Revising animal codes bogs down Enforcement among issues

By Todd G. DicksonLas Cruces Bulletin

It became apparent early on in a work session Tuesday, Oct. 15, to the Doña Ana County Commission and the Las Cruces City Council that there is still work ahead to form a more unified animal control ordinance.

In looking at recommendations from a committee and staff. there were recommendations that all could agree on, such as renaming animal control officers to animal control and care officers, said County Commission Chairman Billy Garrett. That name change reflects the desire to focus more on animal welfare than code enforcement, he said.

But agreement is harder to come by on other issues, such as feral cats and chained dogs.

Congress ends shutdown

Pearce is lone no vote in delegation

By Todd G. Dickson

Late Wednesday, Oct. 16, the U.S. House of Representatives agreed to an 11th hour budget deal from the Senate that ended a 16-day shutdown of the federal government, meaning hundreds of federal government workers furloughed in southern New Mexico went back to work.

The final package, unveiled by Democratic Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid and Republican Minority Leader Mitch McConnell on the Senate floor earlier Wednesday, would fund the government through Jan. 15 and raise the debt ceiling through Feb. 7.

The bill would strengthen income verification requirements for those who sign up for insurance under Obamacare, and calls for both parties to appoint lawmakers to form a conference committee to come up with a broad budget resolution by mid-December. The panel would be led by Budget Committee heads Republican Rep. Paul Ryan of Wisconsin and Democratic Sen. Patty Murray of Washington.

The Senate voted 81-18 to pass the measure, the House voted 285-144 and President Barack Obama sign the deal Thursday, Oct. 17, the day the federal government would have run out of borrowing power as it maxed out its $16.7 trillion debt ceiling.

New Mexico's two U.S. senators, both Democrats, and two of its three representatives, both Democrats, voted for the deal. The delegation's lone Republican – District 2's Steve Pearce – was also the only vote against the deal in the New Mexico delegation.

Prior to the vote, Pearce issued a statement that he would be voting against the

"Tonight, the House and Senate are expected to vote on an agreement to end the shutdown," Pearce said. "The good news is that this challenging time for New Mexicans seems to be over. The bad news is that the agreement does not end the double standard for Washington, nor does it change our nation's dangerous course of reckless spending. While I am happy that furloughed employees can go back to work, I will not be able to support tonight's legislation, which does nothing to address the problems we were elected to U.S. Sen. Tom Udall, D-NM, issued a statement saying that the deal also included retroactive pay for federal workers.

"Reason has finally prevailed in Congress, and we have a bipartisan agreement that will enable us to re-open the government, pay our bills and begin to restore the damage the shutdown caused to our economy," Udall said. "I hope we've reached a turning point for Congress that will result in greater bipartisan cooperation. No matter who is in charge, no party should hold the country hostage to make a political point. I'm relieved to return to focusing on strengthening our country and our economy, and finding a sustainable, long-term solution to our nation's finances."

While most of White Sands Missile Range's 2,700 workers had returned to work after only a few days of furlough, those enduring the prolonged furlough included more than 650 workers at NASA's White Sands Test Facility, as well as workers for the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) and other federal agencies.

The shutdown prompted the cancellation of a launch from Spaceport America and closed White Sands National Monument and BLM recreation areas.

Speakers from NASA scheduled for the International Symposium for Personal and Commercial Spaceflight also had to cancel.

Challengers say Pearce is not able to be bipartisan

Democratic contenders tout cooperation

By Todd G. Dickson

Two Democrats seeking to be the candidate to challenge U.S. Rep. Steve Pearce in next year's midterm election say his votes and stance on issues leading to the recent federal government shutdown show he is part of the problem in Congress.

Roxanne "Rocky" Lara of Carlsbad said the federal government shutdown was acutely felt in her community with the loss of heavy tourism that comes from Carlsbad Caverns, which is a national park and draws about 500,000 visitors a

"It's absolutely frightening," Lara

Leslie Endean-Singh of Alamogordo said her community felt the shutdown, as well, with many military contractors unable to work. Endean-Singh, a lawyer who has also managed her husband's medical practice, said she was shocked that Republicans would use their unwillingness to accept Obamacare as a reason to shut down the government.

"The Republicans are being very childish," Endean-Singh said. "Because they didn't get their way (in defunding Obamacare) they are going to take their toys and go home."

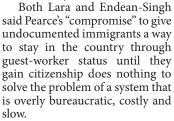

Lara, who is an Eddy County commissioner, said she has to work with Republicans on her board and is able to forge ways to work together. She said that's what people want to see in Congress.

"People are just tired of the fighting and partisanship," Lara said. "They just want to get things done and stop the game playing."

Both Democrats said Pearce's record of tea party-friendly votes and stances on issues show that he's more a participant in the infighting than problem-solving.
Endean-Singh said she also sees Pearce not coming up with workable solutions to other problems, such as immigration reform. She criticized his long-held position that the U.S.-Mexico border must be secure first before reforming the broken immigration system.

'The border will never be secure in his eyes," she said.

Pearce, who used to run an oil company in Hobbs, is more popular in the "Little Texas" portion of the southern New Mexico 2nd District. Endean-Singh is having to fend off early criticism brought about when she was quoted by the conservative-leaning New Mexico Watchdog as saying 'we don't need to expand oil."

Endean-Singh said the article only partially quoted her.

Oil is here to stay, but we also need to expand renewable energy," she said. "Fracking is here to stay, but we need to make sure it's done safely. Oil and gas are very important to New Mexico, however we also need a balanced approach to the environment. Our state is beautiful and I want to keep it that way."

The wearing of the pink

Tough or not, it just might save a life

It's safe to say the color pink has lost its stigma, at least in Las Cruces.

Since 2007, late September and October in our community have taken on a rosy hue. If anything, there has become a stigma about not wearing pink this time of year. "Where's your pink?" people will ask.

Of course, it all goes back to the New Mexico State University Aggies Are Tough Enough to Wear Pink campaign.

This year, even our Aggie football players will be putting on the pink during the Saturday, Oct. 19, game against Rice.

If you've lived in Las Cruces for at least 13 months, you know what we're talking about

For the uninitiated, here's the scoop.

Breast cancer.

If you've read this far into the column, another woman in the United States has been diagnosed with cancer since you started. If you read the whole column, it's likely another American woman will die from breast cancer.

According to the American Cancer Society, more than 200,000 women are diagnosed each year (about once every three minutes), and about 40,000 women die from breast cancer each year (about once every 13 minutes).

Almost all of us know someone who has been diagnosed with breast cancer, and many of us know someone who has died from the disease.

We all know wearing pink will not cure cancer, but, believe it or not, wearing pink just might save a life.

Here's how.

Say someone has been thinking, maybe just in the back of her mind, about getting a mammogram. However, as she goes into a local place of business and sees employees wearing pink, the thought moves a little closer to the front of her mind. As she drives by the local high school and sees the decorations she thinks about it a little more. Then when she picks up her child from elementary school, and sees that school's decorations, and hears her child ask questions, it's now a priority. Then, after reading more about Tough Enough in the Las Cruces Bulletin and seeing and hearing it all over the other local media, she takes the final, most important step – scheduling an appointment.

If, during the mammogram, something is detected, there's a good chance any cancer can be knocked down.

Early detection is key. Nothing is more critical to beating breast cancer than early detection.

So please, go get a mammogram.

If you've gotten your mammogram, thank you. Please encourage friends and loved ones to do the same. And if you've already encouraged them, then pitch in a few bucks to Money raised by NMSU Aggies are Tough Enough to Wear Pink goes to fund Cowboys for Cancer Research's medical endowments at both NMSU and the University of New Mexico. Scientists at both institutions are making important strides in the battle against breast cancer.

And how cool is it the money stays here in New Mexico.

There will one day be a cure for breast cancer. And at the rate we're going, it could happen right here in the Land of Enchantment.

So whether you're contributing with your wallet or with your wardrobe, or with your valuable time, you're making a difference.

It could help save someone's life.

Cruz-ing ahead

Sen. Rafael Edward (Ted) Cruz gleefully proceeds toward the shutdown of the U.S. government. By coincidence, while booking tickets for an airline trip taking place two days after Cruz's planned "accomplishment," many seats seemed to be available.

Obviously, with the government shut down, passengers like myself (with nonrefundable tickets) will be guinea pigs for an airspace over the nation free of the nuisance of air traffic control.

Other thrills await as well. For example, with oceans of chemical warfare agents sloshing about the Middle East and other hazards, shutdown of the U.S. Public Health Service, the Centers for Disease Control, the CIA, FBI and FEMA will be welcomed by all.

Oddly, perks for members of Congress, such as Cruz, will continue regardless, including free health care (supposed to cost members of Congress $100 per year, but few actually pay) provided by the Office of the Attending Physician and his five Navy corpsmen. Free drugs, of course.

Other perks include a complex of members-only dining facilities, a private subway, health club and top-drawer security.

Supposedly, opposition to "Obamacare" is Cruz's focus. However, he entered the world in 1970 enveloped in the warm embrace of socialized health care available in Alberta Province, Canada, since 1950.

Having been unable, despite decades of lucrative employment - mostly at taxpayer expense – to raise the $100 fee for paperwork to renounce his Canadian citizenship, Cruz can simply claim his passport at any Canadian consulate and return to Canada, resuming his membership in its health care system and

The rest of us will be obliged to forego our future health care options to further Cruz's limitless ambitions.

Not a single political argument left today

President upset with GOP is hurting all

This president

attempt to hurt all

Americans just out of spite and anger at the Congressional Republicans.

Michael Swickard In My Opinion

"If you can't answer a man's arguments, all is not lost; you can still call him vile

Elbert Hubbard

My last column pleased some readers while angering others. So I got lots of email. There was a commonality in the angry ones who always started by calling me a racist.

Then they labeled me an extreme Republican Fox News wacko. Sorry, I am neither a Republican nor a Fox News viewer. Typical was: "You miserable misleading Republican bigot racist moron."

For some reason they make it personal. Some even slurred my dog Conrad. He did not mind and replied, "To know me is to love me, I must be a helluva dog. ..." Conrad stole that from a Mac Davis song. But it is true.

And I am fine with personal attacks. Former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher noted, "I always cheer up immensely if an attack is particularly wounding because I think, well, if they attack one personally, it means they have not a single political argument left."

Very few of the angry ones did more than call me vile names. A couple of readers did mention the arguments in my column. For that I am grateful. I agreed with one that I should not call the president names. That does not mean I should not oppose his actions.

Some who wrote were tickled I said what they had been thinking. Great! But others called me a poopy head. They shouted as loud as they could (in writing) but did not take on my concern that this president had been acting in a mean-spirited manner.

Most who communicated via email just threw down the racist label as if all who oppose our president can be labeled as doing it for racist reasons. Having the first president of African-American heritage was supposed to heal our racial wounds, not exacerbate them. If we cannot criticize this president then I am sorry he was elected because it is one of the great activities of free men and women to boo the president.

We are getting to a strange place in politics where the first thing out of people's mouths is to call someone a racist. Racism has largely been subdued in our society so that any real racism is dealt with swiftly and with overwhelming force. This is not a racist society any longer. We Americans do have a past that is the cause for much shame. But that has ended.

The name calling used to be different. For example: A woman was upset with something I said on my talk radio program a few years ago. She called in to smack me around. She said, "You big, fat, old, ugly, bald, rich Republicans really bother me. ..." I cut her off, "Ma'am, I am not rich."

Everyone in the control room laughed. She paused. "What?" I replied, "Well, you can call me all of those other things, but just don't call me rich." She was put off her prepared talking points and so my comment stalled her out. I thanked her for listening and moved on, smiling.

I am rather immune to being called school-yard bully names. It does not really even get my attention other than to note how immature people sound when blasting away with the insults. Let fly with the insults because it means my arguments work and you do not have an answer for them.

What no one answered is why this president needs to make it harder on all Americans just because he is sore at the Republicans in Congress. They made him mad and if he wants to talk smack with them, be my guest. If he wants to make it hard on the Republicans in Congress, that is his prerogative.

But America has well over 300 million citizens. Of that number approximately 200 million Americans are eligible to vote. Around 50 million are Republicans and 70 million are Democrats. Obviously many Americans are not registered to vote. Hurt those Republicans and not 90-year-old veterans.

This president should not attempt to hurt all Americans just out of spite and anger at the Congressional Republicans. Leave the rest of us out of the punishment.

'Mobster President'... really Michael?!

Michael Swickard's opinion column of Oct. 11 seemed a bit on the extreme side.

One wonders if he actually believes that the duly elected (twice) president of the United States is a "Chicago-style mobster," building his evil legacy.

If the president is guilty of mobsterstyle tactics, how do you label the tactics of the tea-party gang, who forced the government shutdown, and the Republicans in Congress who went along? It should be apparent by now that the

It should be apparent by now that the partisan strategy of Discredit Obama, Derail Anything Obama Does, isn't working.

From the day Obama was first elected, the mantra grew: "Obama is not an American," "Obama is a Muslim," "Obama is worse than Hitler," "Obama is the Devil," etc. etc.

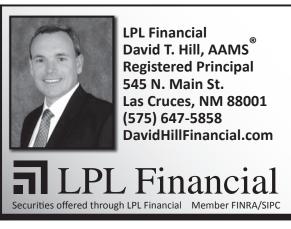

Seems to me that phrases like "mobster president" bandied about in a public forum deserve the same level of credibility, and are doing little to promote a sensible dialogue in these contentious political times.

Come on guys, let it go. Get a new strategy. The one you had is not playing well with the American people.

Make a new plan, one that for a change suggests ideas that might benefit the country, instead of reinforcing purely partisan divisions

Tea party propaganda

Why are the tea party faithful shocked to find government services shut down when their demands to shut the government down are actually met?

In his recent propaganda piece concerning the shutdown, Michael Swickard calls the president of the United States a Chicago-style mobster. He leads with a quote from Marlon Brando's character from the 1964 movie "On the Waterfront." Never one to let facts get in the way of good spin, Dr. Swickard ignores the reality that "On the Waterfront" took place in New York and not in Chicago (better we think Chicago mobsters). Dr. Swickard's fellow traveler and tea party apparatchik, Congressman Steve Pearce, might be taking his recent press releases from George Orwell's "1984." Mr. Pearce reports repeatedly how he has just voted against shutting down the government, when, in fact, he has done the opposite. Yes, ignorance is strength.

Perhaps a more appropriate quote would be from the 1942 film "Casablanca" when Rick's café was shut down:

Rick (Humphrey Bogart): How can you close me up? On what grounds?

Renault (Claude Rains): I'm shocked ... shocked to find that gambling is going on in

If the government shutdown were a movie, I'd have to give it two thumbs down.

True transparency?

Gov. Susana Martinez and the power-hungry Senate Finance Committee Chairman John Arthur Smith worked secretly to push legislation that trimmed the state's corporate income tax rate from 7.6 percent to 5.9 percent. Then to pay for this reduction in revenue of $ 70 million, they phased out the "hold harmless" payments the state currently makes to cities and counties to offset the loss of revenues from the 2005 repeal of the gross receipts tax on food and health care.

This is so wrong and has not and will not create jobs. It just puts a further burden on the poor and middle class.

There was no transparency by the Martinez administration or Smith regarding this legislation. There were absolutely no public hearings. Most state legislators did not understand the revenue bill, and it was passed at the very end of the legislative session.

The secretary of the Department of Finance and Administration simply told an untruth by saying that there would actually be an increase in state revenue in the next five years.

Smith and Martinez should be ashamed of themselves. New Mexicans should be disgusted by their political antics serving special economic interests.

Greg Lennes

Which entitlements?

Now we get phase two: Eliminate the safety net "entitlements" or keep the government shut down.

What about Wall Street's entitlements? The banksters create "credit" out of thin air to their sole advantage and loan it recklessly. Their frequent financial scams have stolen 401K money and crashed the economy to the cost of trillions of dollars. The "corporazzi's" oil wars cost us trillions in taxes (and thousands of dead and mutilated military and civilian personnel) to pay for the war and the economic damage done. They pay our politicians billions in bribes and the courts call it "free speech." These bribes kept an absurdly expensive (and non-curing) medical system in place to the benefit of pharmaceutical, insurance and medical corporations. They send millions of jobs to Oriental slave plantations, and book enormous profits in Singapore. They operate in such a way that the air, water and soil are poisoned and the food supplies adulterated. They pay virtually no taxes; suffer no consequences for their evil behavior. Where are the Congressional voices to end these entitlements when vets, the unemployed, sick, or impoverished folks need some help? Tell the bums to starve and go to hell.

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

Amish Recycling

The Amish have many admirable traits: generosity, a work ethic, a Godly discipline, thriftiness and a small footprint on the ecology. Talk about recycling!

They put us glass, tin can, cardboard, energy-hungry practitioners to shame. We use so much diesel, gas and oil driving, hauling, mashing, crushing and condensing the messes we make it's probably not an even trade.

The Amish don't make a mess in the first place.

An example of their "leave no mess" philosophy was demonstrated when Amish Joe decided to sell a cull cow at the local sale barn in rural Indiana. Joe hired a man to haul her. Joe's son Jack and his brotherin-law, Amos, all wanted to go. They could only fit three in the pickup so Amos climbed in the stock trailer with the cow. It was November, but the trailer was a solid body gooseneck with full doors so there was no danger of Amos getting cold.

Once they reached the auction and parked in the unloading line, Joe and Jack went into the barn to visit. Amos waited patiently for them to come back, until finally he beat on the side of the trailer. This racket woke the driver, who came back and opened the trailer gates.

Amos stepped out into the daylight, paused, and the cow ran out over the top of him. She trotted through the parking lot and as truck doors opened she showed them all her tail. Out onto the four-lane highway, she looked back with pride, and was blindsided by a well-used, faded gray Toyota Camry.

When Joe reached the scene of the collision he noted that the hood was dented and one headlight had a black eye. Joe offered to take the victim's information, but he took one look at the dazed cow and said, "No thanks!"

Before anybody could grab a rope, the cow struggled to her feet and ran into a newly harvested soybean field. The chase

The pursuers never had a chance, bogged down, slinging mud and stumbling over each other. Then, the Indiana State Police arrived. One officer stayed to monitor the radio, the other, Officer York, had just come on duty. His hat was clean, his shirt was starched, his brass was polished and his shoes were shined.

"I ain't goin' out der," said Officer York, "but with your permission I will restrain the cow." He drew his Glock 22, chambered for .40 S&W and began firing at the cow 20 yards away.

After a few stray shots he handed the pistol to Joe, who brought him down with one bullet. The policeman asked about disposal of the carcass. Joe said he would take care of it. After a 30-minute trip to Walmart he returned to the scene of the gun battle with a roll of plastic, Coleman lantern, meat saw and some butcher knives. By 2 a.m. they were putting a cowful of wrapped primal cuts in his propane freezer back home in the milk barn.

We can all learn a lesson about real recycling from Joe. As to what Joe learned, he remarked that if he was ever being pursued by the state police, he'd prefer it be Officer York, especially if gunfire was involved.

Let's fund early childhood education

Educational failure is costly to the state in the long run

By Bill Soules

When a 5- or 6-year-old starts school, much of his or her future success is already pre-determined by the lottery of birth.

Children born into poverty, through no fault of their own, have the life success deck stacked against them. As a group they will score lower on achievement tests, fall behind in school, be less likely to graduate, be less likely to attend college, be more likely to need public assistance and will earn less as an adult. The achievement gap at age 6 is already as much as two years and likely to grow larger. The remediation costs for society are great. It is time to invest in early childhood education as a hedge against future costs.

While education can be the great equalizer for children raised in poverty, current programs don't start early enough, don't recognize the value of family involvement, and tend to focus on cognitive skills to the exclusion of character skills. These character skills are patience, persistence, self-control, and communication skills. These character skills are necessary for the child to acquire the cognitive skills typically taught in school.

Character skill development works with and complements cognitive skills. Children who know how to learn, learn more. However, character skills development is usually ignored or minimized in many early childhood programs that try to "catch-up" under-privileged children. Character skills are correlated with higher wages, better health, and other measures of success. Such skills lead to greater

In the Perry Preschool Project, 3- and 4-year-olds in the treatment group were provided a preschool curriculum that emphasized self control, perseverance, and social skills along with more traditional cognitive school skills. In addition, parents were provided with training in parenting skills and how to provide enrichment opportunities. The children were evaluated over the next 40 years.

In the Perry Project, the calculated rate of return on the investment was from 6 to 10 percent per year for each dollar spent. The children in the treatment group showed greater productivity, less need for remediation, reduced interactions with the criminal justice system and a lower level of social dependency. This rate of return is greater than the historic return of the stock market. It was a good investment.

In the Carolina Abecedarian Project, parental education was coupled with cognitive stimulation, self-control training, health care and social-skill development for the treatment group of a randomly assigned cohort of disadvantaged children. These children were followed through the next 30 years. The results were equally clear. The children in the treatment group had significantly higher levels of educational attainment and were employed in more skilled professions than the control group. There were also dramatic effects on lifelong health outcomes. Treatment participants had lower blood pressure, reduced obesity, and fewer heart problems. Participation resulted in increased prosperity and better health.

With these dramatic results in controlled experiments as a guide, why are we not investing more in high quality early childhood programs to reduce the readiness gap? We spend a large number of dollars on remediation, adult literacy, and job training when we know there is a problem and we get a questionable return on the investment. It is more important to invest in early childhood education and therefore reduce the need for remediation. It is more important to prepare than to repair. This is not to imply that we should defund remediation in exchange for early childhood education, but we need to greatly increase our investment in early childhood education.

What course should we follow in New Mexico? The public knows that something needs to be done. Legislation that aims to retain third-graders who are not reading proficiently is founded on the premise that social promotion hinders their future. Funding for adult literacy is aimed at improving the economic opportunities for those people. Programs to improve college readiness are attempts to encourage students to reach post-secondary education. However, these programs are trying to remediate, at great expense, problems that could have been avoided in the first place. I believe that there is broad support for increased funding for early childhood education. We have had modest increases in funding for K-3 Plus. There have been small increases in the budget for child care programs but with questionable results.

The Legislature has been reluctant to greatly increase the investment in early childhood education. The rationale given for not increasing the funding has been a mixture of unsubstantiated effectiveness, lack of money for early childhood, and money spent on other priorities. Most recently there has been a move to use some of the money flowing into the Permanent Fund as a mechanism to fund early childhood education. This has broad support from the public but has been stalled in the Senate Finance Committee by Sen. John Arthur Smith because he believes it would hurt the long-term growth of the fund. However, Sen. Smith's Senate Finance Committee has not promoted or found another funding source, yet the committee has supported tax cuts, tax credits and has funded other programs although research does not support their return on investment.

New Mexico needs leadership now to invest in our children for our future. Early childhood education helps children learn how to learn and helps parents foster a brighter future for their children. Early childhood education pays dividends for many years to come and the public knows we need to close the achievement gap before children begin school. Investments in early childhood education are the only longterm way to substantially improve education in New Mexico. If the Legislature won't find a means to greatly expand the funding for early childhood education, then it needs to get out of the way and let the people of New Mexico vote on whether to use the Permanent Fund to support early childhood education. As the saying goes, "It's our money" and if we want it invested in early childhood education, then we should be allowed to do so.

Experienced researcher to speak

NMSU's College of Engineering welcomes Darryl Farber, assistant professor and research associate at the Larson Institute in the College of Engineering at Penn State University, to the Verge Fund Lecture Series in Innovation, Ventures and Entrepreneurship.

His presentation, titled "Strategic Analysis for Engineering Systems Risk Management, Innovation and Leadership," will be held at 4 p.m. Friday, Oct. 18, in Thomas and Brown Hall Room 104.

Attendees can learn from an experienced researcher about the evolution, governance and ethics of complex large-scale socio-technical systems.

In addition to his assistant professor role, Farber serves as academic coordinator for the Strategic and Global Security Program, an Intelligence Community Center for Academic Excellence. He has served as a postdoctoral research fellow in the Managing the Atom Project at the Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs at Harvard University. He also has served as a visiting lecturer-project associate at the National University of Singapore.

Farber co-founded a firm dedicated to the development of a mineral carbon dioxide sequestration technology called Carbon Trap Technologies.

Farber's scholarly work is focused on understanding the evolution, design, governance, ethics and leadership of complex, large-scale, integrated, socio-technical systems that have implications for security, environmental stewardship, economic competitiveness and social well-being. He earned a bachelor's degree with honors from Cornell University in agricultural, general plant science, a master's degree from Penn State University in agricultural economics and an interdisciplinary doctoral degree in technology management and policy.

Robotics contest to be held at NMSU

More than 700 students representing teams from New Mexico, El Paso and Arizona will gather to compete with robots that they designed and created Saturday, Oct. 19, at New Mexico State University.

The theme of the competition is "Gatekeeper" and it centers on building CPUs. The competition begins at 8:30 a.m. at the NMSU James B. Delamater Activity Center.

BEST, which stands for Boosting Engineering, Science and Technology, is an annual nationwide competition that offers middle- and high-school students an opportunity to work in a situation where they are confronted with the same problems, challenges and breakthroughs encountered by engineering teams. The BEST mission is to inspire participating students to pursue careers in engineering, science, technology and math.

Patricia Sullivan, New Mexico BEST director and NMSU College of Engineering assistant dean, has been involved with BEST for three years and NMSU has been host (or hub) to the local competition for 12 years. The New Mexico BEST competition is the largest in the nation.

Each year, teams are given a specific task and identical kits of equipment and parts to construct a robot that will complete the task. They then have six weeks to design, build and test a robot that will outperform its competitors. Schools will compete with each other on the game field. Schools will also be judged on presentations, notebooks, sportsmanship, spirit and exhibits.

The games begin at 9 a.m. in the NMSU Activity Center on the corner of Stewart and Locust streets.

transport six passengers into suborbital space on each flight that could become as frequent as twice daily. Taking the flights will be a three-day event for the passengers alone, with two days of pre-flight "astronaut training." The first 600 are paying $200,000 a ticket, which are now being sold at $250,000 a ride.

People who can afford to spend that kind of money for a ride into space are going to want to stay in six-star accommodations when they're on the ground, Blum said, adding that the area surrounding the spaceport currently lacks that high standard of hotel.

Yes, Blum said he'll want to take his son on a horseback ride somewhere while here, but there needs to be a lot more for these people to do.

That's the opportunity coming to the area, Blum said, because Virgin Galactic is focused on just getting the spaceliner flying – and flying safely. Virgin is leaving the development of accommodations and diversions to others, he said.

Blum, who originally made his fortune through PayPal, now lives in Las Vegas, Nev., and is founder and president of the investment research and media firm Hedgeye Risk Management. He has experience in setting up a world-class hotel in an area lacking amenities. He helped build a hotel-casino in Macao, China, but the hotel itself had to create other services, such as limos and dry cleaning.

Don't expect others to take the lead, Blum told the small group of about 50 luncheon participants at the New Mexico Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum who had paid $50 to attend the luncheon and take a bus tour to Spaceport America, 45 miles north of Las Cruces.

"This is something that's really up for grabs," he said.

The area has Old West, early Space Program testing and rich local culture to play on as attractions, Blum said. Residents shouldn't dismiss the lure of the surrounding desert scenery, he said, which will be more exotic to the visitors than locals.

To get a bead on what to play up, Blum said business leaders should try to talk to ticket-holders about what they want, rather than depend on Virgin Galactic or the New Mexico Spaceport Authority to guide them.

"You have to talk to people like me who bought the tickets," he said.

Blum acknowledged that outside investors have been holding off, but the first couple of short, rocket-powered flight tests of Virgin's spaceliner is encouraging, he said. In five years, that scene could be very different, he said.

"The ingenuity of the American entrepreneur can blossom here as it has anywhere else," Blum said.

New rocket at the spaceport

Why is SpaceX – a company that is successfully sending cargo rockets to the orbiting International Space Station – testing a vertical launch-and-landing rocket? That's because the private company doesn't like to waste anything, but it has been throwing away the first stage of its Falcon rocket, said Gwynne Shotwell, SpaceX president and COO, Wednesday, Oct. 16, in her opening talk at ISPCS.

Gwynne Shotwell, president/COO of SpaceX, watches a video of a Falcon 9 launch during her opening talk at the International Symposium for Personal and Commercial Spaceflight Wednesday, Oct. 16, at the New Mexico Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum. SpaceX will be testing a larger version of its Grasshopper rocket at Spaceport America starting in December.

The technology that flies Grasshopper, which had been tested at a farm field in Texas, can be used to retrieve the Falcon rocket's first stage, Shotwell said. With air space limits in Texas, but limitless air space at Spaceport America, a more muscular version of Grasshopper will be tested at the New Mexico spaceport starting in December, she said.

"We are very close to being able to have reusable, retrievable stages, so we are very excited about coming here," she said.

Since its smaller-scale start in 2006, SpaceX has $1.6 billion cargo contract for the space station with NASA and has grown to 3,200 employees, Shotwell said. The next step for SpaceX orbital efforts, she said, is to develop the Falcon Heavy, a dual-booster upgrade of its rocket to increase its cargo capacity to 53 metric tops in the committee work on the ordinance proposal, said the ordinance should reflect southern New Mexico uniqueness and be enforceable.

For example, a proposal to set a time limit of two hours that a dog can be chained calls into question whether an animal control officer would be willing to watch a home for two hours, Hoffman said. Staff said it could be treated as a nuisance complaint by neighbors who witness dogs being chained for more than two hours at a stretch.

Marcia Driggers, with the city's legal department, noted that many yards in the county aren't enclosed, so tethering – so long as it's done humanely – is the only option for some.

Jason Smith urged the officials to ban chaining dogs altogether. "You have a constitutional right to own a gun, but you don't have a constitutional right to own a dog," Smith said. "We have many freedoms, but one freedom we do not have is to treat (animals) any way we want."

Smith said Bernalillo County has banned chaining dogs in yards and in the back of open vehicles, such as pickup trucks. "We are behind the times," he said.

Smith also disagreed with a two-year delay in starting some of the proposed new animal codes.

"What are you afraid of – that the puppy mill party is going to vote you out of office? That the chaining coalition is going to vote you out of office?" he said.

Alice Anderson said she also would like to see an outright ban on feeding stray cats and dogs.

"If you make it legal, you'll have more of it," she said.

Feral cat control

Intense debate continues around the possibility of going to trap-neuter-and-release (TNR) guidelines for feral cats.

Garret said officials are not yet ready to make recommendations for a TNR ordinance. Proponents say neutering or spaying captured wild cats would draw down their numbers, instead of having them euthanized. TNR opponents say feral cats spread rabies and other disease while also killing off other naturally wild animals for food, especially birds.

Deputy County Attorney David Medeiros presented the commission and council with the potential positive and negative impacts a TNR could have on an animal control ordinance.

Anderson said TNR doesn't work.

"TNR has never eliminated a cat colony anywhere," she said. "Why do you think it would happen here?"

In terms of requiring pet sterilization, Hoffman said it is hard to tell if a female animal is sterilized, whereas sterilizing only males is ineffective. He said the only effective way to control pet overpopulation is to offer free spay and neutering of any animal. Legal staff said they weren't sure if that would violate the state constitution's anti-donation clause that prohibits public money being spent for private gain.

The differences between living in the city and in the county became apparent when discussing how many animals an owner should be allowed. In the city, the current ordinance requires owners of more than two animals to obtain a private kennel license for up to seven and limits them to two litters a year. In the county, a pet owner is allowed up to six animals and must then apply for multiple animal permits up to 15 animals.

City Councillor Nathan Small said even living in town the two-pet threshold seemed low.

"There are many good animal owners who own more than two animals," he said. "This restriction seems to push people further away from participating in the system. We should incentivize participation and not punish the most responsible owners."

County manager

Originally, the selection committee had planned to interview 12 semi-finalists, but four withdrew their names, according to letter by County Commission Chairman Billy Garrett.

The commission may choose to accept the five finalists recommended by the committee, or could return names to consideration. Almost 80 applied for the opening left by the departure of Brian Haines who has had medical struggles.

"The process undertaken by the commission – with the support of the Doña Ana County Human Resources Department – is designed to be transparent and free of both internal and external influence, so that only the very best candidates based on qualifications, experience and education rise to the top tier of candidates for the final offer of employment," Garrett wrote. "This has been a planned, deliberate and careful process. From the onset, my colleagues and I agreed that we wanted a search that played to excellent results rather than favoritism.

Sue Padilla, who had been the county's interim manager, withdrew her name from consideration to retire by the end of the year and pursue consulting opportunities in the county. Las Cruces Mayor Ken Miyagishima, a former county commissioner, had applied, but was informed he didn't meet the job's minimum requirements.

The county manager annual salary has been a little more than $138,000 for Haines and Padilla.

Oñate grad excelling in two sports

Barbara Boxleitner Keeping up

Zachary Erra-Hernandez is putting the finishing touches on an accomplished college career.

The Oñate High School graduate is in his final season of football for Carnegie Mellon University in Pennsylvania, where he also excels in indoor and outdoor track and field.

The senior fullback entered this week third in rushing yardage on the team despite playing half as many games as teammates ranked ahead of him. Through three games, he had 42 carries for 188 yards and one touchdown.

The 5-foot-10, 235-pound Erra-Hernandez has been battling an ankle injury that caused him to miss three games. He previously injured the other ankle and has been wearing an ankle brace and tape to cope with the current ailment.

"I do anything possible to stay on the field," said Erra-Hernandez, an all-University Athletic Association second-team pick last year, when he had 60 carries for 278 yards and six touchdowns.

Running back coach Jeff Simmons said most of the team's rushing plays are inside, tackle to tackle. But he said Erra-Hernandez is especially effective at spotting an opening at the line of scrimmage and racing into open space.

"For a bigger kid, he has great, quick feet," the coach said. "We try to mix it up with him. He's had a couple big runs."

Erra-Hernandez's lone touchdown was a 1-yard run to open the scoring in the team's first victory, which came in the second game. He rushed 19 times for 89 yards.

89 yards.
"I saw an opportunity to dive over the top of the pile," he said. "It's the first time I've ever done that."

Of course, blocking is a major part of his role. "Usually I'm used for protection, blocking off the edge or on the blitz or pressure over the middle," he said.

After football season, he begins track and field, where he has endured assorted upper-body injuries associated with his throwing. Still, he has thrived, for as Erra-Hernandez said, "My passion's in both (football and track). I really couldn't be luckier."

He is a past indoor champion and UAA second-team selection in the shot put, qualifying as a sophomore for the Division III national championships in the event, finishing 12th. He has been

Fresh off of bye week

Aggies look to bounce back

By Hugh Osteen

The New Mexico State Aggies football team is looking to bounce back from a rough first half of the season with a successful second half.

Coach Doug Martin said at a press conference on Tuesday, Oct. 15 speed is an issue the Aggies worked on over the bye week, from Oct. 6-12. He also gave more guys a chance and hoped to up the athleticism on the field.

The Aggies have a tough opponent coming in to Aggie Memorial Stadium Saturday, Oct. 19. The Rice Owls are coming off a win over University of Texas at San Antonio. The Owls are 4-2 on the season, with hopes of a bowl game.

The stakes are high for the Aggies. Not only is this the first meeting between the two schools, but it is also the annual NMSU Aggies Are Tough Enough to Wear Pink game.

"We're very excited about Pink week and buying into that with our community," Martin said. "I think that's a great thing that people here in town do."

Donning their new pink jerseys, the Aggies look to get into the win column and start off the second half of the season on a positive note.

"Our off week was very productive," Martin said, "It gave half of our staff an opportunity to go recruit"

The other half of the staff stayed on campus to lead what Martin said was "a very physical week of practice."

"We took it as an opportunity to get better. To bring some young players along and give them some live experience." he said.

Competition within the team at certain positions continues.

Martin said there is always competition. There will be adjustments due to injuries, such as Travaughn Caldwell moving to running back.

"He looked really good in practice," Martin said. "We got him some live work in the off week, which was key. I hope to see him back there."

Another positive was the opportunity for players dealing with injuries to get extra treatment time. Martin said there were several players dealing with nagging injuries who had a chance to heal and get healthy.

Aggie men's hoops voted to win the WAC

The New Mexico State men's basketball team was voted to win the Western Athletic Conference title in the WAC Coaches' Preseason poll as well as in the media poll. Junior guard Daniel Mullings was selected as the Preseason Player of the Year in both polls.

NM State received eight of the nine first-place votes in the coaches' poll and all 24 first-place votes in the media poll. According to the voting done by the league's coaches, Seattle University is picked to finish second, Bakersfield third with Idaho and Utah Valley tying for fourth. The media poll has Idaho finishing second, Bakersfield third and Utah Valley fourth, just ahead of Seattle University.

"Any time we get selected at the top it creates a challenge to try to defend the target that is on our back," said head coach Marvin Menzies. "We have to be able to use this for motivation and at the same time we need to make sure we have our humility intact."

The 6-2 Mullingss finished the 2012-13 season as a second team All-WAC honoree while posting 13.8 points, 5.2 rebounds and 2.6 assists per game.

"Daniel is a gym rat and I can definitely see him as someone that will be a premier player in the WAC," Menzies said. "He has his job cut out for him. He has done a great job for us so far and is the type of player that understands his weaknesses and continues to work on them. As a coach, one couldn't have a better player to work with."

Sophomore Sim Bhullar, the Aggies 7-5 center, earned first team preseason honors on both the media and coaches' polls after he was named to the 2012-13 WAC Newcomer team and being named the WAC Freshman of the Year. Bhullar marked 10.1 points, 6.7 rebounds and 2.4 blocks per game last year and was the first NM State player to earn freshman of the year honors since James Moore in 2001 as a part of the Sun Belt Conference.

"Sim developed a lot last season and we are hopeful that his development continues to grow throughout the year," said Menzies. "Both Sim and Daniel understand that it is team first and both are very humble people and I am sure they will keep that team first mentality."

The NM State men's basketball program continues to make steady progress. The Aggies have reached the NCAA Tournament three times under Menzies (2009-10, 2011-12, 2012-13) and hope to make it back for the third consecutive season.

NM State was selected first in last year's preseason coaches' poll and second in the media poll after being selected second in the 2011-12 preseason coaches' poll and third in the media poll. In 2007-08, the Aggies were selected first in the media poll and fifth by the coaches. That season, NM State tallied a 21-14 record while finishing as co-champions in the WAC regular season and falling in the WAC Tournament championship game to Boise State in three overtimes.

Aggie fans have a chance to get a look at the 2013-14 squad with the Crimson and White scrimmage, 1 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 19 in the Pan American Center. The event is free.

Season tickets and single game tickets are on sale at the Pan American ticket office or by calling 646-1420.

The biggest area of concern with Rice is quarterback Taylor McHargue, Martin said.

"The quarterback is outstanding. He can run and extend plays," he said. "He's a very accurate thrower and has a very strong arm. He makes them go."

At other positions, the Owls are an average football team, Martin said.

Winning the turnover battle is another area of concern, as Rice is very good at getting turnovers and not giving the ball up.

"Their offense is a lot like us, they're a zone read team and can get the ball out on the perimeter along with being very physical up front," Martin said.

Kickoff is at 6 p.m. Oct. 19 at Aggie Memorial Stadium. Fans are encouraged to wear pink and come out to support the Aggies.

You might need golf lessons if ...

These situations seem familiar

Charlie Blanchard Golf Doctor

I think one of the funniest comedy routines ever is Jeff Foxworthy's bit called "you might be a redneck." Sample: If you wear your NASCAR cap to church, you just might be a redneck. Yesterday, as I listened to some of those redneck jokes, I was thinking of golfers who were in need of lessons. Voila! Here are my 44 clues that you just might need to see your favorite golf professional (or sport psychologist) for lessons.

- 1. If you started playing golf three years ago and still can't get the ball airborne, you need lessons
- 2. Your husband wants you to take up golf and has agreed to teach you. Problem is he's a hack and has no clue about the fundamentals of a good golf swing. You need lessons.
- 3. If you're the clueless husband, you need golf lessons too.
- 4. If your tee shots with your driver fall out of the sky like a wounded duck, but are easy to find since they only go 120 yards, you might need lessons.
- 5. If your friends are suggesting that you can solve your golfing problems if you simply take two weeks off, and then quit the game altogether, you could use tutelage.
- 6. The fact that your golf swing looks like some peasant flailing away at sheaves in a rice paddy means you need golf instruction.

7. You have a bad case of the putting yips. Yup, professional guidance on the putting green.

8. The only way you can get your ball out of a sand bunker is to throw it out. Lessons, bunky.

9. Lately you have been losing so many golf bets that you figure you might as well get "sucker" and "chump" and "pigeon" embroidered on your best golf bag. Call your pro.

10. You're such a loser your golf buddies have turned to calling you "ATM." Golf academy, pal.

11. If you get so mad at yourself on the golf course that your doctor has put you on high blood pressure medication, you need some golf coaching – and life coaching.

12. You realize that playing bad golf has gotten you in such low spirits that your Prozac is now useless. Time for lessons and practice. And psychotherapy.

13. When you realize you couldn't make a three-footer under pressure if your life depended on it, meet with your PGA professional on the practice green. Quit worrying so much.

14. If you have to hit a shot over a pond and you always pull out a range ball, you need a larger golf budget, and some lessons.

15. Although you complain that you lack "consistency," you are actually very consistent – you consistently fail to break 100. Find a golf teacher, my friend, and a golf magazine subscription.

16. If you're tormented by such a bad case of shanking that your buddies have nicknamed you "Shankapotamous," you are definitely a candidate for intensive golf lessons.

17. Lately a round of golf has gotten to be so nerve-wracking that you now carry a fifth of Crown in your golf bag. In your case, call your golf teacher before calling AA.

18. If you notice that the jumble of swing thoughts swimming through your brain as you stand over the ball resembles a pre-flight checklist for a 747, you know you need golf coaching.

19. These days, your divots travel farther than your golf ball and you can't even throw a club straight anymore. Get a teacher.

20. Now that your insurance company has canceled your liability policy for broken windows in houses along some holes at your golf course, it's time to sign up for golf class.

21. You know you need golf lessons when your monthly payout for brand new drivers exceeds your country club dues. So many clubs, so little time.

22. When your average golf score is higher than your IQ, you should consider lessons. But then, what you might need is more GED classes.

23. As you reflect that your official handicap has remained stuck at 26 since the Reagan administration, it occurs to you that help on the practice range might be useful.

24. Your company just hired a younger replacement and put you out to pasture by giving you the gold watch, and now the old lady says you need a hobby. Consider golf school

25. When your slices start resembling the shape of a shrimp, you need solid direction.

26. When you're falling so far backward after you swing your friends have to catch you, call the pro.

27. When your club pro tells the sheriff you're driving under the influence, don't get in a golf cart and drive around the golf course; don't even putt.

28. When you have to yell "fore" after a putt, it's time for putting instruction.

29. When your swing has so many pieces and glitches that you can't find replacement parts when you go out of town, it's time for golf classes.

30. When you lift your head up so fast that your neck is getting sore, first make an appointment for a golf lesson and then make one with the chiropractor.

31. When your one or two blow-up holes have turned into 18 of them, you might need professional performance coaching, ya jack-wagon.

32. You drive the ball close to 280 – a normal drive – and then take an 8, which is not that unusual for your game. Consider golf coaching, my friend. And Valium. And short game practice. And a new putter. And learning how to hit a 60-yard wedge. And ...

33. When your friends liken your golf swing to an axe-wielding lumberjack having an epileptic fit, you should think seriously about qualified instruction.

34. Let's say your boss recruits you to play in the next company fundraiser scramble and you couldn't bring yourself to tell him you never played golf in your whole life. Call the golf school.

35. If you go to the practice range and stripe 20 balls like a scratch player and then play like a complete chop on the golf course, when it counts, you could definitely be helped by your pro.

36. As you look out from the first tee you see the line of white out-of-bounds stakes all the way down the right side. You're thinking "don't hit it right," knowing full well you'll be teeing up a second ball and hitting three in a moment. Mental coaching solves this, pal.

37. You're one of those rich gals, with all the expensive clubs and stylish golf outfits, who swings with the force of a flyswatter on her way to her usual 72 – for 9 holes. Here's some advice. Leave behind the land of gentle social golf and get some coaching for an aggressive, athletic swing move.

38. If you spend more time looking for your ball than playing golf, you might need teaching help.

39. You're a very talented golfer but you're getting as much out of your game as the Cowboys are getting from their overpaid roster – both you and they need a new coach.

40. You assume that getting older inevitably means hitting it short and playing lousy. Think again. Get to the gym and work out with the heavy weight machines. Then connect with an instructor.

41. You prefer to pad your already bloated handicap because you think it's too much trouble to just get better. But even lifetime sandbaggers can benefit from golf education.

42. If you're in college and on your sixth attempt to pass the PAT (a requirement for PGA wanabes) you need mental help. Amble on over to where we can get some self-confidence for you.

43. You go through a jumbo bucket (100 balls) on the range and produce maybe four legitimately solid shots, and you're not upset. You should be. You may think you know it all, but you have no idea what you're doing. Get lessons. Or a frontal lobotomy.

44. If you are surprised to actually learn there are rules in the game of golf, you probably need to ask for a few golf books from Santa. And then lessons.

Time to be tough

NMSU Aggies all in for pink game

Jack Nixon Iack's Corner

It is time to be tough. It's time to wear Pink and Aggie Up. Saturday night will be the culmination of the annual fund raising event to find a cure for breast cancer.

This year, the Aggies' football team has bought in in a bigger way than before. Last week, the team's special jerseys were unveiled and they look good. A bright, bold statement of color shouts, "We are tough enough for all that life brings." The symbolic gesture speaks volumes.

The previous coaching staffs had accepted the game. Hal Mumme and his wife were among the founders of the event, but none of Doug Martin's predecessors were willing to do much more than wear pink socks or wristbands. It's a continuation of how Doug Martin does things, total commitment to what the task is, on the field and off.

Granted, the season has been a slow build to what Martin and Aggie fans would like to ultimately have, but that doesn't mean the top man hasn't been doing whatever he can to move his team closer to that mark. It would be easy for a coach to write off this year and let the year just trickle down the drain, but Martin is fighting on against stiff odds.

The physicians fighting cancer are in a similar situation. They aren't quitting even though the finish line is not in sight. If you have been touched by cancer, be on hand Saturday night. Say a prayer for those you have lost or maybe are losing to cancer and know that the uphill battle is continuing thanks to what you have given.

The outcome of a football game doesn't compare to a battle with cancer, but the act of showing support is a powerful tool. It shows the world that whatever else comes, this is where we stand. This is what we support and what we care about. It is a chance to show your support for both causes when you come out Saturday night.

Be positive, be someone who can see beyond the temporary day-to-day grind to what will surely be a better tomorrow. Be Tough Enough to do that Saturday.

The association insists it did not ban handshakes, but that severe penalties including fines for the schools will result from any future incidents. The following quote is part of the ruling that can be found on their website at http://khsaa. org/10082013-commissionersdirective-on-postgame-activity/.

"Henceforth, any incidents by an individual squad member (including coaches) or group of squad members that results in unsporting acts immediately following the contest will result in a fine against the member school athletic program, and additional penalties against the individuals or schools as deemed appropriate following investigation."

They have it wrong on two points. It is a wrong to take personal responsibility and accountability from the individual and pass it on to the overall organization. The schools themselves, in this case, will be penalized. Our current generation is growing up in the "pass the buck" society. It can't possibly be the individual's fault; it must be those who oversee them. That's the trending attitude.

Post-game handshakes are not the problem. Post-game handshakes have been a tradition for as long as I can remember. It has been considered a traditional way to show sportsmanship, and, in truth, it is. Coaches and players line up immediately following the contest to shake hands with the opponent whether they want to or not. If a player or coach refuses to do so, they are considered to be a bad sport.

Current society has slowly but steadily allowed an increase of unsportsmanlike actions during the course of games. It is acceptable to celebrate successes on the field in the form of post-sack dances in football or choreographed home run trots in baseball. Society loves winners so much that they think it is perfectly fine to celebrate successes on the field at the expense of the athlete who was defeated.

Taunting rules in the NFL helped stop some of the unsportsmanlike events that were occurring daily on the football field. The NCAA no longer allows baseball players to empty the dugout after home runs to celebrate around home plate. These organizations don't require that each team line up to shake hands after games. In baseball, we only shake hands at the end of each series. All sports have their own traditions, but most of them are not nearly as structured as what is required at the youth level.

Until society views over-celebration as being as unsportsmanlike as the defeated athlete's reactions to these same over-celebrations, nothing will change. Youth organizations might want to take a closer look at on the field actions before attacking long time traditions.

Lawmakers hear drought worries

Committee meets at NMSU to review state water issues

By Todd G. Dickson

Statewide, New Mexico is feeling the pressures of prolonged drought. To address the issue, a legislative drought subcommittee met in Las Cruces to begin grappling with the squeeze that limited water resources is putting on competing desired uses.

Even with the week-long rains that caused flooding around New Mexico, the last 30 months have been the driest in the state's history, State Engineer Scott Verhines told the committee Monday, Oct. 14, at New Mexico State University's Golf Course Clubhouse.

Phil King, an NMSU professor who provides consulting to the Elephant Butte Irrigation District, said the answers to water shortages are not as simple as some may think, because geology impacts the effectiveness of water conservation in agricultural uses.

When people hear that 90 percent of the state's ground water – provided mostly by the Rio Grande – goes to agriculture, a too simplistic answer is to use less of it through more modern water delivery systems, such as drip irrigation, King said.

But the underground aquifers along the Rio Grande get recharged from the river flows, so the flood method of irrigation is better for that purpose, King said. Flood irrigation also seeps back into the Rio Grande, allowing the state to meet its downriver allotment obligations, according to Gary Esslinger, manager of Elephant Butte Irrigation District (EBID).

King said studies have shown that drip irrigation doesn't always reduce depletion – or water lost in the process, especially in areas like the Mesilla Valley where the underground water table interacts with the river.

"One size does not fit all," King said.

Better measurement and water accountability would be a more effective way to conserve water, said Sam Fernald of NMSU's Water Resources Research Institute.

The majority of aquifers in the state are made up of water from long ago, but those connected to rivers benefit from agricultural irrigation, Fernald said. While runoff production comes from the northern reaches of the Rio Grande, the river gains water as it goes south and water not used for crops is not really lost, he said. However, there also are many closed basins in the state, he said.

Climate change is a reality, Esslinger said, which is causing less snowfall in the winter to feed the river supply, while also creating more extreme flooding events during the monsoon season in the summer.

With Elephant Butte Reservoir at its lowest level since 1972, there were only 42 days of irrigation this past irrigation season with the latest release of river water and earliest shutdown of its supply, he said. Farmers had the smallest allotment in EBID's history – 3.5 inches compared to 3 to 4 acre-feet that used to be a more common water allocation for farmers.

"This year the irrigation release was shorter than the monsoon season," Esslinger said.

EBID has begun a storm water capture program and replumbed some laterals to reduce depletion where it is happening, he said. EBID has also set up areas along the canals to provide riparian habitats when there is an abundance of storm water, he said.

Putting New Mexico in conflict with Texas in a case that may be taken up by the U.S. Supreme Court are Mesilla Valley farmers drilling deep wells that capture underground water before it seeps down to the river.

Dino Cervantes, general manager of Cervantes Agribusiness, said while some of his crops have been supplied by drip irrigation, his fields have had to depend on wells, which are expensive to drill and run. With prices high for crops such as cotton and corn, "this should have been the golden age of agriculture in New Mexico," but the price gains are being eaten by the well costs, he said. Besides paying for river water rights, despite reduced deliveries, Cervantes said his company has spent millions just on the electricity to run their pumps.

Cervantes estimates that about a quarter of the farm land in the valley is being left fallow because of the lack of water. Larger farming operations such as the Cervantes fields do use technology such as laser leveling and sensors in the plants to make pump watering precise, he said.

"We're not an industry that's out there wasting water, which is a precious resource," Cervantes said.

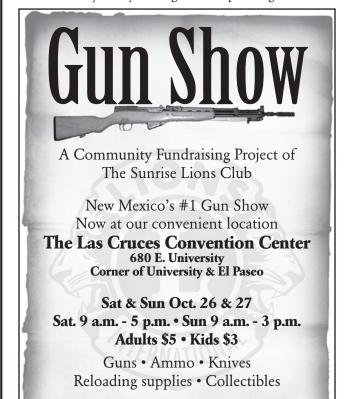

Esslinger said farmers actually helped relieve flooding by using the system of canals to guide excessive storm water back to the river.

Meanwhile, along the Rio Grande, there are more than 100 flood control facilities all older than 50 years that have shown they can't handle these extreme storm events, Esslinger said. That's why Esslinger said he is expressing caution with efforts to create federal protections for areas in Doña Ana County. These structures need to be assessed, and the flooding in La Union only illustrates their inadequacies, he said. La Union suffered heavy flooding in September after an earthen dam gave way. A similar failure in an uphill earthen dam structure contributed to flooding in Hatch in 2006, Esslinger said.

"The writing's on the wall," Esslinger said. "We can do some things on the valley floor, but we need to look at the watershed."

State Sen. Joseph Cervantes, D-Las Cruces, said he asked to hold the committee hearings in Las Cruces because significant water legislation hasn't been passed in recent sessions. Meanwhile, the issues surrounding the state's limited water supply fester and grow more complex, he said.

Along with the issues in Doña Ana County, the committee also heard testimony on a controversial proposal to divert Gila River water that affects the water compact with Arizona. In Catron County, a proposal to pipe water from the Augustin Plains Ranch to Albuquerque is facing opposition from neighboring land owners, who worry about the loss of water to their wells.

All proceeds used to support local charities.

State Supreme Court to hear Ellins on same-sex marriages

The New Mexico Supreme Court has granted Doña Ana County Clerk Lynn Ellins party-in-interest status in a proceeding seeking a ruling on whether state statutes or the New Mexico Constitution require county clerks statewide to issue marriage licenses to samegender couples. Ellins will have the right to participate in oral arguments on the question at a scheduled Oct. 23 hearing.

"I'm pleased to have been granted party status to make my case that the New Mexico Constitution requires me – and New Mexico's 32 other county clerks – to issue marriage licenses without regard to the gender or sexual orientation of the applicants," Ellins said.

On Aug. 21, the Doña Ana County Clerk's Office became the first in the state to begin issuing same-gender marriage licenses. Seven other counties have followed suit, most under district court orders.

"We did not want committed couples to wait any longer for the equal rights to marriage to which they are entitled under our Constitution," Ellins said. "It appeared district court challenges to the refusal of clerks in Santa Fe and Bernalillo County to issue licenses to same-gender couples would move slowly, further delaying enjoyment of a fundamental right. We believe my decision to issue the licenses was and is consistent with my oath to uphold the Constitution of the State of New Mexico. I'm hopeful the New Mexico Supreme Court will clearly establish the Constitutional right to marriage for otherwise qualified applicants regardless of sexual orientation."

Ellins said a private fundraising initiative has covered all costs associated with both the Supreme Court proceeding and the Third Judicial District Court lawsuit filed against him in Doña Ana County by seven Republican legislators.

"People who care about marriage equality have reached into their wallets, making it possible to defend equal application of the marriage laws without taxpayer funds," Ellins said. "I'm hopeful the Supreme Court's decision will validate the wisdom of those investments of private funds."

Since opening his door to same-gender couples on Aug. 21, Ellins and his staff have issued 300 same-gender marriage licenses, of which 244 have been returned for official recording after the marriages have taken place. Couples have come from all over the State of New Mexico, as well as from Texas, Arizona and other states where same-gender marriage remains unavailable to them.

Ellins, a Democrat, is serving his second term as Doña Ana County Clerk. He is a former Colorado Chief Deputy Secretary of State and a licensed attorney.

The immunization clinic is open to the public and free of charge.

The office will reopen for its regularly scheduled hours Monday, Oct. 21.

The New Mexico Department of Health offers vaccinations for people without insurance or who are otherwise not able to get immunized. Those with Medicaid or other health insurance should bring their insurance cards with them to the clinic.

Fireworks, open fires and smoking ban lifted on state trust lands

New Mexico State Land Commissioner Ray Powell has announced that a ban on fireworks, open fires and smoking on state trust lands has been lifted.

"Efforts on state trust land are ongoing to reduce forest fuels and the risk of high severity fires, while improving ecosystem function and health," Powell said. "Over the past two years, more than 4,000 acres of state trust land were treated with prescriptive tree thinning programs to reduce hazardous fuels. Also state and federal agencies, as well as communities collaborated on a successful prescribed burn project on state trust land near Black Lake last week."

The State Land Office received $500,000 from the 2013 State Legislature to address hazardous fuel loads through forest thinning and fire prevention on state trust lands.

"Healthy forests and grasslands ensure healthy watersheds, wildlife habitat, sustainable agriculture, a viable tourism industry and a high quality of life for all New Mexicans," Powell said. "It is important that each of us takes responsibility for protecting the health of our natural world by being responsible stewards of our land," said Powell.

NMSU honored as a top Hispanic degree producer

For the fourth year in a row, New Mexico State University has been honored as a top university for awarding degrees to Hispanic students.

Diverse: Issues in Higher Education publishes annual rankings of the Top 100 producers of associate, bachelor's and graduate degrees issued to minority students. The top 50 Hispanic bachelor's and master's degree awarding schools were featured in the Sept. 26 edition.

NMSU was 11th in bachelor's degrees awarded in education to Hispanics. Additionally, NMSU ranked 18th in bachelor's degrees in engineering and 30th in bachelor's in business management, marketing and related support services to Hispanics.

In master's degrees awarded to Hispanics, NMSU was 12th in engineering, while social sciences and education followed in 27th and 35th, respectively.

"NMSU's leadership, faculty and staff are very committed to increasing access and opportunity and enhancing diversity in the academic community, and I believe that our efforts are successful," said College of Engineering Dean Ricardo B. Jacquez. "I'm especially proud of the progress that has been made in the College of Engineering, where increasing minority representation is a particular challenge. More than half of our students are underrepresented ethnic minorities and women, and they make significant contributions toward our nation's dire need for engineers."

This report used data obtained through the National Center for Education Statistics' Integrated Postsecondary Education Data Set (IPEDS). Analysis is based on degrees conferred during the 2011-2012 academic year.

ACES students get 'branded'

NMSU college inaugurates freshman tradition

More than 150 freshmen from New Mexico State University's College of Agricultural, Consumer and Environmental Sciences gathered Oct. 15 with the faculty and staff outside of Gerald Thomas Hall to celebrate the end of their freshman orientation course, AXED 111, and their integration into the college.

Students were separated by department and each received a T-shirt that was paint-branded with the ACES brand, which represents early-day student Sam Steel, who was murdered in 1893 and would have been the college's first graduate. They were also given a token from their respective department head.

"We have a Sam Steel ceremony every year for those that graduate, but we like it to be a beginning and end of coming through our college," said Katie Dunn, program coordinator of recruitment. "It is a big deal to come in as a freshman and we should treat it as such. Attending and staying in college is a big accomplishment."

Dunn added that this event is the first of its kind at the college, and they plan to make it an annual ceremony.

Students had the chance to talk with the department heads and examine their options.

The course also teaches freshmen students about NMSU and land-grant universities' history, resources available at NMSU, clubs and organizations, as well as how to make and follow a degree plan.

Award recognizes NMSU employee

Silva has kept campus positive for 29 years

David Silva, a supervisor with New Mexico State University's Facilities and Services, has been recognized as the Stephen W. and Robert E. Roberts Memorial Staff Award recipient for his continued dedication to the institution.

Established in 1983, this award is presented annually to an NMSU employee who demonstrates commitment and service, functioning as a positive citizen within the community.

"David regularly exhibits a high level of professionalism. He is always friendly, always helpful and takes pride in his work. He is a leader in the department," said Glen Haubold, NMSU's assistant vice president for facilities.

With a contagiously pleasant and humble demeanor, Silva has dedicated 29 years of service to NMSU, striving to keep the campus pristine, and leading by example with his efforts greatly surpassing his area of responsibility, according to his supervisor and the landscape and grounds manager. Bud Iones.

and the landscape and grounds manager, Bud Jones.

"Mr. Silva is the model employee," Jones said. "He always displays a positive 'can do' attitude when being assigned tasks; this is a behavior that he is instilling in the employees that report to him."

Silva is responsible for overseeing all aspects of grounds care for the main facilities at the heart of the NMSU campus. This area is the most visible and busiest part of the campus – referred to by facilities and services as the "academic core" – and encompasses 53 buildings amid Espina Street and Jordan Road, and University and Stewart avenues.

Despite continuously exceeding the expectations of his superiors, Silva's modest character left him surprised by his attainment of this award.

"When my supervisor, Bud Jones, mentioned that he was nominating me for the Roberts Memorial Staff Award, I thought that was pretty cool. Never in my wildest dream did I think that it would ever happen," Silva said. "Then I got an email that I had won the award – I was floored."

Silva was even more surprised to find out that he was the lone recipient from the campuswide pool of applicants.

"I asked my wife how many other people on the campus also won the award," Silva said. "She then scared me even more when she said that only one person wins the Roberts Memorial Staff Award. She said, "It's really nice to think that the work that you and your fellow co-workers do for the NMSU campus is something special."

There will be an award ceremony in Silva's honor from 3 to 5 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 17, in Corbett Center Student Union's Colfax Room, Room 210.

This award was established in memory of the sons of George W. Roberts, the former NMSU assistant vice president for business affairs, and his wife, Ellen Bernice Roberts. The accompanying cash award is made possible through the donations of family and friends, and the Stephen W. and Robert E. Roberts Memorial Endowment fund. The recipient is selected by the NMSU Employee Council from nominations submitted by employees of the university community.

Governor tours Las Cruces health care facility

Touts state plan to address Alzheimer's care

Gov. Susana Martinez toured The Haciendas at Grace Village, a facility that is expected to create about 45 new jobs when it is fully operational early next year on Wednesday Oct. 16.

"The Haciendas at Grace Village is a beautiful facility offering specialized care to people with dementia," Martinez said. "This is an especially vulnerable population of seniors who need access to various types of treatment facilities and options. We welcome the many employees that Haciendas at Grace Village will be hiring, and as a state, we are working to enhance our care for those struggling with Alzheimer's disease and dementia."

The facility has four haciendas that will house 12 residents each. Two of the haciendas are now open. The facility estimates that it has filled about a quarter of the jobs it intends to create. The other two haciendas are expected to open early next year and the company expects to have all the jobs filled by that time.

"The Haciendas at Grace Village is dedicated to providing quality services to people with Alzheimer's and giving families the support they need," said CEO Gary Coppedge. "We are committed to helping people get the services they need, while helping put people to work in Southern New Mexico. We particularly want to thank Gov. Martinez for her work in raising awareness about dementia and Alzheimer's, and her work to better support caregivers."

As part of the tour, Martinez also talked about the state Alzheimer's plan she unveiled in August. Martinez is creating a new position that will be dedicated to coordinating services, research and public awareness of Alzheimer's disease and related dementias. Martinez wants to provide help and support to family caregivers who often feel isolated and alone.

Martinez said more than 31,000 New Mexicans have Alzheimer's disease and the number is expected to increase to 43,000 by 2025

"This new position will allow for better communication and more collaboration between all the organizations and individuals already working with people with Alzheimer's and related dementias. Too often, we hear that families don't know where to turn or what to do next when they get a diagnosis," Martinez said. "Families, who often face this terrible disease in isolation, will know that they are not alone, and that there is a clear path for help."

The Alzheimer's position will be housed at the Aging and Long-Term Services Department and will report directly to that agency's cabinet secretary.

The New Mexico State Plan for Alzheimer's Disease and Related Dementias is the result of 18 months of work by the Aging and Long-Term Services Department, New Mexico Department of Health and more than 60 stakeholders including the Alzheimer's Association, New Mexico Chapter.

The State Plan for Alzheimer's Disease and Related Dementias lays out goals, and then prescribes strategies to meet them. Martinez said the new Alzheimer's position will be in charge of executing the plan, focusing on five key areas:

- Meeting caregiver needs
- Elevating quality of care
- Broadening public awareness of dementia and available resources
- Matching health care system capacity to consumer need
- Increasing research effectiveness.

Age is the greatest risk factor for Alzheimer's disease, and the number of people in the U.S. is projected to rise drastically as the baby boomer generation ages. This expansion is expected to be more pronounced in New Mexico, which will be fourth among all states in the percentage of population older than 65 by 2030.

"The Alzheimer's Plan is an important first step in acknowledging the growing impact that Alzheimer's has in New Mexico," Martinez said

There is no question about the abundance of sunshine New Mexico has to offer. It is why many of us, including myself, originally from Wisconsin, choose to live here. With approximately 350 days of sunshine a year, it's no wonder our fair community is becoming THE place to live.

Of the many quality-of-life factors that folks consider when moving here or staying, the weather and sunshine usually are top priorities. However, within the last few years, we are now seeing a push to highlight the value of the sun as a means of economic development and renewable energy.

According to the New Mexico Renewable Energy Transmission Authority website, New Mexico has some of the best wind, geothermal and solar resources that exist within the United States. By developing and supporting the renewable energy industry, we create jobs, protect the environment, reduce greenhouse gas emissions and move toward embracing a sustainable resource for the future.

In the New Mexico Green Jobs Guidebook published by the New Energy Economy, between 1998 and 2007, green jobs grew by 50 percent overall, 25 times the rate of overall growth. Green jobs have been created in both rural and urban areas while increasing environmentally friendly production by 99 percent.

The New Mexico Green Chamber of Commerce (NMGCC), in partnership with the Las Cruces Green Chamber (LCGCC), continues to recognize the potential that these natural resources bring to our local economies as well as reduce our dependence on fossil fuels. Through the annual Renewable Energy and Clean Technology Conference, now in its third year, the NMGCC and LCGCC bring to southern New Mexico experts in the field, discussing the direction our state is going in this fascinating

Energizing Showcasing local businesses the state Greater Green chambers

Greater, Green chambers relocate annual events

By Alta LeCompte

The weekend of Oct. 24 is a perfect time to get acquainted with Las Cruces businesses that may not have been on your radar in the past.

Both the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce and the Las Cruces Green Chamber of Commerce will host events with booths where businesses can share information with each other and with the public.

The Greater Chamber's 2013 Business Showcase will be noon to 4 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 24, at Mesilla Valley Mall, 700 S. Telshor Blvd.

The New Mexico Green Chamber of Commerce will expand its annual conference on the future of clean energy in New Mexico to two days in order to include activities of interest to the public.

The third annual conference, which is organized by the Las Cruces Green Chamber, will feature the usual full day of sessions on energy policy and technology issues, Friday, Oct. 25, at the Ramada Palms Hotel and Conference Center, 201 E. University Ave. at the corner of Valley Drive.

Saturday's events will focus on the business of renewable energy.

A Clean Technology Fair will showcase renewable energy advances for residential and business consumers. The event is free and open to the public.

A variety of local businesses interfaced with the public during the 2011 Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce Business Showcase at the Mesilla Valley Mall.

Greater chamber returns to MVM

Office Manager Liz Banegas, who has helped organize the annual Greater Chamber annual business showcase for six years, said that event has a long history in the City of the Crosses.

The showcase typically was held at the mall, but the 2012 event was at the Las Cruces Convention Center.

Banegas said the chamber opted to return to the mall this year because foot traffic at the mall means many people have an opportunity

Cultivating a vibrant future

Las Cruces Creative Economy Project gives community support to Downtown charrette

By David Salcido

At the end of last August, a group of community leaders came together to kick off a unique program in Las Cruces. Called the Creative Economy Project (CEP), it is the brainchild of arts and culture advocate Irene Oliver-Lewis, who took grant money provided through the McCune Foundation for improvements to the Court Youth Center and combined it with similar grants awarded to the Doña Ana Arts Council and the Las Cruces Downtown Partnership to make it happen. Together, these three organizations form the anchors for what is becoming a serious movement to reinvent Downtown Las Cruces into a vibrant arts and cultural center.

"Each of the organizations that started this movement has a different focus," Oliver-Lewis said. "Court Youth Center had the planning money which gave us the luxury to think and plan. That was just for the Court Youth Center and for the property we have across the street, but I feel we couldn't be isolated. We cannot just do things and think that they won't affect other people. That's why I invited the other two groups. The Rio Grande Theatre is really the focal point for what's happening and is run by the Doña Ana Arts Council, which is the organization that can bring the arts together. The Downtown Partnership's job is to build business, to bring economic development downtown. Individually we have all struggled, but we believe together we can do great things."

The latest meeting of the CEP, held at the Court Youth Center Friday, Oct. 11, followed swiftly on the heels of the week-long Downtown design charrette, which itself was an exercise in which residents of the two historical neighborhoods that make up the greater Downtown area could come together with business owners and municipal administrators in order to talk about ways to improve it. The main focus here was on infrastructure and zoning recommendations. It was not meant as a replacement for the city's 2004 revitalization plan, but more a way to build upon it in ways that make sense to the people who live and work in the area.

According to Oliver-Lewis, the CEP is a way of complementing the charrette. Whereas the city is studying ways to stimulate business growth and make the Downtown area more viable as a destination, the community volunteers associated with CEP are hoping to fill in the gaps.

We see ourselves as the foot soldiers to carry and assist with what the potential beauty and substance of the arts and culture can be in Las Cruces," Oliver-Lewis said. "The city handles the infrastructure, we fill in the blanks. We're doing it from a community standpoint, because if you have ownership of the things you create, you're going to go to help promote them. People take pride in the things they helped create and that pride carries through the years and the generations. Those tie-ins people never forget. That's how we're different."

What, then, would be some of those things that the community would be creating as creative infill to the city's infrastructure? That question is the very focus of the CEP.

To help move this project forward, Oliver-Lewis, along with Kathleen Albers, executive director of the Doña Ana Arts Council, and Carrie LaTour, executive director of the Las Cruces Downtown Partnership, have called in to check out the booths.

Showcase day starts with a seminar from 9 to 10 a.m. for exhibitors.

Following the showcase, the exhibitors and other chamber members will get together for a 5:30 p.m. Business After Hours social hosted by Comcast Spotlight at the Las Cruces Convention Center, 680 E. University Ave.

"The purpose of the showcase is to unite chamber members with customers," Banegas said.

It gives members a chance to see what other members have to offer and gives them "nice exposure," she said.

"We want shoppers to see the variety of businesses and services Las Cruces has to offer that they might not be aware of. It's a way to have one-on-one contact, a personal conversation"

The showcase offers small businesses an affordable way to get in front of potential customers.

"We look for events in which smaller businesses can participate," she said. "We have lowered the booth rates so they can be part of the event."

She said many of the vendors who participate don't have retail store fronts. Some are service providers, such as Comcast, the hospitals and catering businesses. Among the service providers are those that work exclusively for other businesses.

The business-to-business service providers who take advantage of the showcase to make new contacts include American Linen, she said.

Last year's showcase attracted some 65 exhibitors and the goal for this year is 80, Banegas said.

For more information about the showcase, call the chamber at 524-1968.

Green Chamber renewable energy expo

Jim Peach, New Mexico State University economics professor, will give Friday's keynote address on renewable energy and the state economy.

Hamblen said vendors from all over the state will set up booths in the parking lot of the Ramada and be on hand from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday.

"It's one of the busiest corners in Las Cruces – and it's Homecoming Weekend," she said.

Participants will include Southwest Recycling.

"We want people to understand the accessibility of renewable energy," Hamblen said.

As part of the fair, panel discussions will address topics of interest to businesses and consumers.

Carolyn Parrs, principal of Mind Over Markets, a Santa Fe marketing firm, will be the keynote speaker at a Saturday breakfast session on the importance of businesses marketing the things they do to save money and protect the environment.

"This is a great opportunity to get the word out about how locally owned businesses can make their businesses more efficient, reduce overhead and increase profitability," Hamblen said. "Ultimately, it's about making their businesses more profitable."

The deadline for purchasing advance tickets for the Oct. 25 conference and luncheon is Tuesday, Oct. 22. The deadline for vendor applications for expo booths is noon Monday, Oct. 21.

will have multiple opportunities to learn about renewable energy in our state. On Friday, panel discussions will focus on the potential challenges and opportunities in the coming year, the latest on renewable energy storage, renewable energy transmission, what local governments are doing throughout the state and much more.

The Friday portion of the conference ends with the keynote speaker, Dr. Jim Peach, from New Mexico State University, discussing renewable energy and the economy.

On Saturday, the conference activities are focusing strictly on businesses, consumers and residents who are interested in renewable energy. A free outside fair will feature local and state businesses that specialize in renewable energy and have made it accessible to the general public.

As a business, reducing overhead by installing solar panels, increasing recycling or even converting vehicles to alternative fueling options, is a smart and efficient way to increase profit as well as reduce harm to the environment.

The Saturday activities begin with a breakfast talk featuring Carolyn Parrs, founder of Mind Over Markets Communications Company. For over 10 years, she has helped businesses and organizations succeed in the growing green market. She will be discussing ways renewable energy and green businesses can market themselves more efficiently and focus on messaging, audience and more.

Friday, October 18, 2013

After the breakfast talk, the NMGCC will host free presentations on new business models, partnerships between educational and local organizations and much more.

I hope you will join the New Mexico Green Chamber of Commerce, in conjunction with the Partnership for Responsible Business at the third annual Renewable Energy and Clean Technology Conference at the Ramada Palms de Las Cruces.

Tickets and conference information are available at nmgreenchamber.com or by calling the Las Cruces office at 323-1575. I look forward to seeing you there.

creative economic growth consultant Sabrina Pratt to create the groundwork. Pratt, who retired after 25 years as executive director of the Santa Fe Arts Commission, brings with her a set of tools that she believes will help stimulate creative ideas that can then be turned into viable methods for improvement.

Called "design thinking," the approach was originally put forward by a global design firm called IDEO, which, according to its mission statement, "brings together what is desirable from a human point of view with what is technologically feasible and economically viable." The ultimate goal using this technique is to help organizations in the public and private sectors innovate and grow through the support of forward-thinking community members who are willing to not only share their ideas, but to help get them implemented, as well.

"This is a process I used internally in Santa Fe," Pratt said. "I think it's a good process and IDEO, the organization that established it, is pretty famous for its innovation process, which is what this is based on. I'm pretty sure we can come up with some ideas here that can be accomplished within three years."

The three-year timeframe is also Oliver-Lewis' doing. Though she knows there are ideas that will take much longer to bring to fruition, she also knows that those larger changes are more likely to come about if there are smaller successes to inform them.

With all that in mind, more than 30 members of the community, including artists, business owners, city administrators, university professors and retirees with a purpose sat down to brainstorm ideas for bringing life and creative activity, through arts and culture, to the Downtown and historic neighborhoods.

Among the many ideas presented by the think tank were pathways, signage and kiosks to inform the general public about activities taking place Downtown and in the historic neighborhoods; Seeking out areas for the creation of community gardens within the neighborhoods; Devising a walking tour of the Downtown and historic districts, with pamphlets and maps for self-guided tours; and investing in stages scattered around the Downtown area for local entertainers to perform on.

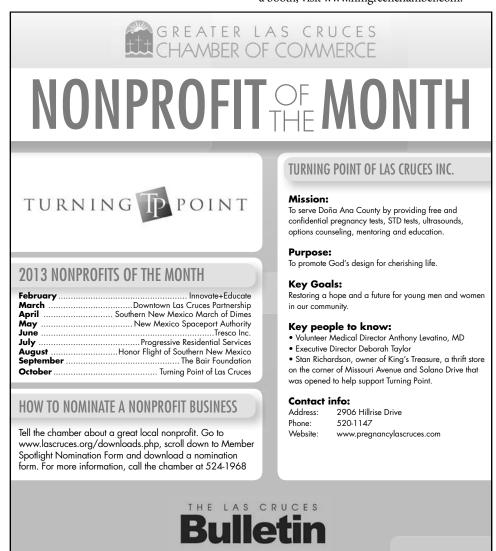

Those ideas were then synthesized down to a core group of endeavors, which members of the group would be willing to invest time and energy into bringing to fruition. Guiding them on their missions will be the steering committee, made up of Oliver-Lewis, Albers and LaTour, along with Ammu Devasthali – representing the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico – and a fifth member with ties to the city.

That member would be Senior Planner and Downtown Coordinator for the City of Las Cruces, Andy Hume, a supporter of the efforts being put forward by the CEP. Taking a position on the steering committee for the group, Hume's involvement carries a lot of cache for the grassroots movement. He will be the all-important link between the community volunteers of the CEP and the city itself. His is a very pragmatic approach.

"What I keep hearing over and over again is city investment," he said. "That is a two-way street. If one person says we need more public art, that doesn't really resonate, but when a group comes together with a common voice and says, 'not only do we want more art, but here are our top three priorities – how can we work together to make these a reality?' That has far more impact, especially from the political side of things."

Oliver-Lewis agrees whole-heartedly and says that this philosophy is exactly the reason she started the CEP to begin with.

"We want people to see how powerful the inclusion of arts and culture is in a community on a daily basis," she said. "We're not just talking about a one-time festival. We're talking about really changing the way our community embraces art, history and culture. It's an enormous endeavor, but if we think about it as something that can't be done, we'll never achieve it. I think that's why we have collectively made a decision to look at it in the short term and figure out which of these ideas can grow, then move forward. Many of these ideas we have been talking about for a long time. It's time to make them happen. This is just the beginning of a long-term plan. We have three years to do this and we are going to get it done."

EBID outlook report bleak

Without snowfall, next year's planting season daunting

By Marvin Tessneer

Las Cruces Bulletin

Elephant Butte Irrigation District board of director members are reviewing records to determine how to inform farmer patrons of what they can expect for the coming season.

The outlook is not promising, EBID hydrology consultant Dr. Phillip King said in his latest drought report.

The irrigation district has only 145,000 acre-feet in storage to prepare for next season, about 149,000 acre-feet in Elephant Butte Reservoir and 40,000 in Caballo Reservoir.

During the 2013 irrigation season, the district could only deliver irrigators 169,000 acre-feet to their fields.

"That was the shortest water supply for the irrigators in 100 years," King said.

King, who is a civil engineering professor at New Mexico State University, doesn't think he has better information to offer the EBID board.

"The Lower Rio Grande district had as much water in 2013 as it has now," King said. "I have to tell the board that the district could be in for a hard time in 2014. The only good thing they've got going for them would be a good mountain snow fall, which can start in October."

Bistro to reopen

Owners aim to bring dining options Downtown

By Alta LeCompte

Las Cruces Bulletin

A local pediatrician and her son have purchased the shuttered Main Street Bistro and Ale House and set Jan. 2, 2014, as their date to reopen.

Dr. Joann and Nick Ray are buying the business from Gary and Ann Marie Ebert, owners of Zeffiro Pizzeria Napoletana and the Popular Artisan Bread Bakery. The Eberts in 2012 bought the former La Iguana, which had a brief run at the 139 N. Main St. location.

In December 2012, Gary Ebert opened the Bistro, a restaurant featuring what he called comfort food from around the world. He closed the restaurant in June, citing health concerns.

Joann Ray said she first became aware of the Main Street Bistro when she visited as a customer.

"I was blown away. My first reaction was, "This can't be Las Cruces," she said. "It's a beautiful building."

With the exception of brightening a couple of the walls, she has no plans to revamp the elegant, contemporary look that created such a positive first impression for her.

However, when the Bistro reopens, the stuffed piano player who "played" the high-gloss black baby grand will not be at his former post in the back of the dining room.

"He's already moved out," Ray said.

The Rays do plan to keep much of Ebert's menu, she said.

Eat local, drink local

"The only thing we're definitely committed to is serving only southern New Mexico wines," she said. "There are so many awesome wines being made in southern New Mexico."

Featuring homegrown products will extend to procuring local beef and shopping for locally grown vegetables at the Las Cruces Farmers & Crafts Market.

Nick Ray said New Mexico beers will have the place of honor at the bistro and brewery.

"All the beers will be craft beers," he said. Nick Ray will manage the Bistro.

He managed Quiznos shop in Albuquerque for five years and currently is training with Ebert to bring back the best of Bistro.

Joann Ray said she and her son had been looking for a restaurant to operate together for about five or six years.

"The Bistro just sort of dropped in our laps. We were keyed in to this by a mutual friend," she said. "Once we started talking with him (Ebert), we clicked."

She said they had inquired about the place before it closed, and when it closed they decided they should be the ones to bring it back to life.

Although Ebert had other offers, he agreed, Ray said.

"We got lucky," she said.

A work in progress

Ray said acquiring the restaurant has taken about six months, including a three-monthlong process of getting a license to sell beer and wine.

The new owners took possession of the business Tuesday, Oct. 15.

The state Alcohol & Gaming Division held a preliminary license application hearing Friday, Oct. 11. The next step will be a city hearing.

When the Bistro reopens, it will serve lunches Monday through Saturday, Joann Ray said. Dinner hours are still a question Restaurant manager Nick Ray and his mother, Joann, took possession of the Main Street Bistro and Ale House Tuesday, Oct. 15. This photograph appeared in the Dec. 7, 2012, edition of the Las Cruces Bulletin, prior to the original opening of the Bistro by Las Cruces restaurateur Gary Ebert.

"We will be open for lunches weekdays to serve employees who work Downtown and need a place to eat," she said.

A range of ventures

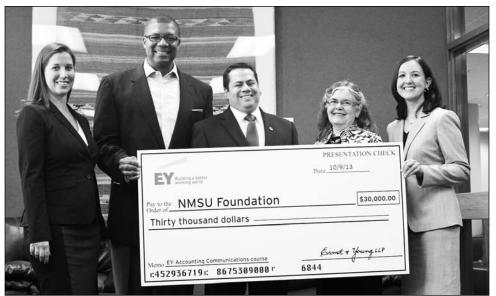

The mother and son duo are co-owners of Metal & Mud, a sculpture and pottery shop based at the Las Cruces Farmers & Crafts Market. They also are vocal supporters of Downtown, according to Andy Hume, city planner for the City of Las Cruces and Downtown liaison.

Joann is a potter and Nick a metal sculptor. Joann Ray, who is on staff with the Rio Grande Medical Group, said she ran a solo practice for 16 years. She practiced pediatrics for five years in Carlsbad prior to locating in the City of the Crosses.

Investing in communication skills

Ernst & Young gift funds NMSU accounting communications course

Representatives from Ernst & Young visited New Mexico State University's College of Business Oct. 9 to present a $30,000 gift to the college in support of the EY Accounting Communications course for master of accountancy students. For the Las Cruces Bulletin

A New Mexico State University course that will help master of accountancy students be better-prepared for the communication demands of their field is being supported by one of the international Big Four professional services firms that employs a growing number of those graduates

The master's-level accounting communications course will be funded by gifts from the Ernst & Young Foundation totaling $30,000 over the next three years.

Representatives from EY visited the NMSU College of Business on Oct. 9 to present the $30,000 check to the college.

Kevin Melendrez, head of the college's Accounting and Information Systems Department, said having a class targeted toward communication in an accounting context is crucial for graduate students – especially those who intend to sit for their Certified Public Accountant exam in Texas, as many NMSU accounting graduates do. But effective written and verbal communication skills are a must in the field no matter where new graduates intend to begin their careers, he said.

"This course will allow students to be prepared for their careers in accounting, which involve extensive communication with clients and professionals in the business community,"

Being able to guarantee the course each semester through the accounting department, with the help of the EY Foundation gift, will ensure that all graduate students who need it are able to take it, Melendrez said.

Ken Bouyer, American director of inclusiveness recruiting for EY, which has more than 700 offices in 140 countries, said the firm places great value on the communication skills of its employees, so it makes sense to invest in programs that produce graduates who are prepared to interact effectively with their clients and peers.

"We believe that communication is absolutely critical to these students - it's a survival skill they need to succeed in this field," Bouyer said at the check presentation. "EY is pleased to continue to partner with NMSU on such an important program. Our investment here is an example of our commitment to helping students become leaders in our profession."

The EY Accounting Communications Course, listed as ACCT 510, will be offered beginning in the spring 2014 semester, and will be open only to master's of accountancy students.

Charrette brings to life vision of Downtown

Consultants see future development evolving in steps

By Alta LeCompte

Hazel Borys of PlaceMakers LLC climbed a stepladder to tape concept drawings on the window of the Rio Grande Theatre prior to the closing session of the weeklong Downtown Design Charrette Friday evening, Oct. 11.
Throughout the week Borys, who is president and managing principal of the firm, and her colleagues had asked and answered a seemingly endless series of questions during their interactions with Downtown stakeholders, business owners and residents of nearby historic districts.

During public input sessions in the Community Enterprise Building conference room, Geoff Dyer, director of design, sketched suggestions that emerged.

The renderings Borys posted for public inspection were the culmination of the process.

As Dyer's sketching came to an end Thursday afternoon, he shared some of what he had learned from Las Crucens during the

"This is an advanced work in progress," he said. "It's not like a done deal, but we do want to make a compelling case for what we're proposing.

Final drawings show a two-step evolution for various parts of Downtown. The first improvements would be in street reconstruction to restore two way traffic on Water and Church streets, with enhancements such as wide sidewalks, trees and on-street parking.

Anticipating those improvements would be a catalyst for private development, drawings of the second phase add buildings constructed or refurbished with private funds.

Dyer said among the topics discussed by a full room of business owners who gave input during the charrette was how to anchor the north end of the newly reopened Main Street Downtown.

He said although a theater had previously been proposed for the northern anchor, the suggestion that found its way into his drawings was for an urban market that could be tied to mixed use with residences and shops. PlaceMakers is proposing a scenario in which the market would occupy a block north of Hadley Ave., but the goal also could be accomplished with a half-block building, he said.

Also on the drawing boards is a Main Street plaza north of Griggs Avenue. The plaza would be located beside the old post office and current Las Cruces Municipal Court. A street wall of shops and residences would surround and define the plaza.

Borys said the plaza would contain a band-stand large enough to accommodate a full orchestra. She said she was amazed to learn Las Cruces has nine major performance groups, a number far greater than most cities of comparable size.

Rich with performance groups, the city needs a special outdoor venue for them.

'There's already been a lot of energy spent on streetscapes, but there hasn't been a major turnaround Downtown," Dyer said. "You need a heart. Surface improvements haven't addressed the bigger picture: You need people down here?

"A restaurant where the bank vault is would have a great view of the mountains and the plaza," Borys added.

She said the consultants feel that reconfiguring Water and Church with two-way traffic would be "a big economic development catalyst." The project would be the first step in the next generation of infrastructure investment.

In addressing the southern gateway to Downtown in the vicinity of Lohman and Amador avenues, she said planners and designers are called upon to ask the questions, What can we do to signal, 'This is Downtown. This place is special."

One possibility is a small entertainment district with a multiplex theater to anchor the southern end, she said.

Borys said the consultants floated the idea of updating the zoning code for Downtown to pave the way for future multi-use buildings.

She said Susan Henderson and Howard Blackson, who will be the principal authors, have begun work on a proposed smart code for Downtown.

"The big three ideas that emerged were the plaza, Church and Water streets and rewriting Downtown zoning to reflect the collective local vision and enable things the updated city master plan envisions," Borys said. "We want to make sure new development is in keeping with the old. It then becomes a request for investment as well, because it gives people a level of predictability about what can be built next PlaceMakers will give a final report to the city in November, she said.

Pictured in these computerized vignettes is Main Street at Lohman Avenue looking north, showing existing conditions, then street improvements and eventual densification in keeping with the proposed form-based code zoning.

Five years of fear

Southwest Fright Fest returns bigger, better and scarier than ever

66 I've learned so much, and having such responsibility

has been quite exhilarating - in a good way, of course.

This experience has helped me open up to more people

and I will never

JAZMIN IBARRA

Centennial High School student and director, "Tales From the Script" forget it.

Drawing attendance in the thousands and with a cast and crew of hundreds, Southwest Fright Fest (SWFF), now in its fifth year, is rapidly becoming a Halloween institution in Las Cruces.

The brainchild of Philip Hernandez - who has worn many hats as producer, publicist, entrepreneur, Centennial High School and New Mexico State instructor, University president of the Las Cruces Community Theatre and currently of the Doña Ana Theatre Association, editor and host of "Behind the Curtain" and general force of nature – SWFF is much more than a haunted house.

This year, in celebration of five years of fear in the Mesilla Valley, SWFF will be bigger, better and scarier than ever. Featuring three unique haunted houses returning favorites"The Asylum" and "The Land of Enchantment" and new addition "Tales From the Script" and two scare zones -"Outbreak" and "The Big Top" - as well as a bevy of live entertainment and vendors, SWFF is sure to be a ghastly good time for those in their hard-to-please early teens and older.

This year's scare zones are immersive, interactive haunted houses on a huge scale with casts in the dozens. Visitors entering these zones will travel through terrifying scenarios without walls, paths or mazes, free to roam throughout these chilling worlds.

"Outbreak" takes attendees to the small, poverty-stricken town of Sanctuary, in the midst of a violent epidemic with no cure in sight. The town is factionalized, with one side hoping to contact the outside world, and the other intent on keeping the outbreak - and the town's dark secret - contained.

In "The Big Top," visitors will meet Fred, a lowly ticket-taker with a lust for power and an engagement to Luccia, the gypsy fortune teller. Leaving the circus and his fiancé to become the ringmaster of his own circus, Fred is cursed by his devastated brideto-be, the moonlight transforming him into a hideous creature. Soon, Fred recruits others like him, building a cursed carnival of his own and bringing it to the City of the Crosses.

Returning from 2011 and 2012, respectively, are haunted houses "The Asylum" and "The Land of Enchantment." The former, a favorite from the SWFF's third year, marks the return of the asylum, which burned down in the previous iteration. Rebuilt, SWFF scare-seekers re-enter the asylum through the eyes of a new patient, Gracie. What she sees and hears, you see and hear, as she descends further into madness - or does she?

"The Land of Enchantment," which last year followed Prince Alexander and Princess Cassandra through their encounters with fairytale creatures, will look at these stories from a different perspective. Trapped behind the Looking Glass, SWFF attendees join Cinderella as she journeys through the terrifying world beyond the glass.

New this year is "Tales From the Script," where fright fans fall into the scripts holding those classic movie monsters - Dracula, Frankenstein and Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde to interact with the monsters who started it

"I've learned so much, and having such responsibility has been quite exhilarating - in a good way, of course," she said. "This experience has helped me open up to more people and I will never forget it."

These dedicated students' instructors see the innate value in SWFF, too.

'Working on the Southwest Fright Fest has been a great experience for my students as well as my daughter," said Gadsden High School Theatre Director Tony Cordova. 'They've both learned a lot about building and my daughter has learned a great deal about makeup. I would say overall it has been a great learning experience for them and a great bonding experience for me and my daughter."

Rachel Ribeiro, Las Montañas High School theatre director, said she "love(s) the way working on the SWFF has brought together so many different groups in the local theater community.

"It's incredible what teamwork can bring about," she said.

Featured exhibit: Aliento a Tequila

Joel Salcido's "Aliento a Tequila," a photographic exploration of the cultivation, production and culture of tequila, comes to La Posta de Mesilla starting Wednesday, Oct. 30, for one week.

The breath of tequila

Photo exhibit reveals the culture and cultivation of an iconic spirit

By Zak Hansen

For many photographers and writers, the exploration of the unknown is the most thrilling part of the job.

Assignments lead them to enter worlds wholly unknown before. For award-winning Austin-based photographer Joel Salcido, a long-term, in-progress work led to a chance meeting, which, in turn, ushered him into the fascinating and oft-unseen world of Mexico's iconic spirit, tequila.

The resulting images created from inside the cultivation, production and even culture of tequila are coming to Las Cruces. What's more, they won't grace the walls of just any art gallery; rather, these incredible images will be paired with the fine spirits they pay homage to.

The exhibit "Aliento a Tequila" – literally breath or scent of tequila - opens Wednesday, Oct. 30, for one week, closing Wednesday, Nov. 6, at La Posta de Mesilla, 2410 Calle de San Albino.

"Aliento a Tequila" is composed of 39 of Salcido's images inside the cultivation production and culture of tequila, curated by Roy Flukinger, senior curator of photography and film at the Harry Ransom Humanities Research Center at University of Texas at Austin.

Salcido cut his teeth as a professional photographer at the El Paso Times, starting as an intern in 1979, moving up in the ranks until his departure as photo editor after 10 years.

Salcido said his background in the newspaper industry exposed him to the gamut of human experience, and prepared him for his later work.

"During those years, you cover everything, the entire spectrum of humanity from the highest to the lowest end, with all the greys of tragedy and victory in between," he said.

After leaving the paper, Salcido began freelancing in both the editorial arena as well as commercial and advertising work. This freelance work helps to pay the bills while Salcido pursues what he calls his "final goal" of doing 100 percent Fine Art photography, a passion he began pursu-

Salcido's current body of work, on display in "Aliento a Tequila," came about as many other great projects do: as a backup plan or a side-track.

Working on a project titled "Spain: Milennium Past," Salcido traveled back and forth across the Atlantic Ocean every few years, concentrating his work around the subject and motif of the Toro de Lidia, or "brave bulls" of Spain for an eventual book. Weary of travel, Salcido said he was looking for "a more local, more accessible project."

On his travels, Salcido was invited to a tequila tasting and introduced to the master distiller and CEO of Don Julio. Over a spread of tacos and tequila, it was revealed that the distiller had contacts in the bull breeding world. Before making calls and setting appointments, Salcido asked if it would be possible to do something on the creation of Don Julio.

"Ăt that point, I just thought I'd be shooting Don Julio - the fields, the process and so forth - but when I got there, I realized the magnitude of what I was being exposed to," Salcido said. Soon, a small shoot with one distiller grew into a full-scale project that took Salcido throughout Mexico.

"I just went crazy with it," Salcido said, "shooting high-end to low-end, high artisanal and low production and vice versa."

The resulting images are a stunning portrayal of the many-faceted world of tequila, from cultivation and production aspects to the rich cultural history surrounding the towns that produce the beverage pairing dinners replete with plenty of the legendary spirit on hand: from 6 to 9 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 30 opening night - La Posta will present "Tequila, Tapas y Mas Happy Hour," featuring some of Don Julio's finest tequilas paired with tapas, live music and a sneak preview of Salcido's work. Then, from 6 to 9 p.m. Wednesday, Nov. 6 - the day "Aliento a Tequila" closes La Posta will host "The Fine Art of Tequila Dinner," an evening of fine dining complete with Don Julio tequilas and margaritas paired with each course, culminating with a dessert finale paired with Don Julio 1942, the distillers' flagship spirit.

While he was originally hesitant to show his work in a restaurant, Salcido said La Posta's commitment to the conservation of both fierce tradition and fine tequila swayed him.

"I don't normally show in this type of venue, but what convinced me was their commitment to both the art of tequila and the culture of Mexico," he said. "They really understand it, so based on that I felt it was a good match."

According to the artist, tequila is much more than just a drink, something he discovered as he immersed himself in the mystic and mythical world of blue agave.

"Tequila is the elixir that faithfully remains the guardian of Mexico's landscape, tradition and national identity," he said in press materials. "It is indeed that ancient lord of fire with a savage smile. In this landscape of blue agave, I discovered the traditions of culture and religion, both ancient and modern indigenous and foreign. Still there, amongst life, is the everyday toil of man, land and sky, unified in purpose to produce a spirit that is only true to the mythic character of Mexico and its people."

What's in a name?

Bradley D and William B Restaurant offers country cooking classics

By Zak Hansen

As a happily retired veteran of the restaurant industry, I can tell you a few things about the places we all eat.

One of those, nearly a universal, is that when something goes wrong – or right – it's the fault of some nebulous, people-containing workspace known only as "the kitchen," rather than an individual.

If your salad came out with walnuts after you requested it without, it was "the kitchen." If your soup came out cold, it was "the kitchen." If your steak came out medium-rare instead of medium, it was never a person – in more than a few cases, Zak, say – it was "the kitchen."

It takes a lot to stake a name, and thereby a reputation, on each dish that passes through a restaurant's window, but with a new addition to the Las Cruces dining scene, father and son Bradley D. and William B. Wilson are doing just that.

"I always said, 'If you're serving something and somebody wants to know who made it, would you be willing to tell them your name?" said the elder Wilson. "That was always in my mind, to put it out there and put your name on it, not hide behind someone else."

With that, the Wilsons set to work creating a menu worthy of putting their names on, and at Bradley D and William B Restaurant, they've done it.

Offering what Bradley Wilson calls

"American, mom-and-pop, country home cooking," Bradley D and William B Restaurant is the perfect place to take a load off and warm up with a bellyful of comfort food, especially in the rapidly approaching winter months.

From 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday, Bradley D and William B Restaurant's lunch menu features an array of appealing options. Salads, soups, burgers, sandwiches and house specialties are all available at lunchtime, running the gamut from familiar to foreign.

The sandwich menu boasts the New Mexican Melt (grilled chicken breast, Swiss cheese, green chile, sliced avocado and chipotle mayonnaise) and the Portobello Mushroom (grilled Portobello mushroom, smoked cheddar, cherry onion chutney, fresh spinach and basil aioli on rye bread), as well as premium items including the Focaccia Smoked Turkey (house-smoked turkey breast, sprouts, Roma tomato, fresh avocado, Swiss cheese and pesto aioli on a house-made Focaccia roll) and the grouper sandwich (blackened or sautéed grouper with lettuce, tomato and a remoulade sauce on a Kaiser roll).

House specialties are the individual chicken pot pie – William Wilson's recommendation – a flaky buttermilk pastry crust filled with roasted chicken, carrots, peas, celery in a rich chicken reloute, served with a side salad, as well as homestyle favorites including chicken fried steak, braised beef ribs, fried catfish, old-fashioned meatloaf and even liver and onions, made with sautéed calves' liver, onions, avocado, applewood smoked bacon, whipped potatoes and fresh vegetables.

For dinner service, from 5 to 8:30 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday, Bradley D and William B Restaurant offers many of the popular entrée selections from its lunch menu, with the addition of some heavier, fancier fare. Dinner-only items include honey-glazed sausage-stuffed pork loin (apple-brined, double-cut pork loin stuffed with ground sausage and apple, served with crispy pork belly, mashed potatoes and fresh vegetables), rosemary chicken paillard (marinated, pan-fried chicken thighs in rosemary cream sauce, with garlic and rosemary rice and fresh vegetables) and grouper pineapple mojito (cast-iron-seared grouper with pineapple mojito sauce).

Bradley D and William B Restaurant is also vegetarian-friendly, with more than just salads available to our non-carnivorous friends. Both the lunch and dinner menu carry vegetarian fare, including the Portobello mushroom sandwich, the fresh vegetable sandwich and, a Wilson family favorite, eggplant parmigiana family favorite, eggplant parmigiana.

On Sundays, Bradley D and William B Restaurant does brunch, with omelets, benedicts and entrees including pecan pancakes, smothered green chile burritos and the appropriately named Hangover Cure, a buttermilk biscuit covered with two eggs any style and choice of apple-wood smoked bacon, sausage or ham, smothered in homemade green chile sauce.

These inspired pairings are likely the result of both Bradley and William Wilson attending the cooking program at El Centro College in Dallas, as well as the younger Wilson's time spent working at Five Sixty by Wolfgang Puck, one of the Metroplex's finest restaurants.

Combining that culinary skill with a devotion to simple, down-home classics, Bradley D and William B Restaurant stakes the names of its founders on its food. Don't be surprised if they become household names around town.

A salute to the Greatest Generation

'Heroes' is a poignant, powerful work

Review by Gerald M. KaneFor the Las Cruces Bulletin

As I write these words, our country is still in the midst of a government shutdown.

One of the most poignant scenes, captured on worldwide news footage and photographs, was how large groups of World War II veterans (some from our own community) were denied entrance into the National World War II Memorial on the National Mall because of the government shutdown.

As they would in the battles they fought 75 years ago, they stormed the barricades and demanded the National Park Service Rangers open the gates in order for them to pay their respects to their fallen colleagues, and to see with their own aging eyes how our country honored them all with towering pillars of granite and the Freedom Wall's 4,048 gold stars, each representing 100 Americans who died in the war. It is easy to understand why Tom Brokaw called these World War II vets the "Greatest Generation."

"Heroes," the current production playing on the stage of the Black Box Theatre through Sunday, Oct. 27, is a beautiful, touching testimony to the valor, strength and independence of the soldiers of this generation, as much as it is a sad commentary on the daily departure from this world of so many of these brave men and women, now in their 80s and 90s.

Originally titled "Wind in the Poplars" by French playwright Gerald Sibleyras in 2002, "Heroes" was crisply translated by award-winning playwright Tom Stoppard, who won the 2006 Laurence Olivier Award for Best New Comedy in London.

"Heroes" is a significant play, and I urge you to call the Black Box Theatre and order your tickets. You won't be sorry.

"Heroes" is set in a retired soldier's home somewhere in France in August 1959. It focuses on the day-to-day lives of three unique World War II veterans of varying ages and maladies who dare to dream. They devise a plot to escape from the humdrum reality they face each day on the terrace, adorned by a cement dog they often look to for non-verbal assurance and direction. In a way, the dog, like us, the audience, is witness to the events that transpire and silently takes in the humor and wisdom taking place before his and our eyes.

This sparsely decorated terrace is the veterans' respite away from the nun who serves as supervising administrator of the facility. Poignantly, it is here where they gather to wait out the end of their lives. That existence is quite a contrast from the valor they demonstrated during The Great War.

How their plan to escape is formulated and carried out constitutes the sum and substance of this remarkable, often humorous, yet strangely thought-provoking work.

I won't give away any spoilers, but the imagery discussed and staging at the play's ending brought tears to my aging eyes.

The hallmarks of this production are love, sensitivity, duty, honor, country and personal responsibility. It is apparent that the gentle hands of director larrychandler and assistant director Larry Fisher treated the production with respect and moved the play along with care and beauty.

The three actors in the production deserve special mention. Each one crafted his characterization with skill, wit and nuance. In doing so, they provide us with an immediate clarity of their individual idiosyncrasies, weaknesses and hints of their past leadership abilities.

It is clear that this acting ensemble, Doug Roby, Gorton Smith and Monte H. Wright,

'Captain Phillips' is a thrilling biopic – maybe

Review by Zak HansenLas Cruces Bulletin

On April 8, 2009, four Somali pirates attacked the Maersk Alabama, a cargo ship registered under the American flag en route to Mombassa, Kenya. The Alabama's captain, Richard Phillips, was taken hostage by the pirates and held by his captors for days in a small lifeboat, bound for the Somali coast. The ordeal lasted four days, until, on April 12, a successful rescue effort was carried out by the U.S. Navy.

These are the facts of the case; the rest is largely speculation, fueled by a culture of hero worship in a 24-hour media cycle. The incident received almost instant widespread attention, and Phillips was lauded by many as a hero, exhibiting courage and calm under dire circumstances. Phillips,

Stephan Talty, wrote about his experiences in the 2010 book "A Captain's Duty: Somali Pirates, Navy SEALs, and Dangerous Days at Sea," which was subsequently made into the film "Captain Philllips," in theaters now.

Immediately upon its release, however, the crew of the Maersk Alabama has cried foul on the film's factual inaccuracies. Eleven crew members have sued Maersk Line and the Waterman Steamship Corp. for more than $50 million, alleging "willful, wanton and conscious disregard for their safety" by their captain. In an article in the New York Post, crew members were highly critical of Phillips' portrayal in the film. They've painted him as sullen, arrogant and self-righteous, going so far as to claim he knowingly and recklessly put them in harm's way despite repeated warnings of increased piracy in the area, in an effort to save time and money.

"Captain Phillips" does, indeed, paint him as a hero, calmly negotiating with the pirates and working toward a peaceful resolution before allowing himself to be taken hostage to protect his crew. This fact, among all, seems to be the most hotly contested. One crew member has stated he felt Phillips had a death wish, suggested by his willingness to travel through pirate-infested waters, and the attorney representing the 11 crew members was quoted as saying, "It is galling for them to see Ćaptain Phillips set up as a hero, it is just horrendous, and they're

The facts of the case may be up for dispute – after all, the only ones who know the specifics are Phillips, his crew and the four Somali pirates, three of whom are dead – but "Captain Phillips," taken on its own merits, is an engrossing biopic thriller and a great showcase for the talent of its leads, Tom Hanks and newcomer Barkhad Abdi, already receiving Oscar buzz for his portrayal of the pirate's leader, Abduwali Abdukhadir Muse.

Director Paul Greengrass ("The Bourne Supremacy," "The Bourne Ultimatum" and "United 93") has his work cut out for him, following a year of intense, globe-spanning thrillers including "Zero Dark Thirty" and "Argo," and opening a week after the thrilling "Gravity,"

Tom Hanks stars as Richard Phillips in "Captain Phillips," a retelling of the 2009 hijacking of the Maersk Alabama by Somali pirates, now playing at Allen Theatres.

but in his hands, the story of the Maersk Alabama is riveting. Using no CGI, Greengrass' film is in easy competition for one of the most visually arresting of the year.

Hanks has a chance to show his incredible range as the erstwhile captain, offering what may be one of his best performances in years. At the end of the film, Phillips, soaked in the blood of his captors and finally rescued, simply cracks. It's a devastating, human moment, and one of Hanks' strongest, which is saying something. Abdi is a wonder, his quiet, calculated and menacing portrayal of the desperate, khatchewing Muse stunning.

What struck me most about "Captain Phillips" was its refusal to sink to fist-pumping, jingoistic revenge tale. There's no question who the antagonists are – they're the ones pointing guns in the face of the always-loved Hanks – but they're never portrayed as faceless, unreasonable villains. We see the dire circumstances they come from, riddled with the poverty, oppression and violence that characterizes the warlord system, and, in some ways, we can understand their plight.

"There's gotta be something more than being a fisherman and a kidnapper," Phillips says to his captors.

"Maybe in America, Irish," Muse responds. "Maybe in America."

Whether taken as fact or fiction, ripped-from-the-headlines biopic or geopolitical parable, "Captain Phillips" is one hell of a ride.

Film Review

Despite its facts under serious scrutiny, "Captain Phillips" is a tense and engrossing biopic featuring stellar performances by Tom Hanks and newcomer Barkhad Abdi

The horrible power of lies and innuendo

'The Hunt' is a marvelous, moving film

Review by Jeff BergFor the Las Cruces Bulletin

In "The Hunt," Lucas, played by Mads Mikkelsen, certainly the finest Scandinavian actor working nowadays, is a divorced kindergarten teacher. An underachiever of sorts, he nonetheless loves his job and gets along well with his young wards.

Klara is one of his students and the daughter of a close friend. Klara has a schoolgirl crush on Lucas, and when he explains to her that they can be friends only in the mildest sense of the world after she gives him a small gift and a peck, she is saddened by this.

Her spiff is misinterpreted by the headmistress of the school, Klara, who clearly doesn't have a clue as to what she is almost saying, soon has Lucas in deep trouble, when it is assumed he exposed himself to her.

Things build rapidly and darkly against him. Only one person believes his protestations and soon he is out of a job. Recently divorced and new at this job, Lucas' life spins more and more out of his control. Compounded by the fact that he was also trying to reunite with his son, Lucas continues to try and prove his innocence. He has also just started dating a co-worker who briefly sides with him, but not nearly long enough to be of any help.

As if that is not bad enough, he is soon the town's pariah, left behind by friends, including his male friends, with whom he had a deep bond, doing man stuff such as drinking and hunting. The hunting becomes a key part in the film.

Who is hunting who here? Lucas is clearly innocent on this side of the screen, but the amazing speed at which the lies, rumors and innuendo spreads denies Lucas the opportunity to be able to get things straightened out.

Left without resources and friends, he falls into a deep funk, one that starts to make him not care about anything, including further attempts to get the truth to be told.

Klara, on the other hand, has known she has done something wrong, but she is so young she is not sure what to do or how to correct it. Lucas has been her friend – walking her to school when she sat outside her parents house as they argued, which happened frequently. When she does tell the truth, no one believes her, so set are they on making Lucas the predator rather than a Mikkelsen won the Best Actor award at the 2012 Cannes Film Festival and it is easy to see why. Going from a reasonable, happy man to the town criminal is not an easy role to do, but he does so flawlessly. The story is intelligent and gripping, rarely pulling at the heartstrings, but rather keeping things in line with pointed directing and a fine cast of supporting actors.

"The Hunt" tries to lead us to a "happy" ending, but then it does not. There cannot be a happy ending for someone involved in something as heinous as this. Even if the community were to once again accept Lucas, the pall of this episode would hang over him and the town for ever.

And that becomes abundantly clear at the end of this marvelous and moving film.

Wish me a happy birthday at jeffberg@ lascrucesbulletin.com

Capturing the scenery

Property selected for its Organ Mountain view

By Beth Sitzler

Las Cruces Bulletin

Located in Picacho Hills, Linda Vista Estates offers residents unique views of the area's most popular landmark – the Organ Mountains – a feature that drew Ashok and Sushila Khera to the area

Ashok Khera, an engineer and developer of the subdivision, said after they sold their home in the valley, they had to live in the property's guesthouse.

"We had nowhere to go," he said. "We decided to get one of the lots in the subdivision and build."

They hired an architect from Tuscon, Ariz., and ventured out to Linda Vista Estates, which featured only a few homes at the time.

"We had plenty to choose from at that time," he said.

After standing on each lot, the architect picked the one at 1141 Boling Lane for its views of the Organ Mountains, valley and the city.

The couple met with the architect several times over the course of three months until they had a plan that reflected their needs.

"We had a required number of bedrooms and things like that, but why we wanted an architect rather than a designer is because an architect will usually come up with their own ideas," Ashok Khera said.

"The inside is all mine and the outside is all his," Sushila Khera said.

Sushila Khera's style can be seen as soon as guests come through the door of the 3,298-square-foot home. Curved walls in tan and brown are complemented by the bamboo floors and wood crown molding that line the tall ceiling – reaching as high as 16 feet in the great room.

"We wanted to do a great room because we didn't want a lot of walls," Ashok Khera said. "We do a lot of entertaining so we wanted an open space."

A partial wall with nichos of various sizes breaks up the great room and dining room, providing a bit of privacy to the space. The dining room opens to the kitchen. Sushila Khera included touches of green in the tan space – which is also reflected in the couple's wet bar.

Rather than placing the stove against a wall, the couple placed it in a central island, which features bar seating, allowing chef and guests to interact.

Another bonus of the stovetop placement: on a clear day, they can enjoy the view of the Organ Mountains while whipping up dinner, Ashok Khera.

Off of the kitchen are two of the home's three bedrooms. Each bedroom includes a private bathroom, great for when the couple's daughters come to visit.

"We can have two families here at once," Ashok Khera said. "It works out very well."

The home has a split-bedroom floor plan. The master suite is located near the great room. As large as the bedroom of the master suite is, the bathroom is equally impressive. Cream tile lines the floor as a splash of green surrounds the Jacuzzi bathtub. Rather than featuring a long row of sinks, the architect designed a two-sided vanity area.

As much as the couple wanted the home to be stylish, they also wanted it to be livable.

"My wife has a lot of allergies, so we had them put a fresh air inlet into the air conditioner," said Ashok Khera, explaining that an odor and pollution control filter made of charcoal takes out any dust and pollutants in the air.

In addition to improving the air quality of the home, the couple wanted the home to be as efficient as possible. The home's orientation was designed in such a way that it stays cool in the summer and warm in the winter.

"Sometimes it's December before we have to turn the heat on," Ashok Khera said. "It helps us save energy."

As an engineer, Ashok Khera said it was important to him that the structure feel strong, which is why they used structural steel columns to support major load points throughout the home.

Water conservation was also important to the Kheras, so they had all the sinks and bathtubs plumbed to a separate gray water system that is then used to water the property's trees and plants.

The property features a bevy of green and colorful vegetation, thanks to Sushila Khera, an avid gardener.

From the covered patio – which features stamped concrete floors and a fireplace – guests can take in the view of the Organ Mountains while enjoying lush grass, oleanders, crape myrtle, zinnias, rose bushes and a papaya plant.

Sushila Khera's green thumb is evident around the side of the house, which features a vegetable garden and raised beds.

"We have cucumber, garlic, squash, eggplant, pumpkin," she said.

The property also features peach, fig and pomegranate trees and magnolias that sur-Continued on following page

Mist rolls in for Halloween

Home fogger adds fear and mystery

By Alta LeCompte

Remember a three-story Victorian residence rising on the crest of a hill along a forgotten stretch of highway in the 1960 Alfred Hitchcock horror classic "Psycho?"

To make that image of Norman Bates' home, shrouded in darkness and surrounded by bare-branched trees, even creepier in your mind's eye, just add fog.

Long associated with graveyards at night and London's backstreets in the days of Jack of the Ripper, fog holds the power to make scary settings look even scarier.

If you secretly delight in setting a scene that causes the hair stand up on the arms of your guests, consider adding a fog machine to enhance your Halloween

What is it?

A fog machine is an electric-powered device that heats a liquid and shoots it out as fog.

Suitable for outdoor as well as indoor use, fog machines are water resistant, according to Spirit Halloween sales associate Samantha Aguirre.

Machines are available in a variety of sizes from table-top to a 1,000-watt model that can deliver enough fog to fill a gym or haunted house. The large machine produces about 5,000 cubic feet per minute of fog, operated by a corded

Best suited for home use is a 400-watt model. Its output is adjustable, so it can be used in smaller rooms. The device emits up to 2,000 cubic feet per second of fog. It comes with a wireless remote that has a 20- to 25-foot range.

A low-lying 400-watt model is best for shrouding a "graveyard" or walkway in fog that hovers close to the ground.

Other variations include a red and green laser fogger and a bubbler that makes large bubbles filled with "fog."

How does it work?

Foggers use a 100 percent waterbased solution. The solution, known as fog juice, contains chemicals and can leave a slight sticky residue on the skin, Aguirre said.

Fog machines plug in to a household outlet.

"You have to be careful where it is placed because it would be easy for little trick-or-treaters to trip on the black wires," Aguirre said.

To make fog, pour the fog juice into an opening at one of the machine's tank. The fogger heats the liquid and a pump sends the "fog" out an opening at the other end.

A quart of fog juice lasts about 6 hours in a 400-watt fogger.

A 1,000-watt machine uses a quart of fog juice in two hours.

Where is it found?

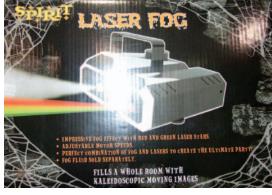

Table-top misters that operate with water rather than fog juice are available online.

Foggers are sold at spirithalloween.com and other websites. They are available locally at Spirit Halloween, 1333 E. Amador Ave., at the corner of Solano Drive.

What does it cost?

A 400-watt fogger is sold locally for $34.99. A low-lying model sells for $64.99. Fog juice costs $7.99 a quart or $19.99 a gallon. A liquid cleaner sells for $7.99.

Pairing chile and wine

Remember, go for what you like

Sunny Conley Chile Knights

The other evening, I craved a heaping platter of pasta ladled with a spicy red sauce made heady with fresh garlic and onion, so to a heated skillet lightly coated with olive oil, I added two crushed garlic cloves and about 1/4 of a medium red onion, chopped.

Within seconds, the expected knee-weakening pungency permeated my tiny abode. Not having planned in advance for this single-serving meal, I realized my countertop sported only two puny tomatoes, which I chopped and added to the sauté. To create a hearty sauce, more tomatoes were called for. Cheating, I opened a small jar of plain pasta sauce and added about 1/2 cup to the skillet.

I "fed" the sauce two plump, extra hot roasted green chiles with seeds, sliced mini cucumbers and, on a whim, tossed in four jumbo-sized sliced green olives stuffed with jalapeño and reduced the burner to low. I prepared the pasta al dente in boiling water using a variety of noodles of different shapes, sizes, color and flavor, including penne, fusilli and rotini. Within minutes, the meal was complete.

With a glass of pinot noir in hand, I was ready to indulge. The pasta was robust and charged with rousing flavors. The jalapeño stuffed green olives elevated the meal to gourmet heights with its spicy-tart and nutty-flavored taste. This was a surprisingly tasty meal; that is, until I sipped the wine.

I'm not a big fan of red, but most Italianstyle recipes recommend "pairing with red wine." Perhaps it was the brand, the year, the quality, but it tasted dreadful. I hankered for a glass of chilled oaky chardonnay. But is it protocol to sip white when a dish calls red?

The following day, I consulted Natalie's site (http://nataliemcclean.com) for answers. Natalie, a Canadian sommelier and wine guide, recommends wines that pair well with recipes. One menu tab includes her personal recipes. Mentioned for a recipe similar to mine is pinot noir.

While closing down her page, a much-welcomed entry caught my attention: "Your best source of food and wine matching is your own palate. Experiment with different combinations to discover not only what makes a perfect pairing for you, but also to broaden your range of possibilities. As the author, Alexis Lichine, observed, 'There is no substitute for pulling corks."

So drink what you like with the dishes you like, guilt free. Keep this in mind if you attend the La Viña Fall Harvest Festival Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 19-20, held at La Viña, 4201 S. Highway 28 in La Union, about a 40-minute drive south of Las Cruces. Consider pairing one of your purchases with a chile pepperinspired autumn recipe.

Slow Cooker Hot Sauce Brunswick Stew

1 pound chicken breasts cut into chunks 2 cups of frozen lima beans 1/2 cup barbecue sauce
1/4 cup ketchup
2 (14-ounce) cans cream-styled corn
1 (14-ounce) can corn kernels
Worcestershire sauce to taste
1/2 cup hot sauce

Place all ingredients in slow cooker and stir well. Turn the cooker on high and cook for four hours, or cook on low for 8 hours. Cool about 15 minutes before serving. Tastes best the next day. Serve with cornbread. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Burrito Ole! Crowd- Pleaser Casserole

- 2 pounds ground turkey
- 1 medium onion, peeled and diced
- 4 teaspoons garlic, minced
- 2 packets taco seasoning (plus water per packet instructions)
- 2 (2-ounce) cans sliced black olives, drained 4 to 6 medium-hot roasted green chiles,
- peeled, stemmed, seeded and diced
- 1 (10-ounce) can diced tomatoes with jalapeños
- 1 (12 ounce) can medium-hot taco sauce 2 (16-ounce) cans fat-free refried beans
- 12 (8-inch) corn tortillas 1 pound sharp Cheddar cheese shredded

Enchilada sauce

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Meanwhile sauté meat in a large skillet for 3 to 5 minutes. Add onion, garlic, taco seasoning and water. Sauté an additional 3 to 5 minutes. Drain any excess fat.

Mix in olives, chiles, tomatoes, taco sauce and refried beans. Stir mixture thoroughly, reduce heat to low, and let simmer 15 to 20 minutes.

Spread thin layer of meat mixture in 4-quart casserole dish (or deep 9-by-13-inch pan). Cover with layer of tortillas, then more meat, then cheese. Repeat layers until all tortillas are used, topping off with a layer of meat, enchilada sauce and then cheese. Bake 20 to 30 minutes, until cheese is slightly brown and bubbly. Makes 16 servings.

Spicy-Hot Chorizo Casserole

- 2 cups chicken broth
- 1 cup basmati rice, uncooked
- 1 cup onion, diced
- 3 jalapeño peppers, diced
- 2 garlic cloves, minced
- 1 teaspoon cayenne pepper 1 teaspoon turmeric
- 1 pound chorizo sausage, sliced
- 1 (12-ounce) jar salsa, preferably hot
- 1 (8 ounce) container sour cream
- 8 ounces Monterey jack pepper cheese, shredded

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Bring broth to boil in a medium saucepan.

Stir in the rice, reduce heat, cover and simmer for approximately 20 minutes.

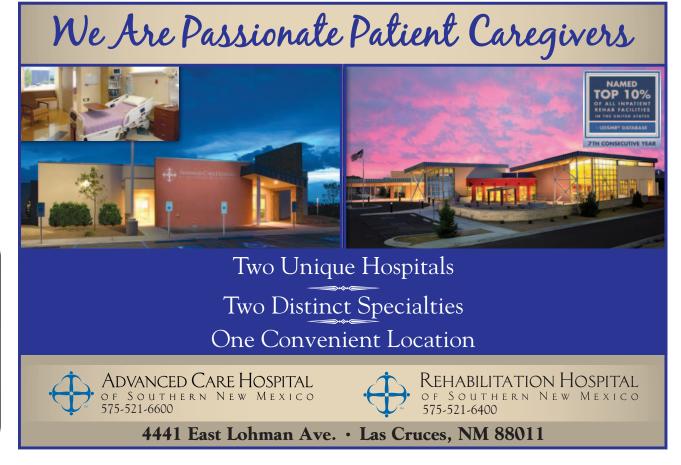

In a large skillet over medium, heat chorizo until no longer pink. Add onion, garlic and jalapeños and cook until soft.

In a medium mixing bowl, add cooked rice, cooked chorizo and vegetables, salsa, cayenne pepper, turmeric and sour cream. Mix well, place in casserole dish, and top with pepper-jack cheese. Bake approximately 20 minutes or until cheese is bubbly. Garnish with jalapeño slices. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Getting a handle on handles

Fixtures can transform the look of your kitchen, bath

Maureen Villmer Practical Design

It's like icing on a cake; it's like jewelry for your little black dress; it's like your favorite spice in your green chile stew. How can you leave it out? What is it? It's hardware for the cabinets and drawers in your kitchen or bath.

My new office is in Sherwood Cabinets' new location at 610 E. Amador Ave. When Sherwood moved to its new Amador Avenue location, it installed all new cabinetry displays and I helped with selection of the hardware and backsplashes for the displays. What a difference these selections can make to the display and what a difference it can make to individualizing the cabinets and drawers in your home.

You can actually change the whole appearance of your kitchen or bath just by changing the hardware. Today, you will find many shapes and many finishes – some of them traditional and some of them very contemporary.

Finishes include Carmel bronze, dark brushed antique copper, oil-rubbed bronze, brass (both antique and shiny), Swedish iron machined, iron, pewter, copper, chrome, steel, aluminum, glass, ceramic and on almost to infinity. A significant change in the look of the hardware will change the look of the cabinets and kitchen as a whole.

A basic rule of thumb in selecting hardware is that dark hardware goes best on light-finished woods and light-color hardware goes best on dark-finished woods. While, like most rules, you can break it successfully, you should at least begin your considerations there.

A consideration in selecting the style of the hardware is the ease of use. Does it fit in your hand? Is it comfortable to pull on? Also, if the cabinets have a particular style themselves, does the selected hardware "work" with that style?

Consider the size of the knobs and handles; they don't necessarily all get chosen as a same-size set. If a drawer is a small one, a knob can fit on it with a handle on the door below. Upper cabinets usually come in 30-inch, 36-inch and 42-inch heights. To keep in scale with the cabinet heights, use a 4-inch handle on the smaller cabinets, and a 6-inch handle on the largest upper cabinets. A small knob is out of scale on a tall upper cabinet. Keep this in mind as you make your selections.

If you have already put a single knob on a large upper cabinet, it is easy to change out into a handle. Use the one hole that is already drilled as one of the two holes and drill a new one in above it in a larger profile.

Mixing knobs, handles, latches and pulls can make the cabinets much more interesting than if you make them all the same. An example would be to use a cup pull on a small drawer that is at the top of a "stack" of drawers and then use two or three different-shaped pulls on the bottom two or three drawers. For a more interesting space, combine at least three different styles of hardware all in the same color, but different styles. It could be a knob, a handle and a cup pull.

Redoing the hardware on your cabinets can result in dramatic changes in the look of your kitchen or bath; and the same approach can be used to selecting hardware when you are putting in new cabinets.

horses

Katharine Lark Chrisley Stable Woman

Horses are herbivores – eating plants and seeking herbs for healing when in a natural or wild state.

Their natural diets are filled with grasses, blossoms, roots and even bark during winter when other food is scarce. The horse receiving large roughage-, pasture-, grass- or hay-based diets will thrive when the herbs that would normally be growing in the pastures are supplemented.

These herbs are typically dandelions, meadowsweet, red and white clovers, burdock, purslane and comfrey. As he is grazing, a horse might choose to chomp on the dandelion greens to support his liver or soothe his stomach.

The meadowsweet reduces inflammation; red clover is anti-cancer; burdock cleanses the glands while purslane is cooling to the digestive tract and the skin. Comfrey plants are used to heal bone and head injuries and a horse will likely seek out the herb after an injury.

We can purchase these herbs as dry, cut and sifted to add to the horse's meals or even grow them to feed fresh. When we add herbs as supplements or as medicine, we should follow the herbalist's caution: Feed very small amounts at first while watching for any reactions.

Often times people think that a horse, weighing 10 times as much as a human, should get 10 times as much herb. Actually, horses assimilate the plants better than we do and are more sensitive to the volatile oils, so they receive four times the human dose.

Equine healing still depends upon many plant-based remedies and applications. We can start with the basic, supplemental herbs to support specific organs. Then, learning as we go, there are thousands of possibilities to add to our natural support tool kits.

In nature, certain plants are available during different seasons - often corresponding to the bodily needs of that season. When we consider the horse's environment, weather and stresses he might face, we can create nourishing supplements to keep his systems strong and healthy.

Please consult a holistic health care practitioner for any illness or injury.

October is National Disability Employment Awareness

By Rachel Christiansen

Everyone should be given the opportunity to earn a living from the fruits of their labor it's the pursuit of happiness that underlies the American dream.

That's also a part of the message October brings, as it is recognized as National Disability Employment Awareness Month, which celebrates and encourages companies and organizations to build inclusive business cultures by hiring individuals with disabilities.

Tresco Inc. President and CEO Pam Lillibridge said the nonprofit has celebrated this message every day of its 45-year existence, and in the end, everyone wins.

"We see it as a win-win-win situation," Lillibridge said. "Obviously, people with disabilities have the opportunity to show their skills, abilities and untapped potential to employers and get the paycheck that allows them to enhance their life with the money they earn.

"It's certainly a win for the employer, because they get a loyal and talented employee and the support of Tresco to make sure placement for that employee can be successful on the job ... and it's a win for (taxpayers) because as people go to work, they are less dependent on public benefits, which costs us less, and, of course, they become a taxpayer themselves."

Partnerships between Tresco and employers at the federal, state and local levels contribute to the success of more than 550 Tresco employees.

Umbrella organizations such as AbilityOne at the federal level, and Horizons of New Mexico at the state level, help foster relationships

Flu season around the corner

DoH encourages vaccinations

By Rachel Christiansen

It's that time of year when thoughts of baking, decorating and fuzzy blankets begin to take hold. Unfortunately, some unwanted visitors may also take hold in the form of sneezing, coughing, sore throats and other ailments. Flu vaccination clinics are under way in a variety of locations, found in local pharmacies such as Walmart, Walgreens, Albertsons and clinics held regularly through the New Mexico Department of Health (DoH).

"We don't normally see cases of the flu in the southern part of the state until the end of January into February," said Debby Hanus, immunization program coordinator at DoH. "However, flu has already reached the northern part of the state and that's very early as well. It may be coming around earlier than we expected.

Despite misgivings about the flu shot, such as the immunization can actually cause the flu, Hanus said this is completely false.

"It's impossible to get the flu from the flu shot," she said.

Most vaccinations, she explained, are formulated with a killed flu virus, and those that are made with a live virus are nowhere near strong enough to give someone the flu.

When sickness occurs after a flu shot, it is usually because it was contracted before the shot was even given, as it usually takes up See Flu on page C25 to two weeks for the immunization to be fully

Those with lowered immune systems such as children, the elderly or those who have chronic diseases, are the ones most at risk for the flu.

The Centers for Disease Control recommends that everyone 6 months of age and older get a vaccine, which is designed to protect from the three major flu strains that cause the most illness.

Hanus said that it is important to protect those who do not or cannot receive a flu vaccination by surrounding them with those who can.

"The best way to protect is what they call 'herd immunity," Hanus said. "It's surrounding and protecting those who can't get effective antibodies by those who are able to receive the vaccination.

"Not everyone can get the flu shot because they may have allergies to some of the components."

According to the CDC, thousands of people in the U.S. die every year from the flu, and many more are hospitalized. The international organization monitors flu patterns around the world, studying strains that have been prevalent in other countries that have already had their flu seasons.

To ready themselves for the season, manufacturers across the country have prepared around 140 million doses of the flu vaccine.

So far this season, the DoH has administered 4,500 flu shots in Doña Ana County, including Anthony, Chaparral, Las Cruces and Sunland Park.

The New Mexico Department of Health's Doña Ana County Health Services Center will host a flu shot clinic from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Friday, Oct. 18, at the St. Genevieve Catholic Church Parish Hall, 1025 E. Las Cruces Ave. The immunization clinic is open to the public and free of charge.

between Tresco and government agencies that have employment opportunities available, but locally, it's mostly about positive networking and word of mouth.

"To me, awareness is about inclusion," said Gail Estell, Human Resources manager at Tresco. "The awareness that people with disabilities may need a little extra assistance in doing things, but they can pretty much do anything anybody else can do, they just may need a little help doing it."

"Oftentimes employers are afraid of the cost associated with hiring a person with disabilities and what accommodating them might mean," Lillibridge said, adding that most accommodations are actually less than $500.

Through an interview and profile process with the individual, Tresco discerns what makes a person "sparkle and shine," Lillibridge said, to be able to best pair them with a suitable endeavor.

Signature Offset, a local printing company, began hiring individuals through Tresco a little more than two months ago, after manager Jerry Buck said he had good experiences working with a similar company in Colorado.

"It's good for the community and it's good for us," Buck said. "Typically I find they are very dedicated employees, and they get a sense of fulfillment by having a job."

At Signature Offset, Buck said many of the recruits work in fulfillment packaging, placing inserts and other advertisement tabs inside of newspapers and magazines.

Ever stopped at a rest stop in this half of the state? Lillibridge said because of the partnership with Horizons of New Mexico, Tresco employees are responsible for the daily maintenance of 12 area rest stops south of Interstate 40.

People who are physically or mentally disabled may have trouble finding or keeping a job due to the disability, Lillibridge said, which is where agencies such as Tresco come in.

"Many aren't aware that with very little accommodations, a lot of times someone with a disability can be very successful on the job," Lillibridge said.

In addition to supported employment services, other programs offered through Tresco include respite care, community living and day services.

"Meaningful day services means providing a variety of activities to fill that person's day and make them involved and active in their community," said Al Sanchez, community employment manager at Tresco.

These have included volunteer efforts with Toss No Mas, the March of Dimes, the Las Cruces Farmers & Crafts Market and much more.

"I want to create awareness for young mothers and fathers who have children with disabilities, to know that they're living in a community that is welcoming and that there is a light at the end of the tunnel for their kids. ... There will be jobs and they'll live a more normal life," Sanchez said.

Shelter acts to improve morale

Steps taken in the right direction

Jake Sims Pet Connection

In a positive action at the last Animal Services Center of Mesilla Valley (ASCMV) Board meeting, a memorandum of agreement (MOA) was introduced that hopefully will finally provide Las Cruces City Human Resource services to ASCMV employees.

Since its inception in 2008, the ASCMV Joint Powers Agreement made by and between the city of Las Cruces and Doña Ana County included mechanisms for financing, operating and maintaining a regional animal shelter and related facilities, but does not include processing of Family Medical Leave Act, Americans With Disabilities Act, investigations and responses to hostile work environments or harassment claims or access to Employee Assistance Programs.

ASCMV staff, designated as neither city nor county employees, have been denied employee services that are provided to city and county employees. The Humane Society of Southern

New Mexico (HSSNM) has been made aware of these issues by a number of ASCMV staff in need of such services and brought this to the attention of the ASCMV board previously to no avail. It is timely that such services be provided.

The wording of the MOA as presented for consideration does have some serious ambiguity to its language that appears to possibly, under many conditions, leave the ASCMV employees without such services and left in limbo as to where to seek remedy for their issues.

That is an issue apparent in the provisions of the MOA that state "when appropriately notified, depending on staff availability and other factors, the city will process Family Medical Leave Act request for ASCMV employees."

The MOA further states, "If requested by the ASCMV, the city, depending on staff availability and other factors, will investigate and make recommendations to the ASCMV in matters related to the EEOC or the ADA."

The same is said about the Employee Assistance Program in the MOA as presented along with "in all cases, the ASCMV shall be the sole and final determinant of any course of action or inaction."

This language of such ambiguity certainly could leave ASCMV staff without recourse and HSSNM did express concern about the lack of safety net for ASCMV employees. This is exactly the position the ASCMV staff currently suffers and that which this MOA should adequately address.

Defining appropriate notification and recourse if such services are denied due to availability of staff or other factors should be accomplished. HSSNM recommended a change to the existing Joint Powers Agreement that would add these services to those already identified in the existing agreement.

Staff working in animal shelters such as the ASCMV, funded by the city and county, with all its mentally and physically draining aspects related to saving as many animals as possible while providing humane treatment for those animals not saved deserve no less than equal status with other city and county employees. That would be a step on the positive side.

He is passionate about educating the public on animal welfare and lowering euthanization rates in Doña Ana County. Sims is a volunteer with the Animal Services Center of the Mesilla Valley. Stand against cruelty

Two kittens huddled near their mom in the small, dirty, barbed-wire encased cage in which they'd been imprisoned. Mom cat tried to comfort her kittens, but the stench of rotting garbage surrounding them made it hard to breathe, causing them all to pant as their lungs filled with hot, humid, filth-ridden air.

Suddenly, the garbage dumpster lid opened and a face peered in, gasping at the sight of three frightened little cats fighting for their lives amidst bags full of trash. Gentle hands reached for the cage, lifting its three occupants to safety and salvation.

Sadly, this story is true, and it occurred only a few days ago in a trailer park just north of Las Cruces.

These innocent creatures were placed in a cage and tossed into a garbage dumpster, like a piece of trash. They were left there to die, either from starvation or suffocation. The thought of such diabolical cruelty makes my blood run cold. Who would do such a thing to three defenseless animals, and why?

First, let me say that, if you happen to be the worthless loser who is responsible for such a heinous and heartless act, rest assured that there's a special place waiting for you in the afterlife, and it's really, really warm there. Secondly, I would like to implore everyone to take a stand against this type of senseless cruelty which, unfortunately, is not uncommon in our community.

If you see someone being cruel to an animal, report them to the authorities immediately. Abusers generally don't just abuse animals – they often abuse other people, including children. These people need to be prosecuted to the full extent of the law, but this can only happen if they are caught. Do the right thing and report animal cruelty. Our animals deserve better.

Changes to the APA Pet Food Bank Program

ACTion Programs for Animals (APA) Pet Food Bank Program is closed until November and will re-open with slight changes to the schedule as well as more requirements for recipients.

The food bank operates from donations from local stores, food bins where personal donations can be made and sometimes monetary donations as well as grant funds.

At this time, food donations have been very low and no monetary funds remain for the year to purchase food, so APA is closing for a month to re-stock donations in order to meet the needs of the growing number of families seeking assistance. The pet food bank will reopen Friday, Nov. 15, and will be open 5 p.m. Fridays and 2 p.m. Sundays the second and last weekend of the month, instead of every weekend, at 901 Piñon St.

The food bank will be open for an hour on these days or until supplies are depleted.

The program is intended to help during times of financial crisis so people do not feel they have to give up their animals to the shelter, and it is also intended for responsible/humane pet guardians. Those seeking to use the pet food bank long term must provide proof of low-income or government assistance, proof of Doña Ana County residency and proof of animal ownership/responsible guardianship (i.e., vaccination records and spay/neuter records).

When people use the pet food bank, they are also given information about the various services for other types of assistance for their companion animals.

Since 2009, the APA Pet Food Bank Program has distributed more than 400,000 pounds of pet food to more than 1,300 families in Doña Ana County, with very limited interruptions in services all those years.

March of Dimes presents Annual High Heels style Show

Five local salons are teaming up for a circus-themed show to surprise the senses and raise money for the March of Dimes during the seventh annual High Heels for High Hopes Style Show "A Menagerie Carousel Jubilee" Nov. 22, at the Las Cruces Convention Center 680 E. University Ave.

This year is the largest show yet, as 20 local women will be joined by 20 of the most successful models of the past High Heels for High Hopes shows, called Legacy Models, for the 75th anniversary of the March of Dimes.

They are hoping to raise $175,000, and will bring style and live art to Las Cruces. Models will be styled by Studio 037 Salon, the Fixx Salon, Wildfire Salon, Carriage House Salon and Adore Salon. The show is coordinated by artistic director Leonard Jimenez and event chair Margarita Salazar. Mark Vasconcellos will serve as ring master and Steve Chavira and Dolores Connor will serve as hosts. Money raised will support programs and research that help families have healthy babies.

Leading up to the Nov. 22 event, this group of outstanding women will raise funds that will ultimately support research, education and community service projects through the March of Dimes, an organization whose mission focuses on preventing birth defects, premature birth and infant death.

Community members can help by donating to one of the High Heels for High Hopes models or purchasing general admission tickets for the event at www. highheelsforhighhopes.com. Event highlights include a private pre-show VIP dinner, pre-show carnival booths and novelty acts, snacks and drinks and the ultimate circus runway show. Tickets are available at participating salons in October. For information on other sponsorship opportunities, call 523-2627 or email bhorner@marchofdimes.com.

Sales held at Good Sam

Good Samaritan Society-Las Cruces Village will host two opportunities for shoppers to find hidden treasures, collectible antiques and/or unique gifts during the fall fundraisers. The funds raised from both events will be applied to the purchase of a new salad bar in the social center and an electronic keyboard to replace an older piano in the health care center.

From 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Friday and Saturday, Oct. 18-19, Curt Porter and his Guatemalan Mercado will be held. This twice-annual sale features unusual and handmade items from the native people of Guatemala. From women's and men's cotton clothing to jewelry, totes and handbags, table linens, hats and hand-carved Santos, you can find inexpensive gifts for everyone and decorate your home with flair.

The inaugural Estate Sale will be held from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Friday and Saturday, Nov.1-2.

The staff has been picking out the most unusual and collectible items from among those donated to the garage sale for a few years in an effort to do justice to the donations and the history often accompanying them.

Among the items that will be on sale are: a child's football helmet, shoulder pads, and catcher's mitt from the first half of the 20th century; a 100-year-old Schoenhut porcelain doll with hand-sewn clothes; quilts made in the 1920s; two Polaroid Land Cameras in their original boxes; some original artwork; a collection of Native American baskets; a collection of miniature boxes and much more.

If you have items to donate or questions, contact Cherry Patrick Jamison at 556-2119 or cjamison@good-sam.com.
