'Red light cameras' ending? Council may not renew contract

By Todd G. Dickson

Las Cruces Bulletin

Uncertainty about whether "red light cameras" improve safety and the scant income they provide may lead the City of Las Cruces to not renew the contract with the Arizona firm that set up the traffic enforcement cameras at several busy intersections.

In the five years since Redflex set up the system of cameras for the city, more than $8.3 million in citations for running red lights, speeding through intersection and rolling right-hand turns have been issued, said Victoria Frederick, city financial services director, at a City Council work session Monday, Feb. 10. Of that total, more than $2.7 million are older than 120 days, meaning they won't likely be collected.

The infractions are considered to be civil violations, not criminal offenses.

City Manager Robert Garza said the city gets only $17 from each $100 fine, with the rest going to Redflex and the State of New Mexico. Over those first five years of the program, the city has made $1.4 million, with nearly $900,000 spent on new police patrol cars and the rest going to improve traffic signaling technology.

Ceil Levatino, the city's newest councillor, called the low collection rate "atrocious."

The city spent about $500,000 to set up the red light camera system, Levatino said, to have only earned a little more than $1 million in five years. A New Mexico State University study, commissioned by the council last year, concluded there wasn't clear evidence the cameras have improved safety, except for some reduction in crashes at the intersection of Telshor Boulevard See Cameras on page A7

VA Clinic to expand location, services Home care coming soon

By Todd G. Dickson Las Cruces Bulletin

The days of cramped doctors' offices and limited parking for users of the Veterans Affairs Clinic in Las Cruces may soon become past annoyances.

The VA is looking to lease a new location for its Las Cruces clinic that will provide 9,200 square feet of medical and office space, compared to the 6,396 square feet in the current clinic at 1635 Don Roser Drive.

On Jan. 28, the VA notified Mayor Ken Miyagishima about the expansion, which VA contracting officer Edelma Galarza-Valentin said would "bring jobs and revenue to your city, and will generally support economic development in the area."

In addition to seeking a larger building for its clinic in Las Cruces, the VA is also setting up a team of medical and social work personnel to begin offering care at the homes of veterans in

True West revisits Fountain, Garrett Murder mysteries explored

By Todd G. Dickson Las Cruces Bulletin

In early February, a little more than 118 years ago, Col. Albert Jennings Fountain was eager to get his 8-year-old son home to Mesilla as he was crossing the desert from Tularosa, but he was even more anxious about three riders who had been trailing him.

The Fountains never made it. Their abandoned buckboard was found where it had careened off the road not far from the White Sands dune field, but their bodies were never found, presumed buried by the ambushers.

Lawman Pat Garrett is brought out of retirement to investigate the murders, but the men he charged are acquitted. Twelve years later, Garrett is killed on the other side of the Organ Mountains under similar conditions – with suspects linked to the Fountain murders.

Now, both mysteries are being examined by this month's See Fountain on page A2 edition of True West magazine. One of the first to pick up a copy of it at COAS Bookstore Friday, Feb. 7, was Al Fountain, the great, great grandson of the slain soldier, lawyer and businessman. Greeting him was store owner Mike Beckett, who wouldn't let Fountain pay for the magazine.

Al Fountain gets his first look at a large story package on the murder of his great, great grandfather Col. Albert Jennings Fountain - and his 8-year-old son Henry – in the latest edition of the True West magazine at the front counter of COAS Bookstore Friday, Feb. 7. The magazine also looks into the murder of lawman Pat Garrett, whose killing in an isolated area of the East Mesa in 1908 is believed by some historians to be linked to the Fountain murders 12 years before. Garrett was hired to investigate the killings and worked to have the three prime suspects tried for the crimes.

Beckett's father, Pat Beckett, also has long been intrigued by the mystery, Mike Beckett said, and a neighbor, Ben Venable, with the Doña Ana County Sheriff's Department, has been investigating it.

"It's still considered to be an open case, even though it's a very old cold case," Mike Beckett said.

Fountain recalled that as a boy of 10 he was taken with other family members to an area near Chalk Hill, where the attack was believed to have started, to observe a group of men dig a site thought to have been where his ancestors' bodies were buried.

We spent the whole morning there, but they didn't find anything," Fountain said.

Garrett eventually named as prime suspects three men – Oliver Lee, James Gilliland and Bill McNew - but Lee and Gilliland were acquitted in a trial held in Hillsboro for the murder of the boy, Henry Fountain. Gilliland reportedly gave a deathbed confession and turned over Col. Fountain's Masonic pin.

Al Fountain said his great grandmother answered the door of the family home when a member of the Masonic Lodge tried to return the pin, but she slammed the door in his face. 'She didn't want to have anything to do with it," Fountain said.

Friday, February 14, 2014

The piece in True West gives a detailed narrative of what is believed to have happened to the Fountains, complete with historic photos and maps of their trek and possible routes of where the bodies were taken after the attack on Chalk Hill.

According to the True West account - based on stories said to have come from the killers -Col. Fountain was killed while trying to drive the buggy away from the assailants. The killers then drew straws to decide who would slit the throat of the boy, Henry Fountain.

Supporting articles go into the investigation by Garrett, whose assassination is the magazine's front-page story. A graphic points out similarities between the Fountain and Garrett murders, which Al Fountain said the family has long believed to been linked via their connections to Albert Fall, a lawyer and political boss. The suspect in Garrett's murder, Wayne Brazel, was acquitted in a trial in which he was defended by Fall. According to the True West article, the plot to kill Garrett was hatched at an El Paso hotel, with Lee, McNew and possibly Fall among the conspirators.

Alongside the magazine at the front counter of COAS are DVDs of the short film "Among the Dust of Thieves." Beckett said he believed the filmmakers spurred the interest for the True West articles in the hopes a larger budget, full-length feature film can be made.

Excerpt from 'The Assassination of Pat Garrett' by Mark Boardman in True West magazine

"For the 57-year-old lawman, his was an undignified death. Pat Garrett was urinating on the side of the road to Las Cruces, New Mexico, about four miles east of town. As he was so occupied, somebody hidden about 50 feet behind him put a Winchester bulletin the back of his head.

"One of his two companions placed the dead man's Burgess folding shotgun - still in its sheath - near the body. Then the pair headed to town to tell a fairy tale about the incident.

"On February 29, 1908, Garrett was dead. The man who had headed down the legends trail nearly 30 years before when he killed Billy the Kid, murdered.

'It was a conspiracy. A contract murder. An organized crime hit."

southern New Mexico.

It's not only good news for the veterans served by the bustling clinic, but for its staff, said Nicole Lucero, nurse manager at the Las Cruces clinic since September 2013.

"From the moment I got here, we were bursting at the seams," she said.

The VA has put out a request for proposals – thus the outreach to Miyagishima in case the city had property or economic development incentives the agency could take advantage of – and hopes to have a new clinic open by September, if not sooner.

The current clinic provides primary care from three clinic doctors, basic lab work – now open for more hours and days – and mental health counseling as well as tele-medical consultations, such as tele-retinal exams. The clinic also has a pharmacy, which is housed in a small office with medications stored on shelves in a closet or in a small floor refrigerator.

Most of the testing done at the lab is blood work, Lucero said. The lab is now open from 8 a.m. to 4:20 p.m. weekdays and can take walk-ins, she said.

The pharmacy is open from 1 to 4:30 p.m., manned for now by Gary Henderson, who will soon retire. Despite the cramped quarters, Henderson said he likes being able to spend time with each patient, explaining how to take the medications and warning of possible drug interactions. One good thing about the VA's computerized medical records is that he can look up the patient's medical history and check for other medications prescribed.

"I want to make sure these veterans get the out most of their health care," Henderson said. "You get to know them a more when you have a captive audience like this."

Other outpatient services provided by the clinic include health screenings and consultations for health promotion, maintenance and education. So long as a veteran doesn't need to see a specialist, the clinic can help him or her manage acute and chronic diseases, as well as provide immunizations. If a specialist is needed, the veteran still has to go to the larger VA clinic in El Paso or the VA hospital in Albuquerque, Lucero said. Except for the lab, appointments are required and the clinic does not provide emergency care.

Home-based services

New to the Las Cruces clinic in the near future will be homebased services, said Linda Rollins, director of home-based primary and medical foster care services.

"We take the clinic here to their home," she said.

The service brings a team that includes a medical doctor, nurse practitioner, nurses and a social worker to the home of a veteran with a chronic condition that make it difficult to travel, even to the local clinic, Rollins said. Sometimes, a veteran may be living with a family member who is working during the day, making it difficult for the veteran to be taken to the clinic if he or she can't transport themselves. Follow-up care is regularly provided by a nurse or personal support assistant, she said.

Rollins said she has just completed setting up a home-based system for about 150 patients in proximity to the El Paso clinic, which currently includes veterans in Chaparral and Anthony, N.M. The Chaparral and Anthony veterans will be the first to work with the Las Cruces team to help the program get up and running by March, she said.

"I'm in the process of hiring my last person for the team," she said.

In working with the veterans from southern New Mexico, Rollins said she quickly saw a need for a program more specifically geared to the rural nature of the area and was able to get a grant to pay for the new program.

"There are a lot of people here – thousands – with no home health service," she said.

Rollins said it is important for members of the team to be strong advocates for patient care, while also having the tact to deal with the variety of home circumstances they may encounter. Of course, they will all be certified, credentialed and vetted to assure that the veterans they are letting people into their home they can trust, she said.

"We'll fight to get everything the veteran needs," Rollins said. The area to be served by the Las Cruces clinic covers a 60-miles radius.

Veterans or people who know a veteran who could make use of the home-based service are asked to the call the El Paso clinic at 915-564-6100.

Gary Henderson, pharmacist for the Las Cruces Veterans Affairs Clinic, talks about the limited space he has for storage as he stands next to his closet of shelf medicines. At bottom right is his small refrigerator for those medicines that have to be chilled. More space for the pharmacy is part of the plan for expansion of the clinic.

Keep moving spaceport ahead

Regulations should be reduced, not eliminated

Owing to my eclectic philosophy of life, there are almost no opinions I agree with fully. Similarly, there are almost no opinions I disagree with fully.

Because I respect people's right to hold opinions, and see value in diverse ideas, I don't like to use my position as a newspaper columnist to rebut other columnists.

Here, though, for just the second time in my 30 years (Dang, I'm old ...) of writing newspaper columns, I am doing that. Last week in the Las Cruces Bulletin, we ran two columns I almost completely disagree with. Here are my reactions.

Column thesis: The state should get out of the spaceport business

Writer: Bob Hearn

My response: Hearn said our only advantage is we're in the middle of nowhere. That's an advantage, but not the only one. We're already almost a mile high; the altitude saves tons on fuel. We have built-in support; think of White Sands Missile Range, NASA and many tech companies. We have great tech programs at New Mexico State University, New Mexico Tech, the University of New Mexico and the University of Texas-El Paso. We have a vital history of space, flight and military technology. The adjacent airspace above WSMR is unparalleled.

New Mexico is not high on any prosperity lists.

Spaceport America was an aggressive, far-sighted project taking advantage of aspects unique to New Mexico.

Spaceport America represents, quite possibly, the best effort in New Mexico's history to try to better ourselves as a state. Done right, and with solid support, it can become the biggest economic engine New Mexico has ever had.

Column thesis: No laws should control wages.

Writer: Michael Swickard

My response: I dislike regulations that impede business. Business is incredibly difficult as it is. Competition, market conditions and the whims of people's consumption habits are just some things getting in the way of business owners making payrolls. Bad regulations compound the problems.

However, there is a limit to everything.

Less than a hundred years ago, our country had conditions where children worked 14hour days, men regularly lost digits and limbs, and women were treated even worse. If you were a person of color, forget it.

Regulations and laws changed many of those problems during the 20th century.

The minimum wage was one of those laws.

I do not believe right now is the time to increase the minimum wage, nationally or in New Mexico. There are a dozen or so reasons I believe that. The biggest is my fear of coming inflation, which would be accelerated by an increase. I believe a wage increase can be beneficial at the right time, however.

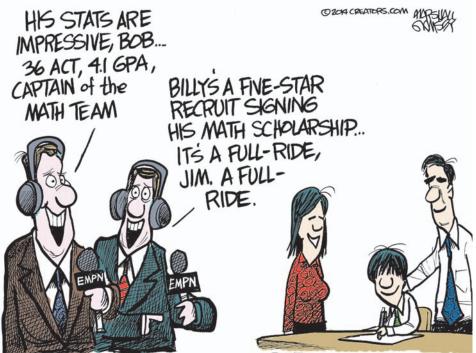

Rather than a blanket minimum wage, which might have made sense in, say, 1969, it may be time to consider different types of minimum wage.

Compare, for example, a local restaurant owner to Walmart. A $1 per hour mandatory increase in the minimum wage could likely knock a 10-employee restaurant out of business. The same increase for Walmart might mean your 12-pack of Diet RC Cola might go up 13 cents and they might reduce hiring nationwide for a few months.

In a failed effort to raise the minimum wage last year, New Mexico lawmakers addressed that issue, exempting businesses with fewer than 11 employees.

Another consideration could be an entry-level, or training, wage lower than the regular minimum wage for the first six months.

Another drawback to Swickard's rules-free business theory: Has anyone ever heard of any business people practicing unethically? Yeah, me, too. Human nature forces us as societies to have at least some regulations.

A NATIONAL SIGNING DAY WE'LL NEVER SEE

Letters to the editor

Wealth controls markets

Michael Swickard's "Repeal wage laws" novel was an extreme trip into never-never land. We've never had a "free market" in this country and never will. Our founding fathers were the descendants of London merchants who were given "corporate charters" to start colonies in North America by an English king who had no right to give North America to anyone. They then set out to "develop" the colonies in a manner that resembled plundering and piracy. They used prison labor (indentured servants) and African slaves to do the work and took the resources pretty much for "free."

Since that time our Wall Street banksters and corporations have continually used scams, coercion, cartels, dishonest banking, our military forces and a government that absolutely refuses to enforce basic criminal laws against Wall Street. None of this is included in Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations." So, this "free market" is run by these "invisible hand" trustworthy souls Mr. Swickard trusts to set our wages?

One wonders what planet Swickard's brain

Pearce not serious

Tea Party Congressman Steve Pearce of New Mexico is not really addressing the needs of Hispanic families who hold immigration reform with a path to citizenship as a central priority. Mr. Pearce is simply dangling a carrot to get a few Hispanics to vote for him.

He supposedly supports legislation aimed at improving training and accountability for U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) and a bill to allow judicial review for certain American citizens separated from their families due to immigration issues.

He is not sincere. If he is re-elected, he will probably forget all about this legislation. I think Congressman Pearce is a calculating politician based on his past performance, and Congressman Beto O'Rourke of Texas is being used by the older Mr. Pearce. Mr. O'Rourke has "voluntarily submitted" to his political gambit. It is very unlikely that the Republican-controlled House would even pass this legislation with the impending 2014 elections. America really needs comprehensive immigration reform.

Governmental interference Jobs only occur when businesses flourish

Michael Swickard In My Opinion

"There is one and only one social responsibility of business: to use its resources and engage in activities designed to increase its profits so long as it stays within the rules of the game, which is to say, engages in open and free competition without deception or fraud." - Milton Friedman

The 2014 New Mexico Legislature is coming to the end of its 30-day session. There have been lots of controversies aimed at getting the members of the Legislature re-elected in November, but little else to help the people who need help the most: unemployed and underemployed New Mexicans.

The every other year 30-day legislative session in New Mexico concentrates on a state budget and anything else that catches the governor's fancy. Me, I fancy jobs, because jobs make New Mexico strong and we are not strong in our business sector.

For most people there are many more advantages to jobs than unemployment. Sure, with unemployment, Democrats can throw palliative money at voters for the purpose of getting votes. They stand before cameras talking about helping New Mexico families. It gets them re-elected but the people remain unemployed.

The underlying issue to what ails New Mexico is that the New Mexico state government, along with county and municipalities, are not doing the right things to support businesses in this state. So businesses are not hiring enough New Mexicans for our economy to improve.

More so, the least likely to be employed are the least skilled since we have minimum wage laws which prohibit businesses from dealing honestly with potential employees. Businesses should be able to compensate employees by what the employee can do for the business.

New Mexico needs to lose the notion that government knows best for the citizens and let the citizens make their own economic decisions. The marketplace will bring prosperity to New Mexico if New Mexico confines its interference to making sure, as Milton Friedman says, "business ... engages in open and free competition without deception or fraud."

Every other political intention takes away from a vibrant economy and gives political power to the power brokers who prosper when the average New Mexican does not. They play upon emotions with slogans, some of which are right out of the communist playbook, which incidentally did not ever work in any communist country. Income equality comes right from Karl Marx and has never worked.

For those who think more government is the answer, there is only one question: Show me where bigger and bigger government has worked? Yes, it hires more cousins but in taking money out of the economy to run the government it spoils the economy and brings greater suffering to the most fragile citizens.

Obviously, if New Mexico is to prosper, really prosper, then the people who want to choke businesses must be voted out of office. They are pleasant fools who spout the communist-socialist line without realizing the harm it does New Mexicans.

We need to vote out those in both parties ruining the New Mexico economy and vote in those who realize that in a vibrant marketplace "a rising tide lifts all ships," as John Kennedy said.

The problem is, there are almost more government workers in New Mexico than non-government workers. How can anyone get control of the runaway government? Only when the government workers themselves realize that if they completely kill businesses, there will be no more money for them. Self interest.

It is the first rule of the marketplace; you must take care of your customers, or long-term, you are gone. It also is true of those government workers. Milton Friedman observed, "One of the great mistakes is to judge policies and programs by their intentions rather than their results."

The huge increase of government policies and programs over the last few decades in New Mexico have all begun with good intentions, but the unemployed and underemployment in New Mexico are the results.

I-10 Exit 25, Between Airway & Hawkins

There continues to be a "mindseparation" from reality regarding the high price of cattle.

We cattlemen ease around each other, secretly not believing we just sold 13 heifers weighing 480 pounds for $840 each. Or sold a cull bull weighing 1,605 for 74 cents a pound. He brought $1,200. Or sold 600 weight steers for over $1,000 apiece, or bought 20 bred first-calf heifers for $1,680 each.

It is the happiest coffee shop table talk I've heard since Osama went down. The most common comment, said with a sideways grin and the shake of the head, that I hear is, "Man ... I can't believe it!"

Most of the analysts discuss the drop in cow numbers as the reason for high prices. But the coffee shop economist is always ready to caution his cronies that it can't last. People won't continue to buy it if it gets too high. But, how high is too high?

A quarter pounder hamburger costs $3. The cost of the meat patty, I'm guessing, is less than 50 cents. Even if you doubled the price of the meat, making the burger cost $3.50, it would not affect sales much. Especially if the buyer often upgrades to a Big Mac EVM (extra value meal) for $4.95 or a McChicken for $4.34, not to mention a 16-ounce Coke for $1, a small latte for $1.60 or a medium shake for $1.80 in addition. Where else are you going to get a full meal for less than $5 ... Starbucks? I don't see protesters picketing fast food places. The USDA (2012) said

Americans spend 10 percent of their income for food. Another 50 cents on a burger doesn't affect us near as much as a $1.50 per gallon increase in gasoline. In the steakhouses from Outback to Ruth's Chris, the cost of the meat is even a smaller percentage of the cost of the meal.

Opinions | A5

But the statistics on how beef (and food) prices for cattlemen have lagged far behind the cost-of-living increases for other necessary commodities, show we have plenty of room to move up. All the beef that is being produced is being eaten. As price increases, it will still be eaten.

My favorite gauge is to compare the number of fed cattle that it takes to buy a new pickup. I use 1,000-pound steers and half-ton pickups to compare. In the '70s, it took 12. In the '80s, it took 16. In the '90s, it took 22. In the 2000s, it took 26. In 2013, it still took 26. For a moment in time, beef is keeping up with the cost-of-living expenses.

So, for those who can't accept the justification of increased beef prices as a long-overdue inflation correction, or see the changing buying habits of the modern eat-out-microwave 2014 pop-up consumer, then sell every critter on your place and wait for the price to go down.

Me, I think I can take a positive outlook and buy some more bred heifers ... 'cause, "Man, I just can't believe it!"

'War on Poverty' about more than bread alone

The poor are kept poor

By Rev. Thomas Baca For the Las Cruces Bulletin

I am responding to a recent article published in the Las Cruces Bulletin by Christopher Erickson, a Ph.D. professor of economics at New Mexico State University. The article is titled: "50 Years later: U.S. War on Poverty largely won."

The "war on poverty" has been waged for many centuries, long before President Johnson's well-known 1964 State of the Union address cited by professor Erickson. While Johnson did declare a "war on poverty," he never defined poverty to be solely "malnutrition." The larger condition of "poverty" is a much more complex phenomenon than Erickson's simple equation of, "poverty equals malnutrition."

Declarations of war on the condition of poverty skim the surface of what is required to act justly with regard to those suffering that condition. Two thousand years ago, Jesus of Nazareth recognized that "the poor will be with you always" (Matthew 26:11). Christian tradition teaches its members that true justice concerning the poor is derived from the remarkable cornerstone of an intrinsic dignity of the human person seen by Jesus Christ. Neither the church nor secular humanitarian approaches have ever reduced understandings of poverty to be physical hunger alone.

Various modes of governance have approached alleviation of poverty in public policy as part of the governance's responsibility for the "general welfare." "The poor" are not a faceless class to be easily forgotten, ignored and treated as political pawns in the chess game of prosperity. For this reason, Judeo-Christian traditions have approached the problem of injustice and its effects proactively and in the front lines.

Only by such face-to-face interaction can we reflect upon the poor as individuals with an indelible dignity and right to freedom. The success of our endeavors regarding poverty rides heavily upon what we consider to be just action in regard to human dignity under the weight of affliction. This is the role the Catholic church has championed for so long.

Christians and humanitarians alike lunge at the high goal of alleviating and even eliminating poverty as a condition. Regardless of faith perspective, we must attempt to alleviate the condition of poverty of the individuals who suffer its ramifications: hunger, loneliness, homelessness, depression, disease, prejudice, alienation and violence, among many others. The "fish net" underlying the Christian perspective toward the poor is that there is no shame or net loss to the inherent dignity of those who suffer it. Rather, the poor have faces and names. They rise to a special status and are to be interacted with as Christ's "little ones" (Luke 6:20) as a priority.

The present reality of poverty in America defies draconian equations such as "poverty equals hunger." The condition of poverty arises from underlying societal injustices. To be sure, it is both an individual and a societal problem. Injustices of any kind assault human dignity. In the wake of injustices, the poor starve for more than food. The poor starve for fairness, opportunity, work and especially recognition of their given dignity as children of God.

In the end, such a war must be fought by each of us as a matter of personal and ethical responsibility to act cooperatively, answering "yes" to the question: "Am I my brother's keeper?" Or better yet, let's keep in mind the parable of the Good Samaritan as the model of determining "who is my neighbor" in response to the commandment that we "love our neighbor as ourselves" (Luke 10:25-37 and Leviticus 19:13)

The poor live and struggle within our own backyard, here in southern New Mexico. I interview individuals and families who present their cases to Catholic Charities of the Diocese of Las Cruces. I witness the specter of homelessness, unemployment, underemployment and substandard living. I am not alone in this to be sure.

A quick tour of some of the colonias in our own southern New Mexico area will very quickly give a dramatic picture that impoverished conditions are real. The number of people availing themselves of soup kitchens and food banks is growing in southern New Mexico.

In spite of its oil rich resources, educational institutions and defense-related research laboratories, the southernmost 10 counties of New Mexico are among the poorest in the nation.

The colonia communities of Columbus, Vado, Anapra, and Chaparral are remote geographically to be sure. However, those who live in these communities are further alienated by virtue of their present struggle to thrive, even in the most prosperous nation on Earth. Our public policy indecision, relative to immigration from Mexico and Central America, has intensified and complicated these effects locally.

The church's 2,000-year-old war has never been on poverty, but rather, upon the specter of social injustice. Ultimately, such a war is waged within each of us to stop or lessen our individual and societal proclivity to harden our hearts toward our neighbor in need.

Pyrrhic victories as declared by Erickson result in an individual and societal blindness to reality, or worse, an indifference to it. Christianity, other mainstream religious traditions and even secular humanitarianism demand vigilance against this tendency.

and Lohman Avenue. Making the Telshor-Lohman data murky, Garza said, was that the intersection was improved and widened after the cameras were put in.

In looking at the inconclusiveness about improved safety and the poor collection rate, Levatino said the program has not been successful.

Levatino was not alone in voicing skepticism about the cameras' value.

Councillor Olga Pedroza said she found a lengthy, detailed ruling on a red light camera appeal by state District Judge Manuel Arrieta raised serious questions about due process.

"Basically, the vehicle owner is guilty until proven innocent, and that's not the way our system of justice operates," Pedroza said.

Garza said if the city did renew the contract, clarifications would be made to the due process portions.

City Attorney Harry "Pete" Connolly said the city is confident it will win its appeal of Arrieta's ruling based on the state Supreme Court upholding the City of Albuquerque's program in similar cases.

Pedroza disagreed, saying she felt Arrieta's arguments were compelling. In a totalitarian society, law enforcement is used to control behavior, she said, but in a democratic society the principles of due process are very important.

Levatino concurred with Pedroza.

"With all due respect to the state Supreme Court, I am very concerned about the constitutionality of all this," Levatino said.

Councillor Nathan Small said he was frustrated when city officials couldn't produce recent accident data on the city's intersection since the conclusion of the NMSU study last year.

Without the data, Small said he could see no rationale to continue the program.

"Quite frankly, I find that disappointing," Small said.

Councillor Gill Sorg said improved safety should be the only reason to continue the program. Sorg said he questioned whether this is the best way to generate revenue for city safety citations has leveled out the past three years to and three times in a period of less than two an average of 1,300 citations a year at a collecweeks, he was cited for rolling stops by the cameras. The question is not on the agenda of the next regular meeting of the City Council Monday, Feb. 17, the last "action" meeting of the council before the end of the month.

Friday, February 14, 2014 Las Cruces Bulletin Clubhouse is Trost design Development vows to preserve building

Through its ongoing research into the architectural legacy of the area, the Mesilla Valley Preservation Inc. (MVP) has recently confirmed that the renowned El Paso architectural firm of Trost & Trost was responsible for the original design of the clubhouse at Las Cruces Country Club.

A full set of Trost & Trost plans for the building have been recovered. Dated 1929, the plans show the clubhouse building as it was originally conceived and built, using stylized pueblo revival design elements.

In 2013, MVP brought the Trost & Trost plans to the attention of Bob and Karen Pofahl of Park Ridge Properties LLLP. Since then, the developers have been at work integrating the building into their plans for the 110-acre site.

"MVP is thrilled to help bring this re-discovery to light", said MVP President Eric Liefeld. "Many people who grew up in Las Cruces spent time in at the clubhouse for events of one kind or another. Most will be surprised to learn of the attribution to the firm of Trost & Trost, but it is important to understand that the building faces away from Main Street, and much of the interesting architecture has always been hidden from public view. For example, the pueblo revival façade is only viewable from the south, approached from the former golf course itself. Changes to the building over time have filled in and obscured some of this architecture, but the original details are still visible and easily re-exposed."

"We're excited to have the opportunity to include a Trost & Trost building in our plans for the Park Ridge mixed-use urban village," Bob Pofahl said. "We have been working together with Robert Caldwell and members of the Las Cruces Country Club to gather historic information about the club that dates back to 1928. Not only will we be able to retain something of the site's history as a legacy for the community, but we will be able to showcase the architecture of the building from a whole new perspective. Planning is under way now for how to best integrate the building into the Park Ridge development."

MVP will feature the clubhouse on its upcoming Casas de Antaño historic home tour, and visitors will be able to view original plans and discuss rehabilitation with the developers. With a theme of "Preservation in Progress", the event will be held from 1 to 5 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 15, and will feature six active preservation projects around the Mesilla Valley. Tickets for the event can be purchased at the LCCC Clubhouse or at any of the properties on the day of the event, and people can visit properties in any order they desire.

MVP has been active in researching both surviving and lost Trost & Trost architecture seeking proof of attribution. While many communities have capitalized on their Trost & Trost architecture, many buildings by the firm in the Mesilla Valley have remained obscure or have been lost to demolition.

Students address legislators GRADS program value emphasized

Rio Grande Preparatory Institute (RGPI) students went to Santa Fe Tuesday, Jan. 28, and Wednesday, Jan. 29, to talk to legislators about the New Mexico GRADS (Graduation Reality And Dual-role Skills) program, which provides parent, life and job skills for teen parents and pregnant teens.

The teen parents attending were Ariel Mendez, Maresela La Fuente, Isaiah Meraz, Annalicia Cortez, Alfred Perez, Olivia Carrillo, Stephanie Matute, Paige Ritter and Selena Muñoz.

Doña Ana County state Reps. Doreen Gallegos and Bill McCamley spoke to the GRADS students and applauded them for staying in school and working toward their future goals. Rep. Kelly Fajardo of Valencia County also shared with the GRADS group how she too was a teen mom. "She never gave up her dream of becoming a lawyer," Matute said.

La Fuente, Mendez and Muñoz had the opportunity of speaking to a crowd in the Capitol Rotunda. La Fuente first shared her story on why GRADS is an important program to keep in our schools.

"I'm 18 years old with a two-year-old daughter named Malaia," she said. "I realized my future plans were about to change the day after I found out I was pregnant."

La Fuente also said she didn't want to be another teen statistic by dropping out of school. She chose to stay in high school despite all of her struggles and obstacles. For La Fuente, attending RGPI was the best decision she made, she said. La Fuente was introduced to the GRADS program during a difficult time.

"The program brought me to understand how important graduating is," she said. "I've learned about all the community programs I can take advantage of just to live as a scholar until I can provide the best for my daughter on my own. GRADS taught me to be confident and strive for the best, because I can achieve anything I want to become.

"We make decisions that affect our futures,

"With tears in my eyes I spoke in the Rotunda about my daughter, Makaylee, and how the GRADS program has helped me stay in school," Mendez said.

"I shared how I learned to become a better mom for my twins. I know what to do when my babies have high fevers and how to cook better," Muñoz said.

Carrillo explained how the group visited the Doña Ana County state representatives' and state senators' offices and handed out literature about the GRADS program.

"We want our legislators to keep supporting our program, so they need to know why we need it," she said. "We passed out information which had a classroom profile of all the things we do and learn in our GRADS classroom."

After the students finished sharing their stories, Ritter said she ended the session by singing a song to the legislators called, "Thank You for

Being a Friend."

"This was just a small way to say thank you for supporting our program," Ritter said.

GRADS students get a hands-on experience in leadership skills. The annual trip helps the students understand how bills and programs are approved and teaches them why it's vital to be advocates for important causes.

School-based health center opens at RGPI

La Clinica provides services to students

On Monday, Feb. 3, a school-based health center, staffed and operated by La Clinica de Familia of Las Cruces, opened at Rio Grande Preparatory Institute.

The clinic will serve students and staff and has the potential to be the primary health care provider for students and their families.

"I am excited about the access students will have to quality health care right here on our campus," school nurse Skye Armijo said. La Clinica de Familia also operates a school-based health center at Centennial High School. School-based health centers at Las Cruces and Oñate high schools are operated by the New Mexico Health Department's Adolescent Health Services. The school-based health center at Mayfield High School is operated by Ben Archer Health Center.

'The More You Know' held Dinner helps family, school participation

How do you ensure that everyone knows more? You invite them to dinner for a conversation and good company. On Dec. 17, 2013, more than 200 parents and students attended Rio Grande Preparatory Institute's first annual "The More You Know" dinner, said RGPI Principal Kathie Davis.

"All families were invited to a sit-down dinner, and all teachers were in attendance to speak to parents and students about their progress toward graduation," Davis said. "Students have a fourth-period advisory class, which functions as a homeroom-type of class. The fourth-period teacher is an adviser, mentor and advocate, and shepherds students toward graduation and 'real life.""

The evening was filled with great conversation, demonstrations on how to use the Las Cruces Public Schools StudentVUE program to track progress and a review of the current graduation requirements.

Friday, February 14, 2014 Las Cruces Bulletin APECHS earns national certificaton

Project Lead the Way program encourages STEM studies

Bv Breeze Duran

APECHS junior for the Las Cruces Bulletin

Editor's note: This story is in addition to Arrowhead Park Early College High School's page in the Feb. 7 edition of the Bulletin.

Recently, Arrowhead Park Early College High School (APECHS) received an elite certification for a national Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics (STEM) program called Project Lead the Way (PLTW), which introduces students to the fields of science, technology, engineering and mathematics

Through PLTW, students participate in real-world projects similar to those biomedical and engineers encounter. Jennifer Amis, principal of APECHS, spearheaded the PLTW program in Las Cruces Public Schools and helped bring it to APECHS.

The beauty of PLTW courses is that our kids get to experience how a concept they learned in science or math applies to real-world projects," Amis said. "Rather than sit passively and listen to a lecture, kids are building, developing and creating. It's the kind of hands-on experience that will engage more students in STEM courses – fields that they might otherwise never have considered."

There are three different PLTW classes at APECHS: Introduction to Engineering (IED), Principles of Engineering (POE), and Civil Engineering and Architecture (CEA).

Douglas Lutz, who has taught Introduction to Engineering for six years, said "IED, is a class that introduces students to the design process. Students learn strategies of brainstorming and the process to create a working prototype?

Taylor Harty-Moffatt is a ninth-grader at APECHS currently enrolled in IED. Taylor, who plans to major in law, said even though she is not planning to continue in engineering, this class has helped her with critical thinking, which will be applied in her future career.

Nina Nuñez, a PLTW teacher said: "Douglas Lutz, John Ross Tapia and I are extremely proud to be PLTW certified and are ecstatic that our students are eligible for college-level recognition, which may include college credit for select PLTW courses, scholarships and admissions preference. We are fortunate to have district and community support for such an amazing program."

Cesar Gonzalez, a junior at APECHS, and Omar Guerra, a senior, have taken all the PLTW courses taught at the school. Gonzalez and Guerra both plan to have future careers in engineering, which PLTW courses have prepared them for.

"POE has helped me better understand the career pathway I plan to pursue and also other engineering fields, even though it's not my field," Gonzalez said.

In the CEA course, Gonzalez's favorite project was the Keystone Library. In that project, students were given an existing building that has been "gutted." They were to make a library out of it.

"This project was fun," Gonzalez said. "It called for a lot of critical thinking and gave us a chance to be creative. I wanted to create a place with lots of technology and a place people would love going."

Guerra said he also believes that PLTW courses have helped him to get an idea of how his future career will be, since he plans to study civil engineering. One project that Guerra has done in POE was the bridge project. Guerra described the proj-ect as "designing the bridge, calculating the force of tension, as well as the compression of each beam, and then building a scaled model of the bridge."

John Ross Tapia, who teaches two of the three PLTW courses at APECHS, was ecstatic when the school finally got PLTW certification

"I believe that becoming a PLTW-certified school is exciting for a few reasons: It helps provide college credit for students, ensures that curriculum meets or exceeds PLTW standards, and requires college-level work," Tapia said. "Teachers and students have worked continuously at APECHS to make the PLTW experience the best possible for all involved."

Tapia is not only a PLTW teacher, he is also the sponsor for Boosting Engineering, Science, and Technology (BEST) robotics at APECHS. BEST robotics is a nonprofit organization that shows middle- and high-school students the ideas of technology and engineering through a robotics design challenge. This year, APECHS students successfully competed in a game called Gatekeeper.

"As the mentor, I was excited to see our students grow as a team and compete in certain categories," Tapia said. "This being our third year in the competition, it was enjoyable to see our seniors guide and lead, while the rest of the team came in excited and ready to work on a daily basis. I hope the seniors this year come back to help mentor in future years, and our younger students continue to grow and compete at a high level.

At the Gatekeeper competition held Oct. 19, 2013, at New Mexico State University, the APECHS BEST robotics team placed eighth in the robot completion, third in the website challenge, and first in T-shirt design.

Civil rights talk slated at NMSU Filmmaker to discuss activism after showing

The community is invited to a free evening discus-sion on civil rights and activism that will feature a private screening of "The Last White Knight," by Emmy awardwinning film producer and director Paul Saltzman, who also will speak at the event from 5:30 to 8 p.m. Friday, Feb. 21, at the Doña Ana Community College East Mesa Campus Auditorium.

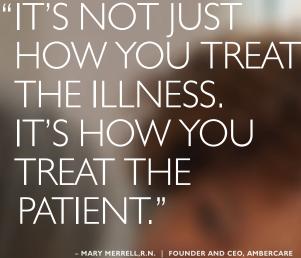

The event is part of "Exploring Equity, Community and Hope in New Mexico," a series of three community events, hosted this spring by New Mexico State University College of Education associate professor Azadeh Osanloo, who serves as the Stan Fulton Chair for the Improvement of Border and Rural Schools.

Osanloo said the gatherings are intended to support the development of new relationships and networks in southern New Mexico, particularly between educators and the community, to share current experiences and collaborate in support of success for all students.

'I hope the experiences from these events is so positive that we can keep the dialogue going via a local NMSUbased conference next spring," Osanloo said. "The Last White Knight" is Saltzman's second documentary to focus on civil rights in Mississippi.

West gives fiery speech

Philosopher, intellectual, activist, professor and author Dr. Cornel West gave an impassioned speech titled "Education Under Arrest" as the keynote address of the Doña Ana County Black Expo banquet held Saturday, Feb. 8, at New Mexico State University. The Doña Ana County Black Expo banquet was a Black History Month event sponsored by NMSU Black Programs and the New Mexico Office of African American Affairs. West, along with TV and radio personality Tavis Smiley, premiered "Education Under Arrest" as part of Travis Smiley Reports (TSR) on PBS in 2013. The episode deals with what West called the "school to prison pipeline," examining issues of poverty, race and education in the American school system. The duo regularly appears together on The Smiley & West Show, from Public Radio International.

MIA reps result in budget impasse

After more than a three-hour debate on the New Mexico Legislature House floor Friday, Feb. 7, the budget bill, HB 2, failed to pass as a result of a rare 34-34 tie vote.

At issue is where to put new money into the public schools portion of the budget. Most Democrats want it to go into the funding formula, but Gov. Susana Martinez and Republicans want to see spending increases go to targeted programs.

The tie vote fell along party lines, with the exception of. Rep. Sandra Jeff, D-McKinley County, who voted with Republicans. Two Democrats – Reps.

ARCHULETA

Phillip Archuleta of Las Cruces and Ernest Chavez of Albuquerque have missed the session due to illnesses and are considered to be reliable Democratic votes. If either of them had been in the chamber Friday, the budget bill would have passed.

Archuleta, 64, is having a difficult rehabilitation after breaking his hip and leg bone last year, according to friends of the freshman representative. Chavez, 76, is being treated for swelling believed to have been caused by a poisonous spider bite, according to Speaker Kenny Martinez.

Regents bill progresses

New Mexicans are one step closer to deciding how regents of New Mexico's state universities are picked.

House Joint Resolution 7 sponsored by Rep. Jeff Steinborn,

D-Las Cruces, is headed to the floor of the House after passing the House Voters and Elections Committee.

HJR 7 would create a constitutional amendment allowing voters to establish nominating committees to recommend qualified regent candidates to the governor for consideration. Currently, regents are not required to have any set qualifications.

he gover-

Pearce, O'Rourke announce bipartisan immigration proposal

Republican Congressman Steve Pearce of New Mexico and Democrat Congressman Beto O'Rourke of Texas met with community leaders and others in Anthony, N.M., Saturday, Feb. 8, to announce their plans to introduce legislation aimed at improving training and accountability for U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP).

"I am proud to work across the aisle with Congressman O'Rourke on another commonsense solution to our immigration system," Pearce said. "This proposal further emphasizes that together, our nation can find simple solutions to our broken system. Immigration reform is still possible this Congress - Congressman O'Rourke and I have now introduced two simple, one-step proposals that provide a strong starting point. Our bipartisan efforts focus on clear solutions to tackle part of the challenges that face our country and our communities. Together we are moving the ball forward."

The proposal, which will be developed into legislation with the close involvement of local communities, focuses on accountability for CBP, including creation of new channels for individuals to resolve issues with CBP. Furthermore, the proposal includes improved training for CBP to keep officers safe and enhance their relationships with the local communities they protect. The proposal is the result of a wide variety of constituents - ranchers, immigrants, commuters, and others - who approached the congressmen with personal stories and ideas for improving CPB operation and community interaction.

In October, Pearce and O'Rourke introduced H.R. 3431, the American Families United Act, which would allow judicial review for certain American citizens separated from their families due to immigration issues. The proposal is the second bipartisan proposal put forward by the two congressman aimed at addressing the nation's issues at the border

The New Mexico State University School for Young Children will host the Reggio Emilia Wonder of Learning Study Tour starting at 10 a.m. Friday, Feb. 21. The school is located at the NMSU Myrna's Children's Village.

The tour will include classroom visits and teacher presentations at NMSU and at the New Mexico School for the Deaf preschool program at Mesilla Elementary School. Families, early childhood educators and policymakers will have the opportunity to visit early childhood classrooms that utilize the Reggio Emilia approach. The event will conclude at O'Donnell Hall with a 5 p.m. reception and presentations from Juliette Staveley and Mary Bliss from the New Mexico Wonder of Learning Collaborative.

The Reggio Emilia philosophy was developed at infant and toddler centers and preschools in Reggio Emilia, Italy. After World War II, a young teacher, Loris Malaguzzi, worked with parents and citizens in the region to provide schools for young children.

The philosophy is a complex system that implements wellknown early childhood education theories based on the work of John Dewey, Jean Piaget, Lev Vygotsky and many more. The system is based on collaboration among children, teachers and parents; co-construction of knowledge; interdependence of individual and social learning; and the role of culture in understanding interdependence.

This event is part of a statewide tour to preview the arrival in June of The Wonder of Learning: One Hundred Languages of Children Exhibit at the New Mexico Museum of Natural History and Science in Albuquerque.

Armed robbery, shooting

Las Cruces Crime Stoppers is offering a $1,000 reward for information that helps identify the two men suspected of an early-morning armed robbery and shooting that left a hotel clerk hospitalized.

At around 1:30 a.m. Saturday, Feb. 1, two men entered the Econo Lodge hotel at 2585 S. Valley Drive and confronted the 24-year-old clerk. One of the men jumped over the front desk counter and threatened the clerk while the second man pointed a handgun at the clerk.

The two men then took the clerk to a back office and shot him once in the leg. The two suspects took an undisclosed amount of cash from the hotel and fled, last seen running toward the west side of the nearby Motel 6 on La Posada Lane. The Econo Lodge clerk was airlifted to University Medical Center of El Paso with a gunshot wound to his leg. Both suspects are believed to be Hispanic and in their 20s.

The armed suspect is believed to be about 5 feet 9 inches tall with a heavy build. He was wearing a white shirt, a dark gray zipper-front hooded jacket and blue jeans. He was armed with a semi-automatic .22 caliber handgun.

The second suspect was also said to be about 5 feet 9 inches tall but with an average build. He was wearing a light gray zipper-front hooded jacket, dark-colored pants and a mask that partially concealed his face.

Anyone with information that can help identify one or both of the suspects is asked to contact Las Cruces Crime Stoppers at 800-222-TIPS (8477) or send a tip via text message to CRIMES (274637), keyword LCTIPS.

Growing pains

Orlando Guerra is experiencing growing pains.

The Mayfield High School graduate is a redshirt freshman who has been competing in the 141-pound class for the Division II New Mexico Highlands University wrestling team.

Guerra had an 8-10 record through Jan. 24, according to the National Wrestling Coaches Association website.

GUERRA

He earned six wins, including four consecutive, during the first two weeks of the season. Three of the wins were on pins.

"It's a learning period," said Guerra, whose 7-1 loss to Colorado

Mesa University in a recent match was the biggest differential of his setbacks. "It's a pretty big step to do (college wrestling).

"It's more cut-throat. It's more of go out there and get it done.

"Everyone in college is tough."

The losses have enabled a teammate to gain the top spot in the weight class and compete in dual meets. Guerra still wrestles in the open tournaments.

"He had some good skills coming in," said head coach Doug Moses. "He's strong on top. He probably needs to improve on coming out from underneath. He's a long, rangy guy. He's got good leverage. He's got good quickness. It's the experience factor."

The adjustment is as much physical as mental.

"It's just a matter of having that mental courage to push through and get to it," Guerra said.

The coach said Guerra is on the right track.

"He's got a great attitude. He's got a great work ethic. He wants to learn, and he listens," Moses said. "He's real disciplined. He's improving. I definitely think he's got a bright future."

Trojans, Bulldawgs meet in Valentine's Day battle

By Justin Martinez For the Las Cruces Bulletin

February is rapidly coming to a close and so is the regular season for the girls' basketball in District 3-5A. Some of the Las Cruces high school teams have a great chance to compete for a championship, while others can only hope to make a big turn-around come playoff time.

The District 3-5A standings are topped by the Mayfield High School Trojans, who are enjoying an unblemished district record of 5-0. The Las Cruces High School Bulldawgs are in the second spot with a district record of 5-1, and Gadsden High School is third with a 3-2 district record. Oñate and Alamogordo high schools round out the standings with winless records in district play.

The Mayfield Lady Trojans have had an exceptional season with high expectations. Head coach George Maya has his team at a 20-3 record and an undefeated record in District 3-5A. They won their 20th game Tuesday, Feb. 11, defeating Gadsden 69-35.

Mayfield has three games remaining on its schedule. Mayfield plays at Las Cruces Friday, Feb. 14; hosts Alamogordo Tuesday, Feb. 18; and finishes up the regular season at Oñate Friday, Feb. 21.

The Lady Trojans defeated LCHS 48-35 at Mayfield Jan. 28, but in the road game against the Bulldawgs, the district lead is on the line.

The Lady Trojans have been led by senior forward Daeshianna McCants, who has her team ranked second in the state of New Mexico. McCants recently signed on to become a part of the University of Texas-El Paso women's basketball team next year.

"She is a good athlete, good forward and has a good basketball IQ" said Lady Miners head coach Keitha Adams.

LCHS has played solidly all year. With a 15-8 record on the year, the Bulldawgs find themselves right in the thick of things in District 3-5A at 5-1 after beating Oñate 61-35 Tuesday, Feb. 11. Head coach Matt Abney has his team on a three-game winning streak with four regular season games remaining.

CHS seeks district title win Hawks rise in second 4-A season with ambition

By Jeff Matthews

With an impressive multi-million dollar gymnasium and a year-old school to represent, the Centennial Hawks boys' basketball team has put itself in a position to make some serious noise this March.

The Hawks are ranked No. 2 or No. 3 in statewide 4A polls, depending on which poll you pay attention to.

The Hawks control their own destiny after a 76-47 throttling of Deming Tuesday, Feb. 11. At the midway point in the district race, Centennial is 3-0 with two blowout wins under its belt. The other blowout was a 66-18 whitewash of Chaparral Friday, Feb. 7, a game in which Centennial led 42-6 at halftime.

Centennial's only close game in district 3-4A was a 46-39 win over Santa Teresa on the road. Tuesday's star against Deming was sophomore guard Cesar Molina, who averages 14 points per game. He had 14 by the end of the first quarter, exploding for 35 points even though he sat out the last 3:37 with the game well in hand.

Molina scored the first nine points of the game for the Hawks, staking them to a 9-0 lead. It was a cushion they'd never relinquish.

Molina hit 6 of 11 three-pointers and his contribution didn't just come on offense; he had seven steals to go along with the 35 points.

"We're getting contributions from everyone," head coach Steve Heredia said. "Guys are giving us five, six, eight points a night on top of the guys with double figures."

The Hawks are now 16-7 on the season and ranked No. 3 in one of the polls. In that poll, Roswell is ranked No. 1 and Los Lunas is ranked No. 2. The Hawks have played both teams, a predistrict 59-42 home loss to 20-1 Roswell and a road victory over now Los Lunas.

Centennial has three players averaging double figures (Molina, 14 points per game, Baez 11 and Aaron Okinga 10).

"Our first five is solid," Heredia said. "We just try to get four to five guys off the bench that won't let it drop off."

Centennial is playing its second season of basketball in District 3-4A. It's been a quick rise to the top five ranking.

There was a time, before construction concluded on the new facility, the Hawks were looking for somewhere to lay their nest.

"We started at Lynn Middle School and used our own balls, our own equipment." Heredia said. "Everyone was excited about this new school. A new $150 million facility and the sports programs didn't have anything. But we couldn't really worry about it."

In a short time, the Hawks have gone from the hunted to the hunter.

It wasn't always easy.

"The hardest part by far was putting to-gether a bunch of rejects," Heredia said. "That's what I call them and they use it as motivation." The players he put together initially weren't wanted at the other schools.

The team took its lumps in its inaugural season but picked up its first marquee win last year against then No. 3 Deming. The Wildcats forced overtime in that game with a bankedin three-pointer from the corner, but the Hawks pulled away in the extra period for a 74-62 victory.

The Hawks had a big night from guard Omar Baez and sent a message the future was now.

"I honestly felt like if we would've got in the state tournament last year, we would've given a team fits," Heredia said. We were starting to figure it out and play good varsity basketball."

Heredia has multiple packages he's learned from various mentors and sources. He played his high school basketball at Las Cruces High School under Mike Carr and coached sub-varsity teams at Las Cruces under then-Bulldawg Head Coach Mike Smith, now at Hobbs.

He credits Smith for a foundation on which to start building a team, a moral foundation he called it.

As far as the X's and O's, though, he's not ashamed to say he gets them from everywhere.

"If I see something on TV that I like, I steal it," Heredia said. "If I see something in a coaches convention, I steal it. Coaches are thieves by nature and I'm no different."

Key games for the Bulldawgs will be Friday, Feb. 14, when they host Mayfield, and Tuesday, Feb. 18, when they travel to Gadsden. Junior Alina Fassa leads the team in scoring with 11.3 points and 6.6 rebounds per game.

Oñate has had a rough season, with a 7-17 record. The Lady Knights travel to Alamogordo Friday, Feb. 14, and host Mayfield Friday, Feb. 21, for their season finale. Senior Kelsie Rosales leads the team in scoring with 18.8 points per game.

In District 3-4A, the Centennial Hawks lead with a 3-0 record and a 13-10 record overall.

The Hawks defeated Deming 47-46 on the road Tuesday, Feb. 11, and play them in a return match at home Friday, Feb. 21. In between, the Hawks host Chaparral Friday, Feb. 14, and travel to Santa Teresa Tuesday, Feb. 18.

Senior Savannah Hernandez is third in scoring for District 3-4A with 10.6 points per game. Freshman Rylee Meloy, is fifth in district scoring with just under 10 points per contest.

Improve your game

Tips from the doc

Over the course of a year, I get to look at a great number of golf publications, while receiving gobs of emails dealing with all sorts of golf topics.

In late January, I always attend the PGA Merchandise Show in Orlando, Fla., and pick up interesting insights and some nice products. This week, I share with you several of my favorite golf tips, which I hope you find useful.

- Have new clubs fitted. The only sure way to get the clubs that are right for you is to have a professional fit them to you. Don't be swayed by the golf club ads on television – they're generalizations. Further, just because a tour pro plays a certain driver, doesn't mean it will be right for you. Bubba Watson plays a Ping driver that is 7.5 degrees loft with an XX-stiff shaft, and he hits it 340; you or I couldn't get that off the ground.
- Take a lesson every once in a while. If the best players in the world have teachers look at their swings and provide them advice, shouldn't you? Have a pro look at both your swing and putting and give you honest feedback and tips. It'll improve your game.
- Spend half your practice time putting and chipping. More than half your strokes are accounted for by the short game, so why don't you practice it more? Find the discipline to leave the range and devote half your time and effort to the short stuff, especially putts from 20 feet down to 3 feet.

- Use a laser rangefinder. GPS devices are really good, but the laser ones are more graphically accurate in showing you the real eyesight to the hole. Many GPS units require an annual fee for course loading, and have to be charged often, whereas the laser units just use a battery.
- Carry several new gloves in your bag. When your glove gets soggy in hot or wet weather, let it dry and put on a fresh, dry one. Extend the life of your gloves by washing them in mild detergent and by using saddle soap or mink oil.
- Use a chalk line or a string line for putting practice. There is no better way to practice putts than with a chalk line for marking a straight putt up to 8 feet, and a straight string line that allows you to use the line to bisect the ball and feel the motion of the putter.
- Add at least 15 yards to your drive. At the golf show, the big trend with drivers is more loft. The club companies have moved the center of gravity forward in the clubhead to reduce spin, but it means the ball launches lower; then they add loft.
- On chip shots near the green keep the ball low and running. Too many higher handicappers try to pitch to hard hole locations from awkward spots. Leave the flop shots to Phil Mickelson. Consider using a hybrid club to run the ball up out of the fairway to the hole.
- Replace your long irons with hybrids. You shouldn't have anything stronger than a 5 iron in your bag, perhaps a 6. Go with three hybrids, a 3 wood and a driver. That will leave you with 5 through wedge, gap and sand wedge and putter. Hybrids are a whole lot easier to hit than long irons, especially for players with swing speeds of under 100. Practice with sticks or clubs on the ground for aiming. For practice on the range, place two clubs along your target line to assist you keeping your feet, hips, arms and shoulders aiming down the line. Most tour pros use target aiming devices on the range.

Keep track of your stats. If you're serious about golf, you should know your numbers, as do successful doctors or

An Aggie sport for all

Baseball, softball, basketball, oh my

There's a whole passel of Aggie sports this weekend, pardners, and ol' Pete has the details.

Startin' Friday, Feb. 14, Rocky Ward's baseball squad opens the regular season with the first of a four-game series against St. Mary's from the West Coast Conference. The alumni came to town last weekend, with the final score 21-7.

It looks like Aggie bats will speak loudly again this season. The Aggies have three home series in a row, and it all starts this weekend with a single game Friday, Feb. 14, a doubleheader Saturday, Feb. 15, and one final game Sunday, Feb. 16. That's not all of the action on the diamond this weekend. Kathy Rodolph's squad is off to a 2-3 start and is hosting the Troy Cox Memorial Tournament.

Last weekend ended in a great way for coach Rodolph's squad, as the Aggies battled the Miners through the last game of the weekend, coming from behind to beat UTEP 8-6. The Aggies fought back in their half of the sixth loading the bases off a couple of base hits and a fielding error by the Miners.

With two outs and the bases full, Lacey Rother came to the plate and smashed her second home run of the day and first-career grand slam over the left corner to give the Aggies the win over their rivals. The Troy Cox tourney is a tribute to the former softball coach who left this Earth way too soon. The tourney field includes Texas Tech, Northern Colorado, Iowa State and Texas A&M Corpus Christi.

On Friday is another Aggie Coaches' Luncheon, featuring head men's basketball coach Marvin Menzies. Come and enjoy a good meal, talk some Aggie hoops and get ready for Saturday night's men's basketball game.

The Chicago State Cougars are the opponent and NM State is lookin' for some payback for the first meeting in the Windy City. A special halftime show will see the kids favorite "Mascot Basketball Classic" take the court. A bunch of young 'uns I know have been waitin' for this event all year.

It gives Pete a chuckle to see these strange-costumed creatures trying to be a Daniel Mullings or Chili Nephawe. It is all for fun and never fails to bring a smile.

Tickets for these and all Aggie games are available at the Pan American box office or give them a call at 646-1420. Goin' online can get you some seats, too, from the comfort of your man or woman cave. It is Valentine's Day Friday, so get your sweetheart and get your tickets and love the winning results that are coming up.

• A "great strike" was made in the Bennett-Stephenson mine at Organ by Messrs. Writer and Lexings, who had recently leased a portion of the second level and made their big find at a depth of "about 40 feet from the surface." The ore was "lead-silver and runs 70 percent lead and fifty ounces in sliver to the ton." The vein was said to have been "wide and clearly defined as far as explored."

• The Up-to-Date Restaurant, "on Main Street opposite the Catholic church," was said to be "serving good meals these days." The restaurant was reported to be under new management and serving "regular meals at 35 cents, short orders at all hours and serving everything in season."

• Mr. George Griggs, owner of Billy The Kid Museum in Old Mesilla and "author of a book or two," presented an argument concerning the etymology of the Organ Mountains, stating "a professor opined not long ago that the Organ Mountains must have taken the name from Oreja. Such an idea is ridiculous. The mountains took their name from the projections which resemble in some measure the pipes of an organ." Mr. Griggs went on to explain, "Oreja means ears. Orejon means big ears, a name given to a tribe of Indians because of their extra large ears. The state of Oregon was named for these Indians."

• Clarence Ehrhardt of State College buried his Persian cat, Ebenezer, in a 4-foot grave on the Ehrhardt lawn, in a casket lined with silk. Over the grave was placed "a monument made of marble that was originally destined for the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, D.C."

• A front page article in the Las Cruces Citizen warned against "Roundheads once again taking over England and, this time, the United States." The aural attack was said to be "quite similar to the death shrieks of the northern checkered sprucemuncher, better suited as the soundtrack of a bacchanalian orgy." The review was for the latest release by The Beatles.

• Adrian Ogaz of Garfield announced his candidacy for re-election as county commissioner of District 3. "If re-elected," Ogaz said, "I will continue to work for the growth and betterment of the county as a whole and see that the taxpayers' money is wisely spent."

• Negotiations were expected to begin with companies seeking to buy land in the city's West Mesa Air Industrial Park. Among the hopefuls were PasoTex, which hoped to open a full-service truck plaza at the Interstate 10 interchange south of Las Cruces International Airport; Bio-Tech Farms looking to build a greenhouse complex in the same area; and Michael Flynn, who wished to build a minibrewery on the site.

• A report by Robert O. Coppedge, economic development project leader NMSU's Cooperative Extension Service, showed that the population of Las Cruces was expected to grow by 8.7 percent during the five-year period from 1988-93. "Total income also likely will rise for most people," Coopedge said, "but income levels will probably remain well-below national averages."

By Jon C. Boren the Las Cruces Bulleti

While New Mexico State University's Cooperative Extension Service is well known for providing research-based education in traditional areas such as agriculture, nutrition and 4-H, Extension programs also bring powerful science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) and health-related educational programs each year to thousands of youth across New Mexico.

The focus on STEM as well as health-related education has become a key component of the Extension mission during the past decade. Integration of STEM and health topics in youth programs has enabled CES to reach more than 50,000 youth each year.

In counties across New Mexico, Extension programs include STEM and health through non-traditional, hands-on education. For example, STEM education is an important part of New Mexico's 4-H experiential project menu. This year alone, 54,392 New Mexico youth enrolled in 4-H projects that covered the biological sciences, environmental science, engineering, agricultural science, health and nutrition and others. The projects gave youth foundational science concepts, offered decision-making opportunities, built responsibility, created platforms for innovative thinking, provided socialization around learning and emphasized team building.

STEM is the name of the game for two special 4-H clubs in Bernalillo County that are solely focused on robotics. Their program revolves around the FIRST LEGO League, a national program that culminates in an annual theme-based competition. The Bernalillo County teams recently competed for the first time in the FIRST LEGO League State Tournament in Albuquerque. The competition brought out the best in innovative solutions to a stated challenge, and required youth to learn and apply computer programming skills, computer research techniques and innovative design approaches.

Extension's annual Valles Caldera Youth Ranch Management Camp in northern New Mexico emphasizes science-based concepts, advanced technologies and applied skills used expand and improve on commercial beef cattle operations to increase long-term sustainability, conservation stewardship, beef production management, business production, environmental impacts and economic challenges. Camp participants learn about natural resource stewardship, and wildlife and fiscal management. They are challenged with college-level curricula to develop a ranch management plan. They learn ranch technologies, range management techniques, the importance of co-existing with wildlife and how to estimate wildlife populations. They practice methods for improving wildlife habitats, marketing cattle, fabricating a beef carcass into retail cuts, horse training, shooting skills and the importance of ranching in today's world.

The Memorial Middle School Agricultural Extension and Education Center in Las Vegas, N.M., is a youth science center emphasizing participatory learning and direct experience education. Its mission is to develop a teaching and learning model of excellence for agriculture and natural resource sciences that complements in-class instruction by enhancing content through hands-on learning opportunities. The center engages students in research and experiments pertaining to agriscience and natural resource sciences.

In northeastern New Mexico, a school district annually hosts the Outdoor Classroom and Earth Day Events in which Extension agents provide major educational assistance and expertise. The Outdoor Classroom is a 10-acre plot complete with native pasture, walking paths, amphitheater and riparian areas designed to teach basic and advanced instruction in wildlife management, natural resource conservation, ecosystem enhancement and agriculture. Each year, more than 1,500 youth experience hands-on learning opportunities that develop an appreciation for the natural world and concepts to help them shape their future.

The NMSU Media Productions' awardwinning Learning Games Lab on the NMSU campus creates research-based educational games and media to teach youth about science, technology, math, nutrition and health (including obesity prevention). During research sessions with target audiences, youth game lab consultants evaluate products for usability and learn game creation, programming and media skills. Current projects include games and animations for science and math, food safety initiatives and an interactive instructional designers, videographers, artists, animators and writers have partnered with more than 40 universities, agencies and nonprofits on projects funded by the National Science Foundation, U.S. Department of Agriculture, the U.S. Department of Education, the State of New Mexico and private funders. They have 20 years' experience producing innovative media on many platforms. The group has created content for children, youth, college students, the research community, policy makers, adult learners and workers in various industries. Materials have been developed in various languages, including English, Španish, Chinese and Navajo.

As the New Mexico Cooperative Extension Service moves into the future, we anticipate our role in bringing essential STEM-related educational programs to the youth of New Mexico will become an even more vital focus of our work. As we continue to build productive partnerships in school districts and communities across the state, we also will look for opportunities to expand and improve our programs to uniquely meet the needs of youth in our state.

The work we do in STEM-related education mirrors our overall mission of providing information and education and encouraging the application of research-based knowledge in response to issues affecting individuals, youth, families, agricultural and natural resource industries, and rural and urban communities of New Mexico. We must keep local needs at the forefront and our success will largely be measured on how well we listen, respond to our clientele's needs and bring about change that improves the quality of life for New Mexicans.

Jon Boren is associate dean and director of the Cooperative Extension Service at New Mexico State University.

Lola's family would like to thank Petra Espinoza of Amber Care Hospice of the love and care she provided for our mom.

Students make banner for Jewell Desert Hills children also lead Pledge of Allegiance Kindergarten teacher Michelle Estrada's students at Desert Hills Elementary School made a banner for U.S. Department of the Interior Secretary Sally Jewell to display during her Jan. 24 visit to Las Cruces.

The banner hung on the wall behind the podium at the Ramada Palms and Jewell joined U.S. Sens. Tom Udall and Martin Heinrich for a public meeting on the Organ Mountains and other areas in Doña Ana County the two New Mexico senators are proposing for national monument status. (See related story on page A7.)

Desert Hills Elementary fourth-grader Lizzie Briske and kindergarten student Willie Briske led the Pledge of Allegiance at the meeting.

"Thanks to Mrs. Estrada and her kindergarten class for making such a delightful banner to welcome Secretary Jewell to Las Cruces and to the two students for helping us begin the meeting with the Pledge of Allegiance," Udall said.

The public meeting, hosted by Udall and Heinrich, was held to discuss "the community's vision to preserve, protect and enhance some of the public lands located in Doña Ana County," according to a U.S. Department of the Interior media advisory. Jewell, 57, is a native of London and the former president and CEO of REI, a Seattle-based retailer of outdoor gear.

Interior Secretary Sally Jewell is led in the Pledge of Allegiance by Desert Hills Elementary School kindergartener Willie Briske and fourth-grader Lizzie Briske as U.S. Sen. Tom Udall holds the microphone at a public meeting Jan. 24 in Las Cruces.

Outside the Enterprise Center in Downtown Las Cruces, small nuggets of sparkling green

It was not a neutral crowd.

A number of those assembled Friday, Feb. 7, on the sidewalk at 125 N. Main St. had been brainstorming, researching and strategizing for years to find a way to keep glass bottles and jars out of the landfill. They wanted to be the first to see a demonstration of glass recycling, which will make its official debut April 27, when Las Cruces celebrates Earth Day at Young Park.

The unique N.M. challenge

In her talk at the Las Green Chamber of Commerce First Friday get-together prior to the demonstration, Pegoda said glass recycling was a long time coming because there are no large-scale, end markets in New Mexico for the crushed glass, called cullet.

Because cullet is heavy, the cost of shipping it to a market would be prohibitive.

Pegoda said the glass collected here could be used for landscaping in public parks, pipe bedding or products created by cottage industries and artists.

It could even become a daily cover for the local landfill, she said.

"We want to know what ideas you can come up," she said. "If you can use it for your small business and help the economy, that is our best option. We want it to go to a good use, not just end up in storage.

"We want to create a quality product."

Old glass means new business

Where the Green Chamber comes in is to look at glass recycling for its economic opportunity," said Carrie Hamblen, executive director of the chamber. "It wouldn't mean 100 jobs, but it would create jobs."

Hamblen called glass recycling "one of the most wanted recycling programs in the city." Pegoda said the SCSWA, a joint venture of the city and county, in June created a sub-committee to identify the most cost-effective ways to get glass recycling into the community and get the used glass re-used.

County Commissioner Wayne Hancock, City Councillor Miguel Silva, environmental geologist Mary Canavan, Nancy Simmons, Hamblen, SCSWA Director Patrick Peck, Terri McBrayer and Pegoda serve on the committee.

Members of the committee have visited several of the 11 New Mexico communities that recycle glass to learn about the equipment they use and what they do with the material they crush

Instead, area residents will bring their glass to the SCSWA sites at the old Sonoma Ranch landfill, 555 Sonoma Ranch Blvd., and at the 2865 W. Amador Ave. recycling center.

"The reason we're starting at these two locations is because they're both manned sites," Pegoda said.

Staff will be on hand to answer recyclers' questions.

"Until we develop a culture of doing it the right way, separating the glass by color, there will be someone there to help," Pegoda said.

Separate bins will be provided to collect metal lids and corks, which can be recycled, she said.

Although the Glass Gator used for demonstrations can't handle metal lids, the larger machine that will go into service at the Amador Avenue location should be able to Aguilar said the theme also calls for "reflecting on the past and acknowledging what got us here," which will be a part of the message of keynote speaker Michael Connor, who was raised in Las Cruces and will share some of his early memories.

Connor is commissioner of the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, Aguilar said.

During his tenure, Connor has led the bureau's efforts to promote the sustainable use of water to effectively address current and future challenges associated with water supply. He served in the Department of the Interior from 1993 to 2001, and was director of the cabinet secretary's Indian Water Rights Office.

From 2001 until his appointment as commissioner, Connor served as counsel to the U.S. Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, where he managed legislation for both the Bureau of Reclamation and the U.S. Geological Survey and handled Native American issues that were within the Energy Committee's jurisdiction.

A chemical engineering graduate of New Mexico State University, Connor received his J.D. degree from the University of Colorado Law School. He is a brother of Bill Connor of Las Cruces and El Paso Electric Co.

In addition to Connor's talk, special moments during the banquet will include the annual awards presentation, which this year will feature a new honor: Amigo of the Year, recognizing the service of the chamber's community ambassadors.

Other categories in which awards will be given are: Business of the Year, Nonprofit of the Year, Citizen of the Year, Volunteer of the Year and Bi-Lingual Teacher of the Year. New members will be inducted into the Las Cruces Hall of Fame, which the Hispanic Chamber created in 2013.

Santa Teresa water projects announced

New Mexico Lt. Gov. John Sanchez and the Camino Real Regional Utility Authority announced new water/wastewater infrastructure projects for the Santa Teresa-Sunland Park region.

Southern New Mexico's economy is in a rapid growth mode, due to the influx of companies that have located in the region. To support the growth, Sanchez announced that Gov. Susana Martinez has requested that the Legislature invest 60 percent of its 2014 capital outlay, or $112 million dollars, in water infrastructure projects.

For the Santa Teresa-Sunland region, this means the following:

- $3.3 million to add transmission lines and wells in the Santa Teresa industrial parks
 - $3.7 million for a new wastewater treatment plant to serve the industrial and residential growth

Sanchez said investing in these projects will allow southern Doña Ana County to continue generating new economic development projects that create good jobs for New Mexicans.

Late spring water release planned Conservation districts review their supply

The Elephant Butte Irrigation District is planning to release water in late spring, adjusting allotments according to reported water supplies.

"We're considering releasing 5 inches of water, possibly in late May or early June if the district has enough water," head EBID ditch rider Ricardo Bejarano said.

The irrigation district will, however, have to adjust to the water outlook.

The early allotment is based on the suggestion of Phillip King, EBID hydrology consultant.

"But there's nothing definite now about the water release," Bejarano said.

The EBID and El Paso Water Conservation District 1 and water commissioners representing New Mexico, Texas and Colorado are reviewing the water status to determine the final allocation, Bejarano said.

One report they'll be checking is the amount of water on hand in Elephant Butte Reservoir, which currently is 14 percent of capacity, or 340,180 acre-feet, state climatologist David DuBois said. "The precipitation (outlook) for "The precipitation (outlook) for February, March and April is 40 percent below normal," DuBois said. "Most mountain snow packs are less than 50 percent of average for this time of year."

The snow pack water-content equivalent in the upper reaches of the Rio Grande is 70 percent of normal.

"There hasn't been a significant snow storm north of Santa Fe for 60 days," DuBois said.

Seven companies consider locating to Doña Ana County

By Alta LeCompte

Midway into its fiscal year, the Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance (MVEDA) has a lot in common with the Oscar nominees.

Giving a status update at the midyear meeting Tuesday, Feb. 11, at the Hotel Encanto de Las Cruces, MVEDA CEO Davin Lopez reported that the work has been done to woe seven big businesses to Doña Ana County. To date, the results are encouraging.

"Seven projects are in the pipeline where we are finalists with one or two other communities," Lopez said. "We're very, very positively positioned going into the second half of the year."

If all seven prospects materialized, the county would stand to gain some 2,000 jobs, he said.

In reality, even when they have finalized to two communities, we have at best a 50-50 chance," Lopez added.

Now, like the Oscar nominees, MVEDA can wait for the results.

However, Lopez and staff aren't just waiting. They are working to make sure the right resources are in place to meet prospects' needs. Those efforts include lobbying for legislation to ensure a competitive economic climate in the region as well as talking up the importance of having buildings available for companies to move into.

Lopez urged members to join MVEDA in support of the Economic Development Utility Rate Bill to make rates in southern New Mexico competitive with those of neighboring El Paso, which has an advantage in its building costs and the perception of its labor pool.

"El Paso has a 15 percent advantage over New Mexico in electric rates," he said. "Each and every project that looks at us looks at El Paso. We need to be competitive on operating costs."

Also on the watch list at the Legislature are the Job Council Bill, which would provide $10 million to LEDA (the Local Economic Development Act fund) for a closing fund that could be used to put negotiations over the top with a prospective new business, a $3 million job training bill and $1.5 million for the New Mexico Partnership Bill.

Lopez stressed the importance of having buildings available for prospects to occupy. He said Doña Ana County is almost out of available industrial/commercial properties, and MVEDA is talking with the city, county and developers "so we are ready when people are looking at this area."

Among the bright spots in MVEDA results during the first half of the fiscal year are: creation of 358 jobs, close to the target for the year of 365; and $8.8 million in payroll generated, a significant percent of the $11.8 million goal for the full year - and an indicator higher skilled, better paying jobs are being created.

At the Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance midyear update Tuesday, Feb. 11, the organization honored founding members, including Michael "Mickey" Clute, president of GenCon Corp. Holding a plaque to mark the occasion, Clute posed with Kiel Hoffman, chair of the Board of Directors for MVEDA, and Davin Lopez, president and CEO of MVEDA.

The National Science Foundation's Center for Research Excellence in Science and Technology (CREST) has awarded Enrico Pontelli a five-year grant to develop a broad culture of smart grids at New Mexico State University.

Pontelli, a computer science professor and department head in the College of Arts and Sciences, is partnering with researchers in other disciplines across the university to study the use of smart grids - electrical units that employ digital information technology to predict patterns and help improve sustainability.

"Smart grids represent the future of the electrical generation and distribution infrastructure, and present a number of challenges that the research community is trying to address," Pontelli said. "We have a great amount of talent at NMSU that can contribute to advancing the state-of-the-art in smart grid technologies. We aim at becoming known as a leading research institution in this area.

The $5 million grant will be used to launch research through the NMSU Center for Research Excellence in Bioinformatics and Computational Biology, which will focus on intelligent technologies for smart grids.

This National Science Foundation CREST award is a tremendous achievement," said Christa Slaton, dean of NMSU's College of Arts and Sciences. "It recognizes Dr. Pontelli's diligence in pursuing a vision for smart grid research that cuts Pontelli likened smart grids to solar panels, which allow consumers to be producers of energy as well as users.

"Right now we are still relying very much on big power plants to produce electricity. People believe this model is not sustainable," he said. "Power plants have to overpro-duce to ensure they meet the needs in worst case scenarios. They don't have an idea of when electricity is really needed.

"Smart grids try to make a directional relationship between power plants and customers by predicting when customers need electricity. If they had that information, production would be more efficient?

One of the benefits of smart grids is a decrease in prices, as researchers create a market place that currently doesn't exist.

The Army has already begun to make strides with smart grids as they develop prototypes in new military installations.

"They want to be as self sufficient as possible. In cit-ies, we need bigger models," said Pontelli, who already has years of experience in intelligent systems. This, however, is his first endeavor in smart grid technology. Pontelli hopes NMSU will become an innovator in the smart grid industry and the first institution in the Southwest to offer training programs and a graduate degree track.

"We're very excited about this grant," he said. "There are a lot of statistics that show that the demand for people with that kind of expertise is very high and going to explode in the next few years. It's going to be a very marketable skill and we want to help meet that demand with our programs."

Pontelli and Satish Ranade, electrical engineering department head, will act as co-directors of the center, with a faculty steering committee consisting of Sukumar Brahma, electrical engineering; Jay Misra, computer science; William Yeoh, computer science, Huiping Cao, computer science; Son Tran, computer science; and Susan Brown, director of the NMSU STEM outreach center.

Las Cruces spirit recognized in Santa Fe

MainStreet program cited for volunteers

Bulletin Staff Report

At a statewide MainStreet Leadership Network meeting, the Downtown Las Cruces Partnership (DLCP) recently received kudos as the program with the most volunteer hours.

"We were recognized at the convention as the program with the most overall volunteer hours – 3,000 – about 130 volunteers annually, said Carrie La Tour, executive director of the DLCP. "That's more than any other program in the state, even Albuquerque."

La Tour attributed the local program's record to its overall strength, which makes possible the recruitment of dedicated board members and event volunteers.

"The number of people who give their time shows how strong this program is," she said.

SalsaFest! accounts for about 80 volunteers each year.

FirstLight Federal Credit Union is a major supporter, and about 60 employees volunteer their time each year, La Tour said.

The Junior ROTC from Mayfield, Oñate and Las Cruces high schools turn out to work as well.

"They set up and tear down tents, bring water to participants and deliver supplies."

Board members are volunteers who serve all year long.

"This is a working board. They work a lot," La Tour said.

She said the state economic development department was very happy with the results of an economic impact study of MainStreet program in communities across New Mexico conducted by PlaceEconomics of Washington, D.C. The study covers the evolution of MainStreet programs in New Mexico from 1985 to 2013. DLCP has been a member of the program, which is a subsidiary of the National Trust for Historic Preservation, since 2003. La Tour said the report validates the state program, an important consideration in securing funding.

"The Legislature can feel confident investing in the program," she said.

"We have always known the New Mexico MainStreet is a first-class program that has paid tremendous dividends to New Mexico's economy and now we have the hard data that presents the case," said Economic Development Cabinet Secretary Jon Barela. "The report shows that New Mexico taxpayers are seeing a return on their investments and business and local governments benefit greatly from that investment."

The final report, "In the New Mexico Tradition – The Impacts of MainStreet 1985-2013" finds that New Mexico MainStreet has experienced above-average gains among MainStreet programs nationwide.

Key findings include:

- Since the beginning of the program in 1986, for every $1 the State of New Mexico invested in the MainStreet program, MainStreet districts saw private sector investment of $21.89 in building rehabilitation and $22.55 in new construction.
- Since 1986 through July 2013 New Mexico MainStreet communities saw a gain of 3,200 net new businesses and nearly 11,300 net new jobs.
- In spite of the recession, in the last six years 157 buildings were purchased in MainStreet districts for a total of more than $22,000,000.

Nationwide between 2007 and 2011, for every 100 businesses that opened, 103 closed. Over that same period in New Mexico MainStreet districts, for every 100 businesses that opened, only 37 closed. Conservatively, an additional $5.1 million each year is going to local governments through property taxes on the investment in rehabilitation and new construction by the private sector in MainStreet districts.

Capital outlay projects have a major catalytic effect on downtowns.

Impacts reported as a result of these projects include:

- 100 percent reported individual building improvements and new businesses opening
- 82 percent reported higher attendance at events
- 73 percent reported reduced vacancy levels
 64 percent reported increased pedestrian traffic

Of the most recent new businesses in New Mexico MainStreet communities:

- 26 percent are restaurants, cafes, bars and brewpubs
- 13 percent are arts related
- 13 percent are recreation, sports and personal health (spas, exercise studios, etc.)

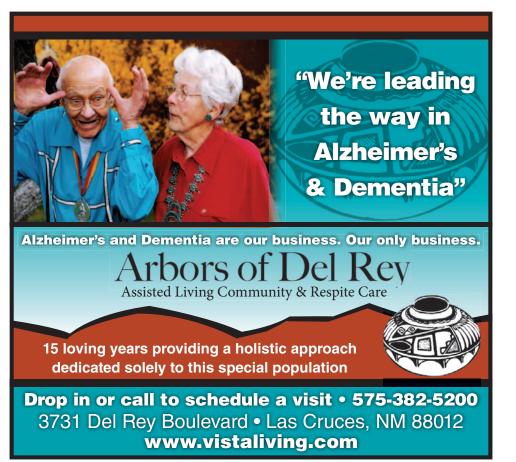

Even though restaurants are a high risk/high failure rate business, there were twice as many new restaurants opened than closed in the last year in MainStreet districts.

New Mexico MainStreet (NMMS) is a grassroots economic development program of the New Mexico Economic Development Department. The program was created by the Legislature in 1984 to assist communities revitalize their traditional commercial districts.

Currently NMMS works with 27 local MainStreet programs throughout New Mexico to create an economically viable business environment while preserving local, cultural and historic resources.

The National Main Street Center Inc., a subsidiary of the National Trust, assesses the performance and initiatives of state MainStreet programs throughout the United States.

MFA offers lucrative financing

Benefits go to buyers who locate in targeted areas

Gary Sandler's Real Estate Connection

The New Mexico Mortgage Finance Authority (MFA) is best known for providing down payment assistance to first-time buyers. They do much more than that, however.

In addition to providing tax credits and other financing for the development of affordable rental housing, they also provide special financing for buyers who purchase homes in economically distressed neighborhoods.

According to Teri Baca, homeownership representative for MFA, targeted areas "are those in which a large percentage of the residents of a particular census tract earn far less than the area median income."

In New Mexico, the U.S. Census Bureau has identified 25 such tracts in 11 counties. Doña Ana County leads the pack with seven.

The program is designed to incentivize firsttime and repeat buyers to purchase homes located in economically challenged areas, which is known to increase pride of ownership and help stabilize and/or raise home values.

What sort of incentives does MFA offer to entice buyers to purchase in these areas? First and foremost, buyers don't have to be first-timers. Current and former homeowners are eligible as long as they meet the basic loan qualifications and MFA program guidelines and occupy the home as their primary residence.

Loan types include conventional, Federal Housing Administration, Veterans Affairs and U.S. Department of Agriculture, all of which are offered at the lowest rate MFA had available during the preceding 12 months.

Borrowers may also be eligible to receive down payment and closing cost assistance in the form of a grant or low-interest-rate second mortgage. In addition, higher household income limits allow a family of four to earn as much as $75,880 annually and still qualify for the program. Homes valued at $298,155 and less are eligible for financing.

The seven areas targeted for incentives in Doña Ana County include Las Cruces, Anthony, N.M., Sunland Park and various surrounding areas.

The accompanying map outlines the two targeted areas located in Las Cruces, which are generally bounded by Mesilla Street on the west, Solano Drive on the east, North Main Street on the north and Idaho Avenue on the south.

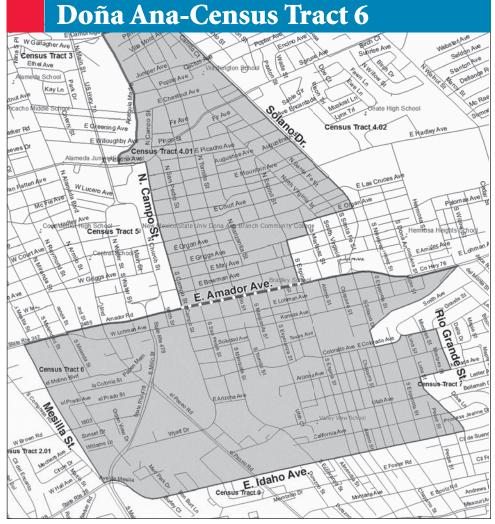

This terrific program provides homebuyers with the opportunity to purchase a home in an up- and-coming area, while utilizing low down payment and below market, fixed rate financing in the process.

Sounds like a win-win to me.

See you at closing.

Fountain Theatre reopens after extensive renovations

By Zak Hansen

For more than a century, the Fountain Theatre in Mesilla has been an epicenter of entertainment for the small, historic village, changing hands and passing down the lineage of one of Mesilla's founding families and carrying the traditions of art as entertainment.

Throughout the past 25 years, the Mesilla Valley Film Society, which makes its home inside the historic building, has brought independent, art house and foreign films to the Mesilla Valley – but for the month of January, the historic theater's silver screen remained dark.

On Friday, Feb. 7, however, the Fountain Theatre reopened its doors remodeled, renovated and better than ever, and on that day, reinstated its place in the history of the Town of Mesilla.

To mark the historic silver anniversary of the MVFS at the Fountain Theatre, Mesilla Mayor Nora Barraza proclaimed Feb. 7 to be hereafter known as Mesilla Valley Film Society Day in the small, vibrant town just west of Las Cruces.

After a full month and more than $60,000 in renovations, the Fountain Theatre is again equipped to bring the finest alternative films to the area - and to look great doing so.

Building owner Tom Hutchinson, who, along with his wife, Jerean, also owns and operates La Posta de Mesilla, which shares the Fountain Theatre's northern wall, closed the theater through the first month of 2014 to make time for the extensive renovations. These upgrades include a new heating and cooling system; new, beautiful and efficient LED ceiling and track lighting; a repainted ceiling, stage and floor; refinished and stained hardwood flooring; paving stones placed in the entryway; repair, painting and tiling in the restrooms; and the return of a bar area, allowing the theater to serve its patrons beer and wine during a show.

Painstaking restoration of the theater's historic murals was also undertaken, with crumbling segments of the ancient adobe restored and missing pieces of the picture repainted. The murals date back to the 1920s, when Albert Jennings Fountain Jr., son of Col. Albert Jennings Fountain, adorned them with images of his father first entering the Mesilla Valley.

In fact, the history of the Fountain Theatre is almost as old and illustrious as Mesilla itself, having first opened to entertain the town's residents at the beginning of the 20th century.

After purchasing the building, Albert Fountain Jr. began to produce plays, light opera, vaudeville shows and lantern slide shows on the theater's stage. In 1912, the building was modified to accommodate films and was renamed the "Fountain of Pleasure." With only silent films available, Albert Fountain Jr., his wife and daughters supplied live music for the films.

The films of the era were intertitled only in English, so Albert Fountain Jr. translated the title cards into the first language of his primarily Spanish-speaking audience. It's said his son, Henry, ran the projector, which was unreliable at best. When the projector went down, the Fountain's musical accompanist was forced to entertain guests with music and songs until it was repaired.

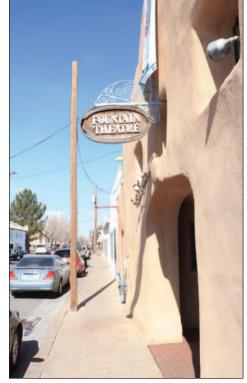

In 1929, the theater was bought by Vicente Guerra, who, with the changing times, equipped the theater to screen "talkies." After just nine years, though, Guerra foreclosed on the building and it was sold to Albert Fountain III, finding its way back into the hands of its founding family.

Motion pictures and musical performances were frequent during the "Golden Age" of American talking pictures, until 1951, when the theater went dark for a period of 12 years, left vacant or used only for storage.

In 1963 – or 1964 – Albert Fountain III ceded control of the theater to his son, Arthur Fountain, who in turn lent the space to the newly formed Las Cruces Community Theatre. The company called the Fountain Theatre its home until 1977, when the LCCT relocated to Downtown Las Cruces.

Artie Fountain, son of Arthur, then borrowed the building from his father and used the space to show movies and, sometimes, live performances by the New Mexico State University Theatre Arts Department.

This continued until 1989, when he rented the building to MVFS, which began to screen the foreign, independent and alternative films the Fountain Theatre makes available today.

Las Cruces Bulletin photo by Zak Hansen The historic Fountain Theatre in Mesilla reopened Friday, Feb. 7.

Showtimes at the Fountain Theatre are 7:30 p.m. nightly, with matinees at 1:30 p.m. Saturdays and 2:30 p.m. Sundays.

A collection of skulls of individuals of varying ancestry – Asian, African, Australian Aboriginal, European and Mexican-American – will be on display as part of "The Skull Beneath the Skin," opening Friday, Feb. 21, at the New Mexico State University Museum, located inside Kent Hall, 1280 E. University Ave.

Featured Exhibits: NMSU Museum The stories of our lives NMSU Museum debuts two diverse exhibits

By Zak Hansen

Opening Friday, Feb. 21, the New Mexico State University Museum, located inside Kent Hall, 1280 E. University Ave., will premiere two new exhibits, "The Skull Beneath the Skin: Forensic Anthropology of the Human Cranium" and "Dress Code: Cultural Expression through Printed Cloth of East Africa."

At first glance, these two exhibits – one of human remains, the other of brightly colored fabrics from Kenya and Tanzania – seem to bear little in common, but digging deeper, each tells of the universality of the human experience, the ways we tell our stories both while alive and after we're gone.

"The Skull Beneath the Skin: Forensic Anthropology of the Human Cranium" features more than 35 skulls, each revealing the varying effects of sex, violence, disease, developmental condition, age, ancestry and cultural modification.

One section, showing the effects and changes aging has on the size and shape of the cranium, includes six human skulls from various stages of life: neonatal (31 weeks old), 5 years old, 11 to 12 years old, adult and elderly. Another, demonstrating the cranial differences in descent and ancestry, displays skulls of individuals of Mexican-American, European, Australian Aboriginal, Asian and African lineages, each with their own, unique distinguishing features.

Further along, visitors will get a look at the skulls of those born with congenital anomalies, including encephaly, cyclopia, scaphocephaly (a long, narrow skull shape cause by the premature fusion of the sagittal suture) and Down syndrome.

Diseases both infectious and otherwise figure into the next segment of "The Skull Beneath our Skin," which includes the skulls of people who suffered from a variety of maladies including scurvy, tuberculosis and meningioma – a cancer of the membrane separating brain from skull – as well as some more exotic, including a rare form of syphilis that eats away at bone marrow and an example of leishmaniasis, a rare disease caused by parasites transmitted though the bite of the African sand fly.

Cultural practices that artificially alter the shape of the cranium are also investigated, and displayed skulls include those of individuals who have undergone cradle boarding and skull binding as well as trephination, a form of surgical intervention in which a hole is either drilled or scraped through the skull, used to release either cranial pressure or, in some cultures, evil spirits or demons trapped in a patient's brain.

The final component of "The Skull Beneath the Skin" deals with violence, and features casts of skulls of individuals who perished in violent ways. On display are crania including a Civil War soldier killed by a musket shot, one dealt a deathblow with a machete and dumped at sea, small- and large-caliber gunshot trauma, blunt force trauma – impact from an 18-wheeler, to be exact – and, perhaps most relevant to our own region, the skull of a Spanish conquistador found in New Mexico with the remnants of an axe buried in his skull.

Vastly different is the museum's other opening exhibit, "Dress Code: Cultural Expression through Printed Cloth of East Africa." The exhibit features more than 50 kanga, or women's cloth garments from Kenya and Tanzania, used for a variety of utilitarian purposes – and one a bit more intangible.

The cloths – stamped with bright, vibrant colors in stunning and beautiful patterns – also feature interesting idioms and phrases, a way for women in east Africa to express feelings and opinions they would otherwise be forced to keep to themselves. The text printed on this kanga, a women's cloth garment from Kenya and Tanzania, reads "asiyekujua hakuthamini," which translates roughly to, "He who does not know you does not value you." More than 50 kanga will be displayed during the NMSU Museum's "Dress Code: Cultural Expression through Printed Cloth of East Africa."

Many of the phrases translate across lingual and cultural lines easily – examples include "nazi mbovu harabu ya nzima," which translates roughly to "a bad coconut renders good ones bad," not far off from our own "one bad apple spoils the whole bunch" – while others seem much more esoteric to our Western ears and eyes.

Some of the phrases displayed in the museum's extensive collection of exquisite, ornately decorated fabrics translate to "a nosy person never gets a vacation," "when you hate me, it only makes my hatred grow" and "a cigarette picked up from the street does not taste sweet" – a direct taunt aimed at a female rival or competitor.

The cloths are used as garments – skirts, blouses, head wraps – as well as prayer cloths or mats and bindles, among other everyday uses, but they also serve to give those who often go unheard a voice, a way to speak up silently.

Taken together – skulls and cloths – both "Dress Code" and "The Skull Beneath the Skin" serve to illustrate something of the universality of human experience, telling stories we cannot necessarily speak for ourselves. What you wear can tell one story about who you are, how you feel and what you value while you still walk the Earth; what you leave behind can tell who you were, where you came from, how you lived and how you died long after you're gone.

An opening reception will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday, Feb. 21, and the exhibits will remain on display through May.

FILM FESTIVAL SEEKS PROMO SHORTS

In its continuing efforts to provide opportunities to film students in the Las Cruces area, the White Sands International Film Festival (WSIFF) announces the 2014 WSIFF Student Promo Film Contest. To enter, students are asked to write and produce a 30or 60-second promotional video for the WSIFF, including the official event logo, event dates, location and website. The deadline for contest entries is 5 p.m. Saturday, March 15. No late entries will be accepted.

"This is a fantastic opportunity for students at all levels of the filmmaking process," said WSIFF Artistic Director David Salcido. "Not only will it provide an occasion for them to showcase their work in a public setting, it will also allow them to put their learning to use at a professional level. One of the biggest complaints most film students have is not being able to use their skills in a real world setting. This contest provides the opportunity for them to do just exactly that, while at the same time broadening the WSIFF's reach within the community." Entries are encouraged from students in film or production programs, or students in film or production programs, or students who are interested in independent film production. Winners of the contest will be selected at three levels – Middle School, High School and College – and will have their shorts regularly screened at Allen Theatres to promote the upcoming WSIFF, Sept. 3-7.

In addition, each contest winner will receive two VIP all-access passes to the event, which includes free admission to all films, workshops, parties and meet and greet events. For full details and entry forms, visit www.wsiff.com.

WSIFF, this year celebrating its 10th anniversary, brings together films from across the state of New Mexico and around the world to showcase the skills and talents of amateur and professional filmmakers alike. The festival is a five-day event running with film screenings, workshops and VIP parties. For more information about WSIFF, visit www.wsiff.com or contact Helping Hands Event Planning at 522-1232

Las Cruces Bulletin The road to reinvention

Playwright Tom Smith's 'Aunt Raini' delves into questions of identity

By David Salcido Las Cruces Bulletin

Identity. It's an issue we all struggle with; sometimes for our entire lives. Who we are and how we are perceived by others becomes a very important element in our day-to-day social interactions. It can color our world view and, in some extreme cases, can even affect future generations.

These are some of the elements at play in Tom Smith's latest incarnation of his decade-long journey into the life of infamous director, photographer and actress Leni Riefenstahl. Though only loosely based on the historic persona, his recently completed play, "Aunt Raini," hinges on the issues that made Riefenstahl such a controversial figure.

"I believe the play is about how we choose and construct our own identity and whether or not society has the right to impose on us how we should be remembered," Smith said. "I find myself, as a playwright, really gravitating toward that."

Smith, department head of New Mexico State University Theatre Arts and artistic director of the American Southwest Theatre Company, began working on "Aunt Raini" in late 2003, the year Riefenstahl died. Although he admits he's not usually a fan of documentaries, he found himself engrossed in a television program he stumbled upon one evening and was instantly taken by the subject matter: Riefenstahl. More importantly, he was taken by her story.

"I became really intrigued with the bigger idea of how we can construct our own histories and how long we should be penalized for things we've done in our past," he said. "I decided that she was such a theatrical person in real life, it made sense to try and make her a theatrical person for the stage."

So began the journey. Over the ensuing years, "Aunt Raini" went through several incarnations, including work-shopping it across the country at a reading series in Boca Raton, Fla., a production at the Black Box Theatre in Las Cruces and another run at SUNY-Fredonia in New York. Through those runs, Smith said the play underwent "massive transformations," including the loss of one character and a stronger definition of the title role.

"I did a ton of research," he said. "Even when I wasn't working on the play, I was interested in new information that was being released on her. I think that the rewrites over the last 10 years have gone from being based on her life and heading more strongly toward it being about her life."

Still, it wasn't until the play was added to the 2013-14 season for NMSU Theatre Arts that the real work began. In fact, Smith said he feels it has been the most difficult of all his plays to write.

"I feel like when I first wrote it, I wasn't quite at an age where I understood the two protagonists opposing points of view," he said. "I was a little too close in age to the younger generation in the play and felt that the play skewed a little too much toward her. I always knew that the play needed to have two really strongly opposing points of view. Now that I'm 10 years older, I get 10 more years of wisdom and 10 more years of feeling that I can understand the other argument. I've never felt, before this production, that the play was really saying what I wanted it to say in the way I wanted to say it. I feel that I have finally gotten to that point.

The transformation of his play complete, Smith has stacked the deck to present it at its best in this production, collaborating with another local playwright, Mark Medoff, in the allimportant role of director. Cast in the play are Claire Koleske as gallery owner Katherine, Aaron Hernandez as Katherine's boyfriend Joel and Josh Horton in the role of student director. All three NMSU theater majors are joined on stage by professional guest artist from Chicago Stephanie Monday.

To further enhance the experience and more fully encompass the range of themes within the play, as well as introduce Riefenstahl to the uninitiated, Smith has also collaborated with other departments on the NMSU campus with a symposium during the week leading up to the premiere of the production at the Center for the Arts.

"It's a full experience. By the time the play premieres, our audience will know almost as much about the character as I do," Smith said with a laugh. "Almost."

Performances of "Aunt Raini" run Friday, Feb. 21, through Sunday, March 9. Performance times are 7:30 p.m. Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays and 2 p.m. Sundays. Tickets are $10 to $17 and available at the Center for the Arts box office between noon and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, through Ticketmaster or by calling 646-4515. Everything is awesome 'The LEGO Movie' really clicks

By Zak Hansen Las Cruces Bulletin

When I first caught word of an upcoming LEGO movie months ago, I was immediately, instinctually and inconsolably furious.

No franchise I cared about as a child has gone without near-complete bastardization at the hands of Hollywood. The Transformers have been subjected to three utterly atrocious, big-budget, no-soul film treatments, under the cruel visage of Michael Bay, of course. The Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles are next on Bay's chopping block, and my hopes are not high. G.I. Joe, which I only marginally cared for, also suffered the jump to the big screen. Hell, even Battleship was turned into a movie. I'm still waiting for "Operation: The Movie."

More than any other toy, LEGOs informed my life. I was Zak, Zak, the LEGO maniac, and the tens of thousands of blocks still taking up cupboard space can attest to that. Countless hours were spent meticulously crafting, sifting endlessly for that single, perfect piece – and the inevitable destruction that followed, as much a part of the process as the building, like some sort of Buddhist sand mandala, swept away, impermanent. What was Hollywood going to do with my precious Danish construction toys?

It seems my fears were wholly unfounded. "The LEGO Movie" is without question the most fun I've had at the movies in years. It's a big, bright, gloriously giddy blast from start to finish, packed with so many sight gags, one liners and fleeting cameos it demands repeat viewings for young and old alike. Watching it now, pushing 30, I enjoyed it as much as I would have as a child, and while the laughs it draws from its older audience are stellar, those targeted much younger still hit without catering to the lowest common denominator.

Emmet (Chris Pratt) is an ordinary, average guy, inhabiting a plastic-bricked utopia where he – and all his fellow citizens of Bricksburg – live happy, fulfilling lives by following the detailed instructions provided them. "Everything is awesome," the only pop song available in the highly organized, by-thenumbers world goes, "and everything is cool when you're part of a team."

His world is thrown into a whirl, though, when he meets Wyldstyle (Elizabeth Banks), a rough-and-tumble Mininfig who, through a classic case of mistaken identity – comes to believe Emmet is "The Special," a savior figure not unlike Neo in "The Matrix."

It seems the evil President Business (Will Ferrell), no lover of the chaotic creations that arise when people don't follow the instructions, is bent on keeping things just the way they are – for eternity. To accomplish this, he's readied a super weapon called the Kragle, a way to stick in place all the pieces and people of this LEGO universe, named for a collapsible tube of Krazy Glue lacking a couple letters. Emmet, along with a motley group of do-gooders, is tasked with stopping this.

If this all sounds a bit rote, it's OK. Children's movies aren't exactly renowned for breaking ground in terms of narrative, and if the message of "The LEGO Movie" seems a bit stale – be yourself – it's saved wholesale by a rapid-fire, blink-and-you'll-miss-it barrage of sight gags, canny in-jokes, frenetic action, a host of hilarious characters and, at its core, a real, genuine sweetness.

Perhaps no other company has fared better in the world of licensing rights than LEGO, and, as such, they've assembled characters from all corners of the fiction universe. Will Arnett voices a bumbling egoist Batman. Vitruvius, the ancient prophet who decreed The Special's ascent, is brought to life by Morgan Freeman's deep baritone. No one and nothing is off limits. Channing Tatum and Jonah Hill lend their voices to an over-it, put-upon Superman and a pandering, puppy-dogging Green Lantern constantly yapping at the Man of Steel's heels. Dumbledore and Gandalf are mistaken for one another.

Hilarious characterizations aside, "The LEGO Movie" really shines in the visual department. Who knew a movie that looks as though it was fabricated entirely from plastic bricks could THE LEGO MOVIE Rated: PG Running Time: 100 minutes Starring: Chris Pratt, Elizabeth Banks (voices) Directors: Phil Lord, Christopher Miller look so good? In a clever decision, every aspect of the LEGO world is built with LEGOs – water, smoke, fire and steam all flow, flash and rise formed entirely from the eponymous bricks.

Perhaps best of all is the way "The LEGO Movie" so lovingly treats its sources – or its target market. When children play, they're unfettered by the constraints of a fictional narrative universe. There's no reason Batman can't join forces with a mermaid, Dumbledore, Superman, Milhouse van Houten, Abraham Lincoln, a robotic pirate, Michelangelo the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle and Michelangelo the Renaissance for kids.

painter for a high-flying adventure. Assault vehicles cobbled from the anachronistic pieces of a Wild West LEGO set veer over cliffs, only to be reassembled midair into Da Vinci-like flying machines before crashing down to the canyon floors. In a child's imagination, nothing is impossible, and "The LEGO Movie" holds this, more than anything, in the highest esteem.

Sweet but not saccharine, aimed at children without ever pandering, visually stunning and packed to the brim with laughs, "The LEGO Movie" is perfect for old fans and new converts alike.

Multicultural silliness 'Girl on a Bicycle' is familiar fun

Review by Jeff Berg For the Las Cruces Bulletin

A well-worn tale told sort-of well takes place in the sometimes charming and fun "Girl on a Bicycle."

Greta is a flight attendant who travels almost daily between Munich and Paris. Passing the time one day, she figures out she has been dating Paolo, an Italian bus driver whom she sees on her Parisian stopovers, for longer than she has been flying that route. She is not pleased. Paolo appears to be unable to commit, while she is ready to settle down, and maybe not with him. Paolo does have a great imagination, as he reveals to the tourists on his Paris bus sharing his own, often comical, version of the city's "history."

One day, however, with a proposal finally delivered, Paolo sees a beautiful woman on a bike during one of his tours. That's all it takes: he's immediately smitten with her. As it happens in movies like this, he sees her a couple of more times but is never able to make contact —until, of course, he makes real, physical contact and knocks her off her bike while driving his bus.

Cecile is the fair lass that has so caught his eye, and his "guilt" leads him to become her caretaker now that she is suffering a broken leg. Two children also come into the caretaking equation, as Paolo disappears every morning, much too early, to tend to them. It is not long before Greta becomes suspicious.

At the same time, of course, Paolo becomes overwhelmed with personal doubts. Was his proposal the right thing to do? Who does he really love and who does he want to spend his life with, Greta or Cecile? Can he be a good father if he stays with the constantly helpless and sort-of ditzy Cecile?

Mild chaos ensues in the vaguely predictable story, which becomes somewhat repetitive and more predictable as the film putters along. The soundtrack is also a bit annoying and cloying at times, but if you overlook the routine and appreciate that Paolo follows some very bad advice from his friend, Derek (Paddy Considine, much better in the littleseen "Tyrannosaurus"), and finds himself with a German fiancée, a French "wife," two Australian children who call him "Papa," and his life upside-down, you will find a sweet but conventional little romantic comedy.

Built before the Gadsden Purchase was signed, the home at 240 W. Afton Road, just south of La Mesa, is surrounded by lush vegetation and filled with modern amenities.

A home with a history Hacienda is secluded, inviting, for 150-plus years

By David Salcido Las Cruces Bulletin

There are some places that are just places: houses that are nothing more than a collection of rooms offering shelter from storms, both real and imaginary; gardens uninspired.

Then there are those places that are something more. Homes with a history, tended with love. Gardens filled with color, sound and life. The home of Chris and Deb Ferguson is such a place.

Tucked away off a gravel road lined with whispering pines and surrounded by pecan orchards and lush farmland, at 240 W. Afton Road, south of La Mesa, theirs is a home with a long history.

It was registered with the county in 1903, but it's much older than that," said owner and working artist Deb Ferguson. "Our title insurance goes back to the Gadsden Purchase.

There's a story about this house that the original owner, Mr. Nevarez, was out working in the fields one day and found a box of gold coins buried there. He used the money to buy this property."

Built in what Ferguson referred to as "old Chihuahua style," the structure itself has 2-foot-thick adobe walls throughout, with arched doorways and cozy rooms painted in festive colors.

Offsetting the colorful 10-foot-tall walls - festooned with equally colorful artwork by Ferguson - is the ceiling, which is composed of original cottonwood vigas supporting split juniper latillas daubed with mud.

One can feel the whisper of ages in those walls and ceilings and can't help but wonder at the stories they could tell, should they decide to.

A fantastic addition to this beautiful little hacienda is a vintage Jotul (pronounced "yodel") woodstove, casting warmth throughout the house.

They don't make this particular model anymore," Ferguson said. "It's made in Norway. It has a firebox and two chambers that double burn the gas, so you get the maximum BTUs out of your wood. It's made to put out a lot of heat."

C13

Passing through the doorway into the kitchen, one finds "all the amenities for somebody who loves to cook," Ferguson said, including a plethora of cabinets that are solid Hickory Legacy brand. "There's no plywood in them."

A very unusual item is the stove, which sits not against the wall, as most do, but rather occupies space in the middle of the room, backed by a breakfast bar wrapping around the back and side. The result, Ferguson said, is a maximized counter space.

Off to the side, next to one of two pantries, is another doorway, opening into a modest bedroom, which in turn opens to a spacious walk-in closet/laundry area and an enormous handicap-accessible bathroom.

The bathroom itself is a marvel, sporting a shower built for two in one corner and, across the room, a vintage bathtub. The entire area is pulled together by dark Italian porcelain tiling; on the floors, halfway up the walls and enveloping the shower stall.

But that's not the hottest part about this room, literally or figuratively. The floors of the bathroom, the walk in closet and the sunroom behind them - accessed through a door on the south wall of the laundry area - are recent additions, with passive solar radiant heated floors.

"Water is heated by the sun on panels then pumped into a 300-gallon tank behind the bathroom and, from there, through the floors to heat this space," Ferguson said.

"All the plumbing is new. When See Hacienda on page C14

we did the addition two years ago, we just went ahead and replumbed the kitchen."

There are many wonders to be found within the complex that makes up the Ferguson's property, too. Off to the east side of the house is a large, free-standing structure that is an amalgamation of old and new. The original adobe walls, dating back a century or more, are crumbling, but these days, they are no more than a façade to lend charm to the structure.

Built around and behind those walls is a 42-by-38-foot structural pole barn with a dirt floor. Serving as a garage and workshop, it has high pitched ceilings and a second story apartment that Ferguson has repurposed as an artist studio.

From the studio, a set of double doors opens out to a balcony, facing west and looking down over the property and the farmland beyond.

Dominating it all, on the north side of the house, visible through the screened in porch and the small office area off the living room, is an enormous, ancient Arizona ash.

"I've been told it's one of the oldest trees in the valley," Ferguson said. "It's older than the house. We call it 'abuela."

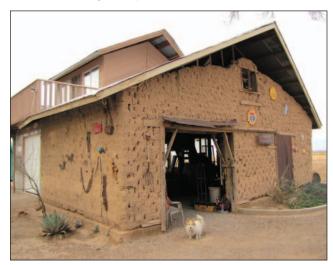

Abuela is just one of many guardians on the half-acre of land, with pecan, corkscrew willow, Texas lilac, Afghan pines and a variety of fruit trees offering shade to a lush garden lined with flower beds, blossoming bushes, grape vines and, behind the barn, a full vegetable patch.

Bright colors and artwork adorn the 2-foot-thick adobe walls and archways of the living room.

The overall impression is one of sustainability, comfort and seclusion – a shelter from the storms of life, but so much more: a sanctuary for those who appreciate the steady march of history, with all the amenities.

An original adobe façade wraps around the modern pole barn, which has an upstairs studio and balcony.

A full vegetable garden and fruit bearing trees sit behind the barn, overlooking pecan orchards.

Friday, February 14, 2014 It's for the birds Professional and amateur birdwatchers gear up for the Great Backyard Bird Count

By David Salcido Cruces Bulletin

The word is out: On Friday, Feb. 14 through Monday, Feb. 17, more than 300,000 citizen scientists around the world will take part in the 17th annual Great Backyard Bird Count, and for the sixth straight year, Las Cruces is joining in the global effort.

Sponsored locally by Wild Birds Unlimited, the project is a joint effort of the Cornell Lab of Ornithology, Bird Studies Canada and the National Audubon Society. The invitation is going out to individuals, families, schools and organizations to conduct counts at bird feeders in backyards, local parks or other locations throughout the valley.

To participate, birders should watch birds for at least 15 minutes at the location of their choice. They then estimate the number of birds they see for each species they can identify.

The information is then reported online through www.birdcount.org, where participants select their location on a map, answer a few questions, enter their tallies and submit their data to share with others around the world. Scientists take it from there, using the data to analyze bird populations, migration patterns, habitat needs and indentifying birds at risk of becoming endangered.

You don't even have to know the names of every bird in your backyard," said Kristi Lane, owner of Wild Birds Unlimited. "You just count the birds you know. If you only know pigeons, count pigeons, but it's also a good way to learn what birds you do have. A lot of people are surprised by just how many birds they have in their backyards."

For those who really get into this sort of thing, the website allows birders to enter their zip codes in order to get a list of possible birds that can be found in their area. Other interesting information can also be found there: reports from other birders all over the world, including participating cities and towns in New Mexico; statistics from past years; and patterns that have emerged based on the information.

"It only takes a minute to set up an account and it's absolutely free," Lane said. "It doesn't matter if you're a beginner or a professional. You only have to do it once, so that, if you want to count next year, you'll still have your account."

Even better, it's an activity that parents can involve the kids in.

"It's a great activity to do with the entire family, because it's held over the weekend when kids are out of school," Lane said. "It's a great way to get them involved in nature and it's so easy. You can do it outdoors, or indoors, if it's a cold day, by looking out your window."

To help attract birds to backyard feeders, Wild Birds Unlimited, located at 2001 E. Lohman Ave., Suite 130, will have a sale on birdseed throughout the Great Backyard Bird Count weekend. It's an activity that Lane said she hopes will foster curiosity in the wildlife of the area, but also raise awareness of the needs faced by our feathered friends.

"It's always a good idea to feed the birds in the winter, especially with the drought we've been having," Lane said. "Even though we got some rain toward the end of fall, it wasn't enough for the plants to grow and go to seed, so it's really helping the birds out this winter to feed them?

Ideas to love

Rorie Measure The Reading Solution

Today is a good time for snuggling with your little one to read a favorite book together.

According to research done by Medical University of Vienna, this will promote your love hormone. Hugs have been found to ease fear and anxiety, lower blood pressure and boost memory. That's an idea worth embracing.

This column recognizes achievements in promoting a culture of literacy for our own community. Please share your efforts with me for future columns. Today, we salute a nonprofit child care provider and a medical office for their efforts to promote literacy.

The City of Las Cruces Department of Recreation's after school and summer out of school programs feature life skills in their approach to child care. Located in seven sites around the city, the program, directed by Marcel Nicolitz, serves 269 children in kindergarten through fifth grade. Reading, tutoring, physical activity and nutrition are special features of the curriculum.

Current sites for the city after school program include Monte Vista, Highland, Hermosa, Valley View, Alameda and Fairacres elementary schools and Frank O'Brien Papen Community Center. Registration is required and there is a monthly fee.

The Tri-Unity Conference is Friday, Feb. 28, at New Mexico State University in Corbett Center. The topic is "Teaching reading and beyond: addressing the needs of children with autism spectrum disorders." National speaker Sylvia Diehl will address issues supporting the development of literacy skills. For more information, contact Felicia Olivas at 526 6682 or folivas@ aitkids.com

Branigan Library is now a designated "Family Place" library. "Family Place" is a national program that promotes good health, early learning, parental involvement and supportive communities to encourage growth and development in early childhood.

At 10 a.m. each Monday in the library, there will be opportunity for parents to play with their child, make friends and talk one-on-one with specialists in early literacy; speech, hearing and language development; child development; nutrition; and music, play and health. There will be different play stations around the room: gross motor skills, creative play, blocks, transportation and an art project.

Fall research sent to NMSU Motion technology used to indicate those at risk

By Rachel Christiansen Las Cruces Bulletin

Science continues to push the boundaries of technology, and the two combined present unique opportunities to study the intricate functions of the human body.

One department of New Mexico State University has sought to do just that, partnering with businesses that have the technology to collect data on a scale like never before.

The Fall Risk Assessment Lab, a mobile unit conducted by certified National Institute of Health investigators, has traveled seven states, sending information gathered back to the NMSU Department of Human Performance, Dance and Recreation.

"(The department) stands to become one of the leading research centers for fall risk, assessment and prevention," said Ken Hoeksema, senior vice president of business development of Life Support Medical, the funding agency of the lab.

It looks like something from the set of a scifi movie, with Infrared cameras set up monitoring all angles of an area to reflect sensors on the body. All it takes is four steps across a pressure-pad walkway that contains more than 11,000 sensors.

As someone walks across the sensor pad, their footsteps and walking pattern are monitored on flat screen televisions, and an enormous amount of data is collected.

"From the video that's taken by those markers, they can create a skeletal, animated version of the person walking," said Toby Cohantz, director of the mobile fall risk assessment lab. "From that, they can extrapolate information about their gait."

Risk ratios such as gait velocity, cadence, stride length, swing time and double support phase can be seen immediately on the screen – but that's only a small percent of the information gleaned.

Cohantz said more than 250 data points are recorded and sent back to the mother database at the NMSU research lab.

The goal is to scientifically validate a person's risk for falling, thus spreading the education about the topic and establishing standard preventive and responsive measures.

"If you don't have that large database, sometimes it's hard to understand the meaningfulness of the information you have," said Dr. Bob Wood, professor and academic head of the NMSU Department of Human Performance, Dance, and Recreation.

Wood said nearly four years ago he and colleagues within the department began to look at more sensitive ways to assess very specific aspects of a person's walk and what those indicators mean in the long run. The possibilities for the future of these recordings extend beyond someone's risk for a fall.

"Stanford is very interested in what we're doing," Cohantz said. "When it comes to the ability to predict certain kinds of illnesses, like multiple sclerosis and Parkinson's disease, the theory is that if you can see through someone's gait early on that they're a candidate for one of these diseases, then you can get them into early treatment." The first mobile lab will make its last stop March 3, when it pulls in to the Muhammad Ali Parkinson's center at the Barrow Neurological Institute in Phoenix, as Life Support Medical is donating the lab to collect futher information. The data will continue to be sent to NMSU.

"The ultimate goal is not to just analyze it, but to also to come up with therapies, products, services and ways to extend the overall quality of life," said Hoeksema, adding that the second mobile lab from Life Support will soon make its debut.

The mobile lab made a stop in Las Cruces Monday and Tuesday, Feb. 10 through 11, at Tresco Inc., where it was slated to assess more than 40 individuals.

During the Las Cruces stop, the mobile team began integrating the use of Google Glass into their evaluations, to monitor head movement and add to the research – the first time the new software has been used in an academic setting.

"We're trying to get the info out to the public and out to the seniors so they can begin to take prescriptive or preventive measures," Cohantz said. Las Cruces Bulletin

Athletes head to the starting li Olympians stay active and healthy year-round

By Beth Sitzler

Las Cruces Bullet

The weather might still be cold, but spring is just around the corner, and with it will come the 36th annual Doña Ana County Senior Games.

Starting each year in February and continuing through the end of April, the 2014 county games, held by the Doña Ana County Senior Olympic office, will kick off with a registration party from 10 a.m. to noon Saturday, Feb. 15, at Trails West Senior Community Club House, 1450 Avenida de Mesilla. During this event, the 2013 Dee Harris and J. Mack Adams award winners will be announced.

'The philosophy behind the Senior Olympics is to provide adults age 50 and older the opportunity to participate in sports in order to lead healthy lives and socially interact with people," said Mike Simione of the Doña Ana County Senior Olympic office.

Athletes have the opportunity to compete in 24 events, each divided into age groups. Medals are awarded to the top three winners in each age category at the local level. Those athletes are then eligible to compete at the annual Summer State Games, held between June and August at different locations around New Mexico.

"The structure of the Senior Olympics is you start at the county level and proceed to the state level," Simione said. "Every oddnumbered year, the top state winners have the option to proceed to the National Senior Olympics.

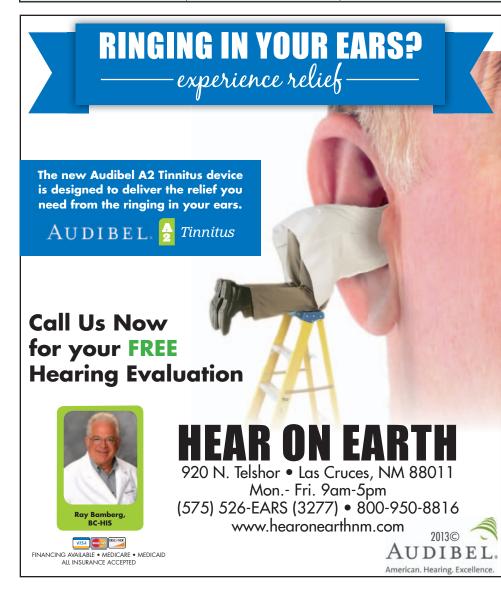

'I expect an increase in local participation this year, because people want to go participate at the national level."

While more athletes might come out for the qualifying year - the National Senior Olympics will take place July 3-16, 2015, in St. Paul, Minn. - the purpose of the Senior Games is to keep adults active throughout the year.

When I talk to people about the Senior Olympics, they have this mistaken notion that athletes train and 'I'm not an Olympian," Simione said.

"When you talk in terms of the Senior Games, it's an opportunity to try your hand at something you haven't done before. You have the opportunity to put yourself in an age category with other peers and see how you do against them. It's a tremendous opportunity to meet people."

Simione said he knows firsthand how the Senior Games can help create lasting friendships.

"I came back to Las Cruces Senior Games in 2012, and when I went through that first registration process, there were people there who I had met when I participated in the games from 2002-07," he said. "It's not too often you find the opportunity to be noncompetitive or competitive in a nice way and make friends."

With so many sports, competitions and activities to choose from, there is something for every interest. Some of the more popular events, Simione said, include air gun, bowling, horseshoes, shuffleboard, swimming, table tennis and tennis.

Just as important to the Senior Games as a competitive spirit are volunteers.

"We can't do it without them," he said. "Everv event has and needs volunteers. There is no glory in it for them. If you want to assist with a competition, there is a lot of work to do. Volunteers are people I really admire."

No matter how well someone plays or how many prizes they win, the Doña Ana County Senior Olympics office would like to remind everyone, "You don't stop playing because you grow old, you grow old because you stop playing?

Ronald Schroeder hits the lanes with his team, the Lane Rangers, for the 2013 Doña Ana County Senior Games team bowling competition. Schroeder, who has been bowling almost 50 years, has been participating in the games for about 15 years.

Udall, Heller introduce bill to improve care to rural veterans

U.S. Sens. Tom Udall and Dean Heller introduced a bill to address some of the biggest barriers to health care for veterans in rural communities.

More than 6 million veterans, including a third of all Iraq and Afghanistan veterans, live in rural communities. As many as half of those veterans may be going without care from the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA).

Rural veterans often struggle to access quality care because it isn't available locally. For some, traveling to and from an appointment can take all day. Veterans who can't drive must rely on neighbors or volunteers to get to appointments, and many simply go without adequate care.

Udall and Heller's Rural Veterans Improvement Act takes a four-pronged approach to improve and help veterans access care by: enhancing mental health care options by allowing the VA to work with non-VA mental health providers in rural communities; building on the VA's transportation program to ensure more veterans living in rural areas have a way to get to doctors appointments; creating programs and incentives to attract and retain doctors and nurses to rural VA health care facilities; and requiring the VA to conduct a full assessment of its community-based outpatient clinics to determine what improvements are needed and prioritize those projects.

NMSU scholarship helps train care coordinators

Under the Affordable Care Act, social workers and care coordinators are an important component, and the New Mexico State University College of Health and Social Services is helping to fill the need.

The McCowen Behavioral Health Leadership Scholarship received a gift from Blue Cross Blue Shield of New Mexico that will help prepare social work graduate students to work under the new regulations.

"We are delighted to receive this gift that will enhance social work educational opportunities for students for many years to come," said Tina Hancock, School of Social Work director.

We deeply appreciate Blue Cross Blue Shield's commitment to social work education and applaud their willingness to put resources into social work work force development that is much needed in our state with the Affordable Care Act and the resulting expanded Medicaid program throughout New Mexico."

Students eligible for this scholarship need to have a minimum 3.0 GPA as a graduate student in the School of Social Work with a preference given to individuals with an interest in behavioral health, and it will be awarded for the first time in fall 2014.

A graduate of the college and current board member, Margaret Ruth McCowen, former CEO of Mesilla Valley Hospital, started the scholarship to benefit future professionals in the behavioral health field.

The scholarship deadline is March 3. To apply for the scholarship, visit www.scholarships.nmsu.edu.

DOH reminds New Mexicans to get important oral care

The New Mexico Department of Health is raising awareness about tooth decay.

Tooth decay in children is a chronic condition that can be prevented," said Department of Health Cabinet Secretary Retta Ward, MPH. "Brushing twice a day, drinking plenty of water and eating healthy foods such as fruits and vegetables can help prevent tooth decay."

The Department of Health's Office of Oral Health contracts with dental providers throughout the state to provide preventive dental treatment services to low-income and uninsured New Mexicans. The services include dental sealants, fluoride varnish and treating dental diseases. The Office of Oral Health provided prevention and treatment services to 7,390 New Mexico children during the 2012-13 school year.

Hispanics, American Indians and African-Americans have more oral health disease than Anglos. That's due to a lack of good oral hygiene, dental insurance and dentists, especially in rural areas, the Office of Oral Health stated.

- The Office of Oral Health recommends the following tips: Brush your teeth two times a day
- Brush your tongue
- Floss once a day
- Eat healthy foods
- Avoid soda and candy
- Drink plenty of water
- Chew sugarless gum
- Visit your dentist twice a year

The Department of Health, City of Santa Fe, Presbyterian Medical Services, Santa Fe Public School District, Santa Fe Public school nurses, Villa Teresa Catholic Clinic, Con Alma Foundation and many partners are working on outreach projects for the month of February. Some of the projects include dental sealant clinics, fluoride varnish clinics and children's dental clinics.

Gov. Susana Martinez has proclaimed February as Children's Oral Health Month in New Mexico.

Visit www.nmhealth.org/PHD/OOH for more information about the Department of Health's Office of Oral Health.
