Domestic violence on the rise

Las Cruces police urge victims to seek shelter

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

Steadily growing reports of domestic violence over the past year – including two fatalities – prompted Las Cruces Police Chief Richard Williams to hold a press conference Friday, Aug. 2, to increase awareness about the problem and offer help.

“This is about committing violence against someone they are supposed to love,” Williams said. “We’re saying this is unacceptable.”

From August 2012 through July 2013, the Las Cruces Police Department has made 626 domestic violence-related arrests.

There have been two deaths in domestic violence-related incidents, Williams said.

On June 12, 42-year-old Carlos Nevarez III was killed when he and his girlfriend got into an argument and she allegedly ran over him on North Main Street. On July 31, 59-year-old Lisa Cash was shot to death allegedly by her brother-in-law. Both of these homicides appear to have originated from issues related to domestic violence, police said.

Williams said LCPD’s Domestic Violence Unit is determined to help end this growing trend and, along with the department’s Victims’ Assistance Unit, stands ready to assist any victim of domestic violence within Las Cruces.

Members of those units urged people to be aware of the resources not only in the department, but in the community, such as La Piñon Sexual Assault Recovery Services of Southern New Mexico and La Casa Inc., the city’s domestic violence shelter.

City Council to decide Country Club’s future

Park Ridge plan for acreage faces zoning appeal hearing

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

The 110-acre former Las Cruces Country Club property could become a new community designed for aging boomers when the City Council decides on a zoning change appeal at its meeting Monday, Aug. 19.

Called Park Ridge, the proposal would create a mixture of residential, retail and medical uses, including a single-story, 42-bed hospital. While the developmental is self-described as an “urban infill project,” it is not “wall-to-wall infill,” as some who are fighting the project have called it, said developer Bob Pofahl.

“There is going to be a lot of open space,” Pofahl said. “This development is so spaced out.”

The adjacent Apodaca Park and ball field will gain 7 acres in return for 1.2 acres from the city, Pofahl said. That exchange was developed from open meeting conversations with representatives of the Parks and Recreation

Mesilla Park desires historic ‘momentum’

Residents organizing to obtain special designation

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

As the Mesilla Park enters its 126th year of existence, residents think it’s about time the area southwest of the interchange of interstates 10 and 25 gets its own historic neighborhood status, just as Mesquite Street and the Alameda Depot residents have accomplished.

Under the moniker “Mesilla Park Momentum,” residents have been holding meetings and forming committees to start the process of gaining historic district status at least at the state level and possibly nationally.

At a “Mesilla Park Momentum” meeting in July, Jon Hunner, New Mexico State University History Department head, said he thought it was possible because the area includes the Fabian Garcia research farm, where the kind of green chile now widely beloved was developed.

District 2 City Councillor Greg Smith said there are other

Perez heads for Texas

Gov. to appoint new county commissioner

Doña Ana County Chairwoman Karen Perez said she's most proud of the "little things" she's done in her seven-year tenure representing District 3.

Perez, a civil engineer, announced Friday, Aug. 2, she has resigned to accept a job in Texas. She will join the El Paso office of Arcadis Malcolm Pierney, but will continue to live in Doña Ana County.

"This is one of the most difficult decisions of my life," Perez said. "The reality is that, although I am fiercely loyal to this organization and its people, as well as to my constituents and colleagues, my family has to come first, and this opportunity is too good to let slip by. I leave proud of the work that's been done and confident in the ability of this Commission and management team to lead the organization forward."

Among the "little things" she cited as accomplishments during her years on the commission were "helping small communities with roads, water and flooding."

"Both the Crisis Triage (Center) and (the Mesilla Valley Regional Dispatch Authority) MVRDA were big accomplishments," she said. "The time I served on the (Camino Real Regional Utility Authority) CRRUA board was probably one of the more challenging but satisfying – in the start of a new utility."

She said the county's biggest challenges going forward will be implementation of health care reform and the "jail diversion program, or Crisis Triage."

"These are 'pilot' programs, so they will drastically change the way the county provides services," she said.

Perez worked locally for more than 18 years in the development of water and wastewater infrastructure and owns an engineering consulting firm in Las Cruces.

Based on her experience in community development, Perez said she has a keen interest in managed growth based on a comprehensive county plan. She identified the following critical issues:

- Managed growth, supported by investment in proper infrastructure
- Water resource conservation and management
- Targeted, industry-based economic development and work force training

She served on the boards of the Extra-territorial Zoning Authority, the Metropolitan Planning Authority, the Camino Real Regional Utility Authority and the Animal Services Center of the Mesilla Valley.

PEREZ

Commission Vice Chair Billy Garrett will assume the chairmanship of the board when Perez's resignation takes effect at 5 p.m. Friday, Aug. 9.

Perez, a Democrat, was elected to the District 3 seat in November 2006. District 3 encompasses a large sector of southeastern Doña Ana County, including Las Alturas, Telshor, Foothills, Talavera, the University Hills and Bellamah neighborhoods, New Mexico State University campus, White Sands Missile Range and Tortugas.

A resident of Las Cruces for 22 years, she earned both her bachelor's and master's degrees in civil engineering from NMSU, and a bachelor's degree in international affairs from the George Washington University in Washington, D.C.

Before moving to Las Cruces, Perez served as a Peace Corps volunteer in Ecuador and Honduras, building potable water and irrigation systems.

GROSS RECEIPTS TAX PUBLIC MEETINGS

Mayor and City Council

Mayor Ken Miyagishima and members of City Council will host a series of public input meetings regarding the potential for enacting a 3/8 of one-percent Gross Receipts Tax. Revenues generated from the tax will help offset the loss of Hold Harmless funding eliminated by state legislators during the 2013 legislative session. Hold Harmless is funding communities receive from the state that make up for the lack of taxes on food and medicine. Voter approval is not required for implementation of the GRT increase. Enacting the tax only requires City Council approval. The amount generated by the new GRT would be slightly less than amount needed to fully replace the Hold Harmless when it is fully phased out in 2030, but would still allow City government to provide services and programs.

The mayor and city councillors will meet with the public as follows:

Monday, August 5, 6 p.m.

City Council Chambers, City Hall, 700 N. Main St. with Councillors Miguel Silva, Dist.1 and Nathan Small, Dist. 4.

Thursday, August 8, 6 p.m.

Good Samaritan Village creative arts room, 3025 Terrace with Councillors Greg Smith, Dist. 2 and Olga Pedroza, Dist. 3.

Tuesday, August 13, 6 p.m.

Doña Ana Community College East Mesa Campus, 2800 Sonoma Ranch Blvd., conference room 232, with Councillors Gill Sorg, Dist. 5 and Mayor Pro-Tem Sharon Thomas, Dist. 6.

A familiar hat in the ring

With party change, Nuñez eyes return to Roundhouse

The inside of the hat still says John B. Stetson, 6/7/8.

The bolo tie remains.

So does the folksy manner.

The letters on the blue-and-white card in his wallet, however, have changed.

Under Party/Partido, where it used to say DTS (decline to state), it now says REP (Republican). And just a couple of years ago, it said DEM (Democrat).

"Andy Nuñez hasn't changed," said the man who served six terms in the New Mexico House of Representatives.

A longtime Democrat who became an independent (DTS in New Mexico voter registration terms) in 2011, Nuñez announced his change in parties Tuesday, Aug. 6, in Santa Fe. He also announced his intention to run for his old House seat, District 36, in 2014.

Running as an independent in 2012, Nuñez lost his seat in a three-way race with Democrat Philip Archuleta, who won, and Republican Mike Tellez.

Even though Nuñez had long represented Hatch and some extended areas in Doña Ana County, and was a popular lawmaker, his 2012 defeat was not a surprise.

Our county remains primarily Democratic. During a presidential election year, it's a fact more people turn out to vote. In a place where most of the voters are Democratic, Democrats tend to get more votes. That's how it turned out for Archuleta, while Nuñez and Tellez split the votes among non-Democrats. Sure, there were a few Dems who went Nuñez's way, but we're living in a time of extreme partisan politics.

Nuñez was also a victim of re-districting; by 2012, he was dealing with a district where many voters were not terribly familiar with him.

As an independent myself, and one who lives in Nuñez's district, I was pleased to finally have a representative who was in my own party, so to speak. I've long had frustrations with the two-party system, however, and had doubts Nuñez would be able to buck the system as an independent.

While he was independent in the Roundhouse, Nuñez joked about how short and simple his party caucus meetings were. Ultimately, though, he knew if he wanted to continue to represent the people, he'd have to play the game as the rules are currently set.

"That's exactly why I changed parties," he said. "This state's just not ready to elect an independent."

Moving to the GOP was not that big of a stretch for Nuñez.

"I'd have rather stayed an independent, but with my agriculture background and my pro-business stance, I fit pretty good with the Republicans," he said.

His departure from the Democratic party came during the January 2011 battle for the Speaker of the House. Northern Democrats backed Ben Lujan; southern Democrats lobbied for Las Cruces' own Joseph Cervantes. It became clear Cervantes would not have quite enough votes, so the Democrats joined Lujan's camp.

Except for Nuñez. He believed Cervantes was the right choice, and stuck with his vote.

"When I backed Joseph, the speaker pulled me off my committees and the other Democrats wouldn't support me," Nuñez said. "I was the only one who backed Joseph to the last minute."

After seeing how consistency and integrity was rewarded in the Roundhouse, Nuñez dropped his affiliation.

Still, as a Republican, Nuñez said he expects to reach out and work with Democrats when it makes sense.

"I've done it with the elephants when I was one of the donkeys," he said. "I don't think any party has all the answers."

"I'm a middle-of-the-roader, and I believe each party has some good points and each has some bad points, too. I'll vote what's best for my district, Doña Ana County and the state of New Mexico."

Letters to the Editor

Patients need services

We would like to thank you for the straightforward article concerning the Mental Health funding (Las Cruces Bulletin, July 19). It has been rewarding to see how well the news of southern New Mexico is covered by your newspaper.

The "controversial audit" may very well be needed if provider CE's or family members are profiting from money paid by the federal government, but services to those who use them should not be stopped. Clients depend on their prescription medications to be filled and ready for use. Mental health does not wait for inquiry, it causes serious disruption in the clients lives and they simply do not know where to turn for assistance.

We have several members in our church who depend on the services of Southwest Counseling (SWC) as an important element in their lives.

Another useful service is to those who cannot handle their finances, to have their usual bills paid through the SWC and the remainder turned over to the client. These are just two of many services that the fragile clients of this necessary office provide.

Thanks to your informative newspaper.

Pass immigration reform

I support a pathway to citizenship for the 11 million undocumented immigrants currently living in the U.S. because it's the right thing to do. Many of them are our friends, neighbors and employees.

Our immigration laws are broken, and 11 million Americans need our help to find a solution. I personally know some of these hard-working immigrants, and I think it's hurting our country to keep them living in the shadows.

We need Congress to protect the path to citizenship for the 11 million and vote in favor of reform this year.

I support the Senate's Gang of Eight bill because it has solutions. Rounding up 11 million people or asking them to self-deport is inhumane - not to mention completely unrealistic.

That's why Congress will do the right thing and vote for an immigration bill with a path to citizenship.

'Inside the Capitol' ends after more than 60 years

Columnist issues final farewell, rides into the sunset

Jay Miller

Inside the Capitol

This will be the final column of Inside the Capitol. I hope you have enjoyed the ride as much as I have.

Jeanette and I are moving to Scottsdale, Ariz., to be closer to our son, daughter and grandchildren. Although it is time for the move, we do it with heavy hearts.

We both were born in New Mexico. The longest I have been out of the state during my 75 years was for six weeks of Air National Guard basic training in San Antonio, Texas.

At least I won't be deprived of exciting politics. Arizona has impeached one governor and sent another to prison. Maricopa County Sheriff Joe Arpaio keeps the county correction system in constant turmoil with his summer outdoors lockups and pink underwear for everyone.

Recently, the president of the Senate stopped his car on a busy Phoenix freeway and threw all his girlfriend's clothes out of the car. He then left her stranded at the side of the road. Republican senators soon voted him out of office. Later he resigned while being investigated by the Senate Ethics Committee.

Of course, New Mexico has provided plenty of excitement during my 26 years of covering it. Gary Johnson was the most off-beat governor any state could ever have. New Mexico got to learn what a true Libertarian really was.

Johnson didn't want regulations placed on business and he didn't want them placed on individuals either. Lawmakers and the public were confounded when he advocated decriminalization of pot. Now he is an advocate of gay marriage.

Johnson drew a big cheer from the motorcycle crowd when he vetoed a mandatory motorcycle helmet law. But he then announced that if anyone not wearing a helmet was injured as a result, the state would not pay for any treatment. He believed in personal freedom but also in personal responsibility, too.

Gov. Bill Richardson was an exciting guy to cover, also. With him, it was usually the size of the deal he was putting together that provided the excitement – a $200 million spaceport, a $900 million commuter train and rubbing elbows with Hollywood elite at the governor's mansion to encourage more films being shot in New Mexico.

Then there were the Mama Lucies versus the Cowboys in the state House and the Manny Aragon versus Les Houston battles for control of the Senate. And Pete Domenici reigned supreme on financial matters in the U.S. Senate.

Besides his mega-projects, Richardson had a very pet project in promoting Billy the Kid. It began early in Richardson's first year in office and ended eight years later at the stroke of midnight as he was leaving office.

The source of Richardson's interest was never revealed, although there were several tantalizing guesses.

The "Inside the Capitol" column has been in New Mexico newspapers since the 1940s. It was begun by Santa Fe New Mexican editor Will Harrison. He continued the column after he left the New Mexican, changing its name from "At the Capitol" to "Inside the Capitol."

Upon Harrison's death, the column passed down through Charlie Cullen, Fred Buckles, Bob Huber, Carroll Cagle and Fred McCaffrey, who sold the rights to me in 1987.

Several years ago, I received a note from John Ackerman, of Artesia, who once headed the Public Service Company of New Mexico and then served as the professor of ethics at the University of New Mexico's Anderson School of Management.

John said he had done a tally of how long each columnist had written this column. As of that particular day, I passed Will Harrison as the longest winded.

According to my figures, I have written somewhere in the neighborhood of 7,200 columns. In the early years, I wrote six a week. Various vision maladies have forced me back to three a week.

Although I have a thick file of notes from those who have disagreed with my columns from time to time, I hope the overall effect has been a balanced analysis from a slightly different view.

The urge to put in my two cents may never cease entirely, so I will sporadically continue my blog at www.insidethecapitol.blogspot.com and maybe on YouTube and such. You also may reach me at insidethecapitol@hotmail.com and at 3 La Tusa, Santa Fe, NM 87505.

“The urge to put in my two cents may never cease entirely.”

Immigration 'expert' displays a special kind of stupid

Do we need a new law or just better enforcement?

Michael Swickard

In my opinion

"A simple way to take measure of a country is to look at how many want in and how many want out."

– Tony Blair.

I was listening to an immigration "expert" on a radio program who was giving the audience his take on what the immigration reform legislation in Congress will do if passed. A question occurred to me so I called into the show, "Could you tell me what the Congress got wrong in the immigration bill of 1986 that the Congress today wants to reform?"

The "expert" paused and then blurted, "No, I know nothing about the law they are trying to reform."

I said the next day on my talk radio program that it takes a special kind of stupid to reform a bill that no one has read with a bill that none of the legislators will read because it has too many pages. Yep, a special kind of stupid has taken over our country.

So everyone is arguing about the immigration reform bill of 2013 without anyone actually reading it. Much like ObamaCare, which also was not read because it had too many pages, this legislation will have to be passed to see what is really in it and what it all means. That is a very bad way to do government.

As to immigration in general, I like what former prime minister of the United Kingdom Tony Blair said is the test of a country: how many want in and how many want out. Obviously our country is very much desired since we have many who want in and few who want out.

Immigration has been going on for hundreds of years that I know of and perhaps longer. One indigenous tribe was displaced by another over the hundreds of years and then the Europeans came.

As quickly as we formed a country we made our first immigration bill in 1790 which restricted naturalization to “free white persons” of “good moral character.” Not a great day for America.

Within a hundred years Americans were trying to exclude the Chinese who came, built part of the transcontinental railroad and prospered. In the early 20th century we attempted to exclude the Japanese but they immigrated to Hawaii and then slipped into the rest of our country. Franklin Roosevelt stopped immigration pretty much entirely during the Depression and sent home perhaps as many as two million Mexicans. Many of these Mexicans came back to work during the war and over the next 40 years.

Of those people in our country, some were legal and some did not have legal status. In 1986 another stab was made at dealing with immigration, because at least three million people were in the United States illegally. So they were given amnesty and the 1986 act made it illegal to hire people without legal status. Further, the act mandated intensification of the Border Patrol so that no new people could come into our country illegally.

So now we have a reform of that legislation to mandate making sure people can no longer come into our country illegally and to give amnesty. Wait, how is that reforming the 1986 bill? There is exactly no reform – that is what the 1986 legislation mandates. So is the problem that we did not have the right law or that we did not enforce the law?

Throughout the many years of our country, the No. 1 issue in immigration asks that the people coming to our country be of benefit to our country. We cannot take a billion refugees from the slums of the world in and still have a country. But we really do want the best and brightest of any country if they wish to be a citizen of our country. We are made stronger by these people.

The issue before the Congress is to decide if the failing of the immigration act of 1986, that people today want to reform, is a failure of law or enforcement. If the failure was enforcement, then passing new laws will have no effect on the problem.

I like people from other countries. Americans need them in our country. We also need to uphold our laws. Can we do both?

Michael Swickard hosts the syndicated radio talk show News New Mexico from 6 to 9 a.m. Monday through Friday on a number of New Mexico radio stations and through streaming. Swickard may be contacted at michael@swickard.com.

“ If the failure was enforcement, then passing new laws will have no effect on the problem. ”

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

Hay fever and cars

In searching for a cause to explain the increase in “hay fever” incidence in humans, some scientists have postulated that it might be the increase in the burning of coal, oil and other fossil fuels. Humm.

In their defense, scientists are allowed, even encouraged, to speculate. In this case their reasoning is; the greenhouse gas carbon dioxide (CO2) has increased in our atmosphere. CO2 traps heat in the atmosphere. The increase in temperature causes more plants to grow. The more plants that grow, the more pollen they produce. Thus, the more you drive, the more you sneeze.

We read their speculations in the newspaper, therefore we think it is true. We tell our friends, our family, our children. Columnists write about it, carnival barkers concoct miraculous cures for it. It becomes common knowledge, a celebrity endorses it, when in fact, no one has ever scientifically proven it to be true.

It is the same scenario that drives the “climate change/global warming” controversy, the “alternative medicine” controversy, and the “origin of the universe” controversy.

I remember a big story when “experts” were proclaiming red meat caused colon cancer. They based their conclusions on this reasoning: Fact: Americans have more colon cancer than Japanese, Americans eat more red meat than Japanese, therefore red meat causes colon cancer.

Mathematicians are able to calculate the statistical significance of a conclusion to an experiment. It is expressed as the P value. The lower the number, the more likely the conclusion is valid. When claims are made expressing that a product will do what it says on the label, it must be demonstrated in trials or tests that are statistically significant. If the product is a medicine, dewormer or feed additive, for instance, it must satisfy the FDA's stringent requirements through repetition, that the product will do what it claims. Those are the rules true science adheres to.

Well, obviously, broad proclamations by scientists of their time have been made since the beginning of curiosity. The Earth, the sky and the universe offer enough puzzles to keep us busy forever. They continue, and the “hay fever/fossil fuel” speculation is just that, scientists pondering and dreaming. But this is how miraculous discoveries are finally made, studied and eventually one in a million is proven to be true.

Eventually the colon cancer incidence in Americans versus Japanese was not shown to be caused by eating more red meat; there were too many variables. Today many claim that the lower incidence is related to the Japanese fish diet high in cod liver oil, but it still remains conjecture.

As for our good scientist's proposition about driving your car being the cause of hay fever, how about this for an alternative theory: In 1970, the world population was 3.7 billion. Today the world population is 7 billion – twice as many. Humans inhale oxygen made by plants. Plants inhale CO2 made by humans. Thus, the blame for hay fever could be the increased number of people exhaling CO2, which the plants then absorb causing them to grow and generate pollen.

This hypothesis allows for other factors such as athletic humans who generate fractionally more CO2 than sedentary humans, suggesting that jogging, basketball and playing tennis may be the root cause of hay fever. Every workout gym would be required to post warnings declaring, “Exercise causes hay fever and pollination! Breathe with Caution!” Ah choo!

Former NMSU president provided tremendous support for university

Thomas championed institution into retirement

Even after he retired from New Mexico State University in 1984, former NMSU President Gerald Thomas was a steadfast supporter of the institution.

His concern for longtime support and nurturing of the university he loved so much started when he was still at the helm of the institution. One of his most rewarding projects during his 1970-84 tenure as president was the establishment of the President's Associates Scholarship program, which has helped many students since it started.

NMSU Board of Regents Chair Mike Cheney shared a passion for the program with Thomas, who passed away Wednesday, July 31, at the age of 94.

"We are very sorry to learn about the passing of President Gerald Thomas," Cheney said. "His demeanor and his reputation will leave a lasting impression on our university. One great example of his legacy is his work with our community to make a difference for our students. He helped establish the President's Associates Scholarship program. This program is near and dear to my heart. My wife and I have been active in helping to support students with this scholarship, which is a great way for New Mexico high school students to further their education. Dr. Thomas will certainly be missed."

Thomas was involved in a variety of programs beneficial for the university, and was honored when he retired in 1984 by the creation of the first academic chair established at NMSU. The $1 million Gerald W. Thomas Chair in Agriculture, established by the College of Agriculture and Home Economics, now named the College of Agricultural, Consumer and Environmental Sciences, is focused on food production and natural resources.

Four years later, the college's main building was renamed in his honor.

In 1998, Thomas received NMSU's first Hiram Hadley Founder's Award of Excellence in recognition for "his key leadership in the development of a major comprehensive university in the spirit of NMSU's founding leader."

In 2000, he and his wife, Jean, were awarded the Branding Iron award, the highest honor presented by the New Mexico State University Foundation. It was given in recognition of their ongoing commitment to the university.

In 2006, they were awarded the Sam Steel Exemplar Award from the college's Sam Steel Society, which was given for the first time that year. It is for individuals or couples who have excelled in their chosen field and who have been active in the community and greatly involved with NMSU.

"Education is a continuing process," Gerald Thomas said at the time. "You get a degree, then you have something. But, you have to keep an open mind and have to be willing to learn from interactions and events and continue to study ... there has to be excitement and joy in the process of gaining knowledge. More knowledge gained makes you feel more at home in the world, whether here or abroad."

Jean Thomas, too, was recognized by the university and community for the work she did for the institution. In 1984, she was honored by the NMSU Board of Regents with the Regents Medal for outstanding services in support of people and programs of the university.

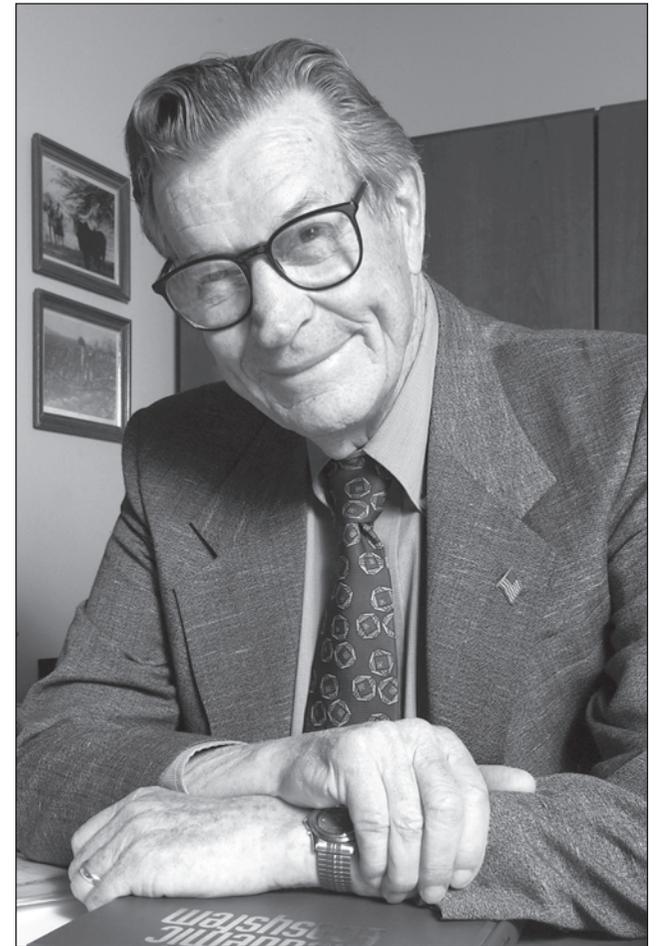

"It's important to emphasize that although Gerald was president, his wife, Jean, had a distinguished career in her own right," College of ACES Dean Lowell Catlett said during a recognition event in 2006. "Together, the two have been positive influences. Not only NMSU role models, but for all walks of life. They are a couple that is a blessing to New Mexico."

Gerald and Jean Thomas have been instrumental in the establishment of several scholarships, as well, over the years including:

- The Jean Thomas Endowed Scholarship, established in 2003 to make annual awards for educational expenses. The award recipients must be graduates of a New Mexico high school, and be interested in math education at the middle school level in the College of Education at NMSU.
- The Gary A. Shipley Memorial Scholarship, established by

“You have to keep an open mind and have to be willing to learn from interactions and events and continue to study.”

Violence

Representatives from the nonprofit organizations said they've seen an increased need for their services. Theresa Armendariz, La Casa executive director, said the organization has provided shelter by a count of 22,000 beds. In the fiscal 2009-10 year, the bed count was a little more than 10,000, she said.

"That's double the beds in just a few years," Armendariz said.

La Casa offers safe housing, counseling and support services to victims of domestic violence and their children. Along with emergency shelter, La Casa also provides rental assistance, case management and support services to victims and their children who are transitioning into an independent living situation. Legal services are provided for issues such as protective orders, divorce and custody disputes.

La Casa also offers a program for men with histories of partner abuse. The program offers information and practical tools to change those behaviors of physical, verbal, emotional or sexual abuse. Specialized parenting education also is offered, along with educational outreach.

Donna Richmond, La Piñon's executive director, said she didn't believe that domestic violence had increased as much, as there are now more people willing to report it and seek help. In addition to providing around-the-clock counseling through hotlines, La Piñon also offers assistance in collecting forensic evidence, therapeutic counseling and community education.

Las Cruces is not unique in seeing a steady increase in domestic violence, Williams said. Domestic violence has been on the rise nationally, so it can't be just attributed to the hot weather or local economy, he said. Nevertheless, Williams said he didn't want his department or the community to become complacent about the problem.

"As a community, we're saying that we don't condone this kind of behavior," Williams said.

Las Cruces Police Chief Richard Williams spoke about domestic violence awareness Friday, Aug. 2.

Domestic violence prevention tips

Las Cruces Police Department offers the following tips to prevent more victims of domestic violence:

You are likely in an abusive relationship if any one or more of these conditions exist:

- You are isolated from friends and family.
- You are embarrassed by your partner's put-downs.
- Your partner looks or acts in ways that scare you.
- Your partner controls what you do, who you see or who you talk to.
- Your money is controlled by your partner.
- Your partner dominates your decisions.
- Your parenting is constantly criticized, or your partner threatens to take or harm your children.
- You are blamed for provoking abuse.
- Your partner destroys your personal property.
- Your partner intimidates you with weapons.
- Your partner threatens to harm or kill you, or someone else.

Victims of domestic violence, and friends or family of victims, need to understand that violence will not stop on its own and will only become worse and more violent. Breaking all ties and separating yourself from the violent partner is the only way to get away from the violence. However, the most dangerous time for the victim of domestic violence is when the victim leaves the relationship, so victims need to have an exit strategy in place and utilize available resources.

Make leaving less risky:

- Call 911 if you are not free to leave.
- Let someone you trust know of your situation.
- Identify a safe place and a plan to get there.
- Set money and personal property aside and ask someone you trust to keep them for you.
- Know the abuser's schedule and a safe time to leave.
- If reaching out for help on the phone or Internet, erase Internet history, emails sent or received and call histories to protect yourself from the abuser who may gain access to your communications.

After leaving a violent relationship, you need a plan to stay safe:

- Consider going to a shelter. La Casa Inc. is a domestic violence shelter in Las Cruces.
- Report the violence to your local law enforcement agency.
- Get an order of protection with the help of law enforcement, shelters or District Court.
- If you're staying in a private home, properly secure it by changing locks and adding an alarm system.
- Keep your new address confidential and consider using a U.S. Postal Service box for mail.

- Stay off social media sites or change security settings.
- Secure credit and financial accounts by changing passwords or PINs.
- Consider changing phone numbers, or blocking calls from offenders and his/her friends.
- Protect yourself at work. Let your supervisor know of your situation and ask that you are escorted to and from your vehicle.
- Make a safety plan with your children and alert schools of the danger.
- Keep trusted family and friends informed of your situation. Have check-in times so they know you are safe.
- Be prepared to call 911 at any time. Don't call a friend or family member first if you are in danger. Call 911 and ask for police.

Helpful resources:

- If you are in immediate danger or have been the victim of violence, call 911.
- Teach your children to keep safe and call 911 if there is danger. Teach them to run to a neighbor's house to call 911 if needed.
- Get support and talk to a victims' advocate. La Casa: 800-376-2272; National Domestic Violence Hotline: 800-799-SAFE (7233); LCPD: 528-4111.

Department, he said, which were part of a series of public meetings held to develop the project. Also, a stretch of lawn will connect the walking trail on the drainage canal off North Main Street with the park, he said. Altogether, the open space at Park Ridge will amount to between 15 and 20 percent of the property.

"There have been no backroom deals," Pofahl said. "There probably has never been a development in Las Cruces that has been this transparent."

Those who object to the proposal question the need for a third hospital in Las Cruces, the reputation and legality of the company poised to become the hospital owner, objections to the noise from a helicopter pad on the hospital roof, along with a number of other concerns.

Pofahl attributes much of the objection to those who haven't given up on the idea that the city should have acquired the former country club as an extension of Apodaca Park. The property will never again be a country club, Pofahl said, and local officials aren't interested in acquiring another large park while at the same time developing 700 acres behind the Army Corps of Engineers dam into the city's largest park. Combined with three other parks, the city has a total of 1,200 acres in the process of becoming parks around the city.

The proposed operator, Galichia Hospital Group LLC, doesn't violate federal law, according to Park Ridge's "Frequently Asked Questions" fact sheet, because it and the Galichia Medical Center Las Cruces LLC will not be owned by local physicians, which is one of the objections that has been raised.

According to concerns voiced by the Country Club Neighborhood Association, the ownership and management arrangement is being done to skirt federal law, and state officials may not certify Galichia because of past problems. According to the Park Ridge FAQ, the company is a "professional firm with a stellar reputation at providing great patient care."

Pofahl said the proposed hospital is not nearly as large as the other two existing hospitals – the 286-bed Memorial Medical Center and 168-bed MountainView Regional Medical Center. He said the hospital services will be geared to the needs of aging baby boomers and offer another option to a side of the city that is further away from the other two hospitals.

Pofahl said it was the growth of aging baby boomers that first spawned the consideration of medical campus development, which eventually led to the idea of anchoring it with a small hospital.

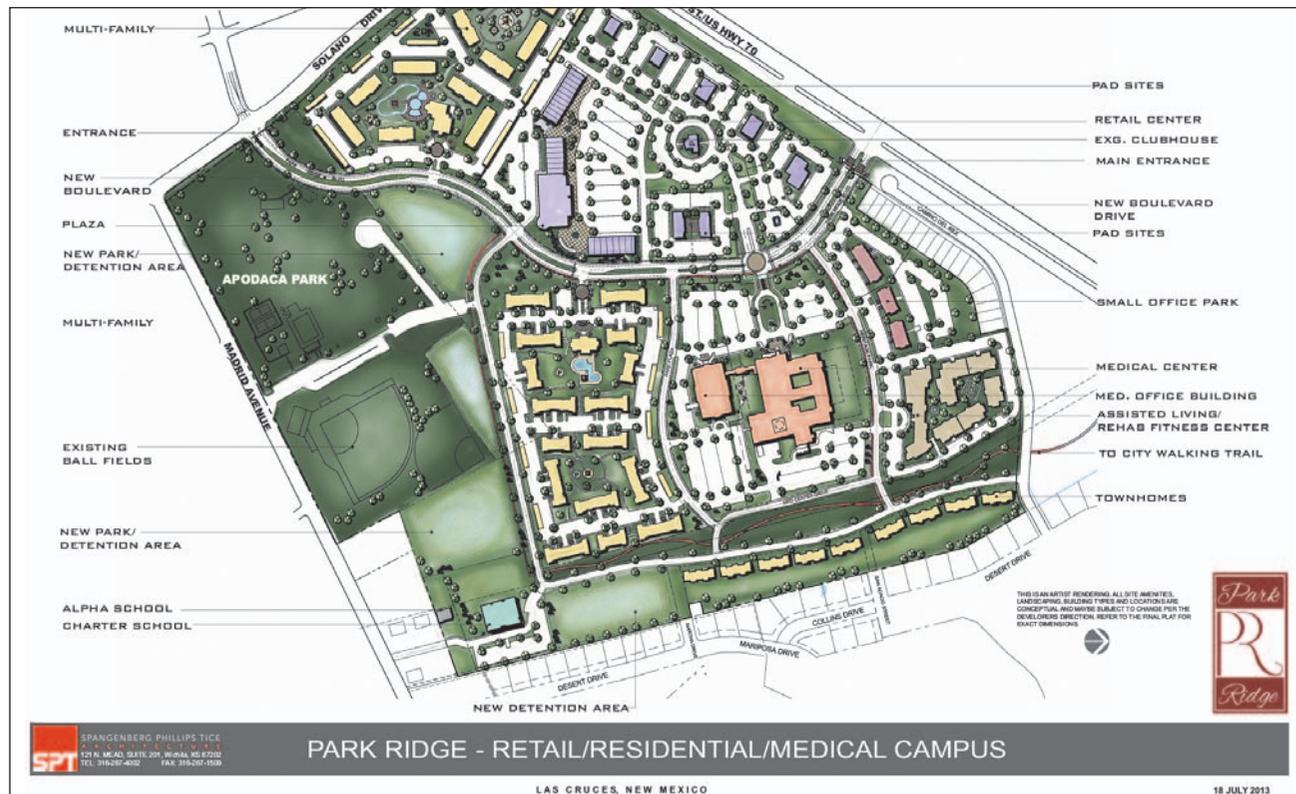

The heliport, according to Park Ridge FAQ, is not expected to be in frequent use and the preferred flight plan will be over the commercial sections of the development.

A lot of accommodations have been made to the neighboring residents, Pofahl said, such as keeping certain streets closed to replacing septic tanks with city sewer at no cost. The development will also clear out an eye-sore "dump" of city materials behind the ball park, he said, and the drainage will be designed to de-silt the water that will then be held in park ponding areas in a manner to help recharge of the local water table.

These kinds of features, Pofahl said, will make Park Ridge a model of urban infill that is more sustainable while still providing economic growth opportunities through the mix of commercial uses ranging from medical offices to retail stores.

"This was designed to serve this neighborhood," he said. "It will be a very walkable, pedestrian-friendly community. ... We want this whole development to have a resort feel to it."

While there may be some people still fighting the proposal, Pofahl said 260 residents in the neighborhood and 14 of the 18 adjacent townhome owners have signed petitions supporting the project.

This rendering shows what the proposed, multiuse Park Ridge development will look like when completed.

surprising history of the area, which had been primarily farm until it was connected with the outside by the railroad and its station. That attracted four British men, who moved in to establish different endeavors. Their names grace some of the street names of Mesilla Park, such as George Bowman, who owned a horse farm.

"Mesilla Park in those days was even referred to as 'Little England,'" Smith said.

One of the more interesting of the group was Francis Lester, who had a catalogue business – in a long-lost building designed by Henry Trost – that by rail shipped everything from Chihuahuas to roses. The white-and-pink Francis E. Lester rose is still a desired mail-order rose to this day.

Because of its proximity to NMSU, the area has been popular with university professors, Smith said, including notable faculty such as Clyde Tombaugh, the discoverer of Pluto.

Attending last month's "Mesilla Park Momentum" meeting was Terry Moody, a state and national register coordinator from the Historic Preservation Division of the New Mexico Department of Cultural Affairs. Moody gave the residents attending guidelines for determining if the historical character of the neighborhood had been adequately retained.

One of the major tasks ahead is to survey the properties to determine how many of the area's homes have retained the neighborhood's historical integrity, which Hunner said would be assisted by NMSU history students as a real-world project for them. A sufficient portion of the structures have to be older than 50 years old to get the designation.

A major concern that has come up since people started talking about creating a historic district is that such a designation would impede with plans of private property owners, Hunner said. That's a myth, he said.

"Being in a historic district doesn't prevent you from doing whatever you want with your property," Hunner said.

Home and business owners who engage in good historically minded renovations could even see a tax break if it were to be in an historic district, Hunner said.

For those portions of Mesilla Park that are in the Las Cruces city limits, Smith said the council recently changed the demolition ordinance to extend the waiting period so that property owners could be discouraged from tearing down older homes or buildings.

Noting that the meeting was held in the Frank O'Brien Papan Community Center, Smith said that building had been one of the first early public schools in the area as New Mexico was trying achieve statehood.

"This room was here 106 years ago, so we're standing in history," he said.

For more information, call Hunner at 646-2490.

San Andres will be funded as early college high school Grant supports program's expansion

By Alta LeCompte
Las Cruces Bulletin

Gov. Susana Martinez announced Wednesday, Aug. 7, at the Arrowhead Park Early College High School that three early college high schools will be created in New Mexico this year, including one in Las Cruces.

The new schools – San Andres in Las Cruces, Mesa Vista in Mesa Vista and University High School in Roswell – won a competition that attracted 14 proposals, Martinez said.

The existing San Andres, which is located in Mesilla and serves as an alternative education site, will be transformed into the city's third early college high school. Like the city's first early college high school, Arrowhead Park, San Andres will provide general education.

Martinez announced that a $500,000 grant from the Daniels Fund, along with a $500,000 state appropriation, will make the projects possible.

Each school will prepare students for college and career options by equipping them with both a high school diploma and an associate degree or work-ready certificate with which they can step into a job such as engineering technician or respiratory technician.

Martinez stressed that students complete the program without incurring any college debt.

"This is a truly remarkable way to educate students and prepare them for the job market," she said.

Both Martinez and state Secretary of Education Hanna Skandera, who introduced the governor, praised the Las Cruces model of collaboration among the school system, Doña Ana Community College and the business community.

"We can't stop there," Martinez said. "New Mexico is a big state."

Martinez said 14 school districts competed with proposals for funding for an early college high school. She said the state education department will help schools that didn't win refine their proposals. As a result, there "could possibly be eight new early college high schools by this time next year," she said.

Calling it a "great day," Skandera said "the bar is high because it should be high."

The announcement of the Daniels Fund Grant and the expansion of New Mexico's Early College High School program came in conjunction with a State of New Mexico Education Forum at Arrowhead Park Early College High School, presented by The Bridge of Southern New Mexico and the Employability Partnership.

Linda Childears, president and CEO of the Daniels Fund, accepts the thanks of Gov. Susana Martinez while Hanna Skandera, secretary of education, looks on Wednesday, Aug. 6, at Arrowhead Park Early College High School. Martinez announced New Mexico is adding three early college high schools, including one in Las Cruces, with the assistance of a $500,000 grant from the Daniels Fund.

Director: Park programs thrive despite recession

Department aims to plant 500 trees

By Jim Hilley
Las Cruces Bulletin

Despite the economic slow down, and the resulting budget crunch for government programs, Las Cruces Parks & Recreation Director Mark Johnston said the city has been able to increase services with no increase in funding.

"In the current state of affairs, I think we are doing really well," he said. "Especially compared to many cities around the state and the nation. There have been many parks and recreation systems that have lost half of their funding and had to lay off workers.

"We haven't laid anyone off, our funding has stayed constant, we deliver a good product so we are in very good shape here in Las Cruces."

Johnston said much of the credit goes to the parks and recreation staff.

"They have done a tremendous job, increasing programming, coming up with other options, really kind of listening to the customer to deliver. Our youth leagues and our adult leagues have expanded and grown, so the services are increasing even with a hold-the-line budget."

Johnston said there was a drop off in out-of-town visitors when the recession began, but recently there has been an increase in the number of visitors.

"The last few ball tournaments we have had have been attended by more and more folks from outside," he said. "We work closely with our convention and visitors bureau, and they take a survey of where people are coming from – we've had folks from Arizona, Colorado and Texas attending our tournaments.

"The general consensus is a Las Cruces is a good place to come to."

Johnston said that even with the recession, the city has been able to fund some important improvements to its facilities, including replacement lighting for the Burn Lake soccer fields.

"City Council approved the lighting and we got funding – more than $400,000 worth of new lights – that's going to really help out, especially with our adult programs, and it will ease up the use of our two lit fields at High Noon (Soccer Fields)," he said.

Johnston said that Las Cruces should not expect to go fishing at Burn Lake any time soon, however.

"Burn Lake is still dry" he said. "We need Mother Nature to cooperate and give us a tremendous amount of rain. Our rainfall is so down over the last couple of years.

"The surface water will refill it for a while, but the bottom of the lake settles with the water table, so it will fill and slowly seep until the water table does come back up."

With no fishing at Burn Lake, Johnston said the New Mexico Game and Fish Department is looking for alternatives.

"I did have a conversation about stocking Young Park even more and opening it up to adults, but they haven't made a formal decision yet," Johnston said.

Karen Garcia, 17, Jacob Uribe, 14, Isabella Villalobos, 15, and Harley Zamora, 16, of Groundworks Doña Ana, plant a tree at Legends West Park July 16, as part of the city's effort to plant 500 trees during 2013.

"It has catfish and bass. It was amazing – a young fisherman caught a 25-pound catfish in there just recently."

There are several projects in Las Cruces that Johnston said he is still seeking funding to accomplish.

"We are looking at ways to fund new rest rooms at Young Park," he said. "We had vandalism and the rest rooms are shut down. We've been using porta-potties for quite some time and we are looking for funds to rebuild it."

Johnston said his department has been very innovative in finding ways to improve city parks even in tough economic times.

"We have an active nursery," he said. "We buy small plants, shrubs and trees, we grow them up to planting maturity over the course of three-to-five years and then we get them in the ground.

"This year, we partnered with Groundworks Doña Ana; they are a grant-funded group of young people who are working with us to plant 500 trees this year in Las Cruces parks.

"Young Park received over 100 trees. In the next four or five or six years, the shade canopy down there will be unbelievable."

Bouncing back from injuries

Strnadova, Memphis hope to regain form

Barbara Boxleitner
Keeping up

This soccer season will go smoothly for Alena Strnadova, if she can stay healthy.

The Las Cruces High School graduate had an impressive freshman season for the University of Memphis, but injuries have been costly the past two seasons.

STRNADOVA

"It was very frustrating," she said. "It was quite an emotional roller coaster."

Strnadova was named to the All-Conference USA Freshman Team. She had three goals in playing 17 of 22 games that season, all starts.

"She's a very good technician, a very skilled player," Memphis coach Brooks Monaghan said. "She's an extremely hard worker. She's very good on the dribble."

Concussions cost Strnadova the next season, so she has to be careful how she manages herself. For example, sprinting back and forth, especially in different directions, can lead to migraines, she said, and training in extreme heat can cause headaches. This season, she won't be trying to head balls on free kicks and corner kicks like she did as a freshman.

She said she fractured a vertebrae and slipped a disk in her back while playing soccer with boys before last season. She played two games and sat out two weeks.

"My nerves were really bad," she said.

Strnadova returned for one game, then missed more than a month. She played twice more before being sidelined for good.

Rehab has helped the back recover, and Strnadova continues stretching exercises for maintenance.

A return to form is what Strnadova and the team need. The Tigers finished 10-8-1 last year, their fewest wins since 2003, according to the school's online archive.

Players, coaches laud nutrition and weight program

By Jim Hilley
Las Cruces Bulletin

When a coach takes over a struggling college football program in January, there are not a lot of arrows in his quiver to make changes before the beginning of play in late August or early September.

The coach can assemble his staff and hit the recruiting trail, hoping to upgrade the talent pool. He can begin to instill his new offensive and defensive schemes with an incomplete squad during spring practice, and he can take steps to ensure his team is in top physical shape when school starts in the fall.

At media day for the New Mexico State University Aggies Monday, Aug. 5, there was unanimous agreement among players and coaches the hiring of Don Decker as director of strength and conditioning and Virgil Knight as assistant strength and conditioning coach will pay off big for the Aggies this season.

When asked what he is doing to turn around the NMSU football program, coach Doug Martin immediately brought up what the changes in the strength and conditioning program have done for his team.

"I think we have already made changes with the strength and nutrition program alone," Martin said. "We've changed the attitude of our players, the look of our players physically. Hiring Don Decker as our strength coach was probably one of the best hires that we have made."

"He is a great source of confidence for the players. He does a lot of different things with them in the weight room, and we are already seeing the product of that."

"It's been great," said running back Geremi

Freshman quarterback King Davis III practices at the New Mexico State University practice field west of Aggie Memorial Stadium Tuesday, Aug. 6. The Aggies open the football season Saturday, Aug. 31, at the University of Texas before returning to Las Cruces for their first home game Saturday, Sept. 7, against the University of Minnesota.

Morrison. "I put on a couple more pounds and it's been good. Coach Decker has been running us and I feel in better condition than I have ever been. I feel good."

"It's going really good," said senior free safety Davis Cazares. "I put on about 10 or 15 pounds of muscle since last year and I feel a

Fairacres falls short in regional final

Local Little League team's inspiring run ends with 6-0 loss

By Jim Hilley
Las Cruces Bulletin

There was a little bit of local flavor to the 2013 Southwest Regional Little League Tournament in Waco, Texas. Representing New Mexico in the tournament is the Fairacres Little League team from Las Cruces.

After going 3-0 in pool play, the Fairacres team defeated a team from Bossier City, La., Monday, Aug. 5, in the regional semifinals 9-3. Fairacres played the Texas West team Wednesday, Aug. 7, for a chance to travel to Williamsport, Pa., in the Little League World Series.

Unfortunately for local fans, Fairacres fell to the outstanding pitching of the Universal Little League's (Texas-West) Jacob Garza 6-0, to end their bid for a trip to Williamsport.

Debra Tellez, whose 10-year-old son is a utility player and pitch runner for Fairacres, said she believes the team is the first to represent Las Cruces in the regionals in 40 years.

While the team is called Fairacres, where coach Scott Bannister built a Little League regulation-size ball field, Tellez said the team really represents all of Las Cruces.

The team includes players from Zia, Camino Real, Mesilla Valley Christian Schools, Lynn, Vista and Picacho middle schools, Tellez said.

Telles said that Bannister built a ball field after learning there were no Little League regulation ball parks in Las Cruces. Following Little League regulations, Bannister hosted a draft of local players and formed a six-team league.

"The field has no lights," Tellez said. "All the games had to be played before 5:30 p.m. before it got dark."

Registration fees went to pay for umpires, she said.

"The current team is an all-star team from league play," Tellez said.

After winning the Copper League District tournament in Bayard, N.M., the team won the Zia League Tournament in Albuquerque, giving them the opportunity to advance to the regional tournament.

lot healthier, a lot more conditioned. I feel way stronger than I have ever felt in my life. Coach Knight and coach Decker have done great things as far as conditioning and weight lifting.”

Bryan Bonilla, a senior linebacker counted on to be one of the team's leaders this season, said you can see the effects of the conditioning program on the whole team.

“Guys look a lot more full as far as muscle tone,” he said “We have a weight goal to reach every week, so essentially by game time, it will be great.

“Decker personally made me gain 20 pounds. The conditioning, the nutrition, the weights and the numbers that we are putting up now, it definitely has the recipe to change things around here.”

With fall practice starting Sunday, Aug. 4, Martin has less than a month to get his team ready to play at the University of Texas Saturday, Aug. 31, the beginning of what could be a brutal schedule for the Aggies. Both coaches and players said they welcome the challenges they face this year playing as an independent.

“ I don't think you can get a better home schedule than what we have here right now. ”

DOUG MARTIN,
NMSU football coach

“I think our schedule is exciting,” Morrison said. “I know it's a tough schedule, but I am looking forward to playing some of these big schools and seeing what they're all about. You see them on TV all the time, they are quality teams and we want to see how we stack up against the best.”

“The schedule that we have is really exciting,” Bonilla said. “Bringing BCS teams to Las Cruces is bringing the town a whole lot of excitement. This is obviously the best schedule that I have played.”

Bonilla said he is especially excited about playing at UCLA on Sept. 21.

“Playing in my home town, my home city, against UCLA – I mean it's awesome. Dreaming about playing in the Rose Bowl and actually doing it,” he said. “Going to UT, I mean this is great.

“It's a big stage and when you play on a big stage you have to step up and play into that.”

Martin said he thinks the tough schedule is a positive for the Aggies.

“Seven home games, that is an advantage for us – it hasn't happened in forever,” he said. “Having two BCS teams here – Boston College and Minnesota – that should be great for our fans.

“The rivalry game with UTEP is here. I don't think you can get a better home schedule than what we have here right now. Obviously it is a challenging schedule, but it also presents us with a lot of opportunities.

“I like where we are headed. We are establishing an identity, what we want this football program to look like.”

“It's been tough,” Monaghan said. “She has the ability to be a big-time player for us.”

Monaghan said Strnadova is an athletic, gifted playmaker who contributes offensively and defensively.

“She had a very good spring. She's progressed extremely well. She was probably our best player during the last spring game.”

Aggie gridiron squad finds needed talent close at hand

Local players contribute to NMSU football

Jack Nixon
Jack's Corner

The coming football season at New Mexico State University could see several local players play significant roles in the team's progress.

Head coach Doug Martin was not hesitant to tout junior running back Brandon Betancourt as an elusive runner who can "make you miss" as a key part of his game plan.

Betancourt has seen spot duty in his first two years in Division I football as a wide receiver, running back and kick returner. A grad of Mayfield High, Betancourt is majoring in psychology.

Another Trojan-Bulldawg showdown is brewing with Xavier Hall competing with Betancourt for playing time in the backfield. Martin has praise for him as well.

"I like his strength, he can help us," Martin said.

Hall was a member of the state championship team last fall and was chosen first team all-state and the District Five Player of the Year. In prep play he rushed for more than 4,000 yards in three years as a Bulldawg.

The starter's position currently belongs to Germi Morrison, but Martin says there are no guarantees as training camp rolls on.

At this point I'd like to remind you of some other "locals" who left their mark on Aggie football history.

Wide receivers Ryan Shaw, Tony Lambert and Javier Holguin gave Aggie fans many thrills and lots of touchdowns in the 1970s and 1990s. If you go back further, you will see the names that have been the foundation of our community.

A pair of Bradleys played Aggie football, Jim and Jim Jr.

Pops, of course, came back to coach the Aggies' football team in the late 1970s. Both Bradleys are revered for their contributions to the game and our town.

Ed Boykin played for the Crimson and White from 1951-54. Boykin was also an assistant for NM State after his playing days were done, but his service to Las Cruces and the state of New Mexico is of a grander scale. Boykin was a state lawmaker in Santa Fe for a few terms before retiring to enjoy his golden years.

The Salopeks and Apodacas are a couple of the families who are at the heart of the local Ag economy. The roster of past Aggie football players is filled with members of their family trees who played, graduated and helped build the Mesilla Valley.

Matt Ramondo is the final local player I want to mention from this year's team. The massive nose tackle is looking to be the stopper in the middle of this year's 3-4 alignment. Ramondo was a top 50 recruit at his position after his senior year, and was named all-state and the defensive player of the year for New Mexico.

After a year at Michigan State, Ramondo is ready to make the big hits this fall for the Aggies. Local players are a rich part of the tapestry on NM State football.

Playing in your first pro-am?

Everything that you need to know

Charlie Blanchard
Golf Doctor

Just the other day, I played in a pro-am tournament at Red Hawk Golf Club in Las Cruces with my friend Justin Darling, the PGA pro at Sonoma Ranch Golf Course. Justin likes pro-ams, and is accustomed to playing very well and winning some money.

A few years ago, I played with him at Lone Star in El Paso when he shot a stellar 66 and won low pro honors, and more money. That makes sense, after all, since he's a professional golfer. Our team of three amateurs (including me) didn't do so well at Red Hawk, but we had a lot of fun.

I confess I have never played in a pro-am associated with a PGA or LPGA tour tournament. And I really don't have a spare $5,000 or $10,000 lying around just to brag to my friends I teed it up with Joe Tour player who would probably tell me my swing lacked "loft" anyway. The truth is, pro-ams are mostly interesting, while doing some good for the tour and PGA section charities, not to mention helping golf clubs who host the tournaments.

My good friend Gregg Martin, owner of the Gregg Martin Agency with Farmers Insurance, played in a pro-am at the Farmers Insurance Open on the legendary Torrey Pines Golf Course in San Diego. He played with David Duval and said his experience was a great one, and Duval was as friendly as can be.

I'm glad for Martin, but sometimes the tour pros ignore the hacks that paid good money to have the experience of rubbing shoulders and golf bags with the professional golfing celebrities they admire and respect. The rule-makers at the PGA Tour headquarters require its players (by contract) to play in the Wednesday pro-am events because so much money goes to their charities. Some tour players would rather not perform that duty. That category of pros view their golf as a job, and don't see themselves as entertainers, especially guiding Joe-chop around the course.

Looking back on the dozens of pro-am tournaments I have played in New Mexico, it may be worth sharing some observations, along with some do's and don'ts for some of you folks who may find yourself invited to a pro-am one of these days.

The typical pro-am involves a team with one pro and three amateur golfers. The format is almost always counting two balls: either the two best balls gross, if it is a "scratch" tournament; or one gross ball and one net best ball, if it is a handicap event. There are usually payouts for low amateur scores, gross and net, proximity prizes on par threes and a longest drive contest. Payouts are usually generous, and if they're not, word spreads fast.

One of my favorite pro-ams is the "Pro-Scratch" held every spring at the Inn of the Mountain Gods course on the Mescalero Indian reservation near Ruidoso, N.M., because it's a two-day tournament and there are no handicaps.

If you are new to my column, please understand I think the USGA is a worthwhile and necessary organization, but I don't like the handicap system as it is currently set up. There is always some sandbagger who carries a 14 and shoots 74. So, that's why I like a scratch event. Plus, two days means an outing with golf buddies and plenty of off-course activities. To play in a "scratch" tournament, you don't have to have a zero or plus handicap; you just don't get to deduct strokes from your score.

Should you get an invite to play in a PGA section pro-am, here are some things to keep in mind. Expect to pay about $100 to $200, preferably by check or cash. If they ask if you want in the skins, pay the $20 or so; don't be miserly.

Very importantly, be on time. Most often there is a shotgun start and organizers try to get going without delay. If it's a 9 a.m. shotgun, be at the golf course by 8 a.m., leaving you enough time to hit some range balls, putt a little bit, check in and meet and greet other golfers and pros you know, which is one of the fun parts of the day.

Show up at the golf course dressed like you are a golfer, not a plumber. No blue jeans and stupid T-shirts. Before you hit your first shot, count your clubs. You're allowed 14, of course, and it's easy for an extra club to get lost in your bag.

As for etiquette, I suggest you be on extra-good behavior, especially if this is your first rodeo - er, pro-am. No standing in golfers' line of sight. No talking during peoples' backswings. No walking in someone's putt line or even the through-line - that six foot zone past the hole in their line.

Watch carefully where you hit your golf ball. The last thing you want is to have your whole group out looking for your ball, holding up the rest of the golf course when you disgustingly forgot to follow it closely as it headed toward the bushes.

Turning to the category of 'don'ts,' the first is don't allow yourself to be overserved. In other words, don't get drunk. On the other hand, don't be afraid to have a lot of fun. The basic rule is, don't do anything that would embarrass your pro in any way. That includes bringing loud friends to cheer you on, or little urchins to run around the golf course. Don't.

There isn't any magic strategy to playing in a pro-am format, except to say that the more players who have "looks" at birdie putts on each hole the better. Team scores start to fall apart when only half the players have a chance on a particular hole. Mostly, that favors straight shots and slightly more conservative play, at least on the part of the non-pros.

On the greens, you always need to know what the situation is and what other people are doing. For example, you have a slick downhill 8-foot birdie putt, but there is only one other player who is in the hole, and has a chance for par or birdie. Don't get aggressive and risk running your putt 6 feet past and then three-putting. Be smart and careful.

If you hadn't guessed, pro-ams are all about putting. Most folks showing up at these outings are able to golf it around the fairways decently, but the difference is on the greens. The good putters are the ones in the money. And there is often money riding on one or two places for low amateur net score, which is worthwhile. So do your best, but don't over-try.

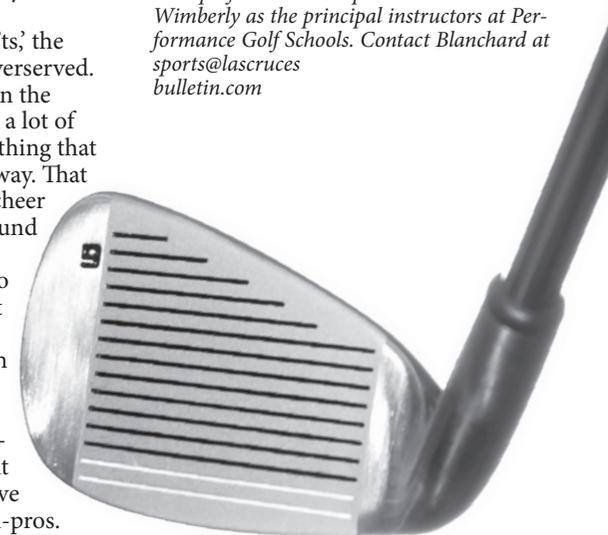

It's been my experience that nerves come into play when folks aren't buying mulligans and have to putt everything out. And make no mistake there can be some pressure. It takes some getting used to, knowing that three other guys (or gals) are counting on you to make a 4-footer so you won't let them down.

Personally, I have had my episodes where I choked under the pressure, but I've also had my moments of performing brilliantly. It's a good test of being a clutch golfer. One way to settle the nerves is to focus on the question, "how can I contribute to this team effort?" in contrast to, "how can I avoid getting embarrassed?" Be a team player.

One of my friends asked me, "OK, how do I get to play in a pro-am?" My advice is get to know your pro. If you're a regular at your golf course, make it known that you would welcome an invitation if one comes available. You need to have a USGA handicap, so join your men's or ladies' golf association, and enter your scores in the computer faithfully.

You may get your first invite when someone else bails out, so try your best to be available. I have had to rearrange my work schedule several times, and where there is a golfing will, there is usually a way.

Immunizations clinics set

Vaccination requirements detailed

In partnership with the New Mexico Department of Health (NMDOH), Las Cruces Public Schools has scheduled student immunization clinics shortly before the start of the 2013-14 school year, said LCPS Director of Health Services Ellen Williams, RN.

The school district follows NMDOH student immunization requirements exactly, said Williams, who noted that New Mexico school nurses are granted public health authority by the NMDOH secretary for collecting and submitting student immunization information.

Student immunization clinics will be held at Allen Theatres Cineport 10, Mesilla Valley Mall, 700 S. Telshor Blvd., on these dates:

- 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Friday, Aug. 9
- 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday, Aug. 12
- 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Wednesday, Aug. 14

The Doña Ana Public Health Department offers free, walk-in immunizations from 8 to 11 a.m. and 1 to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, throughout the year at its office at 1850 Copper Loop, Suite A, just off 17th Street. Immunizations will not be offered at that location during the back-to-school immunizations listed above, but the clinic will have additional immunization staff on duty Tuesday, Aug. 13, and Thursday and Friday, Aug. 15-16.

"Allen Theatres is a wonderful LCPS/NMDOH partner in this very important student immunization program," Williams said. "They are providing the space for the clinics, plus they have more than adequate parking and they are on the city bus line."

Student studies flooding

NMSU geographer learns about risk areas

As floods continue to swamp a number of states on the East Coast, a New Mexico State University researcher has returned from an international conference with the latest technologies in flood-risk mapping.

Roberta Lujan, a graduate assistant in the College of Arts and Sciences, recently attended the Esri International Users Conference in San Diego to learn more on modeling potential flood areas.

A geographic information systems (GIS) technician in the university's Spatial Applications and Research Center (SpARC), Lujan was among 12,000 attendees from 130 countries around the world at the conference in July.

"With the software, we can model the areas more accurately and produce maps that can be used to alert the public, government officials and EMS where the high-risk areas would be," Lujan said.

The weeklong symposium included paper presentation sessions, technical workshops and demonstrations designed to showcase real applications in GIS. Lujan, who teaches lab sections on map use and analysis and beginning cartography, was also able to attend a presentation that focused on ArcHydro, the GIS software that links hydrologic data to water resource modeling.

"I learned a great deal, and being able to attend sessions on flood modeling, and hydrologic and hydraulic modeling gave me great insight," Lujan said. "Additionally, I was able to make great contacts and network with those in the GIS industry."

Lujan said one of the conference highlights included an appearance by recording artist Will.i.am., who spoke about the "i.am.angel Foundation." The artist created the organization to help provide resources to needy students who want to attend college.

"He was joined by six high school students who used Esri technology in their classrooms for mapping projects throughout the school year, including on how they could transform their own neighborhoods," Lujan said.

Lujan's trip was made possible through the help of the NMSU Department of Geography and the SpARC Lab.

"It was great to see all the ways GIS is being used throughout the world," Lujan said. "I was especially touched by countless organizations that use it for humanitarian purposes. This really opened my mind to the unlimited possibilities of GIS, and how I could use my own skills and knowledge to benefit the greater good."

Investigation leads to charges against four

The four current and former city employees charged with falsifying Fleet Management documents were arrested Monday, Aug. 5.

Albert Favela, 45, Edward L. Tellez, 46, Inez Frank Giron, 34, and Christopher J. Bustamante, 45, are all charged with forgery in the case that has been under investigation for several months.

Favela, a former supervisor at Fleet Management, is charged with four counts each of forgery and embezzlement. Tellez and Giron are each charged with two counts of forgery while Bustamante faces one count.

Favela, Tellez, Giron and Bustamante were arrested and booked into the Doña Ana Las Cruces Police detectives allege that on numerous occasions, Favela asked employees in order to bill the city for parts, batteries or tires that were purchased but never installed on municipal vehicles. The investigation allegedly revealed that some of the parts were purchased for vehicles the city doesn't even own.

Officials believe that Favela used some of the parts billed to the city for mechanical work done outside the scope of his employment.

Detectives are continuing their investigation and additional charges are possible.

OBITUARY

ORLEAN (RAMZY) HOLSOME

November 20, 1920 to July 29, 2013

Orlean (Ramzy) Holsome - a/k/a Mama - passed away at age 92 Monday, July 29, 2013 in Las Cruces, New Mexico. She was born Nov. 20, 1920, in Elgin, Texas.

Orlean's parents were Estella and Robert Ramzy. She was about 10 years old and the oldest of five children when the Ramzy family and the Holsome family decided they'd had enough of picking cotton in Texas and headed for California back around 1930. They made it as far as Arizona, when car problems caused them to turn around and stake out some unclaimed property (under the Homesteaders' Act) back in New Mexico. She eventually married S.V. ("Sam") Holsome (the oldest in his family), whereupon they raised seven children to maturity.

Her parents helped construct the building that still houses the North Mesquite Street Church of Christ, for whose upkeep she and her husband eventually took responsibility. In addition to being active in the church, Sam and Orlean were longtime members of the Doña Ana County NAACP. Besides being a mom, she worked as a housekeeper.

In the 1960s, she opened a daycare business named "Holsome Daycare," continuing until she retired in 2000.

Some said she could be tough, but many remember her for having a little girl's smile.

She was preceded in death by her parents, Robert and Estella Ramzy; her husband, S.V. "Sam" Holsome; a toddler named Samuel Holsome, Jr.; a daughter, Helen Ruth "Shirley" (Holsome) Lewis; a granddaughter, Angela Holsome; a grandson, Jerico Taylor; and an infant great-granddaughter.

She is survived by a sister, Stella (Ramzy) Gipson; five brothers, those being Robert, Isaiah, William, and Frank Ramzy; three sons, those being Nathaniel, Marvin and Jerry Holsome; three daughters, those being Kathleen (Holsome) Sellers, Betty (Holsome) Fielder, and Yvonne (Holsome) Taylor; numerous grandchildren, great-grandchildren, nieces and nephews, all of whom loved her, and whom she loved in return.

Services were held Monday, Aug. 5, at the Church of Christ, 1520 N. Mesquite St., with Bro. Alfred Rucks presiding.

Andy Nuñez, former state representative and mayor of Hatch, changed his voter registration to Republican and announced his candidacy for state representative in District 36.

Nuñez, a native New Mexican, served as a state representative from 2001 through 2012 and is currently serving as the mayor of Hatch.

Nuñez officially changed his voter registration on Aug. 6, in the Secretary of State's office in Santa Fe, where he made his announcement for candidacy.

"New Mexico is lagging in many categories and I know we can do better," Nuñez said. "That's why I plan to serve - to do my part in moving this state forward. Just as I have in the past, I look forward to working with others from both sides of the aisle to tackle important

Organic farm tours set

NMSU leads visit to four New Mexico farms

A great way to learn about farming techniques is to visit successful operations. With the increased interest in organic farming, an opportunity is being afforded for new and transitioning organic growers to visit farms and observe some of the ways they can manage pests and encourage beneficial insects.

New Mexico State University's College of Agricultural, Consumer and Environmental Sciences and the New Mexico Department of Agriculture's Organic Program are presenting a series of four farm tours hosted by organic growers throughout New Mexico, who produce a variety of crops.

"These on-farm workshops provide an opportunity to view both pest and beneficial insects on a variety of crops, and to discuss approaches to their management within organic cropping systems," said Tessa Grasswitz, NMSU's integrated pest management specialist. Such methods include the use of "insectary" plants, hedgerows, cover crops, nest boxes or roosting sites, which can attract and support beneficial organisms such as predatory and parasitic insects, spiders, birds and bats, all of which can help suppress insect pests and/or problem vertebrates such as mice and gophers.

"Each workshop will consist of a farm walk and discussion," said Joanie Quinn, NMDA's organic adviser.

The first farm tour will be from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 15, at the Thompson Farm in Edgewood.

"Bob Thompson sells certified organic vegetables at three area farmers' markets and has recently added an apple orchard to the farm," Quinn said.

The second farm tour will be from 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 18, at Veronica Serna's farm in Buena Vista, near Mora.

"Veronica will guide us through her meadows of Timothy and orchard grass, which provide a diverse refuge for beneficial insects," Grasswitz said.

The third farm tour will be from 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 8, at Skarsgard Farms in Albuquerque.

"Monte Skarsgard will host the tour of his farm that is a certified organic 1,300-member CSA (community-supported agriculture), wholesale and farmers' market operation with 40 drip-irrigated acres of greenhouse and fields," Quinn said.

The fourth farm tour will be from 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 22, at Freshies farm in Lyden, near Alcalde.

Back-to-school news

Students must enroll Children can't simply show up

Before a student can register to attend Las Cruces Public Schools, he or she must have updated immunization records, proof of residency and a birth certificate.

Students new to LCPS in the 2013-14 school year also need to provide their previous school records, or, at a minimum, their last school report cards.

All qualified students in the school district, except those exempted by law, regulations or rules, must enroll in school and are required to attend school full time. Kindergarten students must be at least 5 years old prior to Sept. 1 of the school year. First-grade students must be at least 6 years old prior to Sept. 1 of the school year.

To determine what school serves a particular home address, visit <http://lcpk12.nm.us/maps/locator.shtml>. Call the LCPS Transportation Department at 527-5998 if you have any questions, or visit www.arcforms.info/lcpsstreetfile/index.html.

LCPS has an open enrollment policy that allows a student to attend a school outside his or her normal attendance zone. However, the school to which a student wishes to transfer must have room for additional students for the transfer to be approved. Additionally, parents must provide their own transportation for a student to attend a school outside his or her attendance zone.

Compliance requirements are:

- Age verification: Requires birth certificate or baptismal certificate
- Identity verification: Requires passport or other legal document
- Residency verification: Requires utility bill or property tax verification
- Immunization verification: Call the New Mexico Immunization Hotline at 888-231-2367 or visit the New Mexico Department of Health website at www.health.state.nm.us/immunize/public.html. More detailed information is available at <http://lcpk12.nm.us/Registration>.

For more information, contact the LCPS Instruction Department at 527-6628.

Breakfast, lunch prices increase USDA pushes up price

The price of school breakfast will rise for all students who pay for breakfast, and the price of school lunch for middle and high school students who pay for lunch will increase beginning in the 2013-14 school year, said Las Cruces Public Schools Nutrition Services Department Director Nancy Cathey.

Student meal prices for the 2013-14 school year are as follows:

Regular prices of LCPS meals for students:

- Breakfast for all students: Price increasing from 80 cents to $1.
- Elementary lunch: $1.60 (no change)
- Middle school lunch: Price increasing from $1.70 to $1.85
- High school lunch: Price increasing from $1.75 to $2. In addition, the price of lunches served to parents and other school visitors will increase from $2.75 to $3.

Reduced-price meals:

- Breakfast for all students: 30 cents (no change)
- Lunch for all students: 40 cents (no change)
- Free breakfast and lunch: No change.

The price increases for regular-priced meals are part of LCPS' compliance with U.S. Department of Agriculture regulations that compel school districts to charge students more for regular-price meals.

The USDA has reportedly mandated price increases so that the amount paid for regular-price meals is closer to their actual cost.

Meals are available to students at regular price, or at a reduced price or free to students who qualify. There is no change in reduced-price meals.

Booker T. Washington, César E. Chávez, Conlee,

MacArthur, Sunrise and Valley View elementary schools continue as Provisional II schools in the 2013-14 school year, which means all their students automatically receive meals at no cost. There is no need for parents to make special application for free meals at these schools.

Columbia, Central and Loma Heights elementaries Provision II schools will provide breakfast only for free to all their students. Lunches are provided free or at reduced price at these schools, depending on student status.

Snacks are provided free to students who participate in eligible after-school programs at all LCPS schools.

If a family has a total household income at or below federal government guidelines, children in that family can receive free or reduced-price meals. Check with the Nutrition Services Department at 527-5995 for these guidelines, or visit the LCPS website.

Food Stamps, Food Distribution Program, Indian Reservations Funds:

If families receive Food Stamps or Food Distribution Program on Indian Reservations funds for any child, that child can receive free meals at school. If families do not receive a confirmation letter from LCPS, they can contact the Nutrition Services Department at 527-5995.

Foster children may be eligible for benefits regardless of family income, but their families must complete and submit a free and reduced meal application form.

To apply for free or reduced-priced school meals, parents must pick up an application form from the Nutrition Services Department cashier in their child's school cafeteria or the secretary in the school's front office. The completed application form should be returned to the Nutrition Services Department cashier in the school cafeteria. Application forms should not be turned in to the child's teacher.

Filmic endeavors

David Salcido
On second thought ...

Is Las Cruces ready to become a true film destination?

That's a question that for years has loomed large in the minds of not just local filmmakers, but also everyone from state legislators and city councilors to local business people and economic development organizations such as Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance. There hasn't seemed to be any real answer to the question, but that hasn't stopped filmmakers from continuing their work, in the hopes that, someday, things will get better.

In the interim, there have been setbacks and stalled discussions aplenty, but there have also been great inroads made.

Much of this is what motivated my joining forces with former city film liaison Bill McCamey to create the Film Las Cruces forum at the Rio Grande Theatre, two years ago. It's what prompted me to advocate for the local film community when the threat of discontinuing the film liaison position was presented at city council a little over a year ago.

But even before that – ever since my arrival in Las Cruces five years ago and the discovery of a burgeoning film community – it's what has propelled me to gather and pass along the information as it comes available, via whatever forum would allow it.

Change, after all, is inevitable, but documenting that change is essential if a true transformation is to take place. That's the true job of the media, or at least the one I've always embraced. Granted, the changes don't seem to happen as quickly as many would like, but on the other hand, Rome wasn't built in a day, either. That set took months and required a lot of CGI work to make it believable ... but I digress.

The whole point of this overview is to let you know that change is in the air once again, but this time the change could very well prove historic. On Thursday, Aug. 1, I was privileged to be included in a meeting between many of False alarms no longer free

Business owners react to ordinance

By Alta LeCompte
Las Cruces Bulletin

A new city ordinance aimed at reducing the number of false alarms police and firefighters respond to is no big deal to court reporter and business owner Jenifer Russin.

Russin, of Russin Reporting LLC, complied with a similar ordinance as a business owner in Albuquerque.

The ordinance requires businesses with existing alarm systems to pay a fee and register their alarms. If emergency responders are dispatched to false alarms at their premises three times or more in a calendar year, they will pay. Fines are $100 for the third offense, $200 for the fourth and $300 for the fifth.

"I have no concerns at all," Russin said. "As business owners, we should be responsible for properly alarming our systems. The police have a difficult enough job without having to deal with false alarms."

Russin said she has never had a false alarm at her North Water Street location or in Albuquerque. She contended good maintenance and "diligence on the part of people who work in the building" can effectively eliminate problems.

Invoking Murphy's Law

Richard Parra, who owns Spirit Winds Gift Source and Coffee Bar on Locust Street, said not all false alarms are avoidable.

Something as simple as a ceiling fan in motion or someone shaking a door can set off a system, he said.

"Sometimes it happens for no reason at all, usually at 2 o'clock in the morning," Parra said.

A forgetful crew member may try to get back into an alarmed building. If the culprit knows the code, they can reset the alarm and let the alarm company know there's nothing amiss. If the employee doesn't correct the mistake, the alarm company contacts the business owner to verify there's an emergency.

"Better safer than sorry," Parra said.

Entrepreneurial tenacity pays off

National investment firm buys genetics labs developed at NMSU

By Amanda Bradford
For the Las Cruces Bulletin

What began as a research endeavor of New Mexico State University that was struggling to sustain itself financially has become a multi-million dollar trio of companies recently purchased by a national investment firm – bringing funds back to the inventors and into Arrowhead Center's ongoing efforts to commercialize innovation.

BelHealth investment partners, a New York-based health care private equity firm, has agreed to purchase the Genetic Testing Laboratories and its sister companies, the Forensic Testing Laboratories and the Clinical Testing Laboratories, all housed at NMSU's Arrowhead Technology Incubator in the Genesis Center, for a combined $5.3 million.

BelHealth Managing Director

David Sturek told DowJones.com that his firm has been exploring opportunities in genetic testing over the past year, believing it is the "fastest growing segment of the laboratory testing space."

"It has the best prospect from an investment standpoint," he said.

The Genetic Testing Lab began in 2001 as a partnership between NMSU's Physical Science Laboratory and the molecular biology graduate program. The inventors of the technology and innovators for the enterprise that became Genetic Testing Laboratory (GTL) and associated companies were Peter Lammers, a biochemistry professor at NMSU, and John Spalding and Stefan Long of the Physical Science Laboratory.

After several years of development with assistance from Money making scheme or safety measure?

Dru Hubbard, vice president of Hubbard's Music on Wyatt Drive, took a dimmer view of the ordinance, which specifies a $50 registration fee for a commercial system. There will be a $100 penalty for failure to register.

"It seems the government is always trying to get more money," Hubbard said, adding that although response teams have answered false alarms at his location, he doubts he could ever chalk up three violations in one year.

"Knock on wood, but I don't think it could ever reach that level," he said.

The Las Cruces ordinance was enacted to address the fact that false alarms accounted for 99 percent of the 8,000 responses logged in 2011. The cost to the city's taxpayers that year was $400,000.

Battalion Chief Ted Sweetser of the Las Cruces Fire Department pointed out that beyond financial costs are the potential human costs if emergency responders occupied with a false alarm are unable to get to a real emergency in a timely fashion.

City helps implement registration

Sweetser said that as awareness of the issue spreads, positive results already are showing.

In 2012, the total number of alarms declined 9 percent following the implementation by the Mesilla Valley Regional Dispatch Authority of a requirement that alarm companies make at least two calls to ascertain the legitimacy of each alarm that comes in.

Sweetser said city officials collaborated closely with alarm companies last year to work out details of the new rules.

"Making two calls was their suggestion," he said.

He said the education alarm companies do with their clients about the issue should help them as well as their clients.

According to Sweetser, the fine print of the fire code specifies which businesses are required to have fire alarms. He suggested anyone with questions about whether the law applies to them should contact their alarm company. If they have additional concerns, they may call Sweetser at 528-4150.

He said MVRDA is working with the alarm companies on the registration process for businesses, but once the process is up and running, MVRDA will handle renewals.

Registration checks will be accepted starting Thursday, Aug. 22.

"The alarm companies should be sending out applications to clients and the companies will submit the paperwork to MRVDA," he said.

Arrowhead

Arrowhead Center's incubation efforts, the GTL spun off as a private company in 2005, with a majority of equity held by Jack Ellis and Bill White of El Paso.

The new company, still located on the NMSU campus, developed several affordable commercial applications for the DNA technology, including an Ancestral Origins DNA kit and a home paternity testing system. Later, the company expanded to include the sophisticated and state-certified Forensic Testing Lab, which handles forensic DNA analysis for law enforcement entities across New Mexico and beyond.

Most notably, the lab was instrumental in helping to solve the grisly 2003 murder of former NMSU student Katie Sepich, for whom a law expanding the evidentiary collection of DNA is named.

Founded in 2009, the Clinical Testing Lab uses genetic analyses to help identify predispositions for diseases and receptiveness to certain medical treatment options.

NMSU and Arrowhead Center Inc. held a 35 percent stake in the GTL and a 17.5 percent stake in the FTL, and their sale resulted in nearly $1 million in net proceeds for the university. Of that, roughly $400,000 – half the net proceeds of the GTL sale – will be split among the investors, and the remaining net of $583,000 will go to Arrowhead Center Inc. for further distribution in accordance with the university's policies.

NMSU Interim Vice President for Economic Development Kevin Boberg, formerly Arrowhead Center's director and CEO, said the sale is a success for the university in many ways, not only because of the funds coming directly from the sale, but because the buyers have indicated that they won't be taking the company – or the dozens of jobs it created – away from the campus.

"I met the CEO of BelHealth, and he expressed that his desire is to grow the company and expand the relationship with the university," Boberg said. "And it's more than just staying on campus – it's reaching back into the university for research and development to continue to expand. Toward that end, they are already exploring ways to fund graduate assistantships for students working with the lab."

Boberg said the impact of this sale for Arrowhead Center goes way beyond the money involved. It's been inspiring to watch the company grow from a three-man operation to one that employs about 40 people on campus.

"The financial part of the return on investment isn't trivial – it isn't trivial to the university, and it isn't trivial to the inventors – but it's only part of what we get out of it. We want to encourage faculty and students to be entrepreneurial," he said. "It's a significant return on investment on university aspirations – on the story and success of the research enterprise at NMSU." A success story like this one can inspire other ideas and technologies and help support requests for funding and investment as well as help attract and retain top thinkers to the university, Boberg said.

NMSU President Garrey Carruthers said this sale is an excellent example of how intellectual property at the university has been transformed into a private company.

"When we first started this enterprise, this company was losing money," Carruthers said. "We spun it out into a joint public-private partnership, and now, as a result of their success on our campus, we have sold it to another laboratory for a considerable sum of money. We'd like to do this frequently."

Eagle Security, a locally owned company located at 618 W. Picacho Ave., has posted alarm system registration forms and information on its website, www.eaglesecurity.biz.

Initial results positive

Sweetser said although he can't attribute a decline in false alarms to the ordinance as yet, there are now 20 percent fewer each month than in 2011, and the police department has seen a decrease as well.

"Any decline is a good decline because it allows people not to be tied up with false alarms, which allows us to serve the citizens of Las Cruces," Sweetser said.

"I think it's important for those who have alarms to follow the ordinance, because we worked hard to make sure it was to the city and to citizens."

the local movers and shakers of the local film industry and representatives from the city, the county and the state.

At that meeting, some of the bigger issues were discussed and a preliminary plan was put in place to begin addressing the hard questions and turn them into constructive strategies. It was an exhilarating experience, if only because of the enthusiasm expressed by everybody involved.

The key figure in this meeting, state Rep. Jeff Steinborn, began the meeting by revealing his "light bulb moment" at this year's legislative session, when he realized what the film industry has done for the northern part of the state and could do for us here in southern New Mexico. I have to wonder how many of those assembled were thinking the same thing I was: "It's about time somebody flipped that switch!"

Because he strongly believes in the potential for success here in Las Cruces, Steinborn gathered together respected colleagues like City Councillors Gill Sorg, Nathan Small and Greg Smith, new County Commissioner Wayne Hancock and fellow state Rep. Nate Cote to discuss the possibilities. He then approached film industry advocates, producer Brad Littlefield and educator Mark Vasconcellos, about assembling interested parties. The result was this initial summit with the local film community, something many of us feel is long overdue, but are extremely grateful to finally see come to pass.

Among the many topics touched on during that preliminary meeting were problems of infrastructure, gaining support from the city and the state, development of skilled labor in our area and the creation of an official regional film industry work group to help educate not only the public, but also the politicians whose job it is to seek out new ways to promote and advance the interests of southern New Mexico. Future meetings will address these issues at length, along with others not yet mentioned.

Obviously there are concerns. Misinformation and misunderstanding have had an effect on slowing the process down. But just as Gov. Susana Martinez discovered, after studying the issues, weighing the possibilities and championing the Breaking Bad Bill that improved incentives for filmmakers, the facts will always win out. It's already been embraced as a win-win proposition for northern New Mexico. All that's left, as Steinborn pointed out, is to bring some of that forward thinking down here.

Believe me when I say, there's a lot more going on here than talk. Everybody present in the room that Thursday afternoon has some sort of vested interest in creating a viable film industry in southern New Mexico.

They are all people who see the benefits of development foundations for real growth, not only for filmmakers, but for the community at large. And they are all willing to take the steps necessary to make that development happen.

Want an example? For years I've heard rumors about a western set being built nearby that would take advantage of the nearly year-round sunshine and spectacular landscapes to be found in the area. I'm sure you've heard them, too. The truth of the matter is the transformation of those rumors into reality has been ongoing and may be much closer than any of us realize. The work that's gone into the project is mind-boggling and just one example of how, even when we think nothing is happening, the wheels continue to turn.

All of which suggests you'll be hearing a lot more on this topic in the coming months. I'll do my best to report those changes as they occur, but am fully expecting the rest of the media outlets to pick up on them and help broadcast the news once it becomes common knowledge. In the end, it is you, the reader, the community member, the voter, who will decide the direction these changes will take, but like any grassroots movement, education and understanding are key.

The wait, it seems, is finally over. Give us time to get our cinematic ducks in a row and watch as the magic begins to unfold.

Fund impacts those with sight disabilities

By Charlotte Tallman

For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Terry and Maryellen Kebbel have a passion for the disabled community, and there are no limits to what they do with that passion.

In 2009, Terry Kebbel sat on the city ADA Advisory Board, facilitated support groups for low vision and veterans and served as vice president of the Rio Grande Chapter of the Blinded Veterans Association. It wasn't long before he went virtual, becoming a moderator for an online discussion group using TC conferencing on the Blinded Vets and Friends website, providing online computer training using Skype. Then, after they developed a fund through the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico (CFSNM), the Kebbels started the Disability Coalition from Southern New Mexico.

Now, the Kebbels are once again utilizing the CFSNM to create the Terry and Maryellen Kebbel Family Fund.

"When I moved to New Mexico, I realized that it's often a day's drive to get from one town to another, making it nearly impossible to bring people together physically. So, my idea was to bring people together in the virtual world through the internet," Terry Kebbel said of the Disability Coalition from Southern New Mexico. When the Kebbels found the site was difficult to manage just between the two of them, they went back to the CFSNM to visit with Luan Wagner Burn, Ph.D., executive director of the CFSNM, to hear about more options.

Terry and Maryellen Kebbel turned to the CFSNM for help in establishing a family fund to help the vision impaired.

"They will help manage our money for us and we can concentrate on determining how to gift the money for anyone who is print impaired, like Terry," Maryellen Kebbel said of the family fund.

After health issues caused Kebbel to lose his vision in 2002 while living in Cleveland, he served at the Cleveland Sight Center as a public relations committee member, on the director's advisory committee, the campaign fundraiser for the White Cane Walk and advisor on accessibility for website development. He has volunteered as a facilitator for a monthly vision loss support group, served as a volunteer public speaker for the United Way in greater Cleveland, lobbied for and obtained a computer with accessible software for use by individuals with vision loss and provided computer training to staff and individuals.

In Las Cruces, the Kebbels have used the money they have raised to donate computers with adaptive software to the public library and Capstone Program at New Mexico State University.

The Kebbels chose the CFSNM to help set up the fund because it was an opportunity to get the coalition up and running without the worry and hassle of managing the funds, then they continued with the CFSNM with their family fund because of proven expertise and community knowledge.

"It's a great organization. When we started up the coalition, they helped us with that, and when we decided to change Luan sat down with us and showed us this opportunity. It made perfect sense to go this route," said Terry Kebbel, an army veteran who served in Vietnam as a helicopter instrument repairman and spent his career as a power lineman, field service engineer, application sales engineer, distributor sales manager and a regional sales manager selling automation equipment. "It's important to me to do this because I want to encourage people to know that they are a person first with a disability, and not a disabled person. That is a very clear distinction."

The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico is dedicated to helping the Southern New Mexico community now, and in the future. Founded in 2000, the Community Foundation offers opportunities for local people who want to give back locally. The beauty of the Foundation is that you need not be wealthy to make a positive difference in the lives of people throughout our area. Through the establishment of permanent funds you can sustain local charitable organizations, provide scholarships to area students and fulfill wishes that are close to your heart. Through our planned giving programs, you can honor loved ones or leave a legacy that benefits the people of Southern New Mexico for generations to come. The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico can advise you on how best to maximize contributions, no matter what size. For more information see our website at www.cfsnm.org or call Luan Wagner Burn, Ph.D., at 521-4794. To donate, mail your check to CFSNM, 301 South Church St., Suite H, Las Cruces, NM 88001.

Pecan farmers having to deal with saline content in ground water, despite the rain

By Marvin Tessneer

Las Cruces Bulletin

Mesilla Valley farmers are trying to figure out how to stay in business while irrigating without surface water and dealing with a ground water supply that is becoming increasingly more saline.

Greg Daviet, who operates a pecan orchard south of Las Cruces, reported that the irrigation with ground water is having its effect on pecan trees.

"We've had to pump so much water to irrigate pecan orchards the past three years that the salt has built up in the soil and the pecan trees," he said. "The only cure for that is more water in the reservoirs to clean out the salts from the soil and trees. The clean water would clean out the salts from the soil. But pecan trees also are permanent, and it takes longer to clean out the salts. Vegetables are grown for one season, and as soon as they get clean water, they recover quickly."

The aquifer in the Hatch Valley isn't as deep as other valley sections, but farmers have been receiving rain, and farmers' fields have not needed irrigation, Scott Adams reported.

"We've been having rain for three days on and off, and we haven't been irrigating," Adams said.

Phillip Arnold of San Saba Pecans brokers reported that the smaller pecan orchards with shallow wells are having the most problems with mineral-laden water.

"Because the water is becoming more saline, and that affects the growth of the root system and the development of the trees," he said. "Most farmers got only one irrigation this summer and had to pump ground water to keep farming. The recent rains helped flush the salts from the soil, but we're going to have more rain to really make a difference. We're going to need a lot more rain and snow in the mountains this winter."

But the rain has been erratic. Precipitation in this part of the state, as of July 30, was 1.66 inches, 41 percent of normal.

Reservoir storage figures are: Elephant Butte, 73,500 acre-feet, 3.3 percent of capacity, and Caballo where the water is released, 7,200 acre-feet.

Southwest New Mexico is still locked in "neutral" conditions in relation to El Niño and La Niña, which determine climate wet or dry patterns in this part of the state, according to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

The unstable pecan market is also adding to pecan farmers' problems. Three years ago, pecan farmers were receiving about $2.00 a pound.

"But the pecan growers had priced themselves out of the market, and consumers stopped buying pecans," Arnold said.

Last year, the price per pound dropped to $1.50.

"We didn't make much money, and it makes it difficult for pecan growers to plan ahead from one year to the next to stay in business."

Arnold referred to La Boquilla reservoir, about 400 miles into Chihuahua, to illustrate how erratic rain hit the area. La Boquilla is about the size of Elephant Butte and was almost empty a few weeks ago. Now, it is half full following a rain storm in the Sierra Madres, he said.

Las Cruces families celebrate tax holiday

Even food markets got in on the act the weekend of Aug. 2, as Las Cruces celebrated the ninth annual New Mexico back-to-school gross receipts tax holiday.

A big sign in the window invited shoppers to buy their school supplies at Pro's Ranch Market. Throughout the city, families stocked up on school clothing, computers and miscellaneous supplies to fill students' backpacks.

At Mesilla Valley Mall, the first 75 back-to-school shoppers received free backpacks stuffed with coupons and other goodies.

Susan Palmer, spokeswoman for the mall, said the backpacks were gone during the first hour of shopping throughout the three-day tax holiday.

Oñate High School Head Baseball Coach David Reyes, Principal David Day and Assistant Principal Jim Schapekahn accept a $250 donation from the Moose Lodge for the OHSE baseball program.

The Loyal Order of the Moose, Lodge No. 2081 continued its long-standing support of Las Cruces Public Schools with donations to three Las Cruces high schools in July. The donations were $250 to the Oñate High School baseball program, $200 to the Mayfield High School Pom and Dance Squad and $200 to the Centennial High School Pom Squad. Local accountant earns CFE credential

Jeanette Wisner of Beasley, Mitchell & Co. was awarded the Certified Fraud Examiner (CFE) credential by the Association of Certified Fraud Examiners (ACFE), the world's largest anti-fraud organization. In order to become a CFE, Wisner had to meet a stringent set of criteria and pass a rigorous exam administered by the ACFE and demonstrate knowledge in four areas critical to the fight against fraud: fraudulent financial transactions, fraud prevention and deterrence, legal elements of fraud and fraud investigation.

Wisner has been a staff accountant with Beasley, Mitchell & Co. Certified Public Accountants for more than five years and has more than 16 years of accounting experience. She also serves as the president of the American Society of Women Accountants, Las Cruces Chapter No. 121.

Las Cruces schools awarded grants

Two Las Cruces elementary schools – East Picacho Elementary School and Desert Hills Elementary School – were among 14 schools from the state of New Mexico awarded grants through the CenturyLink Foundation's Teachers and Technology program, administered by Santa Fe-based Innovate+Educate. The grants of $4,910 and $5,000, respectively, were awarded to help teachers innovatively implement technology in their classrooms and increase student achievement. More than 80 teachers in New Mexico applied for the annual grants and award checks were presented at a luncheon hosted by CenturyLink on July 17.

NMSU MPA program receives reaccreditation

New Mexico State University's Master's of Public Administration program has received a six-year reaccreditation from the Network of Schools of Public Policy, Affairs and Administration (NASPAA). The College of Arts and Sciences program is one of the first in the U.S. to be reaccredited with the agency's new, higher standards involving student learning outcomes.

The certifying organization, formerly known as National Association of School of Public Affairs and Administration, consists of 282 member institutions, offering undergraduate and graduate degrees in public affairs and administration. Accreditation through NASPAA indicates that a program has undergone a rigorous peer review process and deemed a quality program.

The program is intended for students seeking employment in the public and government sectors, as well as with nonprofit organizations.

Local job growth anemic

Strength of recovery questioned

By Alta LeCompte

Las Cruces Bulletin

The hopes of Las Cruces for brighter economic times just around the corner dimmed somewhat with the release Friday, Aug. 2, of June unemployment numbers.

Some 7,132 residents of the Las Cruces metropolitan area were without jobs.

According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Las Cruces area unemployment rate rose to 8.5 percent. The jobless rate for New Mexico was 6.8 percent. This data is preliminary and is not seasonally adjusted.

"Overall, however, employment increased by 200 jobs from June 2012. The small increase in the unemployment rate confirms that Las Cruces has not yet entered a strong recovery," New Mexico State University economics professor Jim Peach said.

"A major reason is that nearly a third of Las Cruces' non-farm payroll employment is in the public sector, a sector that is not expanding."

Government shed 2 percent of its work force in the metropolitan area between June 2012 and June 2013.

Total government payroll contracted by 400 jobs, marking 29 consecutive months of decline. The majority of the loss came from the federal government, which was down by 300 jobs, 7.7 percent. State government jobs fell by 100 or 1.5 percent, while local government had no change in its employment, according to the state's Department of Workforce Solutions.

"There was probably little effect from the sequester from May to June. That will show up later in the year," Peach said, adding that current data are preliminary and that month to month changes should not be relied on to establish trends.

Sectors where the job picture improved included education and health care, leisure and hospitality and professional and business services.

Data for sectors of the metropolitan Las Cruces economy, not seasonally adjusted, indicated the following:

Total nonfarm employment was .3 higher than the previous June.

Education and health care jobs grew at the fastest pace – up 13.4 percent year-over-year.

Leisure and hospitality grew 7.5 percent, professional and business services 6.8 percent education and health services 3.1 percent

Losses were recorded by mining, logging and construction, 8.6 percent; and manufacturing, 3.6 percent.

In the Albuquerque metropolitan area, unemployment rose from 6.6 percent in May 2013 to 7.8 percent in June.

Only manufacturing and trade, transportation and utilities posed year-over-year job losses, 4.5 percent and .5 percent respectively. Government employment in the Albuquerque area, while 3.7 percent higher than in June 2012, shrank during the past month – from 83,000 in May to 81,400 in June, not seasonally adjusted.

Looking ahead, Peach commented, "The sequestration will not help the Las Cruces economy but the larger issue is what Congress ultimately does with the FY2014 budget."

National picture improves

National data available for July showed total nonfarm payroll employment increased by 162,000 during that month, and the unemployment rate edged down to 7.4 percent, the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

Employment rose in retail trade, food services and drinking places, financial activities and wholesale trade.

Among the major work groups, the unemployment rates for adult women (6.5 percent) and blacks (12.6 percent) declined in July. The rates for adult men (7 percent), teenagers (23.7 percent), whites (6.6 percent) and Hispanics (9.4 percent) showed little or no change. The jobless rate for Asians was 5.7 percent (not seasonally adjusted), little changed from a year earlier.

In July, average hourly earnings for all employees on private nonfarm payrolls edged down by 2 cents to $23.98, following a 10 cent increase in June. Over the year, average hourly earnings have risen by 44 cents, or 1.9 percent.

“ The small increase ... confirms that Las Cruces has not yet entered a strong recovery. ”

NMSU economics professor

Weighing the benefits of nature

Conservation of open spaces could be a boon for businesses

Carrie Hamblen

Going green

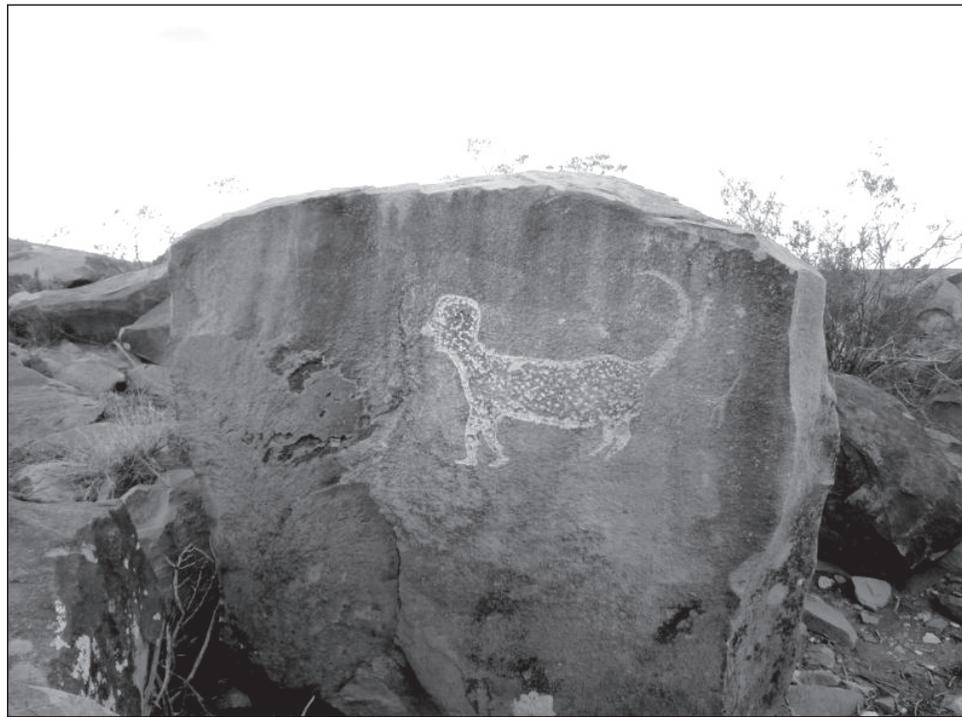

Every morning, I look out my kitchen window and gaze at our beautiful Organ Mountains, shadowed by the rising sun.

For 20 years, I have often compared the beauty of our southern New Mexico mountains to the Franklin Mountains in El Paso, where I grew up. I have to admit, there really is no comparison.

Although the Franklins are beautiful and provide numerous hiking opportunities, there is something about the color of the Organ Mountains at sunset that surpasses any other mountain ranges for me. I was told that there is a Las Cruces Purple in a high quality pencil set used by artists. Look at the mountains tonight and I'll bet you will see the purple I am talking about.

Over the past year or so, the topic of protecting the Organ Mountains and surrounding areas has become much more animated, as individuals discuss how much of our beautiful mountain range and open space should be free of development and protected. This discussion has often been passionate, by people who really love our beautiful vistas. What I have witnessed is a deep commitment and love for our region.

However, in my work through the Las Cruces Green Chamber of Commerce, I have come to understand and see another layer to conservation of our public lands. Not only does our area include thousands of petroglyphs, ancient sites, historic locations and cultural treasures, it also contains wildlife, outdoor and hunting opportunities coveted by area enthusiasts. As many of us have experienced, there are people who are coming from other parts of the country to bask in "our" Southwest, and they are spending money in our community while they enjoy the outdoor spaces.

The economic opportunities that come from these travelers, in addition to the jobs that will be created, is why the Las Cruces Green Chamber, as well as the New Mexico Green Chamber, support the designation of the Organ Mountains Desert Peaks as a national monument. There are three main areas that would fall under this designation. In these areas, residents and visitors alike will find Billy the Kid's Outlaw Rock, Geronimo's Cave, World War II Aerial Targets, thousands of petroglyphs and so much more. I had the benefit of seeing many of these sites earlier this year, and was blown away by their beauty.

On March 25 of this year, President Obama designated the Rio Grande Del Norte a National Monument. This designation arose because of the commitment to conserving open spaces from the local community, sportsmen, ranchers, small business owners and people across northern New Mexico.

By designating this area a national monument, the heritage of our state's diverse Hispanic and Native American communities are protected. Wildlife habitat that is prized by hunters and anglers is protected and local businesses are already seeing the economic benefits in their profits.

On Friday, Aug. 23, the New Mexico Green Chamber will host a special event: Land and Culture: Economic Opportunities from Conservation, in historic Old Mesilla. The forum will feature Mesilla Mayor Nora Barraza, tourism and marketing experts and business owners who can speak firsthand about the benefits a National Monument designation would mean for our area. The forum is open to businesses and community members and will run from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. More information and registration can be found at www.nmgreenchamber.com/omdp. The forum is free and I hope you will join us to learn how your business will benefit from conservation.

Planners push for 'catalytic projects'

Doña Ana County Comp plan enters final stage

By Alta LeCompte
Las Cruces Bulletin

In a progress report presented at the Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance Business in the Borderplex Tuesday, Aug. 6, the audience got a sneak preview of some of the recommendations expected to show up in a draft of the Doña Ana County Comprehensive Plan at the end of 2013.

The goal, the presenters said, is to prepare the county to take advantage of opportunities that arise as population nearly doubles by 2040.

The $2 million planning effort, financed by a grant from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, includes a Doña Ana County Comprehensive Plan, as well as an El Camino Real Corridor Management Plan and a borderland economic development plan.

"Our job is to come with ideas to stimulate the economy," said Denise Westin, senior planner for traffic and transportation with Bohannon Huston in Albuquerque.

Westin said the heart of the corridor plan will be the recommendation of two "catalytic projects" for the northern portion of the corridor and two for the southern end.

She said extensive efforts to gather input, including eight meetings featuring keypad polling, as well as many other events, led the team to the early conclusion that each community along the corridor "has its own unique feel and they want to keep it that way."

She added that residents also are aware of the importance of a larger regional focus, and both perspectives must be reflected for the 92-mile-long, one-mile-wide corridor. The corridor extends from along State Highway 185 to State Highway 28 and ultimately south along State Highway 273.

Andrew Knudtsen, managing principal with Economic & Planning Systems Inc. of Denver, noted that the economic environment of the county is about to change dramatically, and planners are challenged with the question of how to create resilience in the community. Knudtsen said the county experienced the least impact of any area in the Southwest from the recent recession, "partly from deployment."

"Doña Ana County and Las Cruces were almost completely insulated," he said, "but, we are moving into a different era. We're hearing from the federal government that there will be no net increases."

Bill Anderson, principal and vice president of AECOM in San Diego, described his firm as an international company looking at the way trade flows affect the area.

He said planning in Doña Ana County has to be done in the context of the entire border region.

Anderson noted that San Diego and Tijuana actually do their planning together.

He said San Diego, an R&D center, and Tijuana, a manufacturing city, are currently looking at developing bio fuels from algae in the eastern Imperial Valley.

"Look at all the assets brought to bear by the different areas," he said. "That's how you get noticed on an international scale."

Borderland, nearshoring will offer real opportunities that already are attracting investors' attention, he said.

"You're in a good geographical location with good facilities," he said. "How you leverage the transportation that's going through the county takes land use planning."

"It's important to add value locally as freight moves through the region."

He said that while New Mexico has invested its resources in the Santa Teresa area, proximity makes it easy for the El Paso area to benefit most from economic activity at the border.

"What kind of ties do you need to create to make sure your residents benefit?" he asked.

Although planners are taking a long view, Anderson said they must also focus on what needs to happen in the short and medium term as well.

"What kind of jobs will be created?" he asked. "Logistics? Commodities/ technology? Agriculture?"

"How will Doña Ana County capture the value of that development and how will you pay for the infrastructure to do that?"

Although the consultants and the county officials who are their collaborators devoted much of their podium time to telling the backstory of how the planning process is progressing, audience questions focused on economic development specifics and zoning concerns, which are being addressed by Placemakers in close relationship to the comprehensive planning process.

Red Ribbon Bash provides support for HIV/AIDS program

By Zak Hansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

Each year, generous, community-minded Las Cruces don their finest fashions and loosen their purse strings at the Red Ribbon Bash to help raise awareness and funds for programs providing aid to residents of southern New Mexico living with HIV and AIDS.

This year, gentlemen will blow the dust from their top hats and ladies will doff the flats for their highest heels at the 15th annual Red Ribbon Bash, starting at 6 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 24, at the New Mexico Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum, 4100 Dripping Springs Road.

For a decade and a half, the Red Ribbon Bash has provided funds for the Southern NM Aid & Comfort Program, which provides financial support for medical, dental and prescription co-pays to those infected with HIV and AIDS in southern New Mexico.

"The Southern NM Aid & Comfort Program is an all-volunteer organization whose goal is to provide those infected with HIV and AIDS with support and assistance with insurance co-pays and medical, prescription, dental and vision care," said Director Harry Day. "Through our partnerships, we are able provide outreach to more than 200 people spread across 13 counties in southern New Mexico."

Children, adults and seniors all benefit from the program's work, which utilizes partnerships with the New Mexico Community Foundation, the New Mexico Department of Health and the Mesilla Valley Community of Hope to ensure clients have the support they require to maintain healthy, meaningful lives.

As the Southern NM Aid & Comfort Program's sole yearly fundraiser, the Red Ribbon Bash is an indispensable tool in providing the same level of care and compassion to all those infected in southern New Mexico.

"We're dedicated to helping people be able to help themselves," Day said. "We cannot forget these illnesses are still very much alive, and we are here to continue to help those in southern New Mexico who aren't always able to do it on their own."

With this year's Red Ribbon Bash, organizers hope to meet their goal of raising $60,000 for the Southern NM Aid & Comfort Program.

"We've met our goals before, and we're confidant the Las Cruces community will help us do it again this year," Day said.

With so many different organizations dedicated to so many worthy causes, the Red Ribbon Bash has maintained its vision and mission since its inception, and is the only remaining event dedicated to raising money for those coping with HIV and AIDS.

"The bash is the only fundraising event in southern New Mexico that continues to keep HIV and AIDS at the forefront," said Donny Grooms, who chairs the Red Ribbon Bash. "There are so many great causes and events here, but the Red Ribbon Bash is the only one raising funds dedicated to those living with these illnesses."

Though their goal is truly a matter of life and death, event organizers make sure the Red Ribbon Bash is exactly that – a bash.

"We always go out of our way to provide a fun environment with a different atmosphere each year," Day said. "It's a great chance for Las Cruces to get dressed up and get out."

Each year, Red Ribbon Bash organizers select a new theme, which have in recent years included "Fire and Ice" and "The Magic of Mardi Gras," and this year follows suit.

"Every year we really put on a show," Grooms said. "This year's theme is 'Top Hats and Stilettos,' so we're going for a Fred Astaire/Ginger Rogers night-out motif."

This year's gala will begin at 6 p.m. with a cocktail hour, followed by a sit-down dinner at 7 p.m. Following drinks and dinner, the Red Ribbon Bash kicks into high gear.

"This year, in addition to cocktails and a great meal, we'll have live and silent auctions, a 50/50 raffle and the Wheel of Hope, with prizes donated by Spirit Winds – everyone's a winner," Day said. "We also have great entertainment lined up from Matt Morgan and Rein Garcia, as well as The Liars, who were such a hit in the past we had to bring them back. Everyone had such a great time."

Tickets for this year's Red Ribbon Bash are $95, and can be purchased in person at Spirit Winds, 2260 S. Locust St., as well as online at www.redribbonbash.org and over the phone by calling 993-2121. Reservations should be made by Tuesday, Aug. 13.

The Red Ribbon Bash may come only once a year, but proves to be a generous and memorable night for all.

"We may only do this once a year," Grooms said, "but we always do it with a bang."

Are you ready to rock?

Showcase marks director's departure

By Zak Hansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

When you think choral music, what do you think of?

Toto? Bon Jovi? The King of Pop, perhaps?

If you do, then the New Desert Harmony Singers have got a show for you.

"We Will Rock You ... And Then Some!" takes to the Atkinson Recital Hall stage, on the New Mexico State University campus, at 7 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 17.

Not your typical choral performance, "We Will Rock You ..." will feature large-scale choral arrangements of "everything from gospel to rock 'n' roll to patriotic music, as well as country, Broadway, jazz, big band – something for everyone," said Director Dave Kinkaid.

Kinkaid, who's led the New Desert Harmony Singers since 2006, has selected a number of favorites of both the chorus, choosing some of the group's favorite numbers out of the past, and of music consumers at large, packing the upcoming show to the brim with popular tunes from the past five decades.

The Who? Check. Dwight Yoakam? Check. Styx? Oh, yeah, they do that, too. And don't forget Queen, whose classic "We Will Rock You" provides the clear centerpiece of the performance.

"When we do the Queen tune, there's no backing music, just the 'stomp, stomp, clap' that we do onstage," Kinkaid said. "You've got singers from their late 20s to their late 70s up there doing it. It's a great time."

These are only a small part of the program, which includes, among others, a 15-minute tribute to the King of Pop, Michael Jackson, which closes with a rendition of "We Are the World."

"Get your pen lights out and start waving them for that one," Kinkaid said, smiling.

All in all, Kinkaid said, "We Will Rock You ..." will be, simply, "a night full of a whole lot of really great rock 'n' roll."

"It's a lot of fun, and we treat all these songs with a great deal of respect," he said. "We don't clown around with them; it's still rock 'n' roll – even with old people," he said with a laugh.

"With this show, we're singing popular songs that everybody knows and loves. We love these tunes, and we hope that love comes across those stage lights. If people love them enough, we may even dig them back up in a few years and do them again."

It won't just be the New Desert Harmony Singers under the stage lights at Atkinson, however. For this year's performance, the group will be joined by two very special guests: drummer Joe Seltzer and the students of the NMSU Dance Theatre program, led by 2013 National Collegiate Dance Instructor of the Year Debra Knapp.

"Of all the musicians in the region," Kinkaid said, "Joe is one of the hardest working and best-known drummers around. It'll be great to have him up there with us."

As for Knapp's inclusion, Kinkaid said working with the lauded teacher and her devoted students throughout the years has been extremely rewarding.

"They're just wonderful young people full of amazing talent, and Debra is a great friend," he said. "She's a tremendous talent and a great inspiration. She has talent, passion and enthusiasm – all the things you want to have around you."

Knapp, who has collaborated with the New Desert Harmony Singers for several shows, is, as Kinkaid puts it, "a force."

"She sings with us in rehearsals sometimes, and even pushed me out of the way to direct once or twice," he said, laughing. "She's so talented and gets so charged up about the music, she gets carried away –

DAVID KINKAID,

The New Desert Harmony Singers, led by Director David Kinkaid, will take to the stage to perform "We Will Rock You ... And Then Some!" at 7 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 17, at Atkinson Recital Hall on the NMSU campus.

and we love that."

As the New Desert Harmony Singers take the stage for this year's fall concert, though, there will be a twinge of bitter mixed in with all the sweet, marking both the end of a chapter for one member and the opening of one anew for the group.

Kinkaid, who has directed the New Desert Harmony Singers for seven years, will leave his position following the show.

On the eve of his departure, he said he fondly recalls his years with group.

"It's been wonderful, absolutely wonderful," he said. "There have been moments much more exhilarating than others, but there have been so many really memorable times."

One that stands out in particular to Kinkaid is the group's performance of their 2011 program, titled "A Celebration of American Music" in Las Cruces at the regular venue, Atkinson Recital Hall, as well as a performance a week later at the Oñate Performing Arts Center and, then, two in Alamogordo.

"We got a call from the folks who run the Flickinger Theatre in Alamogordo asking us to do a show there," Kinkaid said. "We asked when, they told us it would be on Sept. 11 (2011), so we agreed immediately and chartered a bus."

Once there, said Kinkaid, "we had a wonderful turnout at the show, a lovely picnic in the park there, and then we headed to do a two-song performance at the commemoration of the firefighters who had given their lives in the state of New Mexico, the city of Alamogordo and, of course, in the attacks on the Twin Towers. That was really special for us."

Kinkaid's absence will be felt by all, said New Desert Harmony Singers President Donald Harlow.

"Dave has been the strong foundation for a long time, but we fully intend to keep moving down the same roads that he paved for us," Harlow said. "We will miss Dave and his passion for our group and the type of music we perform. We wish him all the best as he moves to Katy, Texas, and we think, with his love of music, that he just might end up starting a new singing group there."

Though Kinkaid said he will miss the group, he's confident the New Desert Harmony Singers will keep going strong.

"When I turn over the reins, I know the chorus is going to thrive and continue on," he said.

"I'm looking forward to keeping up and seeing how the new director or directors move forward with this great, Las Cruces tradition and carry the torch."

Home is where the heart is

Pueblo Café offers classics, family favorites

By Zak Hansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

The word “homestyle” comes up a lot when you talk to Alfredo Mirabal.

The local restaurateur, who opened the doors of the Pueblo Café at 1100 S. Main St. in early August, said he takes great care to keep everything he and his crew serve as close as possible to the classics many Las Cruces grew up eating for generations, passing down styles, techniques and tastes.

“We try to keep the food here a little more authentic, a little closer to what you get at home, than some of the other places around town,” he said.

Pueblo Café’s menu is chock full of favorites familiar to Mesilla Valley diners. Enchiladas, flautas, tacos, huevos rancheros – they’re all here, cooked to order with the freshest ingredients available, just like Mom used to make.

The tortillas, both corn and flour, are made fresh daily at Pueblo Café. All of the chile, both green and red, that goes into the salsas comes from Hatch. Red chile, it seems, holds a popularity in the City of the Crosses unbeknownst to Mirabal before he set up shop.

“This town really loves their red chile,” he said. “I’m more of a green guy, myself, but I’m learning that a lot of people here stick to red.”

Mirabal and his faithful cooks use chuck in their beef tacos, rather than the standard ground beef Mirabal considers “just for hamburgers” – which, he’s quick to add, he loves.

Though much of Pueblo Café’s menu may be familiar, Mirabal said he’s made sure to include a few dishes rare even in Las Cruces, a town renowned for its Mexican food.

The daily special menu offers fare absent from many other eateries. Every day of the week offers a unique dish that may be familiar to some and wholly new to others.

“It all depends on what you had growing up,” Mirabal said.

Albondigas (a Mexican meatball soup), chicharrones with green chile, mole, lengua and steak tampiqueña are a few of the classic dishes Mirabal said he’s always loved at home and, now, he’s brought them to the public.

“We added those special things you might get once a week growing up, if that,” he said, “We have these at home, so we want to share that.”

While Pueblo Café’s menu may be small, Mirabal sees this as an asset rather than a detriment, and he has a good point.

“Our menu isn’t big, but we do it all very well,” he said. “It’s a small, easy, basic menu, with the food people know and, really, what you know is what you like.”

For the persnickety patron looking for page after page of increasingly esoteric options, Pueblo Café may not be the place for you – by design. Rather than stretching his menu too thin, Mirabal opted to stick with, again, what people love from their home lives.

“You can’t please everybody all the time, though I like to try,” he said with a laugh. “I’d rather do 20 things and do them really well than do 70 things just OK.”

On the weekends, the familial spirit of Pueblo Café is in full effect, with breakfast and lunch available all day for those – like me – who occasionally rise in the late afternoons craving nothing else but bacon, eggs, French toast, pancakes or – Mirabal’s favorite – huevos rancheros. “On Saturday and Sunday, people go to church, people go shopping, or they’re still in bed from the night before,” he said, winking. “If you feel like pancakes at 1 p.m., you can get them here; if you need huevos rancheros at 3 p.m., we’ll make them for you.”

That fondness for casual cooking really heats up when Mirabal cooks up fresh, homestyle carne adovada and carne asada on a grill outside the restaurant on Saturday and Sunday.

“Weekends, I’ll take the grill outside, fire it up and throw on the charcoal, a little mesquite, and we start grilling the carne adovada, the carne asada, the carnitas,” said Mirabal, his passion for sizzling meat over an open flame on a weekend afternoon unmistakable.

The grill isn’t necessarily limited to those Sunday favorites, though; Mirabal said he’s flexible.

“If the customers want a burger out there, I’ll cook them a burger out there,” he said. “I don’t mind the grilling; I like it.”

While he’s more than happy firing up the grill to sate his hungry weekend customers, Mirabal said there’s just one thing keeping the experience from being “just like home.”

“The only thing different from home is that I lack the beer,” he said with a chuckle. “I can’t stand out there next to the grill with a beer in my hand, but other than that, I don’t mind it.”

Never fear, though, thirsty weekend warriors; Mirabal said Pueblo Café is in the process of applying for a license to serve beer and wine – always the perfect complement to a plate of fresh, spicy homestyle Mexican food, prepared by a neighbor who, like us, grew up with an abiding love of a home-cooked meal and a full dinner table.

Raising the diva bar ... again

The third time is charming as divas and divos return to the stage for Divas 2013

Preview by David Salcido

Las Cruces Bulletin

The divos are in fine form this year. Yes, you read that correctly.

Just as Las Cruces' own divas – Megan McQueen, Janet Mazdra, Della Bustamante, Carrie Klofach and Thea Cordova Mills – will be coming together for the third straight year to present a fundraising extravaganza to benefit the American Southwest Theatre Company, the divos are also making a grand return to the stage.

Originally invited to accompany Sassy Diva McQueen for one number last year, the divos, as they were affectionately dubbed by the divas, found themselves interjected into several of the numbers and eventually wound up stealing the show. Because of that reception, McQueen, the organizer of the event, has decided to give them their own numbers this year.

"I thought what they did last year was awesome," she said. "I mean, the word diva implies flashy and grandiose ... and they definitely are, so ... yeah. It just made sense."

Last year, the divos – Philip Alvarez, Walter Carr, Matt Esqueda, Austin Parrish, Donny Prosize and Karlos Saucedo – were brought in primarily to help McQueen, who had been diagnosed with vocal polyps and, thus had to "take it easy," get through her rendition of "Diamonds Are A Girl's Best Friend." This year, they'll strut their stuff in two big numbers, "There's Nothing Like A Dame" and "It's Raining Men."

"There will be lot more divo-ness in the other numbers this year, too," McQueen added. "I think it totally raises the bar."

Lest we forget, however, as integral as the divos have become to the show, it is still the divas who rule the roost. And when it comes to raising the bar, these gals are ready to pull out all the stops.

"The first year was conceptually about presenting the rules of being a diva," McQueen said. "It playfully introduced the concept of rivalry and fabulousness, and we just went from there. Last year was the year of the divo, but it continued the whole diva vibe."

If it sounds like McQueen is actively looking for ways to top her previous shows, it's because she is. It isn't enough to have five of the brightest stars in Las Cruces appear on stage together, held together by local thespian Charles Lecoq as emcee and the masterful David Cunniff on piano. Nor is it enough, apparently, to introduce a campy male element. For the sassy diva, the sky is the limit.

"I was literally driving home from the show last year, saying, 'how can we top what we did this year?'" she said. "What better time to figure it out than when it's fresh in my mind, right? For example, Thea, our opera diva, last year sang 'Glitter And Be Gay,' which is the most fabulous song ever, so how do you one up that? This year, we're bringing in a tenor from El Paso, who is amazing, to sing a duet with her. The first year we just had a piano. Last year we had a piano player, a drummer and a guitar. This year, we're going to have a full band and we're ending the show with a huge group number."

Originally conceived as a fundraiser for the American Southwest Theatre Company's guest artist outreach programs, the event has been, according to ASTC Managing Director and Department Head of NMSU Theatre Arts Tom Smith, the organization's largest fundraiser two years running.

"It's been a really popular fundraiser, but what's really cool is, in addition to the ticket sales, we also have community sponsors," Smith said. "For a $200 sponsorship, audience members can choose which diva, or divo, they want to sponsor. For the price they get four reserved seats to the show, they get a special VIP reception during intermission, they get a picture with their diva at the end of the show and it's just a really great way for them to connect with an artist."

But more than just a business prospect for the organization he oversees, Smith also admits to having become a fan.

"It's fun," he said. "There's a lot of fun banter. It's a little bit campy ... okay, it's a lot campy, especially with the boys up there dancing. It's very much in the vein of an old variety show and is really about getting a group of artists together who are at the top of their game for one big concert. They sort of exaggerate their personalities, in true diva style, and that adds to the humor. It's just a lot of fun. We look forward to it every year and so do a lot of our regular patrons."

It's all music to McQueen's ears, who likens the proceedings to "an enjoyable evening of carefree fun." She is also very quick to point out that another big highlight of this year's show will be the venue.

"We're naturally going to have a bigger, more fabulous event because we're in the new Center for the Arts," she said.

Smith agrees and admits that he is always eager to show off the new facility.

"If there are still people who haven't been to the new building yet, I think this is a great opportunity for them to come into the space and see how it can be used for something other than traditional theatrical performances," he said. "We just introduced a musical theatre component to our program, last year when we moved into the new building, and I want people to start thinking of the Center for the Arts not just as a place to see great plays, but also as a place to see great musicals."

What it all comes down to is having fun for a good cause. "It's become an occasion for celebration," McQueen said.

"Who doesn't want to have an over-the-top, festive good time and forget about everything else they have going on for just one night?" She paused, falling into her diva mode, eyes twinkling. "Besides, where else are you going to get this much fabulousness on one stage?"

Good times are here to stay

'Dames at Sea' a delightful piece of fluff

Review by Gerald M. Kane
For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Down deep in my heart, I have always wanted to learn how to tap dance. Ever since I watched the exciting opening of the 1980 Gower Champion production of "42nd Street" on Broadway and the curtain crept up to reveal a company of forty dancers tapping away full steam, I wanted to be able to do the "shuffle, kick, brush, step ..." routines right along with them.

Well, that never happened, but thanks to a delightful piece of fluff playing on the stage of the Las Cruces Community Theatre through Sunday, Aug. 18, I can live vicariously! This piece of summer entertainment is the perfect pick-me-up refresher to relieve your summer doldrums. I'd make reservations right now, because the word of mouth about this terrific show will bring sold-out houses.

The show is the 1968 musical "Dames at Sea," whose most important side note is that it catapulted Bernadette Peters to stardom.

I was lucky enough to see Peters in 1969 when the show transferred to a larger theatre "Off Broadway." I was mesmerized by her sparkling voice and immense talent, not to mention the simplistic plot and great ensemble singing and dancing.

There's not much of a plot, just song after song and dance after dance. "Dames at Sea" is a campy show based on the nostalgia of Hollywood musicals of the 1930s. It's big time New York into which sweet little Ruby (as in Ruby Keeler) has come to make it big on Broadway. Who should she chance to meet but Dick (as in Dick Powell), a sailor who also has ambitions as a songwriter. Ruby begins in the chorus, and by the end of the day, in true Hollywood fashion, Dick saves her doomed Broadway show as Ruby becomes a star on the deck of a battleship which just happens to be passing by.

I am delighted to tell you that this LCCT production is impressive, showcasing some of the very best vocal and dancing talent in our community.

Andrea Kiesling, who made such a stellar impression in her first role at LCCT as Jewel in "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," returns, guns a-blasting as the over-the-top diva Mona Kent. Kiesling even gets a chance to show off her considerable operatic talents. Hopefully we will get to see more of this remarkable talent in future productions in our community.

Nora Petty, who also made an impact in "Whorehouse," plays the wise-cracking Joan Blondell-styled role of Joan. She is saucy, brassy, and could give the late Ethel Merman a run for her money as a terrific belter, most especially in the rousing finale of the first act, "Good Times are Here to Stay." By the way, from a brief conversation with her after the show, Petty is just as gutsy off stage as she is on!

“ In sum, this show moves quickly and brings much fun and talent to us. Bravo to all! ”

In the key role of Ruby, Taylor Rey, another "Whorehouse" talent, shows of considerable dance and vocal skills and plays this part well, eliciting the required tongue-in-cheek sympathy and all the while letting us know in our hearts that everything will turn out well in the end.

The three chorines who round out the female ensemble, Naomi Rupp, Lisa LeCocq and Stepheny Perez, do a fine job as well. They rarely smile (which I think is part of the direction), but their dancing and singing make us do so.

The three male players are perfectly cast. Mike Cris-tensen as Ruby's love interest has charm, innocence and is the perfect complement. James Boberg has the vocal and dance chops to keep pace with the unstoppable Petty, and Christopher Sedillo has terrific comic timing and a strong voice.

Christa Frederickson's contribution as music director cannot be underplayed. She maintains the perfect balance between the orchestra and the company. Also, the appropriate and cute costumes by Susie Whelpely cannot go unnoticed.

The "lynchpin" of this production is the indomitable Janet Mazdra, whose acting, singing and choreography we have admired all year. This is her first directorial venture, and, combined with her traditional choreography meets our expectations. She is truly a gift to all of us.

In sum, this show moves quickly and

2 guns, 2 stars, nothing more

Formulaic flick lifted up by star power

Review by Zak Hansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

As Baltasar Kormákur's "2 Guns" opens, criminals Bobby (Denzel Washington) and Stig (Mark Wahlberg) relax in a booth in a small New Mexico diner trash talking.

Stig winks at the waitress; Bobby barbs him for it. Then they burn the diner down, don clown and monster masks, burst into the bank across the street and take it for $3 million they believe belongs to ruthless Mexican drug lord Papi Greco, making time to flirt with the staff, crack a few jokes and even plant a smooch on a screaming baby.

The scene is Tarantino-lite, but on the strength of its leads, who are never anything less than likeable to watch, it's a blast to watch these two good guys play bad.

But, wait. They didn't make off with $3 million; it's $43 million. And the money isn't Papi Greco's; as it turns out, it belongs to the CIA.

What's more, Bobby and Stig aren't even criminals. Bobby is actually DEA agent Robert Trench, deep undercover for 12 months attempting to infiltrate the cartel, and Stig is Michael Stigman, a naval intelligence officer trying to find himself back in the good graces of his superiors after some sort of nebulous infraction.

Nothing is what it seems in Kormákur's film; bad guys are good guys, good guys are bad guys, and, in the end, a bad movie is a good movie, dragged up from the dregs on the backs of its stars. If "2 Guns" weren't anchored by two of Hollywood's most charismatic leading men, it would be another fill-in-the-blanks big budget action flick we perfected in the early 1990s.

It's loud, bloody, occasionally offensive and impossibly convoluted, little more than a series of strung-together set pieces packed with inexplicable double- and triple-crosses held together by some solidly sleazy performances.

Which isn't necessarily a bad thing. Hundreds of thousands of rounds of ammunition are expended, with Bobby and Stig firing almost as many one-liners and barbs as bullets and bombs at everyone around them, including, more often than not, each other.

Added to the fray is the kingpin himself, Papi Greco, played by a slumming-it Edward James Olmos who apparently wanted to add "sleazy, stereotyped Mexican drug lord" to his impressive filmography of powerful Latino roles. Bill Paxton – everyone's favorite actor to confuse with Bill Pullman (even as I type this, I'm less and less sure) – plays a murderous CIA agent with a Southern drawl, a sinister twinkle in his eye and a predilection for Russian roulette as an interrogation technique. James Marsden mostly just looks the part – handsome but instantly dislikeable – as Stig's nefarious commanding officer, rounding out our dynamic duo's laundry list of targets.

To attempt to mention where the story – and I use that word liberally – goes would be venturing into spoiler territory and, what's more, nearly impossible to do. Even taking notes, I'm unsure how the web of double-crosses and secret pacts comes together, and the film takes enough glaring liberties with things as flighty as "narrative continuity" there isn't much point. CIA, FBI, DEA, U.S. Navy – it doesn't much matter, and if it did, it wouldn't work. Just assume that nobody is what they seem and everybody is out to kill everybody, and you'll get the picture.

Even with these fairly serious infractions, it's hard not to enjoy watching Washington and Wahlberg up there on the screen, trading barbs and B.S. in a diner, rolling around in the dirt, fighting like school children and generally making a fiery, bloody mess of things.

If you'd like to see a movie where two respected, likeable megastars get a chance to blow up a cherry-red 1964 Impala loaded with tens of millions of dollars in the middle of a multi-agency firefight taking place in the courtyard of a Mexican cartel estate, bullets, blood and Benjamins filling the screen, "2 Guns" is the film for you. The mysteries of sexual power

'Augustine' a dark, distinctive film

Review by Jeff Berg
For the Las Cruces Bulletin

There was a time when any unexplainable medical malady of women was assigned a label of "hysteria," which was then often attached to reproductive organs in one way or another, which of course disempowered any woman "treated" for such problems.

The female orgasm was a point of mystery and fear for many in the old days of medicine, but astute doctors could see that change was coming.

Such is the case of Augustine, eponymous protagonist of director Alice Winocour's "Augustine."

A young kitchen maid overcome by unexplained seizures, Augustine becomes a medical mannequin for the sawbones who becomes her attending neurologist, Jean-Martin Charcot.

Through its fine but bleak performances, especially that of Soko, a French singer/actress, as Augustine, we follow Charcot's rather unsavory method of making Augustine a visual mannequin for other doctors.

By hypnotizing her, he finds that she has deeper and longer seizures, allowing the doctors in the gallery to observe her while Charcot attempts to help her in his own odd way.

The seizures start as "normal" convulsions, and at times parts of her body become immobile, even afterward, when the seizure ceases and a sort of psychosexual calm takes place.

However, whether by design or accident, changes in the treatment of such patients take root, as Charcot, a grim and unlikeable character, notes that Augustine and others are ill and not demon possessed, which was the way of thinking about such situations prior.

Augustine prays, Charcot develops mechanical devices, but Augustine's personal strength develops – allowing everything to change, sans machinery and hypnotics. No longer just an illiterate maid, she begins to discover her personal power.

Charcot, on the other hand, is soon in a constant state of anxiety about how his work will be received by his fellow medicos and the socialites of the era, not to mention how this will influence the financing of this endeavor.

His wife, supportive but also status conscious, does her best to try and relieve his tension. At times it seems like she is in charge of Charcot's life, but while at the clinic, it is all Charcot, all the time.

All of the patients are women and Charcot is the figure of male power, which results in a scenario where the patients are either terrified of him or fawning over him.

As an example, a new patient is told to pray for relief, like all are, but this time not to God, but Charcot. It is a small but terrifying scene.

He is well-regarded by staff but all are certainly scared of him as well.

And over time, a dark relationship begins to develop between Augustine and Charcot. Not your typical romance, it is subtle and more a struggle for power than one for love. Augustine has realized that the naked writhing she does for Charcot's audiences (the treatment becomes so popular that reviews are written about them) that Augustine is able to seduce Charcot with his own treatment, so to speak.

Well directed and with a very appropriate atmosphere achieved by lighting and tight directing, "Augustine" is a distinctive film about life's one indomitable emotion – power.

Check out some fascinating photos and sketches of the real Augustine at www.slideshare.net/suhawes/charcots-photographic-icongraphy-of-hysteria.

Enjoying the best of Picacho Hills

Couple came for the golf, stayed for the comfortable living

By Beth Sitzler
Las Cruces Bulletin

They don't call New Mexico "The Land of Enchantment" for nothing.

After Jean De Arment came to the City of the Crosses for a golf tournament at the Picacho Hills Country Club, she went back to Kansas City, Mo., and told her husband, Sam, she found their new home.

"It took four years, but after he played here once, he loved it," she said. "We just loved the climate."

Moving to southern New Mexico nine years ago, the couple knew they wanted to live in Picacho Hills. Located west of the heart of the city, Picacho Hills offered residents peace and quiet in a more rural setting, which the couple liked.

"I think this area is the best in town," Sam De Arment said, "and the golf course is one of the best in New Mexico."

The couple's search took them to 1626 Via Turquesa, a home built in 1995.

"I knew immediately that this was the one," Jean De Arment said. "We work from home, and this house had space for us to do so."

Located on a corner lot, the property features native plants, which surround the area leading up to the front door. Inside, tall ceilings and tiled floors the couple had installed lead throughout the home.

To the right of the entrance, tucked behind French doors, is Sam De Arment's office. The couple had custom cabinets installed. Dark tile was added to the floor to break up the space.

"There is plenty of flex space in this home," Jean De Arment said.

At the center of the home is the formal living room. An arched opening leads into the sunken space. Featuring a tiled fireplace, the room feels private and separate from the rest of the home. However, thanks to its tall ceilings, the living room still feels open and spacious.

"It's a nice home to entertain in," Jean De Arment said. "We like to hold parties, and we've been able to fit quite a few people in here."

A hallway leads to two of the home's three bedrooms. One of the bedrooms was converted into an office for Jean De Arment.

At the back of the home is the family room.

"This is where we spend most of our time," Jean De Arment said.

Featuring 12-foot-tall ceilings, the room feels spacious but is still intimate, Jean De Arment said. A built-in entertainment center lines a wall and is illuminated by recessed lighting along the ceiling and numerous windows, which bring in not only natural light, but the view of the Organ Mountains and city.

"Look at that view," Sam De Arment said.

Hidden behind cabinet doors is a bar with mini refrigerator, perfect for entertaining.

The master suite is located off the family room. The large bedroom features a soft color palette, unlike the master bathroom, which features vibrant red on the walls. The bathroom includes two sinks, a large bathtub surrounded by glass blocks for natural light, a separate shower and a door leading outside to the hot tub.

Finishing the space is a walk-in closet with a separate, cedar-lined closet.

Opening to the family room is the kitchen. After purchasing the home, the couple installed updated appliances as well as new granite countertops.

"Everything in here was the same color, so we were looking for some contrast," Jean De Arment said of the dark granite paired with the light cabinetry.

Jean De Arment also added a splash of color in the form of one lime green accent wall.

Across the way is the dining room. A formal area, the dining room is surrounded by windows capturing the outdoor scenery.

Also in this area is a red-orange laundry room that leads to the two-car garage, a walk-in pantry, a three-fourths bathroom and an extra room used by Jean De Arment as a hobby room.

"I love my hobby room," she said.

Another area loved by the couple is the patio. The patio is an extension of the indoor space, thanks to its fireplace and overhead TV, great for watching football or golf during those beautiful Las Cruces days, Jean De Arment said.

The patio overlooks the swimming pool. Jean De Arment said she uses the rectangular-shaped aeration pool every morning and because it's 4 feet deep, it's great for laps.

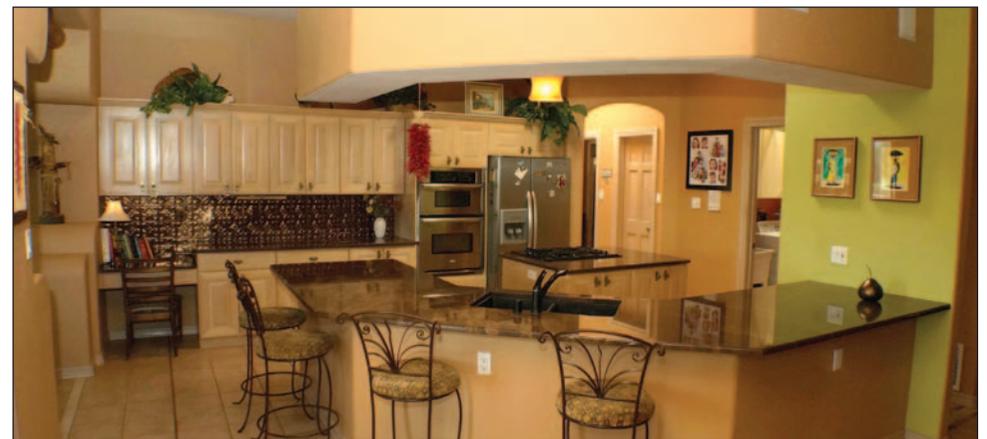

A rock wall encloses the backyard, while the rest of the .89-acre property is left untouched, providing a nice barrier from the neighbors. The couple used artificial grass and rock landscaping, and kept the vegetation to a minimum.

"Whatever we did plant is more or less natural and grown in the desert," said Jean De Arment, adding that the plants are connected to a drip system.

Chile Knights

A favorite dish of mine is enchiladas – creamy, gooey with cheese and made fiery hot with green chile pepper, seeds and all, por favor!

I love the mouth sizzle and the warm tingling sensation as it goes down the “tube.” Then there’s the slight brow sweat, the cool off. I dab my forehead with a tissue and dig in again for another rousing ride. To me, this is what comfort food is all about.

It should be of no surprise that enchiladas originated in Mexico during Mayan times, where rolling corn tortillas around food was routine. According to Wikipedia, enchiladas were mentioned in the first Mexican cookbook, “El Cocinero Mexicano” (“The Mexican Chef”), published in 1831.

It wasn’t until 1914 that an enchilada recipe, written in English, was discovered in “California Mexican-Spanish Cookbook.” Since then, enchilada recipes crop up in cookbooks, even those not dedicated solely to Mexican food, proving just how popular this dish is.

Join me as I celebrate our green season with your own batch of enchiladas.

Enchiladas for Dummies

- 2 (10 3/4-ounce) cans golden mushroom soup
- 2 (10 3/4-ounce) cans cream chicken soup
- 1 cup milk or water
- 1 cup roasted hot green chile, stemmed, seeded (if desired) and chopped
- 1 teaspoon garlic powder
- 1 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
- 2 cups cooked chicken, chopped
- 1 dozen corn tortillas
- 2 cups Colby Jack cheese, grated
- Vegetable oil (optional)
- 1 cup onion, chopped

In a saucepan, mix soups, milk, chile, garlic and black pepper. Heat to just under boiling. Add chicken and mix. Brown tortillas in a skillet with vegetable oil for 10 to 15 seconds on each side. Drain on paper towels. Or skip this step and use tortillas directly from package.

In a 9-by-12-inch microwaveable dish, arrange in layers: tortillas, soup mixture, onion and cheese, ending with cheese.

Microwave until hot and bubbly. Serve with guacamole, chopped tomatoes, lettuce and sour cream, if desired. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Sloppy Green Chile Chicken Enchiladas

- 2 cooked chicken breasts, shredded
- 1 pound roasted green chile, stemmed, peeled, seeded and roughly chopped
- 1 (14-ounce) can diced tomatoes with jalapeños, drained
- 2 onions

- 3 to 4 large garlic cloves
- Pinch cumin
- Pinch oregano
- 1 tablespoon flour
- 1 quart chicken stock
- 1 dozen corn tortillas cut into quarters
- 1 (8-ounce) bag sharp cheddar cheese, coarsely grated
- 1 (8-ounce) bag pepper jack cheese, coarsely grated
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- Salt and pepper to taste
- Garnish suggestions: shredded butter lettuce (I prefer butter to iceberg, because it has more flavor), diced tomato, sour cream and fat-free refried beans

Preheat oven to 350 degrees.

Heat olive oil in a Dutch oven. Add onion, garlic, cumin, oregano, salt and pepper. Sizzle over medium-hot heat until onion becomes translucent. Sprinkle flour on top. Mix and cook until ingredients turn golden brown and moisture is gone. Add chiles and all but 1 cup of the stock and tomatoes. Stir thoroughly. Bring to a boil, reduce heat and simmer for about 5 minutes. Remove from burner and cool.

Blend sauce in a blender or with an immersion blender until desired consistency. (Bits and pieces are good.) If using a blender, return sauce to Dutch oven and add the chicken. Continue to simmer.

In the meantime, scatter the bottom of a 3-quart oblong baking dish with a small amount of green chile. Make a layer of tortillas on top of that. Pour some sauce on top, making sure to get some chicken spread evenly throughout. Add a layer of cheese. Then add more tortillas, sauce and chicken, and cheese, until layers reach the top of the dish. Pour a bit more sauce on top and cover with cheese. (If you have leftover sauce, refrigerate and use for huevos rancheros or other egg dishes.) Pour remaining stock over entire dish to make it “sloppy.”

Bake for about 20 minutes or until dish is bubbling and the cheese on top has completely melted. Let rest for 5 to 7 minutes before serving. Serve with sour cream, diced tomato, guacamole and a heaping side of cowboy beans with bacon. Makes 6 servings. (Recipe is adapted from <http://chroniclesofastomachgrumble.blogspot.com>.)

Roasted Beef Hot Green Enchiladas with Hot Green Enchilada Sauce

- 1 (3-pound) beef roast
- 2 (14 1/2-ounce) cans Hunt’s Spicy Red Pepper diced tomatoes, undrained
- 1/2 cup medium hot roasted green chiles, diced
- 1 tablespoon ground cumin
- 1 tablespoon garlic salt
- 4 cups enchilada sauce (recipe below)
- 20 flour tortillas
- 1 (8-ounce) bag shredded cheddar cheese
- Garnish suggestions: sour cream, chopped tomato and cilantro

Make your brows sweat with a batch of sizzlin’ hot enchiladas.

Las Cruces Bulletin photo by Sunny Conley

Place roast in crock pot. Mix the tomatoes, green chiles and spices in a bowl. Stir until mixed and pour over roast. Cook on low for 8 to 9 hours. When roast is done shred with two forks. Dip each tortilla in the sauce and roll up with 2 tablespoons shredded beef and 1 tablespoon cheese. Place enchiladas in two 9-by-13-inch pans. Pour remaining sauce over top of enchiladas and sprinkle with remaining cheese. Bake in a preheated 350 degree oven for about 15 minutes or until cheese melts. Top with sour cream and tomatoes, if desired. Makes 10 servings.

- medium-hot green chiles, peeled
- 4 teaspoons roasted garlic from jar, chopped
- 4 cups water
- 4 teaspoons Mexican oregano (rubbed between the fingers, but not too fine)
- 1 teaspoon ground cumin
- 2 teaspoons salt

Place all ingredients in a food processor and chop at medium setting (do not purée). Warm before serving. Makes 4 cups. (Recipe is adapted from “The Great Chile Book,” Mark Miller, Ten Speed Press, 1991.)

Encore for an earring

One's enough for crafty repurposing

By Alta LeCompte
Las Cruces Bulletin

In 1991, the remains of what is believed to be the oldest mummified body were found in an ice block in the Alps, near the border of Italy and Austria. The mummified remains were determined to be 5,300 years old, and researchers named him Otzi the Iceman.

On closer inspection, they noted the mummy's ears were pierced, a finding that supported anthropologists' theory men wore earrings before women.

The first earrings may have been used to ward off evil spirits. Piercings would allow those spirits to slip out through the holes.

In colonial times, sailors believed that piercing of ears could help improve eyesight. If the bodies of those who died at sea were washed up on shore, they were given a decent burial – if their ears were pierced. Before long, earrings became associated with pirates and other rogues, and lost favor among decent men.

Women abandoned earrings, too, from time to time. When big collars, big hair or big hats were in, earrings were out.

Now, earrings are seen everywhere – worn singly, in pairs or in mismatched groups. Most, however, are sold in pairs, which can present problems. Like socks, they go missing one at a time.

Around-the-home item: Earrings

Some hold too much value, either monetary or sentimental, to be discarded when widowed.

Rather than let them sit idle, adding to the jumble at the bottom of your jewelry box, why not give them an opportunity to shine in a whole new way?

Here are a few ways to create useful and beautiful objects from earrings:

1. Spruce up your home office: Remove the backs from post earrings with jewelry pliers and use them as decorative thumb tacks on your bulletin board. They won't make your to-do list any shorter, but you're more likely to look at it from time to time.

2. Embellish a picture frame: Tack post earrings on to a Plain Jane frame. Or remove clips or hooks from the backs of earrings and use craft glue to affix them to the frame.

Your favorite friend's picture will look its best in this place of honor.

3. Decorate for the holidays: If you have an entire collection of mateless earrings, decorate a small Christmas tree or wreath.

If you need more earrings to make your masterpiece, visit a thrift store or flea market to expand your collection.

4. Reuse as a stitch holder: If you knit or crochet, use hook or loop earrings to make your efforts easier. Just hook a large earring into stitches to hold or mark them while you're executing a complex pattern. Make sure the earring is tightly closed.

5. Glitz up the fridge: It's easy to make unique refrigerator magnets. Use wire cutters to clip off the posts, and then glue the earrings to tiny magnets. If it's too hot to play outside, the kids can make their own magnets or create a one-of-a-kind gift.

6. Turn old earrings into charms for a bracelet: Add a clasp to a bracelet-length chain and then ready your charms. For earrings that are hook style, use jewelry pliers to remove the hooks. There should be a hole in the earring where the hook was attached; thread a jump ring through this hole and use jewelry pliers to attach the jump ring to a link of the chain. For post-style earrings, use a pair of round-nose jewelry pliers to twist the post into a circular shape, making sure the loop is tight enough that it will stay attached to a jump ring. Thread a jump ring through the loop, then attach the jump ring to the bracelet.

Now that you're thinking about making jewelry, consider converting a large earring to a pendant and attach it to a necklace. Or make a ring. Or take old earrings apart with jewelry pliers and save the beads and pieces in small containers until you tackle your next crafty project.

Better latte than normal

The Aerolatte Steam Free Milk Frother whips ordinary coffee into peak shape

By David Salcido
Las Cruces Bulletin

Though it was first introduced in America sometime in the mid-1970s, the café latte was around for more than a century before Starbucks discovered it.

In fact, according to the Oxford English Dictionary, the earliest usage of the term was in 1867 by William Dean Howells in his essay "Italian Journeys."

Even so, the Italian version of this iconic drink would not have satisfied contemporary American palates. Why? Because, despite the European inflection, it is a purely American invention. In Italy, ordering a latte, even today, would most likely get you a glass of milk. A café latte would get you a cup of coffee with milk. It's much the same in France, Spain and other European countries.

It took good old-fashioned American ingenuity to take something so simple and turn it into an espresso-fueled, steamed, whipped and, in some cases, intricately decorated high-brow confection. As with most things, however, once the "product" has reached its pinnacle and entered the common man's lexicon, finding ways to replicate the process without all the fuss and muss, becomes the norm. Call it frou-frou backlash, for lack of a better term.

So here we are in the teen years of the 21st century. You're sitting at home or the office, wishing there was a way to spice up the same old cuppa joe without dropping a fiver for 6 ounces of whipped air and cinnamon. What do you do? Reach for a milk frother, of course. But not just any milk frother: The Aerolatte Steam Free Milk Frother.

If you're going to own a gadget, go for the best, or, as the website hyphenistically dubs it, "the world-famous, award-winning, best-selling, original steam-free milk frother."

What is it?

The Aerolatte Steam Free Milk Frother is an inexpensive little hand-held device that can be used to create perfect lattes, cappuccinos and even milkshakes with the flip of a switch.

Elegant in its simplicity, the Aerolatte consists of a slim battery pack and motor casing connected to a metal spindle with a spinning whisk tip. That spinning tip literally whips the milk into a creamy foam, perfect for confectionary sipping.

How does it work?

Simply pour milk into a cup. Add sugar, vanilla or cocoa, if desired. Place in the microwave to heat it up, being careful not to bring it to a complete boil. Now you're ready to begin.

Place the tip of the aerolatte into the warm milk, press the button and let her whip. In 15 to 20 seconds, you should have a perfect cup of creamy foam. Top it off with hot coffee, or espresso if you're so inclined. It may not be the tall, skinny, half-caff dolce soy latte you're accustomed to from your friendly neighborhood drive-thru, but in a pinch, it's the caffeinated froth that refreshes at a fraction of the price. Even better, clean-up is a snap. Simply operate the gadget in soapy water and rinse.

Really want to mix things up? Try the Aerolatte Cappuccino Art Stencils, which are exactly what they say they are. Satisfy the artistic barista inside you by placing one of the flat stencils on the top of your filled mug, shaking a little cocoa powder or cinnamon over it and, viola! Instant coffee art.

Where is it found?

Conveniently enough, everything

you ever wanted to know about the Aerolatte Steam Free Milk Frother can be found at its website, www.aerolatte.com, including recipes, FAQs and purchase information. It's also a very popular item on just about every food blog, kitchen and gadget site on the World Wide Web, including William Sonoma and Amazon.com.

How much does it cost?

The classic chrome Aerolatte milk frother averages around $20, depending on where you shop. It's also available with a "stylish satin" finish. Feeling sassy? Harold Import Co. offers a black satin version, a Union Jack version and a Jersey-spotted "Mooo" version, all in handy travel cases for $17. The stencils come six to a set and are packaged in a handy tin for as little as $8 at Amazon.com, or any other kitchen gadget website you already have bookmarked.

First Presbyterian holds blessing

Annual event held to support children going back to school

There's no guarantee these backpacks will ensure straight A's, but First Presbyterian Church wants students to start the school year with something better.

The local church, located on Boutz Road near Las Cruces High School, hopes students will start the year feeling loved, blessed and supported by their community.

During the regular 10:30 a.m. worship service Sunday, Aug. 11, students of any age are invited to bring their school backpacks and receive this special blessing from Rev. Norm Story.

First Presbyterian Church has had a "Blessing of the Backpacks" event for several years to support the students of the community returning to school.

The First Presbyterian Church is located at 200 E. Boutz Road.

For more information, call the church office at 526-5559.

Rev. Norm Story speaks to a group of children on how to keep the faith while in school during a backpack blessing held last year, at First Presbyterian Church.

Promoting literacy awareness

Rorie Measure
The Reading Solution

We live in a vibrant and generous community with many groups promoting literacy. Here are five local programs that focus on creating successful school outcomes for our children.

New shoes and books

With back-to-school excitement in the air, the Aprendamos Intervention Team provides new school shoes for children who need them.

"Parents are struggling so we help out with new shoes," Caroline Zamora, AIT communication specialist, said. "Reading is critical to learning so we are putting books in homes as well."

Currently, 165 children in Hatch and Arrey are receiving a pair of shoes and a book. More children are on a waiting list. Sponsors include Steinmann Prosthetics, Hatch Mercantile, Tu Media, Aprendamos, Radio of Las Cruces and the Children's Reading Foundation.

Health and reading

Ben Archer Health Centers (BAHC) have adopted the Reach Out And Read program for children under the age of five.

"During well-child visits, the medical staff discusses the importance of reading with children and provides a new book," Kara Bower said. "BAHC community health care workers visit parents at home to teach the importance of early literacy and provide a free book and educational toy."

Positive role models

If you have read this far you may be thinking about getting involved, too. Katherine Souza of Big Brothers Big Sisters of Southwestern New Mexico is ready to show you how one hour a week at a local school can enrich your life and the life of a child.

Big Brothers Big Sisters of Southwestern New Mexico promotes literacy through the mentoring process. In the school-based mentoring program, the big and little meet one hour per week during the school year at the little's school. They eat lunch, work on homework and play.

"The big is making a difference and building a legacy of 'pass it on' caring that will influence generations to come," Souza said. "The little gains both immediate and long term benefits from having

Engineer pushes the limit

Death Race not for the weak of heart

By Rachel Christiansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

Justin Attebury is a normal guy – a 22-year-old with an engineering degree from New Mexico State University and employee of local company Stubbs Engineering – but he has somewhat of an extreme passion.

Convincing his dad to let him participate in the Bataan Memorial Death March at 8 years old, Attebury got his first taste of what would later develop into a lifelong love and affliction for marathons.

Ultra marathons, to be exact – courses that run more than 50 miles – are now the only races Attebury enters.

Possibly the king of these extreme races is what is known simply as the Death Race, which has made it to several sports magazines' top 100 lists of toughest races in the world.

Saying it had been on his radar as something to work toward for the past few years, Attebury made his way to the registration table in Pittsfield, Vt., before the sun came up on June 21.

The participants are told little information about what to expect from the race – the directors design it that way to make it harder to train for – other than what bits and pieces are gleaned from past Death Race survivors.

"This race is about 99 percent mental and 1 percent physical," Attebury said. "You realize after awhile that you can start to ignore the pain, it's the mind games that will get you."

To call it a "race," however, is a little far-fetched, Attebury said, due to the extreme and sometimes bizarre nature of the challenges throughout the race.

Las Cruces resident Justin Attebury was one of several hundred 2013 Death Race contestants in Pittsfield, Vt. The race lasted more than 60 straight hours, and contestants received poker chips for completing any series of grueling and sometimes bizarre challenges.

Chopping approximately 30 logs of wood and carrying individual piles a total distance of several miles was one of the obstacles of the Death Race, an ultra marathon in Pittsfield, Vt., where contestants never really know what to expect.

"Ninety percent of what comes out of the race directors' mouths is a lie," Attebury said. "The whole reason they put this race together was to break people, to take you to your ultimate limit and make you fail."

"Once you hit that wall, you figure out where your boundaries are so you can push past them the next time."

This year, the Death Race lasted more than 60 hours, with little to no sleep and minimal food.

Half the participants, Attebury said, were out before the first challenge was over, which involved moving boulders and rocking a trail "Egyptian style" up the side of a mountain.

After about 16 hours of that, the race directors said the "actual race" was about to begin.

"I think I heard the race directors say, 'Now the race is really going to start,' about 15 times," Attebury said.

Once the trail was built, the contestants hiked several miles, on to the next feat of chopping wood – about 30 freshly chopped trees each – and carry their piles to and from the drop-off point about 600 yards away from the chopping site.

Then, after a climb down a muddy ravine lined with barbed wire, racers got their first taste of the "gambling" theme of the race.

"When you finally got down there, there were kid volunteers handing out playing cards, so you took your card, climbed back up the ravine and had to play the race director," Attebury said. "It was a simple game of high-low, and if you beat him, you didn't have to go back down for another card."

If you didn't beat the race director – fortunately for Attebury, he did, and more treks down the treacherous path did not have to be made.

Then the hiking began. Across a stretch of land known as Bloodroot Trail, the contestants marched at night, in the rain, a 25-mile stretch of mountainous Vermont terrain.

"Sleepwalking was rampant, and I hallucinated all kinds of things," Attebury said.

Ollin Venegas, who crewed for Attebury throughout the race, was able at one point to bring him pizza, some of the best pizza he had ever tasted, Attebury said.

It may sound like torture to some, but for people like Attebury and other extreme-challenge seekers, it's a rush.

"You meet some of the most incredible people that you could ever imagine," Attebury said. "It's a mutual suck – everyone is miserable so, in turn, everyone is happy."

After more physical challenges such as hiking, swimming, rock-paving and exercises, the racers were told the race was finally over around midnight on Sunday, June 23.

The next morning at 6 a.m., when awards were supposed to be given to the official finishers, the next round of gambling came into play.

The racers, given poker chips for completing obstacles throughout the race, had to lay all of their chips on the line in a game of chance to get their finisher's trophy.

"There were people trying to bet other things," Attebury said. "Like one guy tried to put down his car keys, because he wanted that skull so bad.”

Because he missed one of the time constraints during the race, Attebury was not considered an official finisher, but he completed the race, and was allowed to gamble to win his bib back, a token of pride for Death Race survivors.

“I went there with the attitude that I was going to give it everything I’ve got,” he said.

“Looking back, I’m really happy with what I did, and I’m proud of myself because I didn’t quit.”

Upon returning to the City of the Crosses, Attebury vowed to never do the Death Race again. Alas, he has already registered for 2014.

Struggling readers

The NM Lions Crane Reading Foundation offers reading instruction at Camino Real Middle School and the Boys & Girls Club of Las Cruces.

“Our program is effective for students at all reading levels, including high school and adults,” Eldon Steelman said. “It will increase the reading speed of good readers and bring struggling readers up to grade level. Given the importance of good vision in reading, we screen all students to determine if they need glasses. In some cases, we also screen for eye tracking problems. If the parents cannot afford glasses and have no insurance, the Las Cruces Host Lions Club funds eye exams and glasses through Dr. Lucero’s Accutech Eye Care Center.”

For more information, call Steelman at 373-2912. To enroll a student, contact Cathy Waters at 640-5020.

Family Literacy Expo

A day of fun activities, informative workshops and free books is being planned by the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce. Parents are invited to bring the whole family to Lynn Middle School on Saturday, Sept. 21. Festivities begin at 11 a.m. with lunch, followed by literacy workshops, activities and prizes until 3 p.m.

Much thanks to those of you who have shared information. Submit your ideas and share your experiences in local reader friendly environments. Read with a child every day.

Reading program enhances skills

Boys & Girls Club sees summer improvement

By Rachel Christiansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

At 8:30 a.m. on a weekday, the halls of the Boys & Girls Club of Las Cruces seem eerily quiet.

That’s because the students enrolled in the summer program spend the first hour of their day enhancing their reading and comprehension skills in the computer lab.

They were the first ones to get to play on 20 new computers given to the club in May, equipped with a reading program designed to work with each individual child and monitor their progress.

Of all the activities the children do during their time with the club – sports, music, games, etc. – computer time may not be a crowd favorite, but because of a reading program called the Fluent Reading Trainer (FLRT), marketed by MindPlay, its effect is invaluable.

“I think it definitely does help to combat the summer slide,” said program coordinator Brian Johnson. “This enhances our reading program because now we can actually track their progress.”

Students using the program at the club range from five to 12 years old, and a beginning assessment is done on each individual to determine at what level they should begin.

FLRT has seen huge success in other local schools such as Mesilla Valley Christian Schools (MVCS).

MVCS began using the FLRT in 2011, and within a matter of months could report success stories such as children who significantly improved their reading levels from 100 to 1,300 words per minute.

“It has real people on there who communicate with the kids and talk them through it to improve their literacy,” Johnson said. “The program focuses not just on reading but on comprehension skills.”

FLRT was the brainchild of Allen Crane, a retiree living in Las Cruces who developed the program as a way to combine the physical problems associated with reading and computerized learning programs to train both the eye and mind.

“Allen and his wife have 40-plus years of experience trying to improve student’s reading,” said Elden Steelman, secretary of the New Mexico Lions Crane Reading Foundation (LCRF).

On behalf of the LCRF, Steelman

Samantha España, a MindPlay supervisor at the Boys & Girls Club of Las Cruces, assists Jose Herrera, 8, with his headphones. Espana was advancing his reading skills with the digital MindPlay Virtual Reading Program, which was started at the club in May.

wrote and applied for the grant to fund the new computers with the program, and said they knew the children were using out-dated computers at the Boys & Girls Club.

“I sought funds from the Stocker Foundation, and they were interested in supporting reading efforts,” Steelman said. “So the first line item was to get the new computers.”

Sure enough, the Stocker Foundation awarded a $10,000 grant to get the club new computers, equipped with the MindPlay program.

“I’ve been delighted with the progress and the way the classes have been going,” Steelman said. “I’ve seen some of the instructors who are remarkably good at getting the kids to focus.”

Johnson admitted starting the program was met with a little resistance from the students at first, but after putting in place incentive programs for good behavior and achievements, it became part of the daily routine.

“We always try to tie educational programs into the activities we do here,” Johnson said. “With the reading programs before, the parents didn’t really know about it, but now they can actually see printouts of their child’s progress and also have access to that information.”

“The parents have been really appreciative,” Johnson said.

So where did all this generosity come from?

The LCRF has had several successful past initiatives to integrate the reading program into schools that have the need.

The members have made it their mission to improve literacy in the area, which is why they seek sometimes under-the-radar foundations, such as the Stocker Foundation, for help with this task.

“I would say that we’d be perfectly happy if we went out of business, or if our program was no longer needed,” Steelman said.

As education continues to be a hot topic in the state, that may not come any time soon.

Mesilla Valley Hospital receives donation

Mesilla Valley Hospital acknowledged Convergys for its support of the hospital's Treatment Foster Care (TFC) program over the summer. Convergys donated supplies for the TFC summer activity program and also donated backpacks filled with school supplies for elementary, middle and high school students.

Mesilla Valley Hospital's TFC program serves children who may be suffering from mental and behavioral health issues that many times are a result of some sort of trauma. TFC parents are highly trained individuals who provide care for children who need structure and consistency in their lives.

Smiling promotes longevity

The second week of August is National Smile Week, and marriage authority Hellen Chen is touting its benefits in all facets of a person's life, from personal success to health.

Chen's theory is supported by a study done at Wayne State University in 2010. The researchers examined baseball card photos of Major League players in 1952. The study found that the span of a player's smile is directly related to the span of his life. Players who didn't smile in their pictures lived an average of only 72.9 years, while players with wide smiles lived an average of 79.9 years.

In another study at Depauw University in Indiana, researchers asked people over age 65 to provide photos from their childhood. Their smile was rated and the researchers found that only 11 percent of the biggest smilers had been divorced, while 31 percent of the frowners had experienced a broken marriage.

Overall, the results indicate that people who frown in photos are five times more likely to get a divorce than people who smile.

Summer program offers healthy alternatives

Staff with the Doña Ana County Health and Human Services Department spent their summer between several Doña Ana County Community Resource Centers providing kids fun activities to participate in, field trips in which to explore nearby natural wonders and a healthy lunch.

Centers in the Doña Ana County communities of Rincon, Doña Ana, Radium Springs, Organ, Chaparral and Del Cerro have offered the Summer Lunch Program since June, with the added Youth Initiative in Radium Springs, Chaparral and Del Cerro centers. About a dozen kids participate in the Youth Initiative in Radium Springs. From 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., kids can enjoy foosball, pool, air hockey, outside sports, educational activities and a free lunch Monday through Thursday.

The Youth Initiative is free for middle school-aged youth and open to the public. The program ends the day before school starts. Last year, more than 6,100 free lunches were distributed through the Doña Ana County Summer Lunch Program in coordination with Hatch Valley School District, Families and Youth Incorporated, and the Gadsden Independent School District.

Ending summer with free adoptions

ACTion Programs for Animals (APA) and the Dona Ana Pets Alive! (DAPA!) campaign is winding down, so the group is inviting the public to spend the last of their hot summer nights riding in style with a new companion as their co-pilot. APA/DAPA! rescues animals from the municipal animal shelter and offers them for adoption via online listings and various adoption sites. The summer promo ends the last day of August.

For the entire summer, people have been able to adopt a APA/DAPA! dog/puppy or cat/kitten for free during the group's Summer Lovin' for Life adoption promotion. DAPA!'s animals spend time in foster homes before being offered for adoption, and they come with age-appropriate vaccinations, microchips, spay/neuter and routine medical check-ups/tests. APA/DAPA! has a lot of dogs/cats to choose from in all colors, shapes, sizes.

Besides weekly adoptions from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturdays at PetCo, 3050 E. Lohman Ave., DAPA! kittens and cats are available for adoption regularly at Better Life Pet Foods, Enchanted Gardens, and Calista's Animal Hospital.

Arrangements can also be made during the week to introduce interested adopters to animals they can see online at www.actionprogramsforanimals.org, www.petango.com, www.petfinder.com and www.adoptapet.com. APA/DAPA! is also seeking group or corporate sponsorships for their Summer Lovin' promotions aimed at turbo-charging adoptions to save more lives this summer in Dona Ana County.

ASPCA/Rachael Ray Challenge continues

Seven heartworm-positive dogs at the Animal Services Center of the Mesilla Valley were given forever homes, thanks to the kindness of local adopters. This puts the ASCMV another step closer in its representation of southern New Mexico in the ASPCA/Rachael Ray Challenge, which ends Saturday, Aug. 31.

Your vote can help the ASCMV get another step closer to a win in the ASPCA/Rachael Ray Challenge

Once the challenge ends and total adoption numbers are tallied, the figures will be announced to the public.

As the challenge continues, every Facebook 'like' connected with the hashtag #100challenge, along with every adoption, every rescue and every return to owner, counts positively in assisting the organization with the challenge. Currently, the ASCMV is holding its ground at No. 10 nationally, against such larger cities as Washington DC and Spokane, Wash.

The ASCMV is selling raffle tickets in order to raise funds for an end of challenge community appreciation cake and ice cream social. Raffle tickets are $1 each or six for $5. Tickets can be purchased through Jan Wright, volunteer coordinator for ASCMV, though it is recommended that purchasers call in advance to ensure she is in her office to complete the transaction. Donation raffle items are compliments of Las Cruces Visitors Center.
