High court hears gay marriage case

Ellins sits in on historic hearing

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

Doña Ana County Clerk Lynn Ellins was among those attending a state Supreme Court hearing Wednesday, Oct. 23, of oral arguments for and against allowing same-sex marriages in New Mexico.

Although a retired attorney who had gone before New York's high court, Ellins said he didn't expect to be able to speak to the court, as all the questions will be directed to the lawyers of the American Civil Liberties Union and lawyers for the state.

Still, Ellins said he was excited about attending the hearing, because the state high court's previous unwillingness to hear arguments on the issue is what prompted him to begin issuing same-sex marriage licenses.

"I'm glad in this case the Supreme Court was able to act so quickly," Ellins said. "It will be good to see this issue come to a climax."

Days after Ellins issued his first same-sex marriage licenses Aug. 21, state district judges in Santa Fe and Bernalillo counties ordered county clerks to issue same-sex marriage licenses, which played into the Supreme Court hearing arguments on the dispute.

Ellins is among those who say the state constitution does not specify gender and has a strong anti-discrimination clause. The lawyers for the state argued the intent of marriage law in the state was for giving legal status to heterosexual couples, regardless of the lack of restrictions against gay marriage.

After the hearing, Ellins characterized the argument made for the benefit of marriage to be reserved for only heterosexual couples as legal support for

Morales announces run for governor

Senator is third Democrat to run

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

In his hometown of Silver City, state Sen. Howie Morales on Tuesday, Oct. 22, announced his bid to run for governor, joining two other Democrats seeking to keep Gov. Susana Martinez from winning a second term in office.

Morales, 40, a hospital administrator and former high school teacher, said he is running because Martinez's record on education and job creation is lacking.

"Three years ago, we heard about the bold change this governor would bring to Santa Fe," Morales said in a press release prior to his announcement. "But what have we gotten? Broken promises, hidden agendas and out-of-touch leadership that's more concerned with political ambition than the ambition of our young people."

"A higher minimum wage? Vetoed. Increased standards for nursing homes? Vetoed. Reading

Veteran work idea could get VA meet

Residents urged to contact senators

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

With the federal government is back in business, the man behind an idea to create jobs for veterans by remanufacturing furniture is seeking to get a meeting with Secretary of Veterans Affairs Secretary Eric Shinseki.

Shortly before the 16-day shutdown, a letter signed by Congressman Steve Pearce and U.S. Sens. Tom Udall and Martin Heinrich was sent to Shinseki about the value of the idea called Veterans Office Solutions (VOS), which would employ veterans in remanufacturing furniture for the VA.

Currently, it is standard practice for the federal government to buy only new furniture, even though remanufactured furniture could provide the same desks, chairs, cubicles, etc. at half the cost. The letter cites a study by New Mexico State University's Arrowhead

Homeowner's Halloween Horrors? Not if you follow these Safety Tips

As Halloween creakingly creeps around the cobwebbed corner, many of our thoughts will be on decorating, pumpkin carving and costume making. But, before the parade of ghosts and witches comes knocking on your door, here's a helpful list of things that you can do to keep your home and yard safe for all those anxious trick-or-treaters.

- Clear your yard of ladders, hoses, leashes, flower pots, low tree limbs, support wires and anything that could cause someone to trip.
- Be sure to keep your outdoor steps, porch and walkways well lit.
- Use battery powered jack o'lantern candles instead of a real flame.
- If you do use candles, keep them away from where trick-or-treaters will be walking or standing.
- Dried flowers, cornstalks and crepe paper are highly flammable. Make sure paper or cloth yard decorations can't blow into a flaming candle.
- Consider fire safety when decorating. Don't overload electrical outlets with holiday lighting or special effects. Remember to keep exits clear of decorations.

NMSU applies for liquor licenses

Pan Am, HRTM sales to support wellness programs

At a regular meeting Monday, Oct. 21, the New Mexico State University Board of Regents authorized the institution to submit applications for two governmental licenses for the sale of alcohol at the Pan American Center and the School of Hotel, Restaurant and Tourism Management.

NMSU regents Mike Cheney, Javier Gonzales and Jordan Banegas voted to authorize the institution to submit the application for the Pan American Center, while regent Kari Mitchell voted no. Cheney, Gonzales, Banegas and Mitchell voted yes to apply for the license for the HRTM program. Regent Isaac Pino abstained from both votes.

The regents will discuss the use of the proceeds from alcohol sales at the Pan American Center and other NMSU venues during the budget process in an effort to increase funding support for the NMSU Wellness, Alcohol and Violence Education (WAVE) Program and the Employee Assistance Program through revenue generated from alcohol sales.

The Pan American Center has been utilizing special dispenser permits to accommodate the sale of beer and wine at various events for many years, however, the number of full-license holders interested in applying for special dispenser permits is limited, said Scott Breckner, NMSU special events director.

Beer and wine have been served or sold in the Pan American Center at concerts, boxing matches, ballets, fundraisers and a variety of receptions and luncheons. If the university obtains a governmental license for the Pan American Center, it will consider expanding alcohol sales to other events, such as athletic events. Revenue to the institution from the sale of alcohol at the Pan American Center will increase if the university operates the sales through a governmental license. Another opportunity under consideration is the promotion of New Mexico wines and micro-brews at events.

NMSU Police Chief Stephen Lopez said the police department has been managing events with alcohol at the Pan American Center for more than a decade.

"We do increase staff when alcohol is served. We also station trained officers or security at each location dispensing alcohol," Lopez said. "It is much better when we can control the environment where alcohol is being sold and served."

The governmental license application for the School of HRTM would be for Gerald Thomas Hall where the 100 West Cafe and the Bobby Lee Lawrence Academy of Wine are located. The wine academy has an 880-bottle storage capacity devoted to wine education courses. The license application process also will allow the school to educate students going into food and beverage management about the merits of licensing and how it works in a private-sector environment.

Regents also selected Jerry Landrum to receive an honorary doctorate at the December commencement ceremony. Landrum graduated from NMSU in 1961 with a degree in chemistry. He is a retired chemist who was recently honored for his participation in the collaborative work of scientists and researchers at the U.S. Lawrence Livermore Laboratory and the Flerov Institute in Dubna, Russia, that resulted in the discovery of six new heavy elements, including Flerovium and Livermorium, which have been added to the periodic table.

In other business, regents heard informational reports from Andy Burke, interim president of NMSU's Doña Ana Community College, and Bernadette Montoya, NMSU's vice president for student affairs.

Burke reported on activities planned for DACC's 40th anniversary, leadership transition committees, accreditation, a student enrollment profile and facilities planning. DACC will host a visit from the Higher Learning Commission in April 2014 for reaffirmation of the community college's accreditation.

Pearce returns shutdown pay

U.S. Congressman Steve Pearce submitted a check Wednesday, Oct. 23, to the U.S. Treasury Department for the amount of $6,283.99, the amount he was paid during the partial government shutdown earlier this month.

"The shutdown impacted Americans and it is wrong for members of Congress to receive a paycheck while other government employees faced uncertainty," Pearce said. "I announced when the shutdown began that I would return any pay received while the government wasn't fully functioning. In returning my pay I have requested that the Treasury apply the full amount to the national debt."

Under the 27th Amendment, members of Congress are required to be paid, so Pearce still received pay for his work during the shutdown, but he promised to return to the Treasury any pay received during that time.

Pearce calculated the amount as his salary for the 16 days the shutdown lasted not including taxes and withholding that are paid to the government regardless.

State cabinet secretary urges more reporting of adult abuse

Each year, the Aging and Long-Term Services Department Adult Protective Services Division receives and investigates thousands of reports of suspected adult abuse, neglect or exploitation.

At the 21st Annual United New Mexicans against Adult Abuse Conference in Albuquerque Thursday, Oct. 24, Aging and Long-Term Services Cabinet Secretary Gino Rinaldi introduced keynote speaker Bob Blancato, the national coordinator of the Elder Justice Coalition, a nonpartisan, 680-member organization. Blancato also served as president of the National Committee for the Prevention of Elder Abuse.

New Mexicans can report suspected cases of abuse by dialing 866-654-3219 at any time of the day.

Road critical for Las Cruces Spaceport needs quality southern access

Last week's International Symposium for Personal and Commercial Spaceflight reminded us of the enormous potential of Spaceport America and the space industry in New Mexico. Even the most high-tech project relies a lot on basic, low technology, too. For the space industry in New Mexico to reach potential and to make the best use of Spaceport America, we need a reliable southern route road from Interstate 25.

The road currently exists – it's Exit 32, the Upham exit, about 35 miles north of Las Cruces – but it's a terribly rough ride, mostly dirt and some gravel, not suited for a passenger car. If weather raises its head, especially rain or high winds, the road can become difficult and dangerous. A good road does not have nearly the glitz, glamour or Star Trek appeal as Virgin Galactic's Spaceport America hangar. Such a road, though, is hugely important for Spaceport America, Virgin Galactic and all current and future users.

Access to Spaceport America from the north is satisfactory, but that's not sufficient. I'm reminded of an episode in American history where superior technology failed because of bad information and oversight.

This episode was a pivotal Revolutionary War clash, the Battle of Bunker Hill in June 1775. First, the battle is ill-named; the fighting took place at nearby Breed's Hill. More important, even though the revolutionaries lost, their valiant fighting and relative success against the Redcoats gave them confidence and momentum to carry on. They were aided by a big British blunder. The British cannon at the battle provided enough firepower to decimate the Patriots. Just one problem: The British brought the wrong size cannonballs. With cannonballs too big to fit into the cannon, all those guns were rendered useless.

The battle turned the tide of the war, and here we are. If we restrict ourselves to the northern route only, we'll be, in essence, bringing the wrong size cannonballs to the battle. It will thwart Spaceport America's potential, opening opportunities for competing spaceports in other states.

- Here are some reasons we need the road.
- Tourism: The northern route enables ready traffic from points north of Truth or Consequences and those flying in to the Albuquerque airport. A quality southern route saves southern travelers about an hour each way. That's huge if you're coming from Las Cruces, El Paso or even Mexico on a Saturday to tour the spaceport. It would also ease the trip for visitors from Tucson, Lubbock and other points.
 - Industrial opportunity: Think about Santa Teresa, with Union Pacific's railroad project and the establishment of a giant international inland port. Manufacturing in that region, both in Mexico and New Mexico, is poised to explode. As Spaceport America progresses, manufacturing will be needed. Why not in Santa Teresa? A quality southern route could be the key for companies to come here.
 - Education: A key aspect of Spaceport America is education. With a quality southern route, the trip from Las Cruces to Spaceport America now becomes about an hour, a feasible field trip for Las Cruces schools. Early exposure and understanding of Spaceport America for local students could increase interest in math and science courses. And for older students, such a trip shows the practical application. It could boost interest and enrollment in New Mexico State University's aerospace engineering program.
 - Research: Speaking of NMSU, the spaceport provides an endless realm for scientific research. A one-hour drive instead of a two-hour drive enhances that opportunity.
 - General access: Whether it's driving to Hatch for green chile or needing ready access to Interstate 10, a quality southern route means a great deal to all those who want to do business at Spaceport America.

Of course, a quality southern road means money, probably between $20 million and $30 million. It means maintenance for both Sierra and Doña Ana counties. However, without that quality southern route, half of Spaceport America's potential is at risk.

Letter to the Editor

Spaceport America opportunity

As I talk to many constituents in District 5, I hear many different concerns, but one concern that sticks out is Spaceport America.

Our economy in New Mexico and Las Cruces is heavily dependent on the federal government. We have NASA's White Sands Missile Range and Test Facility, the Bureau of Land Management and others that figure greatly in our local economy. They all are very important and well suited here.

As a community, we have been looking long and hard to diversify with private business so that when the federal government decides to cut its budget we still have a viable economy to grow and support our people. Spaceport America is one of them. With our unique restricted air space, ideal weather and our elevation being closer to space ("the first mile is free" as Virgin Galactic says), we are positioned well to have a viable private and commercial space program here.

We all should support efforts to make the spaceport a going concern. That support must include our state legislators and the governor to build the "Interstate Gateway to Spaceport America," which will help Las Cruces to really be the gateway to Spaceport America.

Someday one will be able to fly to Europe in just two hours using Spaceport America. Now it takes more than 10 hours by commercial airlines.

Gill Sorg
Las Cruces City Councillor

Unintended consequences

I want to thank those Republicans who so hated, reviled and obstructed our sitting president, Barack Obama, that they have not only turned him into one of the greatest of American presidents, but also smoothed the path for the first woman president of the United States, Hillary Clinton.

Drink up, America, before the trouble begins

Government is running out of money in its spending spree

Michael Swickard
In My Opinion

"The real goal should be reduced government spending, rather than balanced budgets achieved by ever rising tax rates to cover ever rising spending."
Economist Thomas Sowell

A certain kind of spending makes our country go round. It is when one American reaches into his or her pocket and trades money for something of value. Commerce among Americans was described by John Kennedy as "A rising tide raises all boats." America got rich in comparison to the rest of the world by this commerce.

Sandwiched into commerce was government, which was initially a small part of the total picture. The total bite of all national, state and local taxes at the start of the 20th century was about 3 percent. Today it is 30 percent or higher. For that increase Americans got a robust military, roads, hospitals, fire stations and a first rate judicial system. These things make America great.

Sadly, in the midst of these great improvements there are also many do-good projects. We have so many of them that we have out-of-control spending. We reached a tipping point where our government is making the extra revenue needed out of thin air since America can no longer borrow that much money.

How much? Currently around 40 percent of all government spending is make-believe money. There is a notion that dollars created out of thin air by our government do no harm. This make-believe money is now the coin of the realm. But consider the problem of owning dollars not backed by anything of value.

A hundred years ago this shift began. The first thing government had to do was stop citizens from understanding the amount of resources being diverted from commerce to government. Foremost was the move away from the gold standard by this government. Previously the wealth of our nation could be counted in bars of gold. There was very little wiggle room about budgets and spending when America was tied to gold bars.

In the 1930s, America started off the gold standard. This allowed for funny-money bookkeeping where how much money America has depends on who you ask. Further, starting in the 1960s and continuing today, our government has been on an incredible spending spree.

What fuels this spree?

In 1967, Congress and President Lyndon Johnson confiscated all of the money in the Social Security lockbox. They took all of that money and put in the lockbox government IOUs, which said that when each person reaches the age of benefits, that current Congress should pay those benefits. Previously, each person saved their own money, but it was stolen and continues to be stolen every payday.

America is now trading on its good name and the value this country had. Yes, I said "had." Regardless of the accounting tricks being used, most citizens know we are further in debt than the yearly gross domestic product, so if we took every dollar in circulation, it would not bring our country even. This country is trillions of dollars in debt, and, more important, is making no move to pay back the debt, only the interest. The interest is a hefty amount, but the real debt, only two generations old, is beyond the ability of several generations to pay.

Then there are the off-books debts, including what the country may owe when citizens reach an age to collect benefits. Those trillions of dollars are not listed in our national debt figure of $17 trillion. Some say this extra amount could be many multiples of our admitted debt. The government is not even listing these off-books debts and so we go blithely toward destruction believing our government has told the truth.

There is an old joke: A man walks into a bar and says, "Give me a drink before the trouble starts." The bartender pours a drink. The man gulps that down and says, "Give me another drink before the trouble starts." So the bartender pours another drink. The man gulps it down and the bartender asks, "When is the trouble going to start?" The man says, "As soon as you realize that I don't have any money."

Drink up, America, because the trouble is just about to begin.

Letter to the Editor

Roewe's history

Beginning about 20 years ago, a few developers – not custom builders – scraped large acreages in the desert, and, when the housing bubble burst, left bare land that produced dust and allowed tumbleweeds and goathead plants to flourish.

History is important. When David Roewe, now running for the City Council seat in District 5, was hired to fill the position of executive director of the Home

Builders Association, he promptly had the name changed to the Building Industry Association of Southern New Mexico. In an interview in The Las Cruces Bulletin dated July 17, 2009, he stated, "I'm not here to make friends, I'm here to take care of business and push the agenda." His agenda, as noted in the interview, was to blame farmers "as the biggest offenders of disturbing soil" and as executive director, he called the group trying to control fugitive dust by ordinance "environmental extremists." Further, he

"pooh-poohed" the negative health effects of such dust.

In an August 2009 BIA newsletter, Roewe outlined his vision for the BIASNM's political action committee, which was to help elect business-friendly candidates to office. He opposed the Vision 2040 plan, impact fees, a reasonable dust ordinance, lighting ordinances and bicycle paths.

Candidate Roewe, who if elected would have to read legal documents much more complicated than a ballot petition, blamed the city clerk for not giving him clear instructions. A judge allowed both Roewe and Bev Courtney on the ballot.

History and past behavior can teach voters how to choose between two candidates. Mr. Roewe's history tells me his agenda would be harmful to the entire city. Gill Sorg (the incumbent District 5 councillor) has a record of hard work and close attention to the complicated management of a growing city.

Our eyes and ears open our hearts and minds Intolerance of others hurts us all

By Rabbi Larry Karol

For the Las Cruces Bulletin

At a recent town hall meeting in Las Cruces, a local public figure, in responding to a question on a particular issue, noted that we need a change of “mind” and “heart” rather than stricter laws that would compromise what he and others consider to be a right guaranteed in the U.S. Constitution.

What captured my attention was the use of the terms “mind,” “heart” and “change.”

There are brilliant minds, underused minds and closed minds. There are warm hearts, cold hearts and hard hearts.

Change of any kind can elicit fear, or foster progress, or lead us backwards, or create a new opportunity.

In addition to “mind” and “heart,” I believe that “eyes” and “ears” are also crucial as we encounter the world.

We can turn our eyes away, or look intently and honestly at what is going on around us.

We can open our ears to truly listen to what people are saying to us, or close our ears to calls for help or change or progress.

In a recent installment in a series called

“Jewels of Elul” (Elul is the month on the Jewish calendar preceding the Jewish New Year, Rosh Hashanah), world-renowned singer Achinoam Nini (Noa) shared her thoughts on “The Art of Welcoming:” “For me, the word ‘welcoming’ is deeply associated with the word ‘opening’ – opening a door, a heart, a mind. Opening your eyes in order to truly see those around you, opening your mind to new ideas, opening your heart, even to what seems threatening, frightening, ominous, with the knowledge that we fear most what we are unfamiliar with. Reaching out to those whom we are suspicious of, those whom we have formed weakly based opinions of, is the key to dissolving fear and making way for growth and acceptance.”

In any community, we are called to be welcoming, to reach out beyond the labels we place on other people and beyond the labels that may be associated with us.

Judaism, and other religions as well, teach that we are created in the divine image, meaning that there is a special spirit that comes from the oneness that binds us together.

In Leviticus Chapter 19, not only does it say “love your neighbor as yourself,” it further declares: “When strangers reside with you in your land, you shall not wrong them. The strangers who reside with you shall be to you as citizens; you shall love each one as yourself, for you were strangers in the land of Egypt.”

To truly follow these teachings, we must begin by recognizing the humanity and dignity of every person.

A powerful symbol associated with the Jewish New Year, Rosh Hashanah and the Day of Atonement, Yom Kippur, is the Shofar, which we sound at specific times during our worship for these High Holy Days.

The Shofar is intended to move those who hear its call to be decent, caring and respectful human beings who are willing to look into themselves, see their strengths and failings and strive for personal growth.

The sound of the Shofar is hard to ignore, and that is as it should be. Changing mind and heart for the better is crucial to living a good life.

We must, however, also consider that open eyes and ears might bring about positive change in the world.

On the morning of Yom Kippur, Jewish worship includes the reading of an excerpt from Isaiah Chapter 58, which calls on us to “unlock the fetters of wickedness,” to “let the oppressed go free,” and to take the poor into our homes. Only then will our light “shine in the darkness.”

In the poem “The New Colossus” by Emma Lazarus about the Statue of Liberty, the last line declares, “I lift my lamp beside the golden door.”

The High Holy Days of Jewish tradition

call on us to lift our lamps toward one another, so that we can see, as well as hear, those who are asking us for help, appealing to the compassion that they know is essential to our humanity.

The rabbis of the Talmud suggested that God prays. What is God’s prayer?

“May it be that my attribute of strict justice will be overcome and overtaken by my attribute of mercy.”

This is how we can approach each other in communal life. We have laws, but we can apply them with mercy. We have definite ideas about how a friend or co-worker or classmate should act, but sometimes we need to give to him or her the benefit of the doubt. We have our own opinions, but perhaps we can see even one valid point in an opposing position, which could lead to a meeting of minds and hearts in the middle.

A community will thrive when it is founded upon compromise and compassion, and when its members are willing to open their minds, hearts, ears and eyes.

In the months to come, may we consider how we can reach out to each other with concern and offer needed support. May our hearts be warm as we offer one another a welcoming spirit. May our ears clearly hear voices calling for change that will benefit us all. And with our eyes, may we see one another in the most positive light.

Larry Karol is the rabbi of Temple Beth El in Las Cruces.

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

Rattlesnakes on the border

Some of you might think this is another grim tale about the cartels and gunfights in the Mexican border states. It's not.

Most all of the roads coming north to connect with the freeway have a manned border patrol checkpoint. The object is to deter illegal immigrants and drug smuggling.

A good deal of the borderland is ranching country. Two young day-work cowboys had been helping gather cows. They put in a good day and were headed home.

Devon was drivin' and twilight was still hangin' on as they headed north on Arizona Highway 191. His compadre was Duke. They hung out a lot. Each was ridin' colts for whoever needed it and somehow made the payments – Duke on his rent and Devon on his truck. They were livin' the cowboy dream, which is to be able to support yourself your entire life without ever having to get a job. They also collected live rattlesnakes for a herpetologist. He paid $20 live, $5 dead but with the head intact. Although they were a team, Devon was ophidiophobic – skert of snakes. He held the bag.

Sure 'nuf, down 191, there in the headlights they saw a rattler crossing the road. Devon was going purty fast as they whizzed by but Duke said, "Did you see that, Dev, he musta been 15 feet long, probably got 30 to 40 rattles. I never seen one so big!

Less it was the one that got loose in your cab that time. 'Member? We had to fish him out from behind the seat, dang near got kilt!"

Devon kept his eyes on the road and his foot on the gas. Rasslin' snakes in broad daylight was bad enough, much less trying to do it in the dark.

"Man," whined Duke, "Ol' Doc might even pay us more 'cause it's so big. Whattya say? Think we better turn around afore we git too far gone – there's still time. Long as he was it might take him 20 minutes to cross the road. Whattya think? Whattya think? Whattya think!"

"Alright," said Devon. He slammed on the brakes, fishtailed, reversed direction and peeled out like a scalded tomcat. He barely noticed the line of fluorescent cones down the middle of the road directing drivers to bear to the right. The three Border Patrol agents had their quiet evening shattered. You can imagine what they thought: smugglers on their way north suddenly realizing their GPS went dreadfully wrong. Giant prison spotlights glared as 17 Border Patrol vehicles cranked up and threw gravel, with red lights flashing and sirens blaring in hot pursuit.

It took them two minutes to have our cowboys pulled over. The big bullhorn was directing them to stay in their vehicle. "Lemme handle this," Duke said.

"Don't move a muscle," warned Devon.

"Ah, what the heck, they can't take this seriously," said Duke as he opened the passenger door and stepped out. "Lissen, officers, I kin explain, see we were huntin' rattlesnakes and –"

"Look at your shirt," said Devon, a-word-at-a-time.

Duke did. There were three red dots between the pocket snaps.

Preventing another Titanic

We must assist to avoid shipwreck

By Maury Castro
For the Las Cruces Bulletin

A fitting allegory for the Titanic disaster is the current state of affairs of our federal government. The Titanic, an "unsinkable" English ship – a symbol of economic boom times in the civilized world with its comfort and luxury, carried passengers that included the very rich and the poorest – thousands of immigrants coming to the new world. Ironically, safety regulations and procedures that could have spared the ship, (owned by J.P. Morgan) were lacking.

For purposes of my comparison to the present, I also picture an ancient galley propelled by a crew bearing oars and led by a commander who happens to be African American.

The crew representing us, the citizens of America – who need to work in unison and in fealty with their leader in order to navigate safely and avoid the threatening icebergs – are at odds with each other.

Our ship of state has narrowly avoided catastrophic consequences and is not yet out of the danger zone. With some of the galley rowing in opposite directions simply because they hate their captain, the threats of capsizing loom on the horizon.

"Damn the icebergs – full speed ahead," they scream. Such is their rage for the black captain that they care not whether they go down with the wreck resulting from their reckless actions.

America is facing a calamity of its own making, with an unprecedented level of bickering among our lawmakers that led to a government shutdown.

Among the detractors of our black president's agenda and leadership, we find the infamous tea party groups, the southern conservatives, the religious fundamentalists, the majority of the male White Anglo-Saxon Protestants (WASPs) and the super rich, who seem to effectively pull these groups' strings with their dollars.

The U.S. Supreme Court has also pulled away at their master's direction – against common sense and the common good.

The House of Representatives stands divided and uncompromising, hell bent on dismantling decades of New Deal achievements – social and economic gains for the lower and middle classes.

The recent years of Republican administrations, once again scrubbed government oversight and regulations, freeing up the Wall Street bankers to do their dirty work. The meandering of voting districts favoring Republican candidates and laws disenfranchising minority voters ensured the political security of red states.

Organized labor, once a bastion of the progressive movement, is now a shadow of the force that helped working people attain the American Dream.

Americans can no longer rely on the media for truth and information needed to be an effective citizen in a democracy.

An apathetic attitude among our middle and lower class voters is also partly responsible for the election results favoring the corporate fat cats and this country's march toward a plutocracy.

Our mass media is complicit with selling the story that blunts the scientific warnings of man-made global warming that places our civilization at great peril.

Fellow passengers of the USS America, we're headed on a collision course!

What to do? Well, for the short run and immediate response, we must assist our captain in avoiding the shipwreck. We need to work toward a democratic plurality of parties in Congress (filibuster-proof).

We have the potential voters that need to be brought in to the mix ASAP. We need to expand energy and resources toward this, to energize the apathetic voter, and to educate the new (and the old) voters. We need to get off the couch and off our TV screens and become more active and now is a critical time for this.

We need to rally behind our president and the other good guys in Washington and let them know in word and by deed that we're behind them. We must speak up for the truth and good of all; whether through the social media, letter writing, forums, phone calls, social groups and neighbor contacts, and we need to open our pocket books and contribute however small the amount, for if enough of us do this we can make a difference and overcome the big Republican money avalanche.

Boycott is an underused strategy in our battle for our democracy is consumer power. By not buying goods and services peddled by those businesses pouring their money to culprits and causes responsible for our sad state of affairs, we drive fear into their cold hearts with this kind of statement.

For the long run, we need a new paradigm. A deep analysis of what doesn't work for us as a society with a pledge to change course toward a stronger democracy. A critical look at our history and admitting past mistakes is a start.

Perhaps even going deeper and examining our view of the world and our conceptions of God. Perhaps even accepting the truth that to change the world, we need to change ourselves first.

Maury Castro is a resident of Doña Ana County and active in the Democratic Party.

coaches in schools? Vetoed. Funding for women's health care? Vetoed. It's not right and we deserve better."

Attorney General Gary King and state Sen. Linda Lopez of Albuquerque are the two other Democrats seeking the party's gubernatorial nomination.

According to the Santa Fe New Mexican, Martinez, who is unopposed in the Republican primary, is sitting on a campaign war chest of $3.2 million.

Morales has served in the Senate since 2008 when he was appointed by then-Gov. Bill Richardson to fill a vacancy created by Sen. Ben Altamirano's death. Morales won in the general election later that year and was re-elected to a four-year term in 2012.

"New Mexico is a land of greatness and deserves a leader who will protect it, yet challenge it to prosper, a leader who will protect our environment and our dreams for the future, and keep our talent here by providing competitive, sustainable job opportunities," Morales said.

If elected, he said, he'll ask the Legislature to approve a new evaluation system for educators, rather than use a plan implemented by the Martinez administration without a change in state law.

The governor vetoed Morales-sponsored measures approved by the Legislature earlier this year for overhauling the teacher evaluation system and revamping a newly implemented program for assigning schools A to F grades, which depend heavily on student performance on tests. Education advocacy groups have been critical of the evaluation and school grading systems.

MORALES

Morales told The New Mexican that he also will raise as a campaign issue the Martinez administration's role in shaking up the state behavioral health system.

Martinez's Human Services Department (HSD) commissioned an audit that claims it found more than $30 million in Medicaid fraud by 15 nonprofit behavioral health providers. The state withheld Medicaid until most of their operations were taken over by five Arizona companies. There have been questions about the role the auditing firm played in finding the companies prior to the audit being conducted, which Morales said has resulted in distrust of the state government's actions.

At Tuesday's rally announcing his candidacy, supporters of Morales called Martinez egotistical and uncaring.

One of those supporting Morales was state Rep. Bill McCamley of Las Cruces, who said the Martinez administration has put people in charge who have not been in a classroom.

"Howie is one of the most sincere legislative leaders I've known," McCamley said. "It's not about politics with Howie, it's about people. And that's reflected in every promise he makes and every battle he engages in. He's not the type to run for office just to get his name in the papers."

Morales previously served as Grant County clerk, and started his career as a special education teacher in the Silver City area. He also was a baseball and basketball coach and taught for two years at Western New Mexico University.

Morales earned bachelor's and master's degrees from Western New Mexico University and a doctorate in curriculum and instruction from New Mexico State University.

Center that confirmed market assertions made in the VOS center business model and how changing the practice could save the government billions of dollars.

The letter was sent to Shinseki Sept. 24, asking him to explore the idea through a pilot factory in Las Cruces, which would provide full-time work for nearly 300 veterans.

Tim Chelpaty, who put together the VOS concept with help from former military procurement experts, said the letter was sent to pave the way for a meeting with Shinseki to get his approval for trying the idea.

"With a stroke of his pen, we could get this thing up and running very quickly," Chelpaty said. "We're already looking at possible factory sites."

Like many federal government departments, the VA disposes about 10 percent of its furniture every year and replaces it with new furniture. Rather than selling off the old furniture for a fraction of its value, most of the materials could be reused through remanufacturing, Chelpaty said.

The letter from Pearce, Udall and Heinrich points out that the VA has a Go Green Initiative to reduce the environmental impact of VA operations with cost savings. The VOS centers are in line with the initiative's goals, according to the letter.

"This method essentially recycles existing furniture, thereby diverting costs from disposal, procurement and maintenance, saving the VA money as well as offering an environmentally preferable product," the letter states. "We ask that you share with us any barriers that may exist related to disposal of old furniture to a remanufacturer, retention as agency assets during the remanufacture process and/or the use of remanufactured furniture."

Progress on scheduling a meeting with Shinseki to discuss possible concerns was stalled by the government shutdown less than two weeks after the letter was sent. Ironically, one of the main concerns that drove the shutdown was government spending and waste, Chelpaty said.

The VA alone could cut the $6 billion it spends on new furniture each year in half, he said. If it works with the VA, the practice could be expanded, he said. The Department of Defense spends about $40 billion on new furniture each year, for example.

"This could be a game changer," Chelpaty said. "But we have to have that meeting with Shinseki."

To get the momentum back, Chelpaty is asking residents to contact the congressional delegation – especially the senators – to show support for the VOS center concept and to continue pushing for a meeting with Shinseki.

"We need to put pressure on to get the meeting," Chelpaty said. "We need to show there is unequivocal support."

If the practice of using remanufactured furniture becomes more widespread in the federal government, he said thousands of veterans could be put to work at the centers, which would be staffed by either other veterans or those knowledgeable in dealing with issues veterans face.

procreation. From their questions to the lawyers, he said the justices didn't appear to be swayed by the procreation justification.

"I don't think the court bought into it," Ellins said.

The Supreme Court isn't expected to make its ruling quickly, however. Court observers predict their deliberations will take at least a couple of weeks, but there should be a ruling by the end of the year.

Since Ellins' action in late August, more than 900 marriage licenses have been issued to same-sex couples.

Six couples, represented by the national ACLU, the ACLU of New Mexico, the National Center for Lesbian Rights and an Albuquerque law firm, filed the suit against the state of New Mexico and the Santa Fe and Bernalillo County clerks to force a decision on the freedom to marry.

Ellins, a Democrat, is serving his second term as Doña Ana County clerk and he is a former Colorado Chief Deputy Secretary of State.

ISPCS gets glimpse of Blue Origin

Bezos' creation kept under wraps in Texas ... for now

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

Blue Origin, the private space rocket being developed largely in an isolated area of Texas by Amazon.com founder Jeff Bezos, is taking a different path than its competitors – Virgin Galactic and XCOR with its Lynx vehicle.

Between the two better known efforts, there are more than 1,000 reservations from people wanting to take flight into sub-orbital space, said Brett Alexander, director of business development and strategy for Blue Origin, in a rare panel appearance at the International Symposium for Personal and Commercial Spaceflight Thursday, Oct. 17.

“We’re not taking reservations,” Alexander said. “We’re more a build it now and take reservations after we get it flying kind of organization.”

Bezos does plan to eventually charge people for giving them rides on the rocket that launches and lands while remaining upright, Alexander said, but Blue Origin is really about Bezos getting to pursue his passion for expanding the access to space.

Another difference of Blue Origin is that it has chosen reusability and affordability as guiding principles, he said. Besides coming up with a spacecraft that could be reusable, the company had to develop its own rocket engine in-house because it couldn’t find one at the desired price point, he said. While Blue Origin’s engine uses the traditional fuels of liquid oxygen and hydrogen, it is much less expensive to fire up, he said.

For all the innovation Blue Origin’s team is doing technically, Alexander said the biggest innovation is really its business model of continually lowering the cost while improving safety, such as having an automated shutdown system if the rocket engines begin to not perform correctly. That’s why the company is also working on an emergency escape system, he said.

“We’re taking technology that’s already out there and putting it together in a different way,” he said. “We’re really enabling space flight for more people to go to space more affordably.”

Steve Isakowitz, Virgin Galactic president, said his company’s goal is to get the 650 people who have signed up into space the first two to three years. When that happens, he said, it will be a real milestone, because that means Virgin has taken more people into space than traditional government-sponsored space programs.

By then, perhaps XCOR and Blue Origin’s vehicles will also be taking people into space, Isakowitz said, which will only expand the market once others see it can be done safely.

Alexander predicted that in five years “all of us will be flying people and great mix of people.” With the multiple different space vehicles, “we’ll find out a lot more that can be done in sub-orbital space than we can even see now,” he said.

Alexander, Isakowitz and Khaki Rodway, director of payloads and operations for XCOR, said there already is interest from both government and private industry for sub-orbital, micro-gravity testing. These tests will fill in the science gap between take-off and the orbiting International Space Station, Rodway said. She predicted space study is going blossom because of that previous untapped access to near space.

Alan Ladwig, retired NASA outreach director, cautioned the only thing that could damper this vibrant future is a terrible accident too early. Ladwig said NASA went through this with the death of Christa McAuliffe, a teacher killed in the 1986 Space Shuttle Challenger disaster. Eventually, NASA did take teachers into space, but only after great debate about the risks to “ordinary people” versus trained astronauts who better understood the danger of rocket-powered space flight, he said.

The best way to counter this, he said, is to continually compare flying in space to other risky things people do, such as mountain climbing or racing, in which people sometimes die. Ladwig said he has always found it intriguing why people take deaths in space harder than say, climbers dying on the summit of Mount Everest.

“People need to understand that despite taking all necessary precautions, you can still have a bad day in space,” he said.

Ags prepare for season's first win

Abilene Christian visits Aggie Memorial for homecoming

By Hugh Osteen
 Las Cruces Bulletin

New Mexico State University's Aggies' season has not turned out as planned. With an 0-7 record, the Aggies look for their first win against Abilene Christian at 6 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 26, the first meeting between the teams.

The Aggies struggled against Rice early on Saturday, Oct. 19, unable to stop the Owls on the ground, en route to a 45-19 loss.

"Our same Achilles heel is biting us, we're not stopping the run on defense," said Aggies head coach Doug Martin. "That makes things really tough on you. That's our worst problem on defense and we're going to have to find a way to get that fixed if we're going to win some games down the stretch."

"Our main problem offensively has been the consistency of the quarterback play," Martin said.

There were some positives in the loss. Max Johnson, Martin said, played well and kicked the ball very well, converting on his two field goal attempts from 37 and 49 yards. Another big play came at the midway point of the second quarter.

Quarterback King Davis III connected with wide receiver Austin Franklin for an 85-yard touchdown.

Running back Brandon Betancourt, a local product out of Mayfield High School, recorded his second consecutive 100-yard rushing game, and the Aggies will look to him to make it a third straight game against Abilene Christian.

Abilene Christian comes in with a record of 5-3 on the season, averaging more than 280 yards passing, while managing just less than 175 yards on the ground. Although the Wildcats are a Division 1AA team, smaller than NMSU and other Division 1A teams, Martin said they will not be overlooked.

"I told our team they better be ready to play some football," Martin said. "These guys play winning football."

The Wildcats have looked very impressive as a whole this season. Their turnover margin is +16, meaning they have 16 more takeaways than turnovers. Their quarterback, John David Baker, has thrown 27 touchdown passes and only two interceptions in the first eight games of the season.

The Aggies are currently on an 18 game losing streak dating back to last season.

"(Winning) would be big for our team," Martin said. "Our guys are working hard. They're competing and doing all the right things. It'd be nice to see them get rewarded for that."

There are a few questions coming into the game for the Aggies. Davis III got his second career start, but went down in the second half with an injury. He is listed as day to day. If he is unable to play, senior Andrew McDonald will get the start. Safety Davis Cazares was also banged up in the Rice game, but X-rays were negative.

"He's one of the toughest kids I've been around in 28 years of coaching," Martin said of Cazares. "If he can play, he's going to play."

The Aggies hope to right the ship in front of the homecoming crowd Saturday.

"The team needs to get a taste for winning," Martin said. "They need to understand what that feels like."

Men's golf brings home title

Brett Walker tops leaderboard

The New Mexico State men's golf team led from start to finish at the 2013 Herb Wimberly Intercollegiate, winning their home tournament Tuesday, Oct. 22, by six strokes over second place Colorado State.

The Aggies finished with a total team score of 6-over-par 858 (283-289-286) and on top of the 17-team field. It was the first win for NM State at its home tournament since 2008.

"Today was a fight all the way through but it goes to show that it still takes four scores," head coach Mike Dirks said. "This was a total team victory for us. We have to play together and that is what happened at this tournament."

Junior Brett Walker brought home the individual title for the Aggies after shooting a 6-under 65 during the final round on Tuesday, tying him for the low round of the tournament. Walker finished with a total score of 6-under-par 207 (70-72-65), two shots ahead of second place Ben Krueger of Northern Colorado, en route to his first-career victory at NM State.

"Winning my first collegiate golf tournament is very special to me because it has been something I have dreamed about my entire life," Walker said. "Playing at our home course helped me relax and I was able to go out and have a good final round. I think this win as a team gives us the confidence we needed to continue to play good team golf for the rest of the year."

Walker, whose previous best finish as an Aggie was during last year's Herb Wimberly Intercollegiate, where he finished in a tie for 12th, used his career-low round of 65 to go from two shots back of Krueger at the start of the day, to two shots ahead at the conclusion of the tournament.

"Brett played unbelievable golf on a very tough golf course today," Dirks said. "The other thing that made this special was that, as a team, we were trying to win a golf tournament and Brett really played outstanding, winning his first collegiate golf tournament and helping his team win their first tournament of the season."

Also aiding the NM State win was a 12th-place finish by junior Kenneth Fadke II, who carded a total score of 3-over-par 216 (70-74-72). Fadke and Walker both helped their cause by shooting a good round during the first round of the tournament. Both were one shot back of the lead after round one with a 1-under 70.

The champion Aggie team also included freshman Luis Medina, who finished with a 10-over 223 (72-76-75) and in a tie for 36th place, junior Pat Beyhan, who led NM State after two rounds and finished in a tie for 42nd with an 11-over 224 (71-70-83) and senior Willy Hogan who ended the tournament with a total score of 16-over 229 (82-73-74) and in a tie for 67th place.

NM State also led the golfers playing as individuals, as freshman Travis Benson topped the list with a 16th place finish at 5-over-par 218 (72-73-73).

for NMSU: sophomore Joey Martinez finished at 14-over 227 (76-72-79) and in a tie for 56th, senior Zach Adams had a total 21-over 234 (75-77-82) and ended up in tie for 77th place, freshman David Wilson finished at 22-over 235 (80-80-75) and in a tie for 82nd and sophomore Taylor Mihok finished in a tie for 90th place with a 27-over 240 (83-74-83).

The Aggies have little time to celebrate as they have less than a week to prepare for the Price's "Give 'Em Five" University of Texas at El Paso Collegiate Invitational, which will run from Friday, Oct. 25, through Saturday, Oct. 26, at the Butterfield Trails Golf Course.

Yankee hitting coach to visit Las Cruces

Youth invited to register for Kevin Long Baseball Clinic in November

Kevin Long, current hitting coach for the New York Yankees, will be coming to Las Cruces Nov. 24. Coach Long will be doing a one-day hitting clinic for ages 8-12 and ages 13-22 for boys and girls. Times, pricing and location are posted on the website, www.nmsbaseball.com.

Only 30 players per age group per session will be taken. Coaches, parents and Yankee fans are welcome at a discounted rate. Spots are on a first come first serve basis.

Every player will receive a Kevin Long autographed book. Parents, coaches and spectators fees do not come with an autographed book, but you may pre-purchase a Kevin Long book to be autographed by him at the clinic.

Long started his career in 1997. He made his professional managing debut with the Class-A Wilmington Blue Rocks that same year. He was named the Northwest Leagues co-Manager of the Year, after leading the Spokane Indians to the league title in 1999.

Long served as the hitting coach in the Royals organization with the Double-A Wichita Wranglers (2000-01) and Triple-A Omaha Royals (2002-03). He became the hitting coach for the Yankees' Triple-A team, the Columbus Clippers, from 2004 to 2006.

Long was promoted to hitting coach for the New York Yankees in 2007. He guided a Yankee offense that ranked first in MLB in runs (968), hits (1,656), home runs (201), RBIs (929), team batting average (.290), slugging percentage (.463), on-base percentage (.366) and total bases (2,649). The 968 runs were the most in franchise history since 1937 (979).

His offense also featured the American League MVP Alex Rodriguez, three Silver Sluggers (Derek Jeter, Jorge Posada and Rodriguez) and four of the American League's top 15 batting averages. After a down year offensively in 2008, Long's Yankee hitters again led the league in offense during the 2009 season, in which they also won the franchise's 27th World Series title, and once again lead the American League in runs.

To save your spot to be trained by one of the best hitting coaches in Major League Baseball, please call Darrell Carrillo at 505-463-2122, or visit www.nmsbaseball.com.

I can cure your slice

But it will leave you with nothing to talk about

Charlie Blanchard
Golf Doctor

I think somebody long ago applied the word “slice” to golf upon noticing that a slicer’s club moves across the ball much like a knife cuts or slices across a roast: From the outside in. Your clubface then imparts clockwise spin to the ball (for righties), resulting in an often dramatic right- to right-bending ball that vaguely resembles a foul ball into the right field bleachers.

A slice – the bane of golfers since they sent featheries sailing into the gorse centuries ago. Also called a banana ball, a shrimp, a pitchout or a powerfade, there is no question the slice can be an emotional thing.

Eyes welling with tears, one of our golf-schoolers shared this with me: “I slice every time. I know I’ll do it and I can’t stop. It’s frustrating and humiliating. I cringe on the tee, especially when I’m playing with strangers. I think about it all the time, even at work.”

C’mon man. A slice is one thing; a fade another. Lee Trevino said, “You can talk to a fade, but a hook won’t listen.”

I’m guessing that golf teachers, golf club companies, golf gadget makers and golf magazine publishers have spent more time, money and effort trying to find a solution for habitual slicers than any other facet of golf. Putting is next.

Maybe it’s due to the fact that 80 percent of amateur golfers slice the ball. It puzzles me how the dreaded slice has become regarded as a disease and an affliction that requires us to seek a “cure.” If anything, club throwing, shanking, sandbagging, stupid wardrobes, drinking and driving, even putting under the influence, would classify more accurately as behaviors needing a cure. Still, most golfers who play with an awful slice go on for years feeling miserable, yet do nothing about it.

Every time we have a group at our Performance Golf Schools, we notice our slicers doing pretty much the same things. With some concentrated work we may not “cure” their slice, but they hit the ball a lot straighter. By making a more fundamentally correct swing move, you reduce the amount your club swipes across the ball, curtailing the spin and straightening out the curve. It can’t be otherwise; there shouldn’t be much of a mystery to it.

I think the big challenge is motivating slicers to seriously address the problem and learn a better golf swing. Old dogs can learn new tricks. My two older golden retrievers can testify to that. Maybe I’m a dreamer, but I think some suggestions are worth considering if you struggle with your slice.

Almost all the slicers we’ve seen over the years tend to swing with an “over-the-top” move, instead of dropping the club down inside the path to the ball. Hitting from the top causes the club to return to the ball from the outside in, and usually with the clubface open. The slice is further worsened by doing what we call “casting,” or simply flipping the club down with the hands, before making any weight shift. Accompanying these two defective moves, we see a “chicken wing” right elbow with hunched shoulders moving horizontally not vertically. Correcting these flaws could take a little time, but don’t get discouraged; it can be done. So here are some tips we give our students to help them turn their slice into a gentle fade at worst.

When PGA swing teacher Herb Wimberly starts with chronic slicers, the first thing he looks at is their set up, including alignment (mostly feet), stance, grip, and most important, position of the shoulders. Wimberly advises us that most of our mistakes are made even before we take the club away from the ball, mainly because of how we are positioned and aimed. He tells us to have our shoulders, chest, hips, knees, toes and eyes all aligned parallel to our target line. Once you’re square to your target, adjustments can be made from there. Most struggling golfers are not aligned squarely. Of course, you must have a visually specific target to get aligned to in the first place.

What I’ve found in helping golfers with their slice struggles is that it doesn’t matter much how unconventional the backswing may be. What really matters is how the clubhead is returned to the ball at impact. We have seen so many golfers who look like they start their swing way outside or way inside, but still get the job done and hit quality shots. What matters most is the path coming into the ball. Slicers usually take their club back too far and too high, making it difficult to get it on a proper swing plane and an inside path. Shorten your swing, especially if you lack flexibility, as the majority of over-50 players do, or if you’re an endomorph (fat). You can generate adequate clubhead speed with a three-quarter swing.

Along with your newly abbreviated backswing, you’ll need to firm up your left arm and flatten your left wrist. Two swing aids you should consider are the “Tac-Tic” that goes on your elbow and clicks when your bend too far; the other is the “Dynamics Swing Glove,” a high-quality golf glove extending up your wrist disabling the pronation of your wrist. With respect to golf clubs themselves, if you haven’t discovered adjustable clubs check them out. The offset shape alone could reduce your slice by 30 percent.

As for other swing equipment to help you correct your slice, get a block of Styrofoam and place it an inch outside your ball. A large head cover will also do. If you’re coming over the top and outside in, your club will hit the foam. On the more elaborate side, you can buy a product called the Inside Approach, a foam-covered rod that forces you to an inside swing path to keep from grazing the stick, and is still endorsed in infomercials by Jack Nicklaus. For hardcore cases, use your golf bag or a 2-by-6 board, but don’t hit the end of it. Beware of expensive golf products, including DVDs that promise instant cure to your slice.

As H. L. Mencken said, “For every complex problem there is a solution that is simple, neat and wrong.”

These days there’s plenty of help online – for anything. For the golf swing, you can go to many websites just by Googling “cure your slice.”

One of the first to pop up on the list is an interactive site called www.revolutiongolf.com where you can have your swing checked out very quickly. This is one of the online teaching venues of Jim McLean, who is one of America’s foremost and most famous golf teachers. McLean refers to the swing mistakes that cause a golfer to continually slice as “death moves.” He reports he can identify your number-one death move in 30 seconds with a swing video.

Golf Magazine also has a popular site, www.golf.com, where they make the following claim. “After testing more than 3,000 swings, we proved that one type of slice cure is better than the rest.” You’ll have to read it to find out if it’s for you. If you go to www.about.com/golf, while it’s on page one for most search engines, they offer “faults and fixes” for almost everything, including slicing, the web article identifies key areas that cause slicing. These include impact, grip, stance backswing, downswing and some others. It’s over-simplification, in my view, but it will help one who fears going to a teaching pro.

And if you’re so inclined, you can watch literally hundreds of video instructions, demonstrations and tips by (mostly) qualified pros to cure your slicing problems on Youtube. But bear in mind that every golfer is unique with respect to what may be at the root of the difficulty, just as people are different as to the fears, demons and personality idiosyncrasies that lurk in their minds.

If you are a slicer and know that you’re going to keep on slicing, think of the law of inertia, which says “a body in motion remains in motion unless acted upon by an outside force.”

In your case, the “outside force” is a golf teacher. You need somebody with a keen eye for the golf swing, and a great sense of communication, to give you feedback. Intuitively you must realize there is cause and effect going on here. There are at least a hundred causes for the repeated – I won’t say incurable – slice. It could be a weak grip, bad posture, swinging too fast, turning too fast, heel hits, inappropriate clubs, flat feet, inflexible hips, staying back without a turn and other faults.

How to pinpoint the cause of your slice? Have your teacher or swing coach look at your swing and identify the swing flaws. “No one becomes a champion without help,” said Johnny Miller. Trust me, slice causes aren’t in your mind; they’re in your swing mechanics. First get your swing, then your brain, analyzed.

Buzz-worthy week Aggie fans have many options

Jack Nixon
Jack's Corner

What a busy weekend of sports we had. A nap or two might be needed to build up the stamina to take all of it in.

It began Thursday night, Oct. 24, when Aggie volleyball hosted the Grand Canyon Lady Lopes.

Friday, Oct. 25, Blair Quinn's soccer team swings back into action versus Seattle. It is the first of a double dip for the soccer team. They have a Sunday, Oct. 27, game with Idaho. These are rematches for the Quinn crew; the restructured league has necessitated a home-and-home schedule.

It isn't ideal, but on the Las Cruces Sun-News coach's radio show, Quinn said he welcomed the home and home.

"These schools will see the best of the Aggies at this point in the season," he said.

Nagging injuries have kept Quinn from putting the same starting lineup on the field until recently. The Aggies are working hard to get into the WAC tournament they are hosting. The rest of the matches are at home for the Aggies so set aside some time on Friday and Sunday afternoons through the rest of the month.

All of the sports are a part of the annual homecoming, titled this year, "The Wild West." Saturday, Oct. 26, has a double header on tap, as Mike Jordan's volleyball team plays the Broncs from Texas - Pan American at 3 p.m. The timing is perfect. After volleyball, you will have just enough time to heat up the grill, tailgate and switch into football mode as Aggie football hosts Abilene Christian Saturday night. The game kicks off at 6 p.m. and tickets are available at the Pan Am box office.

Doug Martin's squad has been getting consistently great play from Las Cruces Brandon Betancourt with two consecutive games gaining more than 100 yards and another 95-yard performance versus UCLA on his résumé, the Mayfield grad has been one of the consistent bright spots for the year.

Austin Franklin got on track Saturday, Oct. 19, catching an 85-yard scoring pass from King Davis III versus Rice. This and the mobility of Davis give NM State another dimension when they have the ball.

This promises to be a week filled with Aggie action, so make sure your Crimson gear is back from the cleaners.

Both NM State basketball teams have coaches whose first name is the same, with spelling variations. Mark Trakh has Erica Sanchez and Aarika Hughes, Marvin Menzies has Erik Brand and Aerick Sanders. "A rose by any other name" ... probably couldn't coach basketball as well as these folks.

Fall successes for tennis New and improved system sees wins

Ivan Fernandez
Tennis Coach

In this my fourth year as head coach at New Mexico State University and going into my 12th year in collegiate coaching, I decided that in order to keep my program going in the right direction, which is to win the WAC and make it into the NCAA Tournament, I needed to make some adjustments in the day-to-day operations and structure of the team practices and physical training.

After a rough season last year, I decided changes needed to be made in order to keep improving. I realized that if, as players, we never stop improving, then, as a coach, I must be willing to make adjustments and changes in order to keep improving. I decided to re-assess how I have been running my team the last few years and make a new start this fall.

As quickly as the fall semester begins in mid-August, our fall season ends in mid-October. For NCAA Division 1 collegiate tennis, the fall semester consists of individual tournaments while the spring semester consists of team matches.

In the fall, the student athletes, while still representing NMSU and the team, compete individually in tournaments just as they have done throughout their junior tennis careers.

In the spring, we will actually compete as a team against other universities. We will play three doubles matches and six singles matches. The three doubles matches are worth one team point to whoever wins two of the three matches. The six singles matches are worth one point each and the first team to reach four points will clinch the match.

With five returners coming back this fall and five new players, I figured this would be the best time to make adjustments to my structure of the team. I changed how the team practices were conducted, as well as increasing the creativity and intensity of our physical conditioning.

While there was some period of adjustment to my new strategic plan for the five returners, the five new players quickly adjusted to the structure and very soon thereafter, the entire team bought into the new system.

Our team is being led by two great seniors: Ros-Polly Nguyen (France) and Annemieke Witte (The Netherlands). The other 3 returners are junior Denise Van Der Ben (the Netherlands) and sophomores Mia Brandt (Norway) and Ashvarya Shrivastava (India).

Joining these five returners are a great group of new players including junior transfer Susie Alcaraz (Mexico), sophomore transfer Chloe Joliff (California) and the three new freshmen Marie-Pier Thiffault (Canada), Brittany Collens (Massachusetts) and Gabby Joyce (New Mexico).

Now that we are more than six weeks into my new and improved system, we have had our most successful fall semester since I have taken over as head coach.

This team has made me extremely proud by their dedication and commitment to this new team structure and they have seen the positive results.

As of now, we are on track to achieve our goal of winning the WAC championships that will be played here at the NMSU Tennis Center the last week of April. So please come out and support your Aggies Tennis Team.

Faith leaders join call for national monument

Support letter signed by 30 spiritual leaders addressed to President Obama

Thirty spiritual and religious leaders from southern New Mexico convened at Our Lady of Guadalupe-Tortugas Tuesday, Oct. 22, for a roundtable discussion about the importance of permanently protecting the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks (OMDP).

The event, hosted by NM Communities in Action & Faith (CAFÉ), provided a forum for leaders of different faiths to come together and voice their support for obtaining a national monument designation for the region.

Faith leaders attending the event added their names to a letter to President Barack Obama asking him to designate OMDP as a national monument.

"I am happy leaders from many faiths were able to come together and speak with one voice in support of Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks," said Father Vincent Petersen of Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church in Tortugas. "These lands are gifts from God, and it is our responsibility to do everything in our power to protect them so that future generations can continue to enjoy them."

The lands located in the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks region have been of great religious and spiritual importance for Native and Hispanic peoples for centuries. Puebloan peoples from Ysleta del Sur and the Piro-Manso-Tiwa still gather yucca and other resources along the Organ Mountain slopes to use in Catholic ceremonies.

As a part of the event, 30 diverse spiritual leaders signed the letter to the president imploring him to protect Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks as a national monument. The letter highlights some of the spiritual attributes of the region and explains how a national monument would create jobs in nearby communities.

Those who signed the letter hope it will encourage the president to act by making an official national monument designation.

"Rarely have we seen these kinds of strong relationships with congregations and the movement to preserve our lands. We are proud to be part of a significant campaign that will enable our communities in Southern New Mexico to enjoy and learn from our rich landscape for generations to come," said Rabbi Larry Karol of Temple Beth-El, Las Cruces.

"We have seen President Obama move to create new national monuments in the past, including Rio Grande del Norte near Taos earlier this year," said Sarah Nolan, executive director of CAFÉ. "We feel that Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks is deserving of a national monument designation because it is full of natural gifts from God that have been entrusted to us. It is our hope that the president will use the powers granted him under the Antiquities Act to create a new national monument so these gifts will be preserved."

The letter to Obama is available online at www.organizenm.org/organ-mountains.

- The death toll from an explosion at a coal mine in Dawson, N.M., reached 267.

- Masonry construction at the Elephant Butte Dam had reached the elevation of 4,187 feet, still below the river bed and 73 feet above the deepest part of the foundation.

- The ladies of St. James Guild were preparing a dinner for November 6. "They don't give dinners very often, but when they do they are long remembered because of their excellency," the Las Cruces Citizen said.

- Mrs. Carolyne Pyle of the Republican Central Committee was in Las Cruces to organize Republican women in Doña Ana County for the upcoming election.

- "Shooting the finest golf ever seen in Las Cruces," Jules Van Dersarl, the "youthful" music teacher at Las Cruces High School and a state college graduate captured the fifth annual Las Cruces Invitational Tournament by defeating favorite Spec Steward of Albuquerque 4-and-3. Van Desarl's 32 on the front nine was a new course record at the Las Cruces Country Club.

- J. Gerome Hartger, a Las Cruces architect, was chosen to design the city's second high school north of town as well as a new elementary school to relieve crowding at Conlee and Mesilla Park elementary schools.

- The Las Cruces Bulldogs would put their undefeated season on the line as they were set to host the Clovis Wildcats. The Las Cruces High School football team had defeated the Hobbs Eagles 13-0 in Hobbs the previous week.

DACC reapplies for nursing accreditation

Doña Ana Community College has submitted a presentation to the Accreditation Commission for Education in Nursing (ACEN) to regain the accreditation for its nursing program lost in August.

This is the first step in an intense process that requires information on faculty, curriculum, resources and evaluation.

The accreditation loss last year came as a blow to the nearly 100 students enrolled in the nursing program, most of whom were given the option to transfer to NMSU's bachelor's nursing program. Without the accreditation status, jobs and opportunities for the nursing graduates are limited.

Even if the ACEN board OKs DACC for candidacy, the accreditation process typically takes two years, which includes a self-study and a visit from the ACEN.

Imperative to the accreditation will be the college's ability to hire more faculty that have master's degrees in nursing.

Gunfire in the desert to be topic of meeting

Residents on the east side of Las Cruces continue to report hearing gunfire in the desert close to residences.

The Las Cruces Police Department is investigating and the Las Cruces Public Works Department has erected signs notifying the public that shooting is not allowed within the boundaries of the city. A public meeting to discuss this problem will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 29, in City Council Chambers at City Hall, 700 N. Main St. Officials and staff with the City of Las Cruces, Doña Ana County and the New Mexico State Land Office will be in attendance. All interested parties are invited to attend.

City ordinance Sec. 19-164 prohibits the firing or discharge of any gun, pistol, rifle or other firearm – including air rifles and BB guns – within city limits. Many portions of the East Mesa, specifically undeveloped land directly east of Sonoma Ranch Boulevard and Pagosa Hills Avenue, are within city limits and therefore off limits to hunting or recreational shooting. Anyone firing a weapon outside city limits must be no less than 150 yards away from any building or residential area, and fire only in a direction that has a safe trajectory.

Las Cruces Police encourage gun enthusiasts to use the Butterfield Shooting Range and refrain from illegally firing weapons within city limits or close to residential areas.

The Butterfield Shooting Range is off Interstate 10 on the city's West Mesa, and is free and open to the general public during daytime hours, except from 6 a.m. to 3 p.m. Thursdays when it is closed for regular maintenance. The Butterfield Shooting Range is accessible from Corralitos Road off Interstate 10 Exit 127.

County manager race continues

Only seven candidates remain in the search for Doña Ana County Commissioners to reach a decision naming a new county manager. Of these seven, five will be interviewed by the commissioners Monday, Oct. 28.

Previously, eight had been named, but William Homan, former sales and plant manager for a regional book printing and binding company, apparently withdrew.

The seven candidates who will be named for possible interviews are Julia Brown, an attorney of Brown and Associates; Marilu Casillas, former director and financial management officer of White Sands Missile Range; James Ericson, former city manager from 1999 to 2004 who currently works at Steinborn Inc. Realtors; Elaine Geherty, former flight commander for the Air Force; Sal Iturralde, former administrative manager for state of New Mexico; Charles "Chuck" McMahon, interim assistant county manager since September; and George Whitmire of El Paso, an Army officer retiree.

The candidates were ranked after a round of interviews with a search committee last week.

Oñate High School students pledge to stop texting and driving

On Thursday, Oct. 10, students from Oñate High School took a pledge to put their cell phones down and focus on the road as part of Allstate's national "X the TXT" campaign.

Presented by The Allstate Foundation's local partner, Health World, the program aims to raise awareness of the dangers of texting and driving. Allstate Exclusive Agency Owner Dawna Vince discussed the dangers of texting while driving.

Participants added their thumbprints to an oversized pledge banner to symbolize their promise not to text and drive.

"Oñate High School students took a pledge to not text and drive, which significantly improves their concentration on the road while driving," Vince said. "This simple act can help keep a peace of mind at home and ensure that our loved ones are driving more safely. No text is worth risking a life."

Research indicates that texting while driving takes teens' eyes off of the road for an average of five seconds – enough time to drive the length of a football field blind at 55 miles per hour. In 2010, teenagers accounted for 10 percent of motor vehicle crash fatalities.

This equates to 11 teen deaths in car crashes, on average, every day. Texting is one of the most dangerous distractions facing teen drivers today, according to recent research by The Allstate Foundation and National Highway Traffic Safety Administration:

Upon pledging, participants receive thumb bands with the words TXTNG KLLS to wear as a daily reminder of their commitment. Pledge Cards are passed out to everyone who makes the pledge to help get a conversation started at home and encourage families to commit to safer, focused driving. To make the pledge not to text and drive, or for more information on the X the TXT pledge program, visit www.facebook.com/xthetxt.

Arthropod outing offered by SWEC

Ever seen an Apache violin spider? How about a creosote walking stick? Join former New Mexico State University professor David "Bugman" Richman on an easy foray into the Organ Mountains to learn about the fascinating world of scorpions, centipedes, spiders and lesser known creepy crawlies of the Chihuahuan Desert.

The group meets at 8 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 26. This is part of the Southwest Environmental Center's Fall 2013 Back by Noon series of guided natural history outings. Advance registration is required and space is limited, so sign up early.

Be sure to bring sturdy shoes, water and a hat. All trips are open to the public and are free for SWEC members. A $5 donation is requested from non-members. For more information and to register, call 522-5552.

Mesilla Marshal presents appreciation plaque to DAM Ammo

Mesilla Town Marshal Tom Austin will present Doña Ana Munitions (DAM Ammo) a plaque of appreciation for its gracious donation of more than $15,000 in equipment, gear and ammo over the last year.

The marshal's office was unable to utilize all the gear, so it was shared with local law enforcement and the volunteer fire department.

"Paul and AJ at DAM Ammo have been overwhelming in their support of law enforcement and first responders in our community and in Doña Ana County," Austin said.

The public is invited to join the Marshal at 11 a.m. Friday, Oct. 25, at DAM Ammo, 3100 W. Picacho Ave., where local law enforcement will present a plaque of appreciation. For more information, call the Mesilla Marshal's Department at 526-4138.

DACC greets students from Lerdo, Durango

Through a 31-year partnership, Doña Ana Community College (DACC) students, faculty and staff will welcome students and colleagues from the Centro de Bachillerato Tecnológico Industrial y Servicios No. 4 (CBTis4) in Lerdo, Durango, Mexico, Sunday, Oct. 27.

With a goal of cultural and educational exchange, the visiting group will attend science and technology classes at DACC, visit with Spanish students at Mayfield High and tour Carlsbad Caverns.

Each fall, the Lerdo Student Exchange club at DACC plans and organizes an intercultural exchange culminating in a visit from CBTis4 students and faculty. DACC student leaders work to raise money, coordinate and plan an eventful schedule and celebrate the visitors. Their efforts continue through the spring semester as DACC students and faculty visit Lerdo in May.

The students from Lerdo compete with their classmates to have the highest grades to be selected to participate in the exchange.

The Sister City program joins Las Cruces and Lerdo as similar cities with high-desert climates, comparable populations and strong agricultural roots. The exchange allows students and faculty to understand the histories of both cities and experience the cultural similarities.

"Being a member of the Lerdo Student Exchange has given me the opportunity to broaden my leadership skills and has given me the chance to connect with students and teachers from Mexico," said Kassandra Herrera, business office technology student. "This year, I had the opportunity to travel to Lerdo and then to Guanajuato. The memories will stay with me forever. This trip was a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity."

For more information about the DACC Lerdo student exchange, contact Tim Chappell at 527-7726 or tchappell@dacc.nmsu.edu.

Lab manager earns an 'A'

Chemistry, biochemistry labs depend on man who earned master's degree there

The New Mexico State University Employee Council honored Jaime E. Rodriguez, an instrumental laboratory manager in the chemistry and biochemistry department, with the "A" Mountain Staff Award at the annual Employee Appreciation Picnic, Friday, Oct. 18.

Graciela A. Unguez, Tanner Schaub and Gary A. Eiceman nominated Rodriguez for the award.

"Jaime is deserving of this award because of his level of commitment to his work and the level of attention to detail and his greater than expected devotion to serving others and to trying to make the department a better center for research and teaching," said Eiceman, a distinguished professor in chemistry and biochemistry.

The NMSU Employee Council presents the "A" Mountain Staff Award twice a year and accepts nominations of exemplary full-time, regular NMSU staff employees who represent the qualities of integrity, dedication, skill, endurance, resilience, determination and passion in performance of their duties. Nominees are considered for their innovation, responsiveness, service, spirit and teamwork.

Rodriguez has been a member of the NMSU community for more than 20 years. He arrived in Las Cruces in 1992, when he began his graduate studies in chemistry. Rodriguez has worked in his current role as instrumental laboratory and building manager since 2010. Rodriguez oversees all of the chemical instrumentation in the department.

Rodriguez revealed that his favorite part of his job is troubleshooting and repairing instruments, and he is well known on campus for his expertise. He provides technical support to many departments outside of chemistry, including plant and environmental sciences, biology, chemical engineering and animal range science.

"If I have the knowledge about the instrument and I'm not afraid of opening it and checking what's wrong, my service speeds up the repairs a great deal, saving time and money to NMSU by avoiding the expensive service contracts with companies," he said.

"A lot of the instruments in the department are up and running because of Jaime's commitment to finding those parts that are obscure and yet necessary for instruments to run, helping faculty keep their labs up and running," Eiceman said.

Rodriguez has represented NMSU internationally a number of times. He traveled to Germany this summer and gave two presentations at the International Society of Ion Mobility Spectrometry annual conference. He also has been a co-author in 30 scientific publications and had his work published for four consecutive years.

"When he first came here in 1992 and he finished his master's degree in this department, I could see at that time that he saw in the position he has now an opportunity to be engaged with people, engaged with technology and a helper," Eiceman said.

After earning his master's degree in analytical chemistry, Rodriguez was a senior research specialist that designed and developed new chemical instrumentation from 1996 to 2001.

Rodriguez was an instrumentation laboratory manager for the agronomy and horticulture department from 2001 to 2004, when he created the medicinal plants of the southwest program's laboratory under Mary O'Connell as principal investigator.

For five years, from 2004 to 2009, Rodriguez was an instrumentation laboratory manager and research specialist for the chemistry and biochemistry department. During that time, he was a co-principal investigator in several national security projects. Rodriguez designed experiments, set up testing, collected and processed data for many government agencies such as the Army, Federal Aviation Administration, NASA and private companies. He also worked on design, development and maintenance of chemical instrumentation for Homeland Security and space exploration.

In addition to his work with instruments, Rodriguez manages the chemistry and biochemistry building.

"Something that isn't described in my job description is that I've been remodeling the building," he said. "We still have desks from the Second World War and that's in the whole building, so I'm replacing things little by little."

NMSU receives national diversity award once more

Magazine recognizes outreach to Hispanic students

New Mexico State University has once again been selected as a recipient of the Higher Education Excellence in Diversity award by INSIGHT Into Diversity magazine, the oldest and largest diversity-focused publication in higher education.

"New Mexico State University, a two-time HEED Award recipient, continues to exhibit their commitment to diversity and inclusion through the many initiatives implemented throughout their campus and community," said Lenore Pearlstein, publisher of INSIGHT Into Diversity. "As a member of the Hispanic Association of Colleges and Universities, it is evident that all aspects of human diversity matter."

The HEED award was created to recognize the diversity and inclusion efforts of U.S. colleges and universities of all types. Important for consideration for this award were initiatives related to gender, race, ethnicity, veterans, people with disabilities and members of the LGBT community.

The 55 HEED 2013 recipients will be featured in the November issue of the publication.

Christina Chavez Kelley, NMSU assistant vice president for student diversity and outreach, was responsible for organizing and submitting NMSU's application for the award.

"We are truly honored to be named as a recipient of the Higher Education Excellence in Diversity Award for a second year," Chavez Kelley said. "This award recognizes the diligent work of NMSU's students, faculty and staff who tirelessly advocate and work for access, diversity, equity and inclusion at every level of our land-grant university."

NMSU is designated a Minority Serving Institution and a

Hispanic Serving Institution based on the percentages of enrolled students in those categories.

"We hope the HEED award serves as a way to honor those institutions of higher education that recognize the importance of diversity and inclusion as part of their everyday campus culture," Pearlstein said.

In September, Hispanic Outlook once again included NMSU in the top 50 Hispanic bachelor's and master's degree-granting schools, ranking in the top 20 in terms of bachelor's degrees in education and engineering and master's degrees in engineering and social sciences.

For more information about the 2013 HEED award visit www.insightintodiversity.com.

Wishful thinking

David Salcido
On second thought ...

I have always been fascinated by predictions; from the pages of the National Enquirer to the Mayan calendar, the more outrageous the predictions, the better.

Why? Because such exercises serve to validate the virtually limitless breadth and scope of human ingenuity. I mean, hidden planets, time travel and a complete world shift to vegetarianism? Where do they come up with this stuff? Talk about thinking outside the box. It's awesome!

When it comes to predictions in the business world, however, I'm a bit more discerning. Honestly, it doesn't matter who's making them, so long as they have some basis in fundamental reality and the prognosticator has been paying close attention to trends. That's where it all begins, after all. Pay attention to trends long enough and anybody can become Nostradamus.

On Monday, Oct. 21, Forbes magazine, the bible of the business world, released its Top 10 Workplace Trends of 2013, in which current trends are studied and forecasts are made for the future. The part of my brain that revels in such things did somersaults, because when it comes to studying business trends, Forbes has proven itself the champ. Not that I think every single one of the predictions will come true, but the chances are pretty good that the researchers are on the right track.

In the end, all the exercise really serves to do is offer a little forward thinking perspective and who, besides the members of Congress, doesn't want that?

Among the predictions on that list were hopeful forecasts about the economy (as boomers retire, new life will be breathed into corporations, Gen Y will make up 30 percent of the work force and policies will change rapidly), telecommuting (companies will realize the cost savings and productivity increase and working from home will

Double whammy hits ranchers

High feed prices likely to continue

By Alta LeCompte
Las Cruces Bulletin

While Midwestern growers profited from skyrocketing grain prices in 2012, the boom was "a devastating hit for Texas and New Mexico," Emily Kerr of the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas told an audience Friday, Oct. 18, at New Mexico State University.

She said because several factors, including a dramatic and ongoing increase in world demand, Texas and New Mexico ranchers and dairy farmers are likely to continue to be squeezed by high feed prices.

Kerr, an associate economist and agriculture specialist, spoke during a conference titled "The Role of Southern New Mexico in the Economy" presented by the bank's El Paso branch and NMSU.

Drought and demand: double whammy

Corn prices rose 40 percent between May and July 2012, spurred by a higher overall level of demand and the impact of drought in Iowa and Illinois on U.S. production, Kerr said.

The story for soybeans was similar, she said. "It would be easy to conclude the spike was due just to drought ... but there could be other long-term trends, including demand, driving prices."

Demand grew most rapidly between 2006 and 2010, when U.S. corn production increased 170 percent. Most of the increase was due to rapidly growing world demand for ethanol, Kerr said.

About 40 percent of the U.S. corn production goes to ethanol.

Attendees network during a break at a conference on The Role of Southern New Mexico in the Economy Friday, Oct. 18, at the Corbett Center Student Union on the New Mexico State University campus. Seated are NAI 1st Valley colleagues Jacob Slavec and Brenda Skowronski.

"Higher grain prices have a unique – and by unique I mean uniquely bad – effect in our region," she said. "High grain prices are really bad news for our region because we are so heavily dependent on cattle and dairy farming."

Cattle production accounts for 2 percent of New Mexico's economic output, or 9 percent of gross domestic product when indirect impact is factored in. Indirect impact includes the cost of feed and other inputs as well as downstream economic activity such as shipping the cattle.

Midwesterners get the edge

Kerr said advanced ethanol processing plants in the Midwest make full use of their local corn crop, producing ethanol from the carbohydrate portion, oil from the fat and animal feed from the remaining protein.

Readily available ethanol byproducts "give livestock in the mid region a huge advantage," she said. Southwestern herds are declining as a percentage of the U.S. total.

Texas has seen a 15 percent decline in herd size in the past two years, compared to 2 percent overall in the U.S., she said.

"In addition to the effect of drought, in 2006, when ethanol became popular, distillers had a leftover supply of distiller grain, which they sold really cheaply. That has pushed the

Governor touts bi-partisanship

Administration to propose tax cuts, water investments

By Alta LeCompte
Las Cruces Bulletin

Gov. Susana Martinez, at the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce Update Luncheon Friday, Oct. 18, took Washington to task for its dysfunctional approach to governing, while extolling bipartisanship in Santa Fe.

"The state of New Mexico is not shut down," the governor said. "We would never think of closing. We are working for our taxpayers every single day."

She said New Mexico's economy is showing signs of rebounding, and in April reached 1 percent year-over-year growth for the first time in five years.

"I can't tell you how hard Washington's dysfunction and antics are making it for the states to grow," she said. "Thanks to the tax, fiscal and regulatory changes we've made, we're better positioned to win that fight."

She said sequestration hit New Mexico hard, forcing the state to make difficult decisions about whether or not to use state funds in support of furloughed workers and whether to cut or "backfill" social programs.

Martinez said acting to fill the gap in federal funding cut into the 13 percent reserve fund in place when she came into office.

"We did start to backfill some of these programs. We did continue to use and reduce our reserves," she said.

State policies show results

Martinez said in 2013 New Mexico took steps to grow and diversify the economy.

"We made a decision to compete, and we're doing it in a bipartisan way," she said. "We've got to take the penalties out of job creation."

The governor cited as accomplishments a 22 percent cut in taxes on businesses and implementation of a single sales factor tax that "stops punishing manufacturing by taxing them on what they export."

When the governor turned her attention to education initiatives, the audience in the Las Cruces Convention Center ballroom applauded.

She reported public education spending now exceeds pre-recession levels.

"That's because we find our children to be our strongest asset," she said. "We will move out of being 49th in education if it's the last thing I do."

Outlook for 2014

Martinez said the expansion of Medicaid and implementation of health exchanges in New Mexico presents a need for more primary care professionals in a variety of health care fields. She said she would lay out plans in the coming months to make it easier to educate those practitioners.

She said New Mexico must "create new, good paying jobs throughout the state."

"We need to attract the best minds – scientists engineers, health care professionals – and the tax code needs to be better. We need to make sure New Mexico remains a leader in high-tech research and development," she said.

Martinez said the state must focus its infrastructure investment on projects that create needed infrastructure in the localities.

"Water is often the lynch pin of economic development," she said. "In the coming months, we will announce more proposals for strategic water investment that focus on drought and contribute to economic development."

livestock industry from our region into other areas," Kerr said.

Drought continues to threaten

Since drought is expected to continue in Texas and New Mexico, demand for grain is expected to continue.

"The impact continues to be felt because of the longer drought. In normal years, grass in Texas and New Mexico supplies sufficient food. When grass supplies are not sufficient, ranchers are forced to rely heavily on grain. Coupled with high prices, it's a double whammy," she said.

On a brighter side, drought has lessened in the Corn Belt.

According to the September forecast, the U.S. should see a bumper corn harvest in 2013, Kerr said. The soybean harvest, too, is expected to be one of the largest in years.

"Prices have begun to fall for both," she said.

"The 11th district (comprising Texas and southern New Mexico) agriculture outlook is mixed. We're seeing continued drought; however, there seems to be a lot of relief from the higher corn prices we saw earlier in the year."

Water supply as a factor in growth

"Drought is nothing new for farmers," she said, commenting on the future impact of drought on agriculture and development. "It's part of trends that have been going on for hundreds of years."

Kerr said better irrigation processes and the use of crops better able to tolerate harsh conditions "allow farmers to believe there is still good work to be done in their industry."

She said there is a trend toward planting more dry land crops. Less cotton is being planted in favor of higher-priced commodities, she said.

"That is unfortunate, because we had a competitive advantage," she said.

Steer chill out in a pen Saturday, Oct. 19, at the Southern New Mexico Fairgrounds. They are part of an industry threatened by drought and high demand for grain, which pushes up feed prices, economist Emily Kerr told a Las Cruces audience Friday, Oct. 18.

National outlook mixed

Also on the conference agenda was Thomas Siems, assistant vice president and senior economist.

Siems noted U.S. GDP growth is generally declining, however, inflation remains low and stable.

While the economy is adding jobs slowly, unemployment remains elevated.

Siems said the nature of work has changed, resulting in 11.3 percent unemployment rates nationally for those who did not finish high school.

Another symptom of the changing nature of work is a growing problem of long-term unemployment, he said.

Risks the economy faces include the federal debt and budgeting process, banks too big to fail, European debt and recession, China, the Middle East and U.S. business and consumer uncertainty.

Although business and consumer confidence is shaky, he said, the west south central region is more optimistic and is posting the strongest job growth in the nation.

The U.S. still has time to address its problems and there appears to be a growing momentum to do so, he said.

Other speakers were: Mark Wynne, vice president and associate director of research at the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas, speaking on the global economy; Jerry Pacheco, executive director of the International Business Accelerator, who gave an overview of New Mexico's trade infrastructure with Mexico; and NMSU economics professor Jim Peach who spoke on the southern New Mexico economy.

Wishful

become mainstream) and the real sexual revolution (more females will break into top roles, taking leadership positions and finally balancing out the disparity issue). Very progressive. Out with the old, in with the new.

Other interesting conjectures involve social advocacy (companies will finally realize the power of the employee blog and capitalize on the boon through marketing incentives), the shrinkage of the skills gap (companies will work with schools to train the next generation work force) and freelancing (companies will hire experts to solve problems instead of full-time employees, thus saving money on benefit packages). Progress depends upon big changes in perception. So far, so good.

There's more on such subjects as employee engagement (getting workers to pay attention ... good luck with that one), internal hiring (hiring from the inside saves money, which isn't exactly brain surgery) and intrapreneurship (something about employees pitching ideas internally, rather than going off and starting their own business, which sounds a little bit like corporate greed to me, but then, nobody asked). Every list has to have a few intangibles, otherwise where's the fun in crystal gazing?

Looking over the list, none of these trends are really that far-fetched. Some in the last paragraph may seem a bit dubious, but, overall, the predictions are promising. In fact, we're already seeing movement in many of those areas in Las Cruces, through the efforts of local business organizations such as the Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance, charter schools such as the Arrowhead Park Early College High School and local chica Susana Martinez ascending to the role of governor. Progress may not always be judicious, but at least it's movement in the right direction.

Let's not forget that between the youthful, outside-the-box thinking of Spaceport America and the economic drive of the Borderplex, we have limitless opportunities opening up all around us every single day.

Perhaps with that in mind, it's about time for those who still believe that Las Cruces is 10 years behind the curve to update their thinking.

Personally, I like to think of this kind of professional prognostication as a wish list with the goal of building a better tomorrow, not just on Wall Street, but right here in the Mesilla Valley. Who knows where we can go from here, if we just have the wherewithal to believe in our ability to speculate, articulate and manifest. If Spaceport America has taught us anything, it's that here in the great Southwest, the sky is no longer the limit.

Marketing tips from space

Conference panel shares stories

During a session of the International Symposium on Personal and Commercial Spaceflight Wednesday, Oct. 16, a panel of experienced marketers divulged their personal stories of failure, triumph and lessons learned as they ventured into launching companies geared to the age of commercial space flight.

In addition to entrepreneurs Raymond Vogel, Sean Mahoney Bob Allen and Andrew Nelson, contributors included Monique Jacobson, New Mexico Department of Tourism secretary and former marketer with PepsiCo.

The experts took turns answering questions, telling how they first were bitten by the "space bug" and sharing insights that in many instances could be applied to most businesses that are thoroughly grounded in Earth-bound offices, factories and retail establishments. Below are tips they shared.

- "If you're not closing sales, creating value, you don't have a business - you have a hobby.
- "Marketing and sales should be the same in an organizational structure. All the marketing and all the marketing research in the world is just chasing your tail unless someone says yes and writes a check.
- "I'm of the school of thought that if you're introducing a disruptive technology, it should be overpriced.

Raymond Vogel, Monique Jacobson, Sean Mahoney and Bob Allen listen as Andrew Nelson responds to a question at the International Symposium on Personal and Commercial Spaceflight marketing forum Wednesday, Oct. 16, at the New Mexico Farm & Ranch Museum.

- "We have a split - we spend our time dreaming huge and executing day-to-day. We have the minimum viable rocket. At the same time, we have bigger ideas that will take more time and money to get to.
- "The best place to get investors is from your clients.
- "In a small company, there are a lot of ways to make a mistake. Be able to call your investors, clients and staff and say, 'We messed up, but here's where we'd like to go from here.'

...
Sean Mahoney,
chief executive officer, Masten Space Systems

- "How do you find out what a customer wants? You talk to people. If your customer is the government and you want a different policy, you have to understand their needs.
- "You solve your own problems, and you may solve others' too.
- "We have two mottos, one targeted to people who want to buy flights, and another one, "Your mission, our ship" that focuses on you doing what you do best. It's a great partnership.
- "One of the reasons we do what we do is because we want to make the world a better place.
- "We reach out to schools day in and day out to encourage them to do small, if not no cost, experiments. A culture based on innovation has to start with kids or STEM."

chief operating officer, XCOR Aerospace suborbital flight company

Andrew Nelson of XCOR Aerospace tells the audience what it's like to face the challenge of being creative when your competition is Virgin Galactic, "backed by the friendly neighborhood billionaire," Richard Branson.

Las Cruces Bulletin photos by Alta LeCompte

- "There is always an underlying narrative. Build your brand at the intersection of who's the audience and what is your core narrative. If you get that built right, the other things can change.
- "When you're in the hurley-burley of startup in a nascent industry, you want to duck every time someone tells you to take a couple of weeks and figure something out. But you have to do it.
- "In the innovative space industry ... you can't ask people how you can solve their pain. You have to marry data with what's in your gut. You have to meet your audience half way.
- "Space is a story unfolding in the public arena around the world as a mythical construct. The human cognitive imperative is filled up by stories. Space is our new exploration myth. It's an offer of adventure. There's a phenomenal sense we're at the barnstorming stage with the next wave of space travel. We're very bullish on it."

Stagnant wages characterize last 20 years

Changing laws to favor unions over corporations could raise wages

Chris Erickson
State of the Economy

A common theme one hears – usually coming from the right, but not always – is that the American people have to accept stagnant wages going forward. Proponents of this view point to stagnant wages going back decades. Indeed, according to the Social Security Administration, median compensation between 1990 and 2011 barely budged, increasing only 8 percent.

Meanwhile, U.S. output per hour of work has increased 45 percent. The increased productivity, rather than raising wages generally, has contributed to greater income inequality. The pessimistic among us argue that we must accept this outcome as a feature of the economy of the 21st century.

Many who hold this view point to globalization as the root cause of American wage stagnation. We can't compete, it is argued, with low wage workers in other countries. But this argument doesn't pan out. American workers are the fourth most productive among industrialized countries, behind only Norway, Ireland, and Belgium. We are about 15 percent more productive than the EU overall, 35 percent more productive than Japan, and three times more productive than Mexico. Meanwhile, our hourly compensation, at least in manufacturing, is about average.

Another view often promoted by the pessimists as a cause of wage stagnation is the Internet. The Internet, so the argument goes, allows a few high flyers to earn disproportionately more, while the everyday drones are left to toil in the trenches of wage stagnation. There is something to this argument. The Internet has extended the reach of the very talented, allowing them to earn more. But it's not the whole story; if it were, we would see increasing inequality in other industrial countries, but we don't. Something else is going on.

So now we come to my preferred explanation, which is the decline of unions. Beginning in the 1950s and having obtained full force by 1990, the pendulum has swung away from unions and in favor of corporations.

As a good libertarian, I view the right of workers to organize themselves into unions as symmetric with the right of capitalists to organize themselves as corporations. The role of the government in this process should be minimal, setting rules that neither favor nor discriminate against either the union or the corporation. A closed shop provision that requires all workers to belong to the union, for example, should neither be illegal nor required by the government, but should be allowed as a possible outcome of a negotiation between the union and the corporation.

If unions are successful in raising wages, won't that result in lost jobs? Possibly, but American workers are highly productive, so capitalists can afford to pay more. The higher wages likely come out of profits rather than laying off workers. If Walmart workers were to receive a 10 percent pay raise, Walmart profits would fall; its stock price would decline and the four Walton children would only be worth, say, $100 billion instead of $135 billion. Given the incredible productivity of Walmart workers, it seems unlikely that paying an extra 10 percent would make it profitable to engage in layoffs.

I'm not calling for a change in American institutions that provide excessive power to unions, just a balance. The laws now favor corporations over unions; the consequence has been that American workers aren't being paid what they are worth.

Christopher A. Erickson, Ph.D., is a professor of economics at NMSU. He was a member of the wood workers union when employed by a plywood mill while in college. The opinion expressed may not be shared by the regents or administration of NMSU.

Local Realtors stay busy

Five neighborhoods hold key to most home sales

Gary Sandler's
Real Estate Connection

Las Cruces area Realtors (and I'm one of them) are happy to report that they sold and closed 1,075 new and existing homes, townhomes and condominiums between Jan. 1 and Oct. 20.

Local brokers were busiest in the area known as the Jornada/Las Colinas neighborhood. The area, located roughly north of U.S. Highway 70 between Rinconada Boulevard and North Jornada Road, was responsible for just under 12 percent of all sales. New homes accounted for 28 percent of the area's closings.

The second busiest neighborhood on the list was the Sonoma West area. Formerly known as High Range by Realtors, the area is loosely bounded by Lohman Avenue on the south, U.S. Highway 70 on the north, Roadrunner Parkway on the west, and Sonoma Ranch Boulevard on the east. It was responsible for just under 10 percent of all sales, with new homes accounting for just under 7 percent of the area's total.

Sonoma East, located directly east of the Sonoma West development, was the third most productive area, accounting for 9.5 percent of total Las Cruces area sales. Buyers opted for new homes 36 percent of the time.

No. 4 on the list is known as the Four-Hills area. Bounded by Interstate 25 on the west and Rinconada Boulevard on the east, the area runs north from U.S. Highway 70 to the vicinity of Engler Road. Realtors booked almost 7 percent of their sales in this area, where one-in-five buyers chose new homes.

Last but not least is the Alameda area. Located north and west of Downtown, the expansive neighborhood generated almost 6 percent of total Las Cruces area sales. Only three of the homes were brand new.

Since the five areas accounted for only 465, or 43.7 percent of the 1,075 closings, it's fair to say that Realtors were also busy in the remaining Las Cruces area neighborhoods and county subdivisions. Let's hope they keep up the good work.

See you at closing.

Drought stricken farmers and ranchers given more time to replace livestock

New Mexico farmers and ranchers who previously were forced to sell livestock due to drought throughout the state have an extended period of time in which to replace the livestock and defer tax on any gains from the forced sales, the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) announced on Friday, Oct. 18.

Farmers and ranchers who, due to drought, sell more livestock than they normally would, may defer tax on the extra gains from those sales. To qualify, the livestock generally must be replaced within a four-year period. The IRS is authorized to extend this period if the drought continues.

The IRS is providing this relief to any farm located in a county, parish, city, borough, census area or district, listed as suffering exceptional, extreme or severe drought conditions by the National Drought Mitigation Center (NDMC), during any weekly period between Sept. 1, 2012, and Aug. 31, 2013.

Details on this relief, including a list of NDMC-designated counties, are available at www.irs.gov/pub/irs-drop/n-13-62.pdf.

USDA announces availability of funding to develop advanced biofuels projects

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack announced Monday, Oct. 21, the availability of $181 million to develop commercial-scale biorefineries or retrofit existing facilities with appropriate technology to develop advanced biofuels. The move was made possible through the USDA's Biorefinery Assistance Program, created through the 2008 Farm Bill and administered by USDA Rural Development.

Sapphire Energy's "Green Crude Farm" in Columbus, N.M., is an example of how this program is supporting the development of advanced biofuels. In 2011, USDA provided Sapphire Energy a $54.5 million loan guarantee to build a refined algal oil commercial facility. In continuous operation since May 2012, the plant is producing renewable algal oil that can be further refined to replace petroleum-derived diesel and jet fuel. According to the company, more than 600 jobs were created throughout the first phase of construction at the facility, and 30 full-time employees currently operate the plant.

Since the start of the Obama Administration, the USDA Biorefinery Assistance Program has provided approximately $684 million in assistance to support biofuels projects in eight states. Applications for biorefinery assistance are due by Jan. 30, 2014.

Because natural gas is considered a commodity – the price for which is determined by the market – Zia Natural Gas Co. must renegotiate its contract on a yearly basis. It may not, however, make or lose money on the cost of gas, as mandated by the commission.

For the Doña Ana County System, the new gas cost factor is $0.4453/ccf, up from $0.3072/ccf. Therefore, the average bill will increase 14 percent from $30.22 to $34.58.

Zia Natural Gas Co. encourages all customers to winterize their homes and conserve energy. Lowering the thermostat 10 degrees for eight hours a day can save as much as 10 percent on heating costs. More winterizing tips are available at www.ziagas.com.

Ready to launch

NMSU sponsors Las Cruces' first Startup Weekend event in November

By Amanda Bradford

For the Las Cruces Bulletin

New Mexico State University will kick off its celebration of Global Entrepreneurship Week in November with Las Cruces' first Startup Weekend event, beginning Nov. 15.

The event is sponsored by Arrowhead Center, the NMSU College of Engineering, Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance, the New Mexico Economic Development Department and many contributing sponsors.

Startup Weekend is a global grassroots movement of community leaders, and entrepreneurs who are learning the basics of founding startups and launching successful ventures. The nonprofit organization is headquartered in Seattle, but Startup Weekend organizers can be found in cities around the world.

Startup Weekend events follow the same basic model: Anyone is welcome to pitch their startup idea and receive feedback from their peers. Teams form around the top ideas, as determined by popular vote, and then it's a 54-hour frenzy of business model creation, coding, designing and market validation. The weekends culminate with presentations in front of local entrepreneurial leaders with another opportunity for critical feedback.

Participants include software developers, designers and people with a background in business, marketing and public relations.

NMSU graduate student Brian Mangusing won first prize at a Startup Weekend event in Albuquerque in June. Mangusing, who has a master's degree in biotechnology and is pursuing another master's in business administration, said the event was intense.

"It was an incredible learning experience and networking opportunity," he said. "There were a lot of great ideas that weren't chosen, but they were still able to learn so much about the process."

Zetdi Runyan Sloan, program manager at Arrowhead Technology Incubator and lead organizer for the Startup Weekend Las Cruces event, said she expects a high level of student participation at the local event. Similar events will take place all over the world during the Global Startup Battle, including Startup Weekend Four Corners in Farmington, N.M., and a teen Startup Weekend event in Albuquerque.

"We hope to also draw some El Paso entrepreneurs, and appeal to developers in the region," Sloan said. "Some of our judges include Beto Pallares, a Kauffman Fellow and venture capitalist; Andy Krafur, CEO at Spira Footwear; and Carolyn Wincer, head of travel and tourism development at Virgin Galactic."

The Startup Weekend event concludes Nov. 17, and is followed the next day by the start of Global Entrepreneurship Week. Studio G, Arrowhead Center's student incubator, will have booths on campus Nov. 18 and 19 where students can get more information about the resources available for student entrepreneurs.

There will be a Studio G open house from 3 to 5 p.m. on Nov. 19 at Academic Research A on the NMSU campus. The open house will have food, prizes and opportunities to join Studio G - all Startup Weekend participants and NMSU students are welcome.

A coffee meet-up on Nov. 20 at Milagro Coffee y Espresso, 1733 E. University Ave., will bring together Startup Weekend participants and Studio G students for valuable networking time. The New Mexico Programming Group will also host its monthly meeting at 5:30 p.m. Nov. 21.

Global Entrepreneurship Week aims to inspire people to explore their potential as self-starters and innovators, and connect participants to potential collaborators, mentors and even investors. For more information about Global Entrepreneurship Week, visit www.unleashingideas.org.

Cost to attend Startup Weekend is $99. To register for Las Cruces Startup Weekend, or for more information, visit www.lascruces.startupweekend.org. Students can attend for a discounted $50 entry fee. A limited number of scholarships and sponsorships are available. For information about discounts, scholarships and sponsorships, contact Sloan at 646-7833 or zrunyan@nmsu.edu.

IRS sees heavy demand as operations resume

2014 tax season to start later following government closure

The Internal Revenue Service has announced a delay of approximately one to two weeks to the start of the 2014 filing season to allow adequate time to program and test tax processing systems following the 16-day federal government closure.

The IRS is exploring options to shorten the expected delay and will announce a final decision on the start of the 2014 filing season in December, Acting IRS Commissioner Danny Werfel said. The original start date of the 2014 filing season was Jan. 21, and with a one- to two-week delay, the IRS would start accepting and processing 2013 individual tax returns no earlier than Jan. 28 and no later than Feb. 4.

The government closure came during the peak period for preparing IRS systems for the 2014 filing season. Programming, testing and deployment of more than 50 IRS systems is needed to handle processing of nearly 150 million tax returns. Updating these core systems is a complex, year-round process with the majority of the work beginning in the fall of each year.

About 90 percent of IRS operations were closed during the shutdown, with some major workstreams closed entirely during this period, putting the IRS nearly three weeks behind its tight timetable for being ready to start the 2014 filing season.

There are additional training, programming and testing demands on IRS systems this year in order to provide additional refund fraud and identity theft detection and prevention.

"Readying our systems to handle the tax season is an intricate, detailed process, and we must take the time to get it right," Werfel said. "The adjustment to the start of the filing season provides us the necessary time to program, test and validate our systems so that we can provide a smooth filing and refund process for the nation's taxpayers. We want the public and tax professionals to know about the delay well in advance so they can prepare for a later start of the filing season."

The IRS will not process paper tax returns before the start date, which will be announced in December. There is no advantage to filing on paper before the opening date, and taxpayers will receive their tax refunds much faster by using e-file with direct deposit. The April 15 tax deadline is set by statute and will remain in place. However, the IRS reminds taxpayers that anyone can request an automatic six-month extension to file their tax return. The request is easily done with Form 4868, which can be filed electronically or on paper.

IRS processes, applications and databases must be updated annually to reflect tax law updates, business process changes and programming updates in time for the start of the filing season.

The IRS continues resuming and assessing operations following the 16-day closure. The IRS is seeing heavy demand on its toll-free telephone lines, walk-in sites and other services from taxpayers and tax practitioners.

During the closure, the IRS received 400,000 pieces of correspondence, on top of the 1 million items already being processed before the shutdown.

The IRS encourages taxpayers to wait to call or visit if their issue is not urgent, and to continue to use automated applications on IRS.gov whenever possible.

"In the days ahead, we will continue assessing the impact of the shutdown on IRS operations, and we will do everything we can to work through the backlog and pent-up demand," Werfel said. "We greatly appreciate the patience of taxpayers and the tax professional community during this period."

Future farmers continue a tradition

Results are in for the Southern NM State Fair's 47th Junior Livestock Sale

By Marvin Tessneer

Las Cruces Bulletin

Community supporters came through with $252,000 to reward 4-H and FFA youths for their work on their projects in the 47th Junior Livestock Sale at the Southern New Mexico State Fair.

Last year's total was slightly better at $280,000. A total of 336 youths participated in this year's sale, the Extension Service reported.

"The students use the proceeds from the sales for their future education," said John Campbell, livestock show secretary.

The Grand Champion exhibitors and buyers were:

- Amy Gardner, Steer, Mesilla Valley Christian School FFA, to 4 Rivers Equipment
- Lauren Schlothauer, Dairy Heifer, Valle Verde 4-H to Steve Lyles

- Mason Halvorsen, Market Hog, Fort Selden 4-H to the Mesilla Valley Maze
- Tell Swift, Market Lamb to Smithco Construction
- Ky Massey, Rabbit, H-Bar-C 4-H to Dixie Ranch Pecans and Doña Ana County Farm Bureau

The Junior Livestock Sale started on the New Mexico State University campus. In 1966, the Junior Livestock Sale was moved to the former Air Force Operating Ground Control Interception and Warning Station on the West Mesa, according to the Extension Service.

The station had a complement of more than 200 men, officers and airmen. The Air Force had built the station in 1954 and conducted surveillance there until 1963.

And from that 1966 sale the Southern New State Fair was established. Some of the former military Quonset huts are still being used as exhibition halls to this day, according to the Extension Service.

Precipitation update

Outlook for spring planting not good

By Marvin Tessneer
 Las Cruces Bulletin

Southern New Mexico is locked in a prolonged drought, according to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. The NOAA forecast is calling for increased chances of below average precipitation for the area during November, December and January, according to state climatologist David DuBois. Las Cruces precipitation at DuBois' New Mexico State University weather gauge in mid-October was 5.99 inches, or 74 percent of average for this time of year.

The outlook for spring planting is not promising. The storage in Elephant Butte Reservoir is only 169,800 acre-feet, 7.7 percent of capacity, DuBois said.

"According to the latest NOAA report, mountains in southern Colorado and northern New Mexico have equal chances of snow this winter," DuBois said. "But current indications are that it could go either way."

Hear ye, hear ye!

Magellan's return marks faire's 42nd year

By Zak Hansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

From its humble beginnings in a church parking lot in the Dark Ages of the early 1970s to its current station as one of the Southwest's premier arts events, the yearly Renaissance ArtsFaire takes more than 20,000 people back in time to the 15th century each year.

This year, with the addition of several new features and attractions, as well as the return of one of its most beloved icons, the 42nd annual iteration promises to be bigger and better than ever.

Organized by the Doña Ana Arts Council, this year's Renaissance ArtsFaire will fill Young Park with hundreds of artisans peddling their finest wares, live entertainment, food vendors and more, all in full Renaissance regalia, Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 2-3.

Magellan the friendly dragon, who for 22 years made his home inside the waters of Young Park, was sorely missed last year, following an ill-fated spat with the Black Knight. After a yearlong interment in the Dragon Hospital, however, he's back and better than ever.

"He was starting to show his age," said Kathleen Albers, Doña Ana Arts Council executive director.

To aid Magellan's speedy recovery, donations were accepted at last year's event, pulling in more than $1,000 from well-wishers.

Patricia Hynes, director of the New Mexico Space Grant Consortium, noticed Magellan's absence at last year's Renaissance ArtsFaire, and felt it would be a great opportunity to involve engineering students from New Mexico State University.

Hynes was interested in funding a Capstone class to work on the ailing dragon, and approached NMSU Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering Department Head Ian Leslie with the idea. Following Leslie's approval, Hynes then went to Bob Diven, Las Cruces artisan and true Renaissance man who first created Magellan 23 years ago. Diven agreed to mentor the students involved in the dragon's restoration, as the project required re-engineering both the structure and robotics of the beloved beast, and set to work redesigning Magellan.

"He has new skin, he's a little leaner and sculpted and he has several new features," Diven said, noting the dragon's newfound ability to turn his head, roar and even blow smoke.

Gabe Garcia, who is the Capstone Project faculty adviser at NMSU, is overseeing the 10 students designing and building the features and special effects for Magellan, tackling every aspect of the dragon's successful return to Young Park.

Funding the Capstone course through a grant from the New Mexico Space Grant Consortium, Hynes was able to unite the twin disciplines of art and science, bridging the gap between old world mythology and cutting-edge technology and, in the process, help restore a long-standing tradition of the Renaissance ArtsFaire.

"Without Pat Hynes, Bob Diven and the NMSU Engineering Department, Magellan would have stayed in the dragon hospital for many, many years," Albers said. "This is a wonderful windfall for the arts council. Magellan is a beloved icon and carries special meaning for many people in the Las Cruces community. This project is such an exciting collaboration and we are so grateful for the efforts of everyone involved."

Also in the spirit of cooperation between local entities, this year, the "Royal Carriage" shuttle service will freely whisk fairgoers from the parking lot of the Pan American Center on the NMSU campus to and from the Renaissance ArtsFaire both days.

In addition to Magellan's return and the Royal Carriage's new route, other additions to this year's faire include a streamlined entrance and exit system, designed to ease congestion at pick-up and drop-off points; new amusement rides inside the Children's Realm; and a slew of new entertainers joining old favorites, including magicians, musicians, fire spinners, puppeteers and live theater.

Of course, old standards – including the Merry Court of Sherwood Oak, the Middle Eastern Village, the Imperial Wine Garden and Robert the Ratcatcher – will return, bringing the tried-and-true along with the new.

Without question, the Renaissance ArtsFaire is one of Las Cruces' best-loved events, one that would not be possible without the tireless efforts of the Doña Ana Arts Council and a horde of devoted volunteers, who number well more than 350 each year.

"The volunteers are absolutely critical," Albers said. "We couldn't do any of this – not the Renaissance ArtsFaire nor any of our programs, or operating the theater – without them. The help of our volunteers and the support of the community really keeps us going."

Zombies ate my neighbors

Undead hordes descend on Main Street

By Zak Hansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

In 1968, waves of them took over a rural Pennsylvania farm house, devouring those in their wake and introducing the world to the living dead.

Ten years later, in 1978, we saw them decimate the entire country – perhaps the world – pinning a small group of survivors in a shopping mall. In the years since, they've taken over the world in varying degrees, scattering survivors in their endless quest for brains and, in the process, conquering not only films, but television, books, video and board games and so much more.

Now, just when you thought we were safe here in the Mesilla Valley, thousands of lurching, wheezing, moaning, brain-craving zombies will descend on Main Street Downtown for the fourth annual Zombie Walk Saturday, Oct. 26.

This year, zombies will meet in front of the Rio Grande Theatre, 221 N. Main St., starting at 5 p.m., to register for costume contests and prizes. Prizes will be given in a number of categories, including “best couple,” “best group,” “best child under 12” and, the crowd favorite, “most gruesome.”

“People just get so creative with it – and so gruesome,” said Doña Ana Arts Council Executive Director Kathleen Albers.

At 6 p.m., the terror begins, as thousands of the living dead will begin their slow, loping parade down Main Street.

At 7 p.m., the Zombie Walk will come to a close, but the fun is far from over. Students from Alma d'arte Charter High School will perform a rendition of the Halloween favorite, Michael Jackson's “Thriller.” Following that performance, local indie rockers Decade of the Dead Arcade will take the stage. After the band finishes, George Romero's horror classic “Night of the Living Dead” will be shown outside on a large-scale projector screen. There will also be food, drink and crafts vendors offering wares with a decidedly undead feel to them.

Now guided by the Doña Ana Arts Council, the Zombie Walk first came to Las Cruces under David Salcido, then manager of the Rio Grande Theatre.

“Four years ago, I was managing the Rio Grande Theatre, but at the time there wasn't much going on in the Downtown area,” he said. “Most of the buildings were boarded up and aside from SWEC (Southwest Environmental Center), there really weren't any businesses bringing people down. We had a dance show scheduled with a Halloween theme and I wanted to do some pre-show promotion. It occurred to me, what better way to get people downtown for a Halloween show than to stage a zombie walk?”

The idea, Salcido said, was not his own, and the concept had been around for about a decade before he brought the undead hordes to the streets of Las Cruces.

In its first year, “we brought in something like 100 zombies and about 300 spectators. That got people's attention,” he said.

Steffany and Joey Sanwick and their dog Maxie show off their flower child zombie look at the 3rd annual zombie walk downtown.

“I hadn't planned on it becoming an annual thing, but the following year I had so many people asking about it that I decided to do it again.”

Since then, the teeming body of the undead has grown by leaps and bounds. In its second iteration, in 2011, the Arts Council became peripherally involved.

“At that time, Summer Irvin had just been hired as the events coordinator and she loved the idea,” Salcido said. “Though she was still new to the position, she helped me bring in some sponsors to pay for the costume prizes. That year, we had something like 300 zombies and twice that in spectators.”

With the involvement of the Doña Ana Arts Council and several sponsors from the community, the Zombie Walk continued to grow.

“Last year was the biggest event to date,” Salcido said. “The arts council was fully involved and with the help of Bravo Mic as a sponsor, we had several sponsors, vendor booths, a full stage with entertainment throughout the night and a zombie movie marathon inside the Rio Grande Theatre. Our final count was a little more than 800 zombies, and hundreds of spectators were lined up along both sides of Main Street, between Griggs and the roundabout.”

While Salcido has left his position at the Rio Grande, he said he sees the Zombie Walk becoming an institution.

“This year is the fourth year for the Zombie Walk and the second as an official event of the Doña Ana Arts Council. It's grown exponentially and I hope it continues to do so,” he said.

Emilia's on the Plaza, 2290 Calle de Parian, offers homestyle Mexican favorites on its cozy, inviting patio with a great view of the historic Mesilla Plaza.

Pistol Pete's pick

Emilia's on the Plaza under new owners

By Zak Hansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

For several years now, its cozy and inviting patio, cold beers and hot, fresh Mexican food has been drawing locals and tourists alike to Emilia's on the Plaza, at the corner of Calle de Parian and Calle Principal, overlooking the historic Mesilla plaza.

Continuing that tradition, Emilia's new owners, mother-and-son team Lynn Nelson and Ricky Rascon, have taken over the business, located in the building that once housed Café Don Felix.

Nelson, who hails from Aztec, N.M., joined her son in Las Cruces, where he attended New Mexico State University and obtained his bachelor's degree in business marketing – and acted as NMSU's beloved, gun-toting mascot, Pistol Pete.

To aid in college expenses, Rascon worked at Emilia's for several years, getting to know business owner Emily Coss, whose name graces the restaurant's signage.

After three years, Coss sold the business to Nelson and Rascon, who officially took the reins Thursday, Oct. 17, and they're hard at work trying to improve upon the already popular and respected restaurant.

Much is the same at Emilia's – same warm, inviting patio perfect to enjoy a basket of chips and salsa and a bucket of ice-cold Mexican beers or a glass of New Mexico wine; same fresh, homestyle Mexican favorites, including standards such as enchiladas, tacos and flautas; same hot, flavorful salsa and crisp, crunchy tortilla chips; same warm, friendly staff and service – but some welcome changes are coming.

Rascon said Emilia's is soon to expand its beer menu, adding draft beers and a larger selection of New Mexico beers, as well as its wine list. The restaurant is also looking to host live music on the patio more frequently, though several Las Cruces luminaries, including Smoke and Mirrors and Tiffany Christopher, have already received a warm welcome when they played.

The menu is, in large part, the same as it's been for years, and that's certainly not a negative. All your border favorites are here, along with a few surprises.

Rascon recommends the fish tacos, made with breaded and fried tilapia, and the Mesilla carnitas – red chile pork, green chile con carne and fried pork, served with corn or flour tortillas, rice and beans.

Aguas frescas, those fruity, delicious Mexican drinks, are made from scratch, with actual fruit, rather than the powdered concentrate many places try to pass off as authentic; Emilia's desserts, too, are made fresh and from scratch – save, perhaps, for one spectacular creation that takes just one store-bought ingredient: a candy bar.

That's right: after you've finished your plate, order up a Snickers Chimichanga – the candy classic wrapped in a tortilla and deep-fried, chimichanga-style, and topped with caramel. As a fan of just about anything battered or wrapped and then plunged into searing hot oil until crisp and golden brown, you can imagine my delight.

For dinner, I took Rascon's recommendation and ordered the Mesilla carnitas, and was not disappointed. The fried pork, which I tried first, was crisp on the outside and tender and juicy inside; the red chile pork was flavorful and a bit spicy, though it could have been warmer, temperature-wise; and the green chile con carne, made with Hatch green chile bought up the road and roasted here at home, was my clear favorite, warm and tender meat sopped in hot, flavor-packed chile. The rice, somehow a stumbling block for many restaurants in town, was delicious, and the beans were just right.

All in all, it set me back just under $10, but for a plate that fed two starving diners, that's practically a steal.

If my word isn't good enough, think about this: If one person knows how to hit a bull's-eye with Las Cruces' favorite foodstuffs, it's probably the guy with a 10-gallon hat, two guns and a moustache.

Ghosts of the Past return to museum

Popular living history event returns

Explore the New Mexico Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum at night as you time travel back in New Mexico history or meet historical ghosts during Ghosts of the Past.

The popular living history event is from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday, Oct. 25-26, with all new characters this year. The tours offer a unique living history experience that transports visitors of all ages to a variety of eras in New Mexico history. Various historical characters interact with visitors on indoor and outdoor evening tours.

"Ghosts of the Past transforms the museum into an amusement park for historical imaginations," said Scott Green, the museum's curator of education. "This is an amazingly textured event which utilizes living history to present New Mexico's past in a fun and imaginative way."

The theme for the indoor tour this year is "Lost Ghosts from the Lost Buildings of New Mexico." The indoor tour start times are 6, 6:15, 6:35, 6:55, 7:15 and 7:35 p.m.

The theme for the outdoor tour is "The Moments before their Demise." It is recommended that anyone taking the outdoor tour bring a coat. Those start times are 6:25, 6:45, 7:05, 7:25, 7:45 and 8:05 p.m.

Tickets must be purchased for a specific tour and each tour lasts about one hour and 15 minutes. Advance tickets are $4 for adults and $1 for children and can be purchased at the museum. Tickets purchased on the evenings of the event are $5 and $2. Tours are limited and fill up fast, so advance tickets are recommended for this popular event.

"Living history is unparalleled in its ability to immerse participants in the emotions of history," Green said. "Encountering a well-researched and well-performed historical character is unforgettable."

Basic Dowsing Class

1 to 3:30 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 2

Learn the basics of dowsing (questing, divining, water witching), how to use the four basic dowsing tools, and the benefits associated with dowsing. Museum volunteer Frank Geisel is the instructor. The cost is $15 and dowsing tools will be available. The cost is $12 for Friends of the museum members. Cash or check (checks should be made to Friends of the NMF&RHM). Preregistration is encouraged.

Exhibit Reception:

"The Color of Pie Town"

6 to 8 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 7

To celebrate the opening of the new photography exhibit, "The Color of Pie Town," the museum will have a special reception that will feature refreshments, including pie and coffee.

The reception is free. The exhibit includes 37 of Russell Lee's iconic color photographs of Pie Town, N.M. Lee captured life in this small Catron County town in 1940. At the time, Lee was a 36-year-old photographer for the Historical Section of the U. S. Farm Security Administration (FSA). Lee photographed every facet of life in Pie Town, which reminded him of an old frontier town – a place where homesteaders still proved up their land, where many lived in rough log homes, where a daily stage kept contact with the outside world, and where a tight-knit community pulled together to socialize and survive. The exhibit is in the museum's North Hallway through Oct. 19, 2014.

Culture Series:

"La Cañada Alamosa as a Frontier"

7 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 14

The archaeological evidence indicates that, for over 700 years, La Cañada Alamosa in west-central New Mexico was a prehistoric melting pot between pueblo groups with distinctive ceramic and architectural styles. During the historic period the Hispanic village of Cañada Alamosa (now Monticello, N.M.) was a lone outpost intruding into Apache country. What constitutes a frontier? How many different kinds of frontiers are there? Was La Cañada Alamosa a frontier? If so, then what kind of a frontier was it and what happened when different groups made contact? Archaeologist Karl Laumbach will use archaeological and historical data recovered during the 15 years of research at Cañada Alamosa to provide answers to these questions in this presentation. Admission is a suggested donation of $2.

Map Dowsing & Dowsing for Energies

1 to 3:30 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 16

Learn to use maps to remotely dowse for water, treasures, buried items, etc., and dowse for noxious (geopathic) energies and learn to resolve problems associated with those energies. Anyone signing up for this course must first have completed the Basic Dowsing Course or equivalent. Museum volunteer Frank Geisel is the instructor. The cost is $15 and dowsing tools will be available. The cost is $12 for Friends of the Museum members. Cash or check (checks should be made to Friends of the NMF&RHM).

New exhibit:

"The Cowboy Way: Drawings by Robert 'Shoofly' Shufelt"

Saturday, Nov. 23

The first artwork ever to be displayed at the museum belonged to Robert "Shoofly" Shufelt. Fifteen years after he graciously loaned some of his lithographs for a temporary exhibit, Shufelt and his wife, Julie, have donated his collection to the museum for a new exhibition. To showcase this compilation of Shufelt's work, the museum staff renovated part of the Generations exhibit in the Heritage

Francesca Hakes as La Llorona

Henri Ludwig as outlaw Dave Rudabaugh

Gallery to create a new fine art section called the Heritage Art Gallery. About 50 or 60 of the 132 "Shoofly" lithographs donated to the museum will make up the initial, long-term art exhibit, which opens Saturday, Nov. 23. Shoofly's respect for ranching as a way of life is clearly stated in his detailed drawings, which depict the spirit of "the cowboy way."

An autumn escape you'll fall for.

UTEP Dinner Theatre presents '9 to 5'

Review by Gerald M. Kane
For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Whenever entering the Atkinson Recital Hall on the New Mexico State University campus for a performance by Las Cruces Symphony, we always see a basket containing throat lozenges.

The reason is simple. Coughing is a distraction to many audience and orchestra members. Making lozenges available enhances musicians' performance acumen, as well as audience appreciation and enjoyment.

Because of the increasing use of devices such as cell phones and cameras with glowing LCD screens before, during and at intermissions at cultural events, announcements to turn off these devices usually precede all performances, and are often printed in the program.

Taking photos during a performance is not only an annoying intrusion on audience members' concentrations; it often detracts the performers, disrupts their focus and, in all cases, is illegal.

Why this strange theater review prelude?

I am sorry to report that one Sara Krulwich wannabe, who identified herself to me as representing the University of Texas at El Paso (UTEP) student newspaper, meandered around the UTEP Dinner Theatre unsupervised and unchastised. She literally empowered herself to flash and click away during the entire first act of the opening night performance of Dolly Parton's musical adaptation of the iconic 1980 film "9 to 5," in which Parton starred with Jane Fonda, Lily Tomlin and Dabney Coleman.

Not only did the photographer click and flash her camera, she checked the LCD screen to make sure her photo was what she wanted, sending brighter lights in the area where she was shooting. Others in the audience felt empowered to take out their own cameras and surreptitiously click away on their cell phones.

This young woman took photos of the show from dozens of places all over the theater. She went so far as to walk up to the stage, in front of audience members while actors and dancers were singing and dancing in the midst of complex visual effects on stage, point her camera directly into a performer's face and flash away. I estimate the young lady shot close to 70 photos.

During the intermission, I took it upon myself to speak with her about how she interfered with my concentration. During the second act, no further photos were taken.

The moral of this incident is simple: Because of one person's inconsiderate actions, the entire first act of this musical adaptation seemed a bit off kilter. Energy was lacking in many of the performances. Timing and choreography were dreadfully off. The cast was unable to perform to their best abilities. Once the camera flashes were gone, the pace and energy in the second act improved considerably.

We are not speaking about high drama here. Rather, this production is a nostalgic crowd pleaser for those of a certain age. If you enjoyed the film "9 to 5," you will smile broadly through this live performance.

In adapting the film to a live musical, 15 additional songs were written by the exceedingly talented Parton. The title number from the 1980 film also is expanded. Some fascinating cinematic visual effects are added to this production that enhance the storytelling.

Alas, when the final curtain went down I realized that the "flow" of the film is missing. In its place is a chopped up/slap-together movie synopsis with far too much scenery and too many scene changes.

Did that take away from the show's centerpiece, namely Dolly's country-western music that was added to the production? Not at all.

Let's take a look at the cast. Most captivating of all the performers was Doris Velez in the Lily Tomlin role of the sharp, intelligent Office Supervisor Violet. Her voice was the strongest and performance and comic timing were spot on.

Megan Hanner in the Jane Fonda role as the unskilled, recently divorced Judy was most unsettled during the first act photography fiasco. By the time she settled into her part and reached her "11 o'clock number" in the second act, "Get Out and Stay Out," her vocal chops returned and she sang and acted with strength, talent and conviction.

Annie Pennies, in the Dolly Parton role of Doralee, was a knockout, with a fine voice and amazing looks. Her delivery of some of the most humorous lines in the show was excellent.

Of the four principal performers, I was most disappointed in William Gilbert in the Dabney Coleman role as the sexist boss Franklin Hart. He just wasn't smarmy or funny enough for my taste.

Others in the cast did what was called upon them to do. Choreography was uninspired, but Patricia Ann Provencio's musical direction hit the mark.

In sum, "9 to 5" will provide you with a good old-fashioned musical that will not offend, while providing a toe-tapping evening of country western diversion.

"9 to 5" plays through Sunday, Nov. 3, at the UTEP Dinner Theatre, Union Building West, Room 209 on the UTEP campus – currently undergoing massive construction. Before driving onto the UTEP campus, visit www.onthemove.utep.edu to see the best way to get to the Dinner Theatre.

Performances are at 7 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday; 1:30 p.m. Sunday, including full dinner service; and 2:30 p.m. (with no meal served) Sundays, Oct. 27 and Nov. 3.

Full-price tickets are $45 for Fridays and Saturday evenings, $40 for weekdays and matinees and $26 for non-meal performances. Discounts are available for children, military, non-UTEP students, groups and UTEP faculty, staff, students and Alumni Association members. Tickets are sold at the door; at the UTEP Ticket Center; and through Ticketmaster outlets, www.ticketmaster.com and 800-745-3000. No children younger than 3 are admitted.

For more information, call 915-747-6060 or visit www.academics.utep.edu/udt.

A former member of the American Theatre Critics Association, he has taught "Jews on Screen" at NMSU. He is the Rabbi Emeritus of Temple Beth-El in Las Cruces.

Violet Newstead, Doralee Rhodes and Judy Berny (Doris Velez, Annie Pennies and Megan Hanner) tie up sexist boss Franklin Hart Jr. (William Gilbert) in the University of Texas at El Paso Dinner Theatre production of "9 to 5."

Blood and guts in high school 'Carrie' gets a 21st century makeover

Review by Zak Hansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

Bullying has, in the 21st century, moved from the schoolyard to cyberspace, an outlet for victimization more anonymous, more widespread and in many ways more lasting.

Once, an incident of schoolyard bullying would take place and live on only in memory and discussion. Now, these occurrences are documented, stored on cell phones in videos and text messages and then released unto the world, shared through friends' lists that span the globe, never to be erased or forgotten.

It seems each week presents a new and tragic example of not only this web-based abuse, but its terrible consequences as well. Given this zeitgeist, it seemed only a matter of time before the story of Carrie White was told once again.

In 1976, director Brian De Palma brought the character to life, based on Stephen King's first published novel.

With Sissy Spacek in the lead role, supported by a cast of well-knowns and soon-to-be stars, "Carrie" shocked audiences around the globe, establishing its title character as a true horror icon.

The premise, by now, is well-known: Carrie, a timid, awkward and abused 17-year-old, discovers she has telekinetic powers and, after being pushed to her breaking point by a cruel and uncaring student body, culminating in a near-unfathomable "prank," unleashes fiery, telekinetic hell at her senior prom.

Now, Carrie has returned to the big screen, under the direction of Kimberly Peirce ("Boys Don't Cry"), with middling results. This update has a solid, talented cast, an eye for detail and a knowing grasp on its source material. Unfortunately, it just seems unnecessary, updating a story that needed no apprising and adding almost nothing new of note.

This time around, Chloë Grace Moretz ("Kick-Ass") takes on the role of Carrie. She's a talented young actress, and gives her performance here the old college try. Unfortunately, she's stepped into some pretty big shoes that are damn hard to fill. In DePalma's film, Spacek was stunning. She was thin and pale, all freckles and bad skin and stringy hair. When she spoke, her tones were stunted and hushed, after years without any real voice. She nailed the painful, hunched and silent awkwardness of the oppressed teenage outcast and, when she finally let loose at the prom, became one of the lasting icons of horror.

Moretz, on the other hand, doesn't quite have it. For one, she's too pretty for the part. Spacek seemed to live in the role. Moretz, with her cherubic face and undeniable looks, resorts to standing pigeon-toed and hunching her shoulders, and it doesn't work. Remember in the late 1990s teen-film canon, when the "weird, ugly and arty" girl took off her glasses and undid her ponytail, revealing a stunning but unrecognized preternatural beauty? Moretz, as Carrie, has largely the same effect.

Carrie's mother, the abusive, over-zealous religious fanatic, is this time taken on by Julianne Moore and, once again, it doesn't quite fit. In Peirce's film, she's reimagined as a self-mutilator, sticking herself with sewing needles and scratching at her scabbed arms as she rants and raves about original sin.

To call this film a "re-imagining" is unfair. It less imagines and more updates, somewhat shakily, its source material. The larger narrative framework is almost entirely intact, and out of either reverence or sheer laziness, several lines of dialogue from the original are lifted verbatim. To move the story to the present, Peirce has added some superficial padding; Carrie's locker room ordeal is uploaded to the Internet, and a passing and extremely clunky reference to Tim Tebow is made. That's about it.

The real issue with this re-tread, though, comes with Carrie's discovery of her powers. This time, Carrie learns of her powers early on and begins to work them, practicing by levitating books in her room like a superhero origin story. In the fiery and violent explosion at the film's climax – much gorier this time around, of course – it's all controlled chaos, with the blood-soaked prom queen sparing those who have looked out for her and taking aim primarily at those who wronged her.

What made DePalma's picture so terrifying, alternatively, was his character's lack of control over her abilities. When Carrie got upset, power surged, lightbulbs exploded and ashtrays went flying. When she finally unleashed her telekinetic hell at the prom, it was unfocused, all-consuming rage, rather than revenge. Allies and enemies were dispatched alike, for threats and attacks both real and perceived. This is more accurate, and far more chilling: As tragedy after tragedy has shown, especially in the spate of school shootings of the 1990s, when the tormented become the tormentors, rarely are their oppressors the only ones lost in the fray.

In an age where bullying seems more prominent than ever, "Carrie" is a much-needed shot in the arm. Unfortunately, it can't quite measure up to its stellar predecessor – which is, by the way, available on Netflix.

Like watching paint dry 'Museum Hours' is plodding and pretentious

Review by Jeff Berg
For the Las Cruces Bulletin

There is an old Bill Cosby comedy routine wherein he relates getting his tonsils removed when a youngster.

As he awakes from the anesthesia, he says "dry, dry, dry, dry, dry," in relationship to how his mouth feels.

Such is the case for the somewhat plodding and slightly pretentious "art" film "Museum Hours," sort of about art and sort of about a developing, very placid relationship.

Johann (Bobby Sommer) is a guard at the revered Kunsthistorisches Art Museum in Vienna. A rather nondescript but pleasant man, he is a quiet observer among the museum's many patrons.

One day, a Canadian tourist, Anne (Mary Margaret O'Hara), begins chatting with Johann. He is also quite sensitive and notes that Anne looks of feels overwhelmed in her surroundings, as she is in Vienna to tend a distant relative who has no one else.

Johann, whose gay lover died some years earlier, becomes a mentor and tour guide of sorts, escorting her through the museum and also to other sites within the city.

A bond of sorts forms between the two, especially after he accompanies Anne to the hospital where her sister is being cared for. They share ever deepening conversations, which allows for relief from the stress of the hospital visits for Anne, while allowing Johann to interact with someone, something that probably hasn't happened in a long time, as we may note when he mentions that he spends a lot of time playing online poker.

As the movie slowly progresses, their bond increases, but ever so slightly. Johann narrates, and mixed with that is a grand tour of some of the other sites of Vienna, with special attention to the architecture of the city. For me, even though this was a lovely addition to the film, it felt awkward at times, as if the director, Jem Cohen wanted to make a blend of travelogue and light drama, not to mention the frequent breaks to view various parts of the spectacular art museum itself.

The thing that holds the film back is the oh-so-slow pacing, which rarely moves beyond a snail's crawl, even with the ending, where things take a dramatic turn for both Anne and Johann.

All in all, "Museum Hours" is pleasant and somewhat unique, but the languidness of the film makes it one that could have used a deep emotional boost of some kind.

I should be in a museum ... jeffberg@lascrucesbulletin.com

A one-in-100 kind of home

Long search leads couple to Pueblos at Alameda abode

By Beth Sitzler
Las Cruces Bulletin

The search for the perfect home can at times be long and arduous.

"What did we see, about 100 homes?" Cathy Court asked EXIT Realty Horizons Realtor Joe Arnone, who worked with her and her husband, Rudy, in 2007.

"We did see a fair amount of houses," Arnone said. "Then when we saw this beautiful home (at 5192 San Carlos Court), the birds started chirping and singing."

The couple decided to venture to the Mesilla Valley from their farm community in Missouri after seeing an ad for the area in an AARP publication.

"It's a nice, little town," Cathy Court said. "It's very easy to get around in."

While their monthlong search took them to several neighborhoods and homes, it was the Michael Floyd Spring Showcase of Homes creation that caught their eye.

"The view is what took my eye, and that no one can build behind us," Cathy Court said.

Rudy Court said what grabbed his attention was all of the circles and curved lines that filled the Southwest contemporary home.

"There is also a walk-in closet that you could get lost in," he said with a laugh.

The Courts were also drawn to the home because of its location. Sitting on a .24-acre lot in the gated Pueblos At Alameda Ranch subdivision, the home has access to a swimming pool and hiking trails in the area.

"The subdivision is cozy," Cathy Court said. "There are a lot of things going on all the time."

"There are a lot of gatherings, too," said Rudy Court, adding that many of their neighbors have settled in the area from other locations.

"The people are very diverse, they come from all over," Cathy Court said.

Located on a cul de sac, the 2,280-square-foot home features a courtyard with a path that weaves past the foliage to the front door. Inside, the entrance opens to the living room. The tray ceiling wraps around the space and flows into the surrounding rooms, including a formal dining area, kitchen and breakfast nook.

Adding their own personal touches to the home, the couple had storm doors installed – which allows air to move throughout the home, helping with their summer electric bill – and Cathy Court did her own tile work around the kiva-inspired living room fireplace and breakfast nook.

Off the living room is the master suite. "I liked the idea of a big master bedroom," Cathy Court said of the space.

In addition to the large bedroom, the suite features granite countertops lining the two sinks, a triangular bathtub and that walk-in closet Rudy Court said one could get lost in.

Another bedroom is located in the area as well as a bathroom, which has a door to the bedroom as well as the hall.

In the kitchen, a rounded bar of granite surrounds the sink, allowing the chef and guests to interact. The couple had a movable wood-top island built for the area.

"We've had as many as 22 people in here for parties," Cathy Court said of the kitchen area.

Across the way is the breakfast nook – a circular space spanning 14 feet in height.

"This is where (Rudy) is mostly," Cathy Court said of the breakfast nook.

Down a hall, past the laundry room, near the two-car garage is another bedroom, used as an at-home office. The couple had the carpet in the room removed and installed hardwood floors. They chose a darker wood to match the wood work found throughout the abode – from the baseboards to the solid wood doors.

While Rudy Court can be found mostly in the round breakfast nook, his other favorite area of the home is the back porch.

"We really like the patio," he said. "We can watch the mountains change colors at night."

Tile covers the patio, making it easier to clean, Cathy Court said. A portion of the area was enclosed with screen to protect residents from the elements. From there, they can enjoy the yard – an area with a mixed landscape of rock, bushes and potted plants.

Winged creature has a 'bat' rap

Don't let this good luck charm's scary reputation fool you

Scott Svenheim
ACE Pest Detective

In honor of Halloween, "Be careful where you walk tonight, take care if you see bats in flight, lest sleepless souls give you a fright or vampires on your blood delight."

Innocent little bats take on a dark and dangerous reputation this time of year that's every bit as evil as the reputation of witches, goblins or ghouls.

The big question is, "Why?" Our culture seems to acknowledge only the vampire bat and associate it with the legendary immortals that feed and thrive on human blood. It's just a "bat" rap. In reality, there are more than 900 species, with most of them actually helping to rid a more common blood-sucker – the mosquito.

Flying foxes are among the group of bats that find nourishment in fruits and flowers. A few other bat types eat frogs, birds and fish. In general, most bats dine on insects, a trait that gets two thumbs up from gardeners, who also value bat guano for making soil fertile.

These social creatures are the only mammal that can fly, living in large colonies reaching ages of up to 30 years, depending on the species. Bats range in size from tiny, with a forearm under an inch, to wingspans of up to 5 feet, according to the Smithsonian Institution. Baby bats live on their mother's milk and learn to fly as early as 3 weeks old.

Bats rely on their sense of hearing and a sonar-like system to communicate with one another. Contrary to popular belief, they are not typically blind. Part of the bat's mystery may be its haunts – caves and other dark places where it can rest in peace by day, hanging upside down, and then make its nocturnal rounds.

Bats are also known to live in attics, barns, trees and rock crevices. They can carry diseases such as rabies – although much more rarely than our mass imagination would have you believe – and should be handled with care.

While bats can be found around the world,

The bat has a frightful reputation during the Halloween holiday, however, the winged creature helps keep the mosquito population down.

in the U.S., they are most commonly found in the Southwest. Vampire bats primarily live in Central and South America, and their blood sources include cows, horses and deer, rarely humans.

The bat may occupy an under-worldly place in our culture, but in others, such as China, these winged mammals represent happiness and good luck. With that said, may the bat guide you to a happy Halloween and give you much luck in collecting many treats.

Bringing in house plants

Do so before cold hits

Gary Guzman
Gardening Guru

Finally we have a nice chill in the air after sunset.

Fall seems to be the most comfortable time of year for the majority. This is, however, a signal that we need to begin to bring our summer patio or house plants inside before a frost.

There are some items one should consider before bringing in tropicals. Insects have a way of hitching a ride into your home via the patio plant. The insects will range from leaf eating or stem sucking to soil dwellers. Some may be obvious and others are masters at camouflage and will definitely make their way in unnoticed.

Treat your plants before you bring them inside. There are various products from which to choose, ranging from organic sprays to systemic granules. Make sure your plants are watered first so that they do not "stress out" if the soil is dry. In most instances, it is best to use the least toxic product you can find.

Be prepared, however, to use this again even after your initial treatment, as most of the least toxic products have very little or no residual control. In other words, they may only work on contact, and, if some insects are hiding underneath the soil or in a crowded area of leaves, they will continue to thrive and possibly multiply.

More potent insecticides will typically require only one application and should be used outdoors only. Systemic granules are some of the easier products to use – just apply over the top of the soil and water in – and will typically have a control time of several months. The presence of the systemic granules and pos screens will also help discourage soil dwellers. Use caution if you have pets that may drink water from overfilled containers or saucers, as there may be chemical residual.

Choose the brightest area in your home when bringing in your "greens," as they have been acclimated to the outdoor air and sunshine. Try to keep them away from dry heating drafts. Remember, most plants are comfortable where you are, except for the darkest areas of your home. If your plants look pale and tired, you may want to fertilize one last time before spring. Keep in mind when choosing a fertilizer that plants with solid yellow leaves typically need nitrogen and yellow leaves with green veins may need iron.

Replacing the soil or repotting may not be necessary unless your soil is completely worn, infested or if your plants just are not thriving. Most will not need new soil or larger pots until the days begin to get longer instead of shorter. When selecting a soil try to use the lightest mix possible. This allows for maximum aeration, quickest root growth and you will be less likely to over water your oxygen-producing friend.

We normally get our first frost sometime in between Halloween and Thanksgiving, so don't get left out in the cold.

Frightfully tasty Halloween treats

Celebrate spooky holiday with a bit of spice

Sunny Conley
Chile Knights

*"When witches go riding, and black cats are seen,
The moon laughs and whispers, 'tis near Halloween."*
—19th century postcard

Some souls will celebrate Halloween the weekend of Oct. 25-27; others will wait until the actual date on the Thursday, Oct. 31. Whichever you choose, be prepared to ward off goblins, wicked witches, bloodcurdling sounds and "things that go bump in the night" with tasty treats not tempting tricks.

A favorite sweet among readers of Chile Knights is the recipe for ha-BOO-nero pumpkin butterscotch nut cookies whose secret ingredient is habanero powder. Just a pinch or two of the magical potion adds an unforgettable smoky citrus flavor.

This year, I made monster-sized cookies and served them smeared with pumpkin spiced cream cheese sprinkled with crushed candy corn. A paralyzing phenomenon!

I think you'll also go for these other chilling recipes: graveyard goop, tainted tacos, screeching seeds and beastly brownies. Each spook-licious!

Ha-BOO-nero Pumpkin Butterscotch Nut Cookies

1 (15-ounce) can pumpkin
1/2 cup margarine or butter, softened
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 cup pecans, chopped
1 egg
2 cups unsifted flour
1 teaspoon soda

1 teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon cinnamon (I use fresh ground)
1/2 teaspoon habanero powder
1 (12-ounce) package butterscotch morsels or semi-sweet chocolate chips

Mix all ingredients in order given; drop by spoonfuls onto greased cookie sheet. For larger cookies use a small-medium ice cream scoop. Bake in 375 degree oven for about 15 minutes or until lightly brown. Optional: Frost the cookies with your favorite flavor or at serving time, slather on pumpkin spiced cream cheese. Makes about 4 dozen.

Graveyard Goop

1 tablespoon Nutella or other chocolate nut butter
1/2 teaspoon pumpkin pie spice
1/2 teaspoon cayenne pepper or for a smoky richer flavor, substitute ancho powder
Sugar to taste (optional)

Combine all ingredients in a small dish and blend well together. Serve with celery, apple wedges or mini rice cakes. Makes 1 serving.

Tainted Tacos

All the flavors you'd expect from a taco, but served sandwiched into a hot biscuit.

1 pound ground beef, browned and drained well
1 (1.25-ounce) hot and spicy Ortega taco seasoning packet
1 (16-ounce) can fat free refried beans
1/4 teaspoon cumin
1 tomato, diced and seeded (use a tomato that isn't too ripe)
Cheddar cheese, shredded
2 refrigerated canned biscuits (8 per can) such as Pillsbury (regular-sized, not jumbo or Texas sized)

Make taco ground beef per packet directions. Set aside. Pre-heat oven to 400 degrees. Spray a baking sheet pan. Add cumin to refried beans and adjust for seasoning per taste, stir well. Add 1/4 teaspoon onion powder to tomatoes and gently mix together. Open biscuits and roll to thin circle. Put 1 teaspoon of beans in middle of biscuit and flatten slightly with the back of a spoon. Top with 2 to 3 pieces of tomato, 1 teaspoon cheese and 1 tablespoon taco beef. Pull up sides and close "roll." Place on greased sheet pan, seam side down. Place each biscuit 1/2-inch apart. Spray with cooking spray and cook until golden browned, 8 to 10 minutes. Makes 16 biscuits.

Screeching Seeds

1 egg white
1/4 cup sugar
1/2 teaspoon cayenne pepper
Scant 1/2 teaspoon fine grained sea salt
1 cup fresh pumpkin seeds

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. In a medium-sized bowl, whisk together the egg white, sugar, cayenne pepper and salt. Add the pumpkin seeds and toss well. Drain off any excess egg white (using a strainer) and place seeds in a single layer across a baking sheet. Bake for about 12 minutes or until seeds are golden. Sprinkle with a bit more sugar and cayenne pepper when they come out of the oven. Taste and season with more salt if desired. Makes 1 cup.

Beastly Brownies

These brownies are whipped up with semi-sweet chocolate, pumpkin and the full-bodied, smoky flavor of ancho powder.

Pumpkin batter:
1 tablespoon unsalted butter, softened
3 ounces cream cheese, softened
1/2 cup granulated white sugar
1 large egg
1/3 cup canned unsweetened pumpkin puree
1 teaspoon pure vanilla extract
1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon ground ginger
1 teaspoon ancho powder
1 tablespoon flour

In a small bowl, using an electric mixer, beat butter with cream cheese until smooth. Beat in sugar, scraping bowl occasionally. Beat in egg and then add pumpkin purée, vanilla, cinnamon and ginger. Stir in flour.

Chocolate batter:
5 1/2 ounces semisweet-chocolate, finely chopped
1 1/4 sticks unsalted butter, cut into 1-inch pieces
4 large eggs, at room temperature
1 1/2 cups granulated white sugar
1 teaspoon pure vanilla extract
1/4 teaspoon salt
1 1/3 cups all-purpose flour

Combine semisweet chocolate and butter in a medium bowl. Set bowl over saucepan with 1-inch of simmering water and stir occasionally until melted. Or, in a microwavable bowl, microwave on low, a few seconds at a time, until melted. Remove from heat.

In a separate bowl, combine eggs with sugar, vanilla and salt. Beat at low speed until light and fluffy, about 4 minutes. Using a large rubber spatula, fold in melted chocolate. Sift flour over the batter and fold it in just until combined.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Lightly butter 13-by-9-inch baking dish.

Spread chocolate batter evenly in prepared pan. Using a tablespoon, drop dollops of the pumpkin batter all over the top. Using the back of a butter knife, swirl the pumpkin batter slightly into the chocolate.

Bake for 30 to 40 minutes. Check for doneness at 30 minutes. Insert a toothpick into center. If they're done, the toothpick should come out clean. Let brownies cool completely before cutting. Makes 24 brownies. (Recipe adapted from Food and Wine magazine.)

Getting to know: La Sala de Josefina's Old World charm meets modern functionality

Josefina's courtyard reveals another secret

By David Salcido
Las Cruces Bulletin

Whether you are a native to the area or an infrequent visitor, chances are pretty good you already know history is alive and well in the picturesque town of La Mesilla.

Everywhere one turns, a plaque or sign announces some site of historic significance. Behind every colorful door is a story dating back centuries.

Josefina's Old Gate is just such a place. Built north of the plaza in the 1850s as one of the original homesites of the area, Josefina's has become a modern-day success story. Transformed into a symbol of Southwestern hospitality decades ago by the eponymous Josefina Gamboa Biel, the tradition continues to this day under the ownership of her daughter Kathleen Foreman and her husband Bob Hamilton.

On any given evening, one can find native Mesilleros mingling with visitors from all over the world on Josefina's delightful tiled patio – sharing a glass of wine and listening to the best live music from local musicians. Those in the know take advantage of Josefina's casita or suites for luxurious evenings in a unique inn setting.

But there's a lot more to Josefina's than first-class comfort, dining and music. Because, like any great historic landmark, Josefina's holds a secret and that secret is about to become public knowledge.

"We're calling it La Sala, which I think speaks for itself," Foreman said.

She refers to the building directly north of Josefina's Café, which until about five years ago was a private home. Purchased from the owner, Foreman and Hamilton converted it into an antique store. But when Hamilton retired in January, he realized business was slow in the sleepy little town known more for gawking tourists than discerning antiquarians.

"We realized that we could probably use the building for something a bit more functional," Foreman said. "So, we took everything out except the antiques and turned it into what we feel will be a nice rental venue."

The result is a sumptuously appointed gathering place that would make Josefina proud. A lovely little foyer opens into a great room with brick floors, a wood burning fireplace and the original latilla and viga ceiling. Opulent drapes and elegant tablecloths, plush chairs and couches and carefully staged conversation nooks give the room a comfortable and inviting air for parties of 10 to 50. A flat-screen television hangs high above a mantel, discreetly offering high tech services among the native charms.

To the left of the great room is the beautifully tiled kitchen – a staging place for wine tastings or small party catering. This, in turn, opens up to a small sitting room with a fireplace – as magnificently appointed as the great room – which in turn wraps back around to that area.

Las Cruces Bulletin photos by David Salcido

Classic comfort awaits those who avail themselves of La Sala's many amenities.

Further back, the great room opens up into a green room area, dense with lush vegetation, with secluded seating. It is here that the two suites are located, behind colorful doors, each just as lovingly appointed as the rooms that came before them.

"If you want to use the place for a wedding and you want the rooms, we'll include them," Foreman said. "If you want to do a private party and the hosts want to stay here, they're welcome to do so. We can put a bar in here, there are twinkly lights at night, the rooms are beautiful when you open them up at night and they can rent the whole facility. We'll have our staff here to manage it all."

In fact, Foreman sees this dwelling as a full-service facility, perfect for meetings, business retreats, book clubs or dinner parties. Not a restaurant, but a "private, catered inn facility with cocktails and hors d'oeuvres." Josefina's is licensed to serve beer and wine, and though the café next door can provide consumables for smaller parties, Foreman also contracts with Louis Samaniego from A Catered Affair for larger groups.

La Sala de Josefina's will be open for business in early November. Anyone interested in renting the facility are invited to call Foreman at the café. She said she will be more than happy to give a tour, then help plan that special occasion in one of the best kept secrets of the Mesilla Valley.

"I'm so excited about this new incarnation," Foreman said. "It's a home setting that is warm and inviting. It's comfortably entertaining. It's local. It's authentic. We try to keep that original ambience and historic preservation. I'm very proud of the work we've done here. I'm like a mother watching her child grow up. Look what it turned into."

Fright night comes to Las Cruces

Mark Perry constructs a haunted house sure to terrify

By Hugh Osteen
Las Cruces Bulletin

When it comes to Halloween, Mark Perry pulls out all of the stops. For the fifth year, he has transformed his front yard into a haunted house along with a haunted graveyard, returning for its 14th year.

The idea isn't a new one for Las Cruces Perry, as he said his father was setting up a haunted graveyard while he was in high school.

"I fell in love with it then," he said. "It became my Christmas."

After seeing this, he was encouraged to continue the tradition.

"I had a house with a porch entrance on each end, and that's kind of how the haunted house got started," he said. "That was our original haunted house."

The first year was just a pass through. Since then, the scene has grown, not only in structure, but also content.

Perry said he is constantly upgrading and looking for new props to use for the Undead Graveyard and Haunted House. Last year, the house was small. This year, the engineer erected additional rooms out of old trampolines and poles to expand. New features this year include a full bathroom and kitchen.

He said he loves finding anything he can to make the haunted house as authentic and real as possible. He was able to get supplies used and cheap, he said.

"They don't need to be functioning, they just need to enhance the scene."

Acting as a tour guide, Perry uses his friends and colleagues as ghosts, ghouls and zombies to enhance the show.

Building the scene isn't easy.

"It takes me about three weeks to get everything (from last year) out of storage and set up," Perry said.

"The construction this year took us about a month and a half to do, working weekends and evenings. I usually start the process in August."

He's not working alone, as his son, brother-in-law and friends are quick to help make this frightening scene a reality for the people of Las Cruces.

The haunted house will be open Friday and Saturday Oct. 25-26, as well as Halloween night, Thursday Oct. 31, at 1407 Evelyn St.

"If I get enough requests," Perry said, "I'll open it up the night after Halloween as well."

The haunted house is free, but donations are accepted. It's not an inexpensive task to keep the haunted house up to date. Perry said he strives every year to make it scarier

"Last year, we had kids from 4 years old come in," he said. "We had grandmothers, grandfathers. We have teenagers coming in. Most of the teenagers come in thinking I can't scare them, and usually I'm scaring them the most."

With the issue of safety coming up around the time of Halloween, Perry said this is a safe environment where parents can bring kids and enjoy a good scare without having to drive to El Paso and pay for a haunted house of the same caliber.

"It's just something I like doing for the community," he said. "It's a holiday, but not one where you get off from work. I give everyone candy. If people don't want to go through the haunted house, they can still get candy."

Oh no, not the organized religion bit again

Spiritual pathway offers markers, guidelines and clear guidance

Gabriel Rochelle
Tales from the Cassock

Occasionally, I have to remind people who say, "I don't believe in organized religion" that there may be religion without organization, but in the history of the world, every form of spiritual development and exploration worth its salt became organized. There is a good reason.

People clustered around those recipients of revelations or inaugurators of spiritual movements because they saw in them truth that they could not ferret out for themselves. Whether or not the followers of those leaders were able to attain the spiritual heights is a different story. We see this in history. On occasion, these mimickers ended up making degenerate attempts to force people to accept their truths. Oh no, as Monty Python would say, not the Spanish Inquisition! But that's not the whole story.

There were also those who mined the resources they were given and in fact drove the insights they received much deeper. Would this not be a worthy project? This is what we see with movements such as the Desert Fathers and Mothers in early Christianity. These people took the initial impetus of their founder's faith and discovered or invented ways to enable ordinary people to attain spiritual wholeness. They created pathways, in other words. They did it in an organized fashion. They systematized without creating a "system"; they organized without creating an institution. This, too, occurred across history, and it seems to me a good thing.

It is my opinion, of course, that people dislike "organized religion" because there are dues to pay, and not many people are willing to pay them. When I say that, I'm not thinking of money. I am thinking of spiritual struggles you endure in order to take the pathway that leads to the burning center of your faith. I am thinking of the fact that you have to achieve a baseline of morality before you can advance to the height of spirituality.

You have to agree that the universe requires certain behaviors: not stealing, not bearing false witness, not committing murder, not engaging in idolatry or adultery (they are related) and so forth. Only when you start with these disciplines can you proceed on the path. But many people balk at these markers on the way, and thus bail out on "organized religion," as they call it.

I grant that Jesus never thought he would become the CEO of a large corporation, but he was not without a pathway. As a faithful Jew, he knew that the path led from the commandments to a deeper reality, and we have inherited this awareness and action.

In our Orthodox Christian tradition, a one-way, two-lane highway leads into the heart of the faith. The lanes proceed together as the sacramental life and the ascetic disciplines. These lanes lead you into life with God through different but complementary ways of participation.

Prayer, fasting, charity and observance of the commandments: These are the paving on the ascetic lane. Baptism, anointing in the spirit, participation on the Lord's Supper and confession are the paving on the sacramental lane. They belong together, and we have no other road. These are not gimmicks or techniques; they are the way of faith. We have no spectacular methods beyond this; there is no esoteric spirituality, magic sign or secret word. All we can offer is this hard uphill pathway.

You may not want "organized religion," but if you are looking for a spiritual pathway it has to have markers, guidelines and clear guidance.

That's what the ascetic path is all about. The path is worth embracing, and you can only do it through some form of organization.

Fr. Gabriel Rochelle is pastor of St. Anthony of the Desert Orthodox Mission and professor of Biblical studies at St. Sophia Orthodox Seminary, South Bound Brook, N.J. For more information, visit www.stanthonylc.org.

All hail the good kale

Laura Smart
Health Smart

Spinach, broccoli, brussel sprouts, swiss chard and kale are the current darlings of the healthy vegetable world.

Kale, however, has become the most requested cruciferous vegetable for new recipe ideas. Green is gold when it comes to choosing a healthy side dish, and if you're a foodie and like to experience new flavors, I highly recommend diving in to the cruciferous world. Perhaps you may want to switch to a plant-based diet or want to change your diet to a more nutritious one – green is the way to go.

During our annual visit to Ocean Isle Beach, N.C., we selected fresh seafood from a local fish vendor. The fresh tuna and grouper were the entrées. A new kale and brussel sprout salad was added and was met with rave reviews by nine out of 10 guests.

One benefit of cruciferous vegetables is to deter the recurrence of prostate cancer. Men who are active and are not overweight have a lower risk of prostate cancer.

Where most women speak openly about breast cancer, men are more likely to remain silent if they've been diagnosed with prostate cancer.

There are lots of lifestyle behaviors that can be preventive if followed.

Obesity is the No. 1 health factor that contributes to lethal prostate cancer.

Stop smoking now if you care about living to see your children and grandchildren during their adult years.

Exercise is a must, at a minimum three times a week for 20 minutes at a time.

And then there's cruciferous vegetables.

"Men who consumed a high amount of cruciferous vegetables after diagnosis had a reduced risk of having their disease recur," said Erin Richman of the University of California, San Francisco, lead author of the Cancer of the Prostate Strategic Urologic Research Endeavor study.

If you want to learn more about nutrition on a monthly basis, I recommend subscribing to Nutrition Action Health letter at www.cspinet.org.

Oh, and if you want the recipe for the kale and brussel sprout salad from the beach, email me.

Go green and stay clean!

Halloween-themed self-defense course teaches confidence

By Rachel Christiansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

Would you know how to stop someone from attacking, robbing or otherwise making you a victim?

Almost 5,000 violent criminal acts were committed in Las Cruces in 2011, according to the most recent available statistics from the Las Cruces Police Department.

These crimes include homicide, forcible rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, larceny, auto theft and arson.

You may think the answer is "yes" if you are in good physical shape or have taken some sort of martial arts instruction.

The truth is, according to self-defense instructor Marcy Shoberg, many unknowns can lead to surprise and vulnerability, potentially catching someone off guard and ill prepared.

"Self-defense is about recognizing (danger) and staying out of it," Shoberg said. "If you have to hit somebody in self defense, they will have started the action, so you were taken by surprise and then you have to catch up from there."

Shoberg, a martial arts instructor for the last 30 years, said several years ago she began realizing the stark difference between martial arts and self-defense, and began to teach the two separately.

"If you are in danger from someone, they are not going to be similarly matched to you and there's no referee," Shoberg said.

In an effort to help Las Cruces avoid becoming a victim, Shoberg and her colleagues began teaching scenario-based self-defense training courses.

Modeled after a nationally recognized program known as Fear Adrenal Stress Training (FEAR) Defense, the program teaches students to use their brain, voice and body to protect themselves if they are in danger from another person.

Shoberg's next defense-based training seminars will be in line with the Halloween season, and Zombie Defense will teach all levels of students, age 6 and older, how to defend themselves as they traverse through a haunted house.

The two-hour seminar will begin with a 30-minute training time where the student learns how to verbally fend off an attack before it happens.

"Using the voice is a big thing that a lot of people don't think about for self-defense," Shoberg said. "We were all born with a voice that can be used to discourage an attacker or draw attention to the situation."

Las Cruces Self Defense instructor Marcy Shoberg practices basic moves on Joseph Perea Thursday, Oct. 17. Shoberg and Perea will teach a two-hour Zombie Defense seminar Halloween weekend, Oct. 31-Nov. 2, that uses adrenaline-based tactics for students of all levels to learn how to fend off an attack.

Domestic violence is a crime

Awareness month brings light to victim struggles and rights

La Casa employees gave everyone a purple balloon for the 2011 candlelight vigil held in remembrance of former La Casa Executive Director Gina Orona-Ruiz.

By Rachel Christiansen
Las Cruces Bulletin

The statistics about domestic violence are dismal: One in four women will be affected in their lifetime, according to the American Medical Association (AMA).

AMA defines domestic violence as a pattern of behavior that establishes power and control over another person through fear and intimidation, often including the threat of violence.

October is Domestic Violence Awareness month, and for Theresa Armendariz, executive director of La Casa Inc., that means public awareness that domestic violence is a crime, and victims of domestic violence are victims of a crime just like any other.

"One big thing in our community, and in general, is a lot of victim blaming," Armendariz said. "There are a lot of questions of why a victim is a victim rather than why an abuser is an abuser."

Questions raised that blame the victim for the abuse is part of the reason anger and confusion is a common emotion among those seeking help at La Casa, which provides shelter, counseling and a range of comprehensive services for those affected by domestic violence.

"We have services for all three populations that are involved in domestic violence – the victims, child witnesses and the perpetrators of domestic violence," Armendariz said.

Most people are aware of the emergency shelter La Casa provides, but are less knowledgeable of how much the staff of 55 provides, which ranges from transitional housing, parenting education and civil legal services, to the smaller bits of help that include bus or taxi fares.

See Violence on page C25

All of these services require funding, of which La Casa has seen less and less from the state and federal governments over the last few years.

In fact, in 2013, Armendariz said La Casa received $330,000 less from the state than in 2009, and almost $39,000 less from the federal government since last year.

"We also have a public awareness department that goes out and does presentations for the whole community," Armendariz said. "Last year, we did 259 presentations that reached over 4,000 people."

The reach is much farther than that for the people who better their lives with La Casa's help.

Because recovery from traumatic situations takes time, the emergency shelter provides respite for 90 days, which is a small snapshot of time for rebuilding someone's life, Armendariz said.

"You have to figure out where you're going to live, how you're going to work and then rebuild your social skills, friendships and relationships that you were isolated from before," she said.

"That's a lot of work to go into that 90 days, all while you're in crisis and just trying to wake up in the morning."

But the rewards are eventually apparent, she said, when victims show recovery by going back to school, getting jobs and staying away from abusive relationships through the years.

La Casa will host a community appreciation luncheon at noon Friday, Oct. 25, at St. Paul's United Methodist Church, 225 W. Griggs Ave.

There will also be a candlelight vigil held at 6 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 29, at Young Park, 1905 E. Nevada Ave., to honor those who have fallen due to domestic violence.

Tae Kwan Do student since age 11, and over the past few years also involved in teaching and learning self defense with Shoberg.

"I was bullied at a young age, so I didn't really have friends," Perea said.

"I always wanted to leave school, I used to make excuses to go to the nurse and go home. When I learned self defense, it gave me more confidence and I started getting friends."

Perea will also be an instructor during the Zombie Defense seminar, only he will be masked in what is known as a predator suit – an encompassing suit of armor that allows for blows to be absorbed by the suit, not the wearer.

During the regular self-defense course, instructors cover topics such as shutting down bullies, preventing abduction, defending against surprise grabs, defense while seated, protecting others, defense against weapons and dogs, at an ATM machine, in a bedroom or being knocked to the ground.

"They learn not just to do moves you could use in self defense, but moves to remember while they're feeling an adrenaline rush," Shoberg said.

"That's what makes them able to think of those moves when they're surprised or in danger and realize they're going to have to hit somebody."

MMC HealthPlex installs additional imaging equipment

Memorial Medical Center is pleased to announce an additional service at their HealthPlex location, 2735 Northrise Drive. A 64-Slice Computed Tomography (CT) Scanner is now available at the HealthPlex providing advanced imaging service to the fastest growing area in Las Cruces.

Using X-ray technology, CT scans create high quality images of the body. This allows physicians to see the heart, blood vessels and other vital organs in detail, leading to the diagnoses and treatment of various conditions. The actual CT scan time can take less than 30 seconds, creating a faster and more patient-friendly experience.

At the HealthPlex, patients can expect customer-oriented service and convenience in a comfortable setting. The HealthPlex is a department of the hospital so the same level of care is available as MMC. The HealthPlex accepts any physician's order for a CT scan. For more information or to schedule a CT Scan at the HealthPlex, call 521-5270.

Sierra named to national health committee

Doña Ana County Health and Human Services Department Director C. Silvia Sierra has been appointed to the Health Steering Committee of the National Association of Counties.

The announcement of Sierra's appointment was made last week by NACo President Linda Langston.

The 73-member NACo Health Steering Committee considers matters pertaining to health-care delivery and financing including indigent care, health care for the uninsured, Medicaid, Medicare, long-term care, local public-health programs, mental health, substance abuse and developmental disabilities.

"I am very proud of this appointment and eager to serve," Sierra said. "Doña Ana County has been a role model for counties whose leaders take seriously their responsibility to the well-being of their constituents."

"That ongoing experience will greatly assist me as I take border health concerns to the national level as a member of this important steering committee."

For more information on the no-charge flu shot clinic, call the Anthony Public Health Office at 882-5858.

Boys & Girls Club receives van

The Boys & Girls Club of Las Cruces (BGCLC) received a generous donation of a 12-passenger van from Tresco Inc. This van is one of three that have been donated to BGCLC by Tresco.

"Having the ability to transport children from school to the club each day allows us to serve those children that may not otherwise have a way to get to the club," said Ashley Echavarria, chief professional officer. "We are incredibly grateful to Tresco for being so giving and turning over their vans to us."

BGCLC currently transports children from 18 different schools in Las Cruces to their Downtown clubhouse on Las Cruces Avenue. Vans are also used regularly for field trips and events. The donations from Tresco have allowed BGCLC to avoid the need to purchase new vans over the last several years.

Serving youth ages 5-18, the club provides a safe environment for youth to learn and grow; ongoing relationships with caring, adult professionals; life-enhancing programs and character development experiences; and hope and opportunity. For more information about the Boys & Girls Club, please call 526-1519 or visit www.bgclclascruces.org.

Scaring up funds for the Save-a-Kitten Project

ACTion Programs for Animals (APA) and the Doña Ana Pets Alive! (DAPA!) campaign was invited to run a concession stand at the House of Horrors from 7:30 to 11 p.m. Friday, Oct. 25, Saturday, Oct. 26 and Thursday, Oct. 31.

This unique haunted house is hosted by the Anderson family at 1915 Burke Road. The family also volunteers with APA at the pet food bank and regularly fosters dogs for the DAPA! campaign, which has rescued more than 600 dogs and cats from the municipal shelter since May 2012.

APA/DAPA! also partnered with the Zero in 7 Pet Coalition's Tabby Team and businesses such as Better Life Pet Foods, Enchanted Gardens and Calista's Animal Hospital for the Save-a-Kitten project this year. Since April, APA/DAPA! has rescued more than 200 kittens, most of which came from the animal shelter. Saving that many kittens is both rewarding and expensive, so the organization is grateful for donations and fundraising assistance to help support the project.

For more information, contact APA at 644-0505, mail@apalascruces.org, or visit www.actionprogramsforanimals.org.

Pits for Peace walk scheduled

The second annual Pits for Peace walk is scheduled from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 26, at Young Park, 1905 E. Nevada Ave.

The walk benefits the ACTion Programs for Animal (APA)'s direct rescue work specifically in honor of Pit Bull Awareness Month in October. Since the beginning of 2012, APA has rescued more than 525 animals, many of which were pitbulls. These dogs were successfully adopted into new homes because of being treated no differently than other dogs in the adoption system.

APA is still in need of support, including sponsorship, raffle item donation or vendor booth support from the second annual walk.

For more information, contact 644-0505 or www.actionprogramsforanimals.org, or mail@apalascruces.org.

Critter Christmas is coming

Mark your calendars for the biggest and best animal-welfare fundraiser in Las Cruces. A Critter Christmas is scheduled from 6 to 10 p.m. Thursday, Dec. 12, at the Las Cruces Convention Center, 680 E. University Ave, and Fido is welcome.

Individuals and businesses can help by sponsoring, buying an advertisement in the program, buying a ticket or full table for friends, family and employees or donating items for the live and/or silent auction.

Now entering its fourth year, A Critter Christmas features a full slate of entertainment, from the New Mexico State University DanceSport team to the Doo-Wop Band, best-dressed dog contest, agility demonstrations, live and silent auctions and much more. Well-behaved, leashed dogs are welcome. There will be no-host bars and abundant food stations for people, as well as a special treat buffet for the dogs, sponsored by Better Life Pet Foods.

This gala event benefits not one, but three important animal welfare organizations – the Animal Services Center of the Mesilla Valley, Doña Ana County Humane Society and the Spay and Neuter Action Program.

Tickets are $50, or two for $90, available at www.holdmyticket.com/event/150413.

For more information, contact Kathy Lawitz at 642-2648 or dachslc@hotmail.com.

Shelter needs volunteers for offsite adoptions

The Animal Services Center of the Mesilla Valley is looking for volunteers to assist with offsite adoption events this weekend, and throughout the rest of the year.

Anyone interested will need to receive a brief training from shelter staff.

The move towards a zero euthanasia rate has put a demand on more offsite adoption locations, such as the weekly Las Cruces Farmers & Crafts Market and other seasonal events such as this weekend's adoption event at a gun show hosted at the Las Cruces Convention Center.

"We're proud of the fact that through these events, the shelter has been successful in dropping the euthanasia rate by 10 percent under last year's numbers," said shelter Executive Director Dr. Beth Vesco-Mock. "But we can't do it without the generosity of volunteers. Through their donation of time, we are able get more animals exposed to potential forever homes."

The shelter also plans to host two additional offsite adoption events from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 26, at the Pits for Peace event, at Young Park, 1905 E. Nevada Ave. Anyone seeking additional information or to schedule volunteer training can call the Animal Services Center of the Mesilla Valley at 382-0018.
