Patriot Day events set City Hall site of main 9/11 event By Todd G. Dickson

When officials, officers, firemen and others gather near City Hall Tuesday, Sept. 11, it will be the 11th anniversary of the terrorist attacks that led to two wars, one of which is still being fought.

The City of Las Cruces Patriot Day ceremony will begin at 7 p.m. at Albert Johnson Park, located at the intersection of North Main Street and Picacho Avenue, and the northeast parking lot of City Hall, 700 N. Main St.

Last year's 10th anniversary event was held in the City Hall parking lot. This year's theme is "Remembrance.

The ceremony will include a candlelight vigil in remembrance of first responders, bell ceremony, flag folding and patriotic music. The keynote speaker will be City Manager Robert Garza.

The city ceremony will conclude a day filled with moments of pausing for the attacks on the Pentagon and World Trade Center that killed 2,977 people on American soil.

The day's events will start at 8 a.m. with the raising of the ceremonial garrison flag at Veterans Memorial Park, 2651 Roadrunner Parkway.

Lawrence Orvis of the American Legion Post 10 said the garrison flag raising ceremonies at the park, held for major holidays throughout the year, have been attracting a good crowd lately. Boy Scouts and veterans join together in the raising of the large flag in the memorial park.

At 8:30 a.m., Oñate High School's Navy Junior ROTC cadets will travel to Highland Elementary School, 4201 Emerald St., for its 9/11 ceremony hosted by the Highland Parent Teacher Organization.

At 9:30 a.m., the Mayfield High School Air Force Junior ROTC will present a 9/11 memorial service at the entrance of Mayfield High School, 1955 N. Valley Drive.

The ceremony will feature a flag raising and speeches.

At 10 a.m., Las Cruces High School's Army Junior ROTC commemoration will be held in the school gym, 1750 El Paseo Road. Bulldawg Battalion school assembly is titled "The Two Towers that Made Us One." See Patriot Day on page A10

Charter school beckons students More than 200 students opt for New America School

CRUCES

During a short break from his 6 p.m. English class, Jeff Matthews speaks with certainty about the difference the New America School is making for his life.

"If this wasn't here, I wouldn't be here and I wouldn't be back in school," the 26-year-old said of the new charter school in Downtown Las Cruces.

The school holds day classes mostly for high school students, but it also holds night classes to help students like Matthews finish classes for a high school diploma, as well as adults to master English. As a state-chartered school, the classes are provided at no charge, no matter the age of the student.

That makes a huge difference for students such as Matthews and his classmates Robert Holguin, 23, and Veronica Vizcarra, 22.

All three have desires to attend college after getting their high school diploma, which they believe will be more valued than a GED. Before New America School opened its doors this fall, regular public schools were resistant to having "older" dropouts return to classes, Holguin said.

Vizcarra is raising two children and working, so New America's flexibility with her work schedule is making it possible for her to get her high school diploma, she said. "They work with us," Holguin said of the school's staff. "They know we have our lives outside the school."

Their story isn't that different than many of the students taking classes during the day. Janet Chavez, 21, and Judith Lozoya, 23, both blame making bad choices their senior years of high school which led them to drop out.

"I used to get mad at myself for not finishing school and put myself down," Chavez said. "I don't want to be known for my mistakes.'

Then she heard a radio commercial for New America School that said "if you dropped out of school, you can drop back in."

When I heard that, I said, 'That's me!'" See Charter on page A14

Council turns on lighting ordinance update

Businesses, residents get 6 months to switch to new outdoor standards

By Todd G. Dickson

Flying insects will swarm a porch light at night, but the "BUG" and "NITs" in the new outdoor lighting ordinance have more to do with controlling the porch light than the insect pest.

Before the Las Cruces City Council's unanimous vote for a new outdoor lighting ordinance Monday, Sept. 4, building inspector Barry Cole said the city has been seeking to update its 2000 standards since a national model lighting ordinance was released in 2010. Cole said the standards in the national model gave officials new methods for setting limits on outdoor lighting.

Putting limits on outdoor lighting can be complicated, Cole said. For example, glare is more obvious from lights on a building by itself than a building that is surrounded by other lit structures.

Cole said the problem of light trespass also subjective. People also have differing opinions on what should be done to protect the night sky, he said, noting that New Mexico's communities aren't as close to each other cities in the Midwest and East.

Many use lighting for security, Cole said, but architecture and landscaping around something such as an ATM machine also

For others, especially those who work at night, employee safety requires there be enough light to work or perform a task without injury, Cole said.

Despite the efforts to create national standards, Cole said each state has different standards. In Texas, state law limits light by lumens per acre, he said.

A local task force settled on using new standards referred to as BUG, which measures Back light, Up light and Glare, rather than just measuring lumens and requiring fixtures to control light cut-off. Cut-off standards are still in the new ordinance, but only for expensive lighting systems, he said.

As the task force worked on these issues, digital billboards arrived on the scene, further complicating the considerations, because See Lighting on page A10

Filling a vital need

DACC has served our community well by providing vital education programs for individuals and business

When Doña Ana Community College was formed as a branch campus of New Mexico State University in 1973 at the request of the Gadsden, Hatch and Las Cruces school boards, the vision of the leaders at the time was to provide vocational and technical education opportunities to the citizens of Doña Ana County.

Today, under the leadership of Margie Huerta, DACC has grown to include eight learning centers, serving approximately 10,000 students with more than 35 general course offerings.

For the past eight years, Huerta has served the students, faculty, staff and county residents by continuing this vision and bringing opportunities for higher education and workforce development to residents as far north as Hatch and as far south as Sunland Park. Huerta's vision while at DACC is to continue to serve the people and businesses of Doña Ana County - bringing higher education to where the people are.

Huerta understands how higher education affects economic development. As the workforce becomes more educated and skilled, people have greater employment opportunities, often at higher pay.

Residents who may not have otherwise had access to higher education are now becoming more skilled by earning trade-specific certificates and associate degrees - all at an affordable cost. When the people of Chaparral called on DACC for classes closer to home, through Huerta's leadership, DACC delivered. Ten years ago, the new Hatch satellite learning center was just a wishful vision. Today, it is a reality for residents in the northern part of Doña Ana County. In addition to the central campus adjacent to NMSU and the East Mesa campus near Roadrunner Drive and U.S. Highway 70, other DACC learning centers have been planned, funded, built and opened. These include the DACC centers at Gadsden, Sunland Park, Mesquite Neighborhood and the Workforce Center near Interstate 25 and Lohman Avenue.

When the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce proposed a public-private focus on education to support the needs of today's and future business requirements, Huerta was among the first to join fellow education leaders from Las Cruces Public Schools and NMSU along with the Mesilla Valley Economic Development Authority to create a new action-oriented organization that today is known as The Bridge of Southern New Mexico.

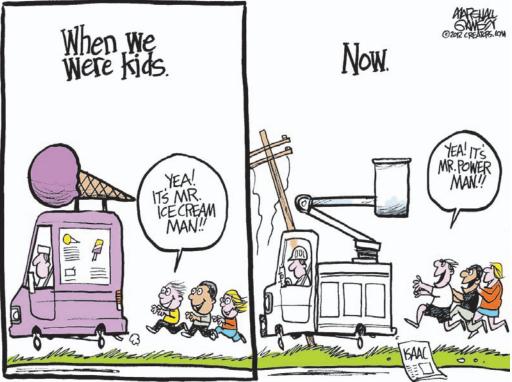

Huerta is known as one of the hardest working, positive-thinking, enthusiastic leaders in New Mexico. She is respected throughout the state as a person who gets things done. During her tenure as president of DACC, two critical bond issues have been passed that have provided more than $34 million funding for the various campuses throughout southern New Mexico.

Of course, managing a growing business, especially in a difficult economy, is never easy. Each day brings its own unique challenges. As we have learned in our fast-paced marketing environment at the Bulletin, sometime things do not go as planned.

Recently, DACC faced the reality of temporarily losing its accreditation for its nursing program. This popular program typically has had about 100 students, and is well-known for its high quality students who have completed their training, passed the required certification tests and are now successfully employed in their chosen career field. Huerta and DACC have received some heat from those who are concerned about the future of the nursing program. Loss of accreditation is disappointing and frustrating for those students who have been directly affected. However, my understanding is that, in the short term, the affected students have been provided with options, including transferring to a similar program at NMSU, which means the accreditation issue will be only minimally limiting, if at all, for these students.

If anything, our community should redouble its efforts to support Huerta and DACC, in order to ensure that adequate funds are available to support the educational needs of all DACC students. We all should be proud of the national recognition DACC has received under the leadership of Huerta, one of the most dynamic academic leaders I have ever known.

Thanks, Huerta, for all you have done over the past eight years. Best wishes as you continue the pursuit of your vision for continuing to develop the best community college system in the country.

Rivers need water, too

Unlike farmers and cities, the Rio Grande does not have a legion of lawyers looking after its interest. Nor does it even have a seat at the table, since state law does not recognize keeping water in a river as a beneficial (and hence lawful) use of water.

It may seem obvious, but rivers need water, too. How much water? Fifty percent of flows? Twenty percent?

How about zero? Believe it or not, the Rio Grande has no legal rights to any of its own water. Every drop is spoken for. This is the result of a decision made more than a century ago to appropriate all of the water in the river for irrigation, leaving none for other users or uses of the river.

With no rights of its own, the river flows when irrigators need water, which is why it is turned on and off every year like a faucet. Next time you wonder why there is so little water in the "mighty" Rio Grande in the winter, now you know. Little wonder that twothirds of our native fish have disappeared.

With drought, climate change and a growing population all putting more pressure on the already overworked Rio Grande, now is the time to rectify past mistakes and do right by the river that has sustained humans and wildlife in New Mexico for millennia.

U.S Sen. Tom Udall should lead an effort to bring Rio Grande management into the 21st century by reauthorizing the Rio Grande Project for other purposes besides irrigation. Federal funding should be made available to farmers to install drip irrigation and other measures to use water more efficiently. A portion of the "saved" water should be purchased from willing sellers to leave in the river, to keep it flowing and healthy.

A new religion?

Has business become our new religion? It appears that way when photographs appeared in the Aug. 24 Las Cruces Bulletin. Stoles, by definition, are worn by religious leaders going back hundreds of years.

Has the almighty dollar turned into "God Almighty?" If so, the "Business Stoles," should be covered with the dollar sign and not the usual religious symbols.

There used to be more bars than churches in Green Bay, Wisc., home of the Packers. I haven't counted recently, but could there be more banks than churches in Las Cruces? I'm going to count soon and let you know the results.

Martinez shines in national spotlight

Governor's speech well received – by those who were able to see it

Jay Miller

Inside the Capitol

Gov. Susana Martinez did New Mexico proud with her speech at the Republican National Convention. She was given what appeared to be one of the most prime of prime time slots and didn't disappoint. Our governor had several applause lines and brought the crowd to its feet with a story about carrying a Smith & Wesson .357 Magnum as a security guard for her father's small business. That was red meat for the crowd.

Another ovation came when she told of deciding to run against her former boss for district attorney. Both were Democrats in a Democratic leaning community.

Some Republican friends invited Martinez and her husband, Chuck Franco, to lunch to talk politics. She said she liked their issues so much that when she and her husband got back in their car, she said "Well, I'll be damned – we're Republicans." She didn't say, but maybe there might have been a few other topics discussed at lunch. Anyway, there is talk of putting the quote on T-shirts.

Another big applause came for her quote that "In America, todo es posible." I've already seen that on a sign in front of a church. Republicans are thrilled had to have time for that they have more Hispanic governors and U.S. senators than Democrats do. Martinez helps that along by being able to speak Spanish.

Former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush also speaks the language quite well. Watch for Bush or one of his sons to keep the family name in Republican politics.

Many New Mexicans were displeased that Leaders decide what bills have a chance to pass

The truth about this election is that the truth is in short supply. The media appears completely incompetent or, dare I say, evil when it comes to truth, as usual. At best, people are distracted, if not lied to in news reports. Let us talk about the truth and nothing but the political truth.

We are a representative republic as our founding leaders intended. Much of what the office seekers say on the campaign trail is not within the office seekers ability to effect. However, in the election to Congress there is one primary question:

Which party boss are you supporting, Nancy Pelosi or John Boehner? It is going to be one of those two who puts people on committees and decides which legislation will or will not be considered.

In New Mexico, that same question is central: Which Senate or House leader will you support? One person in each chamber decides the fate of bills. This last term in the New none of the major network channels carried the speech. Appearing between Condoleezza Rice and the vice-presidential nominee was a real coup. But the networks had to have time for commercials and talking heads between those two major addresses.

To any veteran channel changer, finding our governor's speech shouldn't have been much of a problem. The Public Broadcasting System channels carried gavel-to-gavel convention coverage and those with a cable or satellite connection could get it on C-SPAN. Fox News, MSNBC and CNN also carried her speech.

Her speech still can be seen on most newspaper and TV web sites. But the fact remains that Martinez would have been seen by many more Americans had any of the major network channels carried her speech.

So, the schedule turned out to be unfortunate for the governor. Convention planners very likely knew it. But that was not the most unfortunate scheduling of the convention. The entire week was built around former Gov. Mitt Romney's acceptance speech.

The mystery guest's appearance totally messed that up. I could almost hear households around the country turning down the volume on their television sets to discuss what in the world Clint Eastwood had been thinking about with his rambling 12-minute soliloquy.

Martinez spent most of her time telling her story, an inspiring tale of political success. It is See Martinez on page A6 likely to inspire some young Hispanics to seek office as Republicans. The speech didn't contain much to encourage Hispanics to vote for Romney.

Immigration is an issue among Hispanics. Martinez has a comprehensive immigration stance that would appear quite attractive to many Hispanics, but it disagrees with the Republican Party immigration platform so she couldn't say anything about it.

Earlier this year, Martinez outlined her immigration package for Newsweek magazine. This column commented on it and received notice from one of her advisors that her who did not allow it to be heard in the New Mexico Senate.

In the New Mexico Senate, nothing, and I do mean nothing, came off of Sanchez's desk unless he wished it off the desk. There is no "blast" legislation off of his desk like in the New Mexico House. He is the one and only arbiter.

When someone is elected to the New Mexico Senate the first and most important vote they take is for the Senate majority leader. Voters need to ask: Are you supporting Sen. Michael Sanchez? Hint: they may answer, "Gosh, I just do not know" which is, "Of course," said in a politically correct way.

Likewise, when Sen. Harry Reid does not wish something heard in the U. S. Senate, it will not be heard. The most important question in the New Mexico Senate race: Who are you voting for in the leadership?

All the talk about what bill will be sponsored, what legislation will be pushed is secondary to whether the House and Senate leaders allow it to be discussed. Do not get me wrong, there are many factors when electing people. For example, I like it when we send anyone to office who served in the military. Not as a reward for service, rather, because we need those perspectives in a political climate increasingly unaware or hostile to the military.

There is an important political truth walllearners in Washington and Santa Fe know: It immigration stance had been public for some time.

But coverage of Martinez's convention speech mentioned the Newsweek article as being the source for Martinez's immigration positions, so apparently most of us in the world of political reporting hadn't heard about it before Newsweek reported it.

Many of us had not heard Martinez use Spanish phrases in her public appearances. Gov. Bill Richardson used Spanish frequently. It may be that Martinez hasn't spoken to many groups yet that contain many Spanish speakers.

Jay Miller may be contacted at insidethecapitol@ hotmail.com.

does not matter what politicians say at home, it matters what the leadership tells them to do. Occasionally politicians can resist the leadership, but anyone not tuned to the leadership's radio station may pay a heavy price.

Congressman Steve Pearce is a bit on the outs with Speaker on the House John Boehner over holding the line against making government bigger. Boehner has a thin majority in the House, so he cannot punish Pearce much. Years ago, Democratic Speaker of the House Tip O'Neil was hard on those of his party who did not follow orders.

New Mexico State Representative Joe Cervantes challenged Lujan for the leadership of the New Mexico House at the start of this last legislative session. Newly elected Republicans were suddenly faced with the breakaway. What to do? Any vote not for Cervantes was a vote for Lujan. Many Republicans privately say it was their worse moment, because they enabled Lujan to control redistricting.

The choice of leadership is the core factor in every election. Afterwards the quality of the person impacts the Legislature. It will not be much of an impact if the body is controlled by leaders such as Sanchez and Lujan in this last session.

A vote for someone running for Congress or the New Mexico Legislature is a vote for their leadership. It would be nice if leadership of both parties allowed bills to be heard and voted on by the legislators.

A cowboy's take on the economy

I've been trying to apply some cowboy logic to a stimulus plan that depends on hiring more government workers as a solution to unemployment in the private sector.

I have many friends who work for the government. The jobs might not always be as exciting, but the job security and benefits are solid gold. My personal economist says the average federal worker making $81,258 annually has benefits of $41,791, for a total of $123,049.

The basic question is, "How many private sector workers does it take to support one federal worker?"

From 2008-10, the beginning of the recession, the private sector has lost 7.9 million jobs, more or less, while 590,000 jobs were gained in the public sector.

It continues on. Fewer and fewer taxpayers are paying for more and more government, which is trying to create jobs. But the increasing number of government jobs created just puts a bigger burden on the fewer and fewer taxpayers. So eventually when the private sector taxpayers can no longer fund all the government workers, their taxes will be raised to cover the new hires. Sound familiar?

These same private sector taxpayers are also expected to pay for food stamps for 30 percent of all of us, support the 10 percent unemployed, also those on Medicare, government pension plans, unemployment insurance and free government health care.

Not to mention those entrepreneurs that some say should not take credit for their own success, that they owe it to the government who built the roads, and rails and buildings and Internet.

This begs the question, "Where did the government get the money to build dams and freeways and monuments to politicians in the first place? Your taxes.

When you seek out the source of who really built America; the last man standing will be a person with an idea, a shovel and the will to work.

According to my private economist, it takes 17.34 private sector workers making an average of $61,051 wages and benefits, to pay for one average federal employee. Here's some math for you: The Eco-

Here's some math for you: The Economic Policy Institute (a self-described think-tank) offers this convoluted reasoning: Headline: "Public Sector Job Losses Causing Slow Economic Recovery."

They state that there should be 1.1 million more public sector jobs. These new 1.1 million new jobs will, in turn, "... produce collateral economic activity that will create 275,000 more private sector jobs." Huh?

This is the kind of fuzzy thinking that probably only a Harvard graduate might understand.

"Ask not what your government can do for you, ask what you can do for yourself," said Dallas Horton, philosopher and selfmade man.

Guest column Community benefits from DACC training Multiple efforts under way to mend nursing program and financial aid advisers to assist nursing

By Margie Huerta

Education, students, employees and community: These are the values rooted within the mission of Doña Ana Community College.

As a responsive and accessible learningcentered community college that provides educational opportunities to a diverse community of learners in support of workforce and economic development, the vision for DACC continues as a premier learning college grounded in academic excellence and committed to fostering lifelong learning and active, responsible citizenship within the community.

During the past eight years, we've experienced an increase in student enrollment, an expansion of our program offerings, strengthened curriculum and the forging of significant community partnerships. And, we've accomplished these things all in the best interest of our students and Doña Ana County residents.

DACC prides itself on offering higher learning to residents who may not otherwise have these opportunities. In the past two years, DACC has added two additional learning centers located roughly 100 miles apart. With eight centers across Doña Ana County – Sunland Park, Gadsden and the new Chaparral center in the south; Central Campus, East Mesa Campus, Workforce Development Center and Mesquite Neighborhood Learning Center in the center of the county; and the new Hatch center to the north – now, more than ever, DACC offers residents opportunities to discover their potential and prepare for a vital role within the workforce.

Additionally, with these expanded opportunities, DACC continues to assist community members in attaining their personal and professional goals through a wide range of credit and noncredit programs.

DACC supports many other educational goals of our community. Our dual credit program, which allows students to earn college credits while completing their high school degree, once topped out at 150 students. Today, our enrollment has increased to approximately 1,000 students. This important program provides a valuable springboard to higher education for students who may not otherwise have an opportunity to earn a college degree. Through our Adult Basic Education program, citizens can earn a general equivalency diploma (GED). Courses in general studies help students acquire the skills, knowledge and attitudes necessary for college success. Short courses offered through our Community Education Program are Customized Training Program provides educational offerings tailored to meet the needs of employees of local businesses. Least of all, the Small Business Development Center offers guidance to prospective and current small business owners and managers.

DACC has a profound impact on our local economy, and we are proud to be an integral part of our community. This summer, the University of New Mexico's Bureau of Business and Economic Research conducted an independent economic impact study to determine what effects DACC has on the local economy.

The findings stated DACC had an estimated economic impact of $76.4 million in business output on the local economy in 2011, generated nearly 2,000 jobs, brought in $48.4 million in income and a earned a multiplied economic output of $152.5 million in fiscal year 2011.

The study also measured the economic impact of increased earnings and spending by DACC graduates and noncredit students - including the more than 8,000 people who have received customized training at DACC – who still reside in the county. These individuals' $67 million in increased earnings have, in turn, created 405 additional jobs that pay $12.8 million in income. The report estimated the average annual salary for an individual with a DACC associate degree is at least $12,000 more than that of a high school graduate. The report also shows DACC generated $72 million in revenue in fiscal year 2011. The capital expenditures of $3.6 million created 54 jobs with nearly $2 million in income.

Our community partnerships remain strong. DACC has been at the table with community educators, leaders, business owners and chambers of commerce to discuss ways our community as a whole can increase high school graduation rates and support students to work toward earning two- and four-year degrees, resulting in a stronger workforce and, ultimately, boosting economic development.

These important discussions over the years led to the establishment of the initiative we now know as The Bridge of Southern New Mexico. DACC continues its collaborative efforts with local school districts, students, current employers and leaders of potential new industries to develop programs tailored to meet their specific needs, all with the quest to see our students succeed, our workforce earning higher wages and advance our region's overall economic well-being.

Employers turn to DACC for job training programs, and we are answering their call through our Workforce Development Center and expanded course offerings. Today, as we look proactively to the future of job creation in southern New Mexico, DACC is developing programs and curriculum for emerging industries such as aerospace technologies and alternative energies. As the health care industry continues to expand, we are meeting employers' needs by offering a dental hygiene program and, in the future, we plan to begin new surgical technical and physical therapy programs.

Our 15-year-old nursing program continues to be one of the most popular career tracks. Though we mourn the recent loss of our program's accreditation, we have the full support of the New Mexico Board of Nursing, and our program is gaining strength through the support of our community, faculty, staff and students who are offering their assistance. Currently, we have an advisory team composed of academic students as they navigate their chosen career path, and we are offering tuition assistance through scholarships to students who choose to remain in our nursing program.

Additionally, we have a special committee to oversee and assist our accreditation efforts, which also includes the recruitment and retention of additional full-time and parttime master's level faculty. Our program continues to be recognized for its strong curriculum, available student resources, pass rates and employer placement rates. DACC supports its nursing program director, faculty and staff who are diligently and expeditiously working toward our accreditation. We believe our students, the program and our community will be stronger as a result of these efforts.

As a comprehensive community college, DACC remains dedicated to creating a supportive atmosphere conducive to student success, workforce readiness and lifelong learning. Our faculty and staff are committed to making higher education accessible to all members of our community, and our students are committed to attaining their career goals.

Because of our sustained leadership, proven performance of our graduates and commitment to student success, DACC has been recognized as a leader among the 1,200 community colleges across the nation as one of the top 50.

Thank you for continuing your support of DACC, its students, faculty, staff, program offerings. We are proud to be part of your community.

County patrols for weeds

The Doña Ana County Environmental Codes Division is actively patrolling in search of properties with overgrown weeds. Officers normally offer property owners a window of time to come into compliance with county codes before issuing citations, but in extreme cases, citations are an option on the first visit.

Residents who choose to burn weeds as a remediation strategy must call the Mesilla Valley Regional Dispatch Authority at 526-0795 prior to burning and must call again after the burn is complete. Only vegetation can be legally burned, not trash.

Residents who choose to bag the weeds for disposal can purchase disposal tickets from the South Central Solid Waste Authority. A list of pricing and ticket-vendor locations can be obtained at www.donaanacounty.org/works/solidwaste/.

'Da Pinche Code' added to lineup

Cesar Alejandro's comedy movie "Da Pinche Code" will begin showing Friday, Sept. 7, at Allen Theatres Cineport 10 in Mesilla Valley Mall, 700 S. Telshor Blvd. The R-rated, 89-minute film will show daily at 12:10, 2:35, 4:50, 7:05 and 9:20 p.m. The locally made independent film will replace the "Diary of a Wimpy Kid Dog Days" at the Cineport. For a review of the movie, see page C18 in the Arts & Entertainment section.

Archaeological society meets

The Doña Ana Archaeological Society will meet at 7 p.m. Tuesday, Sept. 11, at the Good Samaritan Society-Las Cruces Village, 3011 Buena Vida Circle, in the auditorium.

A10 | News Las Cruces Bulletin Sitel opens 250 new jobs Some employees may work from home

By Richard Coltharp

Got phone skills?

You could be one of the 250 new people Sitel plans to hire in the next four months.

"We're looking for people with call center experience and those without call center experience who have skills in customer service and good verbal communication skills," said John Muñoz, Sitel's Las Cruces site leader. "Bilingual Spanish-English skills are a definite plus." Because of its good track record in customer service, the Las Cruces Sitel site has been awarded more business by its two primary clients, a satellite provider and a banking client.

"We're looking to grow by 250 people between now and the end of the year," Muñoz said.

"I think that's pretty exciting," said Las Cruces Mayor

Ken Miyagishima. "Sitel has a real impact on the city, with the jobs they provide and the benefits they provide. Sitel's headquarters must feel Las Cruces is a great combination of a great place to have a business and a great manager in John (Muñoz). I've never seen anything expand as rapidly as Sitel has."

A friendly and trainable attitude is a key asset, Muñoz said regarding traits for the jobs. The positions begin with five weeks of paid training. The first three weeks are pure training and the next two weeks are on-the-job training.

The new additions will incorporate something new for Sitel: the opportunity to work from home.

I've never seen anything expand as

> KEN MIYAGISHIMA Las Cruces mayor

Muñoz said the home-based positions will be offered initially only to current Sitel employees, but that transition will create more openings on site.

"We'll add the positions through a combination of on-site positions and also work-at-home positions," he said. "Sitel has other sites that have pioneered this, but it's definitely a new thing to Las Cruces. It's new and innovative."

Those interested in a position can go to Sitel's website, www.sitel.com, under Careers and search for Las Cruces. "Or even better, come by our site, 2100 Summit Court in Las Cruces," Muñoz said.

"If you're looking for a job, you should apply. If not, let someone else know about the openings. With the unemployment rate as it is, I know there's people out there looking."

Though the proposition of employees working from home is new for the Las Cruces Sitel location, Muñoz said it offers some obvious benefits to employees.

"They're close to work, it saves on gas, saves on food - and I'm not promoting this - but it could also save on water since they may not have to shower as much," Muñoz said.

Muñoz said Sitel has had success in the past with employees who formerly had careers in the military and the hospitality industry.

"With the leadership team we have and the quality employees we have, this is a long-term, sustainable business," Muñoz said.

Sitel, a 26-year-old, privately held corporation headquartered in Tennessee, has more than 5,200 employees worldwide, operating from 135 sites in 26 different countries.

John Muñoz, site leader at Sitel, announced this week that the company will hire 250 more workers by the end of 2012.

Patriot Day

Originally, Patriot Day was called the Prayer and Remembrance for the Victims of the Terrorist Attacks on Sept. 11, 2001. A U.S. House of Representatives action requested that the president designate Sept. 11 of each year as "Patriot Day," President George W. Bush signed the resolution into law on Dec. 18, 2001.

It is a discretionary day of remembrance, meaning that government offices and banks need not close for the day.

On Patriot Day, the American flag should be flown at half-staff at individual American homes, at the White House and on all U.S.

government buildings and establishments. The president will ask Americans to observe a moment of silence beginning at 8:46 a.m. (Eastern Daylight Time), the time the first hijacked plane struck the North Tower of the World Trade Center. A second plane would strike the South Tower and a third plane would crash into the Pentagon, but a fourth plane would crash into a Pennsylvania field after passengers attempted to take control of the jet from the hijackers.

Response to the attacks led the country into two wars - one in Afghanistan to battle the al-Qaida terrorist network led by Osama Bin Laden, and the other in Iraq. U.S. troops officially left Iraq in 2011, the same year Bin Laden was killed in a Navy SEAL attack on his compound in Pakistan.

the existing ordinance didn't address them. Digital billboards are addressed in the new ordinance, but instead of measuring light from near the billboard, its brightness will be assessed at the light source using a measurement called NIT, he said.

Besides billboards, Cole said the new ordinance addresses residential lighting, latitude in commercial design and allows special permits for things that don't exactly fit the law and don't require upgrades of current lighting until there is a new lighting treatment, he said. Homes will be allowed one fixture that shines at 1,800 lumens and an unlimited number of other fixtures at half or a quarter of the brightness limits.

Security lights are allowed, but they will not be permitted to be on all night.

Because it is difficult to measure light trespass, limits are being put on equipment, he said. Lighting for commercial buildings will be based on different BUG ratings, according to different standards of zoning.

City staff recommended a phase-in period to provide time to educate the public and businesses. The council agreed, allowing people and businesses to choose either the old or new ordinance until March 2013.

Councillor Greg Smith said he was concerned about unintended consequences and that the council should be willing to return to the issue if those occur. Smith said he also was concerned about the new ordinance's impact on the building industry, which is accustomed to doing things a certain way.

Mayor Pro Tem Sharon Thomas said she was originally worried the BUG measuring system is too complex, but she was comforted by Cole telling her that BUG is becoming a more national standard used by manufacturers and construction companies.

Councillor Olga Pedroza noted that some have complained about the "flashing" and "motion" of digital billboards, but Cole said these concerns would have to be addressed in the city's sign ordinance.

Oscar Andrade, owner and chief executive officer of Pic Quik Stores, said he has been involved in the lighting issue since the beginning because new lighting systems for his stores now cost more than $200,000 under existing standards.

"Many of my stores have fixtures in compliance with national dark sky standards ... but they don't have BUG ratings," he said. "I'd love to remodel some of my older stores, but I couldn't afford to meet all the new requirements."

Councillor Nathan Small said the issue is technically complicated, so officials need to make sure there is a strong technical guidance to get contractors and residents through the transition.

Las Cruces Bulletin U.S. program stalled by indecisive leaders Soviet space program had early successes

By Michael Shinabery

This is part two of a threepart story.

Soviet Sputniks were orbiting Earth, a technological coup early in the Space Race, when United States Deputy Secretary of Defense Donald Quarles came under fire for halting a space project at Holloman Air Force Base. On Jan. 28, 1958, the Alamogordo Daily News characterized Quarles' actions as a "crime." The story said "an examination of Mr. Quarles' public statements reveals that he has been more consistently wrong in underestimating the pace of Soviet technical development than anybody in the Defense Department except (former Defense Secretary Charles) Wilson.'

Suddenly, the paper declared two days later, Washington had "official laryngitis." Quarles didn't return phone calls. Air Force Secretary James Douglas was "all tied up." Other key officials were always in meetings, so busy they never had time to return messages over whether the military or a civilian agency would control America's space program. Congress seemed opposed to military control through the newly created Advanced Research Projects Agency. New Mexico Sen. Clinton P. Anderson and Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Sr., favored the Atomic Energy Commission. Sen. Estes Kefauver of Tennessee proposed a cabinet-level department. "The major problem of maintaining a U.S. position of significant superiority in the technological race with the Soviet Union is not our technical brains, industrial resources or even the mirage of an engineering shortage," Aviation Week Editor Robert Hotz wrote in the Jan. 27, 1958, issue. "It is the type of men who are appointed to key positions along the decisionmaking chain governing military research and development, and the length, vagueness and indecision that has developed by accretion during the past decade. It lies primarily in the layer upon layer of bureaucracy that covers the basic research and advanced development effort of the working level military-science-industry complex like an asbestos blanket, suffocating bold new concepts and urgent action with equal facility.

The Soviets already had intercontinental ballistic missiles, and the U.S. had no counter defenses.

"It is entirely logical that the Russians should know by calculations from their satellites how far it is, within a very small margin of error, (to launch an ICBM) from a point in Russia to a point in our country," the ADN quoted physicist Edward Teller on Feb. 5.

That scientists were being kept in the dark about

Soviet progress was "evil," the ADN proclaimed on Jan. 30, while simultaneously emphasizing "Russia has 2,000 scientist-translators translating and culling from scientific journals from all over the world." The fallout, according to an Associated Press "authoritative source," was that the embarrassed American government would soon re-lease "more than 50,000 Soviet scientific documents a year" it had marked "secret."

On Feb. 1, the day after the U.S. finally orbited its first satellite, Explorer I, The AP reported German ex-patriate Wernher von Braun was calling the Soviet space progress "frightening." He pointed out: "If we should attain a rate 20 percent greater than theirs, it would still take five years to overtake them.'

The weakest link in the defense administration was Wilson.

REP. JOHN DEMPSEY, New Mexico

President Eisenhower "ordered his science adviser to come up with recommendations on whether America's space program should be left in the Pentagon or turned over to some new agency of government," the AP said on Feb. 4.

The same day, the ADN revealed "Holloman's role in the U.S. space program" was "under scrutiny on Capitol Hill." Military leaders were apparently not included in discussions, as the paper said "as far as charting the course of this nation's space efforts, Air Force bases (and those who head the other services) are largely out of it. The problem rests at the White House Defense Department level."

The next day, the ADN reported new "developments ... in the battle for control of the nation's space program do not seem to spell good news for Holloman.

Eisenhower announced "Defense Secretary Neil McElroy will direct all outer space programs" for the time being. In addition, "Republican senatorial leaders" were "block(ing) any immediate action aimed at resolving the issue of civilian-vs.-military control of space projects." A Senate-House conference committee had also decided "to skirt that vital issue."

The paper characterized the decision as "a pre-Sputnik approach" full of "laggard thinking" that "brushed off" scientists.

New Mexico Rep. John Dempsey fired off a letter, which the ADN published on Feb. 10, saying: "I have been familiar for a long time with the mistakes made by Quarles and Wilson (Charles Wilson, former Defense Secretary) and have pointed out on several occasions previously that the weakest link in the defense administration was Wilson himself."

Dempsey would die just a month later, on March 11, in Washington, D.C.

New America School has an English immersion focus, emphasizing language mastery for all its students. English

Lozova said she came from a home where Spanish was the only language spoken, because her mother was originally from Mexico. Principal Margarita Porter also grew up in a home where parents spoke only Spanish, but she was able to master English, which led her to getting a teaching degree at the University of New Mexico. She eventually was an administrator of Albuquerque Public Schools programs for students needing help with their English. She left APS to work at the New America School in Albuquerque.

Porter said the students in Las Cruces are different than the ones she saw in Albuquerque. Many of them are working and require night classes or other scheduling flexibility, she said.

The school at 207 S. Main St., in the remodeled Las Cruces Furniture building, opened with 225 students and its second story unfinished. More students are taking the evening classes than originally anticipated and many of them are older returning students, Porter said.

"We only have about 40 students under the age of 18," Porter said.

With a waiting list of more than 40 students, opening the school has proven its need in the community, she said.

"We're serving the needs of a unique population," she said.

Laura Cisneros, 17, is one of those younger students, but she is attending New America School to get caught up and graduate sooner. A former student of Las Cruces High School, she said she likes the smaller classes and campus.

'There are no distractions here," she said.

Catherine Vidal, an English as a Second Language teacher during the daytime sessions, said she has never worked with more motivated students because they've chosen to return to school.

"That's true," said evening English teacher Toney Ray. "It's like the volunteer army. No one is making them be here, so they get a lot more out of it. They're here because they know the value of it.'

The New America School will hold its grand opening from 4 to 8 p.m. Friday, Sept. 7, and the public is invited to visit the new school. Classes are held at the charter Monday through Thursday.

What do you believe are the key issues?

- Mental health
- Family issues • Budget

How will you approach solving these issues?

I've long been active in getting the state to improve funding, facilities and services for people with mental illness. There's still much to do in this area. To me, this is a family issue, which is why I work on issues that affect families. This makes my work on the state budget critical, because when cuts have to be made, they shouldn't hurt families. When working on the budget, I make sure that it is balanced in a way that treats everyone - and every part of the state - fairly.

Why are you the best candidate?

Nowhere else are people going to find someone with my experience and knowledge, especially of the legislative process. It takes time to really understand how the process works. Also, I have the drive and energy to do the work that's needed.

What do you believe are the key issues?

 Government size and overreach and how it effects job creation

 Voter ID and driver's license to illegal immigrants Education reform

How will you approach solving these issues?

New Mexico is not competitive with our neighboring states and it results in lost opportunities for New Mexicans. We must make New Mexico friendlier to job creators through lower government spending, taxes and regulations so everyone can prosper and enjoy more financial freedom.

Why are you the best candidate?

This is not an ordinary election and New Mexico stands at a crossroads. Democrats have been in control of New Mexico for 80 years, and the status quo will not fix our problems. We must send legislators to Santa Fe who are committed to limited government and fiscal restraint, and who understand how to create a job.

These are the new boundaries for state Senate District 38 in the New Mexico House of Representatives. District 35, represented by Sen. John Arthur Smith, D-Deming, picked up two precincts in the Rasaaf Hills neighborhood, as well as portions of Fairacres, with state Highway 28 as a dividing line.

Udall taking applications for interns

Positions available in New Mexico and D.C.

U.S. Sen. Tom Udall invites New Mexico college students interested in gaining legislative or press relations experience to apply for fall internships in his Washington, D.C., Santa Fe, Albuquerque and Las Cruces offices. To apply online or download an application, visit Udall's website at www.tomudall.senate.gov.

The deadline to apply for positions is flexible, but students interested in fall internships in are encouraged to submit their applications by Friday, Sept. 7.

"While working in one of my offices, students will get a unique perspective into the inner workings of the 'world's greatest deliberative body,' while playing an integral role in my office's day-to-day operations," Udall said. "This is a great learning experience for anyone interested in public service, and I encourage students to apply."

All internships may count toward college credit. Students should check with their respective college or university for requirements. College students who are from New Mexico or attend New Mexico schools are given first preference, and students of all majors are encouraged to apply.

Inquiries may be emailed to internship_program@ tomudall.senate.gov.

Monument show set for Sept. 13 Google Earth to venture to sites under consideration

How deep is too deep?

Is it possible for a quarterback to be too good at throwing the ball down the field?

New Mexico State University's An-drew Manley tossed the ball down the field a lot in the Aggies' 49-19 win over Sacramento State at Aggie Memorial Stadium Thursday, Aug. 30. Some observers think Manley may have a tendency to rely a little too much on the deep pass play. Manley's coach, DeWayne Walker, said he jokes to his quarterback about not forgetting the check-down passes. Former Aggie linebacker, radio color analyst and Las Cruces Bulletin account executive Jason Scott said he has his qualms about it, too.

"I think sometimes he holds on to the ball a little too long waiting for his receivers to get open," Scott said. "I think he sometimes misses open receivers closer to the line."

Austin Franklin isn't complaining. The speedy receiver had catches for 53, 50, 84 and 35 yards Thursday. Two of those were good for touchdowns, a performance that made him the nation's top receiver in week one.

Jerrell Brown doesn't mind either, he had a touchdown catch for 50 yards.

In football, being predictable can be a team's undoing, so the adage "too much of a good thing" certainly applies. Manley will have to learn to keep defenses guessing about where he is going to throw the ball or some of his deep passes could end up in the wrong hands.

He will also need the Aggies to be successful at running the ball. That is still up in the air, but the NMSU running back-by-committee approach picked up some steam toward the end of Thursday's game.

Don't expect Manley to suddenly get shy about hurling the ball down the field, however. The strong-armed Hawaiian said his confidence in throwing the ball comes partly from his faith in his teammates.

"It feels good knowing I have a line to protect me and running backs to help protect," Manley said. "That's what they did last game, they gave me the confidence. I had good time to throw, I had good protection. The running backs picked up the blitzes. Everybody working together just gives the confidence to me.

Despite his reservations, it doesn't sound like Walker is too concerned about Manley's penchant for throwing it deep.

"He's a thrower," Walker said. "That's what he does. "He's been throwing balls ever since he was, probably, 7 years old. That's just who he is.

"As far as I am concerned I just hope he can keep throwing them deep and we can keep catching them."

Low flying pigeons had better keep their eyes open. There's probably a seagull or two in Hawaii that can testify to that.

By Jim Hilley

The New Mexico State University football will bring two of the nation's statistical leaders with them when they travel to Athens, Ohio, to take on the Ohio University Bobcats at 5 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 8.

Aggie quarterback Andrew Manley leads the country in passing efficiency with a 248.76 rating, and wide receiver Austin Franklin -Manley's favorite target in the team's 49-19 win over Sacramento State on Thursday, Aug. 30 - leads the nation with 236 receiving yards per game.

The Aggies are hoping those two players can keep up the pace on Saturday against the Ohio Bobcats, who lead the country in a different category - raised eyebrows.

That feat occurred when the Bobcats came back from a 14-3 halftime deficit to stun perennial power Penn State on national television 24-14 Saturday, Sept. 1. Though Penn State is rebuilding after the Jerry Sandusky scandal, it was still a vivid demonstration of what Frank Solich has done as coach of Ohio.

Last year, the Bobcats had an easy time defeating the Aggies in Las Cruces, and went on to have a 10-4 season, including a 24-23 victory over Utah State in the Famous Idaho Potato Bowl. It was their fourth bowl appearance in five years.

NMSU coach DeWayne Walker knows the Aggies will have to stop Bobcat quarterback Tyler Tettleton, who threw for 324 yards and 2 touchdowns against the Nittany Lions and ran for 47 yards.

"My eyes are red trying to figure this guy out," Walker said. "He's a very good player. He's a good runner and I think he's improved his passing from last year.

"We are going to have to figure out some things, not only in the passing game but to try to cage him up and keep him in the pocket."

Manley said the Aggies must be ready for anything the Bobcats bring at them on defense. See Aggies on page A20

NMSU men's basketball schedule set Oregon State, Southern Miss among non-conference games

After winning the 2012 WAC Tournament Championship and making its 19th NCAA Tournament appearance, the New Mexico State men's basketball team returns to the court in 2012-13 with 16 regular season home games at the Pan American Center. The schedule also features a Pac-12 opponent and two 2012 NCAA Tournament teams.

Sixth-year head coach Marvin Menzies said he was happy with the schedule that includes non-conferences games against Oregon State, New Mexico, UTEP, Southern Mississippi, Missouri State and South Alabama.

"I'm excited about the schedule for several reasons, one being that we have a lot of opportunities to play teams who have very good RPIs (Ratings Percentage Index) that we believe will benefit us in the long run," Menzies said. "Having trips to New York and Oregon State and playing games of that magnitude will benefit us in conference play as it has in the past."

The Aggies host Western New Mexico (Nov.

5) in their lone exhibition game of the year be-fore opening the 2012-13 season at Oregon State Nov. 11 in Corvallis, Ore., the first game of the 2K Sports Classic benefiting Wounded Warrior Project.

The Aggies return to Las Cruces to meet Southeastern Louisiana Nov. 15 in the home opener. The Crimson and White then return to the road for two games in the 2K Sports Classic in New York, against Bucknell Nov. 17 and Niagra Nov. 18.

NMSU concludes a stretch of five games in nine days in Las Cruces with Northern New Mexico College Nov. 21, and Louisiana Nov. 23, which is in honor of former Aggie Kelsey Crooks. The Aggies travel to El Paso, Texas, for the first rivalry game of the season at UTEP Nov. 28.

The Aggies welcome Southern Mississippi to the Pan Am for the first time in school history Dec. 1, before they face South Alabama Dec. 4, in Mobile, Ala. Following fall exams, NMSU faces in-state rival New Mexico Dec. 15, in Albuquerque, prior to the rematch in Las Cruces Dec. 19. The Aggies host Missouri State Dec. 22, before WAC play begins.

The conference slate starts on the road at UT-Arlington Dec. 29, and Louisiana Tech Dec. 31. NMSU hosts UT San Antonio Jan. 3, 2013, and Texas State Jan. 5. The Aggies travel west to Seattle Jan. 10, and Idaho Jan. 12.

A three-game home stand includes Utah State Jan. 17, San Jose State Jan. 19, and Denver Jan. 23. The Aggies start the second half of WAC action at Texas State Jan. 31, and UTSA Feb. 2. NMSU hosts Idaho Feb. 7, and Seattle Feb. 9, in the Lou Henson Classic before traveling to San Jose State Feb. 14 and Utah State Feb. 16

The Aggies take a break from conference play and host UTEP Feb. 23, prior to the final road game of the year at Denver March 2. NMSU concludes the regular season at home against Louisiana Tech March 7, and UT-Arlington March 9.

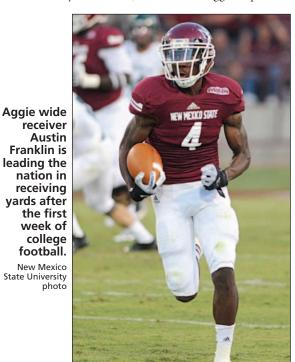

A20 | Sports Aggies

"They come out different every week so we just have to be ready," he said. "They might come out and blitz the first ten plays of the game. We don't know, so we have to be ready for everything and that's what we are doing so far this week. We just have to get ready for it all."

Though the odds seem stacked in Ohio's favor, the Aggies wont be a pushover for the Bobcats.

The Aggie passing game broke plays against the Hornets with ease last week, with receivers flying past the Sacramento State defense for three touchdowns of 50 yards or more.

Franklin, who was named Western Athletic Conference Offensive Player of the Week, had touchdown catches of 53 and 84 yards, while Jerrel Brown bagged a pass for 50 yards. Walker said Manley has a knack for the long ball.

"That's just who he is," Walker said. "He is a very confident thrower. He is blessed with a strong arm, so it was good that we protected him for the most part and our receivers got open and he made his throws.

"I tease him all the time 'Look, the check down is not a bad thing either.""

The running game remains a concern for the Aggies, but in the second half, NMSU was able to establish an effective ground attack.

"Our running game didn't get started the way we wanted," Walker said. "That's an area we need to improve, but I got on the 'phones with Mac (offensive coordinator Jerry McManus) with six minutes left in the game and I said 'Hey, if you could milk the clock for six minutes by running the ball – steak dinner.

"So, I think I owe him a steak dinner, because we ran the ball every single time and I thought that really helped. We were trying to milk the clock, but at the same time it gave us a chance to work on our running game a little bit and we had some positive runs."

Fans with Internet access can watch Saturday's game on ESPN3, or they can listen to "Voice of the Aggies" Jack Nixon and color analyst Jason Scott beginning at 4 p.m. on KGRT 104 FM. The game will also be available in Spanish with Martin Cortez and Bob Sherman on Vista 98.7 FM. Bulletin Game Face Video Debut Saturday, Sept. 22

Volleyball teams gather for Sweet 16 tournament

Final matches Saturday

By Craig Massey

The Jane Leupold Sweet-16 Volleyball Tournament this weekend will be a reunion of sorts for at least two high school coaches in Las Cruces.

The 16-team field includes Gadsden and Artesia, which have won the past two Class 5A and Class 4A state championships. The head coaches on those teams are both now at Centennial High School – head coach Al Rosen, who was at Gadsden, and varsity assistant Stacy Gowen, who was at Artesia.

varsity assistant Stacy Gowen, who was at Artesia. Rosen said it will be "weird" to see the program he brought to prominence from the other side.

"I'll have mixed feelings with all the work we put in there," Rosen said. "My concentration is on Centennial and building this and working hard. In a couple of years, Gadsden will be a regular foe in district."

Gowen said "change is hard" but she expects Artesia to come on strong again this year and said the Bulldogs have a shot to win a third straight state championship. Artesia is led by outside hitter Amy Horner, who is being recruited by New Mexico State.

Gadsden, who is now coached by longtime Rosen assistant, Priscilla Jaramillo, and Artesia are expected to contend for the Sweet 16 title, along with Las Cruces, Mayfield and Onate.

The tournament begins with pool play at 9 a.m. Friday, Sept. 7, at each of the four Las Cruces Public Schools high school gyms. After pool play, the teams shift to winners' and consolation brackets Friday afternoon, with the consolation games at Mayfield and the winners' bracket games at Centennial. The top two teams in each pool advance to the winners' bracket and the No. 3 and No. 4 teams go to the consolation bracket.

The final two rounds of matches will take place Saturday, again, with the consolation matches at Mayfield and the winners' bracket matches at Centennial. The title match is set for 3 p.m. on Saturday at Centennial.

Friday's pools include Pool A with Centennial, Alamogordo, Jesus Chapel and Hot Springs; Pool B with Las Cruces, Carlsbad, Roswell and Deming; Pool C with Mayfield, Artesia, Ruidoso and Santa Teresa; and Pool D with Oñate, Andress, Gadsden and Hatch Valley.

LCHS Coach Keith Leupold said Artesia could be the favorite, followed by Gadsden, Oñate, Mayfield and his Bulldawgs.

"It's still early in the year, but we're hanging in there," said Leupold, whose team entered the week with a 4-1 record. "We have some nicks and bruises."

Las Cruces standout Lexi Dotson is playing on a sore knee, Leupold said.

"We're reasonably happy," Leupold said. "There are always things you would like to change and do differently and as the year goes, we'll change some things. We have a good mixture of seniors, juniors and sophomores."

Centennial entered the week with a 5-1 mark, but Rosen said his young team hasn't played any of the "big, powerful schools yet."

yet." "We're taking it one step at a time and the progress is steady," Rosen said. "Being fairly young, we're increasing our volleyball IQ and working to control the ball."

Rosen agreed with Leupold that Artesia and Gadsden could challenge for the tournament title, followed by LCHS, Onate and Mayfield.

"There's a lot of parity with the Las Cruces schools," Rosen said.

'The extra mile' Tournament is 'a great way to honor' late Jane Leupold Las Cruces Public Schools Athletics Director Ernest Viramontes announced, that the annual Sweet-16 Volleyball Tournament will be named after Jane Leupold, the wife of Las Cruces High School coach Keith Leupold.

Jane Leupold passed away on Jan. 14, 2011, after a long battle with breast cancer.

Viramontes said initial discussions began last year about naming it the Jane Leupold Sweet-16 Volleyball Tournament.

"I don't know anyone who worked as hard as she did to help us put on volleyball tournaments," Viramontes said. "She was a perfect example of going the extra mile. We talked to all the volleyball coaches and they were all in agreement. This is a tribute to her."

Keith Leupold said renaming the tournament not only honors his wife, but it will bring more awareness in the battle to fight breast cancer.

"Breast cancer will impact one in eight women," Keith said. "This is a way to remember her, but it's also a way to impact the community as we raise funds to fight breast cancer. Anytime you can put a name out there to raise awareness it's helpful."

Jane Leupold was a tireless worker at volleyball matches and tournaments throughout the city, not just at the LCHS events.

"She ran hospitality rooms and was good friends with all the other coaches," Keith Leupold said. "I think she would be slightly embarrassed by this, but I think it's a great way to honor her." Friday, September 7, 2012

Courtney Schultz named athlete of the week

New Mexico State University senior Courtney Schultz was named the female cross country Western Athletic Conference Athlete of the Week for the week of Aug. 27-Sept. 2.

Schultz, a senior from Cloudcroft, N.M. (Cloudcroft HS), won the Lobo Invitational individual title in Albuquerque, Friday, Aug. 31, in the Aggies first race of the 2012 season, finishing the 5K course in 18:11.9. Schultz, the 2011 WAC Champion, edged out her sister Camille by 4.8 seconds for the races top spot.

Schultz became the first female cross country athlete to win the award for the 2012 season.

Schultz began the 2012 regular season just as strongly as she finished the 2011 season-by finishing first place overall. The last team event for cross country Schultz competed in was the WAC Championships in 2011 where Schultz finished first overall as the Aggies finished second overall in the conference.

Schultz finished first for NMSU in all but one event she competed in during the 2011 season. Schultz was also named WAC Athlete of the Year, was named to the first team All-Conference and received All-Academic honors from the conference. Schultz concluded her 2011 campaign by competing in her first NCAA Championships, where she finished 88th overall.

Schultz and the rest of the Aggies will next be in action on Friday, Sept. 7, when they travel to Santa Teresa, N.M., for the Lori Fitzgerald Invitational.

Men's golf begins play in Colorado Springs

The New Mexico State men's golf team will open the 2012-13 at the 44th annual Gene Miranda Falcon Invitational Sunday and Monday, Sept. 9-10, at the Eisenhower Golf Club – Blue Course near Colorado Springs, Colo. The 54-hole tournament is slated to begin with two rounds on Sunday with an 8:15 a.m. shotgun start, while the final round will begin Monday at 8:15 a.m.

Justin Shin, Kenneth Fadke, Brett Walker, Taylor Mihok and Derek Baade will tee it up for the Aggies.

Sixteen teams are slated to compete in this year's invitational. They are: Air Force, Air Force JV, Coastal Carolina, Colorado, Colorado State, Kansas, New Mexico State, Northern Colorado, Southern Utah, UCCS, UNLV, Utah, Utah, State, UTEP, Weber State and Wyoming.

Live scoring will be available on www. golfstat.com.

New Mexico State wide receiver Austin Franklin was named the Western Athletic Conference offensive player of the week.

Franklin, a sophomore from Dallas (Kimball HS), set career highs with eight receptions for 236 yards and two touchdowns in New Mexico State s season-opening win over Sacramento State, 49-19. The 236 yards are the third most in school history and the most by a WAC receiver since 2006.

The Aggies take on Ohio Saturday, Sept. 8, in Athens, Ohio with kickoff set for 5 p.m. (MT).

Golf psychopathology part two

Don't be afraid, but phobias, three-foot panic attacks can lurk on the golf course

As a student of abnormal behavior, I have come to realize that golfers have troubles that seem to be peculiar to them alone.

After tirelessly researching the literature and "Diagnostic and Statistical Manual IV" (DSM IV) and combining the data with my own firsthand teaching and playing experience, I'm now presenting (in good humor) part two of the new compendium of golf psychopathology concepts and nomenclature.

Handicap Kleptomania. When we talk about compulsive cheating and pilfering behavior, shoplifting is thought of as the most common. But Handicap Kleptomania disorder goes way beyond just taking things, because intellectual property can be misappropriated, as well. In essence, this is stealing.

In the world of golf, it happens surreptitiously. Research (mine) shows that good golfers with high handicaps consistently accumulate significantly more pro-shop credit dollars than normal participants. In other words, the same darn klepto players win the prizes in handicap events.

DSM IV notes that there is a "recurrent failure to resist impulses to steal," but clinical golf club experience proves that the behavior is neither tension-driven nor impulsive. Rather, it is habitual and excuse-driven, as in the following representative statement: "Sure I hit it 300 yards and hit par-fives in two, but my short game sucks, so I'm really a 14."

While the recording of handicap scores may be devious, the acceptance of prizes is not committed to express anger or vengeance. Pleasure, greed and ego gratification tend to be the secondary gains. The disorder is sometimes referred colloquially as "sandbagging."

These kleptos are an interesting lot. They will do almost anything to avoid their handicap being lowered. The very desperate have been known to purposely ruin a superb round, and intentionally three putt the last few holes.

Golf Channel Insomnia. This sleep disturbance is a failure to fall asleep or to stay asleep because of a compulsion to watch whatever is on the Golf Channel, regardless of whether it is mindless infomercials or playing lessons with no-name pros or old highlights from the 1992 Kemper Open. Often it is the spouse who suffers and complains.

The next-day fatigue and sluggishness the golfer experiences can cause impairment in social, occupational and golf functioning. Episodes of narcolepsy (uncontrolled sleepiness) on the golf course are predictable, such as "falling asleep" in a match and four-jacking the last green.

Golfer Transvestite Syndrome, non-sexual. (Also called "golf-attire dysmorphic disorder.") More prevalent in the South and West, acterized by recurrent cross-dressing behavior, whereby the individual habitually dresses for a round of golf with the unusual and inappropriate appearance of a farm field hand, a cowboy or a day laborer, and is stereotyped by denim jeans, tennis shoes and a T-shirt – as opposed to legitimate golfing attire. Satisfaction derived from cross garb is not sexual, but rather a sense of rural casual-ism, even a vague statement of lifestyle.

Similar tasteless behavior is found when men wear "wife-beater" shirts to restaurants and wear hats during dinner. In some ways, counselors see the behavior as "arrested development."

Three-footer Panic Attack. DSM IV notes that symptoms of panic disorder include heart-pounding, sweating, trembling or shaking, feeling lightheaded or dizzy, feeling short of breath and the sensation of choking. A golfer's attack can occur at any time but seems to be most prevalent on the putting green when an otherwise competent and controlled golfer (even a professional) steps up to a three-foot putt that means something. The intense, nervous discomfort is rooted in fear; that petrified disappointment, followed by the embarrassing consequences of missing, which of course is losing face.

Those fun terms like "sweating over" a putt, having a "knee-knocker" and a putt "in the throw-up zone" all seem to derive from panic experiences. Clinical experience has revealed that a typical trigger for a putting panic attack is when someone in the group starts wisecracking "There's a little chicken left on that bone.

> Linkster Phobia. Phobias really represent irrational fears that are exaggerated and sometimes debilitating. They can take many forms. Over my years of playing, teaching and coaching golf I have come to attach labels to some of the most common golf phobias I have seen. First is "instruction phobia," or fear of taking golf lessons, even though the person desperately needs them. This problem crosses all categories: rich or poor; men or women; young or old; good golfers or hacks. Stubbornness and ignorance seem to be at work here, in terms of personality, but there is no known cause for LP and no known cure. The PGA promotes a month of free lessons but that hasn't worked.

Sometimes instruction phobia is coupled with "adjustment phobia," where some golfers will not change their swing habits or playing habits (or equipment) no matter what.

They keep on doing the same thing they've always done despite the obvious fact (based on results) that it isn't working. Then there is "aqua phobia," which is fear of hitting a golf shot over water. Aqua phobics will instantly think the worst when faced with a shot that must carry a stream, pond or lake. Their regular swing becomes paralyzed and demons take over. Usually they will reach in their golf bag and take out an old ball or a range ball and hit that, assuming they would send a new ball to a watery grave.

Anal Rules Syndrome. Think of the selfimportant bloke who always trots out golf rules jargon when it is least welcome, and always cites USGA rules book quotations in pompous legalese during a friendly round as if they were Bible passages. It's the same know-it-all rules nerd who annoys everyone by sticking his nose where it doesn't belong, like walking way out of his way to check the relief you're taking from a sprinkler head. Or driving his cart over to the pond where your ball sank, proceeding to explain, in a tedious and uninvited manner, the options for a penalty drop. This obnoxious fellow haunts country clubs while pontificating about the latest details in the maximum length of drivers and the outlawing of "U" grooves on irons. It's a sickness indeed, and a royal pain.

Golfdoc's Disease. A lot of diseases take the name of the discoverer, such as Asperger's, Pick's and Alzheimer's. Golfdoc's disease (GD) is characterized by clinically significant maladaptive kinesthetic behavior (e.g. never hitting a good shot) that is indicative of miserable golfing technique and poor reality testing. Similar to "sterotypic movement disorder," and seen most often at practice ranges, GD patients appear to be completely oblivious to their own ineptitude, while simply continuing to flail away, like proverbial monkeys at typewriter keys.

Under no circumstances should you approach those afflicted with GD with uninvited and certainly unwanted advice, no matter how well-intended it might be. They don't want lessons, or otherwise they wouldn't demonstrate the behavior you observe. The disease is sometimes called "duffer's syndrome." For those persons suffering from GD there is a marked failure to notice that physical motions are not golf-like, and do not result in balls doing anything that resembles a golf shot.

Most of the torment seems to fall on the folks who are nearby and must watch what is happening. Among the golfing population (those who own or rent clubs) men are afflicted more than women, perhaps because they tend to be more stubborn and less coachable. The adult condition is hopeless but not serious.

Aggies to play first soccer game at new field against Sam Houston State Friday History will be made Friday, Sept. 7. Blair Quinn's Aggie soccer team inaugurates its home field advantage.

Fresh off of its win over Southern Utah, Quinn's crew hosts Sam Houston State at 4 p.m. Friday. Quinn has been excited to get a playing field that is the proper size of a soccer pitch. It should prove to be the next step forward for the program.

The Aggies won their first game of the season with a 1-0 victory over Southern Utah in their second match of the UC Riverside Tournament in Riverside, Calif. Sophomore forward Katelyn Smith scored her first career goal in the victory out of a 14-shot attack. It was a seasonhigh mark for shots on goal with seven.

Quinn said he saw his team improve after halftime.

We played much better in the second half," he said. "The sign of a good team and a team that is getting better is a team that finds a way to win, even when they don't have their best day, and I think we did that.'

At the end of the first half, sophomore forward Layla Todd sent a cross to the center of the box that found Smith, and she recorded her first goal in the 43rd minute that gave NM

State a 1-0 lead. The assist was the first of the season for Todd and the third of her career. Defensively, junior goalkeeper Mikaela Bitner collected the win with seven saves and the Aggies' first shutout of the year in her first action of the season, and she was named WAC Goalkeeper of the Week.

The soccer stadium is located just west of Aggie Memorial and north of the football team's practice team. Quinn's program is on the rise as the Aggies move into his second year as head coach.

Round on both ends ... high in the middle: Off to Ohio this weekend for Aggie football. The team is not a finished product, but is starting from a higher plain than previous squads. A consistent running game and a killer instinct on defense are where the team needs to go but so many other pieces are in place this year at the onset.

Special teams showed up big versus Sacramento State. Punter Cayle Chapman-Brown kept teams backed up and Brock Baca did not allow a kick-off return to hurt NM State. Consistency in this area will go a long way toward success through the next 11 games. Several future opponents showed up well in week one, which should add spice to the season. This weekend, a good showing in a road game against a quality opponent can give further evidence of the development under head coach DeWayne Walker.

Off to a good start Exciting season in store for athletic but inexperienced volleyball team

Hi Aggie Fans. Welcome to another exciting year of Aggie Sports. We are two weeks into our season and fortunately off to a very good start. We have a 5-1 record with wins over some very good teams.

We've already beaten four teams that were in the NCAA Tournament last season, and all four were ranked in the top 50 in last year's RPI. If those teams go on to have a good season again, you can bet that we will have an RPI at the end of the year that the selection committee will like.

RPI is the most important criterion for at-large selection into the NCAA Tournament. The committee is going almost exclusively by that number, and we've put together a non-conference schedule that will give us a great chance to improve our RPI. Hopefully, we can pull off a couple of great wins on the road this weekend over Florida International, Pepperdine and the host team, Colorado State.

Pepperdine was in the NCAA Tournament Elite 8 last season, and Colorado State is the defending Mountain West Champion. Both are great teams and will present a great challenge for us. This year's with athletic ability but is a little short on game experience. That has been our biggest challenge so far. We have more offensive weapons than we've had in quite a while, but many of them are first time starters at this level and have a lot to learn.

It's one thing to be able to attack the volleyball, but passing, blocking and digging are key elements to the game that we must improve on if we're going to be a great team. I like the effort level so far, and our team chemistry looks good as well. I think they all understand the most important name is the name on the front of the uniform and are working hard together.

I have also been very impressed with the upper classmen and how unselfish they are. We only have one senior, Madison Hardy, but quite a few juniors, and they are doing a great job of keeping the team focused in practice. They take the time to talk with each other, give helpful hints and reminders, and they aren't afraid to raise their voices if they feel it's necessary.

We have made a great deal of progress in a short period of time, and I am confident we will continue to improve. If you have not seen this team play yet you have to get out to the Pan American Center soon. You will love the energy and passion the team competes with, and the energy in our great fans and arena. Aggie athletics needs your support. Go

Space shuttle to fly over

The Space Shuttle Endeavour will grace the skies of southern New Mexico one last time on Wednesday, Sept. 19, as she rides piggyback atop a Boeing 747 Shuttle Carrier Aircraft on her way to her final home at the California Science Center in Los Angeles.

Throughout the Space Shuttle Program, employees of the NASA White Sands Test Facility (WSTF) outside of Las Cruces have worked to ensure the safety of the shuttles and their crews. In addition to WSTF, the White Sands Missile Range and Holloman Air Force Base have stood by to support every mission with a contingency landing facility at the White Sands Space Harbor.

The Space Harbor was used once for a space shuttle landing for the Orbiter Columbia following STS-3, but was continuously used for crew training until the retirement of the program in 2011.

The current schedule has Endeavour leaving Kennedy Space Center in Florida Monday, Sept. 17, but the route includes flyovers of other NASA facilities that have supported the program and nearby cities. It will stop for refueling at Biggs Army Airfield in El Paso before performing a low flyover of the WSMR main post area. Crossing over the San Andres Mountains, Endeavour will fly over WSTF, and then fly low over Las Cruces before turning west and overnighting at Edwards Air Force Base before the final leg to Los Angeles International Airport. The estimated time of the flyover is between 11 a.m. and 12:30 p.m. local time.

The newest shuttle in the fleet, Endeavour was built to replace the Space Shuttle Challenger and first flew in 1992. Endeavour flew into space 25 times, completing 4,671 orbits of the Earth, and traveling over 122 million miles. The second to last flight of the Space Shuttle Program, STS-134, was Endeavour's last flight to the International Space Station, launching on May 16, 2011, and landing on June 1, 2011. A total of five operational space shuttles were produced during the Space Shuttle Program, which spanned from 1981 to 2011. The three remaining shuttles – plus Enterprise, a prototype shuttle designed to test space shuttle behavior in atmospheric flight – were retired in April 2011 and after decommissioning will be displayed permanently at locations across the country. WSTF employees have been treated to a few other space shuttle flyovers. On March 30, 1982, Space Shuttle Columbia landed at the White Sands Space Harbor (then known as Northrup Strip) at the conclusion of STS-3. In addition, two other ferry flights from landings at Edwards Air Force Base back to the Kennedy Space Center provided opportunities to fly over WSTF. In June 1994, Endeavour flew over WSTF following a California landing at the end of STS-59. Most recently, on June 1, 2009, after completing mission STS-125 with a landing at Edwards Air Force Base in California, Space Shuttle Atlantis flew low over WSTF before passing in front of the Organ Mountains on her way to an overnight stop at Biggs Army Airfield.

Wednesday, Sept. 5, Gov. that New Mexicans can use to help them drink more responsibly and keep our streets safe. The app will also soon be available for iPhone users. Users of the application can:

- Create a designated driver list of family members and friends who can be contacted quickly in the event that someone has had too much to drink.
- Instantly locate the nearest cab company and call them without having to search for a phone number.
- Report someone who is driving erratically by using the one-touch #DWI reporting feature.
- Explore physical reaction time and other response functions through two application games.
- Use the app as an electronic blood alcohol content (BAC) guide, where the number and type of drinks a person has consumed is entered into the app and an estimated BAC is provided.

"This new smartphone application is just one more tool that we can all use to report DWI, increase our awareness of the intoxicating effects of alcohol and help those around us find a safe ride home," Martinez said.

Training pushes teachers to think beyond equation

We all know there is more than one way to solve a problem, but what about a math problem? One of several outreach efforts in mathematics from New Mexico State University is trying to change the way students and secondary school teachers in the region think about mathematics.

"It is important to realize that mathematics is not just a series of meaningless procedures that students need to memorize to pass an exam," said Susana Salamanca-Riba, associate professor of mathematics in the College of Arts and Sciences and principal investigator of the Build Leadership in Teachers (BLT) program with Park City Mathematics Insti-tute (PCMI). "If one is able to understand why a problem about speeding trains, a problem about phone plans or a problem about machine efficiency represents problems that have similar mathematical formulations, then one is better suited to recognize and tackle other problems in our own lives that have similar principles."

The Math Science Partnership between NMSU and PCMI began as a three-year grant back in 2006 funded through the National Science Foundation. It started with Japanese lesson study for midPeople do not grasp abstract concepts just because someone tells them. One needs to go through a process of assimilation of ideas.

SUSANA SALAMANCA-RIBA, associate professor of mathematics, NMSU

dle and high school teachers. Salamanca-Riba said lesson study helps teachers think about how their students learn and helps them to define a learning goal and design a lesson that will help students learn that goal.

"Japanese lesson study fosters an understanding of the learning process," Salamanca-Riba said. "People do not grasp abstract concepts just because someone tells them. One needs to go through a process of assimilation of the ideas. Students need to understand why something works the way it does, not just how it works."

NMSU's partnership with PCMI has supported an average of 20 participants among math teachers in middle and high schools each year since the partnership began in 2006 and another 10 in the leadership group. The latest group of teachers entered the yearlong leadership program last August to learn the concepts, work with other teachers and develop math units for their classes. Throughout the year, the teachers worked both with Salamanca-Riba and on their own to explore different ways certain math problems could be solved.

"We'd get together every Thursday for two hours and we'd work on math problems, on the content," said Soledad Gonzalez, one of three teacher leaders in the program and a math teacher at Mesa Middle School. "That same semester we had to come back and create a unit for our students and analyze the unit, analyze the results to see if there was student improvement and we taught it in accordance with what we had learned."

Salamanca-Riba explained when students are asked to explore the problem situation rather than being told what the equation would be, students are led to the discovery. If they arrive at the concept themselves, they are more likely to understand it and retain it. PCMI philosophy is about making connections and allowing students to solve problems in their own ways. With this approach, students can be guided to see more than one correct approach and how each fits into a bigger picture.

"I think being able to promote that type of thinking in the classroom will help the students feel more at ease and create more of a risk-free environment so they want to share," Gonzalez said. "It doesn't matter if you're solving it geometrically or algebraically as long as you're discovering the patterns and getting closer to the answer, it doesn't really matter how you got there."

The leadership program culminated recently with a summer workshop in which the leader teachers in Las Cruces joined with those in Park City, Utah. live via an online connection. Salamanca-Riba says for her, this experience with the secondary teachers over the years has strengthened her commitment to helping public school teachers improve their math teaching skills.

"When I see teachers like the ones I've been working with who are just so involved in this and as you saw, this program is encouraging teachers to be leaders in their schools." Salamanca-Riba said. "It gives me a lot of satisfaction, working with teachers who really care about their students and they want to improve their knowledge of mathematics so they can be better teachers."

Salamanca-Riba said this group of leader teachers already is talking about future workshops. Gonzalez says she will continue to share what she has learned with others.

Salamanca-Riba currently is putting together the next group of leader teachers for the NMSU-PCMI partnership.

A30 | News Las Cruces Bulletin Gardening grows on students

Green thumbs sprout at Sierra Middle School

"What better way to teach life science than a garden?" said Sierra Middle School seventh-grade teacher Mary "Melly" Locke, as she joined Sierra students tending the school's garden during the summer break.

Locke got the idea for the garden in late 2011, after attending a local workshop on school and community gardens. She and students began planting seeds in October.

Today, the Sierra garden has 20 plots that grow sunflowers, nasturtiums (all parts of the flower are edible – it even makes a great soup), five kinds of lettuce, three kinds of onions, carrots, collard greens, mustard greens, beets, cabbage, kale, squash, strawberries, shallots, dill, tomatoes, eggplant, green beans, jalapeños, turnips and pumpkins. Plum, apple and pear trees bear fruit and provide shade for the garden, along with a shaggy bark elm.

Crops grown in the largest plot are donated to a local food bank.

"The kids were very supportive of that," said Locke, who has been a teacher at Sierra for seven years.

Before planting began last fall, students conducted classroom garden research to determine what kinds of seeds would yield the biggest harvest, how deeply and how far apart the seeds should be planted, when and how much to water the plants, what gardening tools to use and when to harvest. Students also experimented with how a seed's age affects germination. Some of the seeds Locke bought at a yard sale that were packaged in 1954 still germinated, although not as well as ones newly purchased in local stores.

Sierra has had a fenced garden area and greenhouse for more than 10 years. The greenhouse was constructed thanks to a NASA grant. Locke and other Sierra teachers have used the garden area with students in other years, but not to this extent, she said. Having a continuous school garden is a major undertaking, Locke said.

"Two events helped make this year's garden successful," Locke said. "A few years ago, a local Boy Scout planned and spearheaded construction of the garden's plot borders and watering system as his Eagle Award. This greatly facilitated the ability of students to use the garden area." Second, Locke and her students have been joined in the garden project by Kristina St. Cyr, school garden coordinator and Border Servant Corps (BSC) volunteer for La Semilla Food Center, based in Anthony, N.M.

Seeing students' reactions as they watch seeds grow into plants, harvest their bounty and taste the foods they are growing is, said St. Cyr, "an amazing experience." A La Semilla grant helped pay for many of the supplies for the Sierra garden this year.

Through the BSC, St. Cyr was placed with La Semilla, whose mission is to help build a healthy, self-reliant, fair and sustainable food system in the area, "doing so by working with youth and families to build awareness around food issues, provide informed analysis and create alternatives for healthier environments and communities," said St. Cyr, who is originally from Massachusetts.

Education outreach and youth involvement are central to St. Cyr's work, and that's why she has been assisting at Sierra. And, it doesn't hurt that she loves gardening.

"She has been volunteering two days a week this past year. Her help and encouragement have been invaluable," Locke said.

Students learn not only about horticulture, but also about biology and other life sciences as they tend the garden. They learn about healthy eating as they sample foods that many have never tried before – or even heard of. Using food from the garden, they've made everything from sautéed turnips and strawberry balsamic salsa to beet carrot slaw and a rice dish called risotto, which was prepared and served by students and their parents at a recent Sierra student and parent cooking workshop sponsored by La Semilla.

"I've been cooking for my mom and she loves it," said one student.

Several students have started their own home gardens and many take home the caterpillars they find in the school garden so they watch them transform into butterflies.

Sierra's garden is a pilot project the coordinators of the School and Community Garden Partnership and La Semilla hope to expand to other schools next year. There's already one at Loma Linda Elementary School in Anthony, N.M., La Semilla, Locke and St. Cyr are developing a garden-based curriculum guide for other teachers. There are also plans to involve students in a farm-to-school program that would provide locally grown produce to school cafeterias.

CRMS holds elections on 9/11 County allows school to use real voting machines

Camino Real Middle School students will participate in student council elections at the school, 2961 Roadrunner Parkway, on Tuesday, Sept. 11, said Principal Ralph Ramos.

For the second year in a row, "all students will be using real voting machines that our Doña Ana County clerk's office will be providing," said Ramos.

The election will have CRMS student candidates running for the offices of president, vice president and sixth-, seventh- and eighthgrade representatives," he said. "We will also be voting for president of the United States, with candidates including incumbent Democrat Barack Obama and former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney, a Republican. All students will be voting during social studies class," Ramos said.

"Students have been working hard with the campaign preparing posters, campaign video speeches that will be aired during morning announcements and other fun/real life campaign practices," he said.

Ramos said using real voting booths for student council elections – and voting for candidates in the U.S. presidential election (which will be held Tuesday, Nov. 6) – helps students at Camino Real learn about the privilege and responsibility of voting in local, statewide and national elections. Holding school elections Sept. 11 also is a way of remembering 9/11 with a celebration of the American democratic process, Ramos said.

"This year's election theme is 'Students have a voice at Camino," Ramos said.

OBITUARY

MICHAEL JOHN CHAVEZ July 29, 1984 - September 2, 2012

It is with great sadness and heavy hearts that we announce the passing of our beloved son, father, brother, and grandson, Michael John Chavez on Sunday, September 2, 2012. He was born July 29, 1984 in Las Cruces, New Mexico and was a member of the Roman Catholic Church. Michael attended school in the Las Cruces Public School System; he continued his education at New Mexico State University in HVAC Electronics while employed with NASA.

Michael was a loving, kind, gentle, caring and religious man. He was always very protective of his family. Camping, fishing, hunting, family gatherings and grilling food for everyone were his great enjoyments. He was a fan of the San Francisco 49ers as well as the Los Angeles Lakers. Refurbishing his trucks was also one of his pastimes, as was his love of writing music.

Survivors include his fiancée, Fabrina Raught and his children, Michaela and Michael Isaiah Chavez; his father, Ray Chavez (Sonya); his mother, Gloria Lugo; sister, Catrina Chavez (Julio); brother, Eric Chavez; paternal grandmother, Nancy Chavez; maternal grandparents, Juan and Sylvia Lugo; paternal great-grandmother, Felice Chavez; as well as many uncles, aunts, cousins and friends. He was preceded in death by a son, Robert Angel Chavez, paternal grandfather, Robert Chavez and, paternal great-grandfather, Ray Chavez, Sr.

Calling hours for Michael will begin at 6 p.m., Thursday, September 6, 2012 in the Prayer Chapel of Baca's Funeral Chapels, 300 E. Boutz Road, where the Prayer Vigil is scheduled for 7 p.m. The Funeral Mass will be celebrated at 10 a.m., Friday, September 7, 2012 in Immaculate Heart of Mary Cathedral, 1240 S. Espina. Graveside Service will follow at 1:30 p.m. in the Monticello Cemetery, Monticello, New Mexico, with the Reverend Don Hyatt officiating. A gathering of family and friends will follow immediately after at the Sullivan Reunion Campground also in Monticello.

Serving as casket bearers will be Josh Dominguez, Eric Chavez, Paul Lugo, Jared Butterworth, Julio Chavez, Jimbo Griffith, Jeremiah Andrade, Danny Ruiz and Alex Ochoa. Honorary bearers will be Ray H. Chavez, Gary Sullivan, Gilbert Avalos, Larry Raught, Darwin Sullivan, Jeff Sullivan, Lawrence Chavez and Cheryl Gonzales.

Service arrangements have been entrusted to the care of Baca's Funeral Chapels of Las Cruces. 575-527-2222 For online condolences logon to www.bacasfuneralchapelslascruces.com

Cruces to NM: Come on down!

Consider our state's capital. Santa Fe is known for great art, great cuisine, historic buildings and a funky vibe.

Perhaps more than anything, though, Santa Fe is known for being high-priced. Whether you're talking an oil painting or a greasy burrito, it's going to cost at least 50 percent more if you buy it in Santa Fe.

Now consider our hometown of Las Cruces. We're also known for great art, great cuisine, historic buildings and a funky vibe. Granted, we may not be known as far and wide for those things as Santa Fe but, after all, they got nearly a 300-year head start on us.

No matter how you dissect the difference between us and the City Different, however, when it comes to prices, Las Cruces will always come out on the low end.

Last week, about 1,000 New Mexicans from throughout the state visited Las Cruces for the annual meeting of the New Mexico Municipal League. Meetings took place at the Las Cruces Convention Center and they got to see several local sights, including dinner at the New Mexico Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum.

I, for one, am very glad they came. Sure, it was nice to greet our brethren and sistren from elsewhere in the Land of Enchantment. And we also welcome the little shot in the gross receipts tax.

But here's why I'm glad they came: They got a chance to see how life is good in Las Cruces.

More specifically, they got a chance to see how life is affordable in Las Cruces. The Municipal League is made up of elected and appointed officials from city and county governments. The league had not met here in eight years, so this was the first chance for its members to see our convention center.

I'm sure all of our visitors had a good time, because, really, if you're not having a good time in Las Cruces, it's your own fault. More important, maybe, they got a glimpse at the affordability of Las Cruces.

These Municipal League folks are influential. They are also folks who have to have a lot of meetings.

Applying the Rule of Seven

Local businesses add social media to mix By Alta LeCompte For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Before the drills and imaging equipment were up and running, dentist Brian Petersen had a Facebook page for his new practice, thanks to marketing director/administrator Erin Petersen.

The practice, Las Cruces Dental Solutions, opened in June 2011.

"I wanted to be on Facebook right away to encourage patients to stay engaged," said Érin Petersen, who earned a bachelor's degree and an MBA, specializing in health care administration. "We've had a good response. We have some very local followers.

Las Cruces Dental Solutions gives patients incentives to make frequent virtual visits to the dental office with discounts, deals and drawings

The LNG Co. LLC, which is managing Las Cruces Dental Solutions' online presence, posts new information for them several times a week, including fun facts about the practice, Petersen said.

Marketing means mixing it up

Las Cruces Dental Solutions launched with a direct mail campaign and professionally designed website, she said.

Petersen said the value of professional assistance extended beyond web design to search engine optimization. Search engine optimization ensures that when someone searches for a local dentist they find Las Cruces Dental Solutions at the top of Google and other search engines.

Realtor Wanda Arnold and Chris Lang, founder and CEO of LNG, also attest the importance of connecting with the search engines that will best reach prospects.

BPC to focus efforts on furniture

Office supplies division closing

Business Products Center Inc. - Las Cruces' independent office supplies provider for 60 years - closed its showroom at 840 El Paseo Road this week to undergo a metamorphosis. The company is dropping out of the office supply business and ramping up furniture sales, which have increased 96.8 percent in the past 24 months. In furniture, unlike office supplies, the playing field is level for independent dealers, Vice President Christopher Drumm said.

The new BPC will emerge at the 10,000-square-foot warehouse located in the same building.

For now, furniture customers will view floor samples in the current retail space until a display area is created at the warehouse.

What's going away is BPC's copier service, lottery sales and miscellaneous office supplies that once were staples of the business, Drumm said.

You likely have already jumped ahead of me, but here's what I'm thinking.

Big meetings in New Mexico have a tendency to take place in Albuquerque or Santa Fe. The thinking is that Albuquerque is relatively centrally located and Santa Fe is the state capital.

I'm guessing though, if you were to have a two-day meeting, you could do it less expensively and just as effectively right here in Las Cruces. That's particularly true if your starting point is Socorro or southward.

Having seen some of the rates in Santa Fe, I'm thinking you could bring a crew from Raton to Las Cruces and still spend less money than if you had held the meeting in much closer Santa Fe.

With every municipality in the state taking agonizingly close looks at their budgets, I bet a lot of these city and county officials made a mental note of their experience in Las Cruces. Not only for their municipalities, but also for the other groups and organizations these folks belong to.

Next spring, the state Rotary Club convention will be in Las Cruces; maybe other groups like that will follow suit.

Will the Municipal League translate into an onslaught of meetings and conventions coming to Las Cruces? Probably not, but even if it leads to just two or three, that means we'll get that many more people coming to experience life in Las Cruces.

Now that we have the convention center, there are meeting options of almost any size or style in Las Cruces. If you need to go really big, how about the Pan American Center? That's just one of many options through New Mexico State University. Check out the new business meeting rooms at La Posta de Mesilla. Several area hotels have great settings. Or how about a unique, intimate setting at Mesilla Valley Bosque State Park, where they have a classroom that can hold up to 30 and a 40-by-60-foot outdoor shade structure. The options in Las Cruces are many and varied.

I especially hope someone takes a look at scheduling a January or February event that is normally in Santa Fe or elsewhere up north and bringing it to Las Cruces. We'll give them – literally – a warm welcome.

A lot of Las Crucens have a sour taste about Santa Fe, to the degree of creating some descriptive nicknames. My favorite so far is Fanta Se. (You may have to ponder that a minute.)

I'm not one of those folks. I happen to love Santa Fe, except for the expense, of course. It's a fascinating city on multiple levels.

Of course, I haven't found one community in our vast state that hasn't held my interest for one reason or another. It's true, I'm a New Mexico junkie.

Trying to be as objective as I can, however, Las Cruces makes a whole heck of a lot of sense - for a number of reasons, not just cost - as a prime locale for many state, as well as regional, meetings, events and conventions. So I say, come on down!

media management and related specialties.

He said there are thousands of search engines, 17 of which will work for most businesses.

'We do seven right away - they have more weight than any others," he said at a workshop presented Wednesday, Aug. 22 by the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce.

Topping his list is Google, which gets 65 percent of the search action, followed by Bing and Yahoo.

Arnold favors some search engines that might not be on Lang's list, such as Trulia and GoogleAdWords, because house hunters use these lead-generating search engines.

She said there's another reason she favors Trulia and GoogleAdWords - they provide a consultant she can actually talk with while managing her own online presence.

Arnold, who calls herself a shameless self-promoter, gets noticed everywhere - from real estate publications such as HouseHunt to billboards to community guides to maps.

"I probably use just about every form of advertising available, running the gamut to see what works," she said.

And she never leaves Starbucks without leaving someone a card, Arnold added.

Follow the Rule of Seven

Lang would love Arnold - she practices the traditional Rule of Seven and testifies that it still applies.

Lang alluded to the rule at the chamber workshop, reminding attendees that, before a prospect actually becomes a customer, they must see or hear the business owner's message seven times.

- "Communication is still the same," he said.
- "Just some of it's going online."

In his presentation, which he dubbed "Facebook for Dummies," Lang encouraged the fearful to add an online presence to their current communication mix.

"You're not going to break the Internet," he said. Petersen also encourages hesitant business owners to > remodeling or those who tell us their stuff is 30 years old and needs to be replaced."

Torres said after meeting with clients to discuss their needs, the BPC sales staff will pick out two or three options and bring them onsite for the client.

"It's hard to tell what a chair is going to feel like when you're look-ing at a catalogue," Torres said. "We will bring it out to their office so they can sit on it.

She said BPC prides itself on its customer service and knowledgeable staff.

'That's what helps set us apart from our competition," she said.

Opportunities abound in Las Cruces

"We spent the past couple years building volume," Drumm said. "The biggest thing we have to do now is grow our customer base. This entails a bigger push into El Paso and Santa Teresa, which will be a huge market."

When asked how he envisions building the customer base, Drumm said, "Las Cruces has kind of done that for us. There are a lot more national businesses coming into Las Cruces from all over the consider new media.

"I think it goes without saying you need to have a so-cial media presence," she said. "It's a very cost effective way to keep connected with current customers and reach out to new customers."

Petersen said she started out managing social media for the practice herself. "Just do it yourself," she said. "There's a lot of information out there to help you. You might not be doing it perfectly, but you can't really do it wrong."

On the other hand, hiring a professional can free up time while ensuring that search engine optimization, online updates and reputation management get the attention they deserve, Petersen said.

Avoid common hazards

Lang's parting advice for new online communicators was:

Make sure your customers can find you.

- Look good.
- Give them a reason to buy.

He said the biggest pitfall is not keeping current with your online presence. A website designed 10 years ago or a social media posting about an event held last year won't bring in business.

Make sure your information is accurate, he said.

In answer to a question, he said the frequency with which a business updates its online presence depends on the nature of the business and its objectives.

Restaurants that want repeat business should be posting weekly specials; tire dealers that just want to be found when a consumer needs their products don't need such frequent updates.

It's especially important to keep your website blog current, he added.

It's also important to know what others are saying about you online, Lang said.

He cited the example of a hypothetical restaurant that had a shaky opening but later corrected the problem and is offering great food and service. The restaurant may have gotten bad reviews early on. Unless the owners monitor and manage their online reputation, the bad reviews will stay there in cyberspace, dragging the business down, Lang said.

who don't want to spend a lot and those for whom money is no object.'

BPC also sells industrial shelving and office furniture from a number of manufacturers, including Safco, Alera and even Rubbermaid.

In recent years, office furniture has become more modern and sleek with a much greater selection of finishes, Torres said. Chairs have evolved structurally to become more ergonomic and supportive.

Experts offer onsite service

Torres said she often works with a corporation or organization's risk management specialists to ensure furniture and accessories meet the physical needs of individual employees.

Although face-to-face interactions at the retail store will vanish, customers will have several options for inspecting the furniture. They can visit a display area in the warehouse or talk with a sales rep at their own offices.

Sales staff now will pay more visits to clients, Torres said.

We will keep working with the same clients," she said. "We will visit new businesses, those considering country, and Las Cruces businesses are opening satellites all over the country."

Drumm returned to the City of the Crosses two years ago, leaving a banking career in Fort Worth, Texas, to work with his mother, Susan Horton, owner of BPC.

He said the business has been around for 60 years, but became BPC 35 years ago when his stepdad Terry Horton, who had worked for the paper mill, acquired it.

When Drumm returned to the city, he launched an online catalogue, which will continue with a reduced inventory.

'I think it will continue to be a significant asset to the company," he said. "People will continue to have the ability to shop for different furniture series online, and we will continue to push that."

He said online contact extends BPC's reach to all of New Mexico. farther into Texas and as far as Denver.

Drumm said BPC can dropship products from 35 warehouses nationwide direct to customers.

"During the transaction we will set up a labor and installation arrangement," he said.

For more information about BPC services, call 524-2866.

he said. "Most of the remainder was in lottery ticket sales and service.

BPC will reopen its storefront Saturday, Sept. 8, for a closeout sale. An open house will be held in October at the warehouse to celebrate BPC's evolution and thank customers for their loyalty, he said.

Independents face supply challenges

Drumm said the business products industry is catering to big-box stores, which are getting better prices from manufacturers than his two distributors receive.

'In Las Cruces, we're essentially fighting a battle with seven big-box stores," he said.

He said the issue for BPC is the company's ability to provide clients with cost-efficient service and nextday delivery. "Our volume has continued to grow, but margins and market share are going down," Drumm said. "The market is there, but the availability of product at a reasonable cost to us is beginning to fade away."

Explaining the decision to exit the supplies business, Drumm said: "We have a lot of loyal customers in Las Cruces. If costs continue to rise. we are not prepared to push those costs on to our consumer.

BPC to cultivate furniture market

Furniture is an entirely different market, Drumm said.

"The big boxes control a very small percentage of the business," he said. "We're in competition mostly with other independents." He said BPC is able to give its customers the best possible service.

"It's a very specialized business," Drumm said. "When people want to spend $20,000, $30,000, $40,000 on new furniture, they want to touch the product to know what they're buying. They can't get it looking at a computer."

The biggest selling furniture items are panel systems for cubicles, which BPC designs and installs, he said.

Sales and operations manager Rebecca Torres said BPC carries office furniture by The Hon Co., one of the top manufacturers.

"We've also partnered with Global," she said. "They have a really good selection for people who want good quality – both those of it's going online. CHRIS LANG, CEO LNG Co.

Mike Boswell: Aggies recruit sales star

Relationship manager kicks off first season

By Alta LeCompte

The Aggies gave their new fan relationship manager Mike Boswell something to cheer about when they defeated Sacramento State in their home football opener.

They looked good," he said in an interview Friday, Aug. 31, in his office in the field house. "I was enthusiastic about the crowd."

On opening game night at New Mexico State University, Boswell captured the energy of the crowd by stationing staffers out front to explain to arriving spectators the advantages of trading up to season tickets.

'We sold 22 season tickets to walk-ups," he said. "The goal is to communicate the fun of attending games and show the financial and seat location benefits of buying a package.

'We're excited about the present and future and think coach (Dewayne) Walker is headed in the right direction. We can't do anything about the past."

He said a certain amount of frustration among Aggie football fans is a good thing.

"If they didn't care, we would have an entirely different problem," he said. "We welcome fan frustration because it tells me there's an opportunity here."

Although there's a big NMSU sign in the FRMC (Fan Relationship Management Center) and the job is all about selling Aggie football and men's basketball tickets, Boswell and his crew are not NMSU employees. They are employees of The Aspire Group, an international sports sales consulting firm working in partnership with NMSU's athletics department to enhance sales and customer service.

Their goal is to build a strong foundation of lifelong fans.

'The Aspire Group is part of our initiative to improve the game-day atmosphere at NM State athletic events," said NMSU Associate Athletic Director Steve Macy. "Through this unique partnership, Aspire will be actively engaging the community and expanding the fan base.

Walking away from home

Boswell has been in the business of sports marketing 26 years, but this is his first outing with Aspire.

Throughout his career, his path has frequently crossed with Aspire founder Bernie Mullin, who became his mentor.

Boswell grew up and attended local schools in Indiana, Pa., 58 miles northeast of Pittsburgh.

Indiana is a college town, the home of Indiana University of Pennsylvania.

"I grew up in a college town and it didn't seem like something I needed," he said.

Instead, he went looking for a path into the work world, first doing some radio in smaller cities east of Pittsburgh. Relocating to Pittsburgh, he took a series of retail jobs he didn't regard as long term.

And then, the Pittsburgh Pirates found him in 1986. They needed help badly.

How bad can it get?

Asked about the Pirates' status in 1986, he said, "It wasn't good. They lost a hundred games the year before and their mascot got caught selling cocaine."

Even in good years such as 1972, when the late Roberto Clemente got his 3,000th hit, Pittsburgh is a tough town for professional baseball. It is small market city that can't afford to pay its players and offer fan incentives on a par with larger, more affluent cities.

"I learned how to do it in a difficult market," Boswell said. "Anything that came after that seemed not that difficult.

Las Cruces Bulletin photo by Alta LeCompte Josiah Castro, sales consultant, confers with Mike Boswell of The Aspire Group, who has joined the Aggies to build a fan relationship management center on campus.

For the Pirates, marketing was a matter of survival. But they had one thing going for them: Bernie Mullin.

Mullin's staff learned sales techniques and boosted productivity.

Miracles were not on their list of goals. "It was a matter of improving," Boswell said. "It didn't happen overnight."

Going on the road

Boswell went on to serve as director of telemarketing for the Denver Grizzlies hockey team, director of corporate sales for the San Francisco Giants, senior account executive for the Sports Facilities Management Group in Columbus, Ohio, director of sales and then team president of the National Basketball Development League team in Charleston, S.C., and senior director of season ticket customer service for the Atlanta Spirit, Hawks and Thrashers.

In 2006 he was named director of season ticket and premium seat sales at Arizona State University in Tempe, Ariz., the position he said was most comparable to his current one as head of the fan relationship management office for Aspire at NMSU.

At ASU he created the Sales Academy. He recruited, hired, trained and directed a fulltime staff and student part-timers who generated $8.7 million in new ticket sales of Sun Devil football, basketball and other sports, tripling departmental sales goals in 2006-08.

The position enabled him to groom young staffers to go on to careers in the industry. Boswell said he assisted sales representatives in attaining positions with the Arizona Diamondbacks, Phoenix Suns, Arizona Cardinals, Colorado Rockies, Orlando Magic, Tampa Bay Rays, Los Angeles Galaxy and Los Angeles Clippers.

Boswell also traveled extensively to train sales and customer service representatives. His clients included the Washington Capitals, Columbus Blue Jackets and Phoenix Coyotes.

Mentoring for results

While Boswell began to talk about his initial experiences in Las Cruces, sales consultants Josiah Castro and Devin Day at nearby phones courted former season ticket holders.

An energized Day completed a sale and then checked in with Boswell, apologizing for the interruption.

"How did you do it?" Boswell asked.

"I listened," Day said. "I found out what he needed. He just needed (his seats) to be higher up.

Boswell's role as a recruiter, trainer and mentor is critical to the success of the FRMC.

'I enjoy helping people; it's giving back. I enjoy doing the same thing Bernie did for me. If you truly teach people, they'll do it right for the rest of their life."

Boswell said it's important to hire FRM staff who understand sports sales is really work.

"If they know that, I think we have a starting point," he said. "I want someone who's passionate about the business side of sports, who works hard, follows directions and is honest." Boswell mentors as a volunteer as well as a supervisor.

He volunteered with the Boys & Girls Club in Tempe, Atlanta and Charleston, where he was a member of the board.

"The kids are smart enough to know they're safer at the club than on the streets," he said. 'You gotta love a kid like that."

He has also volunteered with Big Brothers Big Sisters and is still in contact with his little brother of 10 years ago in Columbus, Ohio, who is now "a good dad."

"He still calls me his big brother," Boswell said. "It's amazing how connected you can get with someone that needs that role in their life.

Details

As a boy, Mike Boswell played sandlot baseball, softball, football and basketball. He and his dad were at Three Rivers Stadium in 1972 the night before Roberto Clemente became the first Hispanic major leaguer to connect for his 3,000th hit. As an adult, Boswell got his start in sports ticket sales and fan relationship building with the Pirates in 1986.

In Good Company: Helen's Reflexology

Technique focuses on foot care

'Step into a balanced life' By Alta LeCompte

For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Feet come first at Helen's Reflexology, a business Helen Borchardt opened in Las Cruces in 2011.

Borchardt decided to focus on care of the foot after closing Total Body Salon and Day Spa in Lincoln, Neb., and relocating to Las Cruces.

In Lincoln, Borchardt started out 25 years ago as a nail technician. She bought her employer's business and expanded it into a salon and then a day spa. In addition to a full range of hair and nail care, massage, steam and aromatherapy services, Borchardt served brunch, lunch and tea to pamper her clients at the day spa.

Her location adjacent to a state park proved to be a boon to business.

"A lot of ladies were staying at the park and their husbands were off, perhaps playing golf," she said. "They called ahead and made plans to spend the day at the spa."

Pampering clients

Helen's Reflexology is a more narrowly focused endeavor than the spa, but Borchardt's emphasis on customer care continues.

She said sessions generally are scheduled for an hour, but run as long as they need to, sometimes for an hour and a half.

Borchardt sees clients in a portion of her home designed for the business.

She arrived in Las Cruces three and half years ago with an open mind about the direction her career would take.

Because she had been so busy in Nebraska, she had not planned her business venture in advance, Borchardt said.

"When I moved here, I had a year of adjustment," she said. "I had a debate inside myself, and finally decided not to transfer my nail license."

After a couple of tries working at other jobs, she realized she was accustomed to being her own boss and needed to open her own business.

"I decided to start to focus on reflexology," she said.

Borchardt acquired a city business license and prepared to comply with local regulations governing home-based businesses, including restrictions on noise and sign size.

Holding down costs

Borchardt opened her home office near South Telshor Boulevard late last year.

"I find most clients understand, because a lot of people today have businesses in the home because of overhead," she said. Borchardt said her cost of doing business would double or triple if she had to rent space in which to see clients. She would have to pass those costs along to her clients, she said.

"The location is quiet and convenient for my clients," she said.

She started her business relying on newspaper advertising to grow her base.

"I think it jump-started my business," she said. Many of her first clients who noticed her ad were already

She now continues to get noticed in the newspaper, but also is seeing a growing number of referrals.

Addressing wellness issues

Borchardt described reflexology as a wellness practice.

"A lot of people relate reflexology to foot massage," she said. "Or maybe they have heard the word reflexology but never investigated what it is."

She explained that reflexology is performed entirely with the thumbs, which apply pressure to reflex points. It is used to stimulate reflex points on the bottom of the foot, and sometimes the hands and face, to release energy blocks.

"When I feel a crunchiness, I work with it to dissipate the crunchiness until it relaxes and the blood can flow more easily," she said.

"Reflexology stimulates inner organs for health and well being," she said, pointing to a chart that shows specific areas of the feet affecting specific internal organs.

The technique was used as far back as ancient Egypt, but research into how it works began in the 1930s with clinical studies by physical therapist Eunice Ingham, Borchardt said.

"Sometimes it is done to release intestinal toxins. When it's working, all of a sudden you can hear a loud gurgling in the intestinal area," she said. "And sometimes it's done just for better balance.

Orienting new clients

Borchardt said she takes a health history with new clients and requests that they get permission from their physician to work with her. She then spends time discussing the client's goals.

A session begins with a foot soak to start the relaxation process and might include a heat treatment.

The client lies on a massage table while Borchardt works to "relieve and relax in conjunction with whatever is going on with their doctors," she said. "I don't diagnose or prescribe.

"It comes quite naturally for me to do it, in part because I believe in the benefits. It's relaxing in itself, and it helps the body balance out."

August hot in Las Cruces in more ways than one

Carrie LaTour

Executive director, Downtown Las Cruces Partnership

August has come and gone in Las Cruces and, from all accounts, the 2012 SalsaFest! was a huge Downtown success.

Seventeen competitors began crafting their salsa 7 a.m. Sunday and worked nonstop until 3 p.m. when the last tickets were sold (and the rain began to pour from the sky in buckets!). Throughout the day, people tasted and voted on their top three favorites, with "This Side of Loco Salsa," prepared by Thomas Lopez and his team, taking top prize for the People's Choice Award.

Next came the Judges' Awards, with cash prizes of $1,000 for first place, $750 for second and $500 for third.

Judging was changed this year to a completely blind tasting by five judges who sampled all 17 salsas.

The competitors' salsas were judged on appearance, originality, flavor and heat factor.

Competition between the winners was tough, with first prize going to Russell Blundell with 80 total points, second prize to Teresa Cobb representing "Grandma T's Cupboard" with 79 points and third prize to Reynaldo Alvarez, aka "El Tejano," with 71 points.

Although the day required a huge amount of effort on the part of both the organizers and the competitors, everyone remained upbeat and excited throughout the day, and it was great to see competitors laughing and having a great time.

One competitor group that appeared to be having an exceptionally good time was the Doña Ana Arts Council booth, led by Executive Director Ceci Vasconcellos and her family. Every time someone voted for their salsa, they rang a bell, and more than once, I saw people in their booth doing a "we got another vote" dance, which was most entertaining.

Another special mention goes to the Hot Chicks team, always entertaining and the reigning champs over the past two years. Hopefully they will grace our event again next year. Next to the Hot Chicks and providing a

Things you can do Downtown this month

Every month, it seems like there are more and more things available to do Downtown. Here's a sampling of things for September.

1. Celebrate Las Cruces Community Theatre's 50th anniversary with a special showing of Mark Medoff's "When You Comin' Back, Red Ryder?" directed by the playwright himself. The play shows Sept. 7-23. Call 523-1200 for information.

2. Go to the Downtown Art Ramble and visit the openings at the galleries and museums from 5 to 7 p.m. the first Friday of the month. This month it's Friday, Sept. 7.

3. Have a midnight snack at S.B.'s Latenight Lunchbox, featured in this month's edition of New Mexico magazine.

4. See the "Man in Black," Saturday, Sept. 8, at the Rio Grande Theatre as the DACC kicks off its 2012-13 Performance Series.

- 5. Enjoy the Las Cruces Farmers & Crafts Market Wednesday and Saturday mornings. 6. Buy some books at COAS Books and
- trade in some of your own. 7. Check out one of the Friday Night Luaus
- at Ono Grindz Hawaiian restaurant. 8. Visit Black Box Theatre and the No
- Strings Theatre Company (www.no-strings. org).
- 9. Check out a pie at Zeffiro Pizzeria Napoletana and Popular Artisan Bread.

10. It's always a Great Day when you're having a green chile cheeseburger at Day's Hamburgers.

11. Buy some art at MVS, Big Picture and M. Phillip's Gallery, all on Main Street.

12. Top of the day with toppings on your hot dog at Happy Dog, northwest corner of Griggs Avenue and Water Street.

'Young people are our future,' Koerper says

The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico (CFSNM) is working to develop leadership, problem solving and critical thinking skills among middle school students.

On Friday, Aug. 24, the CFSNM and the Barat Foundation hosted Our American Voice, a workshop developed to teach middle school students to collaborate as they learn the fundamentals of American democracy and work to create positive change in their communities.

Jeannie Sanke, Ph.D., of the Barat Foundation in Chicago, was the presenter.

"I attended the workshop because I want to know how other groups work to influence young people to be involved in their communities; to see and fix problems in society," said Kelly Koerper, leader of Students Against Destructive Decisions (SADD) at Oñate High School, who believes the Our American Voice group is working to help kids understand the constitution and their rights in America as far as getting their voice heard in the community and nation as a whole, especially in problem solving in the community. "I think this is a very important concept, crucial to our freedoms and imperative as we try to preserve our country as the founders sought it to be."

When the CFSNM considered bringing a civic engagement program to nonprofits in the community that will target middle school youth, the Barat Foundation and its program, Our American Voice, was a good fit. The program will be expanding to high school and would tie in with the drug free communities initiative within the CFSNM, as well as the foundation's after school initiative. The CFSNM may soon host a pilot program in the community.

Our American Voice was created for middle school students because it is an ideal time to introduce students to the functioning of a democratic society and prepare them to be lifelong citizens; cultivate critical thinking and collaboration skills and develop the cognitive ability to grasp complex concepts and engage Thinking about upgrading your home or office property?

Permitting process applies to jobs of all sizes

Gary Sandler's Real Estate Connection

If you're planning on doing more than just slapping a new coat of paint on your Las Cruces area residential or commercial property, you may be surprised to learn you'll probably need a building permit to legally complete the job.

Really? Really!

Many projects you and I think of as everyday, run-of-the-mill home improvements can trigger a visit from a City of Las Cruces or Doña Ana County building inspector.

What types of projects are we talking about? Room or garage additions and alterations are definitely on the list. Permits are also required for the installation or construction of storage sheds or accessory buildings, for roof installations or repairs, installation of fences, swimming pools, concrete slabs, evaporative coolers and even sprinkler systems.

Changes to electrical, plumbing and heating systems also require formal oversight, as do excavation projects. Moving a mobile home onto a piece of land? You'll need a permit for that, too.

Obtaining a permit is important for a number of reasons, with health and safety at the top of the list. Inspections conducted during the various phases of the construction and alteration processes help ensure structural integrity is maintained and all mechanical systems meet or exceed minimum operational and safety standards.

Although it is not illegal to sell or purchase a property that doesn't meet applicable building codes (if it were illegal, we Realtors wouldn't be able to sell any "fixer-uppers"), it is important to note that all known deficiencies must be fully disclosed.

In legal circles, full disclosure includes informing potential buyers of the possible consequences he or she might face as a result of purchasing a property that lacks proper documentation.

One of the more serious consequences associated with purchasing a "permit challenged" property is the procedure the new owner may have to follow in order to bring the property up to code. It is not uncommon to find that items to be inspected are hidden within walls or buried under a concrete slab.

Care to expose the footings under your slab or remove your drywall to expose electrical or plumbing systems? I didn't think so.

On rare occasions, building codes will require that the illegal addition or improvement be demolished. Ironically, demolishing a structure also requires a permit. How many permits are issued each month

How many permits are issued each month in our area?

During the first seven months of this year, the City of Las Cruces issued 1,611 building permits and 2,641 electrical and mechanical permits. Of the total number of building permits, 270 applications were for construction of new single-family homes, 16 were for construction of new commercial buildings, 506 were for residential reroofing and 172 were for residential additions or alterations. The remaining number of permits were for various and sundry other jobs. The value of the new construction and other improvements reached $96.7 million during the seven-month timeframe.

Before you get too excited, keep in mind that obtaining a permit doesn't automatically make the addition or alteration legal. Before that can happen, all applicable inspections must be completed and signed off before a certificate of occupancy or final approval can be issued by the building department.

If you have questions about permit requirement for your upcoming project, call the City of Las Cruces Community Development Department at 528-3222 (www.las-cruces. org) or the Doña Ana County Community Development Department at 647-7350 (www. donaanacounty.org).

By the way, stay friendly with your neighbors. According to city and county building permit information, 15 of them just installed new swimming pools. See you at closing.

in community problem solving.

Our American Voice relies heavily on online interactive and social networking tools to reach youth where they are and can be implemented in schools, after-school programs and youth centers. The program includes two parts, beginning with active citizenship and ending with community action.

The program consists of 65 to 80 hours of team meeting time. A detailed facilitator's guide for program implementation, coupled with the Our American Voice website, provides program participants and facilitators current and historical information, online activities and opportunities to link to other facilitators and students.

"Young people are our future," Koerper said. "They are faced with many destructive influences at a very early age and must be able to see in advance the results of different decisions, good and bad. They need to have foresight so they can determine their destiny and not be sidetracked by addictions and negative influences. They need to see how much good they can do to help others around them. They need to see their potential in developing their talents and seeking education and in developing their talents and seeking education and the good things in life. I want them to feel hopeful, not hopeless about influencing those around them."

On Aug. 24, Jeannie Sanke, Ph.D., of the Barat Foundation presents to a group of community leaders interested in learning more about middle school youth and leadership.

The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico is dedicated to helping the Southern New Mexico community now, and in the future. Founded in 2000, the Community Foundation offers opportunities for local people who want to give back locally. The beauty of the Foundation is that you

Good yields expected for pecan crop

Farmers have had to juggle watering

By Marvin Tessneer Las Cruces Bulletin

Pecan growers are expecting good yields for their 2012 crop, but they also know they have to ration their irrigation water carefully for the rest of the growing season to keep their trees healthy.

Pecan producers are scheduling their irrigation, trying to make the most efficient use water until the end of the season, said Phillip Arnold of San Saba Pecans.

Because of the drought, the Elephant Butte Irrigation District could only release 6 inches of water to farmers, which meant they could only receive one or two irrigations this summer. Most pecan growers are currently irrigating with ground water and wells.

"The major thing is the orchard men have to be careful that they water at the right time," Arnold said. "And a few farmers are doublechecking with the state engineer to make sure that the accountability of the water they've been using is done correctly."

While water is severely limited this year, the state engineer is making exemptions for certain farmers, allowing them to use a combination of river and ground water to total 4.5 acre-feet.

However, only farmers whose records prove they have in the past consistently used a combination of river and ground water of 5 acrefeet or more are eligible for the exemption.

Reports are that pecan trees are dying in small orchards that don't have ground water rights to pump water.

"It takes a long time to establish a pecan orchard," Arnold said. "And if you cut back on water during a drought you could kill trees or damage them so much they would not be profitable or it could take years for them to come back."

Pecans are a permanent crop, and the health of the orchard trees is important to the industry.

Last year, New Mexico pecans brought more than $150 million into the state economy. The average prices for the last two years for in-shell pecans per pound was $2.50 to $2.75 per pound.

But the pecan market is subject to supplyand-demand.

"Sales are slower this year," Arnold said. "It's really too early to say what the market might be."

The New Mexico Pecan Co. south of Las Cruces is reporting a high-quality nut yield for the coming harvest. This year is considered an "off-year" in the alternating bearing cycle, heavy yields one harvest and light the next. But that seems to improve the quality.

"When you have an off-year, you have fewer nuts on the trees, which improves the quality," said office manager Steven Acosta. "And the meats fill out the shell more for a higher percentage."

Greg Daviet's concern is the health of his 250-acre pecan orchard south of Las Cruces.

"The trees are have a lot of nuts and look healthy," he said.

He is irrigating with ground water according to the needs of the trees.

"I have about 26 different fields within the orchard, and each field has a different irrigation program," he said. "It's all about tree health. Now, we're concerned about watering trees, fertilizer application and pest control."

He isn't concerned about what pecan growers call the seasonal "August drop."

"It's part of the natural growth of nut trees," Daviet said. "Not all trees take the nuts to maturity, and we expect them to shed some nuts. But if they shed a lot of nuts then, the trees aren't healthy."

And pecan growers are interested in the timing of the August drop.

Local pecan growers expect good yields from the 2012 crop despite concerns about water to irrigate the groves.

"If the August drop comes early, that usually means the crop will finish early, a good sign that means a better quality," he said.

The China pecan export market, which showed so much promise a couple of years ago, has lost its momentum.

James Ditmore, an international marketing specialist with the New Mexico Department of Agriculture, explained:

"The Chinese market for pecans has been flat for the last few months for a few reasons. Their economy isn't as vibrant as it has been; the Chinese are price-conscious and they still consider the pecan an exotic nut." The National Agriculture Statistics Service reports that the New Mexico pecan production has been holding steady the last few years. The in-shell production was 68 million pounds in 2009, 66 million in 2010 and 61 million in 2011.

But the crop values have varied because of the price per pound that pecan growers received. The average prices per pound that growers received were $1.76 in 2009, $2.83 in 2010 and $2.67 in 2011, according to the NASS. Crop values were $119.6 million in 2009, $186.7 million in 2010, and $162.8 million in 2011.

Sale complete on tower

Most tenants staying in place

The familiar Wells Fargo logo atop the tower of Las Cruces' tallest building may soon be coming down.

The building at 506 S. Main St. was sold Friday, Aug. 31 to a Canadian real estate investor.

"I've known the buyer for quite a while and this deal made good sense to them," said Randy McMillan, owner of NAI 1st Valley, which represented the buyer in the transaction. "It's a pleasure to find a win-win for the seller and the buyer."

No sale price was disclosed. "This is an exciting development for an important part of the Downtown area," said Downtown Las Cruces Partnership Board President Hal Henthorne. "We welcome the new ownership of the tower and also the new business soon to open in the building next door."

MMC pension plan turned over to trustee Hospital should not be affected by switch

The retirement pension plan for the former employees of Memorial Medical Center Inc., in Las Cruces has been turned over to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, an independend government agency. The announcement was made Tuesday, Sept. 4, by the court-appointed receiver for Memorial Medical Center Inc.

The PBGC is a federal agency created by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 to protect pension benefits in private-sector plans, the kind that typically pay a set monthly amount at retirement, according to the PBGC website.

Memorial Medical Center Inc. no longer operates Memorial Medical Center and has been in a state court supervised receivership proceeding since June 2006. The current receiver is Beasley, Mitchell & Co., a local accounting firm.

PHC-Las Cruces Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Province Healthcare Corporation, currently operates the Memorial Medical Center hospital. The hospital is not expected to be affected by the receivership proceeding or the PBGC acceptance of the pension plan.

Although the pension plan has continued to pay benefits to retirees who have become eligible to receive monthly benefits, over the last several years a significant decrease in interest rates adversely affected the required funding of the pension plan, and it was believed likely that the plan would have eventually become unable to meet its obligations.

For this reason, the PBGC terminated the pension plan and is now the pension plan's trustee. The PBGC is expected to oversee the pension plan and make sure monthly benefits are protected and paid out, up to certain limits set by law.

The pension plan participants' benefit amounts are expected to fall within the legal limits.

Plan participants may contact the PBGC at 800-400-7242 or 202-326-4000 or visit www.pbgc.gov. Customer Contact Center hours are 8 a.m. to 7 p.m. Eastern Time, Monday through Friday (except federal holidays). The PBGC may have only limited information about the plan and participants benefits until the PBGC has had time to obtain and review the plan's records – typically after several months.

Gold standard is like astrology or voodoo

Chris Erickson State of the Economy

One plank of the Republican platform calls for a commission to study the possible return to the gold standard. This is less onerous than had been feared. There already had been some effort at calling for a return to the gold standard.

With very few exceptions, economists cringe at the idea of the gold standard as a throwback to pre-modern superstition. The idea that the money supply of the U.S. economy would depend on the value of metal, the supply of which is controlled by foreigners, is both dumb and dangerous.

Yet the gold standard, like astrology and voodoo, is a hard superstition to put down. Especially during economic hard times, such as now, people seek a quick fix.

"Return to the gold standard," becomes a sort of magic incantation to ward off recessions and unemployment. In this go-round, the leading propo-nent of the gold standard is Ron Paul, the Libertarian-cum-Republican presidential nominee. It's part of his anti-Fed mantra. He would take away control of the U.S. money supply from government officials and instead, place it into the hands of Mumbai jewelry dealers.

After all, it is the gold dealers of India who currently hold the largest private reserves of gold.

Gold bugs also often accuse the Fed of mismanaging interest rates. They criticize the Fed for setting too low a rate for years on end, thereby punishing savers, while causing first the tech boom, then the real estate boom

Rather than learn from its mistakes, the Fed has doubled down in the current recession, promising to keep interest rates at near zero levels for as far as the eye can see, according to these critics.

But the Fed is in "a drat if it does, drat if it doesn't" situation. The reality is there is little the Fed can do beyond what it is doing given the current circumstances.

One could argue interest rates should have been higher in 2005 and 2006, but that is 20-20 hindsight. The question is what to do now. Certainly, now is not the time for tight money, yet that is exactly what we would have gotten with a gold standard.

Let's look at what would have happened had the United States been on the gold standard at the beginning of the financial crisis. Gold prices have increased nearly three times since March 2007. Now keep in mind that, under a gold standard, a rise in the price of gold means the price of everything else has to fall. This means food would fall by two-thirds, wages by two-thirds and so on. But debt doesn't adjust with prices because the amount borrowed doesn't retroactively adjust with prices.

Consider real estate prices.

Home prices have declined 40 percent since their peak in March 2006. The consequence has been that nearly a quarter of mortgages have found themselves underwater. Had we been on a gold standard, home prices would have had to have fallen an additional 40 percent, that is, to 20 percent of its peak value. Could anyone think this a good idea?

Such a thing couldn't happen, you say. The adherence to the gold standard would have prevented the run-up in the first place. Perhaps so, but history doesn't support this point of view. In fact, in the 1890s, when the United States was on the gold standard, just such a run-up in the price of gold did, in fact, result in deflation – especially in agricultural prices – that made it impossible for many farmers to repay their loans. These events inspired William Jennings Bryan's "Cross of Gold" Speech.

Bryan didn't win the 1898 election; he never became president. Still, his basic point remains true. The gold standard puts the U.S. economy at risk for economic tumult.

Securities exchanges, regulators have lost their way

We need a return to fair play and integrity

Jim Spence Business Matters

In last week's column, we revealed two sets of rules for investors placing orders with the New York Stock Exchange and NASDAQ. One rule applies to high-speed trading operations willing to pay huge fees to the exchanges and the other set of rules apply to everyone else.

Two questions come to mind.

First, how do high-speed trading operations use the confidential trading information they buy to create an edge?

The answer is pretty simple. These operations have designed and continue to design sophisticated computer algorithm programs powered by expensive high-speed supercomputers.

Their programs detect and analyze order flow trends instantaneously. Being able to see and possibly trade against virtually every single order placed on every single equity security in North America milliseconds before they are executed is a license to game the system.

Unfortunately, the problem runs even deeper. High-speed trading operations deploy unscrupulous order entry and cancellation schemes constantly. Their "systems" enter and cancel orders at the speed of light all day. These deceptive tactics have become a matter of routine. A variety of scalping schemes are now embedded into our market system. These conditions cost all other market participants billions of dollars each year a few cents at a time operations willing to pay hundreds of millions of dollars each year for the rights to have "first look" at the most sensitive confidential information regarding the fundamental aspects of order flow?

The answer is many of the most powerful financial firms in the world, including many brand-name Wall Street investment firms.

These firms are paying hundreds of millions of dollars each year to be first in line. In fact, many well known national stock brokerage firms use high-speed trading operations to trade for their own accounts. Others participate through full or partial ownership in hedge funds 66 Exchanges should that engage in these activities. Still others direct order flow in such a way that it makes it easier for facilitate full disclosure, scalping operations to trade against their fair practices and capital own clients.

The ripple effects of confidential buysell order information being sold in advance to high-speed trading operations has been dramatic. There are many well-documented white papers that have estimated the extent of the systemwide damage. The extensive harm done to the U.S. economy has also been summarized in a new book called "Broken Markets."

Of course, it doesn't take a genius to realize what usually happens when integrity goes up for sale in instances where trillions of dollars are involved. Accordingly, the time has long since come for our federal government, through the SEC, to demand that all entities acting as securities exchanges conform to the primary mission of our capital markets.

High-speed trading operations should never be allowed to purchase confidential buy-and-sell order data in advance of others. Trading system servers that occupy leased space inside the nerve centers of all U.S.

stock exchanges should be disconnected and removed immediately. All stealth traders acting as de-facto market makers should be forced to obey the strict rules of conduct that apply to exchange market makers. Violators should be sent to jail for insider trading. Our securities exchanges should once again be required to facilitate full disclosure, fair practices and capital formation.

In America, we are struggling to be competitive. Investors have a diminished sense of trust in our system. Risk capital for young companies has become increasingly difficult to secure now that legalized trade scalping, rather than underwriting, has become the dominant motivation of many brokerage houses.

It is long since past the time for all investors, regulators and elected officials to speak with a single voice and demand a return to integrity and basic fair play within the very heart of our American free-enterprise system. We all deserve better than what we have now.

Human resources event Attendees will gather from southern NM

The Southern NM Society for Human Resource Management (SNM SHRM) will host the 28th annual Employment Law Update Friday, Sept. 28, at the Las Cruces Convention Center, 680 E. University Ave.

The event begins at 7:30 a.m. and will last until 5 p.m.

Attorneys from Kemp Smith will speak on a variety of relevant and timely employment law topics as well as offer a Q & A session during which human resources professionals and business leaders have the opportunity to ask those difficult legal questions.

In addition, military advisors will speak on re-employment of veterans and PTSD and National SHRM speaker Scott Ferrin will discuss "The Future of HR, What's Next for the Profession."

In between sessions and during breaks, attendees will have the opportunity to bid on silent auction items to benefit the SHRM Foundation as well as visit vendor booths and contribute to two honorable charities, the Roadrunner Food Bank and the Wounded Warrior Project.

Canned food donations to the Roadrunner Food Bank and monetary donations to the Wounded Warrior Project during this event will allow attendees to earn extra door prize tickets.

The cost for SHRM national members is $188. Public registrants pay $248 and students pay $78. The easiest and safest way to register and pay is online at www. snmshrm.org. A downloadable form is also available on the website and may be mailed with payment to P.O. Box 1028, Las Cruces, NM 88004.

Career Expo presents unique opportunities NMSU hosts employers, students

New Mexico State University's Career Services is inviting employers to participate in the 28th annual Career Expo from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday, Sept. 18-19, in the Corbett Center Student Union.

While students and employers are encouraged to attend both days, Tuesday, Sept. 18, will focus on business, agriculture, liberal arts and allied health majors while Wednesday, Sept. 19, is for engineering, science and technology majors.

Employers can choose to attend either one or both days of the event.

"We are excited to be hosting the 28th annual event and promoting employment opportunities for students, alumni and community guests," said Roseanne Bensley, associate director of NMSU's Career Services.

The Career Expo is intended for all levels of students looking for job opportunities, from internships and co-ops to professional employment. The event also will be open to the public as well as students from other schools in the region.

Currently. 90 employers are registered to attend the Expo. Interested employers can register until the day prior to the event by creating an AggieCAREER Manager account on the Career Services website, http://careerservices. nmsu.edu. Those who register after Sunday, Sept. 16 will be charged a late registration fee. Employers can also register to promote their organization and recruit candidates with the AggieCAREER Manager.

In previous years, Career Expo has had more than 100 employers and more than 2,300 candidates participating, making it the largest career fair in New Mexico and west Texas.

Students, alumni and guests can also register with AggieCAREER Manager prior to the event for additional resources to research employers, develop résumés and review in advance campus interview schedules that will take place during the Career Expo.

For more information, contact NMSU Career Services at 646-1631.

Troy Greer, chair of Quality New Mexico, speaks to attendees at the Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance Business on the Borderplex luncheon Tuesday, Sept. 4, at Hotel Encanto de Las Cruces. Quality New Mexico was established in 1993 by private business leaders and public officials seeking to develop a strategy to establish New Mexico as a quality state. Greer, who is also the CEO at Lovelace Medical Center in Albuquerque, told New Mexico success stories of organizations that had implemented systems focusing on quality.

CPA appointed to leaders academy

Beasley, Mitchell & Co. announced the appointment of Francisco Moran, CPA, to the Upstream Academy's Emerging Leaders Academy. This three-year leadership development program will give Moran the opportunity to receive enhanced tools, training and resources to his career field.

become an expert in his career field.

"I appreciate the honor of being selected to this elite group," Moran said. "Through lessons in development, I look forward to contributing new ideas to an ever-changing marketplace and preparing myself for a future management role."

The Academy was created specifically for young CPAs with a goal of being prepared for the dramatic change anticipated when thousands of business stakeholders depart for retirement. By pushing members of the program to the edge of their comfort zone, this program will develop the skills that young members of the corporate world need to step into the shoes of their managers.

BMC Partner Christine Wright, CPA, believes this program is crucial to the growth and survival of both her own organization and many others within the industry.

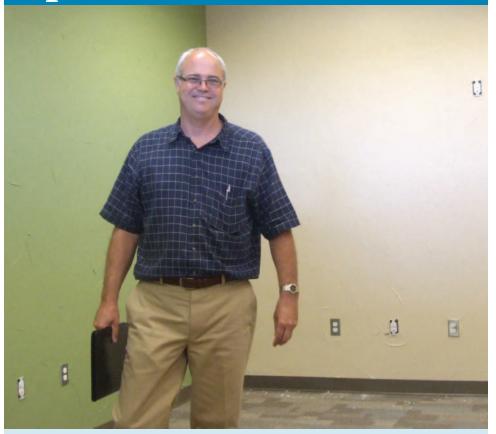

"Through my role as Moran's mentor, we will work together to assess the priorities for developing him into a confident professional with the ability to sustain our business and think out of the box for new ways to make it thrive," Wright said. "We are excited for what the future holds both in our company and throughout the business sector as a whole."

This will be Lonely Street's first stop in Las Cruces, where Shaw has partnered with the Rio Grande Theatre to stage events. Hope-fully, "Man in Black" will be the first production in a series. "My goal is to never play a city once," Shaw said, and he referenced Lonely Street's experience with Prescott, Ariz.,, as a hopeful model. Lonely Street began by performing once, but the audience response was so overwhelming, Shaw said, that "now, it's one of our hubs. We come to Prescott two times a month. I'd love to see a similar relationship with Las Cruces."

On Saturday night, Las Crucens have the opportunity to see Robert Shaw perform as a living legend. Hopefully, Johnny Cash is only the first.

More to come from Mazdra

By Nicky Pressaroff

During the day, Janet Mazdra acts as a well-respected speech therapist. At night, Mazdra just acts.

For the past 15 years, thousands of Las Crucens have watched Mazdra perform in various community theater productions, where her singing, dancing and acting abilities rivet audiences.

Most recently, Mazdra received rave revues for her just-closed one-woman show, "Shirley Valentine," about a 42-yearold woman facing the question of exactly who she is and what she wants as her children leave the home and she finds herself once again alone with her husband. The show was so popular, the Black Box Theatre extended its run time.

In regard to the title character, Mazdra said, "The audience connected like crazy to her: 'What can I do to live the life I really wanted to live?'

Mazdra has no such problems, having lived the life she always wished for. She began performing early, in her hometown of St. Louis, singing in her family's band.

Along with her parents - both musicians - she and her brother traveled around Missouri and southern Illinois performing classic country tunes.

By age 10, Mazdra was performing in community operas. As she got older, she found community theater.

'I'm a song and dance girl," Mazdra said. "I put myself through college that way."

At the same time, Mazdra pursued degrees in speech pathol-ogy. "Being a speech therapist seemed like a perfect choice for me. I understand the voice very well," she said. She practices speech pathology from her office at 505 S. Main St., but her first love remains theater.

Since her first lead role in 1997 as Ella Peterson in a Las Cruces Community Theatre production of "Bells are Ringing," Mazdra has become a ubiquitous stage presence. Her turn as Patsy Cline in "Always...Patsy Cline" is especially well remembered.

"The audience response was just huge," Mazdra said of the play, which also ran at the Black Box Theatre.

The show was a revue, with Mazdra playing Patsy Cline, singing the country star's hits from beginning of show to end. In fact, most of Mazdra's roles have been in musicals and musical revues. The role of Shirley Valentine was quite a change.

"It's the most challenging role I've ever played," Mazdra said

Shirley Valentine is a one-woman, two-act play, but the character mimics the people she talks about - from her husband to her brother to her mother. Of course, each family member speaks a different way, meaning Mazdra needed to use many different accents. No singing, no dancing, just acting.

The trend continues in her next role as Truvy in the Community Theater production of "Steel Magnolias."

"The role of Truvy is one I've wanted to play since I was 18," Mazdra said.

The play promises to be quite different from the well-known movie, in which Dolly Parton plays the beauty shop owner. The play is an all-female cast, and it limits itself to one setting, Truvy's beauty shop. Further, Mazdra's "Truvy" promises to be different from Parton's.

The director's going to do a lot of character work," Mazdra said. "I won't think, 'I want to do a Dolly Parton role.' I don't have to rely on Dolly. I'm looking forward to creating my own Truvy.'

Even when she's not acting, Mazdra remains involved with theater, choreographing the vast majority of the community theater productions, acting as a general contact person and advocate for Las Cruces productions. She has been pivotal in the general renaissance Las Cruces theater is experiencing. "I feel a lot of fulfillment," Mazdra said. "We have two times the number of season ticket holders." Still, she sees room for expansion: "We need to put on shows that bring a new, younger theater audience. Seeing something created is an amazing experience. Community theater is the only way to see that happen here. I can't imagine Las Cruces without community theater.' It's just as hard to imagine Las Cruces community theater without Janet Mazdra.

Rising country star and Mayfield High School graduate Bri Bagwell returned home from touring the nation to play a country show with her band The Banned at Hurricane Alley Thursday, Aug. 30. Her song "Whiskey" reached No. 25 on the Texas Music chart and can be heard on country music stations throughout the Southwest. Bagwell also scheduled an appearance at the Cowboys for Cancer Research golf tournament at New Mexico State University Golf Course Friday, Aug. 31.

Bulletin Advertising Works!

"The Las Cruces Bulletin's advertising and coverage of the Las Cruces Arts Fair, through the Doña Ana Arts Council, contributed to the show's success. Some 3,000 people visited the event on March 16-18. About 150 children took part in activities designed especially for youngsters. It gives us great confidence to know that the Bulletin is behind community events like this one, which gives us the momentum to plan the Las Cruces Arts Fair again next spring. We always know we can count on the Las Cruces Bulletin to promote the arts in the Las Cruces community."

Jazz and blues news

The monthly concert series held by the Mesilla Valley Jazz & Blues Society will be at 7 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 17, at First Christian Church, 1809 El Paseo Road. The series will feature jazz empress Helen Sachs and the Legends (Curt Warren, guitar; Bob Geitgey, piano; Erik Unsworth, bass; and Byron Mutnick, drums). The concert takes place following a short meeting of the Jazz & Blues Society, founded for the purpose of presenting live Jazz and Blues music. Cost is $5 for members, $8 for nonmembers and $1 for students with ID.

Helen Sachs has been in Las Cruces for well over a decade after immigrating here from Germany, where she appeared at many of the large jazz venues and studied and taught with many of the great jazz emissaries of Europe.

For more information, call Bob Burns at 525-9333.

Family story and art journeys meeting

The Las Cruces Museum of Art and the Branigan Cultural Center are merging their weekly Saturday morning family programs beginning at 11 a.m. Saturday, Sept. 8.

Saturday Morning Family Story & Art Journeys will begin at the Branigan Cultural Center at 11 a.m., where a children's book will be shared. A related art activity will immediately follow at the Museum of Art.

"We are hoping our 'regulars' will appreciate this merging of two popular family programs," said Andy Albertson, Museum of art curator of education. "We also hope to see some new faces."

Funded by the City of Las Cruces, the Las Cruces Museum of Art and the Branigan Cultural Center are located at 491 N. Main St. and 501 N. Main St., respectively.

For more information on this program, call the Museum of Art at 541-2137 or the Branigan Cultural Center at 541-2154, or visit www.las-cruces.org/museums.

El Paso gallery's artist of the month

The Hal Marcus Gallery's "Artist of the Month" series focuses on one of the gallery's artists and their latest creations. The gallery will feature a new artist each month.

The Artist of the Month for September is Francisco Romero.

Romero was born in 1958 in Juárez. At the early age of 6, he started drawing from cartoon magazines that were on display in the newspaper stands in the streets of his hometown. Painting and music was an integral part of his everyday life throughout his school years. Romero graduated from the University of Juárez, earning a bachelor's degree in interior and graphic design. Immigrating to the United States made a very significant change in his life, because he has been able to exhibit his work and mature as an artist in his own right. Many people know Romero through the artwork and subsequent prints graciously created for numerous nonprofit organizations.

Romero is well known throughout the El Paso, Juárez and Las Cruces areas. He has had successful exhibits throughout the region. His works of art are included in local, regional, national and international collections.

For more information or to see more of Romero's work, contact 915-533-9090 or www.halmarcus.com.

Tour of homes

The Annual Sunset Heights Tour of Homes & Landmarks will be held from noon to 4 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 6, in El Paso.

Eleven locations are part of this year's tour of beautiful historic homes, apartments and landmarks in the historic Sunset Heights neighborhood near downtown El Paso. Residents will open their doors to give guests a personal walk-through of these special properties. Highlights this year include Sunset Grocery, the Scottish Rite Temple and the artist Hal Marcus' home.

Funds raised go to the Sunset Heights Neighborhood Improvement Association and are used to improve neighborhood residences.

For more information, call the Hal Marcus Gallery at 915-533-9090.

Easy-going French film just what the doctor ordered

Some may relate to story told in 'Delicacy'

the perfect end-of-the-summer comic

with its own quiet

Review by Jeff Berg

"Delicacy" is an often fun, somewhat whimsical, occasionally dramatic film about a young woman, Nathalie (played by everyone's favorite from "Amelie," Audrey Tautou), whose life, of course, takes a dramatic turn after the death of her husband.

A somewhat storybook romance leads to her marriage with Francois, who dies in a rather curious accident. Completely stonewalled by grief, Nathalie turns inward to soothe herself, while making her work in an unnamed office her main form of recreation if you will.

Somber, dressed in dark, and mostly inconsolable, the story advances several years in this matter, until an act of whimsy, you might call it, starts to open her up again.

Markus, a Swedish worker, kind of a middle age schlep who dresses like your grandpa, is the recipient of an impulsive kiss from Nathalie, which, of course, causes an immediate smitten for her. A gentle pursuit is on, and while Nathalie's friends aren't quite sure about Markus, or what is going on, they can clearly see that for whatever reasons this has happened, Nathalie has awakened from her three-year emotional slumber. The only other attempt by someone to pull her out of her doldrums was by her pushy boss, also smitten with her, but his attitude and demeanor help keep the distance between the two. He later returns to try to interfere between Markus and Nathalie. The tone and the pacing of the film are just right, as are most of the performances, although Tautou's sometimes slides a bit too close to an "Amelie" reprieve. Helped by some interesting camera work and a fun score, the film holds its own. Its weaknesses, however, might lie in the story itself. It feels a bit trite at times; a smidge clichéd ... the sad, attractive woman falling in with the least likely guy, and the narromance, complete ration by each character of their own thoughts sometimes feels clumsy as well.

However, taken as a light, breezy and somewhat uplifting look at how love can often overcome loss or grief, "Delicacy" is the perfect end-of-the-summer comic romance, complete with its own quiet message. I'm enjoying numerous delicacies in Santa Fe. ...

Featured musicians: Casual Fridays Skanking to ska in Las Cruces Local band takes the train to skaville One of the band's fan-favorite covers is

By Suzanna Lester the Las Cruces Bulleti

So, you think the only dancing in town involves boots, twang and two-stepping?

Well once you feel the fast-paced, reggae-inspired rhythm of local ska band The Casual Fridays, you won't be able to resist jumping up and kicking your feet with the best of their motley audience members.

'I've seen them play a couple of times at El Patio and I just love their sound," said fan Anita Slavens. "They put on such a high-energy show with an infectious groove that makes it impossible not to dance. It's just good music.'

As their www.reverbnation.com page states, the Casual Fridays' sound stays true to First Wave Ska for the most part, but "there are elements of soul, skacore, reggae, punk and '50s American music as well as some dance-inducing cover songs.'

But, not everyone's a fan. The band has been practicing in a garage, and cranky neighbors' complaints have apparently made it downright impossible to rehearse at any time of day.

So, with the help of their new manager, Aaron Barbara, the band will be putting on a benefit show Saturday, Sept. 29, at The Green Room to raise money for rent at their new practice space at West End Art Depot (We.Ad), to be shared with other local punk rock/rockabilly band, Hometown Letdowns.

The Casual Fridays consists of current New Mexico State University students Andrew "Beave" Anaya on drums; Mike Martinez, "the crazy soloist" on trumpet; Colton Vitt, or "Mr. Punctuality" (hey, someone's got to be on time, right?) on trombone; and Anthony Pacheco on bass. Gabe Tena is the front man, lead singer and guitarist, and last but not least is alto sax player, 17-year-old high-schooler Brian Martinez.

(Martinez is) having a great time with it, he's even told me that through the band he's kind of become more open, social," Tena said. During a recent show in Cloudcroft, Martinez showed just how much he's coming out of his shell. In response to the YouTube sensation video, "Sexy Sax Man," Tena said Martinez "did the whole 'Careless Whisper' bit (originally by Wham!) and jumped off the stage ... this rodeo clown roped him up and started dancing with him!"

"I'm actually pretty envious ... (Martinez) joined the band when it was cool, not when it was a struggle to get a show, ya know?" Tena said.

Most of this fresh-faced band formed from the band hall of Mayfield High, beginning to show their combined efforts around 2004.

"It's typical with this type of music – band geeks," Tena said.

"I had some friends who liked ska and we went to see Liquid Cheese (a local ska band who's made it big). (But) we were under age."

'It's kind of embarrassing – we had to stand outside of El Patio and listen in. So, then we started our own band so we could start playing ska and get other people to listen to it."

They've hit the venues hard since then, locally and in surrounding areas, as well as laying down some scattered recordings here and there.

"We tend to do a lot of changes, going from punk rock to ska, to reggae back to 1950s ska ... We change it up as much as we can. It's great for people with ADD," Tena said.

Speaking of ADD – now available on iTunes is they're newest album, "'Nuff said!" featuring its most popular-rated tune, titled appropriately enough, "ADD."

"It kind of has a surf rock thing to it which we've never done before," Tena said. But overall, this project includes a lot of things they've "never done before." The lyrics are not just about girls this time, we take on many other subjects on the album, including the things we like and dislike about being in a band," Tena said on the band's Reverbnation page.

This change of direction can be seen in the song titled, "T.C.F."

('T.C.F.') is in 6/8 and that's a tempo we've never used ever. I hope people can hear it, but I was really inspired by Weezer because they use that (rhythm) all the time," Tena said. "The song's about ... how, at that point, we didn't really care, we just wanted to give it all away for free ... It's a good thing, but it's not. We just want our music to be out there.

["]I like 'Trust No One.' It's actually about the characters from 'The X-Files,'" Tena explained further, revealing his unorthodox writing method this time around. "When you hear the lyrics to the song, you might think it's about some girl ... but it's really about the relationship between those two characters."

"Oh, Boy" by Buddy Holly - an artist of huge influence on the band's frontrunner, Tena.

Friday, Sept. 7, happens to be the day Buddy Holly would have turned 76, if not for his fateful death in a plane crash at the age of 22.

The band recently recorded a ska cover of the Aggie Fight Song for the Las Cruces Bulletin that will be played at the upcoming football game Saturday, Sept. 22, during the debut of the Bulletin's game face commercial. The recording is now also available as a ringtone through the band's Facebook.

"People will get to see it on the big screen," Tena said.

In everything they do, The Casual Fridays show passion for the art of music and performing.

Driftwood Productions

and

The Doña Ana Arts Council

present

The Casual Fridays are emerging in Las Cruces as a reggaeinspired ska band. They will play an upcoming fundraising show to save monev for a new practice space.

In addition to creating the new menu, Kifolo authored "An American Cook Travels," a 2009 book about his travels and the recipes he collected along the way.

Kifolo also works with NMSU students to create individualized meal plans, sometimes due to preferences or allergies.

"Fifteen years ago, I was working at a private banquet house, and I started having a lot more customers asking for vegan options," he said, explaining how he began to work on vegan dishes.

The options available at The Wild Mushroom, Taos' vegan station, are probably "more substantial" than what people are used to tasting when they eat yegan, he said

Although the zucchini pasta was my personal favorite, I also sampled vegan, gluten-free French toast, which I thought went terrifically with Kifolo's vegan, lactose-free chocolate pudding (I was surprised to find out was made with avocado). According to Miner, the

"We're taking it from a cafeteria to a dining center," she said. "It's worth the wait."

"(Taos' remodeling) is just one more thing that demonstrates that this is a top-notch institute," Weber

My advice to students is to give yourselves enough time to dine at Taos, if you plan on stopping by. I made the mistake of going between classes, which wasn't enough time to sample many of the items I wanted to try.

If you aren't an NMSU student or faculty, I recommend avoiding the lunchtime rush.

The price for nonstudents are $5.75 for breakfast, $7.50 for lunch and $7.75 for dinner.

Review by Todd G. Dickson Las Cruces Bulletin

If you checked out the recent White Sands International Film Festival, you may have had the opportunity to check out Cesar Alejandro's serious 2005 film "Juarez: Stages of Fear."

Alejandro now brings a new independent movie from the other end of the emotional spectrum. "Da Pinche Code" is a fast-paced, broad farce gently skewering the way movies portray Hispanics and Latino culture.

What's the plot? Ese, you want plot! Well, "Da Pinche Code" has about four of them that I could count. The movie employs the storytelling technique championed by filmmakers such as Quentin Tarantino and Alejandro González Iñárritu in which multiple stories cut back-and-forth until the characters eventually all end up at the same place, usually at the climactic ending. But that's about as cerebral as "Da Pinche Code" gets, though there are plenty of subtle jabs thrown throughout the movie.

One plot involves a mafia kingpin (Angel Salazar) who is in trouble with his godfather and has to sacrifice "blood of his own blood" and doesn't want to sacrifice his lovely daughter. Salazar is a hoot, giving a very good Al Pacino imitation, which is part of the spoof of the movie. For years, Hollywood often has had Italian actors play Hispanics, so Alejandro made a point to have a mafia tale with Latinos playing all the Italians.

El Paso filmmaker Cesar Alejandro stands next to a movie poster for "Da Pinche Code."

But right away there are some other stories bouncing around. There is a trio of stoners – a clear send-up of the Cheech and Chong movies – who are looking for the "Da Pinche Code" in the murals of El Paso, when they aren't consuming drugs or tacos.

Then there's a wealthy-pampered-son-ofa-rich-father (Christian Moldes) who must find his long-lost mother and half-brother or lose his inheritance, which sends him on a journey into the barrio and fending off the "terror" of becoming a Mexican with his reflection sometimes morphing into him wearing a sombero and mustache.

Meanwhile, in a warehouse, Alejandro and his real-life son Oscar Ruben Zamora are trying to make some kind of action movie about rival gangs who are financed by a shady guy, and Zamora is forced to use his girlfriend in the filming. But the "blondie" mainly succeeds in sleeping with the whole film crew, except Alejandro.

Interjecting in the filming of the movie is a "documentary" film crew from the All-In-One Technical College that trains filmmakers, beauticians and an assortment of other disparate occupations.

By the way, Zamora is a product of New Mexico State University's Creative Media Institute, and a number of CMI students participated in making the movie.

Throughout, there are a bunch of asides and mini-plots, such as a boozing medical examiner and such, as well as a cameo from Don "The Dragon" Wilson, the only real "star" in the film.

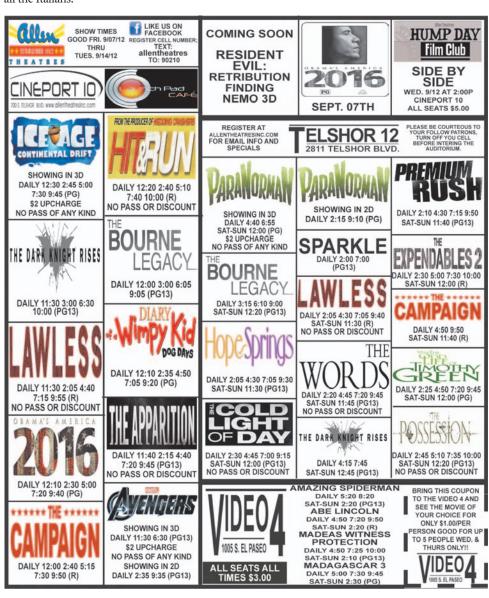

The movie is really a pastiche of genreinspired vignettes. (Three French words used to describe a Latino film doesn't seem right, does it?) The editing can sometimes be a little too frenzied and the first part of the movie was a little heavy on subtitles telling jokes, though subtitles informing viewers that the narco bad guys had suddenly started speaking in English was a nice touch. Occasionally, some obscure sound effects were more annoying than pointed satire.

There are running gags throughout, such as the words on one character's T-shirt always changing. There are also a lot of inside jokes about making movies on a shoestring – which was the case for the estimated $350,000 budget of "Da Pinche Code."

But all the characters were parodied sympathetically. Alejandro and Zamora shoot scenes that portray great affection for the city of El Paso – from the Zebra strip club scenes to hubcaps used for barrio fencing. Stereotypes include the machismo attitude that has most of the women prancing around in bikinis with high heels, but none of these scenes really go beyond "cheesecake" exposure.

All-in-all, it's a fun movie appealing to primarily to a Latino audience that has grown up watching their culture narrowly portrayed giving them an opportunity to laugh at the stereotypes and clichés.

Las Cruces Bulletin

It's time to break out the pink and prepare for a September full of events supporting breast cancer research and awareness.

The 2012 New Mexico State Aggies Are Tough Enough to Wear Pink theme is "Tough Love," which Rick Nezzer, TETWP's spokesperson and organizer, said brings together two aspects of the disease.

"Tough love reflects the two sides of TETWP, being tough enough to deal with it and the love, care and attention (required) to get through it and become a survivor," Nezzer said.

Pink week is set for the last week in September and will include dinners, auctions, the NMSU Pink football game, a luncheon, a fashion show and other events to raise money and awareness

The beginning of October will also see some pink action with several high schools scheduling their own Pink football games, as well as the Cowboys for Cancer Research cook-off, dinner/dance and silent auction, roping event and more.

A full list of events can be found at www. pinkaggie.com

Now in its sixth year, the NMSU Aggies Are Tough Enough to Wear Pink is the highest fundraising TETWP worldwide. Partnering with the C4CR has assisted in bringing greater visibility to the cause and allowed for the nonprofit status to ensure all proceeds go to support cancer research.

C4CR is in its 30th year as an organization and sixth year partnering with TETWP. Together, the first-ever golf scramble was organized to kick off of TETWP.

"The golf tournament was a tremendous success," Nezzer said.

The tournament raised funds to help meet the C4CR/TETWP goal of raising $1 million in 2012 for endowment funds for the University of New Mexico Cancer Center and NMSU cancer research. Proceeds are divided between the two universities to keep the funding in New Mexico and contribute to cancer research conducted in the state.

"It's the largest fundraising event in New Mexico," said Denny Calhoun, co-executive director of C4CR. "All the money raised stays in the state."

Less stuff equals more joy

Julie Maager Caring Decisions

Whether you are a retiree downsizing your home or just wanting a life with less clutter, the current trend toward a minimalist approach to our homes is a welcome relief from the accumulation of "stuff" garnered in stronger economic times.

Living with less – which folks from past generations did out of necessity – has come into vogue. It's been said that if an item isn't useful or beautiful to you, it should go. But just where should it go? Here are some good options to consider:

Re-purposing. Re-purposing is finding new uses for items you already have. Could those seldom-used serving bowls be used to help corral toiletries in your bathroom cabinet? Maybe that abandoned fishing pole could serve as a kitschy curtain rod in your grandson's room. Orphaned salad forks make great seed packet holders to mark those rows of carrots and marigolds.

Pink

In 2011, C4CR/TETWP raised $956,000 in cash and in-kind goods and services. Calhoun said over the years, the group's goal has always been to top the previous year, but getting so close to $1 million last year motivated them to aim high this year.

"This community is phenomenal," Calhoun said. "The support we've received - we're grateful and humble. It's hard to imagine that (the community) does so much.'

Nezzer not only cites the community support for TETWP's success, but those who organize the events each year, which has kept him passionate about the cause.

"TETWP has found a home in Las Cruces," Nezzer said. "It's the energy, passion of the co-chairs, volunteers and committees and their support that keeps me involved."

Event planning begins in January and those involved work to organize the events throughout most of the year. "Every year, another business and organization participates," Nezzer said. "Ever year there is more involvement and more excitement.'

The huge community response is not a surprise to Calhoun.

What makes it so easy for people to be passionate about this cause is that it is virtually impossible to find someone who has not been touched by cancer," he said.

Together, TETWP and C4CR work to combat this devastating disease through awareness and funding the research necessary to find a cure.

Cancer touches everybody at some point in their lives," Nezzer said.

And those frayed rubber-ducky-themed bathroom towels? They make great rags. With a little creative thinking, you can find all kinds of new uses for your excess items.

- Recycling. Recycling generally means passing along unused items so they can be reused (or refurbished for reuse) by someone else. The idea is to keep them out of landfills. From single-use batteries to exercise equipment, there are lots of options. Most locations offer recycling programs for paper, cardboard, glass, certain plastics and metals. Check with your local municipality for a collection date for that dusty rose paint and those half-used household chemicals, batteries and tires. Electronics can often be traded in when you purchase newer items.
- Selling or donating. Selling or donating allows someone else to find new treasures in your former treasures. The dress that shrank on the hanger (uh-huh), the unidentified object from Aunt Katrina or the St. Bernard dog collar that doesn't fit the new chihuahua are all good candidates to offer at your own yard sale, church/school/community rummage sale, consignment shop (where you pay a percentage to the store for helping you sell your merchandise) or donation center. Not all donation centers, however, are equal. Some use the merchandise for rehabilitation or other charitable purposes (such as Goodwill or Mesilla Valley Habitat for Humanity's ReStores); others simply sell the items for a profit. Charitable centers offer gift receipts based on the estimated the value of your donations for tax deductions. You can also cyber-sell or cyber-trade. Websites such as Ebay, Etsy and Craigslist offer broad audiences for your unwanted items. You can even barter or exchange items online. Now, sit back and enjoy your uncluttered home with a frosty lemonade in that useful and beautiful glass.

Positive psychology is a relatively new field of psychology. According to the Positive Psychology Center, this concept studies the strengths and virtues that enable a person to thrive. There are three key concepts – positive individual traits, positive emotions and positive institutions.

The exciting goals for positive psychology are families and schools that are successful; workplaces that foster worker satisfaction and high productivity; communities that encourage civic engagement; and therapists that identify and nurture patients' strengths.

Celiac disease (CD), also known as celiac sprue or gluten-sensitive enteropathy, is a genetically linked autoimmune disorder that can affect both children and adults. In people with CD, eating certain types of grain-based products sets off an immune response that causes damage to the small intestine. This, in turn, interferes with the small intestine's ability to absorb nutrients found in food, leading to malnutrition and a variety of other complications. The offending amino acid sequences are collectively called "gluten" and are found in wheat, barley, rye, and to a lesser extent, oats (WBRO). Related proteins are found in triticale, spelt, kamut. Without adequate nutrition, malnutrition and a variety of other related complications become apparent. Celiac Disease is an inherited disease. Celiac disease affects those with a genetic predisposition.

Life warrior psychology is the combination of these two types of psychology. You will not be surprised to discover that these are the lessons learned from American history. It is the successful concept of life - American rugged individualism. Additionally, if you study and embrace the concepts of American history you will maximize your opportunities for a successful and fruitful life.

Honor World Community Day

Peace Village focus of Church Women United event

By Beth Sitzler Las Cruces Bulletin

Church Women United, an ecumenical organization of women of various faiths, will hold an event open to the public with the intention to examine the needs of the Las Cruces community.

World Community Day will be celebrated at 9:30 a.m. Friday, Sept. 14, at First Christian Church, 1809 El Paseo Road.

"World Community Day is a day that has been celebrated for quite a few years with Church Women United," said Sue Kane, president of the local Church Women United group. "The idea is to try to look at issues that are important to the community."

Each World Community Day has a different theme, which looks at a different aspect of the community, such as social or economic issues.

"We want to create a supportive community that is a good place for one to live," Kane said. "And we see the world as a community. It goes beyond just the local community."

This year, the theme is "Sounds and Sights of Harmony," and the focus of the Las Cruces celebration will be Peace Village, an interfaith, multicultural day camp for children. The mission of Peace Village is to provide an environment that allows campgoers to learn the message and practices of nonviolence and peacemaking from various world traditions.

"We see Peace Village as something that helps create an understanding in young people of what community is," Kane said. "And it connects them to the world."

During the World Community Day service, representatives from Peace Village will talk about the program and how it has grown throughout the years. Refreshments and fellowship will follow the service.

Also during the celebration, Church Women United will collect various items to be donated through its programs and committees. Donated diapers, grooming items for all ages, new clothing for children and new and gently used clothing for adults will be collected to benefit the Family Service committee.

The Fathers as Readers Program is requesting donated new and gently used children's book as well as funds for instructional materials on parenting for fathers. The program provides the materials to fathers in prison so they can read with their children when they visit, Kane said.

Church Women United holds three events a year. The following event will be its Human Rights Celebration, held at 9:30 a.m. Nov. 16 at a location to be determined.

For more information, call Kane at 647-8250.

Don't shrug off the warning signs Battling the lingering heat, humidity your way through," Sun said. While it is important to stay hydrated,

By Lorena Sanchez

Labor Day may mark the unofficial end of summer for most people, but don't be fooled. Despite some breaks from the heat with the rain and cloudy skies, the high temperatures tend to linger – not to mention the humidity.

With back-to-school season in full swing, sports are front and center as athletic programs gear up to compete, marching band gets underway and physical education classes begin the push to get students active.

With these and other outdoor activities it is important to be mindful of the heat, and take the necessary measures to stay cool and hydrated,

Heat risks can range from something as simple as a sunburn to heatstroke, said Dr. Eugene Sun, chief medical officer at Blue Cross Blue Shield of New Mexico. The body has to cool itself. The hotter it is and the more humid it is, the harder it is for the body to cool itself."

Signs of heat-related illness include severe thirst, light-headedness, dizziness, cramps and nausea.

One way to avoid the effects of heat is to hydrate prior to going out into the heat and undetaking physical activity, Sun said.

"It can sneak up on you quickly, so you can't let it get to that point," Sun said. "Take two or three gulps every so often."

Young children and the elderly are most prone to the negative effects of the heat, but individuals with chronic illness and high blood pressure can also have severe reaction to the heat.

"There's a lot of understanding with schools and coaching staff of the dangers related to heat," Sun said. "Kids need frequent breaks and need to drink water."

There is, however, a certain sense of invincibility, Sun said, that can get in the way of students taking care of themselves.

"Heat is not something you can work it is also important to rest, he added.

'Staying hydrated is important, but there's a certain point where you can have strain on your body and cardio vascular system," Sun said. "Acknowledge the warning signs and rest - preferably inside where it's cool. People do die of heat stroke and exhaustion. I sometimes get this sense of a macho attitude. Do not shrug off the warning signs - it can be very dangerous."

Dressing appropriately can also ward off some of the risks associated with being outside in the in heat.

"It's always good to use sunscreen and wear long, light, cool clothing that will protect your skin from the sun's UV light," Sun said.

Another recommendation for those with a more flexible schedule is to work out at cooler times of day - early morning, late afternoon and the evening - to counteract the negative effects of the heat.

Home reflects the wonders of the area Abundance of natural light, scenic views just some of its features

By Beth Sitzler

Cruces Bulleti

Diamondback Drive is a scenic cul-de-sac in the Las Alturas area that features a variety of picturesque residences amid the brush, including one that combines contemporary Southwest elements with a Mediterranean flair.

The home at 5279 Diamondback Drive was built in 1995, and became home to Ruth and Robert Cantrell about two years later. The couple was drawn to the home for a number of reasons, its ideal location being one of them.

'It's a nice location," said Ruth Cantrell, a former professor with the New Mexico State University Department of Theatre Arts. "It was close to the university and it was really easy to get to the highway. Plus, it's a quiet neighborhood."

While the location fit the couple's needs, it was its style that really captured them.

The home had a nice curb appeal," Cantrell said.

The gravel driveway loops around the front of the home. Native plants surround most of the .92-acre property and shows off the beauty of the New Mexico desert. Cantrell said all of the neighbors on the cul-de-sac agreed to leave most of the natural landscaping intact.

"We did it so when you drive up, everyone has their own vard, but we all left a lot of that natural landscaping," she said. 'It's nice because we have quail and jack rabbits and doves.'

The exterior of the home features a Mediterranean style with square elements and a red tile roof. The red roof offers a bright contrast to the tan façade. Inside, the home's architecture reflects more of a contemporary Southwest fashion.

Through the large wood door, the foyer welcomes guests with 22-foot-tall ceilings. The foyer opens up to a sitting area. This area includes numerous windows - in a variety of shapes and sizes – that bring in an abundance of natural light.

'We wanted something that was open and bright," she said. "This home is all of that."

Offering light and scenery, the formal sitting area is one of Cantrell's favorite areas of the home.

"At dawn or dusk, it's lovely what the light does in there," she said.

The hardwood floors of the foyer and sitting room lead past a half bathroom near the entrance and transition into tile as guests enter the living room. The living room also features tall ceilings and a plenty of natural light. Canned lighting is scattered across the ceiling of the room, which includes a built-in entertainment center. Beside the entertainment center, in the corner of the room, is a kiva-inspired fireplace.

The living room opens to the kitchen. Through a window in the kitchen is a view of the Organ Mountains. A T-shaped island placed in the center of the room features a stovetop. In recent years, the Cantrells replaced the appliances as well as the countertops. The countertops have a brownish hue, speckled with a variety of colors, which complements the wood cabinets. Between the living room and kitchen, set back behind an arch, is the dining room. The room was designed to be a private space, but still remains open to the other shared living spaces. The dining room includes the home's intercom. A wall with numerous windows slightly bows out and brings the view of the lush backvard indoors.

Down a hall from the shared living space is an enclosed porch. The Cantrells enclosed the area to provide more indoor space. "The enclosed porch makes a nice office area," Cantrell said.

The room features its own heating and cooling system. Thanks to the closet in the room, it can also be used as another bedroom.

A door in the enclosed porch leads to the exterior of the home as well as a spiral, iron staircase. The staircase leads to a veranda on top of the 2,335-squre-foot home and features a view that extends from the Organ and Tortugas mountains to the valley.

Continuing down the hall is the master suite. The bedroom was designed with another kiva-inspired fireplace, however, the couple had it enclosed and transformed into a large nicho with shelves for storage. It can be converted back into a fireplace, if desired.

Past the walk-in closet is the bathroom, which features double sinks, a separate shower shut behind a glass door and a bathtub in the corner. Tile surrounds the bathtub, which is located near a window.

The home's two additional bedrooms are located on the other side of the fover. To make the rooms cozier, the Cantrells added carpet to them.

While the Cantrells made changes here and there throughout the home, one element they didn't mess with was the radiant heating. Located in the floors throughout the home, except in the enclosed porch, the radiant heating is a luxury the couple has become accustomed to.

The radiant heat is wonderful in the winter," Cantrell said. 'And our dogs like it. It's comfortable for them.'

A small backyard, surrounded by a rock wall, departs from the desert landscape of the property and features grass and greenery. The tiled porch gives residents an area to enjoy the scenic surroundings.

Since restoration work began on Phillips Chapel CME Church in 2010, project organizers have depended on the efforts of volunteers throughout the community – far and wide.

With several community members throughout the state stepping up to the plate, offering their expertise and time, the project is nearing completion.

We couldn't restore the church without the help of our dedicated volunteers," said Beth O'Leary, a New Mexico State University anthropology professor and member of the Phillips Chapel Restoration Committee. "It seems like when we needed an expert, they appeared to help us."

The major focus of the restoration of the 100-year-old, one-room structure on Tornillo Street has been the adobe walls. John Hyndman, a volunteer with the project for about two years, said work on the Hudson said he had some wood-working experience thanks to his grandfather, a French immigrant who was a furniture maker in Albuquerque. Having received the fabrication drawing of the armrest, he reached out to his brother, Cyril, to help him with the project.

"He leapt at the opportunity," said Hudson, who presented his brother's completed work to the restoration team earlier this year.

A project that has fascinated those around the entire state, the restoration effort shows the community's dedication to preserving and celebrating its history.

'I just always have loved historic houses and historic neighborhoods," Fulton said. "They each have their own identity and characteristics and history. You walk about neighborhoods like the Mesquite and railroad (areas) and they're so unique."

Fulton said she hopes that when the restoration project is completed, Phillips Chapel will return to its former glory as a religious structure and community center for all.

'I think the project is a tribute to Clarence Fielder's grandparents and what they did and is a tribute to the volunteers who have been willing to step up," Fulton said. "It's important not to let these buildings disappear."

With volunteers meeting at the church every Wednesday evening, the Phillips Chapel team has set a goal to finish the project by the end of the year.

"One of the last things we'll do is redo the floors," Hyndman said. "There probably will be other stuff that occurs to us as time goes by."

Tour features winning combination

Art and gardening are the focus of annual Picacho Hills event By Beth Sitzler

Art and gardening will come together once more during the fifth annual Art in the Garden Tour, held from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 16, throughout Picacho Hills.

A combined effort of the Gardeners of Picacho Hills and the Artists of Picacho Hills, the tour began as a way for neighborhood residents to get to know one another and visit different area gardens.

"It started out as a way for gardeners to visit other gardens and talk to other gardeners," said tour participant Steve Bailey, who added that many of the gardeners were also Artists of Picacho Hills members and decided to add artwork to the mix. "It worked out really well. Some people came to look only at the gardens, some people came mainly for the art and some people came for both.

As the event grew in popularity, organizers decided to open the event to the general public in 2011. Spreading word throughout Las Cruces and the surrounding area, organizers were surprised by the enormous turnout.

"We had more than 600 people last year," Bailey said. "It easily doubled or tripled what we would normally have."

This year, the tour will feature six gardens and showcase the work of about 20 members of the Artists of Picacho Hills.

There will be at least three artists in each garden," Bailey said. "Each artist comes up with new stuff each year."

The artwork on display and up for sale will span a range of media, including oil paintings, watercolors, gourd art, metal sculptures, glass pieces and "paintings" created from ceramic by Renate Muller, Bailey said.

The gardens featured will also vary in aesthetics.

"There is a good variety," Bailey said.

Stops include a backyard that features plantings surrounding a swimming pool and spectacular views of the Organ Mountains and Picacho Peak; a flower garden inspired by those found in Portland, Org.; and a garden designed to show off the owner's metal sculptures, to name a few.

There is also a first year garden," Bailey said. "It lets people see how a first year garden is laid out. What's interesting is you go down some steps, and there is a more mature garden. It shows both worlds.

Not just involved in the organization of the tour, Bailey will also be featured on it - as an artist and homeowner.

A photographer who creates digital art with Photoshop, Bailey was involved with the tour through the Artists of Picacho Hills, an organization he joined to meet his neighbors and talk about art.

"Three years ago, they asked me if I could be a back-up garden," he said. "At the last minute, someone backed out, so mine was in.

"I enjoyed sharing and talking about my garden with people. People come out and ask questions and look for ideas to do in their own garden.'

Bailey's 1.5-acre garden will once again be featured on the tour, however, it has been completely redone since the last time it was showcased.

Art in the Garden will take visitors on a tour of Picacho Hills from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 16.

"It's like a new garden," he said.

Bailey describes his garden as natural and desert-like, thanks to his abundance of cactus and local plants, as well as imported plants that can take the area's winters and extreme heat.

With this being the second year the tour is open to the general public, a large turnout is expected, Bailey said, adding that it is a great way to introduce Picacho Hills to those unfamiliar with the neighborhood.

"Picacho Hills is a unique area for gardeners," he said. "It's on the side of a hill and there is a lot of gravel. It's tough to get things to grow, but this tour shows the many ways this can be accomplished.'

Those attending the event can pick up a tour map from the tent that will be set up in the commercial complex that houses Ump 88. "They'll give them the map and they can go on their way,"

Bailey said.

Getting to know: Positive Energy Inc. Positive Energy moves Downtown

Solar company outgrows its location thanks to word of mouth

By Beth Sitzler Las Cruces Bulletin

When Mark Westbrock founded Positive Energy Las Cruces, his goal was simple: to provide the local community with the an alternative way to power their homes and lives.

"I started the Las Cruces office in 2006 because I wanted to bring the benefits of solar to my community," he said.

Solar wasn't always at the forefront of Westbrock's mind. Before establishing the company, he was working on his Ph.D. in biology in the Galapagos Islands.

"He realized he didn't want to do theoretical work, he wanted to do real work," said Positive Energy Inc. Chief Executive Officer Regina Wheeler.

He came back to New Mexico and learned about Positive Energy, one of the state's only solar company at the time, Wheeler said. The company was out of Santa Fe, and Westbrock talked to the owners about bringing the company to Las Cruces.

When Westbrock began Positive Energy in the City of the Crosses, he operated it out of his home on Melendres Street and his only help came from his wife, Theresa.

A year later, Westbrock hired a staff and moved to its location at 2050 W. Las Cruces Ave. "It was from word of mouth," Wheeler said.

"We've grown 30 percent per year ever since we opened. It's been rapid growth."

One contribution to the growth of the company is their crews. Wheeler said the solar installers are North American Board of Certified Energy Practitioners certified.

"We really believe in people who know what they are doing with solar," Wheeler said.

Because of the increase in business, Wheeler was brought on board the Positive Energy team in 2011.

"The company grew so much, the three founders (Mark and Theresa Westbrock and Randy Sadewic in Santa Fe) had too much to manage," Wheeler said. Wheeler earned her bachelor's degree in electrical engineering from the University of New Mexico and a master's degree in environmental engineering from New Mexico State University.

After obtaining her master's degree, she worked in solid waste for 10 years, before dedicating herself to sustainability issues. Working in the public sector took her around the state and introduced her to a variety of community members, including the Westbrocks.

Wheeler was recruited to work for Positive Energy and she joined the team because she identified with the values of the company, she said.

"They're a value-driven company and that was something I was excited about and wanted to further," she said. "We're known not only as an excellent service provider, but also as a new kind of company, one that cares about its employees and its community."

Wheeler said Positive Energy offices are located across New Mexico – in Albuquerque, Las Cruces, Taos and Santa Fe, which also is the location for the company's showroom and the state's only electric car charging station. Each office is connected, but locally directed.

"We have a huge number of installations across the state," Wheeler said. "There have been more than 600 across the state, and more than 300 in the region."

Wheeler said the core of Positive Solar's business is residential.

"We make beautiful installations," she said. "It's important to us that they're beautiful."

In addition to installing roof panels and other solar devices to houses, the company has several commercial customers, including High Desert Brewery and Sierra Vista Growers in southern New Mexico.

"I am deeply honored that so many people have chosen Positive Energy Solar to provide them with affordable, safe and beautiful solar for their homes and businesses," Mark Westbrock said. Thanks to its reputation in the Las Cruces community, the Positive Energy team will soon relocate to a new, more spacious location at 510 S. Main St. Originally the home of Mutual Building and Loan, the building was built in the 1960s and has seen a variety of occupants, including a call center for Wells Fargo, a gym and Victory Outreach Church.

Wheeler said they signed a lease for the 9,200-square-foot, two-story facility about three months ago. The owners – Randy Mc-Millan, Louis Edwards, Walter Skowronski and Tim Curry – are currently doing extensive remodeling work to make the structure more suitable for the company.

"They're investing in local solar and Downtown," Wheeler said. "We were bursting at the seams. This will be perfect. It's just the right size for us."

After being remodeled, the building will include offices for the 15 Positive Energy employees, a showroom and a warehouse. The upstairs will be converted into a space that will be sublet to an interested business, Wheeler said.

Wheeler said Tim Curry Construction LLC, which is performing the remodeling, is making extensive improvements in the building's energy efficiency. This includes replacing a 50ton heating and cooling unit the size of a semi trailer that resided on the roof with a smaller, smarter 14.5-ton unit.

"The owners wanted to go solar, so they're having a 12-kilowatt system installed," Wheeler said.

Positive Energy will move into the building the last weekend in September and will hold a ribbon cutting in October, Wheeler said.

Wheeler said the company's move will help contribute to the revitalization of Downtown. This is an example of the priority the company places on helping the community.

"Mark and Theresa really are part of this community," Wheeler said. "All of the employees are. They're on boards and help organizations. They live here.

"We sponsor of a lot of different things. We support different aspects of the community."

In addition to being members of the local chambers of commerce and various industry organizations, Positive Energy belongs to New Mexico Solar Energy Association, which provides free solar panel installation to schools and other nonprofits to train those interested in solar.

Wheeler said they held such a workshop for the Habitat for Humanity organization in Alamogordo to train its contractors on how to install solar onto the affordable homes.

Down Tashiro Drive, off Valley Drive, work continues on Robledo Ridge development, which aims to be the first LEED platinum multi-family development in the state of New Mexico.

The 71-unit project, a partnership between New Mexico Housing Corporation and Mesilla Valley Public Housing Authority, first came about in 2010, with work beginning Jan. 1.

"We applied for (the low-income tax credit program provided by New Mexico Mortgage Finance Au-thority) in 2011," said Thomas Hassell, executive director of New Mexico Housing Corporation. "We're shooting for it to be completed by the end of December, but we're hoping we'll get it done sooner than that."

The project entails the construction of new housing units and extensive revamping of old units. The 61-unit Robledo Ridge development was originally built in 1978 as a Section 8 new housing construction project funded by the U.S. Department of Hous-ing and Urban Development.

"The units, in my opinion, were constructed relatively poorly," Hassell said. "There was very little insulation and they used flat roofs. There was quite a bit of rehabilitation over the years.

A unusual feature of the development was its large amount of open space.

'That was a blessing and a curse," said Hassell, adding that the space has allowed them to add 11 new units to the development.

"One of the original units had to be completely demolished. ... There are 71 units total."

A unique aspect of the development is that it will feature a combination of subsidized units – the original 60 – that will feature reduced rents and regular, market-rate units the 11 new units.

Hassell said they get LEED points for featuring mixed incomes in the development, but that wasn't the only motivation to combine affordable and market rate housing.

"We're changing the community here, we want it to be a much more integrated economic area," he said, adding that often times affordable housing developments get a bad rap.

A "substantial rehabilitation," the existing units are being stripped and gutted, Hassell said.

> "There won't be much left of (the units)," he said. "Just a few stud walls.

> The units, which range from one to five bedrooms, will be constructed with energy-efficient materials, such as low-e windows. They are being redesigned to provide more space for occupants to live as well as architectural details, including clerestory windows, to make them "more than a box," Hassell said.

> "It's a complete transfor-mation," said Tom Andrews, CEO of Thomas Development Group, the developer of the project with the New Mexico Housing Corporation. "We're adding kitchen units and expanding living areas."

By making the homes en-ergy efficient, residents will pay less on their utility bills, Hassell said, explaining that the housing authority pays the utility bills for those in the affordable housing units.

"In this case, everyone wins," he said. "The government pays less and those who are market rate pay less.

Hassell said the homes also are being designed so they can be adapted to meet American Disability Act requirements.

"We've pulled out all of the stops," said Hassell, adding that all waste produced during the project is going to be recycled, which isn't

Work on the development, which includes renovating 60 existing units and adding 11 new units, began in January and is expected to be completed by the end of the year, if not sooner.

This home in the Robledo Ridge development, originally built in 1978, has been gutted and stripped and will be rebuilt to LEED platinum certification.

only environmentally friendly, but earns LEED points.

In addition to the units, the community center of the development is being replaced, providing residents with a place to meet, be cial and do laundry.

The area surrounding the units is also getting a facelift.

There are no overhead power lines inside the perimeter of the development," said Hassell, explaining that they were removed and replaced with underground electricity by El Paso Electric Co. "That clears up the interior."

In addition, the roadways of the development have been torn up by the City of Las Cruces to replace the metal gas lines with a more efficient plastic variety of infrastructure.

Later in the project, the landscaping will be redone to feature xeriscaping elements, Hassell said.

Among the construction and torn up roadways, residents still reside in the Robledo Ridge development.

"The housing authority allowed vacancy through attrition, so they didn't fill a unit when someone moved out," Hassell said.

The biggest challenge has been working with the existing families who live here," Andrews said. "But we made a commitment to them and I think it is working quite well."

With 45 families still living on site, the first rotation of families moving into completed units - so work on the old units can begin took place over the Labor Day weekend. Hassell said three to four phases of this vacancy-andoccupancy rotation will need to take place.

Mellow Honek Living Better Solar Powered

Do you know how to calculate the "hidden" solar savings in your electric bill? The trick to figuring out the total savings on your bill is to remember there are two programs from which photovoltaic users benefit. Both programs are itemized in separate boxes on electric bills.

The first program is labeled one of two ways, "New Mexico - Small System Renewable Energy Certificate Purchase" or "New Mexico - Medium System Renewable Energy Certificate Purchase." These Renewable Energy Certificate Purchase programs are very similar to each other, so for the purposes of this article we'll refer to them interchangeably as the REC program. It is this REC program that pays you for every kilowatt hour generated by your solar PV system. The REC is a powerful bonus and helps pay off your PV system quickly.

The second program is labeled on your bill as "New Mexico - Purchased Power for Residential Service." Let's call it "Purchased Power" for simplicity. This is the is the direct savings you get by using the electricity you made, rather than buying it from El Paso Electric Co.

Confusion about the savings arises because only the REC program is clearly detailed on your electric bill. Yet just some simple math is required to calculate the value of the savings you receive in the Purchased Power section.

Before we get started calculating the savings you receive, I'd like to explain what's happening. When your system generates electricity it goes one of two places. It is either sent back up the line to El Paso Electric or you consume it in your home. When you consume the electricity generated by your PV system, you avoid purchasing it from El Paso Electric. The value of those consumed "home generated" kilowatt hours is equal to the price you would have paid had you purchased them from El Paso Electric.

Now that we are clear on the two different programs, Purchased Power and REC, let's take a look at how we determine their combined value when evaluating an electric bill. Please note, in the sample bill shown with this article, the REC program is listed first and the Purchased Power is listed second. It is possible their positions are reversed on your bill, so reference them by name rather than position on the bill.

Let's tackle the REC first. You simply take the dollar amount shown in the lower right corner of the REC section - $57.84 in the sample - and we are done with the first step. We will be using "482," the number of kilowatt hours shown in this REC section, to help determine the value of the savings in Purchased Power section.

Now, you're ready to calculate the savings your PV system delivered on the Purchased Power section. Since the sample bill shows non-summer rates that is the rate we will use in this example. We only need to know two things to complete the calculation: How much electricity did we generate, and what is the price of that electricity?

Confusion about the savings arise because only the REC program is clearly detailed on your electric bill.

The number of kilowatt hours generated by your system can be found in the REC section of your bill on the bottom line. In the sample bill, the REC kilowatt-hours are shown as 482 kWhs. To calculate the price, you can use 12 cents for a winter value and 13 cents for a summer value rather than get bogged down with all the rate plus taxes, fees etc. listed in the purchased power section. Let's put it all together:

REC = $57.84 Purchased power 482 x 12¢ = $57.84 Total savings = $115.68

That's all there is to it. Just use the number of kilowatt hours shown in the REC section and multiply it by the cost of electricity to reconstruct your missing savings information.

So, now you can see how combining the REC and the Purchased Power savings is truly powerful. Armed with this new information on how much you actually are saving, I hope it puts a smile on your face.

Shampoo and its many uses Hair care is just one of its great wonders

By Beth Sitzler

Las Cruces Bulletin

No matter if you're a man or woman, young or old, there is most likely a bottle of shampoo sitting in your shower.

Shampoo, a luxury around for centuries, comes in a variety of formulas, each promising to give you that look you've dreamed of. Want your frizzy locks to be straight or your straight locks to have more bounce? There is a shampoo for you. It's not magic – it's science.

When it comes to shampoo, the great debate is over how often you should wash your hair. Many believe you shouldn't wash your hair every day, but rather a few times a week, because the chemicals will strip your hair of its natural oils, causing more problems. Others, however, argue that modern day shampoo formulas are gentle enough to be used every day.

Whatever your preference, it's likely your conditioner will run out before your shampoo. When this happens, often times a new pair is purchased and that old bottle of shampoo is tucked inside a cabinet never to be used again.

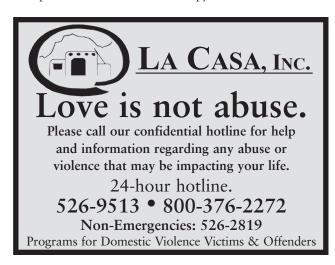

Instead of letting that extra shampoo go to waste, use it around your house.

1. Care for old leather: As time passes, your valuable leather shoes or purses can become worn and lose their luster. Rather than purchasing expensive oils and concoctions that promise to restore your leather items, get some shampoo. Dab a small amount of shampoo on a clean rag and rub the haircare product into the leather, using a circular motion. The color and shine will come back to your belonging, plus the shampoo will help protect it from salt stains. Test this trick on a small portion of your item beforehand to make sure it creates the results you want.

2. Get a zipper moving: It's winter, you just got home and you go to remove your heavy coat when the zipper refuses to move. Don't panic. That stuck zipper can be fixed with a drop or two of shampoo. To use shampoo as a lubricant, apply it to a cotton swab and run the swab along the zipper. The zipper will slide free and any leftover shampoo residue will easily wash off.

3. Save a shrunken sweater: Have you ever forgotten to read the tag of your new sweater and improperly washed it? If you have, then you know the heartache of pulling it out of the washer to discover it's shrunk. It can be fixed, however. Fill a basin with warm water and a squirt of baby shampoo. Mix the water with your hands and lay the sweater on top of the water, so it sinks down. Let it soak for 15 minutes before you gently take it out. Do the same process with a basin of clean water to rinse. When taking your sweater out, resist the urge to wring the sweater and instead lay it on a towel. Roll the towel to take out the moisture. Reshape the sweater as it dries.

4. Clean your houseplants: Your locks aren't the only thing shampoo can add luster to. Your dusty houseplants can benefit from a shampoo wash. Combine a small amount of shampoo with water to create a soapy solution. Dunk a cloth in the mixture and wring it out before wiping the leaves. The shampoo-water blend will be light enough that the plant will still be able to breathe.

5. Wash your car: While shampoo is gentle enough to be used on your hair, it is strong enough to wash your car. Add 1/4 cup of shampoo to your bucket of water and wash your car as usual. The shampoo will easily remove any grease.

For those hard-to-remove tar spots, add shampoo directly to cloth and wipe them away.

6. Easily remove nuts and bolts: Just as with that stuck zipper, shampoo can help your move that pesky nut and bolt. With just a drop of shampoo, the hardware will be lubricated and easy to twist. Be sure to let the shampoo drip down to the threads to make the bolt more moveable.

7. Painlessly take off a bandage: They say the secret to removing a bandage with little pain is to rip it off in one, smooth motion. Actually, the secret is shampoo. Rub the liquid on and around the bandage and let it seep through the air holes. The lubricant will lessen the stickiness of the adhesive, allowing you to painlessly take it off.

8. Pamper your feet: After a season of wearing sandals, your tootsies might need some extra attention. Help revitalize your feel at night by rubbing them with shampoo and covering them with a pair of cotton socks. When you wake up after a peaceful night's slumber, your feet will be smooth and silky.

9. Shave your legs: Make your shampoo pull double duty in the shower by using it to shave your legs. An ideal alternative to storebought shaving creams, shampoo won't leave your legs dry like soap. In fact, the softening agents in the shampoo will leave you silky smooth.

10. Cleanse dirty hands: Sometimes ordinary hand soap isn't enough to remove sticky, stubborn grime from your hands. In those instances, reach for the shampoo. Shampoo will not only wash off sticky residue,

This shampoo recipe is for normal hair, however, it can be used as a base for other shampoo recipes. Feel free to add your own scents to the mix, such as tea tree and peppermint oil, which stimulate the scalp.

1/4 cup liquid castile soap
1/2 teaspoon jojoba, grapeseed, or other light vegetable oil

it will also remove water-based paints.

11. Have hairspray on the wall?: No matter how accurate you try to be when using hairspray, nine times out of 10 it will still end up all over the place. If your wall happens to get a dousing of the misfire, clean off the sticky stuff with shampoo. Put a dollop of shampoo on a wet sponge and wipe down the wall. Clean off the suds with a clean, wet sponge.

12. Polish your bathroom: Another role your shampoo can play in the bathroom is the one of fixture cleaner. The next time you need to quickly clean your bathtub, do so with some shampoo. Not only will it remove soap scum, it will also rinse off clean. And don't forget your faucets – shampoo can be used to buff a bit of shine into the chrome gear.

13. Wash your delicates: All it takes is a few drops of shampoo to clean your hand-wash delicates. It's less expensive than those commercially sold laundry detergents for delicate items.

14. Clean your brushes and combs: After time – and not as much time as you think – skin oils can build up on your combs and brushes. Other debris, such as dirt and lint from your purse, can accumulate on the bristles as well. Clean these hair items and extend their life with shampoo. After removing any tangled strands, rub shampoo into the bristles of the brush or teeth of the comb. Place them in a tall glass of water and let it sit for several minutes. Swish, rinse clean and let them air dry.

Unclutter your shower

Shampoo dispenser makes washing that much easier Bv Beth Sitzler

While shampoo is a necessity around the house, its bottle - or bottles - can be a nuisance in the shower.

The bottles can take up precious space along the edge of your bathtub, and if you're trying to get more than one to stay in place, forget about it.

Remove the clutter for your space of relaxation by using a shampoo dispenser.

What is it?

The shampoo dispenser is an easy way to unclutter and de-bottle your shower. Think of a soap dispenser you would find in any public bathroom. Now imagine one bigger and designed to be mounted to a wall in your shower.

Not only will it save you space, it will also make it easier to pump out the right amount of product every time. You'll no longer have to worry about half your shampoo bottle pouring out uncontrollably through your hands and down the drain.

The shampoo dispenser comes in a variety of sizes. You can get a basic, one chamber wall-mounted accessory for your shampoo, but what about your conditioner? Luckily, the device can be found with as many as four chambers. Now, you'll have a place for not just your shampoo and conditioner, but also your body wash or two.

There also are shampoo dispensers available that include a shelf for your other shower items, such as razor, a mirror and hooks for a washcloth or shower luffa.

Depending on the maker, the shampoo dispenser can either be hidden behind a metal case or is clear. While the metal case looks sleek in your shower and less like what you would find in a public bathroom, the clear dispenser allows you to see how much soap you have.

The shampoo dispenser has already gained popularity with big-city hotels. Many lodging facilities have made the switch to wall-mounted soap dispensers to cut back on the waste produced from travel-sized bottles usually provided to guests.

The American Hotel and Lodging Association estimates that a hotel using shampoo dispensers in 300 rooms can save on average $10,000 a year in waste.

How does it work?

The shampoo dispenser is simple to use. Take any store-bought or homemade shampoo, conditioner, soap, shower gel or what have you and empty it into the container.

Be sure to recycle that empty plastic bottle. According to the Environmental Protection Agency, in 2010, 31 million tons of plastic waste was generated, and only about 8 percent of that waste was recovered for recycling.

After it is filled, the contents will be released with a push of a button.

When your shampoo dispenser is empty, wipe it clean with a cloth and then fill it again. The gadget can be used multiple times.

Caponata Sandwiches

By Chef Joseph Brown

- 1/4 cup olive oil 1 celery stalk, chopped 1 medium eggplant, diced
- Salt 1 red bell pepper, 1/2-inch diced
- 1 medium onion,
- finely chopped 1 (14 1/2-ounce) can diced tomatoes
- 3 tablespoons raisins
- 1/2 teaspoon dried oregano leaves
- Freshly ground black pepper 1/4 cup red wine vinegar
- 2 teaspoons sugar 1 tablespoon capers, drained 1 loaf ciabatta bread, cut crosswise into
- six equal pieces
- 4 garlic cloves, peeled 6 slices (1/3-inch-thick)
- mozzarella

Heat 1/4 cup of the oil in a heavy large skillet over medium heat. Add the celery and saute until just tender. Add the eggplant and sauté until it begins to soften. Add the red pepper and cook for approximately 5 minutes. Add the onion and sauté until translucent. Add the diced tomatoes with their juices, raisins and oregano. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Simmer over medium-low heat until the flavors blend and the mixture thickens, stirring often, about 20 minutes. Add the vinegar, sugar and capers. Season with salt and pepper, to taste. Cut the bread pieces horizontally in half. Grill the bread cutside down over medium-high heat until golden, about 2 minutes. Rub the whole garlic cloves over the toasted side of the bread. Place 1 slice of mozzarella on the bottom of each sandwich. Spoon the caponata on top, cover with the other bread half, and chill until ready to serve.

Generally, shampoo dispensers range from $11 to $40, depending on the brand. Those who don't mind spending some serious dough shouldn't fear – Vola has a 8.5-ounce, brushed chrome shampoo dispenser for around $600.

Not your typical picnic How to make a gourmet feast to go

Culinary instructors from The International Culinary Schools at The Art Institutes offer simple recipes for a portable gourmet feast.

Instead of reaching for chips and pretzels, pack snacks and appetizers that have a more robust flavor. Chef Randy Johnston, culinary instructor at The International Culinary School at The Art Institute of Washington, a branch of The Art Institute of Atlanta, recommends spiced or candied nuts, prosciuttowrapped vegetables or an assortment of olives.

"That's something you can just throw in a cooler and not worry about time and temperature as much," Johnston said.

Both Johnston and Chef Joseph Brown, culinary department chair at The Art Institute of Raleigh-Durham, a branch of The Art Institute of Charlotte, recommend vegetable sandwiches, such as a Caponata Sandwich. These can be made a day in advance and are an unexpected change from cold cuts or mayonnaisebased salads. For side dishes with more of a dinner party than picnic flair, Johnston suggests grilled shrimp salad (cooked orzo, grilled shrimp and store-bought vinaigrette) and stuffed tomatoes (remove the tomato centers and fill with a mixture of chick peas, feta cheese and vinaigrette, or red peppers and parmesan cheese).

When making fruit salad, Johnston says to mix it up.

"Throw in something you don't normally use, like papaya," he said. "If you want to ramp it up even more, shop the Asian markets and specialty shops for unique fruits such as lychee or longans, which are packaged in simple syrup.'

For an adult version, you can try Brown's Fruit Salad with Tequila.

Johnston recommends white sangria, or cucumber water to quench your thirst. To make cucumber water, slice cucumbers into small strips and let them sit in the water for a few hours.

Sunny Conley Chile Knights

Yeah! Desert heat is winding down and autumn is on the horizon. Celebrate the end of summer with a sassy, enchanting meal prepared just for you.

Dining solo need not be a lonely affair; rather, it can be a relaxing, peaceful occasion. Dim the lights, ignite a candle, set an elegant table setting, add background music and enjoy.

Last week, I gave it a try. Josh Groban serenaded "Un amore per sempre" as I savored grilled New Mexican seasoned chicken breast on a bed of spinach leaves. The entrée shared plate space with gently boiled fingerlings drizzled with chile olive oil and fresh watermelon chunks topped with frozen blueberries.

You can consider a side of The Beet Goes On, roasted beets with goat cheese and minced serrano pepper or Grilled Corn with Chipotle Crema. If your appetite is grande, start out with a cup of spicy chilled avocado

I even treated myself to dessert: a generous scoop of mango sorbet topped with a dollop of whipped cream sprinkled with habanero powder. Sabroso!

Grilled Chicken Breasts with Fresh New Mexico Chile Rub

2 teaspoons chile powder

- 2 teaspoons packed brown sugar
- 2 teaspoons grated lime peel
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon garlic powder 1/2 teaspoon ground New Mexico
- green or red chile powder
- 1/8 teaspoon habanero powder 4 skinless, boneless chicken breasts
- 2 teaspoons olive or canola oil

1 fresĥ lime, squeezed

Toasted fresh rosemary and mayonnaise for garnish

In a small bowl, mix together dry ingredients and set aside. In another small bowl, mix together olive oil and the juice from one lime. Brush both sides of chicken breasts with olive oil and lime juice mixture. Using fingers, rub each side of chicken breasts with mix. Grill chicken breasts over medium-high heat until desired doneness. (I grilled mine on a George Foreman Grill.) Serve on a bed of spinach leaves garnished with toasted rosemary and mayonnaise with a side of boiled fingerlings drizzled with chile oil and fresh fruit.

To toast rosemary, in a small skillet, add a tablespoon of olive oil. Bring to a sizzle over medium-high heat. Add fresh rosemary. Stir constantly until rosemary appears "grilled." Makes 4 servings.

Red Hot Chilled Avocado Soup

2 avocados, peeled, pitted and diced 1 tablespoon shallots, chopped 1 tablespoon olive oil 2 cups chicken stock 1 cup heavy cream Salt and pepper to taste

1/4 teaspoon ground nutmeg

1/4 teaspoon New Mexico hot red chile powder 1 tomato, peeled, seeded and diced Purée avocado in a blender or food processor until smooth. Sauté chopped shallots in olive oil until tender but not brown; set aside to cool. In a large bowl, whisk together avocado with chicken stock, heavy cream and shallots until smooth. Stir in salt, pepper nutmeg and red chile powder; adjust seasonings to taste. Chill for at least half an hour before serving. Garnish with diced tomato. Makes 4 servings.

The Beet Goes On

6 medium red beets, greens and root ends removed

4 ounces fresh goat cheese (chèvre) 3 to 4 tablespoons low-fat plain yogurt 3 tablespoons fresh herbs (such as chives, dill and tarragon), finely chopped, plus extra for serving

- 1/2 serrano pepper, stemmed,
- seeded and minced

1/2 teaspoon kosher salt

2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil Flaky salt

Preheat the oven to 375 degrees. Cover each beet in a small square of aluminum foil, wrap to enclose and place on a rimmed sheet pan. Roast until a paring knife easily slides into the center of the largest beet, about 1 hour and 15 minutes. Remove the beets from the oven, open the foil and let cool.

In the bowl of a standing mixer with a paddle attachment, cream the goat cheese with 1 tablespoon yogurt until creamy. Add 2 more tablespoons yogurt, the herbs and kosher salt, and beat on medium-low speed until smooth. (Add the remaining 1 tablespoon yogurt if you'd like a looser consistency.)

Use a paring knife to peel the skin from the beets. Slice the beets in half and slice each half into quarters. Place them in a bowl with the olive oil, season with flaky salt and toss to combine. Turn the beets out onto a plate, top with the creamy goat cheese, sprinkle with more herbs and serve. Makes 4 servings. (Recipe is adapted from Tasting Table.)

Grilled Corn on the Cob with Chipotle Crema

1 cup sour cream 1 cup heavy cream

1 teaspoon salt

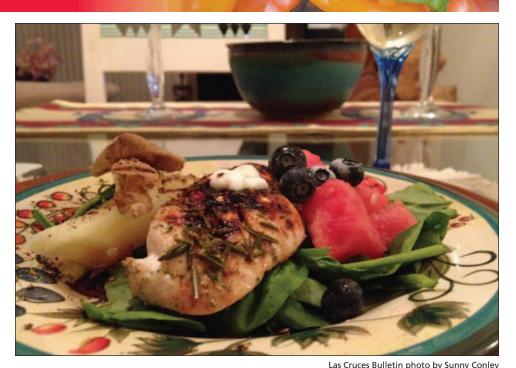

8 ears corn, husks on and silks removed 2 canned chipotle chiles in adobo, stemmed 1 cup crumbled queso fresco or feta cheese 2 limes cut into wedges

In a medium bowl, mix together the sour cream, heavy cream and salt. Cover with plastic wrap and set out at room temperature for 3 hours.

In a large stockpot filled with water, soak the ears of corn for 20 minutes. Remove the ears from the water, shake and tightly squeeze the husks against the kernels of corn to get rid of any excess water.

In a food processor, combine 1/2 cup of the prepared cream mixture with the chiles and purée until smooth. Reserve the rest of the cream mixture for another use. Set aside.

Turn a grill to high and close the lid. After 15 minutes, lower the heat to medium high. Place the corn on the grill rack and grill for 5 minutes. Turn the corn over and grill for another 5 minutes. Remove the corn from the grill and set aside to rest for 5 more minutes. In the meantime, keep your grill on with the lid closed.

Take the grilled ears of corn and pull back the husks, exposing the kernels but keeping the husks attached at the bottom. Increase the grill temperature to high and place a sheet of aluminum foil on one side of the grill. Place the pulled-back husks over the foil, allowing the exposed kernels to sit on the grill grates. (This is done so the husks don't burn before the corn can char.) Close the grill lid and allow the kernels to char until they become dark and golden brown, about 5 minutes. Then turn the corn and char the other side. Remove the corn from the grill. Serve immediately alongside the chipotle crema, crumbled cheese and lime. Makes 8 servings. Extend the life of colorful blossoms Make your flowers' beauty last well into the fall

Gary Guzman Gardening Guru

It is actually easier than you think to extend the blooming season for most flowering plants.

Roses, crape myrtle, althea, hibiscus, bird of paradise, vitex and butterfly bush are just some of the few flowering trees and shrubs that can provide color up to late fall. When I mention color in late fall, I don't mean foliage, I mean the actual blossoms.

The easiest way to do this is to remove spent flowers before they have a chance to form seed heads. If they have already formed seed heads, then simply remove those as fast as possible.

Quick removal of spent flowers or seed heads will allow for future bud development. You can also re-shape or lightly prune away any wayward stems or twigs to help keep the desired form balanced. This action should be done during warm temperatures while new growth is still active, since most flowers form at the end of its stem or branch.

Fertilizers low in nitrogen and high in phosphorus are the best choice to achieve this goal. If possible, look for fertilizers containing mycorrhizea, which have proven to be very effective in helping just about all types of plants grow or bloom to their fullest potential. Since phosphorus "binds" with soil particles, it is best to work this product into the soil without disturbing the root zone. A thorough watering immediately after fertilizer application is a must.

In some cases, a higher amount of nitrogen can help boost new growth, which may help in producing new blooms. Use this step only if you have had no success with plant food low in nitrogen.

Promptly remove any branches that may have grown over lower surrounding flowering shrubs so that the shade does not become an issue. The shade provided by some of these limbs not only reduces the blooming, cycle it may also deform the smaller under plantings as they reach for the sunlight.

Be sure to use sharp, clean pruners and don't forget to sterilize any tools in between shrubs. This should help keep any disease or fungus from spreading.
