Storm hits crops hard

Hail hit at key growing time

By Todd G. Dickson, and Marvin Tessneer Las Cruces Bulletin

The storm that darkened the skies Tuesday, May 8, may have darkened the outlook for crops in the valley as hail devastated chile, alfalfa, pecans and onion fields at a critical growing time.

"We really got hammered," Hatch Mayor Judd Nordyke said.

Early reports stated the storm hit the fertile core of the northern Mesilla Valley, so much so that the fields the next morning looked as though they had received an irrigation watering, Nordyke said. But that was mostly from melted hail, which, he said, meant damage to the crops.

"We're still hearing back from the mers," Nordyke said Wednesday morning, "but from what we've heard so far we're probably looking at heavy to moderate damage to a lot of crops.

Farmers are checking their fields in the north valley – from Garfield to Rincon – to assess the extent of damage to their crops.

Damage was reported mostly to onions, which would have been ready for harvest in about two weeks.

The main hail damage was to onion bulbs, spoiling them from harvest.

"The hail hit the onions pretty bad," said Debbie Porter, wife of Bill Porter.

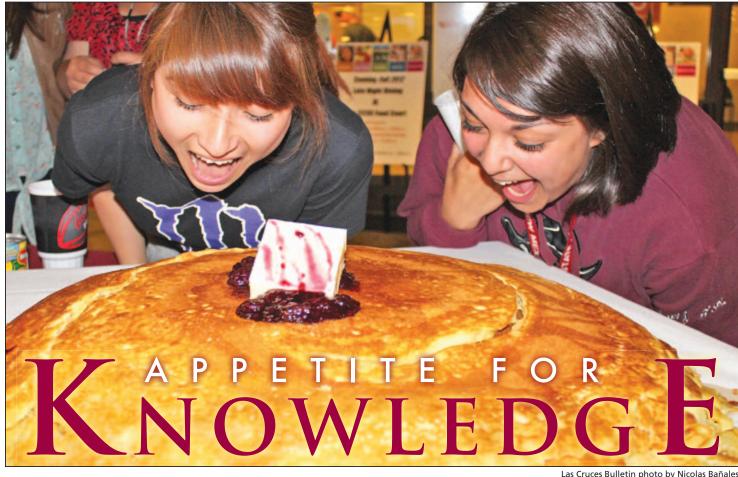

The couple owns fields from Garfield

"It'll take us a few days to know if we're going to replant or not," she said. "We had marble-sized hail and on top of that we had about two inches of rain. We've got rain water in the furrows yet. It'll take a while before we can get into the fields and get a course of action figured out."

The hail hit the area in the midafternoon with two storms covering a 15-mile stretch, according to Ricardo Bejarano, Elephant Butte Irrigation District head ditch rider.

The hail storm covered all of Garfield to Salem," Bejarano said. "With the pecans, there was a lot of damage to the flowers that develop into nuts. But we won't know

Pegasus opts for Hobbs to be home to $1 billion mock city

By Todd G. Dickson

The company planning to build a mock city for testing new technology picked Hobbs over Las Cruces for the $1 billion project that is expected to create more than 300 permanent jobs.

Pegasus Global Holdings LLC, announced Tuesday, May 8, that it has chosen Lea County and Hobbs, N.M., as the location for the Center for Innovation, Testing and Evaluation (CITE). Pegasus claims CITE will be the first fully integrated test, evaluation and certification facility replicating a modern city in size and scope.

Last month, Pegasus announced it was also closely looking at Doña Ana County and Las Cruces. The area being considered was on 15,000 acres of state trust land, best known now as Coralitos Ranch, west of the Las Cruces International Airport.

County and city economic development and elected officials tried to win over Pegasus by touting similar research already being

Flown away

Pegasus took a serious look at Las Cruces, but landed in Hobbs

Pegasus, the winged horse from Greek mythology, was said to have been the offspring of Poseidon and Medusa, and to have flown to Mount Olympus to gather thunder and lightning as ordered by Zeus, the king of the gods.

Pegasus Global Holdings, LLC, based in Washington, D.C., recently brought its version of thunder and lightning to New Mexico, seeking an ideal location for its innovative test city concept, the Center for Innovation, Testing and Evaluation, or CITE. Pegasus plans to invest more than $1 billion on the construction of a complete city, devoid of people, to be used exclusively for testing and product development.

Two locations were identified as finalists in the competition – Las Cruces and Hobbs.

Local business leaders were confident the Las Cruces location would be perfect for the expansive facility that would require up to 20 square miles of isolated, unimproved land where the city could be built and the testing could be done without interference from the outside world.

A seemingly perfect tract of land was located west of Las Cruces on the Corralitos Ranch. Protected by mountains on three sides with an open expanse of desert to the west, the location a few miles north of Interstate 10 provided transportation infrastructure. The City of Las Cruces and Doña Ana County vowed to ensure other infrastructure could be quickly provided.

The project, with its plan for 350 fulltime CITE jobs and up to 3,500 support jobs, promised to be a panacea for the local economy. With an abundance of local scientists and engineers and the support of New Mexico State University, Las Cruces appeared to be the obvious choice.

However, the dream of this incredible opportunity was dashed Tuesday, May 8, when Pegasus announced it would build its unmanned test city on private land west of Hobbs. This decision surprised many Las Cruces business and political leaders. However, the carefully chosen words of Bob Brumley, Pegasus managing director, helped us understand why Las Cruces finished second.

"Ultimately, we determined Hobbs and Lea County was the best fit for CITE, based on the available land, infrastructure and breadth of community support," Brumley said.

In this statement, Brumley was clear about the differences between Las Cruces and Hobbs. The land of choice in Las Cruces is public land, and to be converted to private use would require legal procedures costing unknown time and money. In Hobbs, the targeted land is privately owned, unencumbered by the process required to acquire and use it for commercial purposes. Also a factor, though not stated in the press release, was the lengthy, unsettled disagreements among Las Cruces area residents and leaders about wilderness designation, an issue that could have caused delays in CITE's plans to quickly commence its project.

In Hobbs, much of the infrastructure, such as electricity, is already in place. Hobbs also has a proven record of delivering on promises to support a major project such as CITE. They have recently attracted significant other new industry, such as the massive, multi-national Urenco uranium-enrichment plant and the International Isotopes factory.

As for the breadth of community support, the difference between Las Cruces and Hobbs is virtually their entire community is in support of the commercial and economic development for their area. In the past, Hobbs has thrived or starved depending on the price and demand for oil and gas products. Hobbs residents have longed for a more diverse and stable economy, and they are moving quickly toward their dream. And, because the oil and gas business is currently thriving, they have the money and other resources to recruit opportunities like CITE.

On the other hand, Las Cruces depends on the Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance (MVEDA), with an excellent record of attracting new business to our region, despite relatively limited financial resources to recruit new businesses to our region. MVEDA's work is done in the face of what many consider to be an unfriendly business environment, such as the recent implementation of construction impact fees on local contractors. Unfortunately, for those seeking economic growth and improved prosperity in Las Cruces, even a semi-friendly government can steer new business prospects away.

The good news is the CITE project will be in New Mexico and all New Mexicans will benefit. For many of us here in Doña Ana County, we would have loved to have seen the thunder and lightning from Pegasus here in Las Cruces instead of Hobbs.

There will be other projects that could come our way. Let's just hope in the future, we all can actively and proactively work together toward a common good and to bring prosperity to our communities and fellow citizens.

A mom's thanks

My daughter and I were visiting from out of town on the morning of Saturday, May 5, at the Las Cruces Farmers & Crafts Market.

As I was struggling with the lid on a cup of coffee I bought from a vendor, the entire cup fell onto my 8-year-old daughter who was standing right next to me.

In my moment of panic, several vendors and members of the community came to our assistance and acted immediately on her behalf.

We would like to sincerely thank them for their quick thinking and immediate action in time of an emergency. We would also like to thank the Moose Lodge for offering us a place of privacy until the ambulance could come.

Doctors have assured us that she will heal just fine, but she did suffer a first-degree burn on her face and severe second-degree burning on her arm and chest.

Though we hear about stuff like this all the time, I don't think any parent could imagine that hot coffee could cause the damage that it did. I hope that this can also serve as a reminder of carefulness on all our parts.

Libertarian

Johnson takes Libertarian reins

Nomination is unlikely to boost former governor's chances

Is Gary Johnson finally going to get some attention? The Republican establishment shut him out of the polls and debates last fall. Will being the nominee of the Libertarian Party make any difference now?

It's no slam dunk. Libertarians are seen as just short of weird. How can a political philosophy embrace both limited government and the legalization of pot? It's really quite simple, but in our current world of bipolar political beliefs, no one wants to listen.

Rep. Ron Paul tried to dish it out slowly and simply in the GOP debates, but it was too bland as Republican leaders held their breath for fear the Libertarian would say something that they would have to spend the next year

Evidently, Paul wanted to speak at this year's convention and the 2008 convention, but Republicans wouldn't hear of it. Johnson didn't get that far, being closed out of the polls and the debates.

The road to getting on stage with President Obama and Mitt Romney will be even tougher. The rules say Johnson must consistently be polling 15 percent and be on enough November state ballots to have a mathematical chance of winning the presidency.

The ballot qualification isn't a problem. The Libertarian party usually gets itself on all 50 state ballots. But 15 percent in the polls would be a miracle. Johnson is at about half that right now and the trend for third-party candidates is downward as election day approaches.

Johnson does have some things going for him, however. He's a former governor, which should increase his credibility. U.S. Rep. Bob Barr was the Libertarian candidate in 2008 and got only 0.4 percent of the vote, but Barr was a loose cannon in Congress and didn't bring much credibility with his candidacy.

Gov. Johnson should attract tea party support with his record of more than 700 vetoes in eight years. One convention supporter bragged that Johnson vetoed more bills than Barry Bonds hit home runs on steroids.

Johnson has respect within the Libertarian Party even though he is a late comer. He easily won on the first ballot with 70 percent of the vote. Four years ago, it took six ballots to choose a candidate.

Johnson could have had the nomination for the asking in 2000 when he was serving as governor and had just declared himself against the war on drugs. But Johnson hadn't set his eye on the presidential goal at the time. I figured any politician who planned to climb Mount Éverest as soon as his term was over would set his sights on something like the presidency soon after. At the time, I wrote a column predicting that Johnson and Bill Richardson both would run for president in 2008. Johnson suggested I had been smoking something funny. Richardson offered me a Johnson did the wise thing after winning his landslide nomination. He headed to New York, hoping on a slow news Sunday he could get some exposure. He has to hope he can be interesting enough to continue getting attention.

The Libertarian message is intriguing, but few are ready to listen. They prefer to hear their candidates make mountains out of molehills from some off-hand remark made by an opposing candidate.

Libertarians, on the other hand, believe in the liberty of businesses and individuals to do what they desire without government intrusion. Democrats and Republicans believe that too, except when they disagree with the issue. Then they want government to make the act

About the only places Johnson gets to talk that way is in speeches to the Johns Hopkins Center on Advanced Governmental Studies and the University of California seminar on Liberty in Governance.

Johnson is doing a much better job of presenting himself. The groups of dozens or hundreds he has been speaking to the past year have helped him fine tune a message and its presentation. He deserves a chance to demonstrate those skills.

An effective incentive for college graduation

Aim lottery scholarships at graduates, not incoming frosh

Michael Swickard

In My Opinion

It is college graduation weekend with all of those happy graduates ready to hit the trail.

They are the success stories, at least those who get a job. For the ones who don't, there is always another degree to pursue, forestalling entry into the job market. Many students just drift away from college without a degree.

The Lottery Scholarship pays tuition for certain New Mexico students and despite all of the hoopla, it is only a semigood idea. For one thing, the primary idea should be to get the students to graduate. College is supposed to be an alumni mill, cranking out alumni in increasing numbers. This being graduation time, that is what we focus on. But the Lottery Scholarship is focused on attendance. The incentive is to go to college, not graduate. When you graduate, the money stops.

It is the same way that New Mexico colleges compensate for teaching - by the number of classes taught, not the number of students who graduate. If the educational leaders in New Mexico really want kids to graduate they should aim the incentives on graduation. How about a graduation lottery?

Picture this: at each graduation, before awarding the degrees, some names are drawn. There are the usual dinners and car washes, but then comes the better prizes. Several (lucky?) students get free tuition on their next degree. Even better, several get their student loans paid in full. Then will come the moment that has caused all of the media attention. One lucky graduate each graduation gets $1 million paid over 20 years. İ bet that would spice up the ceremony.

How the entry tickets are calculated is even better. Every college credit a student takes translates to one entry so changing majors several times is not quite so bad, as long as the student eventually graduates. Further, they could even get three tickets for each A, two for each B and one for each C.

Songs on the radio would talk about unrequited grad points.

On a larger scale, perhaps the school leaders would factor more tickets for harder degrees. Electrical engineers would be envied because they earn 10 times the number of tickets for each A as someone in a "less demanding" program. At graduation, one student may have accumulated 5,000 entries while a classmate only has 1,000. Again, only those who finish get to be in the drawing. Each college would be reinforcing graduation rather than just time spent in college.

Look at some of the other benefits: Every action deemed important at college could be quantified into entries. Picking up trash, voting in student elections, being pleasant while standing in line, eating vegetables and of course, paying parking tickets. Everything worthwhile on campus could contribute to your total number of entries. Instead of a few thousand entries, students could earn millions. We could call them "grad points," one point equals one entry. Imagine, "How many GPs do you have?'

Oh, I've got about 16 million. I figure 20 million is what the lucky stiff who won last year had, so I'm trying to max out above that." And they could.

It would discourage cheating because each student is trying to get as many GPs as possible. They would not dilute the pool of entries by helping someone cheat. There would be GP lust pure and simple. There could even be a counter effect so that when students do things wrong they lose points. There could be a spitting assessment so that dippers and chewers of tobacco are fined one entry each time they spit on the sidewalk. The campus would be driven by graduation.

New Mexico colleges would also benefit because the national news media would come to graduation to see the lucky "millionaire" each graduation. Songs on the radio would talk about unrequited grad points.

Maybe there would be a movie-of-the-week about a poor starving philosophy student, holding little hope of employment after graduation. Then he or she is lifted up with the money and never has to eat ramen noodles again. It would put New Mexico on the map. Every student would graduate. This is an idea that could revolutionize higher education. All of this because we reinforce graduation instead of attendance.

An enhanced experience

Visitors to spaceport will enjoy world-class facilities

By Christine Anderson

There is no doubt that Spaceport America is well on its way to delivering on the promises made to the state taxpayers. I'm happy to report that 99 percent of the spaceport's phaseone construction is complete, and we should be receiving a certificate of occupancy on the Gateway to Space building and the Spaceport Operations Center shortly.

More than 1,000 New Mexicans have worked on the project so far, and more than $12 million dollars in GRT has come back to the state and local counties since the beginning of construction. In addition, more than $5 million has gone to spaceport-related education since 2009 and we have achieved global media coverage promoting the state of New Mexico valued at more than $40 million since the facility's groundbreaking.

Virgin Galactic has moved into an office in Las Cruces and will begin paying lease fees to the New Mexico Spaceport Authority (NMSA) this summer on the Gateway building. So far we've hosted 15 launches from four other customers, seven of which occurred in the past year. We have been busy.

Furthermore, the NMSA has been able to add to the original scope of the spaceport, to accommodate new requirements such as a southern access road; expanded facilities in the vertical launch area; extended safety zones on the main runway; and a substantially enhanced public tourism effort, called the spaceport's visitor experience."

As originally promised to voters, the visitor experience consisted of two facilities along I-25, known as welcome centers, one in Hatch and one in Sierra County. The centers would be venues for tourists to learn about Spaceport America and the surrounding areas, as well as the official point of entry for all visitors to the

The plan envisioned that welcome centers could be a catalyst for local tourism and economic development if done properly, and to that end, the NMSA committed $500,000 toward the effort in each community.

However, we discovered that $500,000 per welcome center was insufficient to design, construct and fit-out two facilities. We seemed to focus more on where the centers would be located rather than whether or not they actually would be worth visiting.

Since that time, the NMSA has learned a great deal about what it takes to succeed in the tourism business, and the visitor-experience plan has grown into something I believe will better serve our communities.

Recent comments in the press might lead the casual observer to conclude that the NMSA is robbing the planned visitor experience budget to accommodate competing funding objectives and thereby compromising its quality. This is not the case.

Each welcome center's budget is more than three times larger than originally proposed. In fact, the budget for the visitor experience is now more than 10 times larger than it was at the outset. When state dollars are leveraged with private sector investment (per the governor's call for public-private partnerships), the total investment doubles to nearly $20 million - and this is while staying within the original $209 million spaceport budget.

We now have, for the first time, a credible, exciting visitor experience plan, developed by world-class experts in the field, that I believe will attract hundreds of thousands of paying guests into our communities.

We are now moving forward with implementing that plan. I appreciate the support of so many in moving this project forward, and together, we will ensure that Spaceport America is the big success we all want.

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

The magic triangle

Triangles have a unique place in our

Engineers use them to build bridges, romance writers use them to manufacture chaos, Pythagoras used it to create his theorem, and the shortstop uses it to make a double play. Triangles strengthen structures. They take three straight lines going nowhere and form a bond that can withstand great pressure.

I see this cohesive combination in another triangle: women-horse-child. It is particularly evident when the child has Downs syndrome, multiple sclerosis or any other disability that restricts their possibilities.

In many equine therapeutic riding programs I've visited, women are the predominant hands-on helpers in the arena.

To be successful, a mutual trust must be established. It is no secret that most young kids are more at ease with a mother figure. Children innately sense the mother's compassion from her voice, her touch and her protective stance.

A woman introduces the child to the horse. This allows the child to give the horse the benefit of the doubt, because the woman trusts the horse and the child trusts the

When the child is set up on the horse's back, it is still in the mother's arms, ready to be rescued if need be. Through a long progression of walks around the arena the child's faith increases in the horse. The physical mother-child contact begins to loosen. It proceeds from holding one hand, to a hand on the back, to a hand on the saddle, to walking beside leading, and then one day, cheering from the sidelines.

The child's trust eventually expands to include the horse. The triangle is complete. We have connected woman-to-child-tohorse and back to-woman.

This third leg was there before the child was born or was even a thought. Womanto-horse was always there. Not in all women, in all horses, or in all kids, I admit, but in many. I have given up trying to understand the relationship. I have seen it so often I no longer think it is haphazard or coincidental. I have concluded it involves some primitive instinctual behavior.

It is especially obvious at any equine therapeutic riding center. Check it out for yourself. You will see small islands of woman-horse-child. Concentrate on one of those triangles. Try and drown out the chatter, the buckets, and the racket going on around you. Then imagine the child on the horse is yours. You become hypersensitive to the slightest movement; be it protective, encouraging or loving.

Even the smallest step in this magic triangle performance going on in the arena becomes magnified. Successes are marked in the tiniest gesture, the slightest touch, the tentative smile and the skip of a heartbeat. And through the cloud that puts you in the triangle, you hear the softest of voices saying, "It's all right, he won't hurt you."

Phones were ringing after Athena streaked above Southwestern skies

Test program designed to resolve rocket re-entry issues

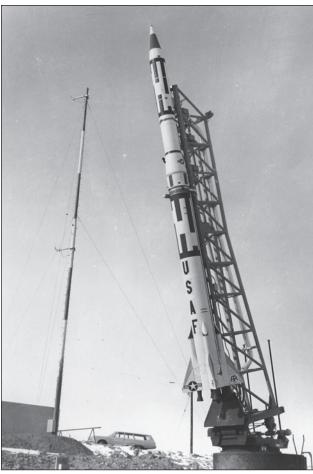

By Michael Shinabery
New Mexico Museum of Space History

The Athena that "streaked" across New Mexico on May 12, 1966, lit up the night sky "as far west as the Tucson, Ariz., area and as far east as Las Vegas, N.M.," The Associated Press reported in a story the Alamogordo Daily News printed the following day.

The test, which originated at Green River, Utah, ended with "a successful impact on White Sands Missile Range." But the vehicle also "sparked numerous calls to authorities over the identity of the object."

Early flights of the Athena, which was "used to study reentry problems" as well as weapons' systems, were not always as fruitful. Less than two years had passed since the Army, in An Athena rocket sits on the pad awaiting launch.

February 1964, announced intentions to "bolster its missile muscle" with the Athena, The AP reported on Feb. 2 of that year. Subsequently, the first launch in the $44 million program

Subsequently, the first launch in the $44 million program Feb. 10, failed. The ADN that day related how the first stage crashed "near Monticello, Utah," after liftoff from Green River with the intention of reaching WSMR. The rest of the rocket, carrying cameras and other data-gathering instrumentation, hit southeast of Durango, Colo. Nine days later, the Army ordered an investigation and halted further launches.

Athena simulated an intercontinental ballistic missile. The first two stages were solid fuel; stages three and four controlled re-entry. Tests finally resumed on May 28, 1964, with similar lack of success. A document from Space Information Canada said controllers had to abort the second flight at 61 seconds when the second stage veered off course.

While the third mission, on July 8, was successful, the fourth, on Sept. 28, was aborted due to a guidance system failure. It smacked into the ground near Datil, the AP reported on Sept. 30. There were four more tests in 1964 with only one failure, on Nov. 20, after winds blew the rocket off course.

Statistically, the Athena improved the next year. Of 27 tests in 1965, 20 succeeded. The seven failures ranged from computer malfunctions to stages that failed to separate.

All 26 launches in 1966 worked. Twenty-five of 30 tests in 1967, 13 of 16 in 1968 and 10 out of 11 in 1969 succeeded.

Then, on July 11, 1970, an Athena the Air Force launched from Green River "as part of a routine testing program" began acting "abnormally," said the webpage journals.lww.com. Air Force Lt. Col. Wayne Mattson, in a monograph, stated the goal in launching the eight ton rocket, which was 50 feet tall, was "to measure" how reentry heat dissolves material, in this case the nose cone.

The missile, carrying radiological material, was programmed to reach 200 miles altitude, Air Force Col. Len Sugerman said during an oral history on April 15, 1999, for the New Mexico Museum of Space History. Sugerman pointed out that while the first three stages fired correctly, "the 4th for some reason lit off while it was pointing up." WSMR radar tracked the Athena until it exceeded telemetry range.

Not for the first time in Athena's history the program was temporarily shut down. Launches finally resumed seven months later, but this time from the Kwajalein Atoll, part of the Marshall Islands, which worldatlas. com described as being "about midway between Hawaii and Australia." There were also new stringent regulations imposed, including, Sugerman said, a stipulation about "not firing anything that had the potential of going into a foreign country."

By the end of 1970 there had been 141 Athena tests, according to Space Information Canada. The final 10 took place in 1971, and all succeeded.

Police investigate girl's pit bull mauling death

Las Cruces Police are investigating the death of a toddler girl mauled by the family's pit bull and what appears to be an accidental shooting of the child's grandmother by a neighbor trying to stop the attack.

Police have identified the victim as Jazilyn Mesa, who was born Jan. 26, 2011, making her only 15 months old when she died Tuesday, May 8, in the dog attack.

Jazilyn's grandmother, Leticia Mesa, was accidentally shot by a neighbor who heard cries for help and was trying to stop the pit bull from attacking the girl. Leticia Mesa was transported to University Medical Center of El Paso with a single gunshot wound to a leg and foot.

Shortly before 11:30 a.m. Tuesday, May 8, Las Cruces Police were called to the 800 block of Stone Canyon Drive by a neighbor who reported hearing Leticia Mesa screaming for help. The neighbor, 69-year-old Barry Snyder, saw that the dog was attacking the girl and that Leticia Mesa was trying to cover the child, according to police.

Snyder retrieved a .45 caliber handgun from his home, called 911 and went to the aid of the girl and grandmother. Police said Snyder entered the backyard and fired the first shot as the 2-year-old pit bull lunged at him. The shot appears to have missed the dog and accidentally struck Leticia Mesa's right thigh.

Snyder fired more rounds at the 85-pound dog, which killed the pit bull.

Police officers arrived to find Jazilyn and Leticia Mesa in the front yard of the home. Jazilyn was suffering from multiple injuries to her head and chest, and was rushed to MountainView Regional Medical Center where she died shortly after noon.

The girl's body was transported to the medical investigator's office in Albuquerque, as was the pit bull for a post-mortem exam.

he mess meth makes

Rochelle Ponder of Las Cruces Rotary Clubs answers Camino Real Middle School students' questions Friday, May 4, after they viewed a slide show about how regular methamphetamine use can degrade a person's appearance, causing teeth to rot and skin to break out in ugly sores. Based on a successful program in San Juan County, the "Don't Meth With Us" program warns students about how highly addictive meth is, how it's made of toxic chemicals and encourages them to focus on their life goals to avoid experimenting with the illegal drug. The Rotary Clubs want to bring the program to more students next school year.

The

More than 400 Las Cruces Public Schools students who are currently in eighth through 11th grades will receive a letter from Superintendent Stan Rounds in the coming days telling them whether their transfer application to a different school has been approved.

Feb. 1 through April 16 was the open enrollment period when high school students could apply to attend a school outside of their home-attendance zone, said Director of Communications

Families who have emails on file with LCPS should have received electronic messages from the superintendent regarding his decision on their transfer applications, Galvan said. For others, a letter has been mailed.

Students whose transfers have been approved should contact their new school counselor or registrar and schedule an appointment to discuss their courses for the 2012-13 school year.

District officials said this school year, the applications were personally reviewed by the superintendent to ensure the projected 2012-13 enrollments for Las Cruces, Mayfield and Oñate high schools and the new Centennial High School, were not significantly different from what they were last fall when the high schools were redistricted.

"The transfer requests we received show a good mixture, with the large high schools picking up some students and losing some students," Galvan said. "The superintendent kept a close watch over the process, making sure that no single was overburdened school by a huge number of either incoming outgoing or students.

The superintendent also reviewed any fluctuation created by the transfer requests to the socio-economic balance for each school.

"It was important to strike a good balance as the process concluded," Rounds said. "I believe we accomplished that."

Parents of students who requested transfers and did not receive a letter or email from the superintendent by Tuesday,

May 1, are asked to contact the LCPS Secondary Instruction Office at 527-5889.

If a student applied for a transfer after the April 16 application deadline, the superintendent will review that student's request on an individual, case-by-case basis, and will notify the student and parents of his decision regarding the transfer request in the coming weeks.

What do you believe are the key issues in this race?

- Economic opportunity (jobs)
- Access to health care
- Education

How will you approach solving these issues?

We need to continue to look for economic opportunities that are "out of the box." Access to health care has a huge impact to families. I've known many people who work full-time, but it is still too expensive to get health insurance. Schools need to be adequately funded so classroom sizes are reasonable.

Why are you the best candidate?

I want to make sure the most people are getting served. I have a true investment in the community and I've worked in the trenches for 20-plus years to make things better. I have a proven track record.

What do you believe are the key issues in this race?

- Subdivision reform
- Child abuse
- Human trafficking

How will you approach solving these issues?

Most recently, I've been working on passage of legislation to increase the penalty for child abuse. One of my first significant pieces of legislation was to stop the practices of subdivision that led to the creation of colonias. In the area of human trafficking, I worked with Attorney General Gary King on my legislation to fight human trafficking, which isn't the same thing as smuggling. It's like when a woman is brought to this country on the promise of a hotel job and ends up in a brothel.

Why are you the best candidate?

I bring a complete knowledge of the Legislature with 24 years behind me. I know the process, the committees and can work with the leadership of both parties. I always make sure to pass a major piece of legislation each year and my most important legislation has enjoyed bipartisan support. I get along with all people.

What do you believe are the key issues in this race?

- Water
- Education
- Economic development

How will you approach solving these issues?

We have to come up with a water conservation plan. We have limited amount of water here, so we must look at its sustainability and encourage its conservation, both in the areas of agriculture and residential use. We need to revisit the Rio Grande Compact. I want to attract business, but we're not going to do that if we don't have enough water and if our schools still have a high dropout rate. We need to reach the parents, who are a child's greatest teacher.

Why are you the best candidate?

I will work on a broad spectrum of real concerns for our communities. I come to the Legislature with issues, not just proposals. I work from the ground up, such as I did with community meetings in the colonias. I will put things in place for the long term and not just one piece of legislation each year.

How will you approach solving these issues?

The state needs to prepare for the federal government reducing its defense spending. Regulations need to be balanced so we don't lose out on job opportunities. The tax base should be broad-based, but with low rates. Some progress has been made on gross receipts taxes "pyramiding," but more needs to be done and there are too many tax exemptions for businesses without proof they create jobs. how much damage there was until the growers check out their orchards."

Chris Biad of Biad Chili Products said one of his fields near Garfield was hit by the hail and, from what a worker reported, the 27 acres of green chile was "wiped out." In may be too late to replant chile, except to get in a crop of late season green chile, he said.

"But it would be too late now to grow the red chile," Biad said.

By early Wednesday afternoon, Nordyke said he was still getting reports, which seemed to show that some farms got hit harder than others, but that it was still a very damaging storm.

If there was any "silver lining" to the storm clouds, it was that the water coming down as hail kept the Placitas Arroyo from getting too full – which was the source of the village being flooded in 2006.

In Las Cruces, the storm brought welcome rain and cooler temperatures, causing only minor street flooding. The weather system that brought in the storm continued Wednesday, May 9.

Nordyke said he wasn't as concerned about possible flooding as he was about the crop damage.

Hatch's main economy centers on agriculture. Chile grown in Hatch has a high market appeal – from consumers to restaurants. New Mexico has even proclaimed the village as the "Chile capital of the world" and its annual chile festival in September attracts hot-food enthusiasts from near and far.

The Hobbs site is roughly the same size, but is on mostly private land, except for about 1,000 acres of state trust land. Despite supportive interest by State Land Commissioner Ray Powell, Robert Brumley, CITÉ's managing director, said his board was concerned about the uncertainty of the process to get its state land lease. During that same visit to Las Cruces, Brumley said the project's investors wanted to start building as soon as possible, with a target date of June to begin construction, which is expected to take two years to complete.

"I am very pleased to announce that Lea County and Hobbs will be the future home of CITE," Brumley in his announcement. "We have always known that the state of New Mexico is the perfect place for CITE, and we have spent a considerable amount of time searching for and evaluating the right loca-

Gov. Susana Martinez praised the project after Pegasus made its announcement.

"I'm proud that New Mexico is able to provide a home for a state-of-the-art project like CITE," Martinez said. "We have worked closely with Pegasus Global Holdings to see the selection process through in order to bring jobs and innovation to our state, and I'm pleased that they are moving forward in New State Economic Development Secretary John Barela said CITE is a big win for New Mexico.

'Pegasus' decision to locate its ground-breaking center in Lea County provides evidence that New Mexico remains a leader in research, development, testing and evaluation activities," Barela said. "We are very pleased by the sizable capital investment which will occur, along with the jobs that will be created in New Mexico."

In December, the New Mexico Partnership, on behalf Pegasus Global Holdings, solicited proposals from communities across the state of New Mexico interested in becoming home to CITE. Sixteen communities responded with proposals.

CITE will have urban, suburban and rural environments and include a mix of new and aging infrastructure. Clients will be able to test and evaluate their technologies in a facility that closely simulates real-world applications and challenges. 'It is a testament to our district that the two final locations under consideration were both in southern New Mexico," said U.S. Rep. Steve Pearce. "With the selection of either site, New Mexicans benefit. I congratulate Doña Ana County for being chosen as a finalist, and I thank them for the hard work that they have done. Additionally, I congratulate Lea County on being selected, and I commend Pegasus for bringing jobs to New Mexico."

Some have speculated there were other reasons that Pegasus didn't pick the Doña Ana County location, such as local elected officials not being pro-business, the possibility of Coralitos Ranch getting wilderness protections and the quality of local

"Although great for the state, this was a real loss for Las Cruces," said John Hummer, president of Steinborn & Associates Real Estate. "Losing something of this magnitude should serve as a wake-up call for our entire community to assess just how much more work is needed in order for us to be viewed as a true pro-business community. This will not just happen by itself, rather it will take some serious commitment and actions by all parts of our community.

"At a time when our local citizens are yearning for more jobs, more prosperity, and our kids continue to leave us in droves, it is simply a shame that this community is becoming known more for its devotion to radical environmental positions versus pro-business activities and focus."

Las Cruces Mayor Ken Miyagishima - who lobbied to attract the CITE project – disagreed that anti-business perceptions soured Pegasus on Las Cruces.

During a recent visit to Virginia in which Pegasus gave a presentation on CITE, Miyagishima said it became clear to him that key to the project's business plan was selling excess generated utilities, such as water and electricity. The Hobbs site had better access to water and electrical transmission lines, he said.

"As for us, our site is basically open desert," Miyagishima said. "They would have had to put in a lot of infrastructure."

Still, Miyagishima said he had hoped Las Cruces would have been selected. "Optimism is my middle name."

has helped her deal with the separation and worries any caring mom has for a child who could potentially be in harm's way.

Although the Iraq War is over, the Afghanistan War continues and the post 9/11 world remains a dangerous place for the men and women of the armed services. This Mother's Day Sunday, May 13, across the country, there are many moms like Persinger.

No one really understands what those feelings are like other than other mothers of deployed soldiers, Persinger said.

"You deal with those feelings on a daily basis," she said. "I'm a person of strong faith ... I know that my son will be fine, but I know there's a chance something could happen, and if that turns out to be, then I'll know he'll be with the Lord."

At the local Blue Star Moms group — officially Doña Ana Moms Chapter 8 — Persinger has a special bond with one of its founding members Cyndy Clark, whose son Benjamin will be graduating from the Naval Academy at the end of this month. Their sons were friends at Las Cruces High School in the Junior Army ROTC unit.

Clark said her son joked that basic training wasn't as hard as summer practice under Las Cruces High School football coach Jim Miller. Likewise, Persinger's son said his father, Edward, had prepared him for strict discipline.

Clark brings previous Blue Star Mom experience to the group. Her oldest son, Richard, served in the National Guard, which paid for his college education.

Benjamin will go into Naval intelligence and is graduating from the Naval Academy with a fluency in Chinese. As part of his training, her son spent a summer in China, during which she rarely heard from him.

For Persinger, her son's service has taken him to such places as South Korea, Thailand, the Philippines and now Japan. This latest time at sea has been so prolonged, her son told her during the recent phone call, he can't wait to touch the ground, she said.

The local Blue Star Moms – who number about 25 – meet at 9 a.m. on the third Saturday of each month at the American Legion Post 10 hall, 1185 E. Madrid Ave. They meet to plan such things as sending care packages to deployed soldiers. Recently, a returning soldier made a point to visit the group and thank them, saying how much they mean – especially when they included homemade cookies and other baked goods.

The local group has recently received national attention for sending quilts to the family members of the Navy SEALs helicopter unit that crashed August 2011 in Afghanistan.

Persinger said the Blue Star Moms meetings aren't all business. Sometimes, they are just a time for sharing mutual worries and concerns their children face, such as spouses having difficulties during the often lengthy deployments.

For more information about the local Blue Star Moms, Clark can be contacted by calling 649-9715.

Jim Hilley Deflections

'Sometimes you eat the bear. Well, sometimes it eats you."

I wonder if that line from "The Big Lebowski" has popped into Kathy Rodolph's head recently.

Last year at this time, the Aggie softball team was having its greatest year ever, winning the Western Athletic Conference tournament and advancing to the NCAAs, where New Mexico State University won its first game ever.

This season, after showing every indication of being just as good – splitting two games at No. 14 Arizona on March 21 – the Aggies suffered a series of devastating injuries at the beginning of conference play and limped to the end of the season, finishing seventh in the WAC standings.

It must be gut wrenching for the girls to have to sit and watch the WAC tour-nament May 9-12 at the NMSU Softball Complex.

If it's any consolation, it's no secret around Las Cruces that Rodolph has the team headed in the right direction.

That bear better watch its back.

Local golf fans are a little disappointed that Hobbs High School took home the 5-A New Mexico Boys Golf Tournament title Tuesday, May 8, at the NMSU Golf Course. The tournament showed, however, that there is some great young talent in the City of the Crosses.

Isaac Merry of Oñate High School, who finished fourth, still has his senior year ahead of him.

Sunland Derby winner Daddy Nose Best wasn't a factor in the 2012 Kentucky Derby on Saturday, May 5, but it was a great race to watch.

One of the pre-race favorites, Bob Baffert's Bodemiester, took an early lead and set a blistering pace through the first six furlongs and had a three-length lead after a mile. A very determined I'll Have Another wasn't going to throw in the towel though. The 15-1 long shot reeled in the leader and powered past for the win. Daddy Nose Best pegged at 14-1 odds finished 10th.

The next race in the fabled Triple Crown will be the Preakness, Saturday, May 19. I'll Have Another is already at the Pimlico Race Track.

Vaqueros field manager

By Jim Hilley

With a young, enthusiastic manager, an imposing pitcher who soon may be headed to the big leagues and a renovated ball park, this may be the year the Las Cruces Vaqueros make some noise in Las Cruces and in Pecos League baseball.

New field manager Casey Dill has worked hard to put a winning team on the field.

"I've spent the last six months trying to recruit the best team I possibly could, that I think will help win championship here in Las Cruces," Dill said.

"I think we have the guys to do it.

We've got guys from all over the country and all over the world, we have a couple of Japanese players, we have a Korean player, we actually have a player from Juárez in addition to guys from all over

Dill said one player Vaquero fans will definitely want to see on the field is Blake Cull.

"He's going to be our opening day starter, he's a 6-foot-7, left-handed pitcher who was briefly in the Arizona Diamondbacks organization," Dill said. "He took the year off because they found bone spurs in his elbow. He's using this as a comeback and hopefully, he can make it back to major league organization. "He throws in the low 90s, has a really good curve ball, really good command and really good mound presence. Cull is a person who will make a big impact on the team.

Dill said he also expects good production from third baseman Randy Wells from Pittsburg, Calif.

"He can hit to all parts of the field, he's gap to gap, plays a tremendous third base," Dill said. "For a big guy, he actually moves really well, he's a

"He actually reminds me a lot of Pete Rose, how he played, he's 100 percent baseball, he's hardnosed, he's in the dirt, he's hustling and running hard because he loves it. Randy Wells is going to have a big year for us."

Randy Wells said he was glad to be in Las Cruces.

Third baseman Randy Wells was singled out by field manager Casey Dill as a player to watch as the Vaqueros begin their third season in Las Cruces.

I am loving it so far, it's a great town, great weather," he said. "I'm getting used to the elevation, but I like the town.'

The third baseman is optimistic about the Vaqueros chances to win the Pecos League this year.

"We have a team, we got some good pitching, we are really good on defense," he said. "I think it's going to be a great season."

Dill said fans can expect his teams to play opportunistic

"I was mentored by Tim Johnson, who managed in the big leagues for a few years," Dill said. "I was taught to let the guys play the first six innings of the ball game that's their part of the game – if we get around to the sixth inning of the game and we have a tight ball game I have to try to manufacture

It's back to the future for the Mayfield High School girls tennis team.

The squad had a look reminiscent of the past and also gave a glimpse of the future when it captured the Class 5-A state championship May 4-5, at Albuquerque.

İt's Mayfield's first girls team tennis title in 21 years (the MHS boys won it all in 2010), and with the team made up mostly of freshmen and sophomores, more championships could be on the way.

Mayfield's girls entered the state championships as the No. 2 seed, while the Mayfield boys were No. 1. The Trojan boys finished third.

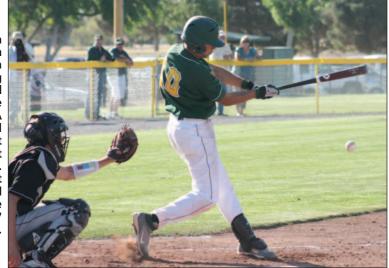

This group of boys and girls set their sights on state at the beginning of the year," said MHS coach Judy Harlas. "They practiced hard and ran hard. They showed up early in the morning and many of them practiced twice a day."

"We had a good crowd," coach Jim Dewey Brown said of the spring rodeo. "We held the rodeo in the parking lot to bring rodeos closer to the students."

The temporary arena also provided more parking spaces and access to vendors.

The Aggies earned its high ranking by winning or placing in several events.

Saturday is Senior Day for New Mexico State

The New Mexico State baseball team is playing its final home series of the season, taking on Fresno State in a three-game conference series, Thursday, May 10-12, at Presley Askew Field.

The game Friday, May 11, starts at 6:05 p.m. and Saturday's game begins at 1 p.m. Saturday is also Senior Day with 10 seniors on the team being honored.

As of Wednesday, May 9, the Aggies had lost six straight games and were currently 30-17 on the year. They dropped out of the polls after falling in two consecutive games to top-ranked Baylor in Waco, Texas, April 27-28. They lost in Las Cruces to Texas Tech May 1, before traveling to Honolulu to be swept by the University of Hawai'i, which took first-place in the WAC from the Aggies.

Before the six-game slide, NMSU was ranked in at least one poll for four consecutive weeks.

NMSU is currently 7-5 in league play and sits in a tie for second with Nevada in the WAC standings. The Aggies are hitting .308 on the year and .270 in WAC games. Their batting average at home stands at .341 with 32 home runs at Presley Askew Field.

The Aggies have gone 11-9 in the last 20 games with a .284 batting average during that time span.

Friday's and Saturday's games are scheduled to air over the radio waves in Las Cruces on KSNM AM 570.

The Mayfield boys and girls came into the tournament as district champions. The Las Cruces High girls and the Oñate boys finished second in district.

At the state tournament, Mayfield's girls beat Albuquerque High, 6-3, La Cueva, 5-4, and then Eldorado, 5-4, in the finals.

Lindsay said her playing style is a perfect fit with Brooke's.

Friday, May 11, 2012

On the boys side, Mayfield's Jeremy Harlas (Lindsay's brother) took third in singles at state, and Wesley Seaton and Ryan Maki took third in doubles.

Judy Harlas was a standout for Mayfield in the early 1980s, and the last time the Mayfield girls won state, Harlas' sister, Chrissy Ross, was on the team along with Becca Galves and Tom Easterling.

Judy Harlas' niece, Chloe Lee of Albuquerque High, won the singles title this year.

'This was just a group of kids that worked hard to get better," Harlas said. "I would try to leave at the end of practice and they would want to hit more balls. Everything fell into place. It's been pretty awesome."

Wouldn't that be fun.

Though the NMSU baseball team has been on a losing streak lately, dropping two games at No. 4 Baylor, taking a loss at home to Texas Tech and falling in three games at Hawai'i, Aggie fans shouldn't be too concerned. Baylor is 27-3 at home and Hawai'i is 24-11.

The Aggies host Fresno State this weekend before traveling to Albuquerque for a non-conference game at the University of New Mexico Tuesday, May 15, and heading on the Bakersfield, Calif., for a game against UC-Bakersfield the next night. After that, they play their final regular season WAC series at San Jose May 18-20.

The WAC tournament will be in Mesa, Ariz., May 23-27.

Aggies earn WAC awards

Conference tourney is at NMSU Softball Complex

Two New Mexico State softball players, senior Shaleese Javillo and freshman Briana Tovio-Asato, earned All-WAC second team honors at the 2012 Western Athletic Conference softball awards banquet hosted by the Aggies Wednesday, May 9.

Javillo earned her first All-WAC honor as a member of the second team. Javillo transitioned from primarily a pinch runner and outfielder over the past two seasons to a middle infield starter midway through her senior year. She only committed one error on defense despite not playing infield since her high school career.

The Kohala, Hawaii, native's game blossomed this season as she started 19 games and led the Aggies with a .343 batting average in WAC play. Her on-base percentage of .423 is second on the team in WAC games this season.

She finished the year as the active leader in the WAC with 35 career stolen bases. In four seasons, Javillo boasts a career on-base percentage of more than .300, 15 RBI and 24 hits with five going for extra bases including two home runs.

"We are happy that the league recognized Shaleese and Briana for their hard work in WAC play," coach Kathy Rodolph said. "Shaleese really stepped up and excelled for us when we really needed her this season. She showed a lot of heart by playing out of position in her senior year."

Tovio-Asato joined Javillo as a member of the All-WAC second team. She led the Aggies in several offensive categories in conference play including doubles (5), total bases (26), walks (11), slugging percentage (.481) and on-base percentage (.455).

Tovio-Asato was second on the team with a .333 average behind only Javillo in WAC games. The third baseman led the Aggies with 35 assists on defense in league action.

For the year, Tovio-Asato started 51 games and played in 52 contests. She led NMSU with 11 doubles and 74 assists on defense. The Kapolei, Hawaii, native ranked second on the team with a .336 batting average, 45 hits, 25 walks and a .458 on-base percentage.

The freshman ended the year on a 13-game streak in which she reached base. Tovio-Asato led the Aggies with a 21-game streak earlier in the season in which she became a base runner in each contest. She also ranked second on the team with 13 multiple-hit games this season.

Tovio-Asato is the third NMSU freshman in four seasons to earn All-WAC honors, joining teammates sophomore Valerie Swedberg and senior Tiare Jennings.

New Mexico State is hosting the WAC Softball Tournament this week for the second time in three years, last hosting in 2010. The tournament began Wednesday, May 9, at the NMSU Softball Complex.

Although the Aggies will not participate in this year's tournament, fans can come out to the complex to enjoy games over four days ending with the WAC Championship game at 5 p.m. Saturday, May 12.

Fans may purchase tickets at the gate or call the NMSU Ticket Office at 646-1420.

Practice to learn; learn to practice

Charlie Blanchard Golf Doctor

As promised, here is the fourth in the four-part series on how you can re-vamp your whole golf game. (I must add that you can also step up your game by coming to Performance Golf School on June 23-24 at Sonoma Ranch Golf Course.)

As any professional golf teacher will tell you, very few recreational golfers actually practice. I mean truly practice in terms of having a plan and going to the range in a disciplined fashion, preparing to play golf. They hit a few range balls and roll a couple of putts before stepping on the first tee, but they don't really spend time practicing.

Folks usually explain that it's a matter of time pressures.

"Look, I'm gone for about six hours playing my one round a week. I'd like to go to the range and practice, but I can't spare an extra few hours," a golfing doctor told me.

One partial answer is what I call "high-yield practice," an accelerated process that helps you get the most out of your limited time – and gives your game a boost. Even practicing for 45 minutes at a time, two times a week, will provide surprising – even dramatic – results.

The very first thing you need to do is practice with a purpose. Go to the range with a plan and a map of what you want to do – don't just beat out balls like a robot. Establish your goals and your game-improvement plan and plan your shot sequence according to that plan.

If one of your weak areas is long iron shots, practice lining up 160- to-190 yard shots with long irons or hybrid clubs. Get comfortable with how you hit each club and decide which you would hit when the chips are down.

Have a pattern of clubs to go through in a disciplined manner. Perhaps you like to start out with a pitching wedge. Well, then move to an 8 iron, then a 6 iron, then a hybrid, then with a fairway wood and then with a driver. Go through a progression, just like the pros do. Hit three balls with each club; and then start over again, if there's time.

Visualize the shots you would hit on the golf course, and swing the club like you mean it; like you would in competition. Estimate your distances and understand how far you hit each club under the conditions you are facing, such as wind and dry heat.

Without a rangefinder, estimate your distances and learn to play with a sense of feel. Most importantly, pick specific targets to hit at. Aim is critical on the golf course, so pay attention to aim in the practice area.

As you pay attention to aim and ball position, consciously notice your grip, posture and balance as you hit practice shots. Always visit one basic fundamental each time you practice. Golf is all about fundamentals. Be aware of your fundamentals as you practice.

Next, make your short game a priority. After spending no more than 30 minutes on the range, go to the putting green and shortgame area and practice short pitches, chips and longer putts.

If you watch tour professionals (LPGA and PGA) they tend to have a lot of confidence on short chips and pitches. That's because they practice those short shots endlessly; they know they will have such shots in the tournament, from both tight and gnarly lies.

You need to do the same thing. Spend at least 10 minutes on short chips and pitches, until you get comfortable with what club you do the best with, and how to hit the shot with good results.

When you practice, whether it's on the range or on the putting green, use your customary pre-shot routine on your practice shots. Why? It will get your timing and movements so habitual that they will seem second nature on the golf course. The whole idea of practicing is to create productive, natural and repeatable habits.

Don't beat out balls on the range and don't hit the same putt over and over again on the green; rather, go through your routine, hit the shot and assess the results as you would on the course. Dial in your various wedges. Know exactly the distance, in windless conditions, that you hit each of the clubs in your bag.

The real secret of practice is to groove a confident golf swing and eliminate mistakes.

I recommend using practice devices, such as alignment sticks, attachments to arms and knees and warm-up clubs like a Speed-stick and Orange-whip. Herb Wimberly and I urge our golfers to work on trouble shots so that you would be able to play shots from uphill, down hill, side hill and desert lies, as well as balls found in divots, behind trees or bushes and highly awkward lies like pine straw or rocks.

High-yield practice includes spending time on the putting green.

When I was in rehab following my injury and surgeries, I went to the practice green as soon as I was able, to get the feel of my putting stroke and to get back to golf. We played putting games for a few bucks, and that was the most helpful of all.

When there is money on the line, you take more time and pay greater attention to what you are doing. If you lose money, you spend time correcting the mistakes you made the last time. I enjoy games and putting competitions.

I think putting for "real" replicates the on-course conditions you probably will face and mostly makes you prepared for the mental challenges of having to make a six-footer.

As much as I believe in games on the putting green I also believe in training aids for a way to groove your putting stroke. Of course, my favorites are the string line and the chalk line. I also like hitting a ball between two tees, the Eyeline putting mirror and especially putting drills Phil Mickelson got into putting drills when coach Dave Pelz urged him to make 100 consecutive three-foot putts. It took Phil several tries, but eventually he got it. That's why Phil rarely misses short putts.

At Performance Golf Schools we believe in the "80-20 Principle." That's where 80 percent of your mistakes and lost strokes happen because of the 20 percent of the shots you haven't practiced.

The 80/20 Principle applies on many areas of our life. Companies can trace 80 percent of their revenue to 20 percent of their customers. If you look at your investments, 80 percent of your monetary gains come from only 20 percent of your holdings. If you go to the gym, 80 percent of your progress is accountable from 20 percent of the machines you use.

Not that you should eliminate the other 80 percent of what you do, but only that you should realize where your greatest gains (and losses) are coming from.

In golf, you are wise to assess where most of your scoring shots are made and where most of your failures occur. Work on your trouble shots, and turn them into strengths. One of the ways you can make strengths out of weaknesses is to know where your weaknesses really are. Keep a small notebook and write down your common mistakes, what you need to work on and reminders of things to be aware of.

Whether it's practicing the piano, going to swimming practice or practicing golf, the essential purpose for practicing is to perform better when it counts the most. We practice to ingrain good habits to become proficient in techniques that should become automatic, while gaining confidence.

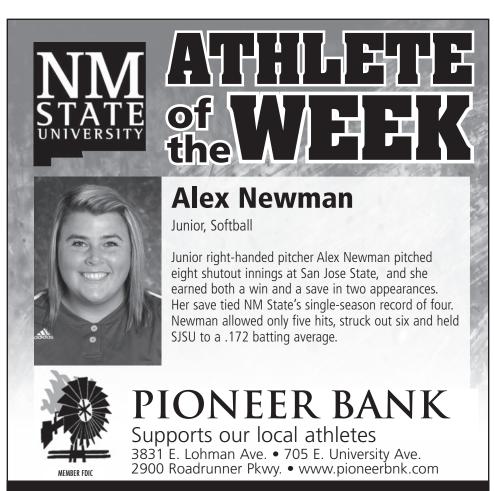

When we mention "habits" with the golf swing, we're talking about tempo, weight shift, release, balance and swing plane, to mention

You can't (and shouldn't) keep track of those things when you're on the golf course with a scorecard and pencil.

And, of course, ideally, we should have a coach; but most casual golfers eschew coaching in favor of doing it themselves by trial and error. Error tends to get the upper hand.

Think about it. Wouldn't you want to get much-needed professional feedback about your swing and your putting from a reliable source? Not only will lessons (and golf school) save you a lot of time, your game is guaranteed to improve.

Congratulations

Four graduates worthy of a special note

Jack Nixon Jack's Corner

The semester is now at an end, and two commencement ceremonies Saturday, May 12, mark the academic achievements of thousands of Aggies, including four graduates from athletics I want to tell you about.

David Niumatalolo will receive a bachelor's degree in biology, but that is the tip of the Hawaiian iceberg. Niumatalolo from Kahuku, Hawaii, was named to the first team CoSIDA/Capital One Football Academic All-America Team.

His academic prowess is equaled by his gridiron contributions, as he led the Aggies in sacks with 12-1/2 big stops.

I think it is important to remind you that NM State student athletes graduate at a higher level than the average enrollee. From first class to last final, student athletes at NM State earn degrees at a 20 percent higher rate than the rest of the student body.

Kelli Goodan from Des Moines, N.M., is a name you recall from the Aggies' volleyball NCAA teams of this decade. Goodan will accept her advanceddegree diploma Saturday.

Her studies were in agriculture, and she also has completed her student teaching.

She was one of the most

She was one of the most consistent players to toil for Mike Jordan. That farm life teaches perseverance and hard work. While hitting the books for her master's degree, she also helped Jordan with coaching duties that put her on the road just like her days as an undergrad, but she stayed the course and will be on her way to a classroom of her own.

The other two athletic department grads come from men's basketball. Wendell McKines will have his degree in hand after a kaleidoscope of experiences in Las Cruces. A foot surgery, a wife, two NCAA trips and numerous awards for his on-court performances were some of the highlights for McKines in his stay in the Mesilla Valley.

I doubt those awards will be as treasured as the degree McKines has earned. His growth in his five years here tells me the degree will be put to good use when his double-double producing playing days are over.

The final grad I want to discuss is men's basketball associate head coach Paul Weir. He is getting his MBA to go with his "basketball Ph.D."

Weir has added classes here and there as he could through his run as Marvin Menzies' "doctor of defense," and the reward will be passed along Saturday.

The road for student athletes toward a degree is steeper than for the regular student. Mandatory practice time and travel that takes athletes away from classroom lectures makes the journey more difficult, but no less worth it.

Congratulations to all the grads this spring.

Life's lessons learned

Aggies didn't pack it in during a tough season

Kathy Rodolph Softball Head Coach

This time of year, Aggie softball is usually preparing for a championship run in our conference tournament.

The chance to advance to postseason is what all competitive athletes, coaches and fans dream about – a dream we realized in 2011 with WAC regular season and WAC Tournament Championships.

While NM State is hosting the 2012 WAC Softball Tournament here in sunny Las Cruces this week, our Aggies will not compete for a repeat title. Unfortunately, we did not compete well enough in the early part of our conference schedule to earn the right to be there.

There are numerous reasons why. In fact, in my 25 years of coaching, I have never seen a team besieged by more injuries or illness at a worse time in the season.

On March 20, these Aggies were 18-12 and receiving votes in major polls when they rode into Tucson, Ariz., and upset No. 14 Arizona, a feat NM State softball had not accomplished since 2000.

When we arrived in Provo, Utah, to begin WAC play against BYU on March 23, we had lost both starting middle infielders to ACL tears so our pregame practice was a tryout session for new middle infielders. We had five starters and three reserve players struggling to recover from illness.

In a matter of days, the fate of our 2012 season changed.

One of the many reasons I love college athletics is because it is often a microcosm of life's greatest lessons. Our lessons this year were painful and yet curiously out of our control.

Everyone associated with Aggie softball could have packed it in and most would have understood that the circumstances that befell us were too steep a hill to climb.

We were swept in the first three conference series we played. Reeling from our fate and grappling with what to do next, we made a collective decision: We would accept our circumstances, face the wind together and keep swinging.

I am proud of the way these Aggies fought. The Aggies swept both rivalry series with UTEP and New Mexico for the first time in my tenure. No easy feat as UNM was ranked No. 23 at the time.

They recovered to win their last two WAC series against Utah State and San Jose State. They played for nothing but the pride of their jersey and the community they represent. I wish this was an account of a comeback journey to repeat as WAC Champions, but that is not the lesson of 2012.

Aggie Pride will take you places. This year, it was not a place of championships rather lessons in unity and circumstance.

We are still hosting the WAC Softball Championships. We hope you'll join us for some of the finest softball in the country. Here is a peek at what you can expect at the WAC Softball Championships this week in Las Cruces:

Fresno State softball is the only college softball team to make it to every NCAA postseason. Head coach Margie Wright, one of the winningest coaches in all of college softball, will coach her final season at the helm of Fresno State softball.

The Rainbow Wahine from Hawai'i will attempt another championship run as they did in 2010 when they reached the Women's College World Series. The BYU Cougars are competing for another run at the NCAA post-season. Nevada will also compete for the last time under the WAC umbrella.

Pan Am crew gets ready

Center abuzz in graduation preparations

By Rachel Christiansen

Las Cruces Bulletin

The day parents, family and friends get to see their loved ones grace the stage to accept a degree proving years of hard work finally paid off is worth a thousand memories to all those involved.

But that day would not be as memorable without those who work behind the scenes to make it so – planning, cleaning, organizing and working their tails off to make everything go off without a hitch.

"Graduation day is sometimes the first time these families have seen NMSU, so we want to make sure everything is perfect," said Shacoy Parra, guest services manager at New Mexico State University's Pan American Center.

Parra and her crew began preparing the Pan Am two weeks before the commencement ceremonies of Doña Ana Community College, NMSU and Gadsden, Las Cruces, Mayfield and Oñate high schools.

With a total of seven graduations to accommodate, all chairs, floors and stage set up must be up to par for each one – a difficult task with back-to-back graduations scheduled for both the NMSU ceremonies Saturday, May 12, and the high school graduations Saturday, May 19.

"We will probably be working overnight to make sure all the floors are waxed and ready to go," said custodial supervisor Loretta Ramirez.

The 50-member crew holding down the Pan Am will be awaiting arrival of the expected 9,000 guests for the NMSU graduations alone.

"A lot of our crew members are also students who have their own schedules and finals to work around as well," Parra said.

With this year's first set of NMSU graduates set to take the stage at 9 a.m., an hour earlier than years past, the crew will start morning-of preparations at a bright and early 6 a.m.

As a full-service event center, the Pan Am not only hosts graduations, but Aggie sports games, concerts and other events as well.

Over the years, the crew has learned some important lessons on what it takes to make graduation day go as smoothly as possible.

"A few years ago, we had a circus in here right before the graduations," Parra said. "It's not easy to get rid of the smell of elephant."

In December 2009, the Trans-Siberian Orchestra made an appearance at the Pan Am two days prior to the graduations, causing a bit of panic over the smoke that still lingered from the show.

According to Parra, the few days before the graduations are now blocked off so as to not have any of those previous issues.

When the doors finally open to accept the incoming crowd waiting to see their graduates, the guest service crew will be there to help everyone navigate their way to a seat with a smile on their faces.

"That's probably the hardest part is just making sure everyone is happy and knows where they are going," said Brittany Burlbaw of guest services.

In order to have a pleasant ceremony for everyone involved, the Pan Am does prohibit certain items from being used while graduation is in progress. Any type of noisemakers, silly string or beach balls are not allowed.

"It would be a shame for someone to miss their graduate's name being called because of the noise," Parra said.

Although the crew is in for some days filled with long hours to ensure everyone's graduation experience is memorable, they all know it's worth it to the parents and family of the hard-working graduates.

Septic tank help available

More than 50 homes already modernized

The Office of the Natural Resource Trustee (ONRT) and the New Mexico Environment Department (NMED) have an ongoing project to assist indigent households within the Middle Rio Grande Basin eliminate illegal cesspools or substandard household septic systems that threaten water quality and public health.

ONRT has funded the project with $230,000 from natural resource damage settlements from hazardous substance contamination sites.

NMED administers the project by recruiting and screening indigent households, and permitting, overseeing and inspecting the work done by a licensed construction contractor.

A pilot project in Doña Ana County funded by an appropriation from the Legislature has already been completed. More than 50 indigent households have had modern septic systems installed on their property, or have been connected to public sewer.

The 2009 Legislature created the Liquid Waste Disposal System Assistance Fund in the state treasury to provide assistance to indigent households statewide. Unfortunately, money has not been available to appropriate into the fund since its creation.

More information on the program is available by calling the NMED offices in Santa Fe at 800-219-6157.

Rep visits early college high school

Low dropout rate impresses Pearce the opportunity to receive college credit

By Adam R. Baca

Arrowhead Park Early College High School welcomed Rep. Steve Pearce on Friday, May 4, for a tour of the young school located on the New Mexico State University campus.

Las Cruces Public Schools Superintendant Stan Rounds led the tour that allowed Pearce to see the students at work and get an idea of what APECHS

"It's a pretty exciting thing as a policy maker," Pearce said.

Pearce walked into multiple classrooms to see what the students and teachers were up to. He even offered help to students busy at work and gave them the chance to ask questions.

The school first opened its doors in August 2011 with 118 freshmen. There are currently 232 students at the school, comprising only freshman and sopho-

"I've been adding about 120," APECHS principal Jennifer Amis said about the number of students added each semester. She said she already has another 120 students confirmed for the next semester.

This is the first early college high school in New Mexico and could be used as a model for places around the state as it has proven to reduce dropout rates. According to the communications director for LCPS, Jo Galván, early college high schools typically have a dropout rate of 5 percent or less.

Pearce said New Mexico currently has a dropout rate of about 30 to 40 percent and something needs to be done to bring down the number.

'We can't do that anymore," Pearce said. "Dropouts are very expensive."

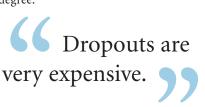

Currently, APECHS has not had one single dropout, Amis said. The national dropout rate for early college high schools is significantly lower than that of normal high schools.

Galván said when students dropout it can be costly. If dropouts decide to come back to school, they have to be re-taught alongside other incoming students.

That has a big impact on having to re teach," Galván said. "It all trickles

"Our thesis was to cut dropout rates to zero," Rounds said.

Another positive aspect of APECHS is students are able to earn college credit while working toward their high school diploma, at no cost, since it is funded by the state. It is even possible for some students to leave APECHS with a high school diploma as well as an associate's

STEVE PEARCE. U.S. representative

"I think it's a really good opportunity for me," said Breeze Duran, a freshman at APECHS. "It saves money on col-

The reason some students may walk away with an associate's degree along with their high school diploma is because of dual-credit classes.

If a student takes a biology class at APECHS, not only do they get a standard biology credit, but also college credit for biology 101G, Amis said.

"Whenever I graduate, I'll have my associate's degree in applied science, and in two more years I can get my bachelor in mechanical engineering," Duran said while her classmates were trickling into the classroom and finding seats.

"They are achieving excellence be-yond our expectations," Amis said. "The kids are really doing well."

Not only does APECHS give students at no cost, students are given the opportunity to be even more prepared for the workforce once they are graduates.

"These kids have chosen to focus on a strict academic program," Galván said. "They have a goal before they even Galván said sometimes, if a graduate is not properly trained for the workforce, then the workforce has to pay for training the student could have received at APECHS. This is another way the program helps to save money.

Students must apply in order to be accepted into the APECHS, Amis said. She said she always sits down with applicants and their parents to make sure it is what the students want. It does not cost anything to attend the school.

At APECHS, there are no athletic or music programs that traditional schools would offer, Amis said. Instead, students can focus on a certain career path to help better prepare them for college or the workforce.

The students graduating have to be ready to go," Pearce said.

APECHS may be the first early college high school in New Mexico, but Pearce said he would like to see more of them built throughout the state.

"This is becoming a model for the state of New Mexico," Galván said. 'There has been a lot of interest in Arrowhead Park."

We should be converting more of our schools," Pearce said.

APECHS classes have a focus on science, technology, engineering and mathematics.

"We want to be able to replicate another one in another year or two," Galván said.

She said a second early college high school would be near the current school and would focus on preparing students for health-related jobs such as nursing and medical technologies.

'The more options we have for students, the better off they are," Amis

Gilbert Sanchez, a computer technician with Advanced Systems Development on White Sands Missile Range, readies new tablets for use by data collectors during the Network Integration Evaluation exercises being held this month.

Tablet PC to replace paper

NIE brings technology to the battlefield

is beginning to replace paper with digital data collection options in preparation for the next Network Integration Evaluation (NIE) at White Sands Missile Range.

NIEs are large scale evaluation events designed to mature the Army's tactical network, a wireless computer network that provides the soldier with new and improved methods of communication.

Part of the Army's agile acquisition process, the evaluation takes systems, devices and other equipment under consideration and places them in the hands of soldiers from the 2nd Brigade Combat Team, 1st Armored Division, under the Brigade Modernization Command.

Over the course of the evaluation, which is the largest of its kind, soldiers take the systems and attempt to use them as they would during actual operations in theater. Data collected from the systems' performances can then be given to Army leaders, allowing decision makers to more rapidly determine if a system is ready for use, in need of further development or in need of cancellation.

One of the challenges of this data collection process is accurate test officer observations and timely soldier feedback. NIE evaluations can easily fill an entire day with soldiers and test officers conducting missions, troubleshooting systems under evaluation and coordinating solutions with system developers.

Under the previous system, soldiers and test officers would have to write their observations and notes by hand in the field and then transcribe them into a computerized database at the end of the day.

"The idea behind the tablets is saving time for the user," said Maj. Bradley Stremlau, an evaluation officer with ATEC's Army Evaluation Center. "In the old days, we just had pen and paper and the soldiers and test officers were just writing their observations down, and they'd still have to go to a network kiosk and input all this data. So you would have 20, 30 or 40 pages of notes you'd have to input."

After a long summer day of operations in the New Mexico desert, sitting down at a computer late at night to accurately copy over notes can be daunting. Using the tablets, data collectors can instead just visit the nearest network kiosk and upload their day's notes.

'There are going to be eight kiosks, or data collection sites, up range through the NIE, all throughout the range, and the object of the game is, the soldiers or data collectors will take their tablet to this kiosk, hook it up to the

The Army Test and Evaluation Command network and then download their day's work," said Fil Macias, chief of the networks and control division of the Systems Integration Directorate.

> As WSMR is currently installing a wireless test network for the range, it's expected that eventually the kiosks will be able to be reduced in number or eliminated as well, replaced with the wireless network and data collection apps.

> "Hopefully in the future as our wireless capabilities come up they'll be able to drive by and the tablet will pick up the signal and download the information automatically," Ma-

> While the tablets aren't a system being formally tested as part of the NİE, WSMR engineers are going to be looking at the tablets' performance to see where else on the range they could apply similar technology.

> When we started, engineers being engineers, we wanted an Android app or an Apple app. We're not there yet," Macias said. "But as we progress eventually we'll make those services; eventually we'll have those on our cloud. The exciting thing about this program is it provides an actual application and provides a trajectory for the future."

> It's expected that eventually the tablets could become standard issue for many of WSMR's data collectors, even those not working on NIE projects.

The tablets will be taking this summer's NIE by storm, having already been issued to the NIE's other major players at Army Materiel Command, the System of Systems Integration Directorate and ATEC's Operational Test Command.

"We're working with a lot of different communities," Macias said. "We're working with Army Materiel Command, Brigade Modernization Command, Information Technology Engineering Directorate, System of Systems Integration, White Sands Missile Range Materiel Test, and we proved that ATEC as an enterprise can function."

To ensure that all the personnel from the different NIE organizations are prepared to use the new devices, more than 150 of them were shipped out of White Sands to Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., and Fort Bliss, Texas, for training operations being conducted this

"I think the data collectors are excited to finally have some technology in their hands to help them collect data at NIE. They see this as a tool that will make their jobs easier and more efficient," Stremlau said.

Bible Read-a-thon a success National Day of eek the Lord and Martha Beltran reads from the Letters of Peter, Monday, May 7, at Albert Johnson Park as a Bible Read-a-thon nears completion after more than four days of reading the Bible aloud. Following along is Las Cruces Civitan President Charles Wendler, who brought the Bible Read-a-thon idea to the National Day of Prayer events after learning of an Alamogordo Bible Read-a-thon. Wendler and his wife Isela began the Read-a-thon the evening of Thursday, May 3, with less than 20 readers signed up. But readers began showing up Friday, May 4, and a steady stream of readers continued around the clock over the weekend, Wendler said. Beltran said she learned of the Read-a-thon through her church's newsletter. The Civitan group sponsored the Read-a-thon as an exercise of religious and speech freedoms. The Las Cruces Civitan group's next meeting is at 6 p.m. Monday, May 14, at the Los Compas Restaurant, 1120 Commerce Drive, where it meets the second and fourth Monday of each month.

The former Saturn dealership at 860 N. Telshor Blvd., will be opened as Lithia Dodge.

Dodge dealership returns

Lithia to open in former Saturn location

Bulletin Staff Report

By Independence Day, Las Crucens looking to buy a Dodge Ram truck or a Dodge automobile will no longer have to leave town.

The new Lithia Dodge dealership will open its doors by mid to late June at 860 N. Telshor Blvd., in the building previously occupied by a Saturn dealership.

"We're going to hire 20 to 25 people just to get started," said Mary Ann Mason, Lithia's regional personnel manager in Medford, Ore.

Those positions - which will include jobs in finance, sales, technical service, parts, repair, office work and more - could be filled at a job fair Lithia will host from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday, May 22-23, at the Hilton Garden Inn, 2550 S. Don Roser Drive.

'We're going to need quite a few people to get the doors open," Mason said. "We hope for them to be all local. We really work very hard across our company to hire local whenever possible."

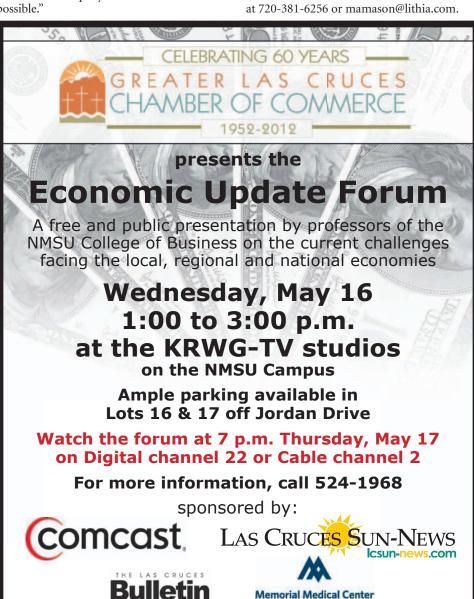

This will be the second Lithia dealership in New Mexico. Lithia opened a Chrysler Jeep Dodge dealership in Santa Fe several years ago, and operates a repair center in Las Vegas, N.M.

These are great jobs for people who are looking for something long term," said Aaron Hamilton, Lithia's personnel advertising account manager. "Lithia is a place you can grow. We have a lot of avenues.

Those avenues include nearly 90 dealerships in the United States, stretching from Alaska to Corpus Christi, Texas. Lithia has more than 4,300 team members nationwide, Hamilton said. The company was founded in 1946 in Ashland, Ore., and its headquarters are now in Medford, Ore.

Las Cruces has been without a Dodge dealership since 2009, when the company eliminated its line at Sandoval Dodge during Chrysler's financial restructuring.

LaToya Johnson, Miss Native American NMSU 2012-13, discusses the importance of a Navajo cradle board during American Indian Week, April 9-14, New Mexico State University.

Miss Native American NMSU sees title as leadership path

Student also find contests as way to share Navajo culture, history and values

Contests involving crowns are often thought of as being filled with glittering evening gowns and fancy swimsuits, but the Miss Native American New Mexico State University competition is one that values cultural knowledge, communication skills and academic achievement above all else.

A winner was crowned last month and she will help support the events, recruitment and outreach efforts of the Native American student organizations at NMSU and its American Indian Program.

LaToya Johnson impressed the judges and won the competition in part due to her demonstration of cultural competency. During the competition, Johnson discussed the different elements of the traditional Navajo cradle board, sang a lullaby in Navajo and recited a poem in Navajo.

"She carried herself in a poised and dignified manner and had a cool confidence," said Justin McHorse, director of NMSU's American Indian Program (AIP). "I commend all of the contestants because they were willing to step up to the leadership role that Miss Native American NMSU must take on."

Johnson is a freshman from Crownpoint, N.M., who is majoring in kinesiology and athletic training. After completing her undergraduate coursework she plans to attend graduate school to become a physical therapist. Johnson said she wants to set a good academic and cultural example for other students and credits her parents and traditional upbringing with giving her the inspiration to take on the challenge.

"I'm so appreciative and thankful for my parents and family support," Johnson said. "Without them, I wouldn't have been able to accomplish anything."

McHorse said it wasn't until after the competition that he found out Johnson has participated in several Navajo pageants, and at the age of 19, counts this as her eighth title. That being said, Johnson still considers this one of her greatest accomplishments because she gets to represent Native American students and NMSU.

The pageant was coordinated by the Native American Business Students Association as part of American Indian Week. McHorse said all of the student organizations in the AIP did a great job coming together to organize the events, and those participating in these type of activities get a chance to work on their leadership, organization and management skills.

Johnson said that being involved in organizations like the kinesiology club and the AIP's Peer Mentor Program helped her have a sense of community while in school. Johnson's mentor, Aileen Cruz, happened to be a former Miss Native American NMSU winner.

"I think we're going to have a good year and I look forward to working with LaToya and working together to represent the AIP, student organizations and NMSU," McHorse said. "Hopefully down the road she may want to serve as a mentor as well."

Let's tour Las Cruces: You'll love it

Richard Coltharp That's the Way of the World

It's National Tourism Week. So here's how I want to celebrate: Let's make it Local Tourism Week.

Traveling anywhere is wonderful. Traveling in New Mexico is enchantingly exquisite. From mysterious Chaco Canyon to the caverns of Carlsbad. From the other-worldly dunes of White Sands National Monument to getting your kicks on Route 66 on Central Avenue in Albuquerque. From a pilgrimage to El Santaurio de Chimayo to watching the full moon rise at City of Rocks State Park.

Some of the most enchanting things in all of New Mexico are right here in the Mesilla Valley. All too often, however, we take them for granted, overlook them or, worse, adopt an attitude of "there's nothing to do here."

This point was driven home earlier this month when Stahmanns Farms announced it was closing its retail stores.

Las Crucens were up in arms, asking, "Why?"

Everyone said they loved the tasty local pecan treats and found them to be great gifts to send to friends and family across the globe. They talked about the beautiful drive down New Mexico Highway 28, the Lou Henson Highway, on the way to the Stahmanns Country Store. It's a rite of passage for those living in the Mesilla Valley.

Unfortunately, for too many of us, it never became a ritual.

Their business couldn't weather the recession as traffic to the stores and online sales plummeted below profitability.

Walmart and McDonalds will survive if you and I only go there once a year. A local retailer like Stahmanns? It needs our regular business.

Saturday, May 12, is graduation day at New Mexico State University. Those who have guests coming in may likely take them to some of those places that make Las Cruces unique.

Do that, please.

Also do that when your company's gone.

Need some tips? Here are some of

The Triviz Plaza shopping center, featuring Kohl's, could become Las Cruces' third "power center" if all goes according to plan. Commercial real estate broker NAI 1st Valley has received three letters of intent from smaller retailers interested in developing there.

How deals get done

By Jerome Littlejohn

Drive around Las Cruces, and you will see a variety of retail developments, from large shopping centers with national retailers to small strip malls with a few "mom and pop"

Retail development projects have made recent news in Las Cruces, including the closure of Sportsman's Warehouse, the impending arrival of Dick's Sporting Goods and the retention of Best Buy.

What does it take to build a shopping center? How do retailers decide where to locate their stores?

Jake Redfearn, commercial real estate broker at NAI 1st Valley, described the lifecycle of a retail shopping center.

First, a developer identifies a potential site and solicits interest in the location from retailers, Redfearn said.

Interested retailers then analyze the demographics of the site's surrounding area, and create cost and sales estimates to determine the rent they would be willing to pay, he said. The developer then combines the rent estimates to determine the amount they will bid to purchase the property.

"Usually two or three tenants are signed on to move in to a development before land is purchased," Readfearn said. "Banks are not interested in financing speculative dirt."

VOLT plans to hire 320 people through August

Bulletin Staff Report

VOLT Workforce Solutions had a lot to gain at the 2012 Steve Pearce Job Fair.

"We're looking for 80 people every month through August," said Cynthia Chavez, of VOLT, one of 70 businesses and organizations represented at the job fair Friday, May 4, at the Las Cruces Convention Center.

By the end of the summer, VOLT will have added 320 new employees, more than doubling the current staff of 287 it houses in the Wells Fargo tower in Downtown Las Cruces.

Perhaps some of those employees will come from the approximately 500 people who attended the fair.

"I was very pleased with the number of businesses and job seekers," said U.S. Rep. Steve Pearce, who presented the fair and presided over a ribbon cutting to open the event. "Our staff has produced half a dozen job fairs in the past year, and every time we can help someone in our community better themselves and their families, we believe it is successful. We will continue to help those in the community find jobs and create opportunity."

The jobs at VOLT are for people providing inbound technical support for a "leading technology company," said Chavez, adding that qualified applicants should have at least a year of customer service experience, along with a high school diploma or equivalent.

VOLT has been open in Las Cruces nearly five years. Bilingual skills are another asset.

"We're the only call center in the U.S. that is now managing a bilingual program," Chavez said. "We have excellent retention. Nearly 65 percent of our employees have been with us since day one."

The VOLT positions start at $9 per hour, and customer service providers are eligible for monthly bonuses based on attendance and performance.

Another Las Cruces business actively seeking new people at the job fair was Allstate.

"We've already hired 120 people during 2012 and we're looking to hire 80 more," said Jessica Valdez, a team lead at Allstate's call center.

The Las Cruces Bulletin was a sponsor of the job fair, and provided free seminars on interview techniques and résumé writing.

Pearce's office will track the businesses that presented at the fair to try to determine the number of hirings tied directly to the event.

Shopping centers generally fall into one of three categories: neighborhood strip malls, shadow centers and power centers, Redfearn said.

Friday, May 11, 2012

"Neighborhood strip malls are comprised of a large grocery store and smaller tenants," he said. "Shadow centers are developments that are built near a discount superstore such as Walmart or Target. Power centers are comprised of one to two national big box retailers, such as Best Buy or Home Depot, and smaller national stores."

Power centers are the only types of retail developments that attract customers from outside the shopping center's pre-existing traffic flow, he said.

One NAI 1st project will become Las Cruces's third power center if all goes according to plan. The Triviz Plaza shopping center already houses the 68,000-square-foot Kohl's store. NAI 1st has received three letters of intent from smaller retailers interested in development as well, Redfearn said.

These letters of intent are contingent upon another national retailer locating in the planned development, Redfearn said.

Many retailers find Las Cruces attractive because of the city's demographics and relatively stable economy.

"We attract retailers that specifically target retirees and college students," Redfearn said.

As for employers, "Las Cruces is not a onehorse town. We don't rely on one major employer. Having White Sands Missile Range, NASA and (New Mexico State University) gives us a relatively stable local economy," he said.

While large shopping center developments tend to attract headlines, a significant amount of commercial real estate is owned by small investors, he said.

"There are lots of smaller developers and investors out there with lots of skin in the game," Redfearn said. "They are local people investing in their own communities."

Rich's Picks.

- Thinking La Posta will be packed on Graduation Day? You're right. Remember though, they're now open for breakfast on Saturday and Sunday. Get there at 8 a.m. and you can enjoy the parrots and chile (not together, I hope) and avoid some of the wait.
- While you're there, explore the entire Mesilla Plaza, and patronize the businesses.
   This is perhaps our greatest historical and cultural treasure, yet it's facing the same dangers Stahmanns did. Check out a film at the Fountain Theatre. Buy some gifts.
   Go to Mass.
- Stahmmans Country Store may be closed, but the Lou Henson Highway is not. Head south to the Rio Grande Winery: a beautiful setting and amazing wines. Go farther south to Chope's. My old Alamogordo friend and NMSU graduate Ron Keller educated me in 1995, when I first moved to New Mexico: If you want the complete green chile dining experience, you've got to go to Chope's. Truer words were never spoken. Go farther south still, and you'll find another great winery, La Viña, New Mexico's oldesst
- COAS Bookstore. This is a must for me. Thankfully, I've never taken COAS for granted. Whenever I need a mental break or am looking for some great reading material, this is where I head. If

- you time it right (like Saturday morning or on a Downtown Art Ramble), you can combine a lot of other stuff with a Downtown COAS visit, including the museums, galleries and the Las Cruces Farmers & Crafts Market. Top it off with a meal at Ono Grindz, Zeffiro New York Pizzeria or the outstanding Great Day with green chile and cheese at Day's Hamburgers.
- Get outside! Hike at Aguirre Spring or Dripping Springs. Go to White Sands National Monument. Visit Mesilla Valley Bosque State Park. Go to Blake's Lotaburger and sit on one of the outside benches, or take your lunch to one of Las Cruces' dozens of great parks. Just the other day, I ate my Corner Deli pastrami and turkey at Albert Johnson Park, finishing a book I'd checked out from the nearby Thomas Branigan Memorial Library.
- See something live. The possibilities are almost endless: the Rio Grande Theatre, the Hershel Zohn Theatre, the Las Cruces Community Theatre, the Black Box Theatre, a local high school production, a local ballet performance, Aggie athletics, high school sports, a band at High Desert Brewery, a concert or comedy show.

My point is this: Take advantage of my self-proclaimed Local Tourism Week and remind yourself of just some of the many reasons we like to say "Life is Good in Las Cruces."

Jon Hunner: Turning history from avocation to vocation

Department head travels area, telling the state's story

By Richard ColtharpLas Cruces Bulletin

So, to educate any Las Crucens who may have in the past confused these two individuals, dueling profiles illustrate their differences, as well as similarities.

No one becomes a history professor expecting to become a rock star.

This year, however, the academic head of New Mexico State University's history department could print up those classic black concert T-shirts with the dates and locations on the back of all the venues he's played during his Centennial Tour.

Jon Hunner has criss-crossed New Mexico during 2012, telling the story of statehood.

This is, after all, New Mexico's centennial. For Hunner, the more accurate term is centenary.

"When you've been married 25 years, you call it an anniversary, you don't call it an anniversial," Hunner said, admitting that's a battle he'll likely lose.

Since arriving in Las Cruces in 1995, much of Hunner's work has led up to this point. In preparation, he created a speech that would last about a half hour, perfect for a Rotary presentation or holding the attention of a school

"I've given the speech of the centenary all over the state," Hunner said. "Roswell, Farmington, Silver City, from second-graders on un"

Among many speeches he's given in Las Cruces was to the Sunrise Optimist Club, whose meetings start at 7 a.m.

The club consists of several older gentlemen, one of whom said, "We've got to start early. For most of us, that's our peak. It's downhill after that."

Hunner arrived at history not in the usual way.

He earned a bachelor's degree in philosophy in 1974 from St. John's College in Santa Fe. He operated a business in Santa Fe and worked at the Fine Arts Museum in the late 1980s, when he decided to go back to school. However, Hunner wasn't quite sure what he wanted to study.

"My wife said, 'All you're doing is reading history," he said.

It was true. In particular, he was reading anything he could get his hands on about the job will follow," Hunner said. "So I went to graduate school to study history."

He earned his master's, then a Ph.D. in history from the University of New Mexico, finishing in 1995. Shortly after he graduated, he headed south to Las Cruces and took the job at NMSU as director of the public history program.

Hunner's tours across New Mexico have enhanced and, in some cases, enlightened his fascination and understanding of the state's history.

"Every presentation is tweaked a little bit, for the audience I'm speaking to," Hunner said. "I like to engage the public on different levels. Humor is one."

At a recent presentation to the Las Cruces Soroptomists, that was quite evident. At times the audience was rolling with laughter.

"And there's a serious part of the presentation about racism," Hunner said of the way New Mexico was perceived by much of the United States. "It's not quite celebratory."

There have been celebrations on Hunner's

"I was speaking to some second-graders in Alamogordo and they sang 'Happy Birthday' to New Mexico," Hunner said.

6 'Do what you will follow.'

No matter how versed someone is in New Mexico history, there is something to learn from the presentation.

For instance, some may think of Santa Fe's nickname, "The City Different," as a relatively recent, trendy moniker, perhaps from the 1980s. But the name has been applied to our capital for about 100 years.

"What does it mean to be a New Mexican?" Hunner asked a recent audience.

"To make fun of Texas," he answered.

Hunner uses a map to illustrate one of the things that irritate New Mexicans about Texas. In New Mexico's northeast corner, the state shares a border with Oklahoma. Thirty-six miles south, New Mexico begins sharing its eastern border with Texas. However, it's not a straight line from the Oklahoma border. The Texas border juts four miles west.

"So Texas made a four-mile grab along our eastern border," Hunner said. "That may not sound like much, but multiply 4 miles by 300 miles and that adds up."

Among the many positive things New Mexico brought to the United States, diversity may be the most important, Hunner said

"We think of the cowboys, the Indians and the Spanish, but New Mexico is not just tricultural, but multi-cultural," he said.

New Mexico has been a leader in electing minority politicians right up to today, as Gov. Susana Martinez is the first Hispanic female governor in U.S. history.

"We helped open the way to the great movement of civil rights in this country," Hunner Hunner said he is periodically mistaken for Las Cruces businessman John Hummer.

"He works a lot in economic development, but what I do, I call it heritage development," said Hunner, who cited the many jobs in our community that are tied to history, such as the local museums and the tourism they help create

"I think I have the better gig, because with history, you can go back hundreds of years."

John Hummer: Lure of Las Cruces spurs career change

Editor's note: Their names are strikingly similar, off by just a letter or two here and there. Their backgrounds and careers, however, are quite different. So, to educate any Las Crucens who may have in the past confused these two individuals, dueling profiles illustrate their differences, as well as similarities.

Everything was set for John Hummer. A long career in hospital administration lay be-

He had proven his skills. At age 24, he was already an assistant hospital administrator. He took his first CEO job at age 28, leading the Las Vegas (Nev.) Desert Springs Hospital.

Hummer arrived in Las Cruces in July 2000 to help get a new hospital off the ground. By August 2002, MountainView Regional Medical Center had opened, with Hummer at the helm.

In 2006, however, Hummer – who has a military background - did an about face.

He left the hospital business to join forces with David Steinborn at Steinborn GMAC Real Estate, now Steinborn & Associates Real Estate, and a year later became the company's owner, broker and president.

Why the change?

"It wasn't money," he said. "Health care is much more lucrative."

Staying in health care, though, meant moving periodically from one part of the country to the next. At the time of the switch, in fact, Hummer was considering offers in Tucson, Ariz., and Tulsa, Okla.

"My wife, Amy, and I decided we didn't want to move," Hummer said.

The decision boiled down to quality of life, being independent and making Las Cruces

"I was at an event and David Steinborn asked me, 'What do you want to do?'" Hummer said.

"I said, 'I don't know.'

Steinborn said, "I mean with your life." "And I said, 'Oh, that,'" Hummer said.

"He asked me if I wanted to buy his business. I just laughed.

"But two months later, I came back and asked, 'David, were you serious?'

They worked out the agreement. Steinborn stayed on for a year to help with the transition. In 2007, Hummer took the reins.

Some may not see many parallels between running a hospital and selling real estate. For Hummer, though, the change was not

"Business is business - relationships, decision making," Hummer said. "I like to think all the good management training in the health care world was transferable. Either way, it was my business now and I had to get up every morning and make it work.'

A big advantage, Hummer said, was getting to work with his wife.

"Amy's a partner," he said. "I'm proud that, with Amy, we've done it together. We balance each other well. I do the business development, Amy does the banking.

"And we've been blessed with a great group of people. I consider them great co-workers and also friends.

Unfortunately, not long after Hummer took over, the recession arrived, spurred by the national mortgage crisis and its massive impact on real estate.

"In the fourth quarter 2008, cash flow stopped," Hummer said.

So what did he do?

"The best time to grow is when the market is at a standstill," Hummer said.

So on March 17, 2009, Hummer merged with another real estate company in Las Cruces, Emerick Real Estate.

When Hummer purchased Steinborn, the company had 23 percent of the real estate market share in Las Cruces.

Despite the economy, Hummer was pleased with the direction of his new company. The merger enhanced that, he said, because of the quality of individuals at Emerick.

"You bring on great people and share the momentum," he said. "We grew 10 market points from 23 to 33. Last year we had 40 percent of market share.

"Our greatest satisfaction is surviving the real estate bubble."

Does he ever look back and wonder?

"My purpose (in changing careers) was to be more entrepreneurial, to be at risk," he said. "But also it was about freedom. If you live your entire life being held captive, no amount of money is worth it."

Today, if he wants to take an afternoon off to watch his son Alex play in a Las Cruces High School baseball game, he can do that. If he and Amy need to do something for their other son, Sam, they can do that.

Hummer remains active in many local organizations, and also devotes time to those as needed.

"I enjoy those civic obligations, but I also see it as a duty," he said. "This community has done so much for me and my family, and it's a way to give back.

Before this article, Hummer had never met his near namesake, New Mexico State University professor Jon Hunner, but he already feels

"My brother Hans is at Wayne State University in Detroit," Hummer said. "He's a full history professor, teaching medieval history."

Many regulations cost businesses billions of dollars

Jim Spence Business Matters

Every year, American businesses are forced to divert billions of hard-earned dollars to stay in compliance with countless federal laws, rules and regulations.

Politically speaking, anyone with credibility would not dare to suggest all government regulations be abolished.

Still, those who realize government has become fat and bloated in many ways are often characterized as being in favor of eliminating all government regulations and safeguards.

This is a ruse.

Tens of thousands of government mandates and $3.6 trillion in annual federal spending have dramatic effects on virtually all aspects of our markets. Here are four quick examples:

1. American savers are dissatisfied with the current "market" rates of return on interest bearing instruments. They need to look no further than government intervention that has intervened to lower the Treasury Department's borrowing costs.

2. Americans emptying their bank accounts to fill up at gas stations can thank a plethora of rules and regulations that restrict domestic oil production for high prices.

3. U.S. government guarantees loans for non-competitive companies like Solyndra. The result is the absurd production of useless products that are neither wanted nor needed, with billions in accompanying taxpayer losses when they fail.

4. Man-made climate change research grants are made available by governments around the world, but only to scientists with a pre-disposition to bolster the theory. Exposure of anti-scientific methods associated with the recent "Climategate" scandal reveal how grant-receiving scientists, desperate to keep government research dollars flowing in their direction, have been hiding temperature data and suppressing the publishing of scientific papers by other scientists whose findings contradict their own.

To be fair, not all scientists respond to the incentives created by the billions of dollars worth of grants that back the political effort to transform man-caused climate change from theory to fact.

However, recent defections from the American Physicists Society by former 1973 Physics Nobel Prize winner Dr. Ivar Giaever and noted University of California at Santa Barbara scientist Harold Lewis over the shockingly anti-scientific behavior of the organization are quite extraordinary.

The scathing resignation letter written by Dr. Lewis, which was sent to APS President Curtis G. Callan, should be read by all fact seekers. You can read the Lewis letter verbatim on the Internet.

The letter includes a chilling account of a petition submitted by Lewis calling for an open debate on man-made climate change by APS. It was signed by more than 200 scientists. The petition was ignored by APS and efforts for open debate were squelched.

Is this science at work or politically driven economics?

Would members of our scientific community actually suppress scientific inquiry and debate?

The short answer is yes.

The Lewis episode is an eerie reminder of how eminent physicist Ludwig Boltzmann was silenced near the end of the 19th century. Boltzmann was ostracized for his non-conformist views on atomic physics. Later his findings were proven correct.

Tragically, Boltzmann was so disillusioned and despondent over the systematic blockade of scientific inquiry and squelching of debate within his profession, he eventually committed suicide.

Government actions and interventions have an overwhelming influence on the incentive structures affecting all 21st century markets.

It is a complete waste of time to pretend if traditional free market fundamentalists have their way America could become a society where there would be no environmental or public safety regulations whatsoever.

Big government intervention proponents drive most markets and the four examples listed above are the tip of an iceberg.

Taking a cue from Hollywood

Possible social media strategies for small business

Jerome Littlejohn Lunchtime MBA

Alien invasions, latex clad superheroes and Abraham Lincoln killing vampires with a wood axe. Yup, we are entering the summer movie season.

According to movie industry tracking firm Box Office, the 2012 movie season has the potential to top the industry's 2009 summer movie ticket sales record of $4.2 billion. Along with traditional sales forecast methods, Box Office also monitors how consumers interact with a movie's social media and websites to help forecast ticket sales.

Box Office uses both qualitative and quantitative metrics for social media and web interactions. The company measures the number of Facebook friends a movie's page has and the number of times a movie's trailer is viewed on its official website.

Box Office also creates a "positive to negative" comment ratio for comments on a movie's official website and tweets that mention the movie.

The data can yield intriguing insights. As of the writing of this column, Marvel's 'The Avengers" was the subject of more than 36,000 tweets with a 10-to-1 positive to negative comment ratio. Box Office projected the movie's opening weekend sales to be $170 million. (The actual number turned out to be higher, $207.4 million.)

In comparison, "Battleship," which is set to open Friday, May 18, was the subject of roughly 3,500 tweets with a 7-to-1 positive to negative comment ratio. Box Office projects its opening weekend sales to be $48 million.

Social media metrics aren't just for Hollywood moguls. Smaller businesses can also use social media to augment their market research efforts. Generally, a company's social media interactions are with its most emotionally involved customers.

Monitoring these interactions can lead to clues about customer loyalty, the effectiveness of sales promotions, and if a business is generating positive word of mouth.

Two of my favorite local watering holes have rather a ctive Facebook accounts. De La Vega's Pecan Grill and Brewery has more than 1,200 followers, and posts updates almost daily. Amaro Winery has close to 500 followers and a core group of people who are friends both on and offline.

One need not invent sophisticated algorithms to analyze social media interactions. Taking a few minutes to review a social media account and answer a few key questions can be insightful.

Are customers recommending the business? Do customers share or retweet promotional messages? Are customers following each other on Twitter and friending each other on Facebook? Is there a difference between the customers on social media and the businesses's target customer? How many new followers or subscribers does the business average per month?

A "one-size fits all" online social media strategy does not exist. The flexibility of online social media has led to a number of creative business uses.

However, regardless of the strategy employed, businesses must monitor and analyze how customers interact with the company online to ensure their efforts are effective.

Setting the course beyond high school graduation

Rite of passage ceremony bittersweet for parents

Graduation. It's a word that inspires a lot of emotion.

For college students, it's the end of education and the beginning of application – literally. For high school students, it's bittersweet.

It's the realization that one long chapter in life is closing. All that they've really known over the past 13 years is ending. Possibly saying good-bye to lifelong friends. While at the same time, it's the anticipation and excitement of starting a new chapter, possibly in a new place, and all the unknowns of change that lie before them – in college or at the start

As a parent of a graduating senior, it's bittersweet for me, too.

I find myself second-guessing so much – is he ready? Did his father and I give him the skill sets he'll need to live on his own hundreds of miles away?

Will he leave our home with a strong set of values, an understanding of who he is and who he can be, and will he have the self-confidence and strength to make the right choices even if he must stand alone?

What I do know, is the key to his life and livelihood and plans for a family in the future are dependent upon his educational plans

Thanks to the vast research I do in the context of my work to connect education, workforce and economic development, I can offer him some very real and relevant advice about making not just the commitment to earn a post-secondary degree, but to make sure it lines up with career fields that are hiring and will be hiring for the long-term.

So, if you will indulge me in my melancholy mood, I'd like to share, parent-to-parent, what I'm learning to help you steer your kids toward the best future for themselves and

Our young men and women are graduating in uncertain times. Skyrocketing jobless rates today may not be the case after two or four or more years of college. Right now, there are an estimated 3 million jobs going unfilled simply because they don't match the qualifications of the more than 10 million currently unemployed.

There is specifically a crisis in our country in the scientific fields, as many of the generation that entered their careers during the heady days of the space race are coming upon retirement, and we simply don't have enough young people ready and prepared to replace

The students that choose not to pursue any education beyond high school will place themselves in a limiting position in a 21st century economy that demands proficiency in technical skills.

The number of jobs that can be filled by those with a high school diploma or GED are dwindling, and the income levels in those career fields are becoming less and less sufficient to support strong, healthy, thriving families.

So no matter how "done" they may feel with school, they will never be sorry if they just commit to spending the next year or two earning a certification or associate's degree from the community

In the state of New Mexico, jobs that require that level of post-secondary education make up most of the job market, and we, as a state, just don't produce enough of those qualified candidates.

Students who have the resolve to earn their bachelor's degree need to be very intentional about their plan of attack.

The longer it takes to graduate, the less likely they will.

So help them make a solid and doable four-year plan and stick to it. Without the golden ticket of a diploma, they can find themselves with a lot of student debt and not a lot of opportunity to apply a half-finished education to a well-paid career. The studies do show that of all unemployed, the least likely to be unemployed are those holding post-secondary degrees.

And, of course, the higher the degree, the more your earning potential.

However, it is important to pursue a bachelor's degree in a career field that is not dwindling. Demand for the liberal arts degrees that were so plentiful back in the Stone Age when I was in school is not keeping pace with the demand for the STEM-related degrees (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math).

Parents, walk alongside your young adults to do the research now. Check out websites like www.payscale.com to review the children are interested. Find out income levels and make sure that the investment you make as parents in time and resources today provides the greatest return on investment for you and your children for the rest of their lives.

College Salary Report and review online articles about pay scales and workforce projections in the career fields in which your New Mexico

Philip San Filippo:

Newcomer excited to bring others to Las Cruces

Key players organized to realize city's potential

By Alta LeCompte

Buoyed by the belief that Las Cruces in the next three to five years will become "a very serious player in the tourism and meetings business," Philip San Filippo has accepted the challenge to make that happen.

A veteran of the industry, he is the new executive director of the Las Cruces Convention & Visitors Bureau.

Spaceport America is one reason he is optimistic about the future of tourism in the City of the Crosses. The commercial space travel facility will give the area national visibility in the coming years, he said.

"A lot of elements are already in place – the convention center, hotels, a variety of attractions," he said. "I see the most important part of my job as pulling that all together. We all have to bring our game up to a higher level."

He said to get to the next level, tourism must be well organized and coordinated as an industry.

"We shouldn't be competing against each other; we should be competing with other destinations," he said.

Partnering with hotels

For starters, he is meeting once a month with representatives of the local hotel industry, which he believes is the bureau's most important "client." Restaurants and attractions soon will be invited to participate, he said.

He also has met with representatives of the convention center.

"I laid out a plan for which markets we should go after, which they can tap into. We obviously want to tap into their international database," he said, referring to Global Spectrum Inc., which manages the local convention center and 112 venues worldwide.

San Filippo anticipates joint efforts with the convention center and "our hotel partners" to target key players in associations, government and small corporations that could bring conventions to town.

The goal, he said, is to bring in visitors who will stay overnight.

San Filippo said he currently is trying to "get a handle" on the seasonal fluctuations in travel to Las Cruces.

"The overall general pattern seems to be that December through February – and July and August – are slower, although this August is going to be very, very busy due to sporting events and some meetings," he said.

Courting New Mexico tourists

Meanwhile, San Filippo plans to target prospective customers closer to home.

"We will concentrate initially on a radius of about 300 miles – Tucson, Phoenix, Albuquerque, Santa Fe," he said.

"We know our business is coming from within the state of New Mexico. I want to focus first on close markets, do a good job in those markets, and then move on from there."

Promoting events such as the upcoming wine festival and film festival that draw overnight visitors will be an important focus of CVB's efforts.

San Filippo said promoting events requires a minimum lead time of four to six months.

He said organizations that want CVB to help promote an event should allow that much time.

"We need to look at their marketing plan, make sure hotels are available, and make certain it's something we think we could help with," he said.

Marketing paradise in the Caribbean

San Filippo made a name for himself helping to even out the seasonal ups and downs in Cayman Island tourism while working for the Ministry of Tourism from 1997 to 2001.

Although his current employer is the City of Las Cruces, the challenges are similar to those of working for a national government, he said.

"When I first got there, the problem we faced was that the Cayman Islands were known as a scuba diving and banking destination," San Filippo said.

The summer season historically was very slow, so he targeted families, putting together off-season vacation packages that would appeal to them.

"The other market we went after was the romance market," he said. "We started building and growing those markets."

Traveling for business and pleasure

As a youngster growing up in New Jersey, San Filippo went on family vacations close to home.

"I was the one who really got the travel bug," he said.

Several years after he earned an MBA, his passion for travel led him to focus on the travel industry as a career. Starting out as a travel agent, he soon was recruited by a major tourism company that collaborated with Delta and Continental Airlines to offer packages. He later became their international product development director for Europe and Asia.

His personal favorite destinations include Italy, France and Estonia – where he has a lot of friends – the Cayman Islands and Aruba.

He and his wife, Marsha, enjoy a Broadway Blitz each year, seeing four plays in three days.

On his bucket list? An Alaskan cruise (not for the cruising, but for the best view of the scenery), Scandinavia beyond Sweden, and Australia (first for scuba diving and then to see the major cities).

Fiscal cliff looms over U.S. economy, New Mexico

UK provides lesson on how not to balance a budget

Chris Erickson State of the Economy

The United States faces a looming fiscal cliff come Jan. 1, 2013. That is when a series of tax increases and across-the-board spending cuts take effect.

The extension of the Bush tax cuts expires at the end of the year, as does a temporary cut in the payroll tax. The Alternative Minimum Tax also needs to be fixed by year's end to avoid a tax increase for many taxpayers. Meanwhile, $1.2 trillion in spending cuts take effect at the end of the year as part of the debt-ceiling compromise from last summer.

Common sense, as well as economic theory, tells one that such draconian fiscal austerity can't be good for the economy.

Nevertheless, some - often of the tea party variety - argue that the scheduled tax increases and spending cuts should be allowed to go forward, even welcomed. They take the position that the top priority should be deficit reduction.

Those who think that way should rethink their position, especially in light of the news out of Europe. Eight out of 17 Eurozone economies are in recession - Belgium, Portugal, the Netherlands, Greece, Ireland, block, the United Kingdom, Denmark and the Czech Republic are also suffering downturns. There is no doubt that austerity budgets are a major cause of the economic problems in Europe.

The case of the United Kingdom is particularly instructive. Austerity budgets can make sense as the lesser of evils when a country faces a loss of confidence among borrowers. Countries, such as Italy and Spain, that can borrow only at a premium, must choose between continued high interest rates and deficit reduction. Greece really had no choice at all as financial markets were refusing further loans.

But the United Kingdom did not face this tradeoff. The UK was not paying an interest rate premium, but rather faced rather modest interest rates, reflecting the perceived strength of its economy relative to those of other European nations. Nevertheless, David Cameron's government chose to enact an austerity budget. His government's actions have pushed the UK into recession, reinforcing the global slowdown already affecting Europe. The wrong policy enacted at the wrong time, just making matters worse for the UK and for

The recession in Britain is a cautionary tale for the United States. Like the United Kingdom, the United States is not facing interest rate premiums; indeed, the United States continues to be viewed as a safe haven by international investors, and as a consequence, U.S. government debt continues to enjoy near record low interest rates. The United States does not currently have a debt problem. Rather the main issue facing us is sluggish growth.

Should the United States jump off the fiscal cliff come Jan. 1, New Mexico will be particularly hard hit.

Among the 50 states, as of 2009, we rank fourth in largest net benefit from federal spending, with each of us receiving on average $9,475 more back from the federal government than we paid. Cuts to military spending, the national labs and in social programs will all adversely affect our economy

We do need to address the federal deficit, but we don't need to do it right now, not in the middle of a weak recovery, not at a time when the U.S. economy continues to suffer from 8.1 percent unemployment.

Once the economy is back in full growth mode again, that will be the time to address

Farmers prepare information for State Engineer

June 30 deadline looms for irrigation data

By Marvin Tessneer

Las Cruces Bulletin

Irrigation groups are urging members to get their irrigation records in order to demonstrate need and protect their water rights for the current New Mexico Office of the State Engineer adjudication.

Active parties in the adjudication are the Elephant Butte Irrigation District, Southern Rio Grande Diversified Crop Farmers Association and the New Mexico Pecan Growers, which are advising members that June 30 is the deadline to "prove up" their water rights.

"We're working with the farmer members to get their information in to the State Engineer to prove up their water rights," Bill Gomez, diversified farmers executive director, said.

"We're advising farmers of their responsibility to prove up their water rights for groundwater limits," said Gary Esslinger, EBID treasurer-manager.

In August 2011, then Third Judicial District

Judge pro tem Jerald Valentine issued the final judgment on the adjudication. The judgment granted farmers with surface river water 3 acre-feet.

Farmers who have combined surface water and groundwater rights – or only groundwater rights – were adjudicated the right of farm delivery of 4.5 acre-feet, according to the judgment.

"Farmers with combined surface water and groundwater rights as well as groundwateronly rights who choose to prove rights to a larger amount need to file notice," the judgment ruled.

Farmers who apply for extra water are required to submit data records, acreage values and affidavits of water use on the land.

Under terms of the adjudication, the OSE is monitoring the groundwater pumping with meters to determine how it is changing the aquifer.

Currently, the region has 1,700 metered irrigation wells and a total of 2,700 metered wells.

That total includes dairy, commercial, domestic, industrial, subdivision, mutual domestic, municipal, livestock, schools, mobile home parks, mining, construction and utilities, the OSE reported.

The EBID controls water rights for 90,640 acre-feet within its district. The bureau is granting the EBID 6 inches for the 2012 season, not much improvement over last season's 4 inches. Delivery for a normal snow pack runoff is 3 acre-feet.

The OSE's interest is not limited to the basin aquifer.

The agency and farmers' groups also are watching reservoir levels, which the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation reported were: Elephant Butte, 364,300 acre-feet, 18 percent of a full reservoir; and Caballo, 29,700 acre-feet, 13 percent of capacity. Last year at this time, the storage at Elephant Butte was 376.000 acrefeet, the bureau reported.

"The year 2012 is a difficult year for New Mexico farmers in the Lower Rio Grande Valley," State Engineer Scott Verhines said. "Rio Grande Project surface water supplies are low, and the 2008 Project Operating Agreement compounds the hardship by allocating less surface water to our EBID farmers. We recognize that limiting over-diversion or groundwater may look unfair during such dry times. However, over diversions in one area can impact neighbors in another. Our team is working to protect the sustainability or our water resources, protect our farmers for the long term and follow the decisions determined by the court. We encourage any and all questions and will work with the irrigators to help them survive this dry year."

The final judgment also allows EBID farmers to continue transporting groundwater that has been pumped under one groundwater right to other farms in the district.

"This water transportation must be done through EBID and will continue to be subject to EBID's rules and policies," according to the State Engineer.

The snow pack runoff is not encouraging, according to the Natural Resources Conservation Service. The snow pack in the Rio Grande Basin is rapidly melting, with only 18 percent remaining, compared with 54 percent recorded at this time last year.

State fast-tracks drinking water funding

The New Mexico Finance Authority Board of Directors has agreed to fund four drinking water projects from its Drinking Water State Revolving Loan Fund, including one in Doña Ana County.

Lower Rio Grande Power, Water and Wastewater Association will receive a loan for the installation and replacement of some 3,400 manual-read meters with radio-read meters in the county.

Funding for the four projects totals almost $3.5 million.

The largest – more than $1.5 million – was approved for the city of Tucumcari to replace a 70-year-old water storage tank and install new water meters.

"The state is undertaking a comprehensive effort to promote funding for projects that improve water quality up and down the value chain – from the water source to its use," said Denise Baker, chair of the Finance Authority Board. "As more people learn about these programs, we find there is more and more interest in applying."

The revolving loan fund program provides low-cost financial assistance to public water systems to fund the cost of repair and replacement of drinking water infrastructure, maintain or achieve compliance with the federal Safe Drinking Water Act requirements and protect drinking water quality and public health.

The Finance Authority partners with the New Mexico Environment Department to carry out Environmental Protection Agency Capitalization Grants under the SDWA.

Virgin Galactic hiring

Officials with Virgin Galactic and The Spaceship Company are seeking to fill a combined 18 key positions with engineers, systems designers and more.

Virgin Galactic is accepting applications for the following six positions: operations engineer, seat mechanism designer, design engineer, IT manager, regulatory compliance manager and embedded systems software developer. In addition, the company's space systems development division seeks a mechanical designer, mechanical lead, guidance/navigation/control (GNC) lead and chief engineer.

Although the majority of these positions are based in Pasadena and Mojave, Calif., a few are located at Spaceport America and at Virgin Galactic's future headquarters in Las Cruces, a press release stated.

The Spaceship Company, which is building the world's first fleet of commercial spaceships and carrier aircraft for Virgin Galactic, has eight open positions at its Mojave location.

"Through both companies, we offer people to be a part of something that has never been done before – building and operating the world's first commercial spaceline," said George Whitesides, president and CEO of Virgin Galactic and The Spaceship Company. "This requires passionate people with inventive minds dedicated to opening space up to all."

Interested applicants should visit the careers section of both companies' websites – www.virgingalactic. com/careers/ and www.thespaceshipcompany.com/careers – to learn more and submit applications. Both sites are regularly updated.

By Jerome LittlejohnFor the Las Cruces Bulletin

For Las Cruces native Jay Jarden, a summer job led to a business opportunity.

Jarden began working in the pool service and spa industry in 1992. In 2000, Jarden and his business partner Bryan Taylor opened PoolTech Plus.

"I was really excited by the retail and service side of the business," Jarden

Originally located on Valley Drive, Pool Tech Plus's showroom and headquarters are now at 2331 E. Lohman PoolTech Plus sells and services hot tubs, swim spas and saunas. The company also services and repairs in-ground pools. Some of the brands PoolTech carries include Master Spas, Caldera and Sunbelt.

One of PoolTech's most popular items is the Michael Phelps Signature Swim Spa, Jarden said.

A swim spa is an elongated hot tub that creates a water current a person can swim" against. One reason swim spas have become popular is they combine the fitness and therapy options of a pool at a much lower cost, Jarden said.

"Swim spas can be installed in one day, can move with you to a new house, and can be used year round," he said.

Most consumers are unfamiliar with the advances in hot tub technology, Jarden said. Hot tubs do not require extensive plumbing and construction costs, he said, adding that newer units use ecologically friendly purification systems that disinfect water naturally.

"All units are self-contained and chlorine free," Jarden said. "Instead of taking a chemical bath, you are taking a mineral bath.'

The average operating cost of a hot tub is $25 per month, Jarden said.

If you are considering shopping for a hot tub, you are not

"We are in the beginning of our busy season," said Tom Gumuski, PoolTech Plus's showroom manager.

The showroom is open seven days a week in the spring, and year-to-date sales for the company are far exceeding sales from the same period last year, he said.

The dramatic increase in sales is partly due to PoolTech Plus's increased advertising efforts and participation in trade

"We can not just sit in the showroom and wait for people to show up," Gumuski said.

PoolTech's latest endeavor is the upcoming Pool, Spa and Outdoor Living Expo Friday through Sunday, May 11-13, at the Las Cruces Convention Center, 680 E. University Ave.

The expo will feature exhibits from hot tub, above-ground and in-ground pool, patio, watercraft and recreational vehicle dealers, Jarden said.

"We've seen dealers in larger markets hold events like this, and some of our vendors recommended we try it here," Jarden said.

Some of the challenges PoolTech will face in the near future include rising fuel and petroleum prices.

"All of our products are petroleum based," Jarden said, referring to the plastics that are used to construct hot tubs.

Still, Jarden remains optimistic about his business overall.

"People are starting to spend some of the cash they kept in savings during the downturn," he said.

Sales up, prices down in southwestern U.S. states

Las Cruces consistent with regional trend

Gary Sandler's Real Estate Connection

The number of homes sold in the Las Cruces area during the first quarter of this year outpaced the number of sales booked during the first quarter of 2011 by 10 percent as prices fell by slightly more than 3 percent, according to statistics from the Las Cruces Association of Realtors.

Las Cruces isn't the only Southwestern city experiencing higher sales and lower prices. Most other markets west of the Rockies are in the same boat, according to their respective multiple listing systems.

Take Albuquerque, for example, where first-quarter 2012 sales were up 13 percent over last year's sales pace. During the same period, Duke City prices fell 7 percent. The same scenario is true for El Paso, where sales were up 5 percent and prices were down 1 percent.

Las Vegas, Nev., and Los Angeles both experienced higher sales, posting gains of 8 percent and 5 percent respectively. Both cities reported values fell by 5 percent year over year. Home sales increased by 16 percent in Santa Fe, with prices falling a mere 1 percent over the past 12 months.

In San Francisco, sales increased by 11 percent as prices declined 2 percent from last year's level. Prices in San Diego fell by one percent, driving sales up 9 percent. Tucson, Ariz., Realtors reported sales rose 18 percent as prices fell by 5 percent.

Exceptions to the rule: Durango, Colo., posted the largest sales gain, exceeding 2011's numbers by a whopping 65 percent. Prices there rose 3 percent over the past year. Prices were also up in Phoenix, rising 10 percent above last year's level. Even so, production there fell 5 percent from year-ago levels.

And then there's Denver, where this year's prices were the same as last year, with sales increasing by 9 percent.

There's no doubt lower prices are enticing homebuyers and investors to take advantage of greater affordability and higher investment returns, but will the trend

The experts are mixed on the issue. Some say housing won't recover until the job market improves. Others worry about the impending arrival of an estimated 2 million new foreclosures this summer, which will keep a lid on price appreciation.

Statistics aside, buyers and investors who intend to own a home for five years or more should take advantage of today's low interest rates (3.5 percent for a 30-year fixed mortgage and 2.125 percent for a 5/1 adjustable loan) and lock in their purchase.

There may never be another time when affordability and returns on investment will be higher than they are now.

See you at closing.

Priscilla benefits GLBTQ center

Many nonprofit organizations find themselves at odds when needs and services do not

Most of the donations, grants and other financial contributions made to the New Mexico GLBTQ Communiy Center go directly into programs, support groups and education for the community of Las Cruces. Many of these programs are invaluable to the community, serving individuals of all walks of life, regardless of age, social status or sexual orientation.

The center offers support groups for individuals living with HIV/AIDS, as well as an open mic poetry night that encourages gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender or questioning youth to share their voice.

However, when the building, located at 1210 N. Main St., began to need repair, the center was faced with a dilemma: cut back on existing programs in order to make the repairs or work with the building crumbling around them.

"A part of the building's front façade, near the roof, was damaged during one of the winter storms," said Robert Young, a supporter of the center. "The center was flooded, and the owner was beginning to think that the only way to fix the building and to make the space usable again, was to take out a second mortgage.

"There was no way I was going to let that happen," Young said. "I knew there had to be something we could do."

Young and Tony Frazure, an organizer with the center, began to explore ways of fundraising to help with much needed repairs. This isn't the first time the center has had to deal with structural damage - last year one of the front windows was broken - and the center had to reach out for help to fix it.

"As an entertainer, I knew it made sense to do a show of some kind." Young said.

Young, who has been a regular on the Las Cruces drag scene, said he and a few other performers began to think of a way to reach out to the younger generation, to share some of the history and culture of drag and self-acceptance with a new audience.

'We decided to hold a filming of 'The Adventures of Priscilla: Queen of the Desert," Young said. "Many haven't had the opportunity to see the film, which has a heavy message on diversity, unity and self-acceptance.

The film, released in 1994, is a comedy that follows the story of two drag queens and a transsexual who get a cabaret gig in the middle of the desert. Hugo Weaving ("V for Vendetta" "Lord of the Rings") stars in the film as Anthony Belroze, whose drag persona Mitzi Del Bra, is a struggling performer.

He receives an invitation to perform at a remote resort in the Australian outback and recruits some of his closest friends to join him. The group heads west progressive from Sydney aboard their lavender bus, Priscilla. En route, it is discovered that the woman they've contracted with is Belroze's wife, and to make matters worse, the bus breaks down, leaving them stranded and fabulous

"It's a fun, campy film," Young said. "It's one of those gay icon movies that really helps explain the diversity of the GLBTQ community."

Young's stage persona, Bobcat, will take the stage with Las Cruces drag diva Ivonna Bump, and the multi-talented El Paso sensation Jordan Matthews.

There will be an intermission during the film," Young said. "During that time, we'll have a little performance, a silent auction, door prizes and a costume contest."

Young encourages all attendees to dress up, though it doesn't have to be in drag.

We just want people to have fun with it, dress like a super hero or as Elvis," Young said. "We're ust out to have a blast and raise some money to help a cornerstone of the community.'

Edward Gutierrez, Ivonna Bump's daytime diva, said the center hopes this screening will be the first of many community-centered events to help fund the GLBTQ center.

"We're promoting awareness of the community, as well as educating people who are looking for more information on what it is we do," Gutierrez said. "The film really has a wonderful message about a lot of diversity issues being currently debated in this country.

"'Priscilla' really brings that message of unity and compassion home," he said. "We want to have events where you are able to come as you are, and still have an amazing time."

The film screening of "The Adventures of Priscilla: Queen of the Desert" begins at 6:30 p.m., Friday, May 18, in the Rio Grande Theatre, 211 N. Main St.

Refreshments will be provided, and the event will be catered. All of the proceeds will benefit the GLBTQ center and go toward repairing the building to create a safe space for the organization's outreach programs.

Tickets are $15, and may be purchased at the door, or online at https://co.clickandpledge. com/?wid=51018. For more information, visit www.newmexicoglbtqcenters.org.

Featured artist: Artist Guild of SNM

Painters Guild gets cracking

Group makes art using ancient process

By Christine Peterson

For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Egg yolks strewn on canvases will be displayed at the Main Street Gallery.

The Artist Guild of Southern New Mexico will hold an artist reception from 2 to 4 p.m. Saturday, May 12, to celebrate the opening of the show during the May Downtown Art Ramble.

Egg tempera is an ancient medium that uses the yolk of an egg instead of the oil binder used in oil paints or gum of Arabic used in watercolor to mix in powdered pigments. While the colors in an oil work will darken and crack, egg tempera has a lasting effect.

"Egg tempera offers the challenge of learning how to make our own paint using egg yolk, distilled water and powdered pigments," said guild member Holly Goettelmann. "Although powdered pigments are used to make most paint colors, egg tempera affords the richness and depth of color that no other medium has to offer."

"Every two years we do a show," said artist and guild mentor Julie Ford Oliver. "The artist needs time to get good pieces together; it requires more than a few months.

"I never use the word student in art, everyone's a student."

Guilds have been utilized for centuries in Europe to help artisans learn their craft, Goettelmann explained.

"Working in our guild with the expert guidance and instruction of Julie Ford Oliver continues to help us learn and improve our skills," she said. "The medium is not like anything else, and offers the challenge of mixing our own color combinations.

"New Mexico State University does not offer classes in egg tempera, so we are very fortunate to have Julie."

Members of the guild include professionals and emerging artists, the difference being the way professionals show-

"I never tell them what to paint, but tell them to use their personal style," Oliver said.

She said most of the guild members are realist painters, with one painter focusing on abstract works.

"You'll see a lot of birds and flowers in their work," said Oliver, the guild's founder.

Oliver studied art in England before coming to the United States. Her two marriages led her to the Southwest. She lived in El Paso for 11 years before coming to Las Cruces and running the Patio Art Gallery with Carolyn Bunch.

She said she started the guild five years ago as a way for artists to learn to improve their work and as a way to impart her knowledge to them.

"It is rare to find an exhibit of egg tempera locally, it is a must see," Goettelmann said. "Egg tempera painting colors are jewel-like with a depth not seen in many other painting mediums. Egg tempera paintings were found in the tombs of Egypt painted on wooden board.

"Today's artist uses clayboard to preserve the surface of the (egg tempera) painting whereas oil paintings use fabric such as linen and canvas, which limit their survival and preservation when in contact with the elements."

Oliver said the El Paso Museum of Art has "an incredible collection" of egg tempera paintings that date back to the 11th and 12th centuries.

"There is a resurgence of egg tempera," Oliver said.

She also said two giants of the art form, Paul Cadmus and Andrew Wyeth, passed away recently.

"Contemporary-age tempera use has a strong following of artists that have dedicated their life and work to explore its endless possibilities," she said.

Nature is the heart of the subject of Goettelmann's pieces. Her source material stems from photographs she takes. This exhibit will feature ginko tree leaves, morning glory flowers, poppy flowers and woodland thistle.

"My hope is these talented artists will continue to pursue the medium or at least it will provide them a greater appreciate for this obscure and often misunderstood jewel of the arts," Oliver said.

Summer is all about community

Get ready for some fun in the desert sun

David Salcido Art Happens

May is here and the temperatures are rising, but if you're one of those people who still think there's nothing to do during the summer months, I've got news for you: the times have definitely changed.

Not only is there a full slate of events taking place throughout the Mesilla Valley but here at the Doña Ana Arts Council offices we've never been busier.

In addition to all of the various events taking place in the Rio Grande Theatre, there are also plans underway for one of the biggest social events of the season, as well as preparations for two of the more popular programs for youth.

I'm speaking, of course, about the 26th Annual Community Art Awards, which take place this year Thursday, May 31, and the Career Art Path program for Middle School students and Missoula Children's Theatre for kids of all ages, both of which take place in June.

Every year, the Arts Council honors people in the community who have given significantly of their time, talents and/or financial contributions to the community.

That's what the Community Arts Awards are all about. But it's more than just an awards ceremony. We try to make it fun for both the recipients and those who come to honor them.

This year, the theme will be Havana Nights and will kick off at 6 p.m. Thursday, May 31, with libations, appetizers, door prizes and dancing in the streets to the Latin grooves of DJ Checo. Find out more by visiting www.lascruces-arts.org.

As for our two programs, the annual Career Arts Path program (CAP) is an ongoing, two-week camp for middle school students interested in exploring the arts. This year, CAP will take place June 11-22. Get all the information by visiting the arts council website to download the registration forms and scholarship applications.

The Missoula Children's Theatre is another

The Missoula Children's Theatre is anoth fun camp for kids that has returned to the Mesilla Valley for more than 20 years, bringing family friendly fare that involves more than 60 kids, ranging in age from 5 to 18.

This year, the production will be "Beauty Lou And The Country Beast." Yep, you read that correctly.

Auditions will take place June 25, with performances running June 29 and 30.

Moving on to other news, our featured artist this month in the El Paso Electric Gallery is Luis Navarro, who has very graciously donated one of his brushed metal paintings to us so that we can raffle it to raise money for the Rio Grande Theatre.

If you have never seen Luis' bright, colorful, acrylic on metal work, I encourage you to drop by the gallery and check it out. He is quickly making a name for himself in the art world and his work goes for three or four times the prices he's asking here up in Santa Fe.

The raffle tickets for his donated piece, titled "Sakura of Cinder," are available at the arts council offices and can be purchased one for $5 or five for $20 through May 31, when the raffle will take place during the 26th annual Arts Awards ceremony.

Speaking of outstanding art, we are very excited about our next exhibit, which will open on Friday, June 1, during the next Downtown Art Ramble.

Timed to coincide with Nunset Boulevard – the first official in-house theatrical production at the Rio Grande Theatre – both the El Paso Electric Gallery and the Clute-Muggenburg Gallery will feature memorabilia spanning 40 years of theatrical productions under the direction of the late Art Haggerton.

Featured in this exhibit will be costumes, props, posters, programs, photos and much more from the four decades of musical stagework Haggerton created.

We feel that it is both a fitting tribute to the man and the perfect way to kick off what we hope will be another creative chapter in the continued success of the theater troupe he inspired. Tickets are on sale now for Nunset Boulevard.

To wrap things up this month, it is my happy duty to inform everybody that the Arts Council has finally stepped into the 21st century. We now have an automated receptionist to field the hundreds of calls that come in every week.

When you hear it, don't hang up. Listen to the menu and pick your extensions, which will take you directly to the person you want to talk to, or allow you to leave a message so they can get back to you.

It's all part of our continued effort to provide the best customer service we can in a timely and cost-effective manner, while at the same time actually getting some work done.

As always, thank you for your support in everything we do. We always look forward to seeing your smiling faces.

David Salcido is the manager of the Rio Grande Theatre. Contact him at 524-6403 or theatremgr@daarts.com.

Biography wins Latino Books into Movies award

Blind artist refuses to let disability limit him

Bulletin Staff Report

The biography based on Las Cruces artist George Mendoza, "Running Toward the Light: The George Mendoza Story," written by William Buchanan, won first place in the biography category at the Latino Books into Movies Awards held in Los Angeles, April 21.

The book tells the remarkable story of Mendoza, a world-class optimist and athlete, who, at the age of 15, lost all of his central vision and 80 percent of his peripheral vision.

After months of research, Mendoza's mother learned bright light could sometimes help those with vision problems similar to his. In 1972, hoping to help her son, she moved them both from New York to Las Cruces.

Enrolled at the New Mexico School for the Visually Handicapped, an embittered Mendoza faced ridicule and frustrations, but renewed an earlier passion for running track.

Shortly after his high school graduation, Mendoza heard of the curative powers of El Santuario de Chimayó in the Sangre de Cristo Mountains north of Santa Fe.

He hitchhiked to the small village, skeptical of a miracle cure. His vision was not restored, but Mendoza underwent a transformation in the Chimayó chapel.

He realized he was not handicapped; he was a person with a handicap.

"I've got bad eyes, sure," Mendoza wrote of his journey. "But there's nothing wrong with my heart or my lungs or my legs."

Thus began a new chapter in Mendoza's life. He joined the track team at New Mexico State University, entered marathons, and, in 1980, ran in the International Olympiad for the Physically Handicapped in the Netherlands.

Today, Mendoza has perfected another hidden talent: he is an exceptional artist and his one-man shows are continual reminders that having a handicap does not diminish an individual's abilities in other areas.

Latino Literacy Now is dedicated to advancing the cause of reading and promoting literacy in the Latino community and by the end of 2011 had produced 64 festivals, book awards, and folklorico dance competitions around the United States, drawing more than 875,000 participants and attendees.

The Latino Books into Movies Awards were established to encourage the production of movies featuring Latino actors and themes. Judges for the awards include screenwriters, playwrights, producers and other entertainment industry professionals.

OPENING

NEW MEXICO STATE UNIVERSITY LIBRARY is

displaying several retablos from the university's permanent collection on loan to the library from the University Art Gallery. The artworks are on display in the library dean's office.

A unique artistic tradition of 19th century Mexico, retablos are popular expressions of faith painted on small sheets of tin-coated iron. Retablos were not originally created as art objects, but were functional everyday items used for home worship.

Pilgrims who traveled roadways such as El Camino Real between Mexico City and Santa Fe stopped at shrines along the way, leaving their devotional images behind. This caused the art to move northward into New Mexico.

The display in the library is but a sampling of the university's collection. New Mexico State University holds the largest public collection of retablos in the United States. From 1963 to 1973, more than 1,700 retablos were donated to the university

The library is located at 1780 E. University Ave. Hours are 7:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. Friday, and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday. For more information, call 646-2545.

An opening reception will be held from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. Friday, May 11.

This exhibition tells the spectacular story of our region from 36 million years ago to the present.

The Rio Grande Rift, a long, narrow gash in the earth, extends 500 miles from central Colorado to El Paso, Texas. Its formation many millions of years ago dictates the path of the present Rio Grande River. During the formation of the rift, mountains thrust skyward, faults opened creating valleys and basins, volcanoes erupted and lava flows reshaped this

Throughout the exhibition are specimens of regional rocks and minerals loaned to the museum by Greg Mack of New Mexico State University and Glenn and Lorena Hales of Las Cruces. These rocks and minerals highlight particular areas of the region and add a glimpse of the history beneath our feet.

The Rift and the River is the final exhibition at the mall location of the Las Cruces Museum of Natural History.

The museum is located at 700 S. Telshor Blvd. in Mesilla Valley Mall. For more information, call 522-3120.

A witness to brutal murder

Parks' coming-of-age tale

The CineMatinee for 1:30 p.m. Saturday, May 12, is "The Learning Tree" (1969, 107 minutes, rated PG).

Numerous pieces of art have come out of the struggle for African American civil rights, and they can be grouped broadly into two categories: those that assert a separate identity for the African race, and those that try to show a common humanity between blacks and whites.

common humanity between blacks and whites.

"The Learning Tree" sits strongly in the latter camp as a coming-of-age tale of a young black boy in Kansas of the 1920s

It's the first film from Gordon Parks ("Shaft"), and, more significantly, the first Hollywood studio film directed by an African-American."

Released during the racial tensions of the late 1960s, "The Learning Tree" is a landmark of American cinema. Newt is a teenager who spends his free time bumming

Newt is a teenager who spends his free time bumming around with his friend Marcus. Though Newt is a levelheaded kid with no time for hate, Marcus is a firecracker who can't leave well enough alone.

Things come to a head when Newt accidentally witnesses Marcus' father committing a murder. His struggle with the decision about whether to testify or not could break his friendship and tear his small town apart.

This is a film that doesn't sugarcoat racism, but it also doesn't show it as the lone defining characteristic of its characters. The fact of Parks as writer/director/composer/producer is also striking, and almost certainly contributed to the Library of Congress choosing "The Learning Tree" for preservation in the National Film Archive.

All that would be immaterial if "The Learning Tree" wasn't a good film.

Luckily, Parks steps behind the camera and immediately hits one out of the park. From the film's opening with a portentous tornado (symbolizing the storm about enter young Newt's life) to the final moments of violence that Newt is powerless to change, the film is beautifully done. This is a coming-of-age story that plays as an honest look at what it means to grow up and assume the responsibilities of adulthood (which always seems to come too early). According to www.dvdverdict.com, "The Learning

According to www.dvdverdict.com, "The Learning Tree' belongs in the upper tier of coming-of-age tales. With a strong, well acted story and compelling characters, the film deserves a larger audience."

Special guest, Kyle Johnson – who stars in the film – will attend the screening.

CineMatinee is a unique blend of movies presented by the Mesilla Valley Film Society, which showcases unique films, past and present, often with an emphasis on life in the West – the new West, Old West or anything in between – and "movies that missed us," notable films that never had a lot of publicity.

The series is designed to show area residents that film is a form of art and education as well as entertainment. At least one film a month for this series has a New Mexico "connection," drawing from the vast pool of movies made in the state – nearly 500 – or perhaps featuring a star/story from New Mexico talent.

Unless otherwise noted, screening time is 1:30 p.m., and admission is $4 for everyone except film society members who are admitted for $1

The Fountain Theatre is located at 2469 Calle de Guadalupe, one-half block south of the Mesilla Plaza. For more information, call 524-8287

Putting the fun in dysfunctional

'Rubins' is a likable comedy about family

Review by Jeff Berg

This is not a film about sandwich making, but rather a silly little comedy about family reunions, religion and fatherhood.

English actor Timothy Sprawl is Lenny, the lead here, recently retired and ready to enjoy the good life by taking a long awaited cruise.

However, his snarky mother, who is a Holocaust survivor, played in fine, although brief form by Honor Blackman, causes him to postpone his trip and to help reunite the family, which includes his four very diverse offspring, for one final Passover Seder before she passes.

This helps create a bit of dark comedy – not involving the Holocaust – to temper the other comedy, which often becomes a bit predictable.

The four siblings are an annoying capitalist businessman, a very laid back Buddhist monk, a very green lesbian daughter and a stiff-as-a-board rabbi.

Take these four and mix them with Sprawl, their father, and toss in a bit of mom and grandma, and what comes out? A dysfunctional family that has been at-odds for years.

The plot is pretty familiar, but it has some fun high points if you don't mind disconnecting your brain for the entire running time.

The senior Rubin summons the kids from all corners of the world ranging from the Congo to Jerusalem in order to fulfill grandma's wish. Of course all of the old at odds things ensue between brothers and sisters, with Dad trying to

Once they're together, however, things don't change much as each individual of the family simply carries on doing what they were doing prior to the gathering.

Sprawl is the best actor of the bunch here, and he works hard to hold the sometimes overly sentimental film together. He is a great comic actor and puts his all into it.

The problems with the film exist mostly because it is such a familiar tale, and offers nothing fresh to a story we've seen many times before. The addition of extra religions as part of a Jewish Factor misplaces some pieces while working to keep things going smoothly.

All in all, the Rubins are a likable bunch, albeit predictable, and the movie certainly won't be mentioned in any of next year's awards ceremonies.

Bulletin Advertising Works!

"The Las Cruces Bulletin's advertising and coverage of the Las Cruces Arts Fair, through the Doña Ana Arts Council, contributed to the show's success. Some 3,000 people visited the event on March 16-18. About 150 children took part in activities designed especially for youngsters. It gives us great confidence to know that the Bulletin is behind community events like this one, which gives us the momentum to plan the Las Cruces Arts Fair again next spring. We always know we can count on the Las Cruces Bulletin to promote the arts in the Las Cruces community."

Tick, tick ... BOOM!' ends theater season with a bang

Larson's musical continues to inspire

Review by Gerald M. Kane

What a pleasant evening of theater. The No Strings Theatre Company under the guidance of Ceil and Peter Herman, has wisely chosen to end its 11th season on an upbeat.

"Tick, tick ... BOOM!" is a delightful, intimate, often poignant, well-produced musical by Jonathan Larson, the Tony and Pulitzer prize winning composer of "Rent."

This is a show that hugs you all around and will more than likely put a smile on your face. "Tick, tick ... BOOM!" is your basic "feel good" show, with an all too predictable plot, a mellow, soft-rock beat, clever lyrics and a trio of likable characters.

If you're like me, you'll leave the theater feeling warm and fuzzy all over. If you are a Stephen Sondheim lover, you'll think you've gone to Broadway heaven.

Sondheim had a profound influence on Larson, and we see flashes from "Company," "Sunday in the Park with George" and "West Side Story" subtly included in the plot, music and lyrics.

'Tick, tick ... BOOM!" contains far less tension, angst and fascination than the real life events of Larson's life.

Larson often subsisted on the brink of poverty, with a persistent dream of "making it" as a Broadway composer. His story is softened considerably in its present form.

In its original incarnation, the show was presented by Larson as a "rock monologue" titled "Boho Days" in the clubs of New York City in the years prior to writing "Rent." After Larson's tragic death from an aortic aneurysm about a week before his 36th birthday, and one night before the first preview performance of "Rent," an updated, drug- and sex-filled re-write of Puccini's "La Boheme."

"Rent" went on to become a critical and popular success, with productions of the musical cast around the globe and a successful film adaptation as well.

Five years after his death, Larson's parents - who had just moved to Albuquerque at the time of Larson's passing – asked Tony and Pulitzer winning playwright David Auburn ("Proof") and Stephen Oremus, conductor and orchestrator of "The Book of Mormon," "Wicked" and "Avenue Q," to expand the "Boho Days" material into a play.

In doing so, two additional characters were added, and more depth, angst and tension were developed.

The cast of the Black Box production, while capable enough, doesn't necessarily coalesce.

There is much needed chemistry missing, most especially between the central character, Jon, and his girlfriend Susan, portrayed by Philip Alvarez and Alex Wheeler respectively.

Matthew Esqueda is cast as Jon's childhood friend Michael who becomes an advertising executive. Esqueda epitomizes "up tight" in his portrayal. We can almost taste the tension under which he is living and competing.

In all, the cast interacts intensely, sincerely and diligently under the capable direction of Dale Pawley.

Peter Herman's set is simple and to the point. The musical direction by Alvarez and Sharon Nelson is excellent.

It should be noted that Alvarez injured his foot a few weeks before the opening of the show. This necessitated a complete restaging of the show with Alvarez performing his role entirely in a swivel chair.

So powerful is his performance, and so carefully and naturally do the other cast members assist him that this bump in the directorial road seems most natural.

Even knowing about the re-staging before the show, one couldn't help but believe this was the way in which the part was originally written and staged.

I left the opening night performance at the Black Box with a smile on the inside and out, which is far too rare these days. If you are in need of a big hug, I urge you to call and make a reservation to see this very lovely

Good eats are just around the corner Deli specializes in quality meat, fresh ingredients

By Amanda Green

A staple at the corner of Main Street and West Madrid Avenue, Corner Deli has been serving up delicious cold cuts and sizzling subs for more than 20 years.

Originally located street-side on West Madrid Avenue, owner Mark Stephens took over an existing deli franchise and went independent, renaming it Corner Deli.

Once a driver for a freight truck company, Stephens took a chance when he purchased the restaurant, but has never looked back.

After 13 years in business, Stephens finally took a break from the successful hot spot, serving employ ees and students from nearby businesses and Mayfield High School, located just down the street.

When Stephens decided retire ment wasn't for him, he reopened Corner Deli at its current location at 2139 N. Main St. The old location has since become a loan center and jewelry exchange, and Corner Deli has made its new home a lasting cornerstone for the community.

There are more than 30 different sandwiches available, and the combinations are endless. Each of their subs – cold and hot – are made with Boar's Head brand meat, known for its taste and quality on the East Coast.

"You tell us what you want and we'll custom build it," Stephens said. 'There's no limit to what you can do with your sandwich.

Massive menu boards are covered with endless suggestions that combine meats and cheeses on

The subs are available in several sizes to suit any appetite and budget. Sides include potato and macaroni salads, as well as freshmade coleslaw.

Corner Deli has a Sack Lunch Special for $6, which includes a small drink, your choice of side, two cookies and a mini sub sandwich The affordability has made it a favorite for Mayfield High School students, who flock every day around lunch hour.

"The kids who come in are a part of our family." Stephens said.

Corner Deli is known for its donations of subs and chips for many local community and high school events. They have sponsored numerous sports teams over the years, and provide a sense of community for everyone who frequents the deli

Corner Deli offers catering for any event or get-together and has trays and party subs to serve from 10 to 400 people.

Once guests get over the sheer size of the menu board and order their choice of subs, the service is quick to get the sandwich made and delivered into hungry hands. Part of this speed is thanks to the layout of the deli, which keeps sandwich makers near the register.

"By the time you pay, they're made," Stephens said.

I barely had time to scuttle over to a booth in the corner and admire the Mayfield champions of 1994 before my sub - the deli's twist on a classic club – appeared in front of me. It was the first time I can remember being glad I didn't order

Play Me pays tribute to Neil Diamond

By Christine Peterson

For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Sequined shirts and leather pants are only part of what is to be experienced in the time warp cover band Play Me provides.

Listening to Play Me, it is hard to imagine that the lead singer's voice is not Neil Diamond's. This is good thing though, as Play Me is a Neil Diamond cover band.

Karaoke favorites such as "Sweet Caroline" and "Cracklin' Rosie" are part of Play Me's set list while the forgotten favorites, including "Song Sung Blue" and "Forever in Blue Jeans," are, too.
"We try to play as many songs as we can,"

"We try to play as many songs as we can," Play Me lead singer and Boba Café and Cabaret owner Chris Waggoner said. "We try to cover everyone's favorites."

In May 2011 Waggoner and other musicians were thinking of different cover bands they could form. The creation of Play Me came about in 2012 when singers wanted to start covering iconic groups.

The first cover band Boba Café hosted was a Simon and Garfunkel show, which sold out. A show then focused on covering the Mamas and the Papas. Earth Angels, a show that focused on girl groups of the 1950s and '60s, followed.

"We wanted to do a show covering iconic men, such as Neil, James Taylor and Bob Seger," Waggoner said. While Play Me formed to cover Diamond exclusively, local singer James Gier did a show covering James Taylor.

Waggoner said his group of 10 musicians and four backup singers tries to keep its shows from going over more than one hour.

"There's just so much stuff to cover, so many iconic songs," Waggoner said.

In addition to entertaining, Play Me has aided the community by playing a benefit show for La Casa at the Rio Grande Theatre.

Waggoner said Boba Café is looking to host a Walt Disney-centered show in August. Portland-based group Wandering Willows will perform at the cabaret July 14.

The shows at Boba Café always feature a dinner performance and a cocktail performance.

The time warp hits you right as you walk through the curtains separating the café from the cabaret section. The full-house seating and modest stage prove to be an evening in close proximity with the band, which will go to all lengths to please an audience.

"People should come out to see the leather pants and sequin shirts, and Chris, because he sounds just like Neil Diamond," Boba Cafe employee Jourdyn Finlay said.

For more information on Play Me or other bands Waggoner is working to bring to Boba Café, call 647-5900.

Box-office success for 'The Avengers'

Superhero flick smashes opening records

Review by Amanda Green

"The Avengers" thundered its way to boxoffice history, rolling up $200.3 million for the biggest three-day U.S. opening weekend ever.

I can't remember the last time I showed up to a movie 45 minutes early on a Sunday morning only to be told the next few showings were sold out.

I'd hoped people were still eating their post-church breakfast at the International House of Pancakes. Instead, they were brighteyed and bushy-tailed in line for the newest film in Marvel's empire.

Over the last few years, many superhero films - mostly from heavy-hitters Marvel and DC Comics - have been hit and miss.

The casting had a lot to do with the success of the films, nearly as much as the script.

"Iron Man," portrayed by the charismatic Robert Downey Jr., "Spiderman," with a surprisingly buff Tobey McGuire, and a power packed "Thor," played by a hunky Chris Hemsworth.

The losers, which I'm sure no one remembers, were both of the previous "Hulk" movies, cast poorly with Edward Norton and Eric Bana, and the mixed reviews of Chris Evans as Captain America.

America, created the team. Marketed as "Earth's Mightiest Heroes," the Avengers originally consisted of Iron Man (Tony Stark), Ant-Man (Henry Pym), Wasp (Janet Van Dyne), Thor and the Hulk (Bruce Banner).

The original Captain America was discovered by the team in issue No. 4, trapped in ice, and he joined the group when they revived him. The team, famous for its battle cry of "Avengers Assemble!" has featured humans, mutants, robots, gods, aliens, supernatural beings and former villains of the character's solo comic Chris Evans returns to reprise his role of Captain America in Marvel's "The Avengers" alongside the incredible talent of Jeremy Renner (Hawkeye) and the stunning, wicked beauty of Scarlett Johansson (Black Widow).

The film takes those characters, and while it assumes audiences have at least heard of one or more of the heroes, does well to stay away from being too restrictive.

I personally, have seen many of Marvel's previous flicks, and was familiar with many, if not all, the characters before watching "The Avengers." The film, however, was created in such a way even those who had minimal knowledge of the super heroes could follow along in delight.

The film was packed with action from the very beginning when Loki - Thor's brother and the antagonist - steps through a portal connecting two opposite ends of space and time, to the hilarious post-credit snippets.

At 142 minutes, the film has the capability of a sagging middle, while it ramps up for the final ultimate-battle scene. Instead, it left me with a thoughtful reflection on each of the characters as unique as they were similar.

The filmmakers did an incredible job of giving each puzzle piece its own heart, soul and role to play, while still allowing the team to coalesce into a single, working machine.

There is no place this is seen more than during the final fire fight, where each superhero, using their skill-set and strengths, does what they can to help the others defeat the villainous Loki and his alien army. Whedon is marvelous at leading us from hero to hero within a single frame, following the stream of Ultimately, what audiences experience is the best of each hero all together in a tidy, exciting package.

Much of the humor sits squarely on the shoulders of Downey Jr. and Hulk (played by Mark Ruffallo, a much appreciated casting change) who have some of the funniest one-liners I've heard in a very long time. On screen they are charming and unforgettable.

Much of the support from lesser-known heroes, such as the Black Widow (Scarlett Johansson) and Hawkeye (Jeremy Renner), add depth and feeling. Meanwhile, your traditional hunky heroes, Thor and Captain America, add shine.

I do believe I'll revisit each of the heroes' film debuts, and re-watch "The Avengers" just to tie it all together in what I expect to be a

to keep fit

Gabriel Rochelle Cycling the Mesilla Valley

There are three key things to keep in mind as you grab your gear and head out

According to experts, you should drink water before you begin cycling, and then take sips every 15 minutes while riding. I forget to drink water on rides. I tend to be a camel, so I think I'm good without hydration. It's a mistake. I have occasionally hit a wall that would not have occurred had I drunk steadily while

Some advisors will also suggest a sport drink before riding and again afterward. Sport drinks contain electrolytes and carbs, but they do not minimize your need for liquid.

Pay attention to the time of day and make the necessary adjustments. You need water on hot afternoons than in the cool mornings. This is common sense, but important to remember.

When you finish your ride, continue to drink more water – or another sports drink. Three cups should be adequate to replace lost fluids.

Caffeine and alcohol affect your need for liquids. Most of us adjust to the amount of caffeine we take in. If you drink a lot of caffeine, you will need to compensate by increasing the water you

The same rule of thumb applies for alcohol. Red wine is considered good, but you need to add to your water intake if you're drinking it regularly - more so if you hit the hard stuff.

Stretching is an important part of riding, as well. As we get older, we tend to lose flexibility and motion, so it's important to counter that atrophy with stretching exercises. Particularly if you're afflicted with rheumatism or arthritis, stretching helps to combat problems that come with minimized muscle flexion.

Bob Anderson has been the guru of stretching for decades, and recommends stretching even if you do a lot of cycling. Joe Friel said if you can touch your fingers or your palms to the ground when you bend, and do it without flexing your knees, you need less stretch work than if you can't - but you still need to stretch those muscles in your legs and calves. Find exercises suitable for cycling online through a web search for "stretch-

Resting is important, especially if you are into competition cycling. But it's still important for those of us who ride regularly for distance. The old rule of thumb is: if you want to increase your speed, you'll do it through calculated rests after

Hard resting pays off in harder riding, so to speak. Your body makes adjustments that you don't recognize mentally, but will feel, if you rest after a hard ride. Elevate your feet on a wall for 15 to 20

Dog Daze is fun for dogs, owners

By Lorena Sanchez

"Dogs get groomed and humans get groomed," said Ronna Conner, a cosmetologist at the Carriage House Salon and Boutique.

That was the thought behind the Carriage House's first charity event, Dog Daze.

We wanted to give back to the community," said Lori Hathway, owner of the salon.

p.m. Sunday, May 20, at the Alameda House, 526 S. Alameda Blvd.

The event is meant to provide a muchneeded outing for pet and owner. Several organizations, including the shelter, the Spay & Neuter Action Program, the ACTion Program for Animals, Horse 'N Hound Feed 'N Supply and Blue Ribbon Pet Sitting. Other organizations will be on hand to help educate guests on the responsibilities of pet ownership and get some shelter dogs adopted.

There will be a $5 entrance fee or a donation of a bag of dog food. The donation will go to the APA's food bank, which helps owners who are unable to afford food for their pet.

While dogs in attendance can munch on treats available at a snack bar reserved just for dogs, owners can indulge in food donated by Roadrunner Pizza free of charge and listen to

Camp dedicated to autistic kids

Deadline extended for applications

By Lorena Sanchez

Camp New Amigos has extended its application deadline for children and young adults with autism interested in having a traditional camp experience.

The deadline has been extended to Tuesday, May 15. Families interested in enrolling children and young adults ages 5 to 18, applications can be picked up at Aprendamos Intervention Team, 301 Perkins Drive, Suite B. There is a $25 registration fee. The Hearts for Autism Fund will cover all additional expenses.

"It gives them an opportunity to have a safe, structured environment, to have a typical camp experience," said Kathleen Cronin, camp director and assistant professor of special education at New Mexico State University. "The whole point of the camp is for kids to have fun.'

The camp will be held from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday, June 4 through, Friday, June 8, at NMSU. Due to dietary restrictions for some children and young adults, parents will have to send lunch with their child.

Middle school athletes to attend sports clinic

Exams, education, health tips discussed

By Jim Hilley

More than 80 local students took advantage of a special sports medicine clinic designed for middle school athletes Saturday, May 5, at Southwest Sport & Spine, 1181 Mall Drive.

"We gave the kids concussion tests, EKGs, computerized baseline tests and orthotic screenings in addition to the standard physical," said David Gallegos, the southern representative for the New Mexico Athletic Association's Sports Medicine Advisory Committee and a local athletic trainer. "We also had a great education component where we taught the kids and parents about proper diet, supplements and healthy lifestyles."

The clinic lasted about four hours and was put on with the help of numerous volunteers from organizations such as Memorial Medical Center resident physicians, medical students, the Ben Archer Clinic, the University of Texas-El Paso Concussion Research Laboratory and New Mexico State University Sports Medicine.

"We reached a lot of kids who don't have coverage," Gallegos said. "It was as close to a NFL physical as you could get without being invasive."

While the clinic only cost students $10, Gallegos said the package could be worth $500 to $1,000 if purchased individually.

This was the fifth year the clinic has been held, with additional tests added each year, with this year's clinic being the first to offer EKGs.

This will be the last year the clinic will be run as a pilot program.

"We are trying to find out how we can do it with a decent number of kids," Gallegos said "Our goal is to get to where all the students come together, 1,000 kids or so."

"Kids with autism really don't initiate conversations or immediately engage in activities with others," Cronin said. "The camp and their peers help them develop their social skills."

Cronin, who specializes in autism spectrum disorders, said parallel camps are run for the younger and the older campers.

"It's a great opportunity for children that are within the autism spectrum to participate in activities they normally wouldn't and interact with other children," said Missy Wortman, operations manager at Aprendamos.

Support after suicide

Program, groups help ease the pain of loss

Bob Nosbisch Getting the Word Out

Support groups for adult family members and friends who have lost loved ones to suicide have begun in Las Cruces.

These support groups are for those who have been confronted with the loss of someone they care about to suicide. Those who have left us are our wives, husbands, partners, mothers, fathers, children, grandchildren, grandparents, uncles, aunts, friends and coworkers.

The loss at times feels incomprehensible, the grief almost unbearable. Yet we wake up every morning, take care of those who have been left behind, go to work and often reflect on the "what ifs." We want to understand why our loved ones chose suicide, what was going on in their minds and hearts, and what or if we could have done something to prevent it. There are a lot of questions but few answers. We will never really know. By attending these support groups, talking to those who care about us, and seeking professional help, friends and family members can embark on a healing path and a long journey toward better understanding and inner peace.

Individuals who have experienced the trauma and impact of losing a loved one to suicide facilitate the support groups. These facilitators walk along with other group participants and are there to support one another while embarking on their own unique healing journey for inner peace, understanding and comfort.

The facilitators and group members are not people with magical powers who can fix all that is going on in each of our lives. They are people who are there to support one another in the healing process.

The support groups are aimed to help those in attendance to learn, share, engage, question, reflect, support and rejoice in each other's experiences. The groups are based on a recognition that we are not alone; that there is a place such as the support group to talk about our loved ones and address the shame, guilt, hurt, anger, fear and anxiety that is felt; that it is time for rigorous honesty, respect and generosity, a time for openness to face our own vulnerabilities, a willingness to ask for help and lean on others, to start challenging our own assumptions, beliefs, interactions, relationships and to listen and trust one another without judgment.

The support group process is based on simple truths: our healing will not happen overnight; our ability to trust ourselves and others and rely on our own abilities and that of others will not happen quickly; our sense of connection with everything and everyone around us will take time; and re-learning to do the things that were joyful once will happen little by little.

The support group experience that connects us with others in similar circumstances has the potential to give us a chance to learn, reflect and aspire to become more whole persons, despite the difficult experience of suicide of our level ones.

The support groups will be held every other week in an open-ended format so new participants can join at any time. The next meeting is scheduled from 4:30 to 6 p.m. Tuesday, May 15, at The Center for Grief Services, Mesilla Valley Hospice, 299 Montana Ave.

March for Babies sets a fundraising record

Teams surpass $200,000 goal for Southern NM

It was a feel good moment in Las Cruces when approximately 1,100 residents joined together in support of the smallest citizens of Doña Ana County babies by participating in the March of Dimes March for Babies, presented by MountainView Regional Medical Center and Southwest Dairy Farmers.

On April 28, Young Park, the Triviz Walking Trail and Las Cruces streets were packed with strollers, families and teams hoping to raise $200,000 to help babies be born healthy – and now the results are in.

Participants in the event are expected to beat the goal and succeeded in doing so, setting a new record for Las Cruces, raising more than $219,000. The Top Family Team for 2012 is Team Zane Silva for the second straight year, raising more than $24,300, followed by the Hakes Cupcakes Family team that raised more than $17,400.

"We've seen how important it is to help our babies," said 2012 March for Babies Chairman Denten Park, CEO of Mountain-View Regional Medical Center.

"This has been an incredible experience, and I'm so proud to be from a community where people can come together for such a great cause."

Other top-10 fundraising teams were

MountainView Regional Medical Center, $12,354; First New Mexico Bank, $8,563; El Paso Electric Co., $7,801; White Sands Federal Credit Union, $7,372; The Babysavers, $7,204; and Memorial Medical Center, $7,061

The Best Checkpoint Award went to FirstLight Federal Credit Union/SunTech Services. The best T-shirt contest winners were Tresco and The Babysavers. Top Fundraising Individuals raising more than $2,000 each were Jeffrey Silva and Francisca Hakes.

Marking 50 years of service at the Edgar R. Garrett speech center

The Edgar R. Garrett Speech and Hearing Center celebrated 50 years of service Friday, May 4, at the center across from the Barnes & Noble at New Mexico State University bookstore.

The Garrett Legacy of Excellence: 50 Years of Service!" celebration included a live jazz band, free Mexican food, a silent auction to help fund scholarships for the special education and communication disorders department's students and a scavenger hunt/tour of the center's therapy rooms.

Since 1962, the speech and hearing center has brought the community to the campus to for "large-scale medical service provision." Clinical services are open to those with a cleft palate, autism, hearing disorders, articulation problems, Down syndrome and learning disabilities. Treatments and evaluations also are available to stroke and head injury victims. Individuals suffering communication problems such as stuttering or dyslexia can also receive evaluation and treatment at the center.

Victoria Flores, Gloria Valenzuela, Meghan Sotelo and Diana Uribe pose for a picture. All four are graduate students in the SPED and communication disorders program and will graduate Saturday, May 12.

Lisa Sullivan, Sue Fitzmaurice, Tana Pool and Margo Reid man the '60s room for the scavenger hunt, during the Edgar R. Garrett Speech and Hearing Center's 50th anniversary celebration Friday, May 4, at NMSU. The hunt took guests through the clinic with the therapy rooms decorated in different decades.

Speech and language pathologists Lil Grijalva, Marie Vigil-Castillo and Cynthia Sanchez were in the communication disorders graduate program when the department moved from Kent Hall to its current location, across from the NMSU bookstore. The three alumni helped with the move and worked in the clinic providing therapy during their time in the graduate program.

Tom Lindsay, chairman of the advisory board for the department of special education and communication disorders, speaks with Marlene Salas-Provance, interim department head, and Wendy Wilkins, executive vice president and provost of the university at the event. Wilkins said the center "exemplifies the mission of a land grant university" by providing education, excellent research and services to the community and students.

Loretta Silva, a graduate of the program, and Paul Spencer enjoy the food and music at the celebration.

Entertaining meets family living

Open floor plan allows open, private spaces to mingle

Las Cruces Bulletin

When Carol Hillger decided to move out of the valley and into the city, she had certain criteria her new family home had to meet.

Wanting to relocate to an area with less vegetation because of her daughter's allergies, Hillger said she searched for a home that offered enough space to accommodate three teenagers while maintaining an elegant style.

"I was driving around and I found this house," she said of the home at 4242 Superstition Drive in the Las Alturas area. "It was just in the framing stage."

The home was being built by James Evans and although it had yet to fully take shape, Hillger said she was drawn to the open floor plan and purchased the home in 2006.

"I liked the openness of the home," she said. "It had defined rooms, but it felt open because of the tall ceilings and walk throughs."

She worked with Evans, tweaking the design of the home to better suit her family's needs. When completed, the finished result was a 3,400-square-foot residence with a contemporary Southwest architectural style.

A gravel, half-circle driveway leads to the front of the home. Set behind large, statement-making columns is the front door. Also designed to grab your attention, the front door measures 8 feet tall and 4 feet wide. Pieces of ironwork grace the front of the door, while blocks of etched glass surround the entrance, allowing for both natural light and privacy.

The tile floor features a neutral, sandy color and sets the tone of the home's color palette.

A large, lit nicho greets guests as they walk through the door leading them to the left or right. To the right is a powder room, featuring vibrant terracotta-colored, hand-troweled walls.

"I wanted color," she said, adding that desert colors of various hues were used throughout the home. "All of the different colors give the home character."

Complementing the wall color are the white and yellow speckled granite countertops and contemporary orange sink bowl. The cabinet was designed to resemble furniture, adding to the modern feel of the space.

Down the nicho-lined hall from the powder room are three of the abode's four bedrooms. The rooms measure about 10 by 11 feet and include finished closets, tray ceilings and window seats, an architectural detail Hillger said her children enjoyed.

Also located in this area is a full bathroom with double sinks and the same speckled granite countertops found in the powder room. Intricate tile work lines the arched bathtub of the butter cream-tinted room.

A laundry room sits in this wing of the home and circles back to the kitchen. It also is adjacent to the three-car garage. The garage was placed on the side of the home as to not detract from the residence's elegant façade.

Attached to the garage is an office area with shelves as well as a workshop, which can fit one car, Hillger said. Countertops and light-colored cabinets fill the space, offering plenty of room for projects.

One feature not on the original floor plan that Hillger had to have was the indoor swimming pool, located next to the workshop.

"It's my favorite part of the house," she said. "It's fun."

An avid swimmer, Hillger said she wanted the indoor swimming pool so she could take a dip and exercise every day, no matter the weather.

"I like to swim year-round, but I don't like the sun or the cold," she said. "This way I can swim – even if it is windy outside"

The 32-foot-long swimming pool varies from 4 to 6 feet deep. The skylights overhead can be opened to give the impression of being outdoors. A surround-sound system in the house and patio is also piped into the room.

Hefty arches surround the kitchen, which opens to the dining room. A large island occupies the center of the kitchen. A darker granite was selected for the space. The deep tone plays off the rich, stacked cabinets, which include crown molding for added style.

Next to the dining room is a space that was to be a patio, but was enclosed to create a room for the family's pool table. The game room features stained-concrete flooring, which accents the vibrant walls.

At the center of the home is the living room. Constructed in an octagon shape with a 12-foot-tall tray ceiling, the living room is the center of entertaining, Hillger said. A fireplace, lined in tile, is placed in a corner.

To the left of the entrance is a home office as well as the master suite.

"I like the bigness of (the master bedroom). You can have furniture in it and not feel crowded," said Hillger, adding that she frequently can be found reading in the room's sitting area.

The bathroom of the master suite includes a relaxing jetted bathtub, set in granite and resting against a wall of glass blocks. The space also includes a large, walk-in shower. Rather than having a door, the shower entrance is blocked by glass squares, maintaining that sense of privacy.

The master suite also includes a door to one of the two covered patio areas, one of which includes a fireplace. The patios look out to the grassy backyard. Various plants can be found in the yard, including honeysuckle and rosemary.

"The upkeep is really easy," Hillger said. "There is a built-in sprinkler system in the front and the back."

Granite covers the bathroom countertops.

In the last three weeks, I have had five conversations with clients about either adult children moving back home or aging parents

Let me first relate to adult children moving back home. It could be the college grad coming back home because they can't find a job or the older, more established adult child who has lost a job and needs a place to live that they can afford. Whatever the scenario, you may want to think about your space (or lack of space) and how it might best be used to keep peace in the family.

In the worst-case scenario, you've already transformed their old bedroom into your new craft room or home office.

Perhaps the makeover is as simple as updating the décor from teenage to adult in their existing old room. We should be so lucky.

I remember the commercial with the parents being so sad as they were sending their child off; turning around and jumping for joy in converting their newly regained room into a home gym.

What are the odds that your adult child will be moving home? About 22 percent fewer graduates will get jobs this year compared to 2008.

AARP recently surveyed more than 1,000 adults over the age of 18 and found that 33 percent of respondents age 18 to 49 live with their parents or in-laws. The most common reasons cited were loss of income, followed by a change in job status. So, here are some things you need to do to make this an easier transition.

Create a separate work area for them. If the bedroom they're sleeping in is too small, create a work area by partitioning off part of the living room, the kitchen or any area you can find with a screen to give privacy.

Finding a job will be the most important thing that leads to independence once again for your adult child. Don't put them where your latest phone bill and their résumé can get mixed up.

If a small desk is already in their sleeping room, then offer a bulletin board, a file drawer, a separate printer, computer or even a laptop.

You may have to give up some of your own space. Go through your home with a critical eye before your adult child moves in and figure out what you need to keep, what can be stored, what needs to be tossed and what you need to buy new. You will avoid many "bumps in the road" if you do it all before they get

Be prepared to convert that office or craft room into a temporary bedroom. You may have to make some tough decisions.

When an adult child returns to live with you, a struggle for space might just show up. A few space-saving techniques that won't create emotional battles or pricey home remodels can help smooth the transition for all.

How about a Murphy bed? How about a platform bed with storage, short bookcases or drawers under the bed to control the clutter? The key to making best use of small spaces is to add multi-functional storage pieces in the room.

End tables with drawers or shelves can hold underwear or socks while still supporting a table lamp. The less clutter in the room the more open and airy the space will feel.

If you have a basement, loft or casita, consider the best options for your family. Some possibilities are: converting a basement into a makeshift apartment; repurposing a home office into a bedroom; or adding on a small apartment or private casita or guesthouse. What does the budget allow and how long will temporary really be?

It is important to head off potential culture clashes by discussing schedules, routines, money obligations, groceries, utilities, household tasks, meals, TV shows, laundry and last but not least decorating their space so they are happy and you are happy.

Selecting a color palette that everyone can live with will make the space more welcoming. A fresh coat of paint gives any space new

Next time, we will talk about the aging parent moving in and how to prepare

Chris Mitchell, a board member of the Majestic Shadow Loop Association, threw a party to celebrate the Kentucky Derby with her neighborhood friends on Saturday, May 5. What makes a Kentucky Derby party different from Mitchells' other parties? Fabulous hats.

As art director at the Las Cruces Bulletin, I was asked to judge these fabulous hats and I was raring to go.

I took my husband, Daniel, along with me to help with the judging, but mostly because Mitchell told me "we may be old, but we know how to have a good time!"

Four titles were up for grabs in the categories of most creative, funniest, most elegant/traditional and best themed.

The award for the most creative hat went to Anne O'Brien. The hat carried traditional flowers, but also had spunky accents of green tulle and shamrocks. O'Brien had been visiting from Ireland.

There was a two-way tie for the funniest hat. Beverly Morales, who brought a hat in on a stick horse, and Chris Mitchell, whose hat carried red roses, Jim Beam and Jack Daniels' shooters, along with some other fun trinkets attached.

Jeanne Charpentier had the most elegant hat. Charpentier decorated her black hat with beautiful black-and-white ribbons, sparkly tulle and feathers.

The best-themed hat was awarded to Lisa Garmon. The "Run for the Roses" theme blossomed with Garmon's purple hat, embellished with three large peace roses and feathers.

"I sewed peace roses on my Kentucky Derby hat to be a reminder that peace reigns here," Garmon said. "That we are still a community of caring neighbors and that is important to me, to us all.

It is always fantastic to see fellow Las Crucens getting together and showing others why Las Cruces is truly a wonderful place to live.

"People give extravagantly of themselves on our loop," Garmon said. "We often look for opportunities to express kindness and gratitude."

It is that kind of attitude that makes life good in Las Cruces.

After my judging duties were finished, I sat down to visit with my new friends, enjoyed the view of the Organs and ate like

A future Tree City?

City seeks to meet national program standards

By Beth SitzlerLas Cruces Bulletin

On a hot summer day, those enjoying the outdoors are most likely doing so from the comfort of a shady area under the foliage of a tree.

Not only do trees provide needed shade, they also can improve the microclimate of an area, making it feel cooler than what the temperature actually is.

"Take an asphalt parking lot," said Mark Johnston, director of the city's Parks and Recreation Department. "On a day that reaches 90 degrees, the parking lot can reach 120 degrees.

"In the shade of a tree canopy, the temperature can drop 25 degrees. That makes the 90-degree temperature feel cooler."

Large cities in the Southwest, such as Phoenix and Las Vegas, Nev., contain large amounts of concrete and man-made water, which create high humidity and a "blast of heat" feeling.

To prevent Las Cruces from becoming a concrete jungle, the city will pursue becoming a certified Tree City USA community.

"The benefit to a Tree City, at the forefront, is the educational opportunities to inform citizens of the importance of trees and the importance of planting the right trees," Johnston said.

Las Cruces Bulletin

In addition to providing shade, trees can add a slight amount of moisture to the air and help with wind and rain erosion. Trees also can save homeowners 15 to 20 percent on their heating and cooling utility bills when strategically placed around a home.

"We have the opportunity now, before the city grows, to plant trees," Johnston said.

The city introduced its 2-for-1 tree policy about seven years ago — which requires two trees to be planted for every one tree removed from city property — and now the decision by City Council to join Tree City USA within two years will further the long-term health of trees in the city.

"Several issues have come up," Johnston said.
"There is more interest in the environment, clean air and saving our natural resources."

To qualify as a Tree City USA community, the area must meet four standards set by the Arbor Day Foundation and the National Association of State Foresters.

This includes creating a tree board or department, making someone legally responsible for the care and management of the community's trees, such as a professional forester or arborist or a volunteer board; a tree care ordinance, which is an opportunity to set good polices that can be enforced; a community forestry program with an annual budget of at least $2 per capita; and an Arbor Day observance and proclamation, which the city already does.

These standards were formed to ensure every qualifying community has a viable tree management plan and program. These standards also are designed to allow all communities, no matter their size, become certified.

A board has been formed, which includes Johnston and Craig Fenske, coordinator of Keep Las Cruces Beautiful.

Venturing to the Southwest from Bellingham, Wash., a Tree City USA community, Fenske said he was already familiar with the program and the significant role trees play in the health of an area.

"There are different challenges here," he said. "Here, you have to be intentional when planting trees. There is a different level of care."

"Education is going to be a key topic," Johnston said. "It's important as we move forward on what (Tree City USA) is and why people should support it and care."

The city currently participates in seedling giveaways through its Arbor Day activities — which distributed 500 this year — but will ramp up its outreach by providing homeowners with information and products, Johnston said.

"We're also looking at partnering with local growers and large businesses," he said.

By creating more awareness, Fenske said he hopes more community members will be willing to plant their own trees.

"(New Mexico State University Cooperative) Extension has information on trees to get," he said.

Another effort Fenske is working on is creating a volunteer "tree steward" program. Through a $5,000 Lowe's Community Improvement grant, the program will train volunteers to help in the city's nursery located off Hadley Avenue.

Recruitment for the 20 volunteer positions has begun and training will start July 1, he said. Volunteers will nurture the 400 trees from seedling until they're 2 inches in diameter, at which time they will be planted around the city.

The tree board currently is fine-tuning its recommended-tree list as well as the tree ordinances, which will include care, maintenance, policies and goals.

"I'd like to have a canopy goal – a goal of how much square feet of the city will be covered by trees," Johnston said.

Although New Mexico is a desert, there are 12 Tree City USA communities in the state, proving that it can also happen in Las Cruces.

"I'd tell naysayers to go to Apodaca Park or Young Park and look at where people are under – they're under trees," Fenske said.

"With the correct species and with the right amount of water, trees can grow very well here," said Johnston, adding that the initial water usage required to care for a seedling is worth the long-term benefits.

Of the 12 New Mexico communities, which includes Albuquerque, Clovis, Carlsbad, Santa Fe, Taos and San Jon, Roswell has maintained the certification the longest with 21 years.

"Roswell has a tremendous tree program," Johnston said. "They have an arborist, and if you look at their parks, it reflects that."

Getting to know: Oscar Padilla

Hard work goes a long way

Builder finds career passion, new roots in Las Cruces

By Beth Sitzler

As a child, Oscar Padilla saw through his mother, Rosario Correll, and grandfather, Jose Ruiz, firsthand what hard work and dedication could accomplish.

'I learned that you have to work hard to get things in life – things aren't just handed to you," he said. "My mother instilled that in me at a young age, and she got it from her father."

During his younger years, Padilla said he spent time working at his mother's printing business in El Paso.

'She made a living from her hard work," he said. "I owe my attitude and education to my

After pursuing his baseball passion at a junior college, Padilla returned to El Paso to attend the University of Texas-El Paso. A short time later, he wanted a change and ventured up Interstate 10 to Las Cruces, where he attended New Mexico State University and earned a degree in civil engineering.

"I had to adjust to living in a smaller city," he said. "But I realized, by the time I was finished with my education, that this was where I wanted to stay."

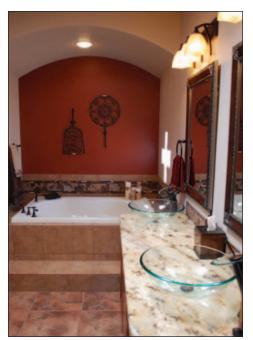

Although he was establishing roots in Las Cruces and had started a family with his wife, Melissa, Padilla had to move north when a job opportunity took him and his family to Albuquerque.

As luck would have it, the day he began, he learned the company had been sold to national engineering firm Parsons Brinckerhoff. In his first meeting, the firm leaders discussed pursuing the U.S. Highway 70 redesign from Inter-state 25 to NASA, which would be mobilized in Las Cruces.

They were looking for volunteers to be on the team and I raised my hand," he said. "Within eight months after I had started, the firm was awarded the project ... and I was able to come right back home.

"I counted my blessings because Las Cruces is my home.

Padilla continued working for the company and earned his engineering license, a feat of which he is proud.

The Spirit View Homes model home at 2021 Villa Napoli was featured during the 2012 Spring Showcase of Homes.

'Getting a degree is one thing, getting your (professional engineering) license is another," he said, adding that it required passing an eight-hour exam.

Following "a career path to corporate America," Padilla said in 2002 he thought it would be fun to build his own house.

"I didn't intend on being a builder," he said. "I built my own house and I thought it was fun. I liked it. It was fun to see your creation come Outside watering his plants, Padilla said he met a man who was interested in having a home built. Padilla asked to build it and within months the project was completed.

"From there, with word of mouth, things just boomed," he said, adding that he left the engineering firm and formed Spirit View Homes. Ten years later, I'm still in construction.'

During his early years, Padilla said he learned several valuable lessons, such as the importance of monitoring every aspect of a business, from the books and budget to the job site and design.

"The most important thing is having a proper design before you build," he said. "Going back to fix things is not the way to build a

His engineering background gave him an advantage, he said, because it allowed him to understand how things are put together and to become a proficient problem solver.

"After that, all you need is experience," he said. "I learned a lot along the way."

Padilla said when he first began, he built larger homes, but after seeing the market begin to change, he transitioned to smaller homes in a more affordable price range.

"I made the switch before the crash," he Having built about 200 houses, as well as doing countless remodels, Padilla said he does all of the design work for Spirit View Homes.

"There is a thought process behind each house," he said. "Seeing it go from my mind, or one of my client's napkins ... to being actually built and people enjoying the product, that gives me the most satisfaction.

"The two big things I have going for me are, one, my background – it helps me be more involved with the design of a house - and two, I include everything in the price. I try to maintain a fair price while giving out a good product."

Over the past two years, Padilla said Spirit

View Homes has built, on average, 10 custom houses, strictly by word of mouth, referrals and return clients. This year, however, Padilla said he plans to grow the company and has a goal of constructing 40 to 50 homes.

"I've always stayed under the radar," he said. "The opportunity is now for me to show Las Cruces what I can do and introduce my type of construction into the competition.

'I'm trying to provide houses at a great price, in a great location and give homeowners the ability to change things to better fit them."

While he can build anywhere in Las Cruces in any style, Padilla said he has focused much

One organizer, multiple uses

Shoe holder can help just about every area of the home

By Beth Sitzler

How often do you clean your house? If you're like 54 percent of people surveyed by Soap and Detergent Association, you prefer to clean on a daily or weekly basis.

The survey was conducted to get an inside look into Americans' cleaning habits and feelings about spring cleaning. A whopping 60 percent of participants said spring is the best time to clean their house and get rid of clutter.

Another interesting statistic from the survey is that 98 percent feel good about themselves when their home is clean. Sadly, 18 percent said they find they always have a lot of clutter around the house.

There are several ways and tools you can use to cut down on your household clutter. One such tool is a hanging shoe holder. Sure the shoe organizer will help keep your closet mess free, but that's not all. It also can be used throughout the home to keep things in order.

- 1. Keep your hobbies organized: Whether you're a craft enthusiast or a grade-school teacher, chances are you've had trouble keeping your markers, scissors, tape, glue and glitter neatly organized. Get some help from a hanging shoe organizer. Simply fill the pockets with your craft items, identifying each sleeve with piece of tape. No longer will you have to scour your drawers for your favorite calligraphy pen or spool of ribbon. This is great for those small hobby areas that don't offer room for shelves and cabinetry or your part-time guest room.
- 2. Stop bathroom clutter: The only thing worse than a small bathroom is having to share a small bathroom. If you blink, countertop space will be gone and you'll be left with no place to put your toothbrush, face soap or contact solution. Smartly use your space and reduce bathroom clutter by storing your toiletries in a plastic shoe hanger. Drape it over the back of the door and fill it with your shampoos, soaps, lotions and potions.

- 3. Give toys a home: Learning to pick up after yourself is an important lesson for a child to learn. Keeping those toys organized is equally important. Give your kids a hand by providing them with a hanging shoe caddy. Now they'll have a special place for crayons, action figures, dolls, building blocks and other playtime friends eliminating those search party cries. This trick also works for organizing bathtub toys.
- 4. Help your pantry: Don't let your small apartment kitchen stifle your inner cooking master. You don't need a lot of space to whip up tasty delights, especially if you have a plastic shoe organizer for storage. Slip it over your pantry door and fill the pockets with your spices, rice, gravy packs, snacks and other small packages. This will take up a minimal amount of space while allowing you to easily find those items that tend to get lost in the back.
- 5. Master your mail: Does your at-home office look like a disaster zone? Get those piles of mail under control with the help of a hanging shoe caddy. Place the caddy on the wall and label the various pockets to help designate your mail. Include a pocket for unpaid and paid bills, personal letters and mail to be sent.

- 6. Don't forget the garage: Your garage can also be clutter free thanks to the hanging shoe holder. Store your tools, gadgets, bungee cords, washers, nails, gardening gear, spray paint and polymer in the plastic pockets and everything you'll need will be a short reach away.
- 7. Plant an herb garden: If your rock yard doesn't allow for you to plant a garden, you can still have some green around your house. Take a plastic hanging shoe organizer and transform it into an herb or small vegetable garden. Hang it on your shed or a wall. Fill the pockets with soil and a seedling. Because the pockets don't have holes for drainage, most of the moister will be retained. Be sure to watch out for overwatering.

Helpful hint

In whichever room you use the hanging shoe organizer, it is a good idea to anchor it to the bottom of the door so it won't swing around. Keeping it fastened to the door at the bottom will increase the life of your caddy since slinging it rips the grommets at the top. Simply use stick-on Velcro to affix the shoe organizer to the door.

Easy cleaning tips create a healthy family home

Allergens lurk inside and outside your home, causing more than 40 million Americans with allergies to cough, sneeze and have itchy eyes all year long, especially in springtime.

Also, for 25 million Americans with asthmatit can be even more problematic. You'd assume cleaning your home would help reduce these allergy triggers, but if you're not cleaning the right way, you could actually be making the problem worse.

If your cleaning routine doesn't

If your cleaning routine doesn't specifically focus on allergen removal, you may be only moving dust around, sending allergens and irritating cleaning chemicals into the air. To maximize your cleaning efforts to reduce allergens, consider these simple tips from the asthma and allergy friendly certification program, the healthy home initiative of the non-profit Asthma and Allergy Foundation of America (AAFA):

You may think dusting your home will help reduce allergens, but if you use a feather duster that simply lifts the dust off surfaces and into the air, you will actually increase airborne dust particles. Instead, use moist cloths or special dry dusters designed to trap and lock dust from hard and soft surfaces.

Certain cleaning products also can contribute to airborne irritants, especially if they contain harsh chemicals, strong odors or volatile organic compounds (VOCs). Choose products that contain none of these irritants, but also beware of "green" labels, as some of these solutions may be made with natural allergenic ingredients, such as lemon, coconut or teactree oils.

 Use a vacuum that has a HEPA filter with tight seams and seals to prevent particles from leaking out while you vacuum. Also, choose a style that requires minimal exposure during canister emptying or bag changes.

Rodent dander and cockroach particles are common household asthma triggers. However, some pesticides may do more harm than good for people with asthma and allergies. If you have a pest problem, look for an exterminator with expertise in integrated pest management and experience treating homes of people with asthma.

Whether you have a cat or dog pet dander is

• Whether you have a cat or dog, pet dander is present in most U.S. homes. Your cleaning routine should include frequently washing linens in your bedroom, where cat or dog dander can settle. Place mite-proof bedding on your mattresses and pillows. Wash your bedding at least once a week in 130-degree hot water to kill mites and their

 Mold, a common allergy trigger, can grow anywhere in your home where moisture is present. Look for cleaning products that help kill and prevent mold from returning.

Also, keep household humidity below 50 percent and fix leaky pipes and cracks to reduce standing puddles of moisture where mold can prosper.

- Gather stuffed toys, where dust mites, mold and pet dander can accumulate, and wash them in hot water and dry completely before using again. Place stuffed toys that can't be washed in the freezer for 24 hours, then rinse in cold water to remove dead mites, and dry completely. Do this monthly.
- Lots of air passes through window areas, and airborne dust and allergens accumulate on all types of window treatments which are rarely cleaned. In the family room and throughout the home, replace big, heavy linen drapes with more sensible window treatments such as wood blinds or flat screens that are easy to wipe and keep clean.

Keep in mind that while consumers spend nearly $18 billion annually on asthma and allergy medications, they also spend more than $20 billion on nonmedical consumer products marketed for people with asthma and allergies such as room air cleaners, bedding, vacuums and more, according to AAFA. While demand for such products continues to grow, there is little regulation governing product claims, the foundation said.

AAFA's asthma and allergy friendly certification program helps consumers evaluate and verify the allergen-reducing effectiveness of a variety of products, including cleaning supplies, air cleaning devices and vacuums, toys, bedding, homeimprovement products, paints, clothes washers and more. ### Sauce Master makes cooking easy

Creating applesauce, purée at home is a breeze

By Beth Sitzler

Whether it's in an effort to save a buck, skip calories or savor time as a family, more people are going back to sitting around the dining room table and enjoying a home-cooked meal.

There are several benefits of eating at home. In addition to avoiding the restaurant crowds and preserving your checking account, creating your own meal allows you to know exactly what is going into your family's food.

Trying to cut down on salt – add less to your meal. Want to eat more vegetables – slip them into your sauces or stir fry. Trying to watch your portions – use smaller serving dishes.

While many complain that cooking at home requires too much effort and preparation, there are plenty of gadgets available to help reduce that. One such contraption is the Sauce Master.

What is it?

The Sauce Master, a Norpro product, is an easy-to-use gadget that eliminates much of the prep work required when fabricating your favorite sauces.

It's a hand-cranked tool clamped to your countertop that automatically separates the juice and pulp of fruits and vegetables from the seeds and skin. Similar in design to a meat grinder or sausage machine, the Sauce Master allows you to create sauce, purée, fruit juice, fruit butter, fruit leather, applesauce, baby food, pie filling, jams and jellies in one continuous motion, all without having to pre-cook your ingredients.

The Sauce Master is ideal for canning, freezing and dehydrating and cuts prep time in half.

How does it work?

After the Sauce Master has been assembled according to the accompanying instructions, all you'll need is your fruit or vegetables.

Place the items into the strainer and use the plunger to push them through the spiral screen as you turn the crank clockwise. When you're cranking the Sauce Master, don't use force, but rather guide the ingredients into the body of the strainer using the plunger. This will prevent jamming and squirting.

You will need two bowls – a large one to catch the sauce and another, smaller bowl to catch the seeds, stems and skins.

The Sauce Master features three chromeplated-steel screens for perfectly separated fruits and vegetables every time. The berry screen features the smallest teeth to catch those tiny seeds. The pumpkin screen has larger teeth, and is perfect for straining pumpkin and squash for pies, purées and preserving. The salsa screen has large teeth for creating dips and sauces from tomatoes and other vegetables.

The gadget also features a grape spiral. Created from durable plastic auger, the grape spiral is used with the berry screen to seamlessly peel and strain grapes for juice, purée, jams and jellies.

After your sauce is made, diligently wash the Sauce Master. Before storing, spray the screen with a small amount of cooking oil. This will prevent rusting.

Where can it be found?

The Sauce Master can be found online at websites including www.norpro.com and www.amazon.com.

How much does it cost?

Helpful hints

- Be sure to thoroughly wash your fruits and vegetables before processing them.
- If creating food or sauces that will be canned, frozen or dehydrated, be sure to reference a guide for home preserving.
- If the handle becomes hard to operate, turn it counterclockwise a few times.

Tomato Purée

Cut tomatoes into quarters and fill the Sauce Master's hopper. Use the plunger to guide them through as you turn the crank in a clockwise direction.

Basic Tomato Sauce
1 onion, finely chopped
2 cloves garlic, minced
2 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 1/2 cups tomato purée
1 cup beef broth
1/2 teaspoon oregano
1/2 teaspoon basil
1/2 teaspoon sugar
Salt and pepper, to taste

Sauté onion and garlic in butter and oil until soft. Add tomato purée, broth, herbs and spices. Boil until reduced to 2 cups. Serve over vegetables or pasta. May be refrigerated or frozen for later use.

Applesauce

Cut apples into quarters and simmer in boiling water until tender. No need to remove the skins or core. Place into the hopper and turn away. If jamming occurs, the apples need to be boiled longer. For a thicker, chunkystyle sauce, use the pumpkin screen rather than the berry screen.

Danish Apple Cake
2 cups zwieback crumbs, finely crushed
1 cup melted butter
3/4 cup sugar
1 1/2 teaspoons cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon ground
cardamon
3 cups unsweetened
applesauce
Whipped cream

Preheat the oven to 350 degrees. Mix the crumbs and melted butter. In a separate bowl, mix the sugar and spices. Put a thin layer of crumbs on the bottom of a buttered 9-inch tube pan. Sprinkle with sugar mixture. Add a thin layer of applesauce. Repeat layers until ingredients are gone. Bake for 1 hour. Cool and turn out. Frost with whipped cream.

The squirt guard can be removed when processing dry foods, such as beans and potatoes.

- When straining harder items, such as firm apples or potatoes, they should be boiled first before putting them through the machine
- When making at-home baby food, use the different screens on your fruits, vegetables, cooked meats and poultry to create a variety of textures.

Sunny Conley Chile Knights

May is National Hamburger Month. Pay tribute to this mouthwatering celebration by experimenting with out-of-the-ordinary

To learn what fellow chile pepper burger lovers were fixing for the fête, I conducted Bing and Google searches and came up with a roster of recipes – too many to include in one column, although I share three.

4 hamburger buns

To make pepper ketchup, process peppers, sugar and 1 teaspoon salt in a blender. Pour into a small saucepan and cook over medium heat 4 minutes or until thickened. Combine ground beef and remaining 1/4 teaspoons salt and shape into 8 thin patties.

Combine cream cheese and jalapeño pepper (or green chiles) and divide evenly in the center of 4 patties (do not spread to edges).

Chile Pepper Burgers With Lime Mayonnaise

This recipe includes how to use hickory chips when cooking on a charcoal grill. If you're using propane, see note below.

1/3 cup mayonnaise 1 teaspoon Dijon mustard 1 teaspoon lime juice 1/2 teaspoon grated lime peel 2 pounds lean ground sirloin 1/3 cup green onions, sliced 3 tablespoons plain yogurt 2 tablespoons jalapeño pepper, finely chopped

Rustle up a chubby burger made gooey good with melted white cheese, fried onions and strips of peppered bacon.

1/2 teaspoon salt 1/2 teaspoon pepper 8 ounces hot pepper cheese cut into 8 slices 8 Kaiser rolls 2 cups hickory chips

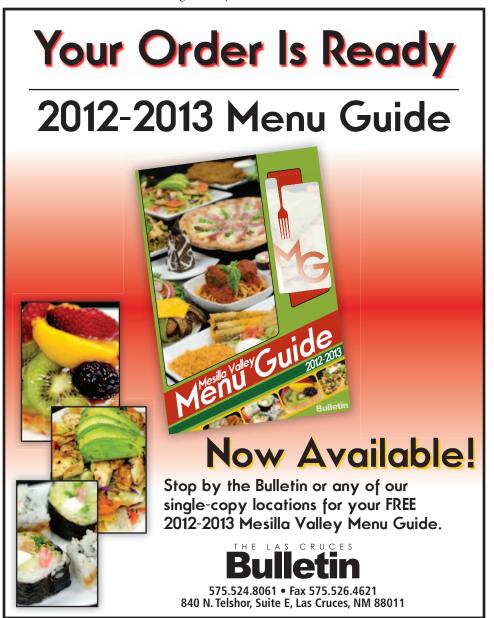

Place wood chips in large mixing bowl then cover with water and soak for 1 hour. In small mixing bowl combine mayonnaise, mustard, lime juice and lime peel. Cover with plastic wrap and chill.

Combine beef, onions, yogurt, jalapenos, salt and pepper the shape into 8 patties.

Drain hickory chips and sprinkle over hot coals then arrange patties on cooking grate. Grill covered for 15 minutes turning half way through cooking. Top each burger with 1 slice cheese then grill 2 minutes longer. Serve on rolls with your favorite condiments. Makes 8 servings. (Recipe adapted from http://grouprecipes.com.)

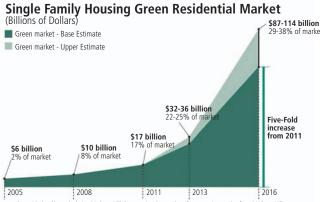

Note: Wrap your chips in aluminum foil and punch lots of holes in it. Put the foil down near the flame under the grill (faster smoke) or on top of the grill next to the food. Either way you will get smoke! (Tip from http://antoinehardwoods.com.)

Miles Dyson
Living Green

It is no secret that new home construction and sales have suffered over the last few years.

Residential construction has borne more than its fair share of the nation's economic sacrifice. Locally, we see some easing of the malaise, our ever resilient Las Cruces slow and steady economy is providing limited opportunity for the best and most adaptive home builders.

Educated, recession-era consumers demand a lot for their home buying dollar. Nationally and regionally, homes with features identified as "green" are equated with better quality and better value.

Of new homes being built, an ever increasing percentage are identifiable as green. According to a new report from the National Association of Home Builders (NAHB) and McGraw Hill Construction (MHC), 17 percent of all new homes built in 2011 were green homes. This percent of green homes is up from only 2 percent during the peak of the 2005 building bubble.

The NAHB and MHC report estimates that in four years, green homes will make up more than 30 percent of the new home market.

Green homes can be identified or classified by a wide range of features and attributes. The MHC report surveyed contractors all over the country to determine what green features were most important to their customers.

With all the news on increasing energy prices it is no surprise energy efficiency was the leading green practice requested by customers. About half of all homebuyers are looking for low maintenance and durability as well as water efficiency. Indoor air quality and waste management were important to about one-third of new homeowners. Smart development with easy access to services and open spaces rounded out the most requested green home attributes.

The trend toward more green features and comparatively more green homes is seen in New Mexico and Las Cruces, too. Paul Allen Homes in Albuquerque completed 130 NAHB Green and Build Green New Mexico certified homes in 2011. This New Mexico builder received the NAHB Research Center Green Partner Award for building more NAHB Green certified homes than any other builder in the nation in 2011.

Our recent Las Cruces Home Builders Association Spring Showcase of Homes featured a number of green home offerings. Veloz Homes and Soledad Canyon Earth Builders each displayed beautiful and efficient Energy Star program homes. Gary Rogers' entry from Planet Development was a double certified – Build Green New Mexico and Energy Star home with an impressive 47 Home Energy Rating Index.

Eighty percent of the builders responding to the MHC report survey said energy efficiency is making today's homes greener compared with two years ago. The use of energy-efficient features was the top practice indicated by nearly all surveyed builders, regardless of their level of green building activity.

Odds are your next home will, in some way, be a green
