Turf's up!

New field nearly ready

By Brook Stockberger

At a glance, New Mexico State University's $1.3 million project to install artificial turf at Aggie Memorial Stadium looks beautiful.

The fake grass is very green, crimson-and-white end zones pop with color and the Pistol Pete logo in the middle of the field presents a largerthan-life sneer.

A closer look, though, shows that some last-minute work is still required.

"There's quite a bit to do," said Glen Haubold, NMSU's associate vice president for facilities.

With less than a week to go before the NMSU football team opens its season at home against Cal Poly San Luis Obispo at 6 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 28, the field the Aggies will be playing on is still a work-in-progress.

Haubold, though, said the new artificial playing turf at Aggie Memorial Stadium will be ready to go several days before kickoff.

"With any luck (the team) might be able to practice (on the field) on Tuesday," he said.

Henry Espalin, assistant director for project development with the school, said one more final project began the evening of Wednesday, Aug. 20, and is expected to be completed by Monday, Aug. 25.

As this picture taken Wednesday Aug. 20, shows, the installation of artificial turf at Aggie Memorial Stadium is almost complete. New Mexico State University officials said they hope to have the $1.3 million project completed by Monday, Aug. 25, so it can be available for team practice before the Aggie football opener Thursday, Aug. 28, against Cal Poly.

NMSU's Boston stepping | Lightning injures four down at the end of 2014

By Brook Stockberger

New Mexico State University Athletics Director McKinley Boston wants to be clear.

"I didn't retire," Boston said on Wednesday, Aug. 20, the day the school announced he would step down on the last day of 2014.

The school reports that Boston, who will reach his 10year mark with NMSU on Dec. 14, had his employment agreement extended until Dec. 31. His contract was due to expire this month.

Boston said he is not sure if he will seek to continue his career elsewhere.

"It's definitely an option," he said. "It's something I'll have to consider."

Boston said NMSU President Garrey Carruthers did not give specific reasons as to at local middle school

By Todd G. Dickson

A sudden thunderstorm Tuesday, Aug. 19, resulted in at least four being injured at Picacho Middle School, including a 13-year-old boy who was taken to El Paso for treatment of critical trauma injuries.

Jo Galván, Las Cruces Public Schools spokeswoman, said the middle school's eighth-grade football team and coaches had gone onto the playing field for practice at around 5 p.m. While the sky was overcast, it was not raining at first and lightning had not been observed prior to the incident, she said.

When a "drizzle" of rainfall began, the coaches decided to go back inside the school, Galván said.

Aggie up with enthusiasm

The annual Sports illustrated college football preview edition arrived in my mailbox the other day.

Disappointing, but not surprising, was New Mexico State University's absence from the preseason Top 25.

We know the Aggies have not been a Top 25-caliber team for some time. Yet folks in Las Cruces are always hopeful. Second-year head coach Doug Martin is certainly hopeful. Anyone who's spent more than 30 seconds with Martin and his contagious optimism is especially hopeful.

Offsetting the Aggies' absence in the Top 25 was their absence from the Bottom 25.

Every year, some smart-alecky sportswriter will break down what purports to be the worst teams in college football. The website Lightly Buzzed features a blog post from Charles Evans with his Preseason Bottom 25.

Two Aggie 2014 opponents made the list: University of Idaho and the University of Texas-El Paso. The Aggies, though, are nowhere to be found.

Perhaps Evans caught wind of some of the things happening in Las Cruces with NMSU football.

Maybe he heard about the first-class renovations at the Aggies' Coca-Cola weight room and training facility. He might have heard about NMSU's director of strength and conditioning, Don Decker. Through diet and training, Decker has transformed many young Aggies' physical presence.

Evans might have heard about NMSU's new defensive coordinator, Larry Coyer, who formerly spent six seasons as a defensive coordinator for teams in another conference – the American Football Conference. That's the NFL, in case you missed it. Coyer was defensive coordinator for three years each for the Denver Broncos and the Indianapolis Colts.

Did you hear the Aggies signed six quarterbacks in its most recent recruiting class? A lot of people found that strange.

When I heard that, it reminded me of the old Dallas Cowboys, pre-Jerry Jones. They had a coach named Tom Landry, a general manager named Tex Schramm and a director of player personnel named Gil Brandt. The trio's draft philosophy was to draft the best athlete available, regardless of position and regardless of the team's immediate needs.

They had 29 years of success in working with talented athletes, often changing their original positions.

In high school, the most talented athletes on a team quite often are the quarterbacks. That's an indicator Martin and crew are bringing the best athletes they can to NMSU. They're also looking for winners. Given the choice between two otherwise equal players, they will go with the one whose high school had the better record.

Good athletes who know how to win. That's how Aggie football gets better. Let's all take a look Thursday, Aug. 28, as NMSU takes on Cal Poly. Aggie Memorial Stadium will be the place to be in Las Cruces that night.

Letter to the editor

Voter ID vote sought

There is a movement by concerned citizens in Las Cruces to petition the City Council to amend the City Charter to require all in-person voters in municipal elections to possess a photo identification card.

The concern is shared by Democrats, Republicans and independents alike. This amendment to require proper identification to assure that only valid citizens of the United States vote in our elections is an important step in the prevention of fraudulent voting.

There is false information being circulated by the opponents of the requested change in the City Charter.

Those who do not now have a photo ID card can obtain acceptable photo ID cards from multiple sources: photo card issued by any government agency, driver's license, student ID card, credit or debit card, union card or professional organization card. In fact, most citizens already have a photo ID due to the many requirements for positive identification. The amendment to the charter would require the voter to provide positive photo identification at the voting booth.

To refute claims that there is not voting fraud in our elections, an opinion column was recently published by the Wall Street Journal: "Political Fraud about Voter Fraud" by Robert J. Popper, senior attorney of Judicial Watch and former deputy chief of the Justice Department's Voting Civil Rights Division. Condensed, he says, "Make no mistake ... schemes are used to undermine election integrity ... manipulating the American people to believe voter fraud is a product of partisan fantasy."

Listening to understand rather than reply

Michael Swickard In My Opinion

When I was 6, my mother was once again vigorously lecturing me on something I had done wrong. Usually her lectures were dull, tedious affairs and I tended to lose interest quickly. However, this time I gave her my complete and undivided attention.

At first she did not know what to make of my unexpected interest, but as I continued listening, her lecture became more enthusiastic, including some arm waving. After 10 minutes she concluded with, "Well young man, what do you have to say for yourself?"

I said, "Mama, do you realize that when you talk, your ears wiggle?"

Stunned, her jaw dropped and she just stared. I started for the door but then my father laughed. Oops. She revived and I then got a lesson in listening. Dad did not help by laughing.

That was not the only time growing up I was not completely tuned to their radio station, so to speak. In fact, I acted like I was listening when my mind was anywhere else. Occasionally there were things they said to me 50 years ago I can recall, but not many.

Over the years, I have come to realize we humans are really imperfect when it comes to our communication skills. Alan Greenspan wrote, "I know you think you understand what you thought I said but I'm not sure you realize that what you heard is not what I meant."

The reason I mention it now is that the dysfunction of communication syndrome seems to be getting worse. That seems counter-intuitive, given that we have all of these new connective communication channels to reach out and touch almost anyone on the planet.

Yet many of us communicate, really communicate, less than our grandparents. They could talk and write letters as a matter of daily life. They listened to each other. We know so much about them because they also kept many of those letters.

"Many people communicate only mechanically, waiting patiently, and sometimes not so patiently, for someone to finish what they are saying so they can then jump in with what they already have queued up."

Yes, we talk constantly and text constantly and post to Facebook and other social media constantly, but do we really communicate? No, what we do is not even close to real communication. We broadcast, we filibuster – we may not be trying to listen.

Many people communicate only mechanically, waiting patiently – and sometimes not-so-patiently – for someone to finish what they are saving so they can then jump in with what they already have queued up.

Even worse, much of what we call communication is a smiley face or the text "lol," meaning "laughing out loud," which, if they were face-to-face, would be obvious.

It is obvious that the act of getting ready to say the next thing we are intending to say means that if our communication buddy says something that is complete nonsense we often do not realize it because we are formulating what to say next. That is concurrent broadcasting rather than two-way communication.

Many people have struggled with understanding what others are saying for many reasons, such as divergent points of view, regional accents, vastly different rates of speech, conflicting noise where they are talking and other things like that. Making communication even harder, it is often people will nod as though they understand what you are saying when they do not.

Worse, at times, I have come to suspect some people actually have no interest in what I am saying. Rather than a good old fashioned two-way talk, they are just looking for a chance to speak on a topic. The test is if they mention anything about what I have said.

You see this when everything someone is told morphs into a repeated discussion of that person's favorite filibuster topic. Often they are telling the same story again and again because it is the only story or joke they

I mention the first elected governor of New Mexico, William McDonald, who had a campaign slogan, "Good government and a fair shake."

The person I am speaking to responds, "The Dallas Cowboys are due for a Super Bowl."

Not much I can say, since I can see the person is not listening. This is why I very much value people who talk and listen.

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

A happy day in the milking barn

When people tell me they grew up on a dairy farm, I say, "You have paid your dues"

The offspring of a dairyman that follows in his father's footsteps is as scarce as a second-generation Nobel Prize-winner, bomb dismanteler or president of North Korea. So, it is with pleasure that I congratulate those dairymen who are havin' a heyday this year.

They, like all farmers and ranchers, have had ups and downs. I remember 1973-74. I have bad dreams about it. I was running an animal health and grain mill store in Idaho at a time when dairymen were beginning to move north from California. Record high prices for grain and low milk prices sank the milk-feed ration to 1.5. I had heartbreaking conversations with desperate dairymen asking me for one more load of feed on credit.

In 2009, another national dairy wreck devastated the industry, sinking the index to a 1.6 ration. But this year, the ratio hit a record 2.55. The price for milk cwt. is twice what it was 10 years ago.

The beef cattle business recognizes the impact that the dairy business has on cattle prices. Last year's president of the National Cattlemen's Association was a dairyman.

The crossover began in the feedlots when they found an expanding market for Holstein steers, animals whose carcass rarely reaches Choice. Fast food burgers and taco meat has bolstered the price of the dairy breeds, since half of their offspring are male and there is a place to go with old cows. In Idaho, I worked for a company that fed potato waste. One of the products was a slurry high in energy but 90 percent moisture. The final ration was soupy but nutritious. I remember calculating the as-fed consumption in a pen of 1,000-pound Holstein steers at 119 pounds a day.

They were not very popular with the cowboys. As Dr. Eng said, "It's hard to be a cowboy when the steers are following you around!"

In spite of Dr. Spock's recommendation that we all become vegetarians and that no human at any age should drink cow's milk, the 99 percent of us homo sapiens who are born omnivores kindly refuse to revert to the drudgery in which herbivores live their lives. Sorry, Doctor, but we made that choice as cavemen, which allowed us to evolve to the top of the heap and, rightfully, have dominion over all the animals, bovine or not.

A bright future technologically is making dairying less a hands-on operation. It may become common for robots to take over tasks that we could never imagine. As it gets harder and harder for dairies to find a labor force that is willing to do the manual labor, the more they welcome the robots. And maybe these advances might entice more of the next generation to stay on the farm.

'Cause let's face it, milkin' 12 head of cows by hand in a bucket before breakfast every morning is hard labor and there's a few ol' timers that can remember doing it. You can find them in the nursing home after retiring from a comfortable life of working for Merck, DeLaval, Progressive Dairyman or Ohio Farm and Dairy. They ran away from home!

"(They) just wanted to go in a new direction and they're looking for someone to be more involved in fundraising," Boston said.

NMSU will begin a national search for Boston's replacement. Carruthers is expected to soon name a search committee with representation from NMSU's faculty and staff as well as community members. He said the next athletics director will be heavily engaged in the promotion and fundraising for NMSU athletics.

Carruthers said in a statement that Boston "has done a fine job in leading our athletics department over the past 10 years.

"I am most pleased with his attention to academics and the development of support groups for our student athletes during his time at NMSU," the president

For this semester, Boston will continue to work with Carruthers on a number of issues facing the athletics department, including conference realignment, finances and the day-to-day operation.

"I think the most significant accomplishment during my time has been changing the culture of the NMSU Athletics Department to better reflect the academic culture of the university." Boston said via a release. "The behavior of our student athletes has also improved. Today they are role models and important members of our community."

Boston previously served as athletics director with the University of Minnesota, the University of Rhode Island and Kean College in Union, N.J.

He also attended Minnesota where he played college football in the 1960s. He played professionally for the New York Giants in the NFL and the British Columbia Lions in the Canadian Football League.

Boston received his bachelor's degree in 1973 and his master's degree in 1974 from Montclair State University. He received his doctorate in education in 1987 from New York University.

He said he is proud of his body of work at NMSU.

"The only thing really missing, and hopefully (football) coach (Doug) Martin will fix that this year, is a bowl game," Boston said.

NMSU points out that, during Boston's tenure, student athletes have logged thousands of hours of community service each year. Under his watch, NMSU student athletes have won 16 WAC team championships and 33 WAC individual championships. Boston also guided NMSU through the transition of the Western Athletic Conference, which saw a dramatic change in both the face and the geographic footprint of the conference.

Also, Boston's emphasis on academics has resulted in a 73-percent graduation rate of NMSU's student athletes as well as an improvement in the university's academic progress rate, or APR. APR is the measure used by the NCAA to chart the academic success of NMSU student athletes and it has risen through the past few years.

More than 500,000 pounds of small, plastic beads need to be dumped on the field and raked in between the artificial blades of grass.

"The little plastic blades of grass are laying flat," Haubold said. "Then they'll give it a little bit of a haircut."

The beads will give the turf the feel of a real grass field.

"On Monday there'll be a hardness test," Haubold said.

"That's the last major step," Espalin said. "(It's) been sewn in. The letters and numbers and logos are glued down."

The planning of the project began in earnest in March and Albuquerquebased contractor Robert Cohen was given the go-ahead to start ripping up the old field in May.

The Aggies – 2-10 a year ago playing an independent schedule – join the Sun Belt Conference in football this year and their field will sport a pair of Sun Belt logos.

The players were returning to the school's gymnasium when lightning struck a tree near some of the players and staff, she said. The 13-year-old boy, two other students and an assistant coach were injured, Galván said. The most seriously injured of the group was the 13-year-old boy who was stabilized and transported to the University Medical Center in El Paso for trauma treatment, she said.

Two other boys were transported to a local hospital, but their injuries were not significant enough to warrant being taken to a trauma center, she said. Another boy was said to be taken to a hospital by private vehicle, and one refused medical attention, according to police

Las Cruces police said witnesses confirm that the lightning strike has sudden and unexpected.

The 13-year-old was improved by Wednesday, Aug. 20, but his condition was still serious, Galván said.

"His parents told us that he's now able to breathe on his own," she said.

Galván said the school district did not have detailed information on the extent of the boy's injuries.

A $1 million donation from businessman Stan Fulton, owner of Sunland Park Racetrack and Casino, and a $300,000 contribution from Associated Students of NMSU, allowed NMSU to fund installation of the synthetic turf at Aggie Memorial Stadium. The new turf is expected to improve player development, enhance player recruitment and increase campus and community access to the stadium.

Events at Aggie Memorial stadium have been severely restricted to prevent damage to the natural grass, but this will not be a concern with synthetic turf. Additional high school and other football games can be played at Aggie Memorial Stadium without damage and the stadium can also host band and cheerleading competitions, outdoor concerts and other NMSU student organization activities.

MountainView Medical Center ushers in new surgical system

By Tara MeltonLas Cruces Bulletin

Thursday Aug. 14.

MountainView Regional Medical Center unveiled its new treasure, the da Vinci Xi Surgical System, on

The da Vinci Xi is an automated surgical system that is controlled remotely by a surgeon in a capsule, not far from the patient. It's minimally invasive and provides visual enhancements like infrared imaging that human eyes might not catch.

Lucia Zimmitti, who had a hysterectomy done at MountainView with the previous version of the da Vinci system said after two weeks, she was up and back at work, which is practically unheard of.

"I really had, what felt like to me, an incredibly quick recovery," Zimmitti said. "My surgery was early on a Monday and I was home that evening and I was only on heavy duty pain meds for three days. After that I was taking Advil for a few more days, so it was really incredible."

According to a MountainView Regional Medical Center press release, this system will be used in gynecology, urology, thoracic, cardiac and general surgeries.

"It's greatly expanded the ability of what you can do," Dr. Leonard Metildi said. "Not only is the visualization fabulous, you have 10 power magnification, high definition, 3D view, the surgeon does in the capsule."

The da Vinci Xi not only makes surgery easier on a doctor's eyes, but also their backs.

"The thing I love about this is, the older you get, the more ergonomically beneficial procedures need to be," Dr. Metildi said. "When you do things laparoscopically, you end up in awkward positions for long periods of time, trying to get the camera angle right, here you sit in a comfortable chair, over the monitor, you're not straining, you're relaxed."

With only 38 da Vinci Xi's in the United States and MountainView owning the only system in New Mexico and west Texas, MountainView has a lot to be proud of.

"It was a step forward, such an advancement to be able to go home the same day, to not have the complications that you sometimes had with traditional surgeries," Ceil Levatino, city councillor of District 6 said. "With the latest version, MountainView has really taken the next step to remain on the cutting edge of technology."

Levatino said the da Vinci Xi is important to Las Cruces, not only because of its reputation, but being able to better serve residents.

"If they need advance surgery, they don't have to go to El Paso, they don't have to go to Albuquerque, we can do it right here in Las Cruces, specifically MountainView," Levatino said.

Shooting, armed robbery suspects wanted Local convenience store chain ups reward to $2,000

Las Cruces Police are investigating two armed robberies and a shooting from Tuesday evening, all possibly committed by the same two individuals.

At around 9 p.m. Tuesday, Aug. 19, police were dispatched to the report of suspicious activity at the Pic Quik store at 4675 Sonoma Ranch Blvd.

Officers quickly learned that two men, one of whom was armed with a gun, ordered patrons and employees of the Pic Quik to the floor before taking money. As the two suspects ran southbound from the store, the armed assailant fired one round at a 63-year-old man who was at the nearby carwash.

The shooting victim was struck in the leg while the two suspects continued south from the store. The victim was treated at the scene before being transported to a local hospital. His injuries are not considered to be life-threatening.

A short while later, Las Cruces Police were dispatched to an armed robbery at the University Shell gas station and convenience store at 1305 S. Solano Drive. Officers learned that two men, one carrying a gun, entered that business and demanded money from a clerk.

Police believe the same two men may be responsible for committing both armed robberies. The men were described as wearing dark-colored hoodies.

Las Cruces Crime Stoppers is offering a $1,000 reward for information that helps identify the two suspects and Pic Quik is matching the reward.

Anyone with information that can help identify the suspects is asked to call Las Cruces Crime Stoppers at 800-222-TIPS (8477) or send a tip via text message to CRIMES (274637), keyword LCTIPS.

Knights, Hawks to start new rivalry

We all know about the Las Cruces High-Mayfield High rivalry.

Dreams.

The showdown is very special.

The night of Thursday, Aug. 29, though, could shape another cross-town rivalry.

The Oñate High football team tangles with Centennial High at 7 p.m. the Field of Sure, as long as the programs are in different districts and until they build up decades of clashes among one another, the showdown between the Knights and the Hawks will never be as important to the city as the Bulldawgs-Trojans game.

Now that the city has four big public high schools, though, why not have two intense rivalries in town.

In full disclosure, I am the proud parent of an Oñate Knight. Still, I have no strong feeling about the direction the game will take.

"New" is a word that best exemplifies both programs. Obviously Centennial has just two seasons under its belt – the school opened in 2012 – so the Hawks coach Aaron Ocampo has not even had a chance to oversee players from their freshman to senior season. That did not stop Centennial from winning nine games last year.

Oñate won three games last year, but has a new head coach. Longtime Las Cruces High assistant Brent Jaquess has taken over the program after three years with Caleb Hull at the helm.

Jaquess brought back former Oñate head coach Kelly McKee, who led the Knights to their only state title in 2002.

Both teams want to start their seasons off with momentum. A victory against another Las Cruces team would give either team some extra pep in their step.

NMSU opens season against ground-pounding Cal Poly

Bulletin Staff Report

A new quarterback and a new turf will go on display at 6 p.m. Tuesday, Aug. 28, at Aggie Memorial Stadium.

The New Mexico State University football team will host Cal Poly San Luis Obispo in its season opener as the Aggies try to improve on a 2-10 season in 2013.

Second-year head coach Doug Martin named junior college-transfer quarterback Tyler Rodgers the starter for the first game. Tyler, a 6-foot-3, 200-pound sophomore, is from Liberty, Ariz., and played last year at Arizona Western where he threw for 1,832 yards, 14 touchdowns and seven interceptions. He also ran for 364 yards and a team-best 10 touchdowns.

The Cal Poly Mustangs come to Las Cruces hoping to improve on a 6-6 season a year ago. The Mustangs rely very heavily on their ground game. Last year they ran the ball 680 times for 3,710 yards, compared to just 232 passing attempts for 1,614 yards.

Tickets to the game start at $10, while youth tickets for kids 12 and under are $5 and include a free hot dog and soda from Sodexo Dining Services. Single game tickets are on at the Pan American Center ticket office and will also be sold on the day of the game. Season tickets are also available, with packages starting at $50 for six home games.

LCHS eyes title defense; MHS wants another shot

By Lewis Harry

For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Will the Mesilla Valley hold onto the state title at the highest level of high school football?

The Las Cruces High Bulldawgs won the championship last year with a onepoint victory against cross-town rival Mayfield High in the title game.

Both schools hope to snare that trophy come December.

Las Cruces High head coach Jim Miller has utilized the offseason to prepare his players for what he believes is one of the toughest schedules LCHS has had during his tenure.

"Filling the spots left by our graduated seniors from last year was a big focus this offseason," Miller said. "We lost some good running backs and players from our offensive line that helped us win the state title last year and those spots needed to be filled."

Miller knows the way to get his team fired up for the upcoming season.

"We have to be hungry; I tell these kids we're not the only team out there," he said.

"Every game on the schedule is an important matchup. Our schedule is full of quality teams."

The Bulldawgs kick off the season against Montwood at 7 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 28, at the Field of Dreams.

Across town, the Mayfield High Trojans have used the offseason to prepare and are gearing up to get back to the state championship game.

Coach Michael Bradley knows what his team needs to do to get back to the top.

"It's always necessary to develop team chemistry," Bradley said. "It doesn't matter how good of a team you have, they need to play as one team and that's important."

Bradley believes that the holes left by past seniors will be easily filled by younger players coming up through the junior varsity ranks.

"We had a lot of younger kids getting playing time last year because of injuries on the team," Bradley said.

Mayfield continues to build a strong offensive line with seniors Cameron Mills, Joseph Lujan and Dominik Trujillo. Isaac Figueroa and Ethan Alvarado are also returning from last year, both getting playing time the previous season.

One standout player to watch for the Trojans this season is junior tight end

"He is a good blocker with good hands," Bradley said.

Mayfield plays host to the Hobbs Eagles in their season opener at 1 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 30.

Aggies need fans to come cheer from far and wide

"I think we have the ability to compete in any game this season."

Doug MartinNMSU football coach

Editor's note: This is the first in a series of weekly columns by New Mexico State University coaches.

This is an exciting time for the Aggie football program and we are counting on our community to be part of the excitement this fall. To begin with, we are thrilled to be able to add about 10 additional New Mexico State University players to our squad as the semester gets started.

We now have more than 30 players from around the state wearing an Aggie uniform. We think this is important for our program and our state – we are New Mexico's team. Several of the walk-ons can go on to earn scholarships with the program and we believe having players from around the state on the squad makes a difference in recruiting. We want our fans to follow these players as they grow with the program. They represent communities large and small throughout New Mexico.

Our players and coaching staff have been hard at work gearing up for the season and I love the heartbeat of our team right now. The signing class is full of talented players and a lot of them will make a big impact for us, especially on defense. I feel this team is faster, more athletic and just getting tougher.

The whole reason I was excited about being at New Mexico State to begin with was the alumni, the students and fans. The people of Las Cruces have really embraced this program, and me, and I want to encourage fans statewide to see what we have accomplished.

Along with the new talent we have, being a part of the Sun Belt Conference gives us a conference championship to play for, along with bowl games and tie-ins. The Aggies can and will be competitive in this confer> ence. I think we have the ability to compete in any game this season.

Additionally, we have really benefited from some dedicated donors who thought enough of our program to invest in critical tools to support our success. The new field turf and renovated weight room are really exciting for our players.

The turf will help the team train all year long and boost recruiting efforts. It gives us a surface that we don't have to worry about tearing up; when we bring recruits on campus we will have a great facility to show them.

The renovated Coca-Cola Weight Training Center is remarkable with new, updated weight-training equipment and rubberized floor, it is completely state-of-the-art.

If you still need tickets, call 646-1420. This is going to be an amazing season for the Aggies and we want you to be part of it. Come out and see some great football this fall.

Doug Martin is entering his second year as head coach of the NMSU football team.

You'll be surprised at what is truly difficult

Charlie Blanchard Golf Doctor

I have come to the conclusion there are three specific golf shots that higher handicap golfers find the most difficult.

Everyone has their Achilles-heel golf shot, but there are a few that most golfers can relate to.

In my experience, the three most difficult shots are: the long sand-bunker shot from a fairway bunker; the half-wedge shot from inside of 60 yards to the green; and the fairway wood or long-iron shot (as you might hit for the second shot on a par five) from a down-bill lie

Considering the long sand-bunker shot, the main reason so many folks struggle with this is they don't understanding the proper technique. For most normal long bunker shots, the idea is to hit a crisp shot with a full swing, taking very little sand. This is vastly different than an explosion shot from a greenside bunker, where you are lifting the ball out by blasting the sand underneath it.

Here in the Southwest, we have a lot of sandy waste areas that are played very much the same as a flat fairway bunker.

The principle is the same. The first two considerations are how high the forward face or "lip" of the bunker is and what kind of lie the ball is in. Bear in mind that the very top priority is to get the ball out of the hazard – yes, a bunker is a hazard – and advance it in the direction of the target. A lot of people forget the priorities and try for the heroic shot as seen on TV.

If there is a raised bunker face in front of you, be sure to take a club with enough loft to elevate the ball over the bunker lip, even if the ball won't go as far to the target. If you're under a deep bunker face, chip out and simply accept the inevitable dropped shot. But don't compound the error by leaving the ball in the bunker.

For most long bunker shots, play the ball in the middle of your stance, or just slightly back of center, and take at least one more club than the actual yardage measures.

Swing with a smooth motion keeping your lower body "quiet" and your hands slightly ahead of the clubface. This technique is to promote contact with the ball before the sand. In the case of the long fairway-bunker shot – unlike the greenside bunker – you must hit the ball before sand.

Don't over swing or try to scoop the ball.

Remember to select more club to compensate for the slight impact with the sand. This is a case where you have to trust the club to do the work.

Shortgame guru Dave Pelz said, based on extensive research with highhandicap golfers, the half-wedge shot is absolutely the hardest shot for folks to hit consistently well. It's partly due to existing swing flaws and partly due to misunderstanding of the technique. Most golf teachers would agree the secret to the short wedge shot is acceleration. The mistake many players make is they "quit" on the shot, feeling they have taken too much swing or too much club.

Last, let's take the case of the second shot on a par-five hole, in which the situation calls for a "lay-up" shot that is short of a pond or other looming hazard.

Golfers seem to struggle with long fairway shots, mainly because they instinctively think they have to hit the ball a long way, or they fail to focus fully on the shot in the same manner as they would a shot to the green.

A lay-up shot demands precise accuracy and controlled distance. My suggestion is that you get the sense of a controlled straight shot to a particular target. Usually, a long fairway shot on a par five is the second shot. It's a position shot. Your priority is positioning your ball so your approach shot to the green is one with which you can hit your favorite short iron, or at least a relatively easy one. Hybrid clubs are now the club du jour for these lay-up shots.

When you have a slightly downhill lie, simply align your body along the down-slope so your swing is now more level. That means tilting your shoulders, hips, knees and eyes on the same angle as the slope. Swing along the slope, "chasing" your follow-through along the downward angle.

Finally, on the long fairway shots, swing easy; don't try to kill

Sophomore Jade Carreon figures to be a catalyst for the Chandler-Gilbert Community College women's soccer

Last year, the Mayfield High School graduate played 20 of 23 games, including seven starts, and had four assists. She was a forward and an attacking midfielder, the latter a new role.

"I've been a forward my whole life," she said. "(Midfield) was really new to me. I actually really like midfield."

Midfield was a learning experience, especially in ball handling and playmaking.

"Understanding the pace of play, the one or two touches," head coach Jonathan Berzins said. "Understanding where she needs to be."

The Coyotes ranked fourth in scoring among 10 Arizona Community College Athletic Conference teams a year ago. Carreon, who took just three shots, hopes to join the scorers.

"I've never really gone a season without scoring," she said. "My shot was off the whole season. From far out, it was high." "This summer I ran outside more, and I'm in way better shape."

JADE CARREON

During the offseason she worked on her shooting and on her fitness. She trained in a gym last summer yet changed her strategy.

"This summer I ran outside more, and I'm in way better shape," she said.

Berzins likes what he has seen since she reported. "She came in super fit, she has a great build and energy that's very high," he said. "She definitely has that hunger and has that drive."

Carreon was nervous her first year, she said, but now feels comfortable with her role in the offensive scheme.

"We've done a lot more pattern play, a lot more possession," she said.

Her coach expects the year of experience to be a boost to the offense.

"Creating wise, I definitely think she's going to create a ton of opportunities," Berzins said.

Construction to affect school entrances

Parents and residents of the Las Colinas area on the East Mesa are advised that road construction for a private business will affect the entrances to Highland Elementary School, 4201 Emerald St.

Dane Kennon, Las Cruces Public Schools associate superintendent for operations, said the business is tying into city utility lines across Emerald, which will force the street to close for one to two weeks

"Highland is the largest elementary school in Las Cruces and a lot of traffic goes in and out of that area." Kennon said. "We need to keep kids safe and motorists need to observe changes in the drop-off and pick-up of children."

Emerald Street will be closed from Ross Street to midway between the two entrances to the school. One entrance/ exit that is nearest to the Bataan Memorial West frontage road will remain open, Kennon said. Highland staff will be posted at the roadblock on Ross Street to guide students out of cars and ensure they walk on the sidewalk to the school. Parents who drop off or pick up children should drive on Bataan Memorial West frontage road from Sonoma Ranch, turn right onto Emerald, enter the school parking lot and use the school's round-

Johnson said in the afternoons, parents may also park in the adjacent neighborhood and walk on Emerald from Ross to pick up their child.

"We're encouraging parents whose children are eligible for bus service to allow their children to ride the bus for this short period of time" said Priscilla Johnson, Highland principal. "Of course, if parents prefer to have their children walk or be dropped off at school, those options are still available."

Parents who are making a change in how their child will arrive at school should notify their child's teacher so the teacher is aware of how kids will arrive or leave from school. Parent volunteers are needed to assist with morning and afternoon traffic and pedestrians, John-

Because of the construction, the previously scheduled Open House for Aug. 21 has been cancelled and will be rescheduled, officials said.

Community Pit to remain closed

As part of its effort to ensure public safety, the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) has extended a temporary closure to all public use in the former Community Pit No.1 northwest of Las Cruces adjacent to the Prehistoric Trackways National Monument.

The area, previously used to mine decorative rock, presents a hazard to the public because historic mining activities have resulted in unsafe conditions, including unstable, layered high rock walls in excess of 150 feet, a continuing danger from collapsing walls and falling rock.

"This closure is necessary to prevent property damage, personal injury or even loss of life," said Bill Childress, BLM's Las Cruces district manager. "We have developed a remediation plan that will be implemented once funding is secured."

For more information, contact Las Cruces District Supervisor for Lands and Minerals Edward Seum at 525-4313.

- It was reported that Isidore Rosenfeld, "the smiling partner in the colossal Boston Store, Inc., the principal department emporium of Las Cruces," left for the east coast to purchase "the latest models and styles of the leading American cities," to include "an elaborate line of men's and women's clothing, haberdashery, shoes, and a tempting line of fine shirts."
- All eyes were on the delegates of the Republican party and their first appearance at the Santa Fe Legislature representing Doña Ana County, "already distinguished for its magnificent roads, grand schools, rich soil, busy towns and industrious people, its political importance is second to none."

75yearsago

• Flooding along Water Street led to a call for action by the Las Cruces Citizen, claiming, "This condition is worse than deplorable and yet there are some property owners who cannot see the expense attached to requesting paving. It is our contention that improvements should be made and the owners made to pay their respective costs."

• Cotton production in Doña Ana County was expected to be "around 49,500 bales," as compared to 47,953 bales the year before. Canteloupe shipments in the Mesilla Valley were also on the rise.

- Bids for the proposed Loretto Shopping Center had been received for the first phase of construction on Main Street. Among the projects cited were "a Safeway Food Store, a Superette Safeway Drug Store and an all-weather covered walk between the stores."
- The New Mexico State University Observatory, "located atop A Mountain and only one of three planetary observatories in the U.S.," was officially opened for business, under the direction of Bradford A. Smith and Clyde Tombaugh.

NMSU students place high in national animal science competition

Two students from New Mexico State University's Animal and Range Sciences Department dominated the Western Section of the American Society of Animal Science competition at Angelo State University in San Angelo, Texas.

Kelsey Quinn and Kendall Samuelson, both graduate students pursuing a doctorate in animal and range sciences, participated under the mentorship of faculty, presenting their research in the competition, which was held in June.

"The competition is for graduate students across the western U.S., and allows them to present their research data to their peers," said Ryan Ashley, assistant professor of animal and range sciences and Quinn's mentor. "It is highly competitive and most often the highlight of the entire conference."

Animal and range sciences professor Clint Loest, who worked with Samuelson, said the competition consists of two graded categories – written proceedings, which are scientific publications of their research, and an oral presentation of their research using PowerPoint slides.

A panel of judges then scores each student's scientific $\,$ paper and presentation awarding the top three students with the best score.

Samuelson placed in first with her research titled "Effects of dietary urea concentration and zilpaterol hydrochloride on performance and carcass characteristics of finishing steers."

"This was my first time attending at the Western Section meeting, so I really didn't know what to expect,"

Samuelson said. "I think the most difficult part of preparation for the oral presentation is trying to anticipate potential questions because the question and answer period is also taken into consideration for your overall score."

Quinn was awarded second place for her research on the role of chemokine receptor 4 (CXCR4) and its ligand, CXCL12, during early pregnancy.

Elementary preschool lead teacher Jennifer Parra (left) coordinates with Loma Heights preschool teacher Laura Clayton in preparation for the arrival of students Tuesday, Aug. 19.

School starts for 3- to 4-year-olds

The youngest students in the Las Cruces Public Schools (LCPS) arrived at school Tuesday, Aug. 19, as preschool programs began with a transition day that includes their parents.

The first day of classes when the children were on their own was Wednesday, Aug. 20, according to LCPS officials.

LCPS has three preschool programs that began Tuesday: developmentally delayed (DD) preschool, Title 1 preschool and Head Start preschool.

Dr. Maria Artiaga, Head Start coordinator, said all children are either 3 or 4 years old, depending on the program in which they are enrolled.

"These programs provide amazing support to children in school readiness," Artiaga said. "We're looking forward to meeting our students' parents, which will help with the students' transition to being at school for the first time."

On Tuesday, parents along with their child met the teacher and staff and get information about the curriculum

Jo Galván, LCPS communications director, said DD preschool, a federally funded program, serves children with identified learning disabilities.

The children receive services based on individual needs and they are provided bus transportation based on their Individual Education Plan.

The special education coordinator is Donna Bush who can be contacted at 527-5848 or dbush@lcps.k12. nm.us.

Students who are accepted into the Title 1 preschool, also federally funded, must be 4 years old before Sept. 1. Galván said LCPS expects to serve about 48 students this year at three elementary schools: Booker T. Washington, César E. Chávez and University Hills.

The Title 1 program is all-day, from 8 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., however, bus transportation is not provided.

The coordinator is Irene Gomez who can be contacted at 527-6624 or igomez@lcps.k12.nm.us.

"We are confident that we can continue to expand markets for the New Mexico chile industry as more consumers understand there is no imitation of the original," said Dino Cervantes, Mesilla Valley chile grower and president of the New Mexico Chile Association. "On the na-

City economic development office regroups

New coordinator advocates international outreach

By Alta LeCompte
Las Cruces Bulletin

Gary Camarano, the city's new economic development coordinator, plans to bolster local businesses and sell Las Cruces to the international business community.

He is promising the office will be more "aggressive" than it was in the past.

International outreach is his forte.

Prior to taking his position in Las Cruces city government, Camarano was global strategies director Galesburg, Ill., a city of 30,000 that managed the economic development efforts for a four-county region.

"One of the things I did was globalization and innovation," he said in an interview prior to his presentation.

Frequently he connected the dots between Illinois coal mining companies and heavy equipment manufacturers with potential buyers.

"We had seven railroad lines running through Galesburg," he said, adding the community was midway between two tractor factories.

In 2012, Camarano took representatives from seven companies on a trip to Indonesia, which was in the market for rail and mining equipment, and Bali, which needed rail equipment to get its coal to port.

Working with the U.S. Commercial Service, an international trade association, and with the Indonesian Consulate in Chicago, they arranged to visit with Indonesian companies, exhibited at a trade show with representatives from 39 countries and even met with executives Mexico's largest export market registering over $800 million in exports in 2013.

The increase in exports goes hand-in-hand with recent growth in the New Mexico border region, particularly at the Santa Teresa port of entry where Union Pacific Railroad opened its $400 million state-of-theart intermodal facility in April of this year.

State jobless rate up from June

New Mexico's seasonally adjusted unemployment rate was 6.6 percent in July 2014, up from 6.5 percent in June but down from 7.0 percent a year ago.

The national unemployment rate was 6.2 percent, up from June's rate of 6.1 percent but down from 7.3 percent in July 2013.

Nonfarm payroll employment was up 4,300 jobs, or 0.5 percent over the year, comparing July 2014 with July 2013. Gains in six industries offset losses in seven others, resulting in net growth continuing to remain stable following last month's first push into a positive over-theyear rate in nine months.

Education and health services led all industries with an increase of 5,000 jobs, or 4.1 percent over the year, its highest numeric gain in more than a decade. Job growth continued to surge in financial activities, which was up 4.8 percent.

Q: How do you get health insurance?

A: Most people get health insurance through their employers or organizations to which they belong. This is called group insurance. Some people do not have access to group insurance. They may choose to purchase their own individual health insurance directly from an insurance company. Many Americans get health insurance through government programs that operate at the national, State, and local levels. Examples include Medicare, Medicaid, and programs run by the Department of Veterans Affairs and Department of Defense. "The idea is to get people talking to the right people," Camarano said.

Starting a Las Cruces conversation

In Las Cruces as well, getting people talking to the right people will be the focus of his international outreach.

"We will invite consulates to Las Cruces, work with the U.S. Commercial Service and plan trade missions for export-ready companies," he said. "The West Mesa Industrial Park is just as good for direct financial investment as parks closer to the border."

His ideas for marketing the industrial park include tours for site selectors.

Since there currently are no empty buildings in the park, Camarano said building a spec shell is under consideration.

Encouraging innovation

Another focus of his office will be to encourage innovation by creating a virtual incubator and assisting fledgling companies by providing free initial consultations with

"We can reignite an innovative culture," he said.

The office also will encourage locally educated innovators to stay and grow their ideas in Las Cruces.

"We want to make our environment as business friendly as it can be," he said. "If our talent is leaving, let's find out why and address those issues."

Camarano plans to capitalize on local expertise, for example with interns teaching crowd sourcing to business managers.

He also proposed forming a retail incubator to provide low-cost entry into business. In the incubator, a startup would have a three-month window in which to tweak their business and develop a following.

NMSU's indicators measure achievement

Chris EricksonState of the Economy

You can tell a lot about what an organization wants to be by the goals its sets for itself.

A review of 30 goals New Mexico State University's strategic planning document indicates a place that wants to serve a diversified student body.

Called Key Performance Indicators (KPIs), the goals were developed over several years of discussion within NMSU and among the university and its external consistencies.

Most KPIs are evaluated by benchmarking against peer institutions, other land-grant institutions, plus local competitors. The list includes institutions such as the University of Arizona and Washington State University, and locals such as University of Texas El Paso and University of New Mexico

Typical is KPI 6, which is to achieve a 55 percent, six-year graduation rate, which would put NMSU at the peer median. Currently NMSU is not meeting this goal, so it is adopting policies to move toward the goal.

Starting this semester, students will receive a price break for signing up for 15 or more credit hours. This will incentivize students to take more courses each semester and move through their course of study faster, thus becoming more likely to graduate in six years.

KPIs include increased freshman retention; low tuition costs; maintaining student, staff and faculty diversity; continuing to serve a high percentage of low-income students; and maintaining status as a Hispanic-serving institution.

I'm particularly proud of the KPI on continuing NMSU's status as a high-value-added institution. Students who enter NMSU do much better than would be expected in terms of academic outcomes. We take students who may not be well prepared and we produce students who are competitive with graduates of other four-year institutions.

Some goals are in conflict with each other. For example, college affordability is in conflict with KPI calling for adequately compensating faculty.

Then again, some goals are reinforcing. Adequately compensating faculty is crucial to achieving the five KPIs related to increased scholarly activity. Without adequate compensation, attracting and retaining talented faculty isn't possible. Without talented faculty, scholarly activity will falter.

Most of the KPIs have yet to be achieved. On some KPIs, such as enrollment, we have even lost a little ground. NMSU, however, is making progress on other goals, such as freshmen retention rates.

Other goals are already being met. Among our peers, we rank second on diversity, behind only UTEP. And we are second, again behind UTEP, in access to low-income students, with 45 percent of our students receiving Pell grants.

Overall, looking at the thirty KPIs, by my count, NMSU has yet to achieve 19 goals. Most of the goals it is achieving relate to diversity and affordability.

While NMSU hasn't achieved all its goals, it continues to strive for academic excellence among its peers while maintaining a welcoming place for a diverse student body says loads about the type of place NMSU is striving to become.

Together, taken as a whole, the performance indicators that NMSU has chosen paint a picture of an institution that is doing a good job of serving a diversified student body and is also seeking to improve outcomes for its students while improving its academic standing among its peers.

How to get the groove back?

Courtesy of Finance New Mexico

Life for a business owner is exhilarating and dynamic, especially in the beginning, as the plan is set in motion and a product or service begins its path to market. The unpredictability of this journey is part of the reason it's so stimulating to start and build a business, but maintaining that level of excitement and drive can be challenging when the business's evolution doesn't unfold according to plan.

When initial funding from family or an investor runs out before benchmarks are met, a startup owner can worry about her ability to repay investors and stay on track. Even businesses that reach the second stage of maturity can stumble – say, when a large account goes to a competitor or a product doesn't find traction.

No matter where the business is in its life cycle, the owner has a lot at stake, as do his investors and employees. To keep his head clear, the business owner has to be motivated by something other than fear of failure.

Dangerous doldrums

A business owner who loses her passion for what she does will have trouble putting in the time and energy to start or sustain a company – especially when it's just getting off the ground and 16-hour days are typical.

Boredom is one peril when the entrepreneur is immersed in the monotonous details of launching or running a business and not engaged in the fulfilling tasks that stir creativity. Stress, too, can be more of a drain than the owner expected, especially when revenue is lower than expected or goals seem surprisingly distant.

When the business owner has lost financenewmexico.org.

her motivation and begins to disengage or operate on autopilot, she needs to recalibrate the internal compass. Suggestions follow.

Back to the future: The unmotivated business owner needs to remember the genesis of his creation – how he felt and what he wanted to achieve at the beginning. It often helps to dust off the original business plan for inspiration and discuss it with a core partner as if pitching it for the first time. The owner might discover that his goals were unrealistic and needed adjusting.

Recognize progress: It's easy to lose sight of achievements and start seeing everything through a negative lens if the business is struggling. Owners who celebrate every success – even relatively small ones – find it easier to believe in themselves and their mission. Some find that making a list of their professional and personal strengths and abilities can counter the negative self-talk that can undermine ambition.

Cherry pick: As a business grows, its owner often loses direct involvement in tasks she once enjoyed as that work gets delegated to others and she assumes strategic leadership chores. One prerogative of being the boss, though, is taking a desirable assignment once in a while.

Continuing education: Learning a new skill or absorbing deeper knowledge about a subject – even one that's not related to the business – can inspire a business leader to broaden his perspective and intellect.

Ag Day tailgate a celebration of local foods

Food will play a starring role during the second annual Agriculture Day happening Thursday, Aug. 28, before the Aggies of New Mexico State University open their football season with a home game against the Cal Poly Mustangs.

Free samples of beef, dairy products, chile, watermelon and peanuts will be offered during the street fair from 3 to 6 p.m. in the parking lot between Aggie Memorial Stadium and the Pan American Center. More than 40 booths will represent most every facet of New Mexico's diverse agricultural community.

The smorgasbord of New Mexico foods contininside the stadium. NMSU foodservice provider Sodexo Education Services has put together a special Agriculture Day concessions menu, featuring items containing New Mexico cheese, pinto beans, tortilla chips, salsa, pecans, pistachios and kettle corn. Also at the concession stands, Sodexo is offering kids age 12 and younger a free hot dog and soda with the purchase of a $5 game ticket. People of all ages can print a special Ag Day coupon for a free side of New Mexico green chile to add to their burger, nachos or hot dog.

"We wanted to offer food items that really speak to the rich culture here in Las Cruces and across New Mexico," said Shelly Duran, resident district manager for Sodexo Education Services.

Another important element of Agriculture Day is the food drive hosted on site.

Roadrunner Food Bank - which feeds nearly 40,000 hungry New Mexicans a week through its partner agencies across the state will open its refrigerated truck to collect donations. Meanwhile, Dairy MAX which represents dairy farmers in four states - will be collecting monetary donations by text to its "Great American Milk Drive" program. Any milk drive money collected during Ag Day will stay in Las Cruces to provide fresh dairy products to hungry people served by area food banks.

NMSU students who donate food items will be registered to win prizes from Barnes & Noble -New Mexico State University; all others who donate will be entered to win other prizes. Families will find plenty of fun at Ag Day - free therapeutic horse rides for the kids, a chance to pet and take their picture with small, friendly farm animals, face-painting and more. That's in addition to all the fun activities in the nearby Pistol Pete's Kids Zone: jumping castles, carnival games and

Reservoirs remain low despite rains

By Marvin Tessneer

Las Cruces Bulletin

In early July the rains were near normal, but then they started to taper off, according to state climatologist David DuBois.

"In the early part of July we had good rains for about a week," DuBois said. "But later the rainfall fell below normal for a monsoon season."

In the Las Cruces area, DuBois' gauges recorded 2.3 inches for the year to Runoff into the reservoirs from the recent rains has been slight, he said.

DuBois said reservoir storage was 131,420 acrefeet, 10 percent of capacity, in Elephant Butte; and 32,970 acre-feet in Caballo in early August.

Water storage at Caballo Reservoir, seen here in June, had dropped to 26,608 acre-feet by Friday, Aug. 15.

The Elephant Butte Irrigation District has shut down operations for the season.

"This makes the fourth straight year of drought, without a water supply," Phillip King said.

King is a civil engineering professor at New Mexico State University and an EBID hydrology consultant.

The district, however. was mandated to release 14 cubic-feet-per second to El Paso Water Conservation District and the Republic of Mexico.

The release was under terms of the Treaty of 1906, King said.

Although the EBID received some surface water in June and July. officials said farmers will have to turn to well water again this year.

"There was some seepage to recharge the water table from the early releases," said Erek Fuchs, EBID ground water specialist, "except around the cones of depression."

Cones of depression occur when there is excessive pumping by a well and the water is depleted.

The EBID monitors the water table to keep track of the level.

"But we'll have to wait until the end up the year because the water table keeps changing," Fuchs said.

The Naval Surface Warfare Center Detachment White Sands invites the public to identify concerns and alternatives for the Environmen-Assessment (EA) that will examine the environmental effects of creating a new special use airspace corridor for future test operations into the restricted airspace north of White Sands Missile Range (WSMR), New Mexico. A public meeting will be held on August 28, 2014, at the Macey Center, 801 Leroy Place, Socorro, New Mexico, from 6 to 8 p.m. Discussion with the public about the proposed action will be used to determine the scope of issues to be addressed and identified in the analysis process. The meeting is the first in a series of public involvement opportunities that will occur at various stages of the project.

The initial scoping period ends on Sept. 5, 2014. Comments can be mailed to: NSWC Det White Sands, Extended Airspace Capability EA Comments, BLDG 1438/N103, White Sands Missile Range, NM 88002; e m a i 1 e d t o WSMR_NEA_EA_Comments@all-llc.com or faxed to (575) 678-8272. The EA is being prepared in accordance with the National Environmental Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.), Council on Environmental Quality (40 CFR Parts 1500-1518), and other federal, state, and Army rules that require the environmental impacts of proposed actions and reasonable alternatives to those actions be analyzed. The EA shall determine whether or not this federal undertaking would signifi-cantly affect the environment as a result of the proposed testing. Hatch Chile Festival, Harvest Wine Festival celebrate end of summer

By Zak Hansen

As the summer heat begins to break and the end of the season draws near, once again southern New Mexicans prepare themselves for Labor Day weekend, when two regional festivals celebrate two of New Mexico's best beloved productions: chile and wine.

The three-day weekend and unofficial end of summer is the perfect time to get out with family and friends and taste the traditions of New Mexico at the Harvest Wine Festival in Las Cruces and the Hatch Chile Festival just up the road.

HARVEST WINE FESTIVAL

While chile is the first New Mexican crop that tpically pops into most people's minds when they think of the state's agricultural exports, in fact, southern New Mexico stands as the the oldest winemaking region in the country, besting even California to that honor.

The area's rich history and love of the vine dates back to the 1500s, when Spanish settlers, finding the climate ideal for cultivation, planted mission grapes along the fertile banks of the Rio Grande.

While the area's winemaking traditions had allbut disappeared for many decades, the art, craft and cultivation of grapes experienced a resurgence beginning in the 1970s and continuing today, with scores of wineries dotting the state and tasting rooms and wine bars popping up in Albuquerque, Las Cruces and everywhere in between.

There's no better way to celebrate New Mexico's vibrant vitus than to sample it for yourself.

Cheryl Chavez and Iris Garcia try a sample of Cabernet Merlot poured by Dos Viegos employee Tracie Mikesell during the 2012 Harvest Wine Festival. The three-day celebration returns Saturday through Monday, Aug. 30-Sept. 1, at the Southern New Mexico State Fairgrounds, 12125 Robert Larson Blvd.

From noon to 6 p.m. Saturday through Monday, Aug. 30-Sept. 1, the Harvest Wine Festival returns to the Southern New Mexico State Fairgrounds, 12125 Robert Larson Blvd.

This year's participating wineries include Luna Rossa, Heart of the Desert, Dos Viejos, Rio Grande, Amaro Winery, Wines of the San Juan, Soleil Mimosa, St. Clair, Loco Slushies, Wilmon Vineyards, Grove Specialties, DH Lescombes and Tularosa Vineyards, each on hand with samples of their very best selections to please any taste.

In addition to this slew of wineries, the Harvest Wine Festival also features an array of food, arts and crafts

Attendees eager to beat the heat can take shelter from the sun under the festival's centrally located music tent, with some of the region's best acts taking the stage over the weekend. Saturday's lineup includes The Players (noon to 2:45 p.m.) and The Liars (3 to 5:45 p.m.); Sunday, Overcome of Las Cruces (noon to 2:45 p.m.) and Phat Soul (3 to 5:45 p.m.) take the stage; and closing out the weekend, Monday's schedule includes Eli James Band (noon to 2:45 p.m.) and Nosotros (3 to 5:45 p.m.).

Tickets to the Harvest Wine Festival are $15 online presale (http://holdmyticket.com/event/156772) and $20 at the gate, which includes a souvenir wine glass and sample tickets. All adults must have a photo ID, regardless of age, and no one younger than 21 will be admitted without a parent or legal guardian.

Admission is free for those 21 and younger. Monday, Sept. 1, is Military Monday, when all active-duty and retired military receive a $3 discount on tickets purchased at the gate the day of the festival.

northeast of Las Cruces, heats up once again for the 43rd annual Hatch Chile Festival Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 30-31.

This year's festival kicks off at 9 a.m. Saturday, Aug. 30, with the annual Hatch Chile Festival Parade.

At 11 a.m., the festival grounds open, kicking off two days of live music, dancing and entertainment, festival events – including a seven-ride water park, mechanical bull, art booths, carnival rides, vendor booths, a horseshoe tournament and beer garden - as well cookoffs, eating contests and chile, chile, chile, all keeping with this year's theme, "Hot! Hot! Hot!"

The two-day celebration of southern New Mexico's world-famous export draws more than 30,000 visitors each year from all over, and has in recent years gained media attention from outlets including Food Network and the BBC.

Saturday's music will be provided by Mariachi Aguilas and the Yarbrough Band, and that night's dance - from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. - will feature live music from La Magiztral Sonora. On Sunday, the line-up is Mariachi Tapatio, Harold C. Keith and the Playhouse Players and, once more, Yarbrough Band.

Eating contests featuring fare made with Hatch's world-famous chile are also scheduled throughout the weekend, with green chile cheeseburger eating contests at 1 p.m. each day and a Big Jim-eating contest at 2:30 p.m. Saturday.

For those who don't want to overdo it on the chile, there will be cook-offs throughout the weekend, including both red and green chile and salsa, with attendees sampling some of the best chile recipes prepared by the very people who grow the valley's famed produce.

This year's festival is being produced by Celebrations! Events, which, under the guidance of owner Karen Stallard, will take the reins after putting on last year's chile cook-off competition. According to Stallard, her goal is to make the festival bigger and better than ever, while still retaining its integrity, spirit and its ties to the rich history of the Hatch Valley.

"The Hatch Chile Festival is really a big celebration of the Hatch Valley, the chile and produce it grows and the people who grow it," Stallard said. "Our goal this year is to bring the focus back to the Hatch Valley, its founding farmers and families – most of whom are still here in the area – so guests who come in from all over the country and the world can not only taste Hatch's chile, but also learn more about the town and what makes Hatch so special."

In keeping with that, this year's festival will feature its first-ever Made and Grown in New Mexico Mercado. an area devoted to vendors selling products exclusively from the Land of Enchantment – a way to highlight all New Mexico has to offer for our out-of-town guests and to remind residents of the rich history of the lands they call home.

In addition to the Mercado, this year's festival will have displays presenting the history of the Hatch Valley along with some family history highlights. And although the festival is focused on the famed fruit, it serves as a chance to draw attention to all the area's bountiful crops - onions, pecans, alfalfa, cabbage, lettuce, wheat and cotton among them.

"More than fun, the Hatch Chile Festival is the big chance for a lot of the local farmers, who make almost their entire year in this one weekend," Stallard said. "The festival is really one to celebrate the heritage of the Hatch Valley and an opportunity to share our chile with the whole world."

Admission to the Hatch Chile Festival is $10 per carload, and is valid for both days of the festival. The festival will take place at the Hatch Municipal Airport, located one mile west of Hatch on Highway 26.

For more information, visit www.hatchchilefest.com or call 505-252-0431.

Call to Artists

UPCOMING AUDITIONS AT BLACK BOX THEATRE

No Strings Theatre Company announces auditions for "Moonlight and Magnolias" to be held at 6 p.m. Friday and Saturday, Aug. 22-23, at the Black Box Theatre, 430 N. Main St.

The show calls for three men age 30 to 60 and one woman, no specific age. Auditions will include readings from the script and possibly improvised scenes. The director will be looking for comic instincts and natural interactions between players.

Performances of "Moonlight and Magnolias" will run Oct. 10-26, with a possible extension to Nov. 2 based on attendance. A copy of the script is available at the reserve desk of Thomas Branigan Memorial Library, 200 E. Picacho Ave.

For more information, including alternative audition arrangements in the event of a schedule conflict, contact Director Shaun Hadfield at syrrus83@gmail.com.

LAS CRUCES COMMUNITY THEATRE HOLDS AUDITIONS

The Las Cruces Community Theatre announces auditions for the award-winning thriller "Deathtrap" by Ira Levin, directed by Les Boyse. Auditions will consist of cold readings from the script and will be held at 7 p.m. Sunday and Monday, Aug. 24-25, at the theater located at 313 N. Main St.

Performances of "Deathtrap" will run Oct. 10-26. Needed are three males age 30 to 65 and two females age 40 to 65.

In "Deathtrap," Sidney Bruhl, a successful writer of Broadway thrillers, is trying to recover from a series of failed productions resulting in financial difficulties. He sees a chance to improve his situation when a student in a seminar he conducted gives him a script for a potentially award winning thriller called "Deathtrap."

With the intention of making himself the apparent author of the script Sidney plots with his wife to ensure that the student will not be taking credit for his work. The suspense mounts as many twists, turns, thrills and laughter take the audience to an unexpected conclusion.

For more information, contact Boyse at lboyse@gmail.com.

NMSU UNIVERSITY ART GALLERY presents "Off the Wall," an exhibition inspired by the minimal wall drawings and sculptures of Sol Le Witt. This two-part exhibition will both trace the history of Le Witt's relationship with New Mexico State University, as well as show the extent of his influence on a new generation of artists who use the surface of the wall as their canvas.

"Off the Wall" opens with an installation reception at 5 p.m. Friday, Aug. 29, and will remain on display through Sept. 11, on which date the "Off the Wall Banner Project" official opening reception will take place at 5 p.m.

In addition to the work of Le Witt, "Off the Wall" features the work of Allie Rex, Judith Braun, Christie Blizard and Nathan Green – four contemporary artists from across the country who've traded traditional supportive mediums such as the canvas, panel and paper for the challenge of working directly on the wall. Manipulating perspective and generating large-scale optical illusions, each of these artists use various methods to challenge the viewers understanding of the existing architecture within the gallery space.

LCCT bares all with 'The Full Monty'

Review by Gerald M. Kane For the Las Cruces Bulletin

There are so many elements to praise about "The Full Monty," the ambitious musical selected to open the Las Cruces Community Theatre's 2014-15 season, I don't know where to be begin.

I so enjoyed the 1997 British film on which the show is based, and was not surprised at all when I learned that, in 1999, Tony-Award winning playwright Terrance McNally and composer David Yazbek decided to change the venue from the film's shuttered steel mills in South Yorkshire, England, to the shutdown Bethlehem Steel plant in Buffalo, New York, and add a wide range of popular music to turn the film into a full blown-American Broadway musical.

My first inclination in tossing bouquets of praise for the LCCT production is to toss the hugest bouquet to director Megan McQueen. She has made quite an impact on our community's theater scene over many years. I still recall her student performance as Sally Bowles in "Cabaret." One has but to recall the innovative Scaffolding Theatre Company production of "Nine," which opened earlier this summer, in which she played a pivotal role on and off stage, to underline my impressions.

McQueen has assembled a large, talented ensemble cast with several new faces, and many local theater veterans. Not only do they move well and seem to have a terrific time working together in this ambitious production, but their voices blend together professionally. In particular, I have never heard a group of male singers do such an exceptional job on the stage of LCCT. It's amazing what a little key transposing and a lot of rehearsal time can accomplish.

There is a strange irony that this LCCT production opened at the end of a week that saw the suicide of the amazing Robin Williams. "The Full Monty's" plot contains a scene early on where one of the characters attempts to commit suicide on stage through asphyxiation. He is saved by two of his unemployed coworkers. While not intentional, the message rings out that when we see someone in need, it is imperative to take action to let the individual in distress know we care and to be there for them.

The six male principal players portray an unlikely assortment of unemployed, blue-collar steel workers in Buffalo who decide to raise some much needed income by becoming male strippers for one night, displaying "The Full Monty"

The cast of Las Cruces Community Theatre's "The Full Monty" – Mark Kitanga, Brandon Brown, Eric Brekke, Teddy Aspen-Sanchez, Travis Relyea and Grady Easterling – will bare all for nine performances of the "heart-warming family story with full frontal nudity and a lot of cursing" beginning at 8 p.m. Friday, Aug. 15, and continuing through Sunday, Aug. 31. Las Cruces Community Theatre is located at 331 N. Main St. For more information, call 523-1200 or visit http://lcctnm.org.

- removing all their clothes - for those willing to pay the hefty ticket price. To a one, these cast members' performances are wonderful.

Like a "variety snack pack," they come in a fascinating assortment of body shapes, talent, skills and sizes. The "leader of the pack," Jerry, a tall, handsome, divorced dad, is portrayed with enthusiasm and skill by Eric Brekke, whose dramatic work I have seen on the stage of the Black Box Theatre. With no vocal training, Eric worked with a voice teacher who brought out a rich, fine sound for the many songs he needs to sing. Also noteworthy is 12-year-old Patrick Schaub, who play's Jerry's son, Nathan, with wisdom and love beyond his years.

Dave, Jerry's BFF, the "chubby" one, is played with passion, compassion and more than a touch of humor by Teddy Aspen-Sanchez, whose performance as Jack Jerome in American Southwest Theatre Company's "Brighton Beach Memoirs" still remains with me. Together with his stage bride, Janet Beatty-Payne, they have special chemistry and bring something very special to this production. They make beautiful music together.

The always dependable Brandon Brown, wearing a for-real wrist cast (a little too much basketball) delivers his usual measured, wellhoned performance as Harold, the unemployed shop foreman. His for-real wife, Lennie, delivers a wonderful nuanced performance as his character's wife, Vicki, who is unaware of her husband's unemployed status. Together, they do share a special spark of on-stage chemistry.

The other three men who constitute the remainder of the stripper ensemble also deliver. Most especially I enjoyed the performance of Mark Kitanga, the African-American member of the stripper ensemble. Despite his youth, Mark's talent allows him to portray "Horse," an older vaudevillian with excellent dance creds. Grady Easterling and Travis Relyea round out the sextet with complicated, nuanced performances with an unusual plot twist at play's end.

For me, the biggest discovery on stage was the superb comic timing, wonderful Elaine Stritch-like voice and keyboard excellence of Ginny May. She has been a part of the performing community for years, but our paths have never crossed. May portrays Jeanette, a retired vaudeville pianist who works with the strippers and shows us her musical comedy chops in a song simply called "Jeanette's Showbiz Number." May simply stops the show.

Special kudos to stage manager

Erica Krauel for the smooth way in which scene changes flow. Set consultant Bob Diven outdid himself as usual in creating the many venues called for in the script with minimalism yet great utility.

In sum, at its heart "The Full Monty" is more than vulgarity, nudity and corniness.

It is full of fun, warmth and friendship, which ought to bring smiles to many members of the LCCT audience.

"The Full Monty" will run through Sunday, Aug. 31. Performances are 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday and 2 p.m. Sunday. Tickets are $14 for adults, $13 for students, senior citizens and active-duty military and $11 for children under the age of 7. Tickets can only be purchased online at http://lcctnm.org or at the door before each performance. No telephone reservations will be accepted.

In 'Get On Up,' the funk don't quit

Review by Richard ColtharpLas Cruces Bulletin

Have you seen those photo mosaics made up of numerous small images blocked together, and when you squint your eyes, you see a larger, full image, such as the head of Abraham Lincoln?

In a way, that's how "Get On Up," the movie about James Brown, works.

The film looks at seven or eight stages of the great soul singer's life, then weaves back and forth through flashbacks. By the end, the scenes from the different experiences and times give you a larger, full image of this complicated man.

Young actor Chadwick Boseman, playing his second historical figure in as many years (he did a solid job as Jackie Robinson in "42"), brings Brown to life by re-creating the man's speaking voice and approximating the legendary dance moves. Brown's dance moves can't be re-created, only imitated.

Director Tate Taylor takes some chances, including breaking the fourth wall, and for me, most of them paid off.

"Get On Up" is really two movies: One about the life of James Brown and one about the evolution of funk music. Each would be fascinating in their own right, but together, to paraphrase, "They've got soul; they're superbad."

The tapestry of flashbacks, including an appearance by Little Richard, builds upon itself, showing the interconnectedness of each phase of Brown's life, the growth of his music and his showmanship.

By the time in the movie the James Brown Band finally plays his first hit that truly personifies funk, 1965's "Papa's Got a Brand New Bag," you feel every fiber of every thread that created that inescapably new bag. You've seen all that went into it from his childhood on.

His next hit, "I Got You (I Feel Good)," is more conventional and less funky.

When in the movie the band breaks out into the undeniably funky "Cold Sweat," from 1967, you feel every bead of it flying from Brown's brow, borne of the previous 20 years of hard work.

Brown could perform anything, from gospel to Nat Cole, and make it his own, but you really feel the power when he's doing the pure funk.

My knowledge of music's technical side is nil. However, gleaned from my readings about Brown and other musical acts, it's generally considered funk music is marked by its emphasis on the first beat. Not the two or the four, but the one, as immortalized by the Parliament tune "Everything Is On the One."

Furthering that, and depicted in the film, Brown took it upon himself as the bandleader to convince every musician his instrument was a drum.

That vibe flowed through in the song "Say It Loud, I'm Black and I'm Proud," which Brown recorded along with a group of young children singing the refrain, another nice scene in the movie.

Every year, the Augusta National Golf Club hosts the posh Master's Golf Tournament. The Club did not integrate until 1990, and did not accept its first female member until 1990. Brown grew up in Augusta in the 1930s and early '40s, but light years from the country club scene.

There's plenty of fault to find in Brown as a human being, and most of those faults are laid bare here. It's also hard to believe he made anything of himself at all. That struggle and progress is also laid bare here. Brown was essentially abandoned by his parents, who left him to be raised in a brothel. Surrounded by lynchings, prejudice and poverty, it's amazing anyone of color survived in the South in that time.

The movie accurately depicts Brown's dichotomy, his internal struggle, of not needing anyone and needing people deeply. The movie depicts some of Brown's relationships with women, the most complicated and troubling being the one with his mother. However, the relationship most explored is the one between Brown and his friend, colleague and musical collaborator, Bobby Byrd.

Brown had several monikers during his career, including the "hardest working man in show business," and "the Godfather of Soul."

Let me digress a bit: No, Brown is not the Godfather of Soul. Anything having to do with the origins of soul music belongs to Ray Charles.

Brown is most definitely, however, the Godfather of Funk.

I came to Brown's music much after its original time of popularity, even well after discovering his greatest disciples. I discovered funk in the '70s, primarily through George Clinton. When creating Parliament, Clinton had the genius to gather Brown's horn section – Maceo Parker, Fred Wesley and Pee Wee Ellis – and Brown's bassist Bootsy Collins.

As Brown begat Clinton, Clinton begat Snoop Dogg, who owes his career and stage name to Clinton's 1982 classic "Atomic Dog," which he blatantly ripped off in 1993 with "Who Am I? (What's My Name?)" Dogg begat any number of hip-hop and rap copycats, who are no doubt begetting more today.

The funk don't quit.

'Boyhood' lacks reflection

Review by Jeff BergFor the Las Cruces Bulletin

Critically lauded but not exactly an audience pleaser, "Boyhood" is made up of fragments of young man's life, placed in a somewhat mosaic form.

The astonishing thing about this piece is that director Richard Linklater filmed it over a period of 12 years using the same actors, as we truly watch Mason (Ellar Coltrain) grow up and, to a lesser degree, his sister, Samantha.

The film starts when Mason is about 6 and follows him to his high school graduation. It is important to note that this is not a documentary, similar to the "7 Up" series of documentaries, which revisits the same characters every seven years, but rather it is a somewhat fictional tale that tells the truth.

Patricia Arquette plays Mason's mother, a single mom determined to make things better for herself and her children. Ethan Hawke, a regular in Linklater's movies, is the absentee dad who pops by for his divorce-granted weekends in a vintage GTO.

Mason ... well, I guess I'd have to say he is a pleasant but drab boy—and I guess that is what bugged me about this film. The main characters seemed to have no real emotional depth. Often it was like Mason was just watching his life pass by while his mother struggled to make ends meet and to shed herself of a series of nefarious paramours.

To the film's credit, Linklater easily skips the "milestones" most people in coming-of-age stories celebrate. We don't know about his first kiss, first drink, first anything, nor are we privy to the loss of his virginity, which may come via a lovely lass he dates almost all the way through high school.

Rather, "Boyhood" dwells upon the moments most of us forget or must really think about to remember. The loss of friends after a move – friends you thought were close but turn out to be just kids in the neighborhood.

Mason's life remains a blur to us for the most part. There is the typical after school/summer job with a restaurant manager whose neurosis is overcome by his vision that Mason has a great career and life ahead of him, a man who becomes a mentor of sorts and the main passion of Mason's life, photography. He becomes one of those movie characters that hides behind the camera – shooting instead of participating.

I guess that is what annoyed me the most about this often impressive film – the lack of depth. In spite of its critical achievements and stunning ingenuity, the whole thing struck me as somewhat hollow and too long at nearly three hours in length.

In the end, Mason and his family don't partake in any overblown crises' that are often part of movies based on family. Rather, the whole issue of emotional involvement is quietly sidestepped when it perhaps should have been the main resource.

"Boyhood" opens at the Fountain Theatre Friday, Aug. 22. It will run for a week and is nearly 3 hours in length.

My boyhood was unique – glad it is over. Jeff Berg can be reached at nedludd76@hotmail.com.

Here are a few drought tolerant plants that can be used just about anywhere the sun shines. They can be used as mass plantings, single specimen and some in containers.

First we start with the yuccas. Yucca faxonia and torreyi can grow quite large over time. These are best suited in areas with space over the long haul. They are slow growing; however additional summer watering will help speed up the process. They are hardy to about 10 degrees. Yucca aloifolia has very stiff leaves and is a bit faster growing. This one does well in containers with fast draining soil. A little shade will help darken the color of the leaves if it gets too much sun.

The Golden Sword yucca is a slower growing plant that is an excellent choice for containers, but of course just as beautiful in the ground. This one will brighten just about any area with its variegated leaves. Of course, I can't forget to remind everyone of the Yucca Elata, also known as soap tree, which is our state flower. Very slow growing, it has thin leaves with cream colored flowers during the spring months.

When one mentions agave you may think, "Oh, that big old century plant that takes up all the space in the world." The agave mentioned here will generally not exceed 3 to 6 feet tall and wide, and some even cases even smaller. First there is the New Mexico agave. This one is very hardy and mature size is about 2 feet tall and wide. The Octopus agave has free flowing succulent arms, as the name suggests. This one is about the largest variety mentioned in this article, growing up to 5 to 6 feet tall and about 3 to 4 feet wide.

This agave does not produce "pups", but it does have baby plantlets that adhere to the flower stalk. When the flower stalk drops and the plant dies, the plantlets take root on the ground below.

The Artichoke agave, as the name implies, resembles the artichoke. It grows 2 to 3 feet tall and wide with grayish colored leaves. The Thread Leaf agave grows 2 feet tall to about 3 feet wide. This agave is hardy to 10 degrees.

The Blue Glow agave has a very deep, rich color and is very well suited for containers. The Utah agave is very hardy to 10 degrees. This one grows only to about 18 inches tall. The Queen Victoria is the smallest of this bunch. It only grows to about 12 inches tall to 18 inches wide. These last three are excellent for carefree container gardening.

Bear Grass or "nolina macrocarpa" grows to 3 to 4 feet tall and wide. This easy-to-grow shrub

Yucca talk Country living at its finest

Home on Hayride Road offers wide open spaces

By David Salcido

The Mesilla Valley has its fair share of country homes. In an area that still offers space to grow, the opportunity to spread out appeals to many who find themselves drawn to our little corner of the world.

A prime example of this expansionist spirit can be found in the north valley, just off Doña Ana Road in the shadows of the Robledo Mountains.

Situated at the end of Hayride Road is a large, rambling structure that is at once warm and inviting, while at the same time offering enough space options for a large family or even multiple residents. In fact, it was planned that way, over time.

"The guy who built this house, his name was Rick Warner," the current owner revealed in a tour of the home. "He got all the beams for this house because they were going to build a copper mine up in Silver City. Then Reagan became president and the economy went to hell, so he got to buy all the beams. He was 22 years old when he framed and built the main part of the house, here. The tongue and groove fir used for the ceiling is fantastic. To build something like this today would be impossible."

Originally built by Warner in 1979, as a simple twostory home with two bedrooms and two baths, it already had a few things going for it, as the ceilings attest. Since that time, it has expanded to include two more bedrooms, an extra bathroom, a game room, a den and a nine car garage.

It also contains showcase rooms, the first encountered upon entering through the wooden front door: the

"It's very different and very unusual," the owner admits, but not without reason. "The kitchen really is the heart of the house, with little arteries going off in every direction. In a country home, it ought to be."

An open, spacious and modern affair, remodeled only a year ago, the kitchen - with its wraparound bar, double sink, granite countertops, stainless steel appliances and cabinets made from solid teak wood, not to mention a beautiful wine storage area created out of 200-year-old oak church pews – is just the beginning when it comes to homey revelations.

Another is the massive wood-burning stove that occupies a central area of the home and lends literal warmth to the surrounding rooms on both levels.

Then there's the "great room," with its formal dining area, high, wide open ceiling and large, hand crafted wooden mantel. The entire room is wrapped in dark, warm wooden accents, offset by beautiful tile work on the floor and a staircase landing overlooking all. Sliding glass doors across from that landing open out to a large covered patio and let in light. Above them is a stained glass window.

"In the evening, that window looks like it's got light behind it," the owner said. "It glows and lights up the whole room. It's very intense."

Two stories of unique character, with plenty of space and a ninecar garage are just some of the highlights at 107 Hayride Road.

What makes the house truly unique, however, is the fact that the current owners have taken great care to ensure that all additions match the original design elements of the home, even going so far as to use the same materials throughout when it comes to floors, ceilings, doors, windows and cabinetry. In fact, one aspect that stands out continuously is the quality of the craftsmanship found in every room.

Solid wooden beams can be seen in the open ceiling and repeated as lintels, door and window frames and in railings. Quality materials, including porcelain tile, granite countertops, glass block accents and nine different types of wood – such as cedar, teak and oak – are used in every corner. These are often countered by repurposed furniture, such as old desks, dining room tables and even church pews, being used as shelving, or to create interesting closet doors, storage cabinets or the impressive wooden fireplace in the great room.

The overall effect is one of a stately country mansion with elements of hunting lodge regality, but comfortable enough in which to raise a family.

Hot chile variations

'Tis the season to add a twist (or two) of sizzling hot Hatch to your dishes

Sunny Conley Chile Knights

Chile pepper harvest is quickly approaching. Soon a sweet, smoky aroma from roasting green chile will sweep over the valley.

This is one my most beloved times of year. Nothing is more tongue-tingling delicioso than dishes prepared with the new crop: pot pies and casseroles, enchiladas and burritos, soups and stews and a pageant of other sweet and savory sassy offerings.

Launch the season with your favorite concoctions or give mine a try.

Beer Blast Barker Burrito Pie

1 (2-ounce) can sliced black

This is sure to be a favorite dish at a pepper pod harvest potluck.

2 pounds lean ground beef, preferably ground Angus

1 medium white onion, chopped

1/4 cup Tecate beer*

2 teaspoons garlic, minced

olives, drained

- 1/2 cup favorite green chile peppers (preferably Barker), roasted, peeled, seeded and chopped
- 1 (10-ounce) can petite-diced tomatoes
- 1 (16-ounce) jar taco sauce
- 2 (16-ounce) cans non-fat (okay, fat full if you must) refried beans
- 12 (8-inch) flour tortillas
- 1 (8-ounce) bag shredded sharp cheddar cheese

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. In a large iron skillet over medium heat, sauté the ground beef in beer for 5 minutes. Add the onion and garlic and sauté for 5 more minutes. Mix in the olives, green chile peppers, diced tomatoes, taco sauce and refried beans. Stir mixture thoroughly. Reduce heat to low and let simmer for 15 to 20 minutes.

Spread a thin layer of the meat mixture in the bottom of a 4-quart casserole dish. Cover with a layer of tortillas followed by more meat mixture, then a layer of cheese. Repeat until all the tortillas are used, topping off with a layer of meat mixture and cheese.

Bake pie for 20 to 30 minutes or until the cheese becomes slightly brown and bubbly. Makes eight servings.

*Sip remaining beer along with your meal. (As if you didn't already think of this!)

Valley's Best Green Chile and Cheese Chicken Pie

It may not be the "best," but this dish is impressively tasty and so simple to make. Eat leftovers chilled. Think lunch-

- 1 cup cooked chicken, cubed or finely shredded
- 1 (8-ounce) can whole kernel corn, drained
- 1/2 cup (6-4) green chiles, roasted, peeled and chopped
- 2 eggs, beaten
- 2/3 cup milk
- 3/4 cup all-purpose flour
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon lemon pepper
- 1/2 cup cheddar cheese, finely shredded Favorite salsa

Sour cream

Spray a 9-inch pie plate with olive oil or another nonstick spray coating.

In a medium mixing bowl stir together chicken, corn and green chile peppers. Spread mixture in pie plate.

In the same bowl stir together eggs and milk. Beat in flour, salt and lemon pepper. Pour over chicken mixture.

Bake, uncovered, in a 400 degree oven for 25 to 30 minutes or till top is set and lightly browned. Sprinkle with cheese and bake for an additional 2 to 3 minutes more or till cheese melts. Serve with salsa and yogurt. Makes six servings.

Green Chile, Bacon and Tater Soup

Few foodies would argue that bacon and potatoes is a natural pairing. But adding green chile to the pot, it becomes a trilogy of unforgettable flavors.

- 5 bacon strips, cut into small (1/2-inch or so) pieces
- 3-5 medium to large potatoes, peeled and cubed (3/4 inch is a good size)
- 5 cups water 1 (14-ounce) can tomato sauce
- 1/4 to 1/2 cup onions, chopped
- 1 teaspoon salt or to taste
- 1/2 pound sharp cheddar cheese, grated
- 1 cup favorite roasted chiles,
 - stemmed, seeded and chopped

Brown the bacon pieces in a large pot. Add the potato cubes and stir till they are coated with bacon drippings. Add water, tomato sauce, onion and salt. Bring to boil, reduce heat to a simmer and cook uncovered for one hour or until potatoes are cooked.

Place chopped chiles and grated cheese (a tablespoon or so of each) in soup bowls. Spoon hot soup over them.

Variation: Crushed garlic may be added to soup (1 clove recommended). Makes six servings.

thrives in light shade or full sun and needs very little summer watering once established. It is hardy to zero degrees. It may need to be thinned out every 2 to 4 years to keep the center from hollowing out.

The hardy Desert Spoon or stool, which may resemble something between bear grass and a yucca with teeth, is also very drought tolerant. The sotol has a round, spiny, basketball shape that grows up to 3 to 5 feet tall and wide with a tall flower spike that can grow up to 10 feet high or more. Older specimens can develop a trunk when the lower leaves are removed.

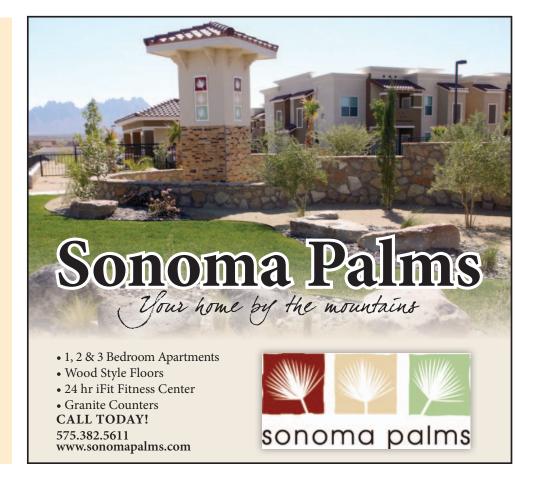

As stated above, all these plants are quite drought tolerant once planted in the ground and established. When they are grown in containers, the soil should be allowed to completely dry out and then be thoroughly drenched for best results. Be sure to use a fast-draining medium when planting in pots. Always use pots that have drainage holes for these desert gems. Keep in mind that the temperature, sun exposure, humidity, soil, pot type and pot color will all have an effect on how well your plant will perform.

In most cases these plants need no extra feeding. If you find that your plants lack vigor or vibrant color, you may want to use an organic or slow release fertilizer. You may have to treat some of these plants with a systemic insecticide to help prevent or treat agave weevil. This will show up as excessively yellowing and or wilting leaves (may appear to be over watering).

Other than the weevil being a pain in the "grass," these heat loving dwellers can make a beautiful statement in any landscape.

what would you have done?

The results are in: Terrorism on Israeli soil has been greatly reduced, which was the point of the wall. It is justified as an ugly necessity.

As sympathy for the Palestinian cause continues to rise, particularly among political liberals, we tend to forget that in the 70 years of its existence Israel has never known peace. Surrounded by nations pledged to its destruction and forced to exist in a constant state of war, this "outpost of Western democracy" continues to survive and thrive. When Hamas blatantly says in its documents, "Israel will exist and will continue to exist until Islam will obliterate it, just as it obliterated others before it," you know exactly where you are and with whom you are dealing. Defense, an ugly necessity, admittedly scars both the defender and the sworn enemy. The scars are all over Israel. They are not hard to see.

In a bold attempt to create forward motion beyond the stalemates in Israeli and Palestinian relations, Israel granted self-governance in Gaza to the Palestinian Authority. In 2005 Israel withdrew from Gaza entirely. By 2008 Hamas had become the ruling authority in Gaza. Since then there has been constant friction and hostility, with Hamas vowing to continue hostilities since the Israeli declaration of a ceasefire at the end of the 2008-09 war.

This summer, rockets fell and bombs burst across the border between Israel and Gaza for almost a month. Several truce attempts failed, but at last we hear something resembling good news: The latest truce has thus far held, albeit shakily. Maybe we can exhale, but the saber rattling continues.

We who work in the field of Jewish-Christian relations know the trials and tribulations of Israel along with its warts and sores. This does not mean that we whitewash issues or serve as sycophants to the Netanyahu government. But Israel is not the easiest place to be in the best of seasons and, in the worst of seasons, we observe a growing journalistic tendency in America to valorize the Palestinians and demonize the Israelis.

This is not helpful. It is a wholly unbalanced position, and it serves only to underwrite the growing prejudices of some American church bodies, all of which welcomed the birth of Israel with open arms several short generations ago. Those prejudices have been writ large in the so-called BDS campaigns (boycott, divestment and sanctions) debated on the agenda of many of the horrors of war on our soil that spread this unbalanced mentality like an oil slick over the turbulent waves of the Israeli sea. Perhaps we expected more out of Israel as the "holy land." Perhaps they are correct who think that this marks a resurgence of anti-Semitism. I don't know, but surely no one with any common sense could believe that Israelis, whether Jewish or Arab, or most Palestinians, would willingly choose to live under relentless opposition, constant threat and occasional bombardment.

Walls and border checkpoints are ugly necessities to enable Israel to survive. Defense forces are necessary and everywhere. Cessation of hostilities provides welcome calm but turbulence is always just below the surface ready to erupt again. Many of us need to find a balanced understanding of Israel's commitment, both to defense and to ultimate peace in the wake of recent

Bullying stops with bystanders

Marcy Shoberg
Self-defense sense

It's great that bullying is now recognized as a serious problem and that policymakers seek to solve school, workplace and household bullying problems. But, policies don't stop bullies – people stop bullies.

Policies don't stop bullies because bullies always have mental justification for their actions. While bullying, they may believe themselves rightfully angry. Or, they may be acting on impulse, simply stating their negative opinion. They might even think they are doing their victims a favor by teaching them a lesson.

Those who bully – if you think you never do, reconsider – can learn what bullying is and vow not to act like that. Definitions include "when one purposefully hurts or scares another, knowing they don't like it" and "when someone makes another feel bad to make themselves feel good." Realize no one will ever be bullied into changing an opinion or becoming a better person, and learn other ways to influence people and to feel proud.

We self-defense teachers teach those targeted by bullies to use assertive body language and verbal response to stop bullying incidents before they become physical. One who learns verbal and physical self-protection skills becomes much less likely to experience bullying. But, this cannot eradicate bullying, since those most likely to be targeted often aren't brave enough to seek training.

Those in the best position to stop bullying are bystanders. They are people who witness, but are not directly involved in, bullying incidents. If a witness points out to a bully that they are hurting the other person, they might stop. At the very least, they will learn they do not impress all bystanders with their

Offering support for Las Crucens with diabetes

Diabetics young and old can get help from SNMDO

You are not alone.

This is the message Southern New Mexico Diabetes Outreach (SNMDO) aims to give to Las Crucens living with diabetes. With 53.1 million people predicted to be diabetic in the next three years, you most certainly are not alone.

SNMDO hosts support groups for adults and children, both groups focusing on education. The Children/Youth Diabetes Support Group is geared to teach elementary and middle school how to deal with issues associated with growing up diabetic. The adult group seeks to share recipes and support among diabetics.

Beverly Estrada, diabetic for 31 years and co-leader of youth support group, said early intervention is important.

"The sooner you gain control over it, the better your outcomes are going to be," Estrada said, noting that she felt alone as a child with diabetes. "Hopefully with this support group, they're able to recognize and see they're not alone, that there are others in their shoes and situations and help them make the proper decisions when among peers and not to feel ashamed of what they have," Estrada said.

Children in the support group are taught how to count carbohydrates, give themselves insulin shots, eat and exercise right and deal with peer pressure.

Estrada said that the support group is free, which was uncommon when she was growing up with diabetes.

The group meets 6 to 7:30 p.m. on the first and third Tuesdays of each month at the MountainView Senior Circle Association, 3948 E. Lohman Ave. Donohue said the space is ideal because it's comfortable yet spacious when the children take out their hula hoops and jump ropes to learn the importance of exercise.

Susan Oliver, SNMDO board president, said she feels the group is important because children are often thought to be untouchable by diseases.

"It's always been looked at with children that they don't need to worry about it because it won't hit them until they're older, but the problem is if they start working on it and following better diet and exercise, they might not end up in that boat later." Oliver said.

SNMDO leaders said they're proud of their adult support group because it has been running for nine years. The adult group meets from 10 to 11:15 a.m. on the third Thursday of each month at Natural Grocers, 3970 E. Lohman Ave.

SNMDO said, this group meets to discuss issues affecting diabetics and learn new recipes, as food can be one of the hardest issues diabetics deal with.

"A lot of people have the notion that they have to starve themselves and that's not true. They need a well-balanced diet," Donohue said.

Even pre-diabetics are welcomed to the support group, Donohue said. "Even if you're pre-diabetic, doesn't mean you have to have diabetes," she said.

"They come in and learn proper nutrition, they start exercising, they change their lifestyle and the next time they go back to the doctor the doctor will tell them 'Well I don't see any signs of diabetes."

Fear feeds avoidance and denial in diabetics, therefore each group is provided with as much age-appropriate educational material as they would like to have. Donohue said.

"It's very important that they're educated, because it makes a big difference," she said. "A lot of it is fear and it sounds harder than it is and after they learn it, they're surprised that it's not as hard as they thought it would be," Donohue said.

Donohue said diabetic children and adults alike need to know they're going to be OK and how to manage their diabetes, and that's what the facilitators of this support group seek to do.

"One of the hardest things is changing the habits," April Montoya, SNMDO volunteer said. "The sooner you start and the younger you are, the easier it's going to be later on."

NMSU and Memorial Medical Center team up to offer courses

Beginning in fall 2014, the Department of Public Health Sciences in the New Mexico State University College of Health and Social Services and the Southern New Mexico Family Medicine Residency Program at Memorial Medical Center will offer residents the opportunity to take courses in public health.

"This collaboration is unique in so many ways," said Mark Kittleson, Public Health Sciences department head. "It deals with unique border issues, it is a formal agreement between a residency program and an accredited master's of public health program, although there may be others throughout the country, I've yet to find one, and it is an opportunity to truly impact medical treatment and public health in the region.'

The residents will have the chance to earn a graduate certificate in public health, which requires 15 credit hours, or enter the master's in public health program with a concentration in community health or health administration, management and policy.

"I believe that the addition of public health train-physician to be effective," said John Andazola, Southern New Mexico Family Medicine Residency program director. "Working on health issues in the clinic one-on-one with the patient will always be important, but addressing health issues at the community level provides for the greater good. We understand that the social determinants of health play the most important role in the health of the individuals living in that community and this collaboration will provide the resident physicians with the tools needed to address the needs of their communi-

"This collaboration is a bridge between the residency and the university," Andazola said. "This is a first step to formal collaboration that will tear down the silos and allow us to share our resources, which will directly improve the health of our community."

Under the agreement, family practice residents will be charged in-state tuition and Memorial Medical Center and the Southern New Mexico Family Medicine Residency Program will pay for the courses if students earn a C or better.

"This is a very exciting collaboration between ing in primary care will be essential for the future NMSU and Memorial Medial Center. It gives the family practice residents an opportunity to take courses in the graduate public health certificate program and interact with others with diverse educational background and training," said Satya Rao, public health sciences professor and coordinator of the graduate certificate.

"It provides the residents an opportunity to learn the fundamentals of public health and find ways to integrate them into their medical practice and create opportunities to be engaged in empowering their clients to make healthy choices and allow primary prevention to be successful," Rao said.

Currently, five of the second-year residents are slated to begin classes in August toward the graduate certificate.

"I'm excited to interact with other students; through this program, we have a great opportunity to work with and learn from professionals from around the country," said Sarah Gude, second-year

"It is not enough to know which diabetes treatment is most appropriate for a specific patient; it's also asking why they have diabetes in the first place. Studying public health principles makes us more aware of those structural challenges that are present in our community. When we understand our patients' lives in a more comprehensive way, we form deeper relationships and provide better care," actions, something a bully often intends to do. Alternatively, the bystander might invite the victim to join them, leaving the bullies' presence.

It's not always easy for bystanders to act. A selfdefense student once witnessed a man at a sporting event bullying his family and had great mental stress while considering getting involved. When she finally approached him, several other bystanders followed.

It's not always safe for bystanders to get involved. Another student once witnessed a man bullying a woman about a parking space and decided to get involved. He reports that if he didn't have verbal deescalation training, he'd never have managed to avoid physically fighting the man.

Stopping bullying may not be easy, and may not be entirely safe, but it's the right thing for all to do.
