rip into that bag.

OK, what's in back of that glass?

It's fish swimming. Cool.

If you come here, lie down and whine (not too loud) in front of the fish. Your human will think you want to bring some home. Trust me, you do. Fish are your best friends when it comes to teasing the cat. The stupid cat will sit and stare for hours at the fish.

Hey, there's more water – a pond – too high to climb into.

My human's asking questions again. I'll just listen to the water.

The man says he can build pond for me in our yard.

Sweet.

Do you think if my human asks the man to build me a pond, he could fill it with some stinky Virginia swamp water?

Ace can be found in the Rio Grande in season, Caballo Lake or a local pond – preferably one where other labs are retrieving anything that floats.

NMSU student runs for national FFA office

A New Mexican is headed to Louisville, Kentucky, to make his bid at leading one of the country's oldest, biggest, and best-known organizations for developing young leaders, especially in the realm of agriculture.

Twenty-year-old Caleb Gustin is among 42 candidates from across the country hoping to take one of just six spots on the 2014-15 National FFA Officer Team. That team will be charged with inspiring leadership, personal growth and career success among 610,240 FFA members in 50 states, Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

"I'm ready to step into this experience and give myself to all the members," Gustin said. "Not all leaders are in the spotlight - I want to learn from the members and learn their story in order to help them reach their full potential."

During his first year of college at New Mexico State University, he served as a state vice-president for New Mexico FFA. Last year, he served as state president, visiting the members of 30 FFA chapters across New Mexico - all while attending NMSU full time.

Gustin is studying Agricultural Economics and Agricultural Business, a department he represents as an ambassador for NMSU's College of Agricultural, Consumer and Environmental Sciences (ACES). He also works part-time at New Mexico Department of Agriculture (NMDA).

"Caleb is ready to serve and has what it takes to lead and inspire others. We wish him all the best - even though it would mean that we'd lose his good help at NMDA for a year," New Mexico Secretary of Agriculture Jeff Witte said. "We know he has all the qualities to lead FFA at the national level."

If Gustin wins national office, he'll spend the next year doing a lot of traveling. He'll visit and conduct officer trainings at FFA chapters across the country. He'll also meet with leaders of the U.S. agricultural industry.

Gustin grew up working around cattle on his grandfather's ranch. He furthered his interest in animal agriculture by showing pigs and sheep at the county and state fairs. These days, he spends what spare time he has hunting and fishing, playing intramural football at NMSU, and volunteering around Las Cruces at such places as El Caldito Soup Kitchen.

He is the son of Mike and Lisa Gustin. His sister Jessica is a freshman at NMSU studying to be a The 2014-15 National FFA Officer Team will be announced Nov. 1.

ROMAN KLIMKIEWICZ - ZIP 88005
Our 5 ton a/c was 14 years old and I could not find a better deal. Geothermal sounded interesting to us, you answered all my questions, and because of all the credits the cost to us was basically $0. I am from the old school and like to set my thermostat manually and I can do that. You have come out twice a year and your service has been excellent.

MCDONALD JACOB - ZIP 88005
I purchased my Geo Thermal System from Ron. That's one of the best decisions I've ever made. It keeps my house cool and comfortable and I received all my tax rebates.

DWANE LEGG - ZIP 88005
I was already interested in Geothermal A/C for my home and the tax credits made that an obvious choice. What has most impressed me is the service after the sale. My church had another company servicing the a/c units and when one of the office a/c units went out the previous company told me it would be 10 days before they could get to us. One Hour had the unit fixed the next day and now has my church's business as well as the service for my home

KATIE BAKER - ZIP 88011
I have three things to say about One Hour Geothermal Air Conditioning. #1 It Works, #2 It's environmentally friendly and #3 It's practically free. Its nuts not to switch from swamp coolers to geothermal refrigerated air. Our house is cool, our electric bill is low and our propane bill has dropped. The service has been great and we are very happy.

MTTI opts to expand Downtown

By Alta LeCompte
Las Cruces Bulletin

A rent increase was just the push Massage Therapy Training Institute (MTTI) owner Timothy Gay needed to relocate MTTI to 303 N. Alameda Blvd.

“My brother, Patrick, did the Downtown master plan and I’ve always wanted to be part of Downtown,” he said.

After 11 years and a build out at the previous location at the corner of Motel Boulevard and Picacho Avenue, MTTI had grown out of its 2,000-square foot space.

More than a year of searching, finding and renovating preceded MTTI’s August opening at the new 4,600-square foot space.

Gay did much of the work himself, taking down walls and building new ones. The project included updating the building’s mechanics, installing a new electrical system.

Family members, including artist Susan Teague and interior designer Catherine Stefanvage, contributed their talents.

Journey from Mesilla

Gay’s father, Luan Smith, a counseling psychologist, founded the business. After getting a massage license, Smith started a day spa in his Mesilla spa. He later expanded to offer massage therapy training.

Gay was a member of the seventh class to go through MTTI in 2003. He bought the business in 2007.

His earlier careers included rammed earth construction, railroad fireman and mechanic and even a stint as stay-at-home dad in 1987.

“It was a blessing to have that time with my daughter,” he said.

He had tried college, diving into engineering and music.

“I’m more of a trade school learner,” he said. “Massage therapy is a very hands-on, kinesthetic kind of career.”

A class discusses the exam schedule at Massage Therapy Training Institute on Alameda Boulevard.

MTTI owner Tim Gay moved MTTI Downtown where the school and massage clinic has more room to grow.

Training for a career

Gay said the hands-on part is an art, but the anatomy education is rigorous.

Students apply and practice what they learn giving massages at the MTTI clinic.

“You can’t just be a natural any more. You’ve got to study hard,” he said.

Students attracted to the field “usually have been the kid in the family that rubs mom’s shoulders or feet and is told they have good hands,” he said.

Those training at MTTI include kids right out of high school, people who decide they want to do something different and others seeking a retirement career.

“We’re starting class 55,” Gay said. “It’s amazing what you can do when you throw a bunch of years at it.”

MTTI offers two classes per year, each with day and evening options. Between 20 and 24 students are accepted into each class.

“We spend a lot of time making sure people who come here really want to be here, have the ability and have good day care. We also spend a lot of time making sure they understand the aid process – that they have to pay back loans and what their options are,” he said.

Jobs around the world

Students finance their training through federal financial aid, including direct loans and Pell grants, or through the G.I. bill or by paying cash.

“Federal financial aid is our payment plan,” Gay said. “Everybody qualifies for something.”

Gay said as part of the accreditation process MTTI must retain its students and get them to pass a licensing exam and land a job. It also is held accountable for its student loan default rate.

“When you’re accredited, you’re really held to a high standard,” Gay said.

During its most recent evaluation two years ago, MTTI received the highest level of accreditation, eight years, from the Bureau of Health Education Schools.

Students who complete the program have many career options, Gay said.

When they become licensed, they have their pick of job opportunities, from corporate massage therapist to working on a cruise ship or at a resort to owning their own businesses.

The MTTI culture

MTTI employs a staff of 10, including a financial aid director, admissions director and office manager as well as five instructors.

“Everybody working here is a massage therapist and owns their own business,” Gay said.

In addition, MTTI partners with New Mexico State University athletics to offer an externship supervised by Dietric Yamani and specializing in working with sports injuries.

Although he still does some injury treatment himself, Gay said he “pretty much pushes paper all the time now.”

“I do like it,” he said. “I get to work with wonderful people I pick. MTTI creates a nice, loving environment to work in.

“We have fun.”

Mesilla celebrates Dia de los Muertos

By Zak Hansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

The town of Mesilla's annual Dia de los Muertos celebration returns to the plaza Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 1-2.

Dia de los Muertos, or Day of the Dead, is a Mexican traditional holiday honoring and celebrating the souls of the deceased, who are believed to return to Earth once a year to visit loved ones. Each year, altars are constructed and adorned with colorful displays, and the favored food and drinks of loved ones are served in remembrance.

This year, altar building on the plaza begins at 2 p.m. the day before the festival, Friday, Oct. 31, when friends and family members gather to build shrines to the souls of their departed loved ones, ornamenting them with colorful papel picado and bright yellow marigolds and stocking them with offerings of those things the departed – especially food, drinks and personal effects – may want to take with them.

The Dia de los Muertos celebration itself begins at noon Saturday, Nov. 1 – All Saints' Day – with opening ceremonies presented by soloist Linda Goff. That day and throughout the weekend, the plaza will be filled with not only the ofrendas, or offerings, to the dead, but also plenty of delights for the living – food, drinks, arts and crafts and other vendors will have their finest Day of the Dead wares available, along with live entertainment throughout the day. There will be folkloric dancing from Grupo Valle del Sol Folklorico from 4 to 5 p.m. and live music from Latin Funktion from 6 to 8 p.m.

The hour in between performances – 5 to 6 p.m. – the town goes quiet as the Basilica of San Albino, at the northern end of the plaza, holds evening services.

On Sunday, Nov. 2 – All Souls' Day – vendors reopen at 10 a.m., and at noon, Goff will once again open the day's celebration.

From 12:15 to 1 p.m., Grupo Valle del Sol Folklorico returns for a second performance, followed by live music from Gypsy Gitano from 1:15 to 3 p.m. and April Ticket from 3:15 to 5:15 p.m.

At 6 p.m., celebrants begin to gather on the plaza and, at 6:15 p.m., depart the plaza en masse as the candlelight procession wends its way through town to San Albino Cemetary, guiding wandering souls back to their place of rest for another year. Immediately following the procession, guests will make their way back to the plaza for coffee and pan de muerto, or bread of the dead, until the festival closes at 8 p.m.

Ernestina, Alice and Sabina Quintero donned painted faces for Mesilla's 2013 Dia de los Muertos celebration. The Day of the Dead fiesta returns Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 1-2.

Each year, Mesilla's Dia de los Muertos celebration is put on by the nonprofit Calavera Coalition, a small, dedicated group of volunteers responsible for the production of this event honoring the memories of those who've left us. Proceeds are utilized for future celebrations, with a portion donated to a number of local community charities. This year, the coalition is encouraging attendees to bring with them non-perishable food items, which will be donated to Casa de Peregrinos emergency food bank.

History of Dia de los Muertos

By Zak Hansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

Dia de los Muertos, or Day of the Dead, has its roots dating back more than 3,000 years to Aztec and Meso-American civilizations, which used skulls and bones in rituals intended to honor and celebrate the dead. The souls of the departed were believed to return to the corporeal realm during a month-long ritual, which fell in the ninth month of the Aztec calendar, around the beginning of August in the Gregorian calendar.

When the Spanish arrived to the area more than 500 years ago, they encountered this tradition and its seeming mocking of death – viewed by the Catholic Spaniards as the end of life and certainly no laughing matter, if not outright sacrilege – and attempted, unsuccessfully, to eradicate the practice.

Instead, over time, the ancient Aztec ritual gradually merged with Catholic tradition and the Spanish moved the remnant holiday to coincide with the Christian triduum of Allhallowtide: All Hallows' Eve, All Saints' Day and All Souls' Day – Oct. 31 to Nov. 2.

Today, the holiday retains its focus on celebrating the lives of friends and family members who have died through the building of altars, called ofrendas (“offerings”), as well as honoring the deceased with sugar skulls, marigolds and paper flowers, along with the possessions and favorite foods and drinks of the departed, placed on altars or at the gravesides of loved ones.

Below, a community altar built by the Calavera Coalition and adorned with paper flowers stands beside the gazebo in Mesilla's town square during the 2013 Dia de los Muertos celebration. Above, copal incense smolders on an altar dedicated to the women of Juarez.

While Western Christian remembrances of the deceased often take a serious, somber tone, Dia de los Muertos is filled with bright colors and lively celebrations, recognizing death as a natural part of the human experience and, at times, even mocking or laughing at death through caricature, most recognizably the calacas and calaveras – skeletons and skulls – portrayed as enjoying life and its minutiae, dressed in fantastic clothes and placed in humorous situations.

Today, Dia de los Muertos is celebrated throughout Mexico and some places in the United States, especially those with large Hispanic populations.

Call to Artists

NOPALITO'S GALERÍA SEEKS FUNDRAISER DONATIONS

Nopalito's Galería invites the art community to donate works of art to its upcoming fundraiser, "Sharing Hope Through Art: Human Rights and Our Mexican Sisters," to be held Nov. 8-30.

Works of art are needed for silent auction. All sale proceeds will benefit Weaving for Justice, Guerilla Prayer Flags and Southwest Asylum and Migration Institute. Painting, mixed-media, photography, ceramics, pottery, sculpture and hand-made jewelry are welcome.

Submission deadline is Sunday, Nov. 2, and arrangements can be made for work to be picked up. Nopalito's Galería is located at 326 S. Mesquite St. Regular gallery hours are 4 to 7 p.m. Friday and noon to 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. For more information and submission guidelines, visit www.sharinghopethroughart.com or contact Patricia Gallegos at 524-0003.

LAS CRUCES MUSEUMS HOLD DOCENT TRAININGS

The Branigan Cultural Center and Museum of Art are sending out an open call for new docents, or museum guides, who assist visitors in understanding the art and artifacts on display by providing new perspectives, background information and cultural context.

The museums' Curators of Exhibits and Education create detailed training handbooks, presentations, gallery activities and tour prompts. All docents are treated to a curator-led tour of each new exhibit and are provided with plenty of material to take home, as well as special previews and other learning opportunities.

PHOTOGRAPHY EXHIBITS SCHEDULED

On Friday, Nov. 7, the Las Cruces Museum system opens two nationally renowned photography exhibits that highlight the delicate balance of watery and dry environments. "Fragile Waters" – featuring photographs of aquatic landscapes by Ansel Adams, Dorothy Monnelly and Ernie Brooks – and "Desert Air" – photographs of the world's most arid deserts by National Geographic photographer George Steinmetz – will both be on display through January 2015.

Training for "Desert Air" and "Fragile Waters" will take place at 2 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 8, and 10 a.m. Wednesday, Nov. 12. Interested volunteers can contact Curator of Education Elisabeth Stone by phone at 541-2219 or by email at estone@las-cruces.org. There is no commitment implied in attending docent training, so come check it out and see if you would like to get involved.

AA STUDIOS CALLS FOR FINE CONTEMPORARY ART

Aa Studios, 2645 Doña Ana Road, is calling for regional artists to exhibit in 2015. The 17' by 25' studio/gallery features fine contemporary art from emerging artists and artists with limited local gallery representation.

Owner Roy van der Aa opened his working studio as a gallery in 2012 and participates in the North Valley Art Loop openings every three months. Six two-month slots are available, taking either a feature wall or the whole gallery. The gallery has posted hours three days per month and is open by appointment the rest of the month. There is no fee to apply or show, but the gallery takes a commission on works sold. Interested artists should email a proposal, short artist bio, résumé and eight jpeg images (4 inches on the longest edge at 150 dpi) to wyyg@zianet.com. Proposals are due by Nov. 15.

For more information, call 520-8752. or email for a layout of the gallery.

Dia de la Cerveza returns

By Zak Hansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

The New Mexico Brewers Guild will return to Las Cruces, celebrating the Day of the Beers and closing the beer season with the second annual Dia de la Cerveza from noon to 5 p.m. Sunday, Nov. 2.

New Mexico Brewers Guild Executive Director Chris Goblet said the selection at this year's Dia de la Cerveza will be heavily geared toward the heartier seasonal brews best this time of year – "lots of Oktoberfests, dark lagers, porters, stouts, even some barrel-aged beers."

With two festivals coming to Las Cruces each year –

one spring and one fall – Goblet said that, for the NMBG, Dia de la Cerveza brings things home each time.

"This is a fun way for us to wrap up the season, and we love getting down to the warmer southern climes for a classic fall beer festival," he said. "The Brewers Guild starts its season with the Blazin' Brewfest and wraps it up with Dia de la Cerveza, so it brings our year full-circle – we start and end in Las Cruces – and we really hope this becomes an annual festival people in Las Cruces look forward to every time."

This year, 11 breweries and one distillery from around the Land of Enchantment – Abbey, Bosque, Comanche Creek, High Desert, La Cumbre, Santa Fe, Second Street, Sierra Blanc, Taos Mesa, Tractor, Turtle Mountain and Little Toad Creek Brewery/Distillery – make their way to the southern part of the state with more than 50 different beers in tow.

Goblet said his organization's partnerships with a number of local entities, and the city's blossoming Downtown area, have made Las Cruces a destination.

"After the success we had on Main Street at Blazin' Brewfest – it was our biggest festival of the year, beating even Albuquerque – and the partnerships we made with the Farmers' and Crafts Market of Las Cruces, Project Main Street and the Downtown Las Cruces Partnership, we really don't want to be anywhere else," he said.

According to Goblet, big things in the world of beer are happening all over the state.

"We at the Brewers Guild refer to New Mexico as 'The Frontier of Beer,' but really, Las Cruces is the next true frontier of beer," he said.

Advance tickets to Dia de la Cerveza are $15 and are available online at www.holdmyticket.com. Tickets at the gate will be $20. There are also a limited number of Super Saver tickets available at High Desert Brewing Co. and Main Street Bistro, but quantities are extremely limited. For more information on Dia de la Cerveza and the New Mexico Brewers Guild, visit www.nmbeer.org.

Making a difference on your County Commission

What do former District 3 County Commissioners say about Ben Rawson?

KAREN PEREZ (Democrat, 2006-2013)

"I support Benjamin Rawson in his role as County Commissioner for District 3. He has common sense, a practical approach to complicated issues, and he listens carefully. His record shows that he is ethical and has a strong sense of conviction that carries into this role. He is not afraid to stand alone on issues. He has the ability to truly hear both sides of a question and evaluate on merit, not politics. His decisions are careful and considered and he provides a sense of balance to the rest of the Commission."

The work of five area weavers – Marilyn Hansen, Jan Harrison, Lin Bentley Keeling, Dee Knudson and Jan Severson – will be on display during "Basketry as Art," opening Sunday, Nov. 2, at Tombaugh Gallery. Pictured is Keeling's "Landscape in Primary Colors."

Spotted Dog Brewery unleashes craft beers

By Zak Hansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

Spend a few hours at Spotted Dog Brewery and you're likely to come out knowing a thing or two about beer.

It's not just because Spotted Dog has stellar unfiltered craft brews on tap you can't find anywhere else in the region – they do – but, too, because proprietor and brewer Jerry Grandle knows a heck of a lot about beer and is more than happy to share it.

He knows how the English, once upon a time, were bittering their beer with heavy metals and, later, filtering and clarifying them with asbestos. He knows how America, after the Second World War, was oversold on light, watery lagers, the birth of great taste, less filling. He knows to put the bright steel tanks out front and on display in the taproom, because, after all, “beer drinkers are like raccoons – they like big, shiny things” – a fact I can neither confirm nor deny.

Knowing what he does about beer and brewing, the craft's dubious past included, it's little surprise Grandle has chosen to brew the kind of beer he does in the ways he does, leading to the company's motto: “Unfiltered, unconditional, unconventional and unleashed.”

A Las Cruces-via-Roswell native, Grandle fell in love with brewing his own craft beer 15 years ago, when his wife, Susan, gifted him a brew kit.

Though that experience – and the export stout it produced – hooked Grandle, his prior, first foray was somewhat less successful.

“The first time I tried home brewing was 1981, and I dumped it,” Grandle said with a laugh, the first of many. “What you could get back then in terms of materials and equipment was very sparse – nothing like what you can get ahold of now – and it came out tasting like a steel bucket.”

In the decade and a half since, however, Grandle said he's only had three other bad batches, each due to problems with the yeast used in the brewing process, making his record pretty impressive.

Grandle, whose background is in construction, said he decided to make the jump into brewing for a thirsty public after recognizing “I had to do what I wanted to do before I turned 80 and couldn't do it anymore” – along, of course, with a little urging from his wife.

For Spotted Dog Brewery's grand opening, Grandle had on tap six of his craft creations – Hefeweizen, Belgian Wit, Pale Ale, Milk Stout, India Pale Ale and Irish Red.

By the end of the night, he was down to four, and by the following Sunday, that number had dropped to two, which, Grandle admits, is “a good problem to have,” and one he's able to remedy by brewing five-barrel batches – about 155 gallons – every Monday and Tuesday, when Spotted Dog closes its doors.

On my visit, I was able to sample four of Grandle's brews – Hefeweizen, Belgian Wit, Milk Stout and Pale Ale – along with, blessedly, the very last of the keg of Irish Red, which won't be back on tap for a few more Samples of craft beer – Hefeweizen, Belgian Wit, Pale Ale and Milk Stout – rest on the bar top of Spotted Dog Brewery. Owner/brewer Jerry Grandle said the taproom aims to have six to eight beers on tap at all times.

weeks. Sorry, not sorry.

Spotted Dog's Belgian Wit – which Grandle calls “a good choice for people who don't like beer, or think they don't” – is a light, refreshing wheat beer with tangerine, grapefruit zest and coriander. For those unfamiliar with the world of craft beer – or wed to the world of wine – Grandle said the Belgian Wit is always a surprise. “With a beer like that, people start finding out really how much flavor beer can have, how complex they can be,” he said.

Next up, the Hefeweizen – a German wheat beer hopped with the fruity, spicy Hallertau hops, leading to a crisp, refreshing and highly carbonated beer Grandle brews close to its traditional profile.

The Pale Ale, with its barley base and mild, hoppy finish, imparts strong flavors of grain and hints of sweetness, and the Milk Stout, which Grandle said begins as a dry Irish stout before the addition of lactose sugar, which cannot be completely digested by the active yeast, leaving a smooth flavor and nice body.

I won't go in to how good the Irish Red was, but you'll have your chance in the upcoming weeks.

So what's on tap for Grandle and Spotted Dog Brewery next? Keeping up with demand.

Grandle said he aims to have six beers on tap at all times for the next couple months and, by Christmas, increasing that number to eight, allowing him to keep favorites available along with seasonal brews.

And while the brewery doesn't currently serve food – especially with business as it has been, Grandle said happily he's “here to focus on the beer” – Spotted Dog Brewery does allow its patrons to bring their own food.

Zak Hansen can be reached at zak@lascrucesbulletin.com or 680-1958.

Grandle shows off a sample flight of his beers along with hats, shirts and ceramics bearing the company's logo – a spotted dog, modeled after his own bluetick hound, Ryliegh.

'John Wick' burns at both ends

Review by Zak Hansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

John Wick may be a character familiar in today's Cineplex – a man with “a particular set of skills” long put to pasture in favor of a quiet life, much like “The Equalizer” or Brian Mills of the “Taken” series, forced out of retirement for one reason or another, leaving a wake of bodies behind them. Just when they thought they were out ... they pull them back in.

“John Wick” the movie, however, is a vibrant, violent blast of B-movie mayhem lovingly crafted with some A-grade techniques. It grandly does away with the melodrama and self-seriousness stifling the genre, returning it to its stylish and sometimes ridiculous roots.

After losing his wife to cancer, Wick (Keanu Reeves) is a man bereft, haunting his sleek, modern apartment like a ghost. Days after her passing, though, a posthumous gift from his wife arrives on his doorstep, and soon Wick is the proud papa of an adorable puppy.

He quickly bonds with the dog, taking his canine companion with him to the airstrip, where the man and his dog tear up the track in Wick's 1969 Mustang. More than anything, the dog – which he names Daisy, after his late wife's favorite flower – represents hope.

But not for long.

After a run-in with members of the Russian syndicate led by Iosef Tarasov (Alfie Allen), son of boss Viggo (Michael Nyqvist), Wick awakes one night to a home invasion. Iosef and his cronies beat Wick bloody, trash his home, steal his car keys and, in their fate-sealing final move, snap poor Daisy's neck, thus pushing Wick out of retirement with a thirst for blood and nothing to lose.

That slight premise – gang kills puppy, man kills gang – is all “John Wick” needs, making at once its antihero's motivations clear and leaving his adversaries bereft of any audience sympathy.

That “John Wick” is so good both should and should not be a surprise, based on its creators' backgrounds. Directors David Leitch and Chad Stahelski are both Hollywood stuntmen who worked with Reeves on “The Matrix” trilogy; Leitch and Stahelski sure do know how to stage an action sequence.

Every fight scene is bold and kinetic, a bludgeoning ballet of bullets and blood. In the movie's brisk, 101-minute running time, Wick kills, by my rough count, 80 bad guys, often disabling before dispatching, and all with a trademark style.

Stahelski and Leitch also know where and how to stage a shootout; from a neon-drenched nightclub to an Orthodox church that fronts an underworld organization, this directorial duo puts their years of experience behind the scenes and purposely obscured to great use when they take front-and-center.

“John Wick” seems heavily rooted in the worlds of 1980s and '90s action flicks, comic books and, oddly enough, Greek mythology, wearing its influences on its powder-burned, blood-soaked sleeves.

One of the film's best action sequences – and its strangest forays – takes place at the Continental, an upscale hotel/criminal safe haven, where all manner of nefarious characters come to rest and relax – no business is allowed on the premises.

Its manager is named Charon (Lance Reddick, of “The Wire” and “Fringe”) – the ferryman of the underworld of Greek myth, carrying recently deceased souls across the river Styx to Hades – and its price of entry is the unexplained gold doubloons Wick socks away along with his arsenal, Charon's obol, perhaps.

Sharing this singular space with Wick are a number of the film's best characters, from its curious concierge to Wick's fellow boarders – hitmen (and -women) on holiday – assassin and former acquaintance Ms. Perkins (Adrienne Palicki), Harry (Clarke Peters, another “Wire” alum) and Continental owner

Winston (a fantastic Ian McShane). The cast of the Continental join with strong performances from Willem Dafoe as Marcus, a veteran assassin and Wick's mentor, Dean Winters, as Viggo's English-only second-in-command, Avi, and John Leguizamo as Aurelio, the chop-shop owner caught between his friend, Wick, and his employer, Viggo.

Nyqvist is fantastic, imbuing the familiar role of ruthless Russian mob boss Viggo – he sips expensive Scotch from a snifter fireside, for goodness' sake – with a solid sense of humor. When he learns what his son did and, more importantly, who he did it to, his deadpan “oh” is one of the film's best moments.

As Iosef, Allen, who has already demonstrated he has a face viewers are hungry to see abused as Theon Greyjoy on “Game of Thrones,” continues that run in “John Wick” as one of the sleaziest, slimiest, least sympathetic villains in recent memory.

'Ho!' offers nothing new Zombie classic gets Halloween screening

Review by Jeff Berg
For the Las Cruces Bulletin

While a screening of George Romero's “Night of the Living Dead” is scheduled for 10:30 p.m. Friday, Oct. 31 – perfect for Halloween night – at the Fountain Theatre in Mesilla, another film will be there all week.

Filmed a bit like a lightly comic documentary, “Land Ho!” follows two aging gents, one a recently retired surgeon, Mitch, and his friend, Colin, on a vacation trip to Iceland. This is not exactly a fresh idea – friends trying to revive a relationship far away from home – but expect to see the usual: laughter, a bit of personal awakening, some tension and brief partings. Yawn.

Aside from the beautiful setting, this picture is the same as the rest of its ilk. It is a well-used formula. “Land Ho!” offers no real change or growth, especially for Mitch, and there is nothing in the way of meaningful epiphanies. It just sort of plods along at its own languid pace.

Colin and Mitch are up in years and besides being friends, they are former brothers-in-law. In addition to their travel baggage, each carries their own personal baggage with on the trip, occasionally expressing it to us in off-hand or half-hearted ways.

Colin's first wife has recently passed away and his current wife has left him. Mitch, on the verge of being fired (it is easy to see why) had opted for an early retirement, something he doesn't fully share with Colin at first. Mitch has come into some dough, which allows him to take off on a whim of sorts, insisting Colin accompany him. Both are struggling with the horror of growing old – living lives devoid of adventure and love and new experiences.

They visit many beautiful spots in Iceland – spas, hotels, the great mountains and even spend an accidental night out of doors due to Mitch's lunkheadedness.

I found Mitch to be exceedingly annoying. Sexist and with a sometimes biting cynicism, Mitch is not balanced much by the quieter, often withdrawn Colin, although both enjoy an occasional passing around of the weed. Colin has a slight lift in his life when he meets and enjoys the acquaintance of a Canadian woman he meets at a hot springs.

Mitch and Colin would have been better played by Jack Lemmon and Walter Matthau in a remake of film that could have been called “The Getting Older Odd Couple.”

No emotional payoff for you from these two uninteresting characters, just 90 minutes of reliving someone else's somewhat dull vacation.

The silver lining From boomtown to mountain resort, Georgetown survives

By David Salcido
Las Cruces Bulletin

One of the great pleasures of living in Las Cruces is its proximity to so many wonderfully diverse getaway spots. Lakes, mountains, sand dunes, desert trails, river excursions – the possibilities are endless for those wanting to get out of town for a few hours or even a few days.

A truly enchanting region of southern New Mexico can be found two hours west in the Gila Wilderness of Grant County, tucked away along the winding Mimbres River. Here farmers and ranchers still value the same elements they have for generations: cattle, crops and kin. Rolling hills and grassy savannas give way to rocky outcroppings dotted with juniper and piñon pine and eventually to mountain vistas crowned by Ponderosa pine.

In this picturesque corner of the state, the past and present intermingle and every family has a story to tell. History is compressed and the farther off the main roads one wanders the further back in time one finds oneself.

One such place is Georgetown, a once bustling silver mining boomtown of the mid- to late-19th century that has all but disappeared into the annals of history, leaving little but overgrown foundations, crumbling footings and the occasional relic hidden in tall grass. High above the Georgetown site on Parapet Mountain, sits a grouping of cabins owned by an enterprising couple whose mission, it seems, is to keep the memory of Georgetown alive.

Jon and Susie Eickhoff are corporate retirees who settled in these mountains at the beginning of the 21st century, after successful careers as owners of a research and development firm in Michigan that counted as its clients such notable brands as IBM, Xerox and AT&T. Today, they own land all over the Mimbres Valley, including the old McGregor mining claim just above the original site of Georgetown.

History aside, the area the Eickhoffs have chosen for their cabin retreat is a panorama of pleasure given to glorious sunrises that paint the valley in vibrant shades of green, blue, yellow, orange and pink and spectacular sunsets with explosions of color from the deepest red to the brightest orange, punctuated with distinctly banded rainbows during the rainy season. At night, the canopy of stars is overwhelming, with the milky way dividing the darkness – a river of stars unfathomable – and the quiet is so profound it is almost sepulchral in its vastness.

It is very easy to see why generations of pioneers put down roots here. For some, it must be the closest they had ever come to heaven on Earth, despite the hardships of making a life here.

Expertly designed by Susie Eickhoff and built much like efficiency apartments, the cabins each have a combined living room-kitchen area, offset by a bookcase, behind which is the bed. Energy-efficient fireplaces, operated via thermostat, keep the temperature perfectly regulated and make for cozy evenings and mornings. A bath and vanity area take up about a quarter of the 800 square feet. Each cabin is themed after the life of one of the area's more colorful characters, and named accordingly.

Some, like the Brannin cabin, named for Stanton Strother Brannin, a rough and tumble character who owned the first patented mining claim in New Mexico and was the father of 13 children, features walls and ceiling of blonde tongue-and-groove wood with integrated beams.

Another, named for Lottie Deno, a notorious gambler who provided sanctuary for desperados in Georgetown and was the inspiration for Miss Kitty on the "Gunsmoke" television series, has whitewashed stucco walls with decorative wallpaper wainscoting on the bottom half.

The bath and kitchen are generously stocked with toiletries and all the necessities to prepare light meals, including glassware, dishes, pots, pans and a full-sized coffee maker. A full-sized refrigerator and two-burner stove wrap around to a double bowl sink and a breakfast sitting area.

The furnishings are comfortable, with overstuffed armchairs or couches. The decorations are in keeping with the cabin's namesake, including shotguns, needlepoint, large framed maps of "Pioneer New Mexico" and other treasures. The floors are either wooden or tiled throughout. Ceiling fans move air around in the bedroom area and the living area, over the fireplace. All in all, very nice arrangements and perfect for the weekend traveler.

For those who cannot live without their modern conveniences, a television with DirectTV access and a full slate of popular movies on dvd are offered. Books and magazines line the bookshelves, including many books on the history of the area.

Outside the cabins are covered patio areas, with tables and chairs, as well as gas firepits with lounge chairs facing out into the valley. The entire area is surrounded on all sides by piñon pine, juniper and occasional cottonwood trees. Hiking trails also abound, throughout the area, for the adventurous.

As if that weren't enough, the Eickhoffs have also provided areas of relaxation for their guests on two large communal patios, one with tables, chairs and benches overlooking the Georgetown site, the other a bit farther up the mountain with lounge chairs and a solar soaking tub flavored with Dead Sea Salts to keep skin hydrated. The overall effect is one of comfort and leisure.

If it's a quick daytrip you're looking for, the Mimbres Valley has plenty to offer, but if a weekend retreat or an extended submersion into a simpler way of living are what's needed, the Georgetown site and the Georgetown Cabins overlooking it are hard to beat. History, comfort and wide open spaces that seem to go on forever – that's the real New Mexico.

Virus awareness more important than ever

Mosquitoes may carry more than bite

Scott Svenheim
ACE Pest Detective

In our day and age, it's often you'll hear a friend, neighbor, co-worker or friend chat about their travels and the excitement it brings to see other parts of the world. With that comes the inevitable danger of coming face-to-face with some of the world's most dangerous diseases. We've seen it most recently with Ebola, and while it's a disease most commonly transmitted from human to human, mosquito-transmitted diseases are also becoming more prevalent than in recent years.

The Chikungunya virus is transmitted by your average mosquito bite and displays symptoms seen with many illnesses, such as fever and joint pain. Think you have the flu? Think again.

In late 2013, Chikungunya was found for the first time in the Caribbean islands, highly popular locations for travel and relaxation. With cruises and short plane rides coming from the United States, Americans have unknowingly brought home the infectious disease.

Because the virus can make its way across oceans and land, it's important to take necessary precautions with mosquito bites and know the warning signs. There are several ways to help control the mosquito population and prevent these diseases from gaining a stronger foothold.

- Disrupting mosquito breeding grounds is the key in helping to prevent the spread of mosquito-borne viruses.

- Drain any sources of standing water in the yard.

- Empty old flower pots, tires and other containers of water to help prevent the spread. Still water is a magnet for breeding mosquitoes.

- Inspect windows and screens for any entry points. The first chance mosquitoes get to find a source of food, they'll take it.

- Apply insect repellent repeatedly to exposed skin and clothing.

- Wear long-sleeved shirts and long pants when outdoors.

- Limit your time outdoors, especially at dawn and early evening when mosquitoes are most active.

- If traveling, make sure you know the signs of Chikungunya, which usually begin three to seven days after being infected.

They are:

- fatigue
- nausea
- muscle pain
- fever
- rash

And most important, know where your nearest medical professional is located, should you suspect an infection.

Cat adoption center opens

Jake Sims
Pet View

Too often, animals end up homeless due to behavioral and other issues even though they often can be easily resolved. The Cat's Meow Adoption Center (CMAC), 2211 N. Mesquite St., is dedicated to facilitating lifelong adoptions for its feline residents, as well as providing education about feline caretaking.

To accomplish these goals, CMAC pledges to:

- Educate visitors with regard to feline behavioral, social, nutritional and medical needs
- Set the standard for excellent care, ensuring that all feline residents are ready for loving, permanent homes
- Assist potential adopters with choosing a cat that is best suited for them and their household
- Promote spay/neuter of cats in the community, to reduce the number of cats being impounded and killed at the shelter

CMAC Protocols

Medical: All cats entering CMAC must be

- Spayed or Neutered
- Tested (negative) for FIV/FeLV
- Vaccinated for Rabies and FRCP

They do not accept unscheduled drop-offs of cats. There is a waiting list, so if you have a cat in need of a new home, call 386-6938 to discuss your situation and determine if your cat might be a good candidate for CMAC.

Maintenance: CMAC feline residents receive care each and every day by a group of very dedicated and cat-savvy volunteers. All cats have access to fresh water and high-quality dry kibble. Cats receive exercise and socialization daily, and volunteers are trained to watch for any signs of illness or other issues. When a cat is adopted from CMAC, it is healthy, happy and ready for a "forever" home.

Adopting: Drop by CMAC

Mountain View educates on history

Film event hopes to spark interest in food co-ops

By Tara Melton
For the Las Cruces Bulletin

A provocative new film about the resurgence of food co-ops in the United States, "Food For Change," just may change the way southern New Mexico and El Paso views community life. The film is being sponsored by Mountain View Market Co-op at the request of El Pasoans who appreciate MVM's contribution to Las Cruces.

Shahid Mustafa, general manager of Mountain View Market Co-op, said the film is about the cooperative movement and highlights the first and second waves of food co-ops in America.

"The first wave, usually people consider sometime right after the second World War, when food co-ops started to pop up and the second wave is generally considered around early to mid '70s, where a lot of the existing co-ops started," Mustafa said. "I think there may be about four or five co-ops still in existence from the first wave."

"Food For Change" will be shown at Ardivino's Desert Crossing in Sunland Park as part of a monthly film series. Though October is National Food Co-op month, Mountain View Market wasn't able to book it during the month, therefore the event will be on Nov. 1.

"Food For Change" was shown at New Mexico State University earlier in the week and Mustafa said he's certain another screening of the film will be planned in Las Cruces, but he's unsure of when.

Interested parties requested Mountain View Market Co-op sponsor the film to set a prime example of what co-ops can do for their communities.

"Look at the different ways co-ops, in particular Mountain View Market, contribute to the community and our outreach into the community, the amount of donations we give to local organizations, the fact that we offer community space for classes and workshops," Mustafa said.

Mountain View Market Co-op, along with Mustafa, has also been key in leading the minimum wage debate in Las Cruces.

"The fact that we strive to provide a living wage for our employees is beneficial to the community, I think modeling that kind of business is important, especially in a time when people are considering whether or not increasing minimum wage is possible. I think more businesses that do that and exceed provide examples."

Mountain View Market has started remodeling the co-op, a project that members invested $250,000 in, and is estimated to be finished in about a month.

"One of the seven principles of cooperatives is member economic participation, and our members actually invested $250,000 in our remodel, so that was really the biggest benefit in terms of membership and supporting the co-op, but also having the co-op provide this opportunity for members," Mustafa said. "It's an investment. We're actually paying them back 3 percent on their investment, which is probably better than what most people could get on a small investment."

Mountain View Market Co-op also recently expanded its community room due to the abundance of requests by the community for classes and workshops.

"It's about double the size it was a month ago and that was in response to all of the requests for that room for workshops and classes put on by, not just us, but practitioners in the community and different organizations for that space," Mustafa said.

Potential adopters will be asked to complete an adoption application, followed by a short interview. Adoption fees are $50 per cat. If, for any reason, an adoption doesn't work out, the cat must be returned to CMAC.

Follow-up: Adopters can expect periodic follow-up phone calls from a CMAC volunteer for a period of a few weeks. The volunteer can answer questions and/or provide guidance to the adopter as needed. CMAC stands behind its adoptions and follow-up calls are a good way to ensure that the household is adjusting to the new family member.

The Cat's Meow Adoption Center is a Special Project Fund within the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico. As such, it falls under their 501c3 status, ensuring that donations are tax deductible. The center relies solely on donations to keep doors open. Donations may be mailed to CMAC, PO Box 3166, Las Cruces, NM 88003. Make checks payable to CFSNM - CMAC. Or, you can make a secure online donation via the website at www.catsmeowlc.com.
