UP Aerospace NASA flight a success

By Todd G. Dickson

Flight conditions Tuesday, Nov. 12, proved to be perfect for UP Aerospace's eighth launch into suborbital space from Spaceport America.

The sounding rocket filled with student experiments had been delayed by a month, but the 15-minute flight turned out to be the second highest for UP Aerospace, reaching 72.2 miles, said David Wilson, spokesman for Spaceport America.

Aboard the rocket flight bought by National Aeronautics Space Administration (NASA) were payloads for New Mexico State University and the New Mexico Institute of Mining and Technology, as well as NASA, Spain's Barcelona Tech with the University of Alabama, the Federal Aviation Administration, the Department of Defense with Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University and a satellite telephone company. Famed hunter spent final days here

At the turn of the 20th cenhunter-conservationist "Uncle Jimmy" Owens in-James spired the likes of President Teddy Roosevelt and Western novelist Zane Grey, but his final days were spent near Las Cruces.

The man who has a popular trail along the north rim of the Grand Canyon, which is now named after him, was buried in the Las Cruces Masonic Cemetery with a simple marker - until now.

At 11 a.m. Saturday, Nov. 16, a small group of history buffs will dedicate a new gravestone for Owens in the cemetery located a 760 S. Compress Road.

Owens may not be that well known locally, but he was legendary in Arizona, said Carole Luke of Las Cruces. He was once so famous that a character in the Disney movie "Brighty of the Grand Canyon" was based on him,

MPO transportation open houses continue in county

Input sought on area long-range planning

Bulletin Staff Report

The Mesilla Valley Metropolitan Planning Organization (MPO) is continuing a series of transportation-planning open house events to gather public input regarding the future of the transportation system in the Mesilla Valley.

The first MPO open house was held at the East Mesa Recreation Center Tuesday, Nov. 12.

Tom Murphy, a planner with the MPO, said the open houses show a series of different scenarios and plans for everything from roads to public transportation for rural areas of the county.

Paralleling the county's Vision 2040 long-range plan, the MPO has come up with its own Transportation 2040 plan. In researching trends, Murphy said the MPO found people are driving less, emphasizing the need for more bike paths, public transportation and walkable neighborhoods.

The MPO is a multi-jurisdictional agency responsible for transportation planning in Las Cruces, Mesilla and central Doña Ana County. Future meetings are:

- 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 16, Thomas Branigan Memorial Library, 200 E. Picacho Ave.
- 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Tuesday, Nov. 19, Del Cerro Community Center, 180 La Fe Ave., Mesquite, N.M.
- 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 21, Doña Ana Community Center, 5745 Ledesma Drive, Las Cruces
- 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, Nov. 22, Town of Mesilla Board Room, 2231 Avenida De Mesilla.

For more information contact MPO staff at 528-3225, by email to mpo@las-cruces.org or visit http://mvmpo.las-cruces.org.

The Mesilla Valley MPO will make reasonable accommodation for any qualified individual who wishes to attend public meetings. Notify the Mesilla Valley MPO at least 48 hours before the meeting by calling 528-3043 (voice) or 528-3016 (TTY).

Memorial set for former NMSU engineering dean

Joseph Genin never stopped teaching

A memorial reception will be held for the late Joseph Genin from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 21, at the Jett Hall Lobby on the New Mexico State University Las Cruces campus. All are welcome to attend.

Genin served as the dean of the College of Engineering at NMSU from 1981 until 1985. After leaving the office of dean, he focused on his lifelong interests of teaching and research. He became a professor of engineering. Genin taught courses in mechanics and conducted research in dynamic stability and fluid/structure interactions. He never retired from NMSU and continued to teach and do research until his passing in May. He was 82 years old.

Genin served as a member of the New Mexico Governor's Economic Development Board, was a longtime consultant at Los Alamos National Laboratory and was the founding director of NMSU's Optics and Material Sciences Lab.

He was born in Norwalk, Conn., but grew up in New York. He graduated from Long Island High School, obtained a degree at the City College of New York, and then worked in New York City as a structural engineer.

Drafted during the Korean War, Genin served in France and designed civil engineering structures during his time in the Army. Following his Army career, Genin moved to Tucson, Ariz., where he set up a civil engineering firm and worked on a broad range of projects, including renovation of the city's historic downtown district. He also received his master's degree from the University of Arizona.

Genin then completed his doctoral work at the University of Minnesota. He worked for General Dynamics on aircraft and then joined Purdue University's faculty in the Engineering Sciences Department, which he later chaired. Genin achieved many other things, including working as the director for > the Advanced Transportation Center and publishing texts that are still used today.

A lifelong baseball enthusiast, Genin played during his time in the Army, and coached several teams during his career.

He is survived by his wife of 48 years, Grace-Ann; his sons, Kent, Guy and Hugh; and five grandchildren.

His family has established a scholarship at NMSU, called the Joseph and Grace Ann Genin Outstanding Mechanical Engineer Scholarship, which will be awarded to juniors and seniors in mechanical engineering who hold the top 20 percent GPA.

Anyone wishing to contribute to the Joseph and Grace-Ann Genin Outstanding Mechanical Engineer Scholarship may send a donation to College of Engineering Assistant Dean's Office, MSC 3449, New Mexico State University, P.O. Box 30111, Las Cruces, NM 88003-8001, or contact the office at 646-2913.

Texting, driving don't mix

Don't get behind the wheel if you have too much to type

"Honk if you love Jesus. Text if you want to meet Him." - proposed bumper sticker

When Rick Jackson of American Document Services told me the above bumper sticker comment, I laughed. Pretty witty.

After a second thought, I frowned, sobered by the reality of it.

The same day Jackson told me that, I saw an ad on television, part of a national public service campaign, featuring a young man who had killed three small children as he drove while texting. The man said he'll never live a day he won't think of that tragedy.

The commercial noted the words he was texting as the incident happened: "I love you." All of us need to say "I love you" more often; but we also need to text while driving less

For a long time, drunk driving, particularly in New Mexico, was seen as an almost-accepted part of our culture. Finally though, enough people got mad (or MADD, in the case of Mothers Against Drunk Driving), that voices were heard and changes were made.

As a result, drunk driving deaths are declining.

In New Mexico, there were 339 alcohol-related traffic fatalities in 1987. The numbers have continually trended downward, and in 2010, the most recent year with final numbers, there were 145. We've cut the number by more than half in less than 25 years.

Nationwide, since 1982, alcohol-related fatalities by percentage have dropped 52 percent. Unfortunately, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration now reports texting while driving has overtaken drinking while driving as the No. 1 cause of traffic deaths among teens.

While adults like to think young people are the ones with the phone-addiction problem, a Pew Research study reported that more adults (47 percent) said they've texted while driving than teens (34 percent).

Many people who would never consider driving drunk will readily text away in the car. A 2012 NHTSA report said texting while driving is six times more dangerous than driving while intoxicated.

If we think of the nature of our typical text-message conversations, we quickly realize almost all of them can wait until we're out of the car. And none of them are worth the risk of a fatal crash. Remember, you're essentially piloting a hulking, metal weapon.

However, just as technology opened the door for this problem in the first place, technology can also help with the solution. Many cars are already equipped with Bluetooth, enabling hands-free calling. There are other hands-free options as well. Perhaps even more important, these solutions are eyes-free as well.

That's the big danger with texting; your eyes are taken off the road as you read and type. We've made great headway in the battle against drunk driving, and many lives have been saved. That fight, though, has taken more than 30 years and is still ongoing.

Almost all of us know someone who has been affected by the tragedy of drunk driving. If we don't already, all of us will soon know someone affected by the tragedy of texting and driving.

Let's work to make faster and better progress with texting and driving than we have with drunk driving.

Forty-one states in our nation have already banned texting while driving.

Though a bill was introduced in the 2013 state legislature, it was tabled, and New Mexico still has no such ban. That shuffling sound you hear is our state lagging behind the rest of the country in yet another category.

The minimum time your eyes are off the road while reading or typing texts is five seconds. During five seconds, a car traveling 55 mph will go about 100 yards. Imagine driving the length of a football field blindfolded.

That's more than enough time and distance to go instantly from LOL to OMG.

Backs Hispanic chamber

The National Association of Former Border Patrol Officers (NAFBPO) commends the Las Cruces Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, and its president, Kirk Clifton, for publicly acknowledging the obvious national security and public safety dangers associated with establishing new restrictive land designations on the border.

National monument and/or wilderness proposals by New Mexico Sens. Martin Heinrich and Tom Udall to permanently establish a drug and alien smuggling corridor in Doña Ana County are ill-advised and dangerous. When such initiatives are undertaken to add restrictive wilderness or national monument designations on lands adjacent to international boundaries they must be stopped.

The Las Cruces Hispanic Chamber of Commerce has proven beyond any doubt that patriotism and a willingness to defend the sovereignty of our state and nation are not restricted to any one individual or group.

We now call on all Americans to join hands and work for what is best for America.

Preventive care is best

With the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (aka "Obamacare") in the news on a daily basis, I hope we take this opportunity to have a serious debate about the state of health in our country today.

We need to talk about the decline in health in America, which is one of the underlying causes of the rise in health care costs. We need to look at the causes of the increasing mental and physical illnesses that are making us a sicker society at younger and younger ages: environmental pollutants, chemtrails, genetically modified food loaded with chemicals, and unequal access to resources.

We need to look at the focus on prescription drugs, surgery, chemotherapy and other high cost cures of diseases that can be prevented in the first place if the underlying causes are addressed.

Focusing on the causes of our ever increasing need for health care will give us a much higher return on our investment, financially and in terms of the health of everyone who breathes our air, drinks our water and eats our food.

Selling out the program

Money games the bane of Aggie football

Last week's meeting of two Las Cruces high schools was held in the New Mexico State University football stadium, because about 25,000 fans always come to that game.

The next day, NMSU held their own collegiate football game, with a crowd of about 10,000.

During a call-in show that followed the Aggie game, a listener questioned NMSU selling losses, indicating this practice was not appropriate. Selling losses means taking on national powerhouses for cash, which the powerhouses gladly pay to have a week off from their grueling schedule.

Powerhouse teams pay for a patsy to come get beat up while they rest. The patsy takes the cash and calls it good. The caller was told NMSU selling losses would continue a few more years, with NMSU perhaps selling three losses next year for financial reasons.

I have always opposed the ethically bankrupt practice of selling losses by NMSU. This has been going on for at least 30 years. That has turned into three decades of no success.

Selling losses every year for 30 years has imperiled Aggie football and not brought any success to the program. It is insane to continue doing what has not worked. Football programs are judged by three criteria: win/loss record, attendance and bowl games. Selling losses impacts all three categories.

NMSU holds the record for how long it has been since going to a bowl game. Several of the years that NMSU was selling losses would have been bowl game years but for those sold losses. Also know that NMSU did not sell any losses the years they went to the Sun Bowl or they would not have been invited.

Frankly, selling losses must stop now. Do not sell losses next year or perhaps lose the program. When NMSU sends student athletes into harm's way not to win games, rather, to get money selling the loss, NMSU announces to the world they are losers. Each year NMSU makes selling losses seem like there is no urgency for win-loss records or bowl games in NMSU's football program.

With more than 30 years of data on this approach, we are certainly equipped to answer the question: How well does it work? It has been a complete disaster, chewing up many fine coaches and programs over the years. NMSU has not had a truly successful season while it was engaged in selling losses.

I always thought someone in the leadership would at some point in the more than 30 years say, "Been there, done that, let us try something different." For 30 years NMSU has sold out the win-loss record and not sold out the stadium. They have sold out their bowl game aspirations. The fans have stayed away. Yes, there are hard core fans, myself included, who come faithfully.

Now, the money is important if we are to continue the employment of all of the people who work in the athletic department. But does the tail wag the dog in this endeavor? Is it acceptable to maintain that employment by selling out the program?

I agree the football program needs more money. However, if we must have benefit car washes, bake sales, kissing booths, rent-a-dog for a day, home delivery of cow-chips – whatever – we should do what it takes to not ever sell losses again.

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

The cycle of fire

The Mountain West, as pictured by the European immigrants in the days of Lewis and Clark, was covered with immense healthy forests that had recycled themselves naturally for centuries. They grew from seeds, matured, reproduced, died, burned and prepared the land for a fresh seeding. Fire was not the enemy.

Explorers first saw the forests holding their place in the bio-system of the West. Settlers came and built forts and fences, houses and dams, cities and freeways. Forests were harvested for fuel and construction. They had to be cleared so man could build on the ground.

Timber companies, ranchers and railroaders thought the virgin forests were unending. In the latter part of the 19th century they were allowed to recycle. During the early 20th century timber companies and government agencies began to replant clear-cut forests to sustain timbering.

Then mid-century came the conservationists, politicians, environmentalists and tree huggers. They took the stand that thinning, clear-cutting, grazing, hunting, improving water tanks, roads and settlers just harmed the forest. So they instigated restrictions.

They chose forest fire as the enemy, Smokey Bear told them so! For the next 50 years of forest management, they fought forest fires. This encouraged people to build beautiful homes in the tall pines. Any attempt to utilize the crowning, crowded timber or deadfall as a private industry resource was scorned. The trees kept growing and seeding, seeding, shedding, dying and falling on the forest floor.

In the 1980s the pine-bark beetle became an obvious factor and large stands of pine trees turned yellow and died.

Then lightning stood up and took his turn. He set the West on fire. It is still burning.

Today, forest fires consume twice as much land each year as they did in 1970. The burn season today is two and a half months longer than it was in 1970. Nature is taking it back until every acre of pine trees in the West is recycled in the inferno. It will take years and years to recover from our hubris that allowed us to think we can bend nature's rules and get away with it.

We all watch with fear and admiration as fire jumpers by the thousands every year risk their lives daily to protect manmade structures. And what happened to the environmentalists and conservationists and politicians who led the battle to drive lumberjacks, cowboys and miners out of the woods? The same activists who used the spotted owl and their incestuous sycophant, the EPA, to shut down sawmill towns and grazing permits and road builders – the greasy politicians parading their magnanimous influence like circus monkeys in a side show shutting down the West by decreeing it a wilderness. Where are they now?

LULAC group responds to local chamber president

As president of the Las Cruces LULAC (League of United Latin American Citizens) Council 120, I feel compelled to respond to a letter by Kirk Clifton, president of the board of the Las Cruces Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, in the Friday, Nov. 8, issue.

In his letter, Clifton chose to rudely denigrate New Mexico LULAC and completely misstate the facts on the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument proposal that we, and a majority of Hispanic citizens, are proud to support.

The sweeping nature of his misstatements and his obvious desire to create dissention within our community does not honor a point-by-point response, but rather the opportunity to re-state the facts clearly. After recently speaking with several Las Cruces Hispanic Chamber of Commerce board members, I understand that Clifton wrote his letter on his own accord.

LULAC is a grassroots organization and we operate democratically with respect to our positions and platform. We were proud to support resolutions of support for the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument proposed by our Las Cruces, Silver City and Hurley Councils at our district, state and national conventions. We feel strongly that the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument is a historic opportunity to preserve lands and culture important to the Hispanic community for hundreds of years.

It is sad that Clifton, a newly installed representative of a Hispanic business organization, would choose to blatantly lie about and publicly attack an organization that has been fighting for Latino civil rights for more than 80 years. He has never contacted the local LULAC chapter, nor even become educated as to the basic facts concerning this incredible conservation opportunity.

Contrary to Clifton's misguided position, history and studies have repeatedly shown that national monuments create new jobs for communities and bring in more tourism to the area, where folks can enjoy the majestic and priceless wonders of Mother Nature.

The Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument is supported by a diverse coalition within our community including Doña Ana County, the City of Las Cruces and Town of Mesilla, sportsmen, clergy, Native Americans, civic organizations, conservationists and more. According to a survey conducted in September 2012 by 3rd Eye Strategies, 88 percent of Hispanic voters in Doña Ana County also support preservation of these lands.

This national monument would protect rich landscapes around our county, for us to enjoy forever, along with priceless history including the Butterfield Stagecoach Trail, thousands of Native American archeological sites, World War II and Apollo space mission history and history related to the El Camino Real de Tierra Adentro Trail.

We have always held an excellent relationship with the Las Cruces Hispanic Chamber of Commerce. As president of Council 120 and former state director, I have always served as an advocate for their causes with respect to minority business and economic parity.

Notwithstanding Clifton's disappointing behavior, I maintain my utmost respect for the Hispanic Chamber members and its mission.

We would encourage the Hispanic Chamber Board of Directors to reject Clifton's divisive approach and once again embrace the broadly supported position its last four boards of directors have held in support of the comprehensive community developed conservation proposal.

> Paul "Pablo" A. Martinez President, LULAC Council 120 Past New Mexico LULAC State Director

Former Hispanic board member supports monument status

I am very disappointed and disturbed when I read letters from Kirk Clifton, board president of the Las Cruces Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, stating the Hispanic Chamber does not support the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument.

As an active member of the Hispanic Chamber and former board member, I support the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument proposal. Historically, the Hispano Chamber has been a strong and avid supporter of the proposal.

In Clifton's letter, not only did he get the size of the proposed Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument wrong (it's 500,000 acres, not 700,000 acres), he also scoffed at the fact that such a monument would bring $7.4 million new dollars to our economy annually. Reports show the financial benefits and job creations are real. I don't know why Clifton is opposed to the new dollars and jobs, but it is important to me!

In addition, our community, hunters, hikers, ranchers, Bureau of Land Management and law enforcement all worked closely to develop the most comprehensive plan to serve the important needs of our community, businesses and security. We will all have access to the land to hike, bike, hunt and camp, while protecting our traditional uses and cultural resources. There will still be plenty of land for our community to grow and prosper.

In short, I am very disappointed in Clifton's attack on the League of United Latin American Citizens. His divisive behavior is inappropriate as a leader of our organization.

Manager

Washington, D.C., the former director of the City of Oakland, California's Redevelopment Agency, the former community affairs and compliance officer for the Western Region of the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency and a former community reinvestment act officer for Charles Schwab Bank, headquartered in Reno, Nev.

Garrett praised both Brown and McMahon as strong candidates and predicted their collective leadership of Doña Ana County will bring positive change and enhanced transparency and efficiencies to the organization as a whole, the press release stated.

As manager, Brown will be the sole directreport employee of the Doña Ana County Board of Commissioners, and she will oversee approximately 850 employees and will interact and coordinate budgetary support for the five elected officials who operate independent departments within the government: County Assessor Andy Segovia, County Clerk Lynn Ellins, County Probate Judge Alice Salcido, County Sheriff Todd Garrison and County Treasurer David Gutierrez.

She is the recipient of numerous awards and honors related to her work experience in both California and Oklahoma, and she maintains professional affiliations with nearly a dozen state and national organizations. She also has served on the boards of directors of Operation Hope, the Opportunity Fund, Equal Rights Advocates and the American Association of University Women, of which she is the current Vice President.

Brown's undergraduate degree in political science was earned at Oklahoma State University.

Brown will hold a press conference for regional media in early December to lay out her management plan and expectations for her first 90 days on the job. She also will answer questions at that time.

Brown will have a lot of work ahead of her, commissioners said at the special meeting Wednesday,

"We are in a time of change, but I think we are moving forward in a very positive way," Garrett said. "It's going to take all of us working together to get through this together."

get through this together."

One of the biggest concerns facing the commission is a budgetary shortfall of $15 million. Newly appointed Commissioner Ben Rawson said he encouraged suggestions from the community on ways the county could save money, because "we can't tax our way out of a $15 million deficit."

The commissioners are having to consider some drastic steps to close the budget gap. Options include imposing a gross receipts tax (GRT) increase, cutting spending on programs, raising right-of-way fees charged to El Paso Electric Co. and having employees pay more for their health plans.

Commissioners had a chance to cut about $100,000 Wednesday, but chose to let county employees have full days off for Christmas and New Year's eves. Garrett and Rawson were the only two commissioners voting to give the workers only half days off, noting that they have more total holidays than other surrounding government workers.

On a positive note, Commissioner Leticia Duarte-Benavidez said Brown's selection was well received by employees in the county.

For the budget shortfall, the commission also has discussed cutting spending on capital projects and imposing a county hiring freeze or eliminating positions.

Garrett said the commission hopes to close the gap over a three-year period. The county is expected to spend $15 million more than it will get in revenues for this fiscal year. By dipping into savings, the county is prepared to spend more than $137 million in the 2013-14 budget.

At the meeting, commissioners also heard reports of local school spending of a GRT for Spaceport America construction.

Las Cruces Public Schools Superintendent Stan Rounds said his district gets about $1.2 million annually from the spaceport GRT. Rounds said the district uses the money to offer more science, technology, engineering and math (STEM) opportunities in middle school and intensify STEM instruction in high school.

Rounds said the district also is learning to reach students online and off hours by making online science and math teachers available.

"What you have been able to allow us to do is step up our programs," Rounds told commissioners.

BILLY GARRETT,

Commission chairman

The efforts, he said, have increased enrollment in advanced placement courses – by more than double in STEM courses – and has increased the number of students proficient in math and sciences by nearly 30 percent.

McMahon also discussed capital outlay requests for the Legislature, which were primarily two for Santa Teresa airport – the building of a hazardous materials facility and improvements to roads linking the airport to the port of entry and Union Pacific rail yard. Spaceport observers in the audience questioned whether this reflected a lack of support for getting funding to pave the southern road to the spaceport 45 miles north of Las Cruces.

about $600,000 to book the flight, originally planned for early October, but the government shutdown put the launch on hold because NASA operations were closed and UP Aerospace needs assistance from White Sand Missile Range (WSMR) for tracking and recovery of the launches from Spaceport America.

Tuesday's liftoff marked the 20th launch at Spaceport America and the 12th flight conducted by UP Aerospace, a long-term spaceport customer. The complex used was designed for UP Aerospace's rocket and rail-guided launcher.

With a light, steady breeze from the north, the rocket took off at 9:15 a.m., a little later than the scheduled 8 a.m. launch time, but still within the two-hour launch window. A little more than 15 minutes later, UP Aerospace's SpaceLoft rocket payload landed safely by parachute 25 miles downrange on WSMR as planned.

The launch was still a close call for the NMSU student payload, which was testing an algorithm for free-floating mass control during the few seconds of weightlessness in the flight. The experiment included a camera that had a battery with a life of only a couple of hours.

The Department of Defense tested a missile-grade GPS receiver in flight. The Spain-Alabama test was on fluids in a microgravity environment. NMSU tested a new technology to accurately read fuel levels on vehicles in space. New Mexico Tech had a structural monitoring device that could help detect damage on rockets and satellites.

"It is great to have NASA back at Spaceport America and to have the opportunity to support their second Flight Opportunities suborbital launch today," said NMSA Executive Director Christine Anderson. "We also want to congratulate UP Aerospace, who has been launching with us since the beginning, on their 12th launch from the spaceport."

The NASA Flight Opportunities Program is designed to provide suborbital payload launch resources for NASA and other government agencies, as well as for educational institutions and the private sector. The SatWest experiment sent text messages during the flight, testing whether passengers will be able to send texts when they fly from the spaceport.

Spaceport America is located 45 miles north of Las Cruces and its major tenant is Virgin Galactic, which plans to send passengers into space for $200,000 a ticket starting late 2014. In December, SpaceX will begin testing its Grasshopper rocket from Spaceport America.

NASA's is contracted to two flights a year in its efforts to support private space industry development. UP Aerospace could earn up to $4.7 million in holding launches for the NASA program, according to UP President and CEO Jerry Larson.

Homeowner association laws change

State Sen. Joseph Cervantes, Las Cruces City Councillor Sharon Thomas, Doña Ana County Clerk Lynn Ellins and County Commissioner Wayne Hancock listen to questions from members of homeowner associations Tuesday, Nov. 12, at the auditorium of Doña Ana Community College's East Mesa campus. Law passed by the last Legislature increases transparency, set rules for board representation and provides measures for better accountability of fees paid. Thomas said it was ironic that this would be her last public meeting as a city councillor because problems with homeowner associations was a "hot topic" when she was first elected six years ago.

Sportsmen groups object to Gila Diversion Project

Letter listing concerns given to governor

Eleven sportsmen groups representing 20,000 New Mexicans sent a letter to Gov. Susana Martinez Friday, Nov. 15, asking her to oppose the controversial Gila River diversion project in favor of long-term solutions that protect rivers.

Protected and flowing rivers are essential for New Mexico's world-class elk habitat and gold medal fisheries, which support a $2.89 billion river-related recreation economy, according to the groups.

"The Gila region is truly unique, in large part due to the presence of this amazing, living river," said Jeff Arterburn, president, Gila/Rio Grande Chapter of Trout Unlimited. "While there are many places across the country where anglers can fish for rainbow and brown trout, this is it for our beautiful native Gila trout, and we feel it is our responsibility, to our families and those visitors who are drawn to this special place, to protect and preserve the life of this river."

The groups – which include the New Mexico Wildlife Federation, Albuquerque Wildlife Federation and numerous Trout Unlimited chapters in the state – also distributed the letter to the Water and Natural Resources Committee meeting held in Santa Fe the same day.

"I understand the interim committee will be discussing the Governor's River Stewards Initiative," said David Soules of Southwest Consolidated Sportsmen. "We are encouraged by her ambitious plan to protect river health in New Mexico and hope that this translates into protecting the Gila from a large scale diversion that would ultimately threaten river health and the outdoor recreation opportunities enjoyed by thousands of New Mexico sportsmen."

In addition to sportsmen concerns, the negative impacts of a diversion project on the Gila River are underscored by a recent polling of New Mexico voters, revealing that New Mexicans are gravely concerned about the health of rivers, believe that rivers are critical to quality of life and reject the concept of river diversions in favor of non-diversion. More specifically, a large majority of state voters oppose the controversial Gila River diversion project in favor of long-term solutions that protect rivers.

The poll, conducted by Republican polling firm Public Opinion Strategies in July 2013, found:

- New Mexico voters are very concerned about water issues.
- New Mexicans value their rivers as critical to their quality of life, outdoor recreation opportunities and the state's economy.
- Voters decisively reject the concept and the specifics of a river diversion project.
- The more New Mexico voters hear, the less they like the Gila River project.
- Water supply options other than diversion, such as water-saving irrigation systems for farmers and ranchers, replacing outdated water infrastructure and building desalinization plants, are greeted with much more enthusiasm.
- The huge price tag for a pipeline is a major concern, with only 30 percent willing to pay for the diversion project.

"In times of drought the only source of water for animals in the area is the Gila River, the golden thread of the Gila Wilderness. Any river diversion would cause serious harm to wildlife and threaten our outdoor recreation economy," said Jason Amaro, a New Mexico Wildlife Federation board member. "A diverse sportsmen coalition agrees with most of New Mexico that a diversion is a bad idea. We trust that this strong sentiment across the state leads to the rejection of this very counter-productive project."

Computers donated

Dan Steinborn, center, is joined by his twin brother, State Rep. Jeff Steinborn, and staff from the Weed & Seed/Safe Haven – Frieda Flores, Felipe Briseños and Judy Barela – to acknowledge his donation of eight computers. Dan Steinborn, whose PrintGlobal.com business is based in Austin, Texas, learned of the Tornillo Street center's need for computers from his brother. The computers were worth $10,000 new, but were already dated for his business's needs, so he donated them to the center. Briseños built the wood-partitioned work stations.

Parent website proposed

Martinez seeks $1.2 million for online tool

Gov. Susana Martinez said she will seek $1.2 million in state funding to help provide New Mexico parents with greater tools to receive information about and engage in the activities of their children in school.

Martinez's proposal, called the "New Mexico Parent Connection," would provide resources to local school districts to create interactive websites where teachers can post classroom information, homework assignments, grades, behavior assessments and attendance records that parents can access regularly. The website will be secure and will be accesible by parents with login information.

Martinez said her proposal is a tool specifically designed for parents to help their kids succeed in school. Some schools already use such a tool, and her proposal would support existing efforts while assisting other school districts to set up parent portals. The website portal would serve to enhance the rate at which parents are able to receive information about their child's day-to-day classroom sessions, and would provide constant feedback to parents in between the more traditional parent-teacher conferences. Under some models, parents could also use the website to track their child's completion of homework assignments.

Luke, who along with her husband ,Carl, researched Owens' history for the new gravestone, discovered that sometimes it's hard to sort out the mythology around someone even as famous as Owens.

While it sounds good to say he was 100 years old when he died May 11, 1936, Luke said she has seen accounts giving his birth year as 1857. There is no dispute that he was born in San Antonio, Texas, according to Al LeCount, who was the one who discovered Owens was buried at the Masonic Cemetery.

"Each time he was tallied in a census, he listed a different date of birth, which leads one to believe he didn't know for sure when he was born," LeCount said.

As a young man, Owens worked on the famous Goodnight Ranch in Texas, where he met Charles "Buffalo" Jones. Roosevelt appointed Jones to manage Yellowstone National Park's buffalo herd, with Owens providing assistance. Owens stayed at Yellowstone until he began helping Jones breed a mix of buffalo and cattle, which required him to herd buffalo to the Kaibab Plateau in Arizona.

More than his long custodial caring for the buffalo, Owens is better remembered as the north rim's premiere cougar hunter, according to Michel Anderson of the Grand Canyon Association. In his book "Living on the Edge," Anderson writes that after Roosevelt created a game preserve along the canyon's north rim, Owens became its first certified game warden and his main duty was removing predators. While he was charged with hunting all sorts of predators, he was best known for hunting or capturing cougars, also called mountain lions. Owens claimed to have killed more than 1,200 cougars and he organized hunts, including for Roosevelt. In 1908, Owens exposed novelist Grey to the sport of lion roping, which was immortalized in two novels. One story has Owens climbing a tree to lasso a mountain lion trying to escape from hunting dogs.

As he got older, Owens became more of a guide to Grand Canyon visitors. Eventually, Owens sold his buffalo and returned to Texas to visit old friends. By the late 1920s, age was catching up with Owens, so he moved to live with his nephew in Afton, N.M., a former community neighboring Las Cruces.

The Lukes became involved through their association with the Doña Ana County Genealogical Society. Also assisting the effort was Harley Shaw of Findagrave.com. Donations came from 16 individuals and couples totaling $630 to pay for the new headstone made by Worthen Memorials in Albuquerque.

The new grave includes a photograph of Owens. Luke said the effort has been appropriate because there are also many other notable people in local history buried at the Masonic Cemetery, include Pat Garrett, Cricket Coogler and "Happy" Apodaca.

Determined Ags amaze home crowd

Richard Coltharp That's the Way of the World

The New Mexico State University football team did not win Saturday, Nov. 9.

It almost felt that way, though, when Aggie fans walked out of the stadium following the 48-34 loss to Boston College.

Time and again, when the Aggies faced adversity, they responded.

During the first half, NMSU overcame several potentially drive-killing penalties to gain first downs. Throughout the game, or at least until the last five minutes, every time Boston College dealt what we thought was a fatal blow, the Aggies came back with a score.

I've been going to Aggie games for seven or eight years, and I can't remember seeing as much group enthusiasm from the fans heading into halftime.

The reasons for the enthusiasm were multiple, one of them at the hands – or the feet – of Las Cruces High School product Xavier Hall.

With 3:05 left in the first half, Boston College scored a touchdown to go up 20-10. Many Aggie fans started squirming, wondering what might happen next.

What happened next was a great deal of fun.

Taking the ball at its own 25-yard line, NMSU started driving toward another score.

On the ninth play of the drive, as the clock seconds ticked down to single digits before half, many fans were yelling for the Aggies to spike the ball and stop the clock.

With the Aggies in formation, quarterback Andrew McDonald continued calmly setting up the final play, which turned out to be a handoff up the middle to Hall, the 5-8 running back. The call, from 10 yards out, was dangerous, but seemed to surprise BC and, with one second left, Hall dove across the goal line.

In a mixture of joy, relief and disbelief, the NMSU crowd erupted, as the Aggies went into halftime down by just a field goal. 20-17.

The buzz of that play did not die throughout the half as fans grinned big grins and exchanged their amazement.

It only got more amazing in the second half, as the Aggies continued to respond, tying the game twice.

With less than five minutes to play, the game was tied 34-34, with Boston College pinned on their own 2-yard line. That's where I freeze the game in my mind's eye.

The timeless sage Yoda once said in his best Grover-from-Sesame-Street voice, "There is no try, only do or not do."

Well, if ever there was satisfaction in the "old college try," it came last week in Aggie Memorial Stadium.

A step in the right direction

Aggies display progress against Boston College

By Jim Hilley

Though Boston College walked out the winner over the New Mexico State University football team Saturday, Nov. 9, it may have been the Aggies who took the bigger steps.

The Aggies racked up 548 yards of offense. Quarterback Andrew McDonald threw 41 pass completions in 55 attempts. With running backs Germi Morrison and Branden Betancourt injured on the sidelines, freshman Xavier Hall hit holes created by the offensive line for 95 yards and a touchdown on 14 carries.

Though the end result was a 48-34 loss, the Aggies stayed step-in-step with the Atlantic Coast member Boston College until less than five minutes to play, giving Aggie fans the most exciting game they had seen in a long while.

"The standing ovation they gave our players at the end of the game was remarkable," NMSU coach Doug Martin said.

"We have great fans here. We will be rewarding them soon with some winning seasons."

Martin has said repeatedly that there will be no "moral victories," but there was definitely a more upbeat feeling at the weekly press conference on Tuesday, Nov. 12.

"I thought our guys played as hard as they can possibly play," he said. "They competed.

"We took Boston College down to the wire 34-34 with under five minutes left to go in the game and that shows how close we are."

The possibility that the Aggies can end the 2013 season on a positive note seemed remote as loss after loss piled up during the season.

The 7-5, 360-pound Bhullar is also averaging 8.0 rebounds with seven blocked shots. Eldridge is a transfer from New Mexico Junior College.

"They ought to be proud of that win (at Hawai'i)," UTEP coach Tim Floyd said. "The island is a tough place to play.

"They present so many issues. They're really good in offensive transition. They're really good at establishing the post and playing through there.

"They have been terrific defensively. I don't think Marvin (Menzies) gets enough credit for his defense. They held teams under 40 percent a year ago and are continuing to do that this year."

Menzies said he would have liked to win all three games in Hawai'i but otherwise he was happy with the way the Aggies are playing.

"We played well Monday (against Hawaiʻi),"

He said he would like to see more consistency from his point guards

"They did pretty good over the three days," he said.

The New Mexico State University Aggie men's basketball team opens its 2013-14 home season by taking on rival University of Texas-El Paso at 7 p.m. Friday, Nov. 15.

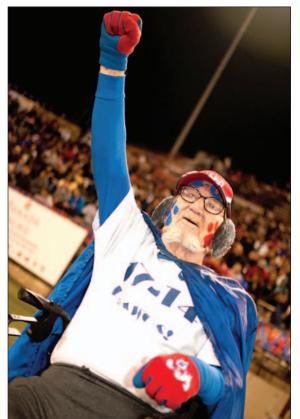

NMSU coach Marvin Menzies said he expects the Miners to be very good this season.

"They have some pretty good players and add to that some young guys who can help out right away," he said.

"The thing I like seeing about Xavier is he's quick, he has really good vision and he makes people miss," Martin said..

That's the mark of what you really need in a running back. If you block a play good enough to gain four yards you need a really good back to stretch that into an eight yard gain or a 10-yard gain by making somebody miss.

We have two games coming up that we could certainly win both these football games,"

"It would be huge for our football program if we do that."

Mayfield and Las Cruces advance to 5A playoffs

Centennial Hawks will host Santa Fe

By Hugh OsteenLas Cruces Bulletin

High school football playoffs are here, and two teams from Las Cruces have qualified for the 5A state playoffs. Las Cruces High School will go into the playoffs as the No. 4 seed, while archrival Mayfield High School will go in as the No. 2 seed.

While times and dates are not set for the local teams' playoff schedule, both will have a first round bye. They are automatically in the second round, which will be held Nov.

The final playoff rankings were set on Friday, Nov. 8, when Las Cruces met Mayfield at Aggie Memorial stadium in front of a packed house. Las Cruces came in as the No. 1 ranked team in the state, while Mayfield came in as No. 4.

In the first half, Las Cruces held on to a 20-14 lead, scoring three times but missing one extra-point. In the second half, the Trojan defense came alive. They held the high-octane Las Cruces offense scoreless, something that no team has been able to do

The Bulldawgs were stopped on a key series late in the game to seal the victory for the Trojans. They punched in another touchdown late for insurance, and won the battle 28-20. The New Mexico High School Football rankings were shaken up, just in time for the playoffs.

With the victory, Mayfield sealed the District 3-5A championship and jumped Las Cruces in the latest state rankings.

The Mayfield offense was led by the arms and legs of junior quarterback Kavika Johnson. In a battle dominated by the running game, Johnson ended the night with 179 yards and a touchdown.

Centennial High School made the playoffs in 4A. Centennial enters with an 8-2 record, and will be the No. 5 seed. They are set to take on No. 12 seed Santa Fe High School at 7 p.m. Friday, Nov. 15, at the Field of Dreams complex.

"Hopefully we can get our legs back and play well," he said.

The last two years have produced a season split, with the Aggies winning twice on their home floor (89-73 in 2011-12 and 55-51 in 2012-13) and UTEP returning the favor in El Paso (73-69 in 2011-12 and 55-54 in 2012-13). Last season marked the first time since 2001-02 that both games were decided by four points or Junior guard K.C. Ross-Miller hit 10-straight free throws in the last :37 seconds of the game and junior forward Remi Barry scored a careerhigh 18 points to give NMSU the 95-88 win at Hawai'i 95-88 in the final game of the Outrigger Hotels and Resort Rainbow Classic, Tuesday, Nov. 12.

Junior guard Daniel Mullings, who earned all-tournament team honors, scored a teamhigh 21 points against the Rainbow Warriors. The last time Mullings scored at least 20 points was last season on March 7 during a 78-60 win over Louisiana Tech. He and Ross-Miller combined for an 18-of-24 night at the free throw

"The 10 free throws in a row K.C. (Ross-Miller) hit could be the difference in the game," Menzies said in a postgame interview. "I was really pleased with his performance at the line, especially with the way we started the tournament.

"I thought the guards did a good job and at the end of the day it was great that we had some depth on our team. Remi Barry has had some ups and downs but it's early in the year and he is really improving. I gave him some credit after the last game because he handled his role and was such a team-guy for us."

Damage control:

Don't go from the frying pan into the fire

Charlie Blanchard Golf Doctor

In damage control you don't have to be perfect; you just have to be good enough to get your ball out of trouble and safely back into the game.

- Dave Pelz

A few weeks ago, while playing the final hole of a money match, I hit a wayward tee shot and found myself stymied directly in front of a large weed. There was no attractive place to take an unplayable drop, so I tried to play it out sideways, but hit into another weed. From there I hit a "rescue" club hard but it went way left and I never found the ball. I took a nine.

Reflecting back on the whole disgusting episode I couldn't help but think that I could have done something much better to salvage some sort of score. It ruined a very good round.

Then, just days ago, going through my extensive golf library, I ran across a truly remarkable instruction manual that I had collected four years ago. It's called "Damage Control" and the author is short game expert Dave Pelz. I have written about Pelz before in this space, but this time he did himself proud with "Damage Control." The subhead to the book is "How to save up to 5 shots per round using all-new, scientifically proven techniques for playing out of trouble lies."

The last statement is not an over-sell. Pelz covers how to hit shots from under trees, from steep slopes, from thick havfields, from lies with obstacles in front of and behind your ball, even from out of water. Pelz contends that his principles can limit the damage to less than one stroke each time you get into trouble. He says that "damage control" enables you to escape from trouble, on the first try, into a better position than you would have been had your previous shot not gotten into trouble.

See if you recognize these telltale signs: you play well (perhaps below your handicap) for 14 to 17 holes; then you have a few "disaster" holes with seriously high scores. You're disappointed with your score and know you're capable of playing better. You blame your disaster holes on errant shots that got into trouble. You believe you must practice more, improve your swing and learn to avoid trouble if your want to improve your game.

If that's you, you're typical. However, Pelz said his research has shown all amateurs hit multiple errant shots every round, managing to get away with most of them, but not all of them. He says disaster scores usually result from a terribly errant shot, followed by a failed recovery attempt that flies out of the original trouble into even worse trouble. We go out of the frying pan into the fire.

What impresses me is that "damage control" is not simply a collection of specialty "trick" shots that you might try if you were desperate; it starts out as a golfing philosophy, based on the reality that golfers play well for most of the round, but then ruin their score with a few bad holes. It's also based on the fact that we as golfers will never completely avoid errant shots that get us into trouble.

The best players in the world have to face seriously troubled lies sometimes; it's part of the game. We must recognize that golf courses are diabolical; they are designed to get you into trouble. Plus there are bad bounces and bad luck – learn to deal with it.

Pelz believes that we can effectively get out of trouble without ruining the score by acquiring skills and knowledge that is unconventional and perhaps not obvious.

"The mental skills of damage control require a different mode of thinking based on a different set of metrics," asserts Pelz, the golf engineer.

A perfect example of one of those damage control secrets is "setupology," the term Pelz uses to describe how to set up properly (with posture and position) for swings from lies that spell trouble. Because "trouble lies" almost always involve difficult terrain and an unusual stance, setting up poorly is often the first mistake golfers make when they're in serious trouble. He says the set-up is the foremost skill to limit damage because it comes before the backswing, downswing or follow-through of any trouble shot. If you set up wrong, your odds of making a bad swing - thereby worsening the problem – are much greater.

Take a case where your ball is under a low tree branch. You can take a stance and get a club on the ball, but you have to bend way over, with your head in the branches, to hit the ball. The damage control play that will allow you to best escape such a trouble lie is playing the shot from your knees, with your torso upright, thereby allowing you to make a better shoulder turn and swing the club with more force, keeping the shaft below the greenery. This would not be instinctive or intuitive.

These anomalous shots require practice, like hitting an occasional left handed shot if you're a righty.

Another perfect example of setupology is hitting a backhanded shot, facing away from the target and swinging like a blind shot with a croquet mallet. Pelz advises to play the ball out in front of your feet to contact cleanly without scuffing the turn, and to keep your hitting shoulder anchored with your free hand over it for stability and balance. I would not have thought of that.

The real beauty of damage control is that you don't have to have any extraordinary skills or talent to save yourself a bundle of agony. It doesn't take brute force or the ingenious escape-artist brilliance. It does mean a getting a grip on some basics.

Take "swing shaping," for instance. If you have to go steeply uphill, downhill, over or around objects such as trees, or have a tightly restricted swing (like I had with the big weed), you need to shape your swing to create a ball flight that will get you back in position to continue the hole. This means understanding the swing path, face alignment and ball spin dynamics.

Take a waist-high lie where your ball is so far above your feet that you need almost a baseball bat swing. Pelz notes that the club will feel heavier with it horizontal, leaving you with the tendency to make smothered toe hooks. By gripping down on the shaft, positioning your spine angle properly and maintaining your balance, you can control the starting direction and curvature of your ball and avoid hitting into real disaster.

Pelz says that the good news is that you don't have to be an expert swing shaper to play with damage control; you simply have to be adequate at it. And practice.

"The requirement of swing shaping," he said "is only to hit a good enough shot to get the ball back somewhere into the game on your first attempt. The shot doesn't have to be perfect. It just has to end up somewhere decent, in a safe lie. Then you can make a good shot to recover."

Pelz advises us to pick the three most likely areas that cause us trouble on the golf course, and then hit 25 escape shots from each place: "This evaluation will give you a better look at our true shot-pattern size (dispersion), and will help you to be better prepared for the trouble you're most likely to face in your next round," he said.

You might also try playing a game of "worst ball" with one of your friends, a game in which each player hits two balls and the opponent picks the worst one for you to play your next shot. The game tends to immunize you from getting nervous when you have to deal with bad luck, bad bounces and bad lies.

Aggielnsider

Senior forward Renaldo Dixon slams the ball for two points against WNMU during the 98-67 exhibition win.

Get behind the boys

Time for fans to pack the Pan Am

There are some varmints comin' to town Friday that ole Pete wants to be wary of. The Aggie men's basketball team is hosting UTEP and it is time to show your colors. Filling the Pan Am Center to the brim is what I'm talkin' about, so crimson and white are the only colors I want to see.

There might be some orange poppin' up here and there, but so be it. The Aggies fans are ready to cheer like a howlin' north wind for their team at tip off. The way to do your part is to join 'em. The Pan Am has always been "The Aggies' House" and Pete wants you to keep it that way.

Sure, Sim Bhullar and Chile

Nephawe are big, but they stand even taller with a group of Pan Amaniacs cheerin' their every play. It isn't that ole Pete is worried about the outcome – if it were up to this saddle tramp, I'd put it in the win column now.

It is always a more festive campfire when we all join in and get behind our boys. When you do sit down to watch the action unfold on the parquet make sure you're decked out in your prettiest crimson.

You can still get a season ticket for all of those pesky outlaws who come to claim a win in our town. If you didn't, jot down the Pan Am box office number - it's 646-1420. Yep it's gonna be another proud night for the Aggies when they teach the Miners another lesson on hoops and how to win. Saddle up and we will cut them off at the pass on Friday night.

Equestrians on roll

NMSU team on seven-win hot streak

Robin Morris-Walters Head Coach Equestrian

New Mexico State Equestrian wraps up its fall season with a successful 7-2 record.

Currently ranked No. 6 in the latest National Collegiate Equestrian Association (NCEA) rankings, we are on a seven-win hot streak with a big win coming against No. 3 TCU last week. No. 6 is the highest this team has been ranked since I have been involved with the program, and it is definitely a proud and happy moment for everyone involved. New rankings will be released next week and we are confident that NM State will continue to rise in the ranks.

At the beginning of the fall season we challenged the team to strive for more in the weight room, the classroom and ultimately the arena by implementing the Team Challenge, an overall accountability award/penalty system. After last season's ups and downs we wanted them to work hard, improve their focus, believe in their abilities, and ride confidently. Fortunately, they thrived on the structure and changes we set forth and rode like the winners they are, as evident in our current record. In addition the positive change in team camaraderie, pride and support has increased due to the team's commitment.

Our season started at SMU where we had a few early season jitters, though we narrowly lost 10-9. We then went to the Willis Invitational Tournament hosted by Baylor, playing three schools over five days. Despite losing overall to top-ranked Baylor, the western team held strong and beat Baylor's western squad on raw score. Not to be discouraged, NM State battled back to a stellar 11-5 victory over SDSU and the winning continued from there. NM State finished the tournament beating Tennessee-Martin after an unfortunate weather delay. Our next road trip was victorious with wins over Delaware State, Fresno State, and Sacred Heart. Wrapping up our fall season at home, NM State bested the No. 3 TCU Horned Frogs 9-6 and followed that up with a decisive 10-4 win over South Dakota State.

The determination of this team has led them to a well-deserved seven-win streak. In addition to the team's success NM State riders brought home 22 Most Outstanding Player awards as of yet, and we expect more to come. Senior reining rider Tara Wilson was named NČEA September Reining Rider of the Month and currently has an 8-1 record with 3 MOP titles. Redshirt Senior hunter seat rider Hannah Swarthout has 4 MOP awards in the Equitation on the Flat. Junior reining rider Brynn Larson currently has a stunning 8-0-1 record with one MOP accolade. Three-time All-American Honorable Mention Senior hunter seat rider Emily McConnell currently has 3 MOP awards in Equitation on the Flat and over Fences. Junior western rider Clarissa Edgerton also adds 3 MOP titles in the Horsemanship to her

The team takes a well-deserved break over the holidays and will resume competition here at home.

OBITUARIES

THOMAS ERHARD

June 11, 1923 to November 10, 2013

For 35 years, the "Voice of the Aggies" never missed announcing a home football or basketball game for New Mexico State University, and it earned a place in NMSU's Athletic Hall of Fame for Thomas Erhard, who died Sunday in Las Cruces, New Mexico at age 90.

While he was a dedicated Aggie fan and sports announcer, Erhard was better known to hundreds of students and faculty as a professor in the English and the Theatre Arts departments, while also familiar to many thousands nationwide as the author of 39 plays for both young people and adult audiences.

Erhard began his NMSU career in 1960 and retired as a full professor in 1991. He had been in weakened condition for several months and was at Mesilla Valley Hospice since last Saturday, and he died quietly early Sunday morning.

Born June 11, 1923, in East Hoboken, N.J., Erhard earned his bachelor's at Hofstra College in Hempstead, N.Y., in 1941. After military service in World War II, he returned to academics. His master's (1950) and doctorate (1960)degrees were earned at University of New Mexico.

During WWII, Erhard was drafted into the the Army and was stationed at Camp Shanks, N.Y., where his assignment was to play baseball. Erhard rubbed shoulders with similarly drafted and volunteer professional ball players who joined the Army. Erhard said he was especially mentored by hall of famer Stan Musial of St. Louis Cardinals fame.

Erhard taught English and journalism at Highland High School from 1949-53, and served as director of public information for the Albuquerque Public Schools from 1953-56, where he founded its Public Information Department.

Erhard went on to become assisstant director of press, radio and TV relations for the National Education Association in Washington, D.C., for a year in 1957 before taking a position as senior fellow in the English department at UNM in 1959 while completing his doctorate, and then moving to NMSU in Las Cruces where he spent a 31-year professorial career starting in 1960.

Of his many plays for young people, "Rocket in His Pocket" was one of several that achieved national fame, and the royalties from the play were sufficient to finance all the costs of his doctoral studies at UNM. In more recent years, Erhard was commissioned by NMSU to write the play "And ... Here Come the Aggies" in celebration of the university's Centennial year. He co-wrote the play with his wife of 34 years, Evelyn Madrid Erhard. The two also collaborated in the dramatic adaptation of the Frank Waters novel "The Woman of Otawi Crossing," produced in Reader's Theatre at NMSU in 1989.

As part of his service to education in New Mexico, Erhard founded the New Mexico High School Creative Writing Awards in 1961, a contest and publication that reached out to all New Mexico and Southwest regional high schools. It was a project that he directed for more than 25 years.

Because of his passion for sports, Erhard began announcing Aggie home games in football and basketball almost from the inception of his NMSU teaching career. He was in the press box for every Aggie home game from 1960 through 1995, four years after his official retirement from the faculty. To recognize his service NMSU inducted him into the Athletic Hall of Fame in 2006.

One of Erhard's most-treasured awards came in 1986 when he received Hofstra University's George M. Estabrook award to distinguished graduates, an honor shared with such luminaries as filmmaker Francis Ford Coppola.

Erhard is survived by his wife of 34 years, Evelyn Madrid Erhard, and three sons with their spouses: Danny Erhard and Sue Terebenetz; Larry Erhard and Kathryn Sayles; Bruce Erhard and Martha Lyle. The family has chosen Getz Funeral Homes for cremation services.

A celebration of Tom Erhard's life was scheduled for Thursday Nov. 14, for his wide circle of family, friends and colleagues.

Arrangements are with Getz Funeral Home and Getz Family Crematory 1410 E. Bowman Ave, Las Cruces New Mexico 88001. To sign the local online guest book visit www. GetzCares.com.

Curtain up!

Checking in with the hometown crowd, state Sens. Joseph Cervantes and John Arthur Smith and Reps. Terry McMillan, Bill McCamley and Mary Helen Garcia outlined their priorities to constituents attending a Nov. 5 Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce Legislative Luncheon.

"The future looks precarious for New Mexico," Senate Finance Chairman Smith said, citing the continuing threat of sequestration. "We're trying to be as fair as we can with the resources we have."

When resources are scarce and uncertainty hangs in the air, legislators have an incentive to fight for southern New Mexico's fair share of the shrunken pie – for projects they believe are vital to this area and misunderstood or discounted in Santa Fe

But Cervantes introduced a different perspective on the wisdom of grabbing the biggest possible piece of the pie.

He unwrapped and then addressed the a-political elephant in the room: an invisible line across the desert marks a divide between northern and southern New Mexico.

"It is us against them," Cervantes said.
"We pay for Spaceport (America) because Santa Fe said that's a local project.
In reality all the money, the power, still are up north."

But the needs the southern New Mexico legislators talked most about – water and education – are not exclusively the needs of the south.

Although Cervantes said there is a north-south divide in New Mexico, he didn't suggest playing nasty to get our fair share. He suggested playing smart and playing fair.

and playing fair.

"We have got to take the issues that are local to us and make them state issues," Cervantes said.

Transforming what Las Cruces and Santa Fe have in the past considered local concerns into statewide issues is a big job that will require all of us – residents and representatives – to become well informed, smart, collaborative, vocal and fair in our recommendations.

We have a great example to follow.

Holiday shopping starts

Shorter season energizes retailers

By Alta LeCompte

On the J.C. Penney website, the shopping countdown has begun.

The days, hours and minutes rolling by, however, are not days until Christmas. They are days until Black Friday.

The countdown is just one tool major national chains are using to prod consumers into a sense of urgency about starting their holiday shopping.

A very late Thanksgiving – which translates into a very late Black Friday and fewer than usual days between Black Friday and Christmas – is the cause of the frenzy.

"There's a limited number of holiday gift dollars out there, and whoever gets them first, wins," retail analyst Candace Corlett said.

Both Walmart and JC Penney announced free online shipping that started the first of the month. Walmart and others started rolling out holiday busters online Nov. 1.

Major retailers set the pace

Retail chains across the country will open Thanksgiving Day rather than in the wee hours of Black Friday.

Penneys and Sears in Mesilla Valley Mall are opening earlier than ever this year – 8 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 28. Mall newcomer Conn's will open 6 p.m. to midnight and then 4 a.m. to midnight Black Friday.

Smaller shops are pushing back their hours as well, mall spokeswoman Susan Palmer said. She said at least seven will welcome customers at 8 p.m. Thanksgiving Day, while others will start the season at midnight.

Technicians Floyd Gore and Rick Reichert assemble an artificial forest to make Santa feel at home when he arrives Friday, Nov. 29, at the Cineport entrance to Mesilla Valley Mall.

"The mall stores will all be open by 4 a.m. Friday," Palmer said.

It's the earliest opening ever.

Best Buy's Las Cruces store will mirror the national chain's holiday schedule, opening 6 p.m. Thanksgiving Day and staying open continuously through 10 p.m. on Black Friday.

"Last year it was midnight," said operations manager Harry Day. "We're opening significantly earlier this year due to growing competition from other retailers."

Getting into the game early included starting the extended holiday exchange period Nov. 3 and launching online promotions.

Day said the store completed preparations for the season the third week in October when the final batch of seasonal employees was brought on board and "brought up to speed with training."

In the world of retail this year, November is the new December.

In the Mesilla Valley, not quite so much.

Creating a sustainable environment

Mountain View Market Farm introduces a new element to the garden mix

By David Salcido

Las Cruces Bullet

For just over two years, Mountain View Market Farm has been doing its part to keep Las Cruces and the Mesilla Valley sustainable.

Located on 2.5 acres of land southwest of the city, where Calle de Sur and Snow Road intersect, the farm, as it is simply known, has become a success story of sorts by relying on community volunteers to provide locally grown produce the old fashioned way.

"We grow what is considered specialty crops," said Farm Administrator Nicole Fuchs. "We value the theory that we only grow what grows well here. We would never try to grow lemons or avocados here, even though people love them, because that's not what grows well in our climate, our soil or with our water availability."

Mountain View Market General Manager Shihad Mustafa estimates that maybe only 20 percent of the produce sold at the Market, located at 1300 El Paseo Road, comes from the farm. A large portion of what's grown there is shipped out to local restaurants such as The Bean in Mesilla, Si Bistro in Las Cruces and several businesses in El Paso, including Adrovinos Market.

"We just don't have the variety or the volume to fully serve the market," he said. "And the Coop can't fully support the farm by itself. That's why it's good to have restaurants and other people purchasing."

Always looking for innovative ways to grow the operation, Mustafa, Fuchs and Farm Manager Lori Garton recently introduced another opportunity to the farm. In September, they unveiled a new aquaponics system and in mid-October, a second aquaponics greenhouse was introduced. Both greenhouses are geared not only for the raising of crops, but fish as well.

"Aquaponics is a combination of aquaculture, which is the raising and maintaining of fish, and hydroponics, which is raising vegetables without soil," Mustafa explained. "Combining the two, what you do is create a system where you have fish creating waste, which actually feeds the plants. The plants in turn filter the water, which goes back to the fish."

Mustafa introduced the first greenhouse after a visit to Milwaukee where he saw the system in use to grow produce in adverse environments via an enclosed system.

The first system uses a threetiered environment in which a large trough is sunk into the ground and filled with water and goldfish. The water is then pumped up to the top tier, which is filled with a clay pellet media called Hydroton. The water is filtered there and dropped down into the second tier, where the plants are grown in small trays filled with a combination of worm casting and coconut core. The roots of the plants further filter the water, while also wicking up the nutrients left by the fish in the water. The now clean water is dropped down into the fish

What we're growing here is microgreens," Mustafa said, "which is a combination of radish, tatsoi, kale, sunflower sprouts and wheatgrass. It changes depending on what seeds we have."

The second aquaponics system only consists of two tiers and utilizes what is called a "raft" system. In this system the water is pumped up from two 250 gallon troughs, filled with around 50 trout each, into a long tray filled with polylstyrene floats. The floats have holes cut into them every three or four inches and small plastic baskets to hold the plants. The water simply flows underneath the floats, where the exposed roots filter the water before it reaches the drop pipe that sends the water back into the fish trough.

"We're going to grow let-tuce and tatsoi, things like that in here," Mustafa said. "One of the big differences with this system is you can grow really tall plants. We can grow collard greens, chard, mustard greens and kale with no problem." And don't forget the fish. Procured from the Mescalero Tribal Fish Hatchery by Fuchs, the trout are yet another sustainable food item that can be provided by the farm.

"We're hoping that our success in growing fish in the aquaponics system matches our success in growing vegetables," Fuchs said.

This is more for demonstration purposes," Mustafa said. "It's not big enough to grow a ton of food, but it's enough to demonstrate what can be done with this system. Ultimately I'd like to see an aquaponics system that's four times this size. Believe it or not, because it sounds and looks like this uses a lot of water, it's about a tenth of the amount of water that's being used in a row system, because it keeps recirculating. Something like this could go in somebody's backyard and feed a family, easily."

True to his word, from 10 a.m. to noon Saturday, Dec. 7, Mountain View Market Farm will present its first aquaponics workshop, to teach interested parties how to create their own sustainable food system. Space is limited to 20 people, so early registration is encouraged. For more information, call 523-0436 or visit www.mountainviewmarket.coop.

The stakeholders in our area get together each year to come up with a "platform" of priorities they can agree on. The group includes representatives of the city, county, colleges and chambers.

While each entity's funding requests don't all make the final list, each stakeholder has a say in the process. In the end, all the players advocate collectively for the items on the final list.

If local stakeholders with diverse priorities can reason together, so can state legislators.

McCamley, who wants to broaden and flatten the New Mexico's corporate tax structure, is taking that path.

Rather than get hung up on who's going to fight change, he aims to work smart. A Democrat and member of the House Committee on Taxation and Revenue, McCamley is partnering with a Republican lawmaker this year to get rid of the GRT on services as a first step in reforming the tax code.

If state legislators from different parties can craft joint proposals they believe will benefit New Mexico's residents and businesses, there's hope the north-south impasse can be breached in order to buy the most bang for the state's limited buck.

In addition, it may be easier than in the past for southern New Mexicans to get the ear of Santa Fe's power brokers. After all, there's a Las Crucen in the governor's mansion and southern Doña Ana is becoming the state's eco-

What's good for growth in Santa Teresa, Spaceport America and the valley that links them is likely good for all of New Mexico.

Santa Fe has the perfect opening to take a statewide perspective on what's best for all of New Mexico.

The 2014 legislative session can be an opportune time to raise the curtain that divides north and south.

Hanging the holly

Palmer said the decorations have been hung inside the mall and construction was set to begin Tuesday, Nov. 12, for the stand near the Cineport entrance where Santa will arrive at 11 a.m. Friday, Nov. 29.

"People are getting a jump on things," Palmer said. "They are out looking for bargains early on and a lot of the stores have early door busters."

Although online holiday shopping is grabbing a growing percentage of sales, going to the store is not going away, Palmer said.

"A lot of people are like me and like to look at and feel stuff before they buy it," she said.

Las Cruces gears up

Independent retailers that count on the loyalty of regular customers are not expecting an early rush.

Although Horse N Hound Feed N Supply has already announced on its website that toys have arrived, Amanda Creighton anticipates this year, as always, Christmas Eve will be their biggest day of the year.

"We have the outliers that already have done their shopping," she said. "We pick up a little with Black Friday and have a really big Saturday the day after. But Christmas Eve is our busiest day.

'It looks like we're the last minute place, but we're OK with that. It's been a really good year for us and we're excited for a good holiday season.

She said in order to have a banner holiday season, the challenge is to stay stocked after the bigger stores have run out.

Curtis Creighton said toys always are a big part of Horse N Hound's holiday business. Tonka metal trucks and loaders are a favorite.

"We think consumers are looking for a better quality toy that's more durable than average," he said.

Trendy toys include Duck Dynasty marshmallow guns. Other popular gifts are Western-themed toys and jewelry boxes for little girls and jewelry, hats and Cowgirl jeans for the ladies, the Creightons said.

A season that sparkles?

Keith Austin said the uncertainty of recent months in Washington has a lingering impact in the jewelry business.

Austin's Custom Jewelry & Appraisals started its holiday sale the last week in October and began advertising the event the first week in November.

"Most of the actual buying happens within two weeks of Christmas. We just keep advertising, keeping our name out there, and hoping the customers will buy," he said. "We'll be ready for them?

He said employees know what their regular customers like and will call them with suggestions.

Asked if the store changes its hours for the holidays, Austin said: "Never."

He said the additional sales don't cover the cost of the extra advertising and payroll costs.

"We close at 5:30 all year," he said. "But if customers are in the store, we don't shut our doors. We will stay open for them as long as they are looking at merchandise."

The Housing Authority Board meets at noon every third Tuesday of the month for about 90 minutes. A local state of mind

The challenge of changing our values

Carrie Hamblen Green Chamber

I am a creature of habit.

When my spouse and I go to our favorite local restaurants, I order the same thing every time. When I get sick, I try the same approaches of chicken broth, sleep and large amounts of Vitamin C as my getting-back-to-health regimen. When I go the store for groceries, I go to produce first, then meat, then dairy. Always.

Although I am not a vegetarian, I at least "try" to see if a vegetable or lettuce appeals to my appetite before moving on. It doesn't always happen, but when it does, my heart gets happy.

From the time I was 12 until I turned 40, I drank the same soda every day in horribly large quantities. I knew the best convenience stores that had the right "mixture" of flavored syrup and water. I am embarrassed to admit that I even knew how to change the syrup boxes that convenience stores use to flavor sodas when they come out of the fountain.

Thankfully, I don't do that anymore – because I had to change. I had to change my habits and reevaluate my values, to pay attention to my health.

I don't think I am alone in my "routines" and can certainly understand the difficulty when it comes to changing them. When it comes to changing long-standing habits and values, I can attest that it takes time and commitment, but it is worth it.

Several years ago, when the economy started failing, my spouse and I decided to only go to locally owned restaurants when we went out to eat. It became a large part of our value system when we decided to support local businesses whenever possible. When asked by friends to go to a chain, we said no and suggested one of our favorite local eateries. Since then, we have formed lovely relationships with local business owners and are invested in their success.

Local landmark Caliche's tempts passersby to stop for a hot dog or frozen custard, whatever the time or season.

We understand that it can be so much easier to go to a national chain or big box store if you have a limited budget or are looking for electronics or specialty items. However, please take these factors into consideration before you shop at a chain:

Money spent at local stores stays local. Of every $100 spent, $45 to $63 stays in our community when you shop at a local store; $14 of every $100 spent at a chain stays in our community.

When you spend money at a locally owned store, you are supporting local jobs.

Local businesses give back to our community 350 percent more than do national chains. Think about a charitable cause you have been involved with. Was it easier to get donations from local businesses or chains?

If a local store doesn't carry the item you are looking for, ask if they can order it for you. If they can't, then go to a chain store.

Local businesses are invested in our community. The owners and employees live here, work here, have kids in school here and play here. They care about how our community grows and ways to keep it safe.

I hope that by encouraging you to "Think Local First" this holiday season, you will see the benefits unfold. Not only are you helping Las Cruces become a sustainable community where we can rely on each other, but you are keeping your friends and neighbors employed and therefore, our community richer.

Ranchers take stock of grazing land after the monsoons end

By Marvin Tessneer

Las Cruces Bulletin

Southwest New Mexico summer rains, were spotty, producing uneven cattle range conditions, ranchers report.

"Some areas had as much as 12 inches of rain, other areas had none," said Leticia Lister, Bureau of Land Management range specialist. "It depended a lot where the ranges are located. Where ranchers had early rains they had good grass, but it's drying out. Where they got late rains they have a lot of weeds."

Ranchers also are keeping their herd numbers low, she said.

Tom Mobley, who grazes cattle in the Uvas Valley, reported that during the monsoon rains, his ranch received 11 inches.

"I've got as much grass this year as I've ever had," he said. "Everything I see looks good."

"It rained pretty good on our range in September, but it hasn't rained since then," Greg Carrasco said. "And the rains left a lot of good grass."

Carrasco has cut his herd by about one-third since the drought started. He grazes black angus cattle between Las Cruces and Deming.

The National Agriculture Statistics Service reported southwest New Mexico range conditions as: 5 percent very poor, 33 percent poor, 60 percent fair and 2 percent good.

Every little bit helps

Any gift can aid the Breast Cancer Support Group of Southern New Mexico

The Gamma Beta Phi Society students of New Mexico State University are dedicated to being a part of positive change in the community and the lives of women.

The group donated $150 to the Breast Cancer Support Group of Southern New Mexico (BCSG) on Saturday, Oct. 26 during the organization's 17th anniversary party. The money was raised from selling lanyards during Pink Week. The money was donated by the Gamma Beta Phi Society so it would stay in the community to help women who are unable to afford breast cancer-related medical

"After each meeting, I realize the need for our support group. Generally we have one or two new attendees who are in different phases of treatment," said Bernadette Valdes, co-founder and co-chair of the BCSG. "It is so comforting to be able to discuss issues like side effects and treatments with other survivors. When Valdes lost her sister to ovarian cancer, she yearned for a group that could help her through the loss. When she herself was diagnosed with breast cancer a year later, she needed a group to help her understand her illness and offer much needed support.

As a trustee of what was then the Memorial Medical Center (MMC) Foundation, now the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico (CFSNM), Valdes spoke to the Foundation about the need for a support group and BCSG was formed with the CFSNM as the sponsor.

"I truly feel blessed to be associated with the CFSNM, which enables our BCSG to offer this needed support to our community," Valdes said. "Being a 16 year survivor, I truly believe we have helped and have made a huge difference in the community."

The BCSG meets from 10 to 11:30 a.m. the fourth Saturday of each month at Memorial Medical Center, Annex A. Over the past 16 years the BCSG has also been involved in many health awareness functions and fundraisers including an annual Christmas luncheon and fundraiser, where they collect gift bags for First Step Center women and children in need. Fundraisers throughout the year benefit the BCSG with funds for mammograms and medical consultation for suspicious mammograms, and it defrays the cost of monthly meetings.

Renee Apodaca, Kendall Gillett, Stacey Clayshulte, Alejandra Lerma, Cynthia Garcia, Stephanie Newell, Gamma Beta Phi Society, President Fernando De La Rosa, Breast Cancer Support Group Co-chair Josephine Wiskowski, Maureen Garcia, Deyanire Sanchez and Matthew Salazar.

Through the CFSNM, the BCSG created the Endowment to Fight Cancer in Southern New Mexico. The group also has a special projects fund used to cover the costs of mammograms for women who do not have health insurance or who do not have enough insurance to cover costs. Anyone wanting to make a donation to the endowment or the fund can do so through the CFSNM by sending to CFSNM/Breast Cancer spec project fund or endowed fund, at CFSNM, 301 South Church St., Suite H, Las Cruces, NM 88001. All donations stay in Southern New Mexico.

The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico is dedicated to helping the Southern New Mexico community now, and in the future. Founded in 2000, the Community Foundation offers opportunities for local people who want to give back locally. The beauty of the Foundation is that you need not be wealthy to make a positive difference in the lives of people throughout our area. Through the establishment of permanent funds you can sustain local charitable organizations, provide scholarships to area students and fulfill wishes that are close to your heart. Through our planned giving programs, you can honor loved ones or leave a legacy that benefits the people of Southern New Mexico for generations to come. The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico can advise you on how best to maximize contributions, no matter what size. For more information see our website at www.cfsnm.org or call Luan Wagner Burn, Ph.D., at 521-4794. To donate, mail your check to CFSNM, 301 South Church St., Suite H, Las Cruces, NM 88001.

'God bless us, every one'

'A Christmas Carol' returns and is better than ever

By Zak Hansen

Bah humbug!

The American Southwest Theatre Company (ASTC) production of the beloved holiday classic "A Christmas Carol" opens at 7:30 p.m. Friday, Nov. 22, and runs Thursdays, Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays through Sunday, Dec. 8, at the Mark and Stephanie Medoff Theatre inside the New Mexico State University Center for the Arts, 1000 E. University Ave.

In 2000, Tom Smith, knowing "A Christmas Carol" is a holiday favorite for old and young, decided to write a version of Dickens' story unique to the ASTC, with music written and composed with the aid of New York composer Roger Butterley. Smith's version of "A Christmas Carol" has been mounted on alternating years ever since, this year's production being the seventh iteration, but it's much more than business as usual this time around.

Given the large, state-of-the-art space the NMSU Theatre Arts Department now calls home inside the Center for the Arts, Smith, along with set designer Jim Billings and costume designer Kaitlin Spikes, decided to take the production to the next level.

This year, since we have a new building, new space and new capabilities, what we decided to do was to really flesh it out into a full musical," Smith said. "We added five new songs, redesigned the sets - a lot of things to freshen it up and to take advantage of this wonderful new venue. We decided our goal was to use this building to its full capacity and make this the ideal production, because we have the ideal space."

For this production, Smith and crew decided to focus much of their attentions on the concept of time, fleshing that out into every aspect of the play, from the sets and costumes to music and choreography.

"There are things that are traditional, that came from the novella, but there are a ton of things unique to this production," Smith said.

This year, one of the things that really intrigued us that we wanted to take a look at, was how the four ghosts - Marley, and Christmas past, present and yet-to-come - function in the play. ... We really wanted to re-explore that and play with the idea of time?

"One of the things Jim (Billings) and I worked on was creating a scenic piece that could tie everything to this concept of time."

The result - what Smith describes as a "gigantic mantle clock in the center of the stage" acts as a touchstone for this reimagining, with all four ghosts related to the clock in some way. The ghost of Jacob Marley, the first to visit Scrooge that fateful night, for example, first appears chained to this enormous set piece.

"Marley comes out chained to this clock, the idea being that he's sort of trapped between the ghost and real worlds and that he wasted his time, and he can't escape that - he can't get his time back," Smith said.

The ghosts - Christmas Past, Present and Yet-to-Come - are, wholly redesigned by costume designer Spikes, with their elaborate garb aimed to reflect this concept of time.

Creating a new, functional set that takes advantage of the added space and technological advantages of the Medoff Theatre was daunting, Billings said, but worth the effort.

"It's been exciting and terrifying, both in giant letters," he said. "You design in one space for 26 years and it becomes like an old friend."

Smith said much of Dickens' story's lasting impact is based around the work's major themes, which become especially poignant as we enter the holiday season.

The core story, of how we have to really examine life and make choices based on helping other people to have a real, fulfilled life, sort of strikes a chord with every community in the world," he said. "It takes a village, so to speak.

"Especially around the holidays, it's easy sometimes to forget those who don't have what you have. We're all running around, worried, spending money on the people we love, we have to get all this food and buy all these presents for people. It's easy to forget that, on a day-to-day basis, we should really be caring more about the people who don't have the opportunity to make those choices."

For Smith, Tiny Tim's celebrated Christmas dinner declaration says it all.

When Tiny Tim gives his famous line -'God bless us, every one' - 'every one' is really the operative word in that sentence," he said.

The idea we need to be looking out for everybody, and I think people forget that. They get hung up on the 'God bless us' part as the message, but really, the 'every one' is the most important part."

Featured musician: Misty Boyce

'That our feet may leave, but not our hearts'

Singer-songwriter Boyce traveled around the world to find 'home'

By Zak Hansen

Las Cruces Bulletin

Las Cruces native Misty Boyce has taken her humble musical beginnings into a career that's seen her playing on some of the world's best-known stages with platinum-selling, Grammynominated artists, honing her own sound along the way.

After a lifetime in Las Cruces – born at Memorial Medical Center and educated at East Picacho Elementary, Picacho Middle and Mayfield High School – Boyce said she "needed out."

"I sort of knew I couldn't get where I wanted to be musically if I stayed here," Boyce said of her decision to leave home.

Spreading her wings, Boyce attended the University of Cincinnati College-Conservatory of Music, where she studied jazz piano, before landing in New York City.

"Once I moved to New York, I decided I wanted to write my own songs and try to pursue being a singer-songwriter," she said. Life in New York was both difficult and inspiring, Boyce said.

"New York totally kicked my butt in a great way. You can't piddle around there, because everyone who goes there has an intention. When I got there, I knew I had to get really clear about what I wanted and just do it.

"I'm really thankful for that experience – and then I was really happy to leave," Boyce said.

Beginning her musical career as the keyboardist for The Naked Brothers Band, Boyce marked her TV debut with performances on "The View" and "The Today Show" in 2008.

Departing the East Coast for Los Angeles in April, Boyce said she feels a bit more of a connection to the City of Angels.

"New York is a very intense lifestyle, and I think L.A. is more my speed," she said. "It's a little bit slower, but you still have access to all the talent that's there."

While L.A. seems like a good fit so far, Boyce admits she hasn't had much time to spend getting to know her new home.

"I think I really like it – it feels more like home, and culturally, it's much more similar to Las Cruces – but I've only been there a week or two at a time," she said.

It's no wonder she's too busy to settle in: Boyce is currently on tour backing Grammy-nominated artist Sara Bareilles.

Boyce's connection with Bareilles began with an appearance together on "The Today Show" in April. Following that performance, Boyce joined the tour, in support of Bareilles' new album, making televised stops back on "Today" in July, on "Live with Kelly and Michael," "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno" and "The Late Late Show with Craig Ferguson."

The current tour has taken Boyce to some of the world's most renowned venues. Domestically, Boyce has played Red Rocks Amphitheater, in Golden, Colo., the Ryman Auditorium, home of the Grand Ole Opry in Nashville, Tenn., and Radio City Music Hall in New York – an experience Boyce calls "unreal, and one of the best nights of my life." These venues have seen some of the world's finest musicians grace their stages, to crowds as large as 10,000.

In November, Boyce returned to the City of the Crosses for two hometown performances. She brought her unique, Americana sound home, to the Atkinson Recital Hall on the New Mexico State University campus, accompanied not by the chart-toppers she's now associated with, but the MHS Orchestra.

Returning to play to a hometown crowd has been long in the making, Boyce said, and came at a time when she had come into her own, musically, and come to terms with her own feelings of what it meant to be "home."

"Five years ago I did a little concert at the Rio Grande," she said. "It was fun, but really not until this last year have I grown into my own as an artist and a performer."

As many do, Boyce said she felt ill-at-ease here, prompting her to leave. In her brief visit this year, however, she said she's felt more at home in Las Cruces than ever before.

"I love being here now, for the first time ever," she said. "I found some people, some places to play, some things I love about it, and I didn't do that enough while I lived here. It was so satisfying to really be myself for the first time, to feel good about what I have to offer musically.

"I feel like I'm doing what I love and doing it well. It took so long to feel that way."

So what's next for Boyce? She's currently in the U.K. recording her second full-length album, followed by several more dates with Bareilles in December. After that tour closes, Boyce said she plans to tour in support of her new record, with some dates in Germany.

Three national pizza chains – Pizza Hut, Papa John's and Domino's – offer mobile apps that take the hassle out of ordering pizza and limit human interaction. Which ones work? Which ones don't? Which ones make you look at some smug guy while repeatedly crashing? See below.

Impersonal pizza

Ordering pizza in the age of the app

By Zak Hansen

Confession time: I'm a man who loves his pizza.

In a home of two twenty-something bachelors, an average of four pizzas cross our threshold on any given week. Pizza is a versatile food, and it's this

Pizza is a versatile food, and it's this versatility that's made it the quintessential bachelor and collegiate cuisine. Pizza is good hot; it's also good cold. Pizza fresh out of the oven is a treat, but in many cases, it's even better the next day, both refrigerator-chilled and microwave-nuked.

Pizzas come in all shapes and sizes. Some are thin and crispy; some are deepdish; some are pan-fried and pillowy; some are traditional and hand-tossed. Most are round; some are square or rectangular; to my knowledge, none are triangular, which would just be stupid.

Pizzas come in all different varieties. The less-adventurous stick with plain cheese. Some pizzas come piled with fresh veggies, while others are loaded with all manner of cooked or cured meats. Some are even topped with fruit – an abomination in my opinion.

Pizza serves many functions, redefining itself along circumstantial lines, the way liquids take the shape of the container in which they're held.

There are joyous pizzas, bought for celebrations following big wins, birthday parties and late nights out. There, too, are laziness pizzas, picked up off-handedly after a long day of work or an exhausting weekend. Then, there are what my dear friend Richard Harris termed "sadness pies," those eaten to dispel all manner of malaise, from a rough breakup to a full-blown existential crisis – rich sauces and melted, gooey cheeses answering, momentarily, all those unanswerable questions (best eaten alone in a dark room).

Once upon a time, it took human contact to enjoy a pizza. Our forefathers, fools they were, used to leave their homes, travel en masse in cars to places called pizza "parlors," where they'd sit at large, square or rounded surfaces called "tables," using their vocal chords to communicate their pizza needs to other human beings, a process once known as "ordering," paying with a form of currency known as "money," made from paper and metal. Then, they would sit and wait for yet another person to make their pizza, then cook it, then deliver it to this so-called "table" for consumption.

Telephones changed everything, cutting the distance traveled – and that pesky human interaction– to a fraction of what it once was. For years, you could look up a telephone number in an ancient tome made of ink on pulped wood, known as a "phone book," dial numbers on a cell-phone-like antiquity that was – get this – attached to the wall by "cords."

Within a half-hour – depending

Within a half-hour – depending on the skill, shortcut knowledge and willingness to break traffic laws of the delivery person – a pizza was at your door. You didn't always even have to see a person then; some, most ingeniously Kevin McAllister in the 1990 film "Home Alone," left the money on the doormat, allowing their delivery person to keep the change, the filthy animals.

Now, even that seems like a bit much. Recently making the jump to being an iPhone user, I discovered a world of new ways to order pizza with little more than the press of a button. No more of that pesky "talking," "waiting" or "interacting with other people" for me!

As of now, three of the major chains

- Pizza Hut, Domino's and Papa Johns

- offer apps for both iOS and Android users. So which one works the best, and which one requires the most "other people?" I ate a bunch of pizza alone in the dark to find out:

Pizza Hut

I tend to stay away from Pizza Hut, after a number of youth birthdays gone wrong and a past history of pizza so greasy it clears the bottom of the box – "the window to weight gain" – but I ordered anyway, in the name of journalism ... and hunger and laziness.

The app itself is relatively intuitive, with coupons listed right at the top of the screen. The store locator works quickly and accurately – I'm not going to drive an extra quarter mile for pizza unless I absolutely have to – and it gives you the option of ordering now or at a future time or date, if you're somehow a person who knows exactly when they're going to want a pizza.

The ordering process is a breeze, the display clear and easy. When I arrived to pick up, however, I found my pizza was made correctly, but delivered to someone else. An apologetic staff and a free pizza helped ease the sting, though.

Papa John's

The worst of the bunch, for a few reasons. Aside from "Papa" John Schnatter's declaration that he'd be passing the cost of his employee's nowrequired health care directly to me, the loyal pizza consumer, this app is a mess. The first four times I tried to open it, it crashed - working just long enough to Schnatter's smug face smirking before it closed. On my fifth attempt, I was able to begin the ordering process, which is a disaster in its own right. Papa John's mobile app only allows you to make a certain number of changes; want half your pizza supreme and the other half cheese? Too bad. Papa John's is the Soup Nazi of the pizza app world.

Once I caved in, cut down my toppings and pressed order, the app crashed again. Upon reopening, it said my order was sent – at last.

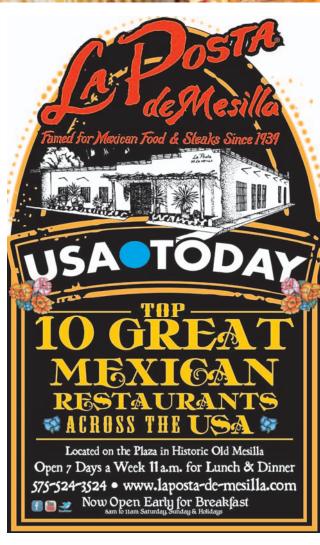

Until, that is, I arrived to carry out my sub-standard pizza and discovered the order went through twice, and charged me twice, putting me in the unique predicament of having a lot of pizza I didn't want. At least they gave me an extra pepperoncini, I guess.

Domino's

Domino's really nailed it here. The interface is clean and simple, making ordering everything from entreés to dessert a snap, without too many restrictions or hoops to jump through. Coupons are easily found and used, the ordering process quick and clear, and the app is free from bugs, insofar as I could tell.

What's more, Domino's has the so-called "pizza tracker," which charts, timeline-style, the progress of your pie, from the moment your order goes in to the second your pizza comes out of the oven. Traveling to the store, I was delighted to find my order was not only correct, but still in the restaurant and not doubled. That's more a credit to the restaurant than the app, but the pizza tracker is at least something to stare at while you wait.

And the winner is ... Domino's, although it's still easier just to pick up the phone.

'Thor: The Dark World' gets bogged down under its own weight

Review by Zak Hansen

A mish-mash of superheroes, sci-fi and fantasy, "Thor: The Dark World" falls somewhere squarely near the middle of the Marvel Cinematic Universe; not the worst, but far from the best.

It's at times arcane and convoluted, but when it eases up and gives in to the lightness of some of its peers, "The Dark World" can be entertaining, even fun.

The film opens with a lengthy, muddled backstory riddled with enough faux-Germanic names and places to make me cringe at the proofreading process: Bor, father of Odin (Anthony Hopkins), faces off against the Dark Elves, led by Malekith, bent on universal-destruction via the Aether, a chemical/biological weapon unsurpassed in its power. As defeat approaches, Malekith sacrifices his own legion of troops to deal as much Asgardian death as possible on the surface of his barren home world of Svartalfheim, before escaping into space in suspended animation. The Aether is safely (ha!) encased in a stone column and set to rest in a cave. Fast forward to the Asgard of now, and Thor (Chris Hemsworth), Fandral, Volstagg and Siff are deep in battle with a horde of troops on Vanaheim, in the aid of their friend and comrade Hogun. The battle will bring peace to the Nine Realms, following the rebuilding of the "rainbow bridge" between worlds, Bifröst, destroyed at the close of the first film. Yes, spell check, I'm sure. Fandral. Hogun. Bifröst.

Meanwhile, on Earth, Dr. Jane Foster (Natalie Portman), her former intern, Darcy Lewis (Kat Dennings) and her own intern, Ian (Jonathan Howard, discover an industrial yard where, it seems, objects no longer obey the well-worn laws of physics. Cement mixers drift inches above the floor and whirl through the air with the touch of a finger; a glass bottle tossed down a stairwell disappears, only to plummet from overhead seconds later, trapped in an endless loop.

Wandering off on her own – always a good decision - Jane slips through this gap in reality and is transported to another realm where she's accidentally infected with the Aether post haste.

From there, Malekith and the Dark Elves return to harness the Aether's power during the Convergence, a phenomenon in which all of the Nine Realms align, eclipselike, and Thor must turn to an unlikely ally - his brother, the traitorous Loki (Tom Hiddleston), still imprisoned for his attempted enslavement of Earth - to stop this otherworldly force. If this all sounds like a bunch of convoluted, Tolkeinlite fan-boy hokum, that's because it is. While it may appease the most devoted followers, the annals of Asgard's history play like a second-rate Silmarillion," and if you get that joke, you're just as big a nerd as I am. "The Dark World"

trudges along under the weight of its oppressive back story, as if you're up all night cramming for a big "Avengers" exam in the morning. To the director's credit, this is a lot to pack in to a single film, but much of it seems ancillary to the narrative at hand, sucking the life out of the lighter, airier aspects of the movie.

The Dark World" also has the delicate task of tiptoeing the line between its fantasy roots - the characters are straight out of Norse mythology - and the hifalutin sci-fi of its "Avengers" colleagues. At times, the hodge-podge of design seems clunky – naturalistic spears fire bright-red laser beams; Thor's hammer gives him the ability to rocket between dimensions, but it's also just a big hammer - but when it works, it works. The Dark Elves, in particular, are well-crafted, their blank, masked faces almost ghostlike in their ravaged, elemental home world. The action is exactly what you've come to expect from these films: big, loud and draining. It lacks some of the more thrilling set pieces of its cohorts, devolving into the occasional muddy melee of hammer smashes and lightning bolts. When Thor and company loosen up, though, "The Dark World" can be just as much fun as the best of its fellow "Avengers." The supporting cast, especially Dennings and an underused Stellan Skarsgård, bring some much-needed levity to the terrestrial goings-on, and the interplay between Thor and his Earthbound beau is cute enough without becoming sickly saccharine. Most interesting of all, the fraternal dynamic between the titular hero and Loki is more rounded this time around, and makes for the most energetic moments in under its own bloated narrative, when it lightens up, "Thor: The Dark World" is a fitting addition to the ever-expanding Marvel Universe

The film goes from competition to competition without missing a beat, which is extra fun, since one would think that that number of similar scenarios would become dull. But director Regis Roinsard keeps things lively by introducing a number of unique competitors, all of whom fall to

The romance between Louis and Rose takes root, but as Rose continues to win, her confidence and intellect grow, and soon she starts to see Louis for what he is - a taskmaster, using their relationship to keep her going in the competition. This all comes to a head when they head for New York City, where Rose is set to compete against the American all-star typist, a prim and tight-lipped multiyear champion, for the esteemed position of fastest typist in the world.

"Populaire" (named after the brand of typewriter) is a fun and merry romp, with just enough story and ingenuity to hold your attention. It is easy to imagine someone like Day as Rose, with, say, William Holden as Louis – smoking up the room and keeping her on her toes.

Frilly, fun, '50s-ish flick 'Populaire' makes typing sexy and fun

Review by Jeff Berg

A smart, sexy comedy about typing contests? Only the French could do that and get away with it.

Written and played similar to the 1950s American romantic comedies that were so popular (think Doris Day, et al), "Populaire" revives that gala genre quite nicely, thank you.

It is 1958 and Rose, a delightful young woman, tires of working in her father's store in her small French village. She is off to Paris to start a new life and her job search leads her to an insurance office, where any number of other women, young, old and in between, await the chance to be interviewed by the handsome and seemingly debonair Louis. Dressed in their Sunday finery, they all seem to stand above the mostly inexperienced Rose, who is summarily dismissed by Louis, since she lacks some of the basic skills required for the job.

Not satisfied with that, she "auditions" her typing skills just a moment before the caddish Louis escorts her from the office. A bit offbalance (read: klutzy), Rose is a terror on the typewriter, using only two fingers, much to Louis' chagrin. He quickly sees her value as a contestant for a national typing contest much more than a hired hand for the office.

Louis decides that advanced training and practice is needed, and has Rose move to his estate, which means, of course, that he is also going to be putting the moves on her.

Competition is keen as they used to tell me at the post office when I was rejected for a dozen management positions, but Rose, using her two index fingers on the best manual typewriter of the day is not to be

Some guidelines on lighting

The formula for finding the perfect chandelier

Maureen Villmer Practical Design

I am always asked, "How big should my chandelier be above my dining room

There are several rules of thumb to follow when selecting a chandelier. Look at the table size, and if it is rectangular, find a chandelier that could be oval or elongated to fit the rectangular space. If your table is round, a round shape would fit the best.

Recently, I had a formal dining room table that was so long it really deserved two chandeliers. That is exactly what I did. I just reduced the size slightly to avoid "overwhelming" the room and hung two chandeliers.

Take the width of the table, subtract approximately 12 inches, and that would be the diameter of your chandelier. So, if you have a 44-inch-wide table, the diameter of your chandelier should be at least 32 inches. You can fudge a little, but the scale will be too big for the room if you overdo it.

Consider the height of your ceilings, too. The higher your ceilings, the more opportunity you have to find the right chandelier in the right scale for your space. If given the choice, I would rather go bigger than smaller in my selection of a chandelier. If the fixture seems too large, hang it a bit closer to the ceiling so it doesn't seem too overwhelming.

You should hang your chandelier no more that 36 inches away from your table. The bottom of the chandelier should measure between 30 to 36 inches from the top of the table to the bottom of the fixture. Remember, your chandelier is an entity with your table, not with the ceiling. Your lighting needs to illuminate the table so you can see your food and showcase the table. If you need to showcase the ceiling, too, then add a medallion. They come in many styles and

Be careful about hanging too many chandeliers in one room. A general guideline is to be at least 48 inches away from any other hanging fixture, wall or piece of furniture such as a large china

If you are hanging a fixture in the entry, hang at least seven feet from the floor. Any lower and tall people might hit their heads. If you are in a two-story home and have a window just above the front door, be sure you can see the fixture from the outside through that window. The chandelier should always hang below the second floor level.

Don't be afraid to experiment with chandelier styles and where you might put them. They look great in bedrooms, kitchens, bathrooms and even home offices. Consider a more contemporary look, hanging fixtures mixed with more traditional furnishings. A very traditional look could also go with a room full of contemporary furnishings.

One final recommendation: add a dimmer switch to your chandeliers. It will create ambiance and a more flatterusual lighting for all rooms of your home right here in Las Cruces. We have a great mixture of prices and styles that fit our Southwestern architecture.

As with some other parts of interior design, it's like adding jewelry to a plain black dress; get a major change in a room's personality by changing the lighting.

E-cycle to take place Saturday

Fifth annual event will accept nearly all electronics

The South Central Solid Waste Authority will host the fifth annual electronics recycling event in Las Cruces from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 16, at the Doña Ana County Government Center, 845 N. Motel Blvd.

"Last year we collected more than 22 tons of electronics during the three-hour event, and expect to do about the same this year," said SCSWA Director Patrick Peck.

In conjunction with Keep America Beautiful, and in honor of America Recycles Day, Las Cruces and Doña Ana County residents are invited to recycle old electronics for free.

The SCSWA accepts anything electronic: old cell phones, computers, laptops, televisions, fax machines, copiers, security equipment and satellite equipment – virtually anything that plugs in, except "white goods," such as refrigerators and washers

What happens to your electronics? The SCSWA works with Unicor, the prison industries federal agency that disassembles electronics for the FBI, DEA and other major government agencies. Unicor uses a Department of Defense software program to "wipe" every electronic hard drive multiple times, to be sure your information cannot be misused in the future.

Why not just throw electronics in the trash? Recycling keeps toxic metals out of our landfill, and allows the harvesting and reuse of expensive precious metals also found in electronics.

For more information, call the SCSWA at 528-3800.

In 2012, more than 22 tons of electronics were collected during the South Central Solid Waste Authority electronics recycling event. This year's e-cycle will take place from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 16, at the Doña Ana County Government Center, 845 N. Motel Blvd.

Give Thanksgiving pizzazz

Say goodbye to ho-hum holiday dishes

When Thanksgiving Day rolls around we tend to prepare the traditional fare - from the green bean casserole to the turkey gravy to the pumpkin pie. I admit it tastes good, but it becomes ho-hum year after year. So let's get creative this time

I recently prepared a simple recipe that I thought would make a tasty side to the turkey centerpiece – roasted brussel sprouts touched with dried red chile. The aroma brought back memories of this year's harvest, when plump green chiles toasted in giant metal baskets that rotated over hissing propane flames. Consider the other recipes I share for your Thanksgiving feast. I promise the meal will be memorable, especially for snowbird relatives seeking the warmth of our desert Southwest.

Roasted Brussel Sprouts with Chile Tepin Dressing

This recipe can be easily doubled or tripled, depending on the size of the crowd. Each batch serves three to four.

3 cups brussel sprouts, washed and ends trimmed

3 tablespoons balsamic vinegar 5 crushed tepin chiles Freshly ground black pepper and salt to taste 3 tablespoons extra light olive oil Garnish: Parmesan

cheese, optional

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. In a small bowl, whisk together the vinegar, tepins, black pepper and salt. Slowly add the olive oil, whisking until the ingredients are well incorporated. Spread the brussel sprouts in a single layer on a foil-lined baking sheet. Drizzle the dressing over the sprouts and toss to coat. Roast for about 20 minutes or until sprouts are lightly browned, turning once half way through. Ovens vary so keep an eye on them to prevent burning. Once done, serve immediately in a favorite bowl sprinkled with Parmesan cheese, if desired.

Serrano-Avocado Dressing

Rather than ladling gravy on your portion of turkey or mashed potatoes, consider this healthy alternative: creamy serrano-avocado

1 ripe avocado, peeled and seeded 1/4 cup apple cider vinegar 1/4 cup plain honey or green chile honey 3 tablespoons lime juice 1 medium garlic clove, peeled 1/4 cup cilantro

1 serrano pepper, stemmed and seeded

1/4 cup water Salt and pepper to taste

Add all ingredients to a blender and purée for about a minute or until smooth and creamy. For a thinner consistency, add additional water. Makes about 1 cup.

Roasted Jalapeño Tomato Salad (Salsa)

This recipe by Rick Bayless (Salsas That Cook) also makes a tasty topping for turkey or mashed potatoes. Recipe can be doubled or

1 1/2 pounds, about 10 medium, plum tomatoes 2 to 3 fresh jalapeño chiles 1/2 small white onion, sliced 1/4-inch thick 4 garlic cloves, peeled About 1/4 cup water

1/3 cup fresh cilantro, loosely packed and chopped generous teaspoon salt

1/2 teaspoons cider vinegar Heat broiler. Lay whole tomatoes and jalapeños on a broiler pan or baking sheet. Set pan 4 inches below the broiler and broil for about 6 minutes, until darkly roasted, even blackened in spots, on one side. The tomato skins will split and curl in places. With a pair of tongs, flip over the tomatoes and chiles and roast the other sides for another 6 minutes or so. The goal is not simply to char the tomatoes and chiles, but to cook them through and develop a nice roasty flavor. Set aside to cool.

Turn the oven to 425 degrees. Separate the onions into rings. On another pan or baking sheet, combine the onions and the garlic. Roast in the oven, stirring carefully every couple of minutes, about 15 minutes, until the onions are browned and wilted or even have a touch of char on the edges; the garlic should be soft and browned in spots. Cool to room temperature.

For a less rustic texture, pull off the peels from the cooled tomatoes and cut out the core at the stem end, working over the baking sheet to catch the juices. In a food processor, pulse the jalapeños with the onion and the garlic until finely chopped scraping the sides down. Scoop into a big bowl. Without washing the processor, coarsely purée the tomatoes with any juice that has accumulated around them. Add tomato to bowl. Stir in enough water to give the salsa an easily spoonable consistency. Stir in cilantro and taste and season with salt and vinegar. Salsa will keep in the refrigerator up to five days or it may be frozen. Makes 2 1/2 cups.

Enchanting Red Chile Pecan Pie

1 cups brown sugar 1/4 cups white sugar 1/2 cups melted butter 2 tablespoons New Mexico medium to mediumhot red chile powder 1 tablespoon all-purpose flour 1 tablespoons milk 1 teaspoon bourbon or vanilla extract 2 cups pecans, chopped 1 pre-made 9-inch pie shell (or make your own) Garnish: Shredded mozzarella

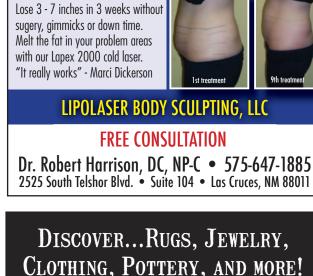

cheese, if desired

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. In a large bowl, beat eggs until foamy. Stir in melted butter, brown sugar, red chile and flour. Mix thoroughly, and then gently stir in milk, bourbon (or vanilla) and pecans. Pour into an unbaked 9-inch pie shell. Cover the edges with foil, and bake at 400 degrees for 10 minutes. Remove the foil, reduce the temperature to 350 degrees, and bake for about 20 to 30 minutes longer or until the center is set. Insert a toothpick into the center of the pie. If it comes out clean, it's done. (Recipe adapted from http://veggieobses-

Tamales for all seasons

History of ancient, yet delightfully humble dish

By David Salcido

Ah, tamales. Is there anything quite like them, especially at this time of the year?

A staple of weddings, festivals and the holiday season, tamales have become a tradition throughout Mexico and the Southwest. Here in the Mesilla Valley, they're as popular year-round as tortillas, posole and the state vegetables, red or green chile.

A potent combination of masa harina – or corn tortilla flour – and flavorful ingredients ranging from seasoned meats to fruit compotes, the ideal tamal is wrapped in dried cornhusks, then steamed to perfection, just waiting to be ceremoniously unwrapped and devoured.

But where did these unique pockets of spongy goodness get their start? How did they come to be the popular food item we all crave as the seasons shift to cooler temperatures?

The earliest recorded tamale reference dates back to 7,000 B.C. in pre-Columbian history, where a portable sustaining foodstuff that could be made ahead and taken on the road was created out of necessity among warring nations. The idea caught on, and soon there were as many varieties as there were peoples to create them.

Initially, the wrappings could be almost anything, including banana leaves, avocado leaves, soft tree bark or just about anything flat and edible, though over time it was the cornhusk that won out.

Some of the fillings that have been used in tamales over the ages are fish, chocolate, roasted meat, honey, nuts, fruits, raisins, beans, cheeses and, of course, chile.

Because the preparation of tamales is so labor and time intensive, eventually it became a tradition practiced only for special occasions, with the women of the family working together throughout the day to prepare the masa, cook the meats and fruits and, finally, assemble them, usually in large quantities.

For thousands of years, the humble tamal was a diet staple of most Hispanic peoples, but as the world has become smaller, more cultures have been introduced to it. Today, tamales are as recognizable as egg rolls, dolmades or pizza rolls – though some would argue that when it comes to taste, there is simply no comparison.

High Heels for High Hopes comes to town

By Charlotte Tallman

For the Las Cruces Bulletin

When Nicole Johnson gave birth to Mia, she experienced many emotions. The strongest emotion wasn't happiness, as many new mothers feel, but guilt.

"Mia was our miracle baby," Johnson said.
"I found out I was pregnant when I went in for a surgery to increase our chances of conceiving, after being told our chances for ever getting pregnant were low.

"There aren't words to describe our elation. During my fifth month, I was diagnosed with preeclampsia and considered high risk, turning our elation into concern."

Within a month, Johnson was placed on strict bed rest for the remainder of the pregnancy, and soon, her body filled with so much fluid that it was difficult to move. Mia was born six and a half weeks early, and was quickly taken to the special care nursery.

Johnson and her husband, Wylie, learned Mia's lungs were not fully developed, therefore she was unable to nurse or take a bottle. She was placed on a feeding tube and given surfactant to help her lungs develop. Over the next week, Nicole Johnson, who was very sick, was unable to get close to Mia, only watch her from the window.

"I blamed myself for not being able to carry her to term and for her laying there so sick," Johnson said. "I was heartbroken that I couldn't hold my child, and was terrified that she would never bond with me. During this time, I felt utterly helpless, uneducated and unprepared."

Mia is now 9 years old, and when Johnson was pregnant with her son David, now 7, she was once again diagnosed with preeclampsia.

"Despite being told my children may have developmental delays, they are truly miracles and have developed on track," Johnson said. "Although those experiences are the most painful and difficult I have been through, they have helped to educate us and prepare us for what came later.

"After being strongly advised not to have any more children, we were called toward adoption, and when we became parents of a medically fragile, four-month-old son three

Learning to ride as an adult beginner

Learning may mean making some adjustments

Katharine Lark Chrisley Stable Woman

The pursuit of horsemanship is not limited to the young.

An adult possesses a degree of self discipline and reasoning that will make concepts of horsemanship easier to grasp. However, the physical need for practice, application and repetition of the theories and methods used to ride are just as essential, if not more so, than they are for the youngster.

An adult body not used to being astride a massive animal will carry tensions that must be gradually overcome. The adult beginner will quickly understand, for instance, why that shoulder needs to be pulled back in a certain position, but may not follow the rule consistently because the shoulder resists. Practice will help make the body supple and balanced, allowing concepts to be applied correctly.

Riding is often used in hip therapy because the horse's moving back softly exercises the rider without bearing weight on joints. Much can be said for how learning to ride builds new dendrites.

Locate an instructor who has an approach you find compatible with your own personality and expectations. You may be more comfortable with an instructor who specializes in teaching beginning adults, rather than being placed in a class with children.

You should be mounted on well-trained, mature horses with experience in the style of riding you prefer, and on whom you feel confident. During the first year, you will need much supervision and many, many hours of practice. Private lessons will move you along quickly, although you cannot judge your own progress by comparison with other riders.

Simple attire is all you require. For safety, always wear a hard hat and sturdy boots. Leather gloves will protect your hands and will help you grip the reins in all kinds of weather.

Riding tights are comfortable and breathable. Riding jeans can be worn casually when you're not riding. Ask your local tack shop – found under "Riding Equipment and Apparel" in most telephone books – what options they carry for riding pants.

Regular jeans not designed for riding can cause bruises at the inseam, and can often chafe. Sweatpants will not chafe, but are slick on the saddle and can be distracting while you're trying to stay balanced. Don't wear anything constricting or floppy. A polo-style shirt, tucked-in, works well.

Keep hair contained so you won't have to push it around while you ride, as any time you fuss around with your hands, you give the horse conflicting signals. Don't wear jewelry that dangles or makes noise. If you wear sunglasses, get a sport band to hold them on your face securely.

Evaluate yourself by comparing your own personal improvement. Are you doing better than last month? Last week? Yesterday? Don't look too far ahead.

If you are too wrapped up in wanting to canter, you may never get the trot mastered to its full potential.

Take riding one logical step at a time. Work to make every facet of every ride the best it can be, full of grace and strength for you and your horse. And, have fun!

The March of Dimes is able to offer advocacy, research and life-saving medications because of fundraising efforts the organization undertakes – events such as the High Heels for High Hopes Menagerie Carousel Jubilee, presented by MountainView Regional Medical Center at 7 p.m. Friday, Nov. 22, at the Las Cruces Convention Center, 680 E. University Ave.

Five local salons, 20 new High Heels for High Hopes models and 20 of the most successful models of past shows will team up for an outrageously unique, circus-themed style show, and in the middle of the ring will be Mia and David, the Southern

New Mexico March of Dimes Ambassadors.

"Since 2007, this event has grown tremendously, showing the true generosity of our community," said Becky Horner, division di-

Leading up to the event, sponsored by the LNG Company, the Las Cruces Bulletin, El Paso Electric, the Haciendas at Grace Village, Las Cruces Sun-News, Radio of Las Cruces, Comcast Spotlight, Studio E Photography and Gonzales Photography, each model is raising funds and hosting their own fundraising events.

New and legacy models are styled by Studio 037 Salon, The Fixx Salon, Wildfire

Hair Company, Carriage House Salon and Adore Salon and Day Spa with lead coordination by artistic director Leonard Jimenez. In addition to walking the runway as a legacy model, Margarita Salazar is also chairing the event. Charles LeCocq will serve as ring master, and Steve Chavira and Dolores Connor will serve as VIP dinner master and mistress of ceremonies.

"This show is so unique because we are celebrating the 75th anniversary, we have new models coming in ready to make a difference on the runway and we have our legacy models offering incredible guidance," Jimenez said.

Since 2006, 176,000 fewer babies have been born too soon in the U.S. due to reductions in the preterm birth rate, which has dropped to its lowest rate in 15 years. The High Heels for High Hopes campaign raises much-needed funds to continue the work of the March of Dimes.

Community members can help by donating to one of the High Heels for High Hopes models at www.highheelsforhighhopes.com or attending the events. Show highlights include a private pre-show VIP dinner, pre-show carnival booths and novelty acts, snacks and drinks and the ultimate circus runway show.

The TNR debate continues

Both sides want less free-roaming cats

By Michelle Corella
For the Las Cruces Bulletin

The trap-neuter-return (TNR) debate in this community recently took center stage at a joint city/county work session Oct. 16, as the practice of feline TNR was considered for inclusion in the City and County Animal Control ordinances.

Several city and county residents, both for and against TNR, provided input during this marathon meeting. The final outcome is yet to be determined, but for those who are on the fence or simply would like more information, read on.

TNR is a methodology for humanely and effectively controlling a free-roaming community cat population. These are cats that, generally, are unsocialized and actually shun human contact. They reside in areas where they have access to some form of food and shelter, such as a garbage dumpster or someone's backyard.

TNR involves trapping these cats, taking them to a veterinarian for spay/neuter surgery, a rabies shot and, ideally, tipping of the left ear – removing the pointy tip of the ear about one-fourth an inch – the universal symbol to identify a feline that has been through the TNR process.

TNR is practiced by many communities in the U.S. and elsewhere with great success. It is important to understand that a comprehensive TNR effort takes time – especially if the effort involves a large number of felines and a large geographic area. However, as evidenced in Albuquerque (which received a sizeable TNR grant and has the support of many community residents, as well as the animal shelter and animal control entities), the results can be dramatic.

In 2009, almost 60 percent of cats entering the Albuquerque Animal Shelter were euthanized. In 2013, the shelter is on track to euthanize less than 11 percent. This translates into many thousands in taxpayer dollars that can be used elsewhere.

Currently, the trap-remove-kill (TRK) methodology is the only legally acceptable means of dealing with community cats in Doña Ana County and Las Cruces. From 1989-2012, more than 100,000 cats were killed in our local shelter at taxpayer expense.

Last year alone, more than 3,700 cats were killed, and it's on track to kill an additional 3,000 cats in 2013. If the TRK methodology were truly effective at controlling the feline population, this community wouldn't still be killing cats by the thousands each year – again, at taxpayer expense.

TNR is effective for a number of reasons. Cats are naturally territorial, and a colony of felines will defend the area where it resides, discouraging other cats from infringing on that territory. Once all colony members have been TNR'd, they will continue to inhabit and protect their territory, but will no longer be able to reproduce, so over time, the colony numbers will begin to decline (the average lifespan of a community cat is somewhere between 2 and 6 years).

Any injured or chronically ill cats should be humanely euthanized. Any abandoned, lost and tame cats or young (6 to 9 weeks) kittens should be removed from the colony, placed in foster care and adopted into good homes. Bottom line: A properly managed TNR program involves more than just TNR. It also involves euthanizing cats when medically necessary, and removing adoptable cats from the colony.

Fewer community cats translates into less nuisance, to include wildlife predation and using flowerbeds as litterboxes. A properly managed TNR program, over time, will achieve this goal. Additionally, sterilized cats will not be as inclined to indulge in the nuisance behaviors commonly associated with breeding, such as roaming, fighting, howling and spraying.

Believe it or not, TNR advocates want the same thing as those who are opposed to the practice – less cats. Willingness to work together toward this common goal will allow us to succeed, but the biggest winners will be the cats themselves, who will no longer be doomed to die at our animal shelter, simply because they don't have a home in the conventional sense of the word.
