Council sets fee for Downtown

Nonprofits get break on events for public

By Alta LeCompte

For the Las Cruces Bulletin

The Las Cruces City Council Monday, April 16, adopted a fee of $50 for holding private or for-profit events in public spaces Downtown.

Following discussion, council unanimously approved an amended resolution to start a simpler, lower fee structure than originally proposed.

The $50 fee will cover a four-hour event. An additional fee of $50 will be charged for each additional four-hour period.

"The fees are now consistent throughout the park system," said Parks and Recreation Director Mark Johnston.

Public, nonprofit events will not be assessed.

The city had proposed four-hour rental fees ranging from $50 for a parking lot concession or parking lot reservation to $250 for the north and south ends of Main Street and the middle Main Street "plaza" area. Proposed fees to use La Placita would have ranged from $100 for a private function to $200 for a commercial use.

Johnston said he took input on the proposed policy at a well-attended public meeting in February and a meeting of the Downtown Las Cruces Partnership (DLCP).

"The fee schedule is fair. They compromised and brought the cost down," said Carrie La Tour, executive director of the Downtown Las Cruces Partnership.

La Tour said council assured her that her organization would not have to pay to hold events that are free and open to the public, although the events may have sponsors.

According to City Manager Robert Garza, increased demand for the spaces following the reopening of Main Street prompted the development of the policy.

This is the first time the city has adopted an operating policy for the use of Main Street and other Downtown public event spaces.

The policy spells out the responsibilities of planners whose events will block access to public spaces.

La Tour said DLCP will work with the city's parks and recreation department to "keep track of events and make sure we don't double-book or have a conflicting event two doors down."

A new March Madness

March for Babies and Marchapalooza boost March of Dimes effort

By Rachel Christiansen

The inaugural Marchapalooza music festival raised more than $3,500 for the Southern New Mexico March of Dimes' March for Babies to be held at 8 a.m. Saturday, April 28, at Young Park, 905 Nevada Ave.

Six local bands converged upon St. Clair Winery & Bistro Friday, April 13, to provide a night filled with rockin' and rollin' – as well as country, acoustic stylings, contemporary cello and metal. The crowd enjoyed a night of wine and music, emceed by Lynz Green and Jack Lutz from 99.5 The Rocket radio station.

"The community all came together for this and had a good time while doing a great thing," Green said.

Thanks to the generous support of all the event's sponsors, 100 percent of proceeds benefited the organization.

Team Babysavers, hosts of the Marchapalooza soiree, will make its contribution and show its support during the 10K march.

To join the Babysavers or form your own team, register for the walk at www. marchforbabies.org.

The company looking at creating a $1 billion "ghost town" for real-world testing of new technology is expected to make its decision by early May to either build near Las Cruces or Hobbs.

Pegasus Global Holdings is proposing to build what it's calling Center for Innovation, Technology and Testing (CITE) for replicating city buildings and neighborhoods to confidentially and safely test new technology before they are introduced to the market.

After looking at a variety of sites near cities across the nation, Pegasus has narrowed it down to two finalists in New Mexico – Las Cruces and Hobbs.

Observations by volunteers taken seriously by Family Court judge Gathered in the chambers of Family Court Judge Fernando Macias Monday, April 16, was the latest group of volunteers from Mesilla Valley Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASA) to be sworn in.

They join a growing cadre of CASAs, whose role of advocating for children in court proceedings are becoming more critical every year, Macias said.

After swearing them in, Macias told the group of four new CASAs he appreciated the format used by Mesilla Valley CASA – usually not longer than a few pages – to bring him up to speed on the cases in his courtroom.

"These are the reports I read first," Macias said. "Then, I go through the often voluminous court documents accompanying the cases."

Prehistoric tracks found in the hills

Footprints frozen in stone become international find

By Todd G. Dickson

The official date of the Paleozoic trackways discovery is June 6, 1987, but Jerry MacDonald will tell you it was the stories from locals about findings amphibian footprints in bits of rock that sent him exploring the Robledo Mountains.

But on that day, MacDonald cracked open a slab of large stone to uncover a stunning store of trackways – primarily of a creature called dimetrodon – that would be the start of the most significant fossilized record of early terrestrial life from the Paleozoic Era.

MACDONALD

"The stone just opened up like pages of a book," MacDonald

Those pages have been rewriting the history of life 280 million years ago ever since. For example, seeing the tracks of dimetrodon didn't include its tail dragging, models of the creature now show its tail sticking out straight.

The stone just opened up like pages of a book.

> JERRY MACDONALD, trackways discoverer

MacDonald excavated three long trackways from what is now called the "Discovery Site," located north of a now on his back, MacDonald lugged more than 2,500 slabs that make up the Paleozoic trackways collection at the New Mexico Museum of Natural History and Science. One of the large stretches of trackof the large stretches of trackways have been split into two sections for display at the Carnegie Museum and Smithsonian.

After the discovery, Mac-Donald spent much of the following years working on what the tracks meant. But in recent years, he and local residents became concerned that the trackways weren't be adequately protected. They organized and were able to get passage of the Prehistoric Trackways National Monument was established in 2009 to conserve and protect 5,280 acres in the Robledos.

In addition to the trackways of amphibians and reptiles, tracks of insects - many previously unknown - have been found. Rock prints of plants and well-preserved petrified wood have also been found.

For Earth Day, First Christian Church, 1809 El Paseo Road, will offer a presentation on the Prehistoric Trackways National Monument and MacDonald. From 2 to 3:30 p.m. Sunday, April 22, Mike Downs of the Prehistoric Trackways National Monument will tell MacDonald's story. Downs will also provide information on the two-mile guided hike to the 'Discovery Site.'

The discovery would become hailed as the most significant of these reptile-like animals that were among the earliest land animals 280 million years ago. ### What's in a name?

Recent furor over 'pink slime' should cause everyone to be wary of how quickly media can affect our lives

> "What's in a name? That which we call a rose By any other name would smell as sweet." William Shakespeare

Many readers will recognize this quote from William Shakespeare's classic tale "Romeo and Juliet." These words were uttered by a love-stricken Juliet to let her boyfriend, Romeo, know that she was in love with him as a person and that his family name did not matter to her.

In light of the recent turmoil within the beef industry, caused by an incredible amount of misinformation, promulgated by both traditional and social media, the famous quote could be updated by saying:

> "What's in a name? That which we call hamburger meat with lean, finely textured beef By any other name would taste as good."

Of course, nearly every American today knows that the "any other name" for boneless, lean, finely textured beef is also now commonly known as "pink slime."

This unfortunate moniker is attributed to an unidentified U.S. Department of Agriculture inspector who allegedly first used the term "pink slime" in an internal email as a description of the beef product that was better known in the industry as "lean, finely textured beef," or LFTB.

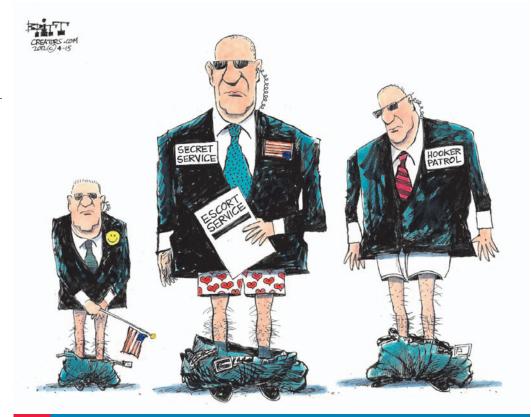

The process of producing LFTB was invented in the early 1990s by Eldon Roth, who developed the concept of limiting waste by converting meat trimmings into a marketable product. He used a centrifuge that separated fat from the meat, creating a low-fat product that could easily be combined with other ground beef to lower the fat content. Roth's company, Beef Products Inc., became the largest purveyor of LFTB to other beef producers across the country.

In 2009, a New York Times story that was critical of Beef Products Inc., introduced the unsavory term "pink slime" to describe the LFTB. After this story was published, other media, led by The Huffington Post and ABC News, began to "expose" the world to the alleged pink slime menace. Then when the popular celebrity chef Jamie Oliver joined the anti-pink slime brigade, aided by the viral impact of social media, the public relations nightmare began for beef producers, grocers, suppliers and public schools across the country.

Almost overnight, several grocery chains promised to eliminate any products that used LFTB. Schools canceled orders from suppliers until they could be assured that no hamburgers containing "pink slime" would be included in their deliveries. Consequently, the demand for LFTB dropped dramatically, and Beef Products Inc. was forced to shut down most of its operations and had to lay off hundreds of workers. Across the nation, there were outcries for ground beef to be labeled if it contained LFTB, despite the fact that the product is considered by the USDA to be 100 percent beef.

All this happened because of semantics and the awful-sounding name, "pink slime." Few people would want to eat or drink anything that was labeled "slime." However, "slime" is just a word – a word that unfortunately was chosen to attack a legitimate American business with a reputation for quality food processing. Before you say "yuck" and "no way" to LFTB, which is considered to be as safe to eat as any meat product on the market today, you might want to consider the ingredients of your sausage, hot dogs, bologna and menudo.

We will all now pay a price for this unwarranted attack on the beef industry. Just check the price of ground beef at your local markets.

Senior citizens carrying share of student loans

As shocking as this country's national debt strikes most people, even more of an eye opener to me was a very recent Washington Post story picked up by many news media.

Research by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York reveals that in the final quarter of last year, the amount owed in student loans came to a whopping $879 billion. More than 10 percent of such loans are already delinquent.

Worst off are those aged 60 or older who have been unable to find good-paying jobs, especially during the current recession, Such seniors still owe about $36 billion in student

For those who are delinquent, there's another financial burden: added fees for late or missed payments. In one case, where the original loan of $38,000 fell very far behind, the total eventually escalated to $69,000 due.

In such instances, Social Security checks may be garnished and bankruptcy offers no relief, since it cannot be used in this type of

Thank you very much for putting a picture of our play "Forty Fortunes" in last week's (April 13) Las Cruces Bulletin.

However, we actually raised money for three charities: World Food Programme (WFP), Room to Read (RTR) and the Las Cruces Academy Building Fund.

We read how WFP feeds famine victims in Somalia in our Weekly Readers. Room to Read is a program that gets books for school libraries that are too poor to buy their own books. We read about RTR in a book, "Zak the Yak with Books on His Back" by John Wood.

When we planned to raise money for these groups and the school offered to loan us the space for the fundraiser, we included Las Cruces Academy's building fund.

No statues of Billy the Kid in NM

Long envious Texas boasts two effigies of legendary outlaw

Jay Miller Inside the Capitol

Now that New Mexico finally has a statue of Pat Garrett, our state's best known lawman, Lincoln County War researcher Mike Pitel notes that the score on Billy the Kid statues is Texas: 2, New Mexico: 0.

We recently mentioned San Elizario, Texas, just down the river from El Paso, erected a Billy the Kid statue in its business district designed to increase tourist traffic to the village. Then there is a statue of the Kid and a small museum in Hico, Texas, and a grave marker in nearby Hamilton, Texas.

Hico, pronounced High-co, claims that local character William Henry Roberts was really Billy the Kid. According to promoters of that story, the Kid and Sheriff Pat Garrett conspired to kill someone else and split the $500 reward offered by Gov. Lew Wallace. Garrett claimed the entire reward, but Wallace never paid off.

Roberts also went by other names. After a cousin named Oliver P. died, Roberts took the name Ollie and sometimes used "L" as middle initial. He also went by Brushy Bill after coming up with the claim he was Billy the Kid.

Brushy also claimed to have been a member of the Jesse James Gang, a Rough Rider, a Pinkerton detective, a buddy of Pancho Villa and numerous other characters from Western

His 15 minutes of fame came in 1950 when he asked New Mexico Gov. Tom Mabry for a pardon. Mabry granted him a private hearing in the presence of two historians of the governor's choosing. Brushy did not do well on history. He completely failed at speaking Spanish, in which Billy was fluent. The pardon was not granted.

The San Elizario statue commemorates a popular local story that the Kid freed a friend from the local jail. The claim appears in Garrett's book, "The Authentic Life of Billy the Kid." But historians have not been able to corroborate the story and are very skeptical it actually took place.

It appears, then, that the two Texas statues, which seek a place in Billy the Kid's story, are very dubious. They both are meant to attract tourists and likely are doing well at it. New Mexico had a Billy the Kid statue at one time. Mike Pitel's research indicates that a life-size statue of the Kid was placed in downtown Fort Sumner on Sept. 20, 1999.

Pitel said Fort Sumner artist Steve Sewell created the statue, at his own expense, out of chicken wire and concrete. It was situated so it could be noticed by tourists heading toward the Billy the Kid Museum in town or heading toward the turnoff to the Kid's gravesite, the Fort Sumner Museum and the Fort Sumner state monument.

A plaque accompanying the statue read: "There was a young man who came this way, changed many lives, then was taken away. BTK 1859-1881.'

Pitel said the statue disappeared. The local word was that vandals tore it down one night. The story is believable in terms of accounts of the Kid's tombstone being stolen so often.

The statue never was replaced. Other events have indicated that most people in Fort Sumner don't seem particularly supportive of anything involving Billy the Kid. He was a criminal and they don't want anything to do with him. The Kid was shot on the rambling property owned by the Maxwell family that had moved from Cimarron, along with 25-40 other families, in late 1870. That was the beginning of what became, decades later, the village of Fort Sumner and the creation of De Baca County.

But that important piece of county history is not to be found anywhere in the area. It is sometimes difficult for a community to acknowledge its past.

Yet the nearby Bosque Redondo, where more 9,000 Navajo and Mescalero Apaches were interned from 1863-1868, is a state monument with a memorial and museum.

Issues of water and horse slaughter go hand in hand

Southwest drought is major factor in surplus of horses

Michael Swickard

In My Opinion

There are some casualties of the extended drought and government decisions involving ownership of water.

New Mexico watches lots of water travel through our state without being able to use it. The protracted drought and lack of water for farmers directly caused something the newspapers recently covered: the appearance of horse maltreatment and a plan for a horse slaughterhouse in Roswell. The two-fer of horses not being fed well and the desire to slaughter horses has people not understanding.

Do not get me wrong, any day I get horse boogers on me is a good day. I like horses better than people, and only slightly less than dogs, but it is close. I have spent quite a bit of time around horses and have a good understanding of equine issues. In fact, I understand the physics of when a horse is standing on your boot – it will take all of the weight off the other three hooves.

So why are horses looking bad these days? Start with the question: Why did many New Mexico ranchers take most of their cattle to market last summer? It was the price of feed. The normal price of alfalfa was about $6 a bale. Suddenly, it went up and up until today that price now is around $22 a bale.

Why sell herds of animals? Because it is too hard to feed the livestock and remain profitable when feed goes up 400 percent. Feed them the producers must, because New Mexico is in an extended hard-drought.

That does not excuse mistreatment of any animal, but we need to soften our hearts a bit and understand the dynamics at

Blue Ribbon Pet Sitting LLC

First, why is feed up 400 percent? It is entirely connected to lack of water for New Mexico farmers. Growing alfalfa requires lots of water. Rain alone will not do it in New Mexico. When the snowpack is much less than abundant and the allocation of water to farmers is cut, the farmers must concentrate their slender water resources on growing fewer fields to have enough water for their crops.

Consequently, the price of feed started going up. There was a scarcity of New Mexico alfalfa, which was satisfied by alfalfa growers in Colorado and Arizona shipping alfalfa into our state. The law of supply and demand for feed made the price rise. Competing for the feed are three broad groups: people with horses, dairies and other livestock producers.

There is one other factor. Horses require feed with very little or no weeds grown in it. Cattle can eat alfalfa that has some weeds that grew intermingled in the alfalfa. Some livestock such as goats can eat weeds with no ill effects. The fragile horse palate means they can only eat the best feed, which costs the most.

New Mexico must get a handle on water so farmers have a full allotment for their growing season ...

It appears, then,

that the two Texas statues, which seek a place in Billy the Kid's story, are very dubious.

So last summer, amid the drought and rising feed prices, many cattle operations culled their herds down, taking most of the cattle to market rather than feeding at skyrocketing prices. But what about horse operations?

What do horse operations do with a glut of horses that no one wants because feed prices make the horses too expensive?

Years ago those extra horses would have gone to slaughterhouses so that horse ranchers could recover some of their investment and stay in business. It was not what anyone who had horses wanted to do, it was what they had to do.

Then the federal government with no understanding of the economics of horse ranchers closed the last slaughterhouse in 2007 by not certifying it. It is not illegal to slaughter horses, the government just decided for political reasons to not certify each slaughterhouse. So horses have to go somewhere. They are shipped to Mexico to be slaughtered there under less humane conditions.

New Mexico must get a handle on water so farmers have a full allotment of water for their growing season or cost-of-feed problems will only get worse. If New Mexico farmers can grow lots of alfalfa, the price will fall and pressures will ease on the livestock producers.

It will not entirely do away with the market need to slaughter horses, only reduce it.

As a pediatrician who has dedicated part of my professional life to the care of these children in Las Cruces, I can speak to the unrelenting stream of cases of these preventable conditions that affect so many of our children, stealing their childhood and paving the way for abuse of their own children and for a lifetime of co-morbid physical ills and dysfunctional behavior.

According to a recent study from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), the total lifetime estimated financial costs associated with just one year of new confirmed cases of child maltreatment (physical abuse, sexual abuse, psychological abuse and neglect) is $124 billion.

The report goes on to document that, in fiscal year 2008, U.S. state and local child protective services received more than three million reports of children being abused or neglected – about six complaints per minute, every day. We need to address this problem not only for the children, but for society.

This data complements many other critically important studies, notably the ongoing adverse childhood experiences (ACE) studies of Felliti and Anda (1998-present) that relate childhood exposure to abuse or household dysfunction to several leading causes of death among adults

The ACE studies involve ongoing collaborative research between the CDC and Kaiser Permanente in San Diego. Data continues to be analyzed and reveals staggering proof of the health, social and economic costs that result from childhood trauma.

As a general pediatrician, I have worked the last 15 years with law enforcement, social services, legal professionals and judicial professionals in efforts to identify and remediate abuse and neglect involving children, particularly those already compromised by poverty, lack of food and housing insecurity. Many of these children are subject to ramifications of mental illness and substance abuse by their caregivers.

Doña Ana County handles more than 250 child abuse cases every year. At a national level, nearly 600,000 new substantiated cases of child maltreatment are identified as well as 1,700 child deaths yearly.

Each case has great financial and societal cost. The system has given hope to millions of children and has saved lives many times over, but it is far from perfect. The numbers belie our efforts to treat the problem systemically.

Never in modern history has there been a greater need to care for our children.

In the age of instant information, we see devastating evidence, worldwide and in New Mexico, that children are subject to relentless violence, physical abuse, sexual assault, hunger, preventable diseases, and inadequate or no educational opportunities.

Children are raised in families ravaged by poverty and hopelessness. Healthy futures for these children are by no means certain. The cost to society in the potential productivity of these children is as good as lost.

The good news is that America has shown the capacity to recognize and accept that child abuse exists. The government has shown its commitment to identifying and evaluating child abuse and supporting families through their climb to health so that their children can count on a healthy family environment.

Professional organizations including the American Academy of Pediatrics, the American Board of Pediatrics, the American Professional Society on the Abuse of Children, and many others have supported professionals in their quest to provide state of the art services to child maltreatment victims and their families.

We still face challenges. There are many examples of effective preventive programs that help families to create a healthy environment for themselves and their children. However, we must enhance these services, develop and test new ones, and make the investment in healthy children, our greatest natural resource.

A world without cows

66 The good news is that

America has shown abuse exists.

Can you imagine a world without cows?

In 1535 Francisco Coronado brought cows into what is now the United States. He crossed the border 40 miles south of Benson, Ariz., with horses and cows.

They say he went as far as Kansas, looking for a good veterinarian, I guess.

In the ensuing five centuries, the domestic bovine has mooed itself into virtually every county in the western hemisphere. But, for the sake of our initial question — say that we had been conquered been conquered by marauding Latvians, Amazonian dart blowers, or a powerful vegetarian brokerage firm in Fiji who did not bring cattle into the country or prohibited their importation.

My first observation is there would be no Big Macs. Beef, milk or cheese would not be available in abundance.
Would we try to domesticate deer, buffalo elk wild goats or moose?

falo, elk, wild goats or moose?
We'd hear, "Pork, it's what's for dinner," "Where's the Mutton?" "Goat, the other white meat," "Got Okra?" and "Certified Angus Drumstick."

"I'll have a fungus burger with shredded Styrofoa:

shredded Styrofoam and a side of those thistle poppers."

"Does your horsemeat pudding come with splashguards?" "I'll have some

"I'll have some cold mutton gravy with hair in it."

I'm assuming goat milk would become the pasteurized drink of choice. Chicken would become the biggest source of animal protein, unless we were able to tame sperm whales. Shetland pony tenderloin would be served at good steakhouses.

Our eating habits would become boring to many epicureans. They'd be yearning for a big, succulent, juicy, mouth-watering, medium rare, right off the grill – What? Gizzard? Camel hump? Dog leg? Cornish hamster?

America would still have millions on millions of acres of foothills, forest, prairies and rolling country covered with grass. Without cattle to utilize the countryside, I'm sure farmers would run sheep or goats on the less arable ground. Then the West would look like the Australian outback or Alamo, Nev.

We'd be importing insulin made from yak pancreas. Leather upholstery, boots and baseballs would all be made of naugahyde.

Roy Rogers would have stayed in Iowa and become the Soybean Balladeer. Trevor Brazile would have become a professional golfer, and I would be a former reptile veterinarian and swineherd poet:

Ad campaign to change perceptions about NM

Consumers questioned in focus groups last year envisioned New Mexico to be "barren and dull."

The state's tourism department wants to prove those perceptions false with a new advertising campaign tagged "New Mexico True." The campaign, which rolls out this week to drive markets in neighboring Texas, Arizona and Colorado, is part of a $2 million branding effort designed to attract new tourists to New Mexico.

Secretary of Tourism Monique Jacobson said the campaign seeks to convey the authenticity that awaits them in New Mexico.

'Our target audience, the 'adventurer,' seeks a travel experience that is not manufactured one that is true, good and real. One that will feed the soul," Jacobson said. "New Mexico uniquely satisfies this quest because it is authentic and true in its people, landscape and culture."

The campaign was created by Vendor Inc., an Austin, Texas-based advertising agency.

Vignettes shot all over New Mexico, showing couples and families hiking, kayaking, llama trekking, making pottery, exploring historic ruins, observing native dances, stargazing, shopping and sampling local foods and wine. Future spots will capture more New Mexico adventures on the ski slopes, in museums and galleries and at the state's many markets and fiestas.

"It's more about 'site-doing' than 'sight-seeing," Jacobson said. "Adventure here doesn't mean thrill-seeking, but rather making a true connection to the land, its past and present, and to ourselves."

The campaign kicks off this week in Tucson, Ariz.; Colorado Springs, Colo.; and El Paso, Lubbock, Midland-Odessa and Amarillo, Texas.

In conjunction with the new ad campaign, the department is launching a website redesign at www.newmexico.org.

The Las Cruces City Council may agree to make an offer for the Las Cruces Country Club, which has remained idle since members closed it last November.

Las Cruces Mayor Ken Miyagishima confirmed he has had discussions with club board members and they have expressed a willingness to entertain an offer.

Miyagishima said he may bring up some ideas with the other members of council in closed session after the work session Monday, April 23. He said the council won't take an action, but the behind-closed-doors discussion should yield an offer to be taken to the club

"I expect there will be a lot of back-and-forth negotiations," Miyagishima said. "The council doesn't need to take an action until there's a firm offer that's brought before it in a resolu-

The celebration includes live bands, entertainers, educational booths, vendors and children's activities, along with arts and science activities. This is a family-friendly environment that promotes sustainable living, sustainable practices, communication and fun.

This year, the stage will be powered with clean energy from the sun. Local solar company, Energy Concepts, has provided the 30-foot trailer stacked with solar panels to power the staged events.

The company, founded in Las Cruces in 1991 by a solar research engineer, will also have three engineers and two installers at the event to explain the technology to interested attendees. All of the component parts will be clearly labeled, and educational handouts will also be available to facilitate the workshop process. "Our employees are really looking forward to the day," said Cary Lane, Energy Concepts owner. 'They all love explaining solar technology, and it's going to be a great opportunity to see the entire system operating while you learn about it."

American Rocket Society comes of age in early '60s

Group of dreamers transformed into prestigious organization

By Michael Shinabery

Editor's note: This is part three of a three-part story.

While World War II proved the "destructive" capabilities of rockets, the American Rocket Society was frustrated the technology achieved no "scientific purposes," said the August 1980 Journal of the British Interplanetary Society

That the United States had not launched a manned rocket to the moon wasn't for any lack of effort by ARS cofounder G. Edward Pendray.

"He travelled a great deal and became, in the words of one newspaper, 'a one man messiah' for the cause of rocketry," the JBIS said. "By 1945 he had made over 300 speeches and written 500

To "the business and scientific communities" Pendray pointed out "rocketry and guided missiles would develop into new ... highly profitable industries." While he stressed such "practical goals" as "as rocket-propelled or assisted aircraft (and) rocket mail carriers ... his ultimate dream ... was to see this startling new war technology turned to a means of manufacturing the first spaceships."

On March 7, 1945, after speaking to the Washington, D.C., Society of Engineers, the JBIS said Pendray "chatted" with Clarence Davies, secretary of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

Davies "suggested a possible affiliation between the ARS and ASME." Committees representing both groups voted approval on Nov. 2; the merger gave the ARS increased revenue and scientific standing as well as increased membership.

The roster included "members of Congress, government officials, high-ranking military officers, leaders of industry, engineers, scientists and students," Douglas Mudgway wrote in "William H. Pickering: America's Deep Space Pioneer."

"It was the largest and most prestigious organization of its kind in the country, if not the world, and encompassed the entire missile and space business of the U.S. When the ARS spoke, people listened."

From the 12 founders in 1930, ARS membership increased to 11,500 in 1958, 13,750 in 1959, and "by 1962 it soared to 20,450." Dr. Robert Goddard was a member "for many years," Science magazine said in a Nov. 23, 1945 tribute after Goddard's death. Earlier that year, the father of liquid fuel rocketry had been "elected to the Society's Board of Directors."

Pickering, who as director of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory helped launch the first U.S. satellite into orbit in 1958, was the ARS president in 1961. He told the Society's 1961 convention (which Mudgway quoted): "Missiles for hot war, space for cold war; these two elements of our strength are critical in determining our national posture, our standing among nations, our ability to lead the free world."

Years before satellites ever lifted off from the pages of science fiction for Earth orbit. the ARS tried "to convince the various scientific institutions that satellite flight was feasible," said "Satellite!"

Finally, in 1954, the ARS Space Flight Committee 'submitted a 'Study of the Feasibility of an Experimental Earth Satellite' to the National Science Foundation," the JBIS documented.

According to "Satellite!," "the text stated that the study of the utility of an unmanned Earth satellite would be one of the most important steps that could be taken immediately to advance the cause of space flight, and that this step would also increase the country's scientific knowledge."

ARS "continued to push for the scientific and peaceful conquest of space," Erik Bergaust wrote in "Wernher von Braun."

"The (S)ociety, consequently, became the spark plug that ignited the space satellite ideas.'

By 1962, the ARS had created approximately 55 geographical "sections" nationwide, each with chapters," the JBIS said. In the fall of 1954, Dr. John Paul Stapp told El Paso members about his G-force studies aboard rocket sleds at Holloman Air Force Base, said "Men, Rockets and Space Rats." Three months later, Stapp would ride a rocket sled to 632 mph in five seconds.

On Sept. 21, 1954, the Alamogordo newspaper reported Edward Francisco, chief of White Sands Proving Ground's Propulsion Branch, spoke to the Alamogordo group.

"The rocket propulsion field has become so complex today that no single mind can encompass its innumerable facets," the paper quoted Francisco. "Modern rocket research requires a team of specialists much as a modern hospital requires a team of doctors who are specialists."

On Aug. 30, 1956, the Alamogordo Daily News reported "a film sent to this country from Russia portraying work in applied solar energy ... will be shown tonight to members of the American Rocket Society. ... Doctor Paul Jose announced that he knows nothing about the film, since he had just received it barely in time for tonight's showing."

"It might be narrated in Russian, and might be good and might be bad," Jose said. In 1958, "The Rocket Edward Pendray, left, shows "the partially completed upper portion" of the organization's third rocket, in New York in 1934, said information with the photograph. Pioneers," contrasted the ARS' achievements with the organization's humble beginnings, stating: "Its cellarworkshop (sic) youth is a thing of the past. Like other similar organizations it has come of age. But it looks back a little wistfully, and with considerable pride, to the days when it was still building frail projectiles out of odds and ends of metal, when its members were still dream-inspired pioneers in a science which now, like the Society itself, has achieved the stature of maturity.

The era established in 1930 by dreamers who, while they were amateurs, experimented enthusiastically nonetheless, came to a close at the end of 1962 when committees representing the ARS and the Institute of Aeronautical Sciences voted to merge. The IAS, according to the Smithsonian Institution website siris-archives.si.edu, was founded in 1932 as "a society of aeronautics-related professionals."

The new, merged organization went by the name of the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics," the JBIS said, "with a starting membership of about 36,000. Pickering was president when "the new society formally began operation" on Feb. 1, 1963.

"I felt I lost part of my life," the JBIS quoted Pendray. "But I also knew that the merger was in everyone's interest and (I) voted for it."

Las Cruces Mayor Ken Miyagishima said he has been proud to continue the program that gets young people involved in the community.

Mayor's Top Teens accepting nominations

By Todd G. DicksonLas Cruces Bulletin

A program that recognizes students who overcome adversity and are involved in the community, is asking for a little help.

Besides giving recognition to young people who may not be the usual overachievers, the Mayor's Top Teens Program also helps these students go to college, said Jack Barclay of the Optimist Club, who started the effort.

Speaking at a breakfast for current sponsors Wednesday, April 18, at the Las Cruces Convention Center, Barclay said the program wanted to give out $1,000 scholarships, but right now can only afford to give out $500 scholarships.

The Mayor's Top Teens started with more than 20 students, but now selects 50 top teens who are sophomore, juniors or seniors in local high schools. The program aims to give each top teen scholarship money if they go to New Mexico State University or Doña Ana Community College.

Barclay said the program has sponsors for 25 teens this year, but needs another 25.

Attorney Amy Orlando talked about how her office is too often prosecuting young people who got involved in gangs and ended up on the wrong side of the law, or who are killed senselessly.

Orlando said programs like the Mayor's Top Teens can help young people avoid trouble by recognizing those students who could easily "fall through the cracks," she said.

"If we invest in them, we are investing in our future," Orlando said.

Letticia Martinez, one of this year's top teens, said she thinks she may want to become a lawyer like Orlando, but has not decided yet.

Martinez, who is legally blind, maintains a straight-A grade point average, swims competitively and is active in 4-H and Future Farmers of America. Mayor's Top Teens, along with the Honor Society, has made community service a big part of Martinez's life, she said.

It's like double community service, so I feel like a really good person," she said.

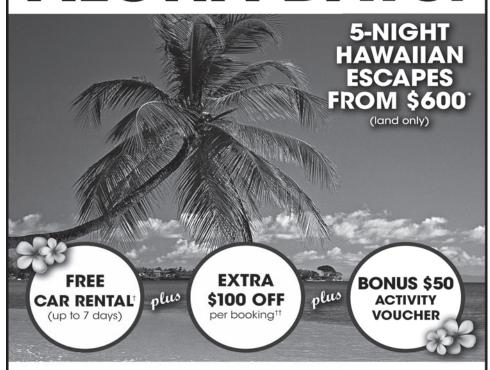

Besides sponsors, Barclay said the program also is accepting nominations for the next group of top teens.

To become a sponsor, nominate a teen or to just learn more about the program, go to www.

1,000 acres of state trust land near Hobbs with the intent to buy adjacent private land.

Building the city would create around 300 jobs, roughly the same number of technicians and workers who would be employed to keep it running, said Robert Brumley, senior managing director for CITE.

Brumley visited Las Cruces Monday, April 16, as part of the company's "due diligence" process of visiting the two communities to meet with local government, economic development and education officials.

New Mexico was picked for the project because its abundance of available land. good roads and three research universities, he said. The state also has an extensive fiberoptic Internet network, which he said will be critical to the work done at CITE.

Because it would be a city running at any time of day or night, a relatively isolated locale was needed, he said, but not too isolated.

Once the final site is picked, Brumley said Pegasus wants to quickly get the land acquired and all regulatory requirements in line to begin construction by the end of June. Most of the early work will be in infrastructure and development of utilities before the roads and buildings are built, he said.

Construction of CITE is expected to take about two years, he said.

Both Las Cruces and Hobbs have been welcoming to the proposal, Brumley said.

Noting a uranium processing plant that opened in Hobbs, Lea County did have a very strong economic development focus and a lot of the desired infrastructure was already in place. Because the uranium plant employs experts from all over the world, its public and technical training schools have done a good job adapting the instruction to its needs.

Although there are benefits to just leasing the state land, Brumley admitted there were concerns about the process, which would require the property leases to be put out to bid, even if it would be highly unlikely there would be competing bids for the land. In Hobbs, there is a large amount of private land that is available for Pegasus to buy, he said.

Brumley said he did like that Las Cruces residents are used to high-tech testing with work done by New Mexico State University and White Sands Missile Range.

As a concept, CITE would be a "dumb city" to test "smart technology." This could be as simple as testing wireless communications around buildings. But it could be as complex as having driverless shipping trucks on the roads. That's why people can't actually live at CITE, Brumley said.

"You can't do these things in a lab where everything is perfect," Brumley said. "You've got to take it out and kick it.'

CITE would become a national asset like the federal national laboratories, Brumley said. He said CITE would help the state's research universities and national labs to transfer research projects into commercial products.

their parents are in trouble with the law. The CASAs go to the foster home and court hearings to make sure there is someone there for only the children's needs - not the prosecution or defense, or the opposing sides of a custody case.

Because there are often "deepseated issues" in these matters, Macias said he is open to what the child feels is best and will even speak to children individually. But the CASAs spend more time not only with the children, but their foster care parents and teachers, so they often can point out concerns that may not otherwise come to light, according to Doreen Gallegos, Mesilla Valley CASA executive director.

Because they interact with the courts, Gallegos said some think a legal or social worker background is needed, but that's not the case. Of course, CASA volunteers must pass a thorough background check, but they are provided training and support by the nonprofit organization throughout their involvement, she said.

The four being sworn in Monday did reflect some of the diversity of CASA volunteers. There was Lindsay Ricketts, who recently graduated New Mexico State University with degrees in criminal justice and psychology. Next to her was Lurethia Moten, a retired FBI analyst. Another new CASA was Sandra Gallegos, a former social worker.

Ricketts said she was interested in becoming a CASA because she wants to return to school to become a guardian advocate, possibly even a family lawyer.

For Moten, retirement proved to be too quiet and she was looking for a volunteer opportunity when she learned of CAŜĀs.

"I thought I could work with kids for a while," she said. While Ricketts is excited to get her first case, Moten admitted she was a bit nervous and feeling the weight of the responsibility her new role brings with it.

"I'm hoping I do the right thing for the kids," Moten said.

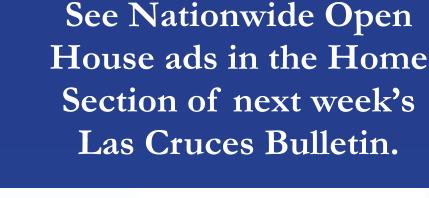

That's the most important quality Doreen Gallegos said she looks for in CASA candidates - that they care deeply about children. It's her role and that of the organization to provide CASAs with the support they need to overcome their nervousness.

In his talk to the new CASAs, Macias told them to not be shy about speaking up in court and asking questions.

Sandra Gallegos, who worked in a variety of social work capacities before taking time off for her young children, said protecting children from situations of abuse and neglect always has been a passion for her.

Another essential requirement for Doreen Gallegos in finding new CASAs is that they are committed to spending at least a year being an advocate. That's because the cases can take that long - or longer. She said she knew of one case that has been in the process for 10 years - and all with the same volunteer CASA.

Mother of hate crime victim speaks in Las Cruces

By Rachel Christiansen

As Judy Shepard entered the packed ballroom of the Las Cruces Convention Center and made her way to the podium Tuesday, April 17, she was welcomed with a standing ovation from more than 800 people.

Shepard is a civil rights activist and strong advocate for the gay and lesbian community. Her speech was one of the main events for New Mexico State University's GLBTQ (Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, Transgendered and Questioning) Awareness Week, which began Monday, April 16, and ends Friday, April 20.

'It was a long time coming and it was amazing to finally hear her side of the story," said Sharna Horn, co-ordinator of the NMSU Sexual Gender and Diversity Resource Center.

Shepard began her quest to end discrimination and crimes of hate and prejudice after her son, Matthew, was killed in 1998.

The nation focused its attention on Laramie, Wyo., that fateful week in October, when it was learned Matthew Shepard, a 21-year-old gay man, was brutally tortured, beaten and left for dead by two men who had admitted contempt for homosexuals.

Reading from the same victim impact statement she read at the trial of the men who killed her son, Shepard also addressed the issues of bullying and inequality people in the GLBTQ community face every day.

"If they legalize gay marriage I don't think my husband of 40 years is going to say, 'You mean I could have married a man?" Shepard joked. That's just not how it works.

Everyone in the gay community is just like you and me, with the same goals and aspirations. The only difference is who they Shepard touted the message of kindness, empa-thy and respect for each human being, and brought light to the fact that bullying is still readily apparent at the middle and high school ages.

"A 'SIC' society,

- that is, silent, indifferent and complacent people - is the reason these problems still exist," Shepard said.

Eric Tarin, a volunteer for the diversity center, said his experience being bullied in high school and the lack of action on the part of the administration, caused him to not want to go to class, resulting in his near failure.

After transferring to a local private school, where he received less criticism of his sexual orientation, Tarin said he was a lot happier, and graduated on time with one of the highest GPAs in the school.

Tarin, now a music major in his sophomore year at NMSU, said having the support of a community at NMSU "makes all the difference in the world."

The point of the awareness week is, according to Horn, to "bring awareness to a topic that still isn't openly talked about, and build a sense of community between GLBTQ people and their straight allies."

Horn, along with many other volunteers from the diversity center, began cam-paigning to bring Shepard to Las Cruces in October 2011, when they rallied in front of the Association of Students at NMSU and the student senators.

Receiving mixed reactions in which one senator allegedly told the group they "needed 100 petitioned signatures, and would maybe get 30," Horn said, supporters gathered nearly 500 signatures.

"As long as we can reach out to people and let them know that we are here, that there is help for them, that's what this is all about," Horn said.

Other events throughout the week included information tables, resource education, safe zone training and keynote speaker Eric Alva, the first U.S. Marine to be seriously injured in the Iraq War. He later brought his battle to Washington, D.C. to fight for the repeal of the controversial Don't Ask Don't Tell

"We have new and more people coming in after every event," Horn said. "We have nearly tripled our numbers since I started here three years ago.'

Ryan Garcia, also a volunteer at the diversity center, said a common misconception is that the events surrounding GLBTQ Awareness Week are only for those within the gay and lesbian community.

These events are for any and everyone, no matter their sexual orientation, race, religion, gender or anything else," Garcia said.

Professor Stephanie L. Taylor from the NMSU Department of Art tosses a roll of 4-inch wide skein yarn from the door of Williams Hall as part of a "yarn bomb" on the NMSU campus.

After more than six months of knitting by more than 200 New Mexico State University students, staff, faculty and community members, NMSU's first-ever "yarn bomb" detonated at 7 a.m. Wednesday, April 18, outside Williams Hall. Volunteers rolled out nearly 3,000 feet of Aggie-crimson, knitted strips, which were run on the ground, around public art work on campus. The "heARTlines" were removed that evening, laundered and used to craft blankets for local charities.

Students position the yarn next to a sign informing passersby about the event.

Food Checkout Day illustrates affordability for charity

By Marvin Tessneer

The Doña Ana County Farm Bureau and Walmart each contributed $1,000 during the Food Checkout Day on Tuesday, April 17, at the Walmart Supercenter on Walton Boulevard to buy $2,000 worth of food, which was donated to Jardîn de los Niños.

About 20 farmers, ranchers and students in the New Mexico State University agricultural program purchased beef, fruits and vegetables that were needed to restock the shelter's pantry, the New Mexico Farm and Livestock Bureau reported.

"I'm pleased to participate in this event because our state's farmers and ranchers are good neighbors and want to help fellow citizens during this time of economic hardship," said the event's celebrity sacker, Matt Rush, bureau executive vice president.

"This economy is particularly hard on children, and we are grateful for this donation since it provides the nutrition and food security that our clients need," said Shirley Jaquez, Jardin de los Niños director.

Food Checkout Day also reminds consumers of the abundance and affordability of food in the United States, county bureau President Bud Deerman "Americans spend less than 9 percent of their disposable income on food annually," Deerman said. "In China, that figure is 26 percent."

Sports

Sports are not just a metaphor

Jim Hilley Deflections

The world of athletics is one of constant change, but I wonder how many fans stop and think about how sports is more than just a metaphor for life. It is a part of life - a huge part for many.

At the Las Cruces Bulletin, I am currently responsible for both the sports pages and the Looking Back column.

Often, the two tasks have a weird way of being in rhythm. Sometimes incidents from 100, 75 or 50 years ago harmonize with the events of today.

Recently, speculation about a possible coaching move by Marvin Menzies was swirling in the local media. At the same time, I was reading an issue of the Las Cruces Citizen from 50 years ago that announced the departure of Lou Henson from Las Cruces High School for a coaching job in the college ranks at Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene, Texas.

Henson explained that sometimes you have to move on to reach your goals.

Henson left, but eventually returned to Las Cruces to lead New Mexico State basketball to the Final Four in 1970, and to stabilize the program years later after the firing of Neil McCarthy in the 1990s.

Seventy-five years ago, Lem Pratt, "the Greatest Aggie," as he was known then, was going to be a graduating senior in May, but he was not leaving the Las Cruces sports scene. The local school district was putting the young man in charge of athletics at Las Cruces Union High School after his graduation – a pretty tough first job. I am anxious to find out how that worked out as I research my Looking Back column.

Pratt's coach at "the agriculture college" was Jerry Hines, who, like Henson, would lead the Aggie basketball team to surprising heights.

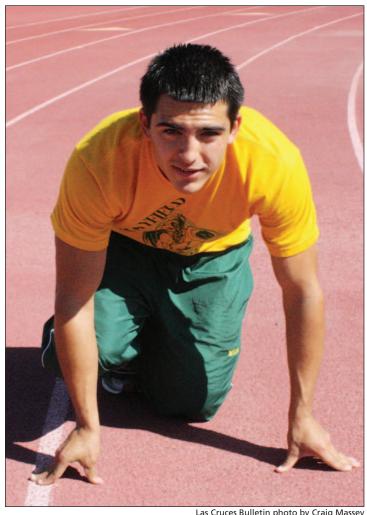

In the years before World War II, the Aggies regularly trounced Texas Western (UTEP) and the University of New Mexico. They even reached the finals of the National Invitation Tournament in New York City.

Today, the annual Bataan Death March is a huge event at White Sands Missile Range each March. In 1942, many of the Aggies who Hines coached were members of the 200th Coastal Artillery stationed in the Philippines that were forced to endure the original march in the Philippines. One of the Aggie basketball greats of the late 1930s was Pecos Finley from Floyd, N.M. He survived the march, but not the death camps.

Athletic careers begin and end.

Ricky Milks, an explosive running back for the Mayfield High School Trojans, will attend Eastern New Mexico University this fall and compete in football as well as track and field.

Mayfield football standout displays quickness on track

By Craig Massey

Ricky Milks has always hit the ground running.

Being raised by his grandmother and mom, Milks learned early on that the best way to escape punishment (albeit temporarily) was to run - as fast as he

"My grandmother always told me I hit the ground running," he said, smiling. "We had one of those islands in our house and they would try to catch me as I ran around it. I've always been running.

Under a bright sun on a recent Friday afternoon, Milks was standing on the track at the Field of Dreams where he and his Mayfield teammates were about to take part in the Oñate Invitational track and field meet.

All that running for all those years had brought him to this

The past included everything from elementary school track meets to amazing performances for the Mayfield High School football team. The future includes a few more high school meets, and then a football and track career at

"I've always been kind of fast," he said.

The "kind of" is Milks' humility showing through. He's more than "kind of" fast. Competing against the state's best in all classes at the Marilyn Sepulveda Track Meet in Albuquerque earlier this month, Milks won the 100 meters with a time of 10.7 and won the 200 in 21.72 seconds. He placed third in the 400.

The senior competes in three relays for the Trojans - the 4-by-100, the 4-by-200 and the medley – as well as the 100, 200 and 400. As a junior last year at the state championships, he finished third in the 100 and fourth in the 200.

Milks said the improvement this year mainly is because of added strength and an increased emphasis on technique and form. "It's knowing the little things like pumping your arms right and not tightening up," he said.

Mayfield assistant track coach Henry Spillers has worked closely with Milks on his technique.

"He has improved tremendously," Spillers said. "He's a hard worker and he pays attention to the little things in technique and form. He's excelled in everything he's done."

Draper is new MVCS football coach

Former Mayfield coach to guide SonBlazers in Class 2A

By Jim Hilley

Mesilla Valley Christian Schools has hired veteran football coach Michael Draper to replace Charles Gleghorn, who guided the program in its first three years.

Draper has been coaching football in New Mexico for almost years, beginning at Lynn Junior High School in Las Cruces. He coached Mayfield High School from 1983-84, leading them to the 5A championship game in 1987, losing to a Roswell team coached by Jim Bradley Sr.

Draper coached at Moriarty High School for nine years and at Estancia High School for five vears. His most recent position was as an assistant at La Cueva High School in Albuquerque.

Draper said replacing Gleghorn after the team's Class A championship season would be

'Some people call me stupid for trying to come over to try and do that," he said. "When I've seen the seniors that have graduated from here and how they look, I kind of wonder myself.

"It's part of the challenge, but every year is different. It would be nice to repeat the success of last year – it would be wonderful – but the reality is you work with what you got and do the best you can."

An additional challenge for Draper will the SonBlazers' move up to Class 2A football this season.

"Next to 5A, 2A is the toughest level there is," he said. "Santa Rosa, Lordsburg, Tularosa, Texico, Tucumcari - then you add Hatch and Cobre - in proportionate levels, it could be as tough as 5A. It has become quite a bit tougher."

Draper said he would most likely stay with See Draper on page A21

The Doña Ana County 4-H Club, which provides broad learning opportunities for youth, has added non-traditional shooting sports, and it has become one of its most popular projects.

On the football field, he is coming off two outstanding years for the Trojans.

He burst on to the scene in 2010 after filling in for injured teammate Brandon Betancourt, then became one of the top running backs in the state last fall when he rushed for 1,983 yards and 29 touchdowns. He was first team all-state as a running back and return man, and also was all-district on defense at cornerback.

to continue his track career at ENMU.

Eastern has a new head coach in Josh Lynn, who led the New Mexico Military Institute to a national ranking last fall. Lynn is installing an option offense that Milks says is similar to Mayfield's.

At 5-5, 160 pounds, Milks will be one of the Greyhounds' smaller players, but the strength, the ability to make would-be tacklers miss, and the speed he has should continue to make him an effective ballcarrier.

"Everyone has always said I'm too small to play, but that just helps motivate me," Milks said.

On defense, Draper said he would like use a 4-2 front.

"I think these days you have to move linebackers and linemen around a lot," Draper said. "I don't think in this day and age and just sit there. Secondary coverage will be dependent on the (player's) speed."

Draper would seem to be a good fit at MVCS, a private Christian school known for its strong academic and sports programs. Draper told a press conference Tuesday, April 17, at the school his years of experience have changed his approach to coaching.

"I am still a vocal coach," he said, "but, I've tempered it a little bit. I've learned what battles to fight and what battles not to fight. You learn how to handle the kids."

'I have learned it's not just the 'X's and 'O's, you work on the character quality traits - dedication, commitment, work ethic and faith - things

"I believe football will reveal right away what kind of character you have," Draper

"To me, coaching is taking a young man or young woman and taking them from where they are and moving them on to where they should be. Is everybody going to be an all state or all American? No, but they can improve individually and that's the main thing is to get each one of them improving. As a coach, my job is to make them better athletes."

Transform your golf game

Lessons, practice and school will help you make improvements

Charlie Blanchard Golf Doctor

Two years ago, I wrote a piece titled "When is the best time to transform your game: Get organized and set your golf plans in motion, now."

A week later, I wrote a second part, which was "Building your new golf game, Part 2 – identifying swing basics."

It was intended to be a four-part series, but also other golf news intervened (such as Tiger's tribulations) and your intrepid Golf Doctor fell in disrepair and it was forgotten – until now.

Here is the third part of what ultimately will be four parts. The original article was published in January 2010, as mid-winter seems to me is the perfect time to revamp your game. I wrote that you should review every part of your golf game, identify your plans and get organized. In January, folks up north, looking out their windows at slush and snow, have nothing better to do. Here we are able to practice and play golf any time, so let's get going.

Let's go back to the golf swing. If you watch any golf on television, you notice how often they show and analyze the golf swings of the tour pros, both men and women. They don't just do it to promote golf clubs, but offer tips on what the swing is all about, and how many variations of wonderful golf swings there are.

Really, the golf swing is a truly unique, individual sports movement. No two golfers perform the swing exactly alike. It's like a fingerprint.

There is no one right way – there are a lot of ways to get the job done. There are certainly solid fundamentals that need to be adhered to, such as returning the clubhead to the ball in exactly the same position as when you took it away.

When you reinvent or revamp your game, the sequence of learning events goes like this: swing, short-game, shotmaking, scoring, success. Start with the swing first, and then move to making shots, which simply means being able to execute a particular shot in a particular situation on command. That takes a practiced, confident, reliable golf swing that you are able to reproduce – stress-free – at any time during competition.

Practice and replicate the swing to make the shot become habit. That is the purpose if hitting practice balls – to create a successful habit

Over the past year, I have tried to do just that. My devastating accident in the winter of 2011 left me with some question whether I would ever play golf again. Alas, some of my good friends wondered that aloud. After I was able to walk without pain and grip a golf club there was no doubt in my mind that I would regain my old form. I didn't know how long it would take, but I knew.

Essentially, I was starting out from the position of a beginner. The first thing I did was start working out at a gym. I had a cast on my left arm (from a distal radius fracture) and could only test the gym machines I was able to operate. It wasn't pretty, but it was a start.

Over the next six months, I gained strength and regained the 25 pounds of body weight I had lost. I was skinny before and I still am, but up to normal skinny. Wrist and elbow surgery in December 2011 was a setback, but after a few of months, I'm exceeding my previous machine weight.

I do a full arms, legs, chest, shoulder and cardio workout four days a week at Club Fitness, with the help of Tony Bales, the head trainer.

I think I'm longer off the tee than I was before the injury. There is no question my upper body is fitter. I recommend unconditionally that you begin strength, flexibility and cardio workouts, if you don't have that part of total fitness as part of your regular lifestyle.

The next thing I urge you to do is get a golf swing teacher. Individual golf lessons are available at all four of our local golf courses through PGA professional teachers and qualified apprentices. My teacher is Dan Koesters, longtime head PGA professional at the New Mexico State University Golf Course.

A couple of months after wrist and elbow surgery last December, while my left arm was still in a cast, I approached Koesters for help, explaining that I needed to have a way to compensate for my lack of wrist release as well as my worries about digging the club into the ground and re-injuring my hand. At the time I wasn't playing yet.

Koesters immediately suggested stationary exercises with a golf club in my right hand that had me moving the club horizontally to the ground while shifting my weight forward. I was told to coil and load going back, and uncoil by shifting weight to my left leg, finishing with my belt buckle facing the target. I did that right-handed 100 times a day.

Then I began hitting practice balls with my right arm only, and I got pretty good with an 8-iron, sailing about 115 yards; only 25 yards short of my two-arm swing.

As I continued working with Koesters for an hour at a time on the range he moved my ball position from too far back to the middle of my stance for irons. He kept after me about not remaining flatfooted, but rather loading my right side and finishing on my left side. Can you relate to these fundamentals?

The bottom line is, Koesters gave me back my golf game. For only a very modest fee. While on the injured-reserve list my handicap ballooned somewhat, but it's now coming down gradually. I have gone from an 83 player back to a 72 to 76 player.

Now, here is a bit of advice about taking golf lessons. My sense is that golf instruction with a pro is much like psychotherapy with a shrink; to grow you must do the work.

Don't feel you have to be at your tip-top best in preparation for a lesson or worse yet, try to impress your pro. Just be yourself and you'll get more out of the time spent. Be clear about what you want to work on and what you expect as a result, of course, being realistic.

Understand that it may take eight or 10 sessions to make measurable progress for a new-found golf game. Realize that, if you're serious about your golf, the teacher-golfer partnership is ongoing, with reviews, checkups and fixes on a regular basis.

Golf is a process. When you make swing changes or changes in your style of play and equipment, you will need to hit a lot of practice balls to turn changes into automatic habits.

My Performance Golf Schools partner, Herb Wimberly, counsels that it usually takes 500 practice shots to adjust to a significant swing change. Still, you may revert to old habits in the heat of battle.

At some point, I urge you to book an onthe-course playing lesson to give you and your pro a true benchmark for your ability and progress. In the fourth installment of this long overdue series, we'll be looking at putting and the short-game.

Golf school in nine weeks

Herb Wimberly and I will be holding our Performance Golf School at Sonoma

Ranch on the weekend of June 23-24.

This is a wonderful chance to enjoy a one-of-a-kind golf learning experience and make major improvements to your game.

Group size is small, so you will receive lots of personal attention. We cover fundamentals of the full golf swing, chipping, putting, bunker play and the mental game – that's my specialty.

You may not have heard this, but mental golf involves how to actually learn the game and how to incorporate changes into your overall play. Changes may be swing technique, short game, decision-making, equipment, attitude and other elements.

Golf school is a good way to experience lessons before you choose an individual teacher, which we recommend. In my opinion, lessons are a necessity if you are truly a serious golfer.

Performance Golf School is open to all ages, men and women, seasoned golfers and beginners. And it's affordable.

Draft dreams

Memories stirred of a trip to New York

Jack Nixon Jack's Corner

Kenny Turner, Taveon Rogers and Jonte Green are Aggies who have been mentioned as having professional career potential.

The annual National Football League college player draft reminded me of my role in the college player draft in 1984, when I worked in the USFL.

I had been on the Oklahoma Outlaws staff for 10 days when I was told I was going to New York as the Outlaws' representative. I had aced my first assignment with the team by successfully driving players to and from the airport in Tulsa for tryout camps.

I arrived in the Big Apple the day before the draft and immediately took a cab to Rodney Dangerfield's nightclub.

The show was great and cost me all of the advance money the team gave me. My bosses back in Tulsa gave me a hard time over it, but how often was I going to be in New York on someone else's money?

The draft itself was in the ballroom of the Roosevelt Hotel, which was where they filmed Michael Douglas's "greed is good" speech in "Wall Street." I was on the phone to the Outlaws general manager, Bruce Kebric, writing down names on a 3-by-5 card every 40 minutes or so.

This went on throughout the day, and as I was getting drowsy in mid-afternoon, a buzz filled the room. I turned around and saw one of my journalistic heroes, Howard Cosell, in the back of the room. Cosell was taller than I would have guessed, about 6-3 or 6-4. He was walking with Carl Petersen, who was

over the Kansas City Chiefs.

The Outlaws didn't have another choice for a half hour so I turned around to get a better look at the man who made Monday Night Football a national pasttime.

As he walked my way, I wondered what the most opinionated man in sports thought of the new league. I didn't have to wonder for very long. He sat down in front of me, turned around and said, "Young man, I want to speak to Sid Gillman, if you please."

Gillman had built the Chargers franchise from scratch in 1960 and was our general manager. I tried unsuccessfully to act nonchalant and asked Kebric to get Gillman ASAP. He replied, "Does Rodney Dangerfield want to talk to him?"

I explained who did and handed the phone to Cosell as Gillman picked up. Gillman and Cosell were old friends and Cosell finished his chat before our next pick.

I don't know how it will turn out for this year's draft class, but seeing Rodney Dangerfield and meeting Howard Cosell within 48 hours made my draft dreams come true in 1984.

Passing the torch

Head Coach

In the fall of 1991, then Athletic Director Keith Colson came to the New Mexico State Golf Course and asked me if I would be interested in starting a women's golf program, which was needed to help comply with Title IX.

Since promoting golf is one of the main objectives of being a PGA professional I accepted.

A month or so later, I received the budget allotted for the program – $17,000. Well, to make a long story short, with the help of Tony and Louie Lama, Tony Lama Boots and local golfers, we raised between $70,000 to $80,000 each year at the bi-annual Tony Lama golf tournament from 1983 to 1991.

Just after the inception of the NM State Women's Roadrunner golf program, I asked Jackie Booth if she would like to help with the team, and of course she volunteered – fate.

During the first 10 years, the team grew to be a record-setting program, being the first women's program to win a conference championship, ranked in the top 15 in the nation to qualify for the NCAA Championships and finishing ninth, 15th, 11th and 17th, and also being ranked No. 1 in the nation for the fall season of 1991.

In 1992, after 10 years, I passed the torch to coach Booth, who continued the success of the program for five years, at which time the University of New Mexico lured her away with a big salary, etc. The torch was then handed to coach Jo Ann Cox, who had been associated with the program since 1989.

In 2006, once again I was asked to return to the now Aggie women's golf program and, of course, I was excited to return.

That first year, the team consisted of almost all seniors and they preformed well, but left the team with little to no experience. The next year, I was able to lure Booth back to NM State from UNM, where she had qualified all 10 years for the NCAA's, was named coach of the year four times, named LPGA Coach of the Year twice and inducted into the UNM Athletic Hall of Fame. She was happy to come back to her home and help rebuild the team.

Since 2006, we have been working hard to return the Aggie program to the top of the rankings. With the help of Price's Creamery and some anonymous donors, we have raised more than $250,000 the last five years to enhance our program and to build the "Price's Give 'Em Five" practice facility for the men's and women's golf teams.

So what has been accomplished in the last 30 years? We have had 10 All-Americans, 37 academic All-Americans (grade point averages over 3.6 and compete in half the tournaments), 17 NCAA appearances, eight conference championships and 12 second-place finishes.

The fact I am most proud of, a team grade point always above 3.4 and last year it was 3.6, the highest of any sport, and we are also in the top 10 percent in the nation in APR (academic progress rate).

Well, 20 years later, I once again will pass this wonderful group of young ladies over to Booth, and once again I am sure that the program will accomplish the higher standards set by the coaching staff. Thanks to all those who have supported the women's program and Booth, Cox and myself.

This program has truly been a reflection of wonderful community support.

Cruces got a brand new tag

Richard Coltharp That's the Way of the World

The late soul singer James Brown had a famous tag: the Hardest Working Man in Show Business.

Now our fair city has something in common with the Godfather of Soul.

Las Cruces has made the list of the Hardest Working Towns in America.

The list was compiled by Total cereal and PARADE Magazine, and Las Cruces made No. 7 among the "Top 25 Hardest Working Towns in America.'

The list, which analyzed total number of hours worked, unemployment rates, commute times, dual-income families and the likelihood of people to give up personal time for work, was compiled by PARADE magazine's editorial research team using data from MRI, Claritas, the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the Census Bureau to rank the cities.

The top 10:

- 1. Columbia, Mo.
- 2. Hartford, Conn.
- 3. Norfolk, Va.
- 4. Bloomington, Ind.
- 5. Tuscaloosa, Ala. 6. Gainesville, Fla.
- 7. Las Cruces, N.M.
- 8. Newark, N.J.
- 9. Lansing, Mich.

10. Bridgeport, Conn.

People in this community work awfully hard. I think of people like Mark Stevens, who owns and appears to live in Corner Deli. People like Realtor Elsie Bonfantini, who is the Energizer Bunny regardless of market conditions. People like Linda Vargas, who works as hard on volunteer projects as she does at her day job. Soldiers at White Sands work not only hard, but at times very dangerously. There are the farmers and ranchers; now that's hard work.

We all know dozens of people who fit the hard-working bill.

Some criticize the attitude of "mañana" in Las Cruces, of people putting things off until tomorrow. There may be some of that, but I also believe a good percentage of Las Crucens are so busy, they simply can't get to everything today.

This town is amazing when it comes to charitable giving, thanks to the many, many hard-working volunteers here. So, Las Cruces, here's a toast of toasted wheat Total cereal to all the hardworking people out there.

Let's all get ready for work and, as JB would say, "Get on the good foot."

Hotel E plans green spaces

Restaurant will become Garduño's

By Richard Coltharp

A year from now, three segments of the Hotel Encanto de Las Cruces parking lot, now decked in asphalt, will be lush, verdant garden

On Nov. 1, crews will break ground on three projects: a totally revamped pool area, an expanded patio for the Azul bar and a new garden area for the hotel, which overlooks the city from its perch at 705 S. Telshor Blvd.

The goal, said Hotel E sales and marketing manager Susan Raitt, is the creation of a resort atmosphere for guests.

"It will be a diamond in the desert," said sales manager James Wilson.

An additional modification will bring a familiar New Mexican name to the hotel's restaurant: Garduño's.

We'll be making sauces daily, doing everything fresh, the way the original Garduño's did," Wilson said.

The current kitchen will undergo some modifications and New Mexico's newest Garduño's should be open this June.

The expansion of the pool area will be the largest undertaking, usurping two rows of parking just west of the existing pool. The end result will be a water fountain, an 18-foot-by-65-foot swimming pool, a large hot tub spa and a large green area that can expand from 40-feet-by-40-feet to 30-feet-by-70-feet. The green area will accommodate large tents for many types of events. Those could include party receptions or, with the addition of chairs and seating, a business training or team building session.

The 14 rooms surrounding the pool will have their current patios extended into individual cabanas, which can be closed or open to the pool area, creating an outdoor living

Aggies go to class: Manners 101

New Mexico State University Career Services brought etiquette coach Sonia Zubiate to campus Thursday, April 12, to teach New Mexico State University students about dining with a prospective employer. The "Aggie Manners" business etiquette dinner at the Corbett Center Student Union included a slide show with visual aids, such as the one shown here illustrating the American and Continental styles of dining. See additional photos of the Aggie Manners event on B13.

Students practice tabletop etiquette in professional setting

By Adam R. Baca

On April 12, many Aggies took the opportunity to brush up on or learn some new business dinner etiquette skills.

The Aggie Manners Business Etiquette Dinner, sponsored by Career Services at New Mexico State University, was held in a ballroom on the third floor of Corbett Center at NMSU. Students and faculty from all over the campus attended to make sure they don't break any business dinner rules in the future.

"(It's) a good opportunity to learn, have a nice meal and meet new people," NMSU student Daniel Sonntag said. "I think it's important for our generation to know business etiquette.'

Sonntag described his business dinner etiquette as "average" before the presentation.

"I don't know what kind of scale I would use for manners," he said.

The main purpose for the dinner was to show people proper dining etiquette if they interview for a job over dinner or are in a

The expanded Azul patio will be enclosed by a rock wall, and will feature trees, a fireplace, a separate fire pit and outdoor furniture including couches.

"It's going to be a great space," Wilson said. The garden area will spring from a triangular patch of parking lot just outside the porch that leads to the ballrooms. Trees, planters and flowers will lend a green, lush feel to the new

A natural spot for outdoor overflow for events in the ballrooms, the garden area can also be set up for separate events, including outdoor dinners, cocktail parties or even a wedding ceremony.

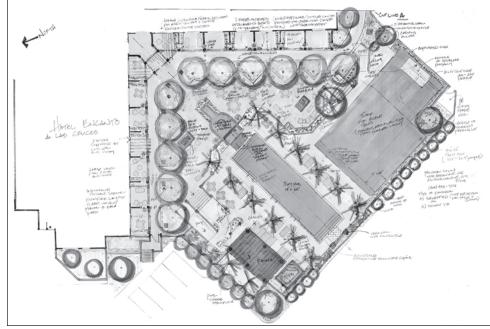

"We're very excited about the flexibility of the garden area," Raitt said. "It could be used for wedding services, and it's a fantastic place for outdoor photos. There's no outdoor reception area like it in southern New Mexico."

When the areas are finished, Raitt said, it will enable a "complete experience" for vacationers and business travelers alike.

"It will be a great tie-in with our spa, pool and the local golf courses," she said.

The MercedeZ Salon & Day Spa, located in the hotel, will also expand. Currently offering hair, waxing, massage, facials, body wrapping and other services, the spa will add private massage rooms and additional spa packages with the expansion.

Hotel Encanto is currently renovating two guest rooms that will be combined into one larger room that will serve as a fitness center

The room will be outfitted with "state-of-the-art fitness equipment," Wilson said.

The project's designer will be Gary Trutza of New Directions in Landscape Architecture of Phoenix.

And though there will be no added square footage to the hotel itself, the theme of the entire renovation could be termed "doubling down."

The Azul patio will "double in size," Wilson said. The pool area will "double in size." The fitness center will "double in size." The MercedeZ Salon & Day Spa will "double in size."

And though it will not likely double the traffic in the hotel immediately, the expansion will enhance opportunities for bringing in more types of guests and groups.

"We are partnering with the (Las Cruces) Convention Center and the (Las Cruces Convention and Visitors Bureau) to bring in people looking for a little more luxurious option," professional situation over dinner or lunch.

Maria Samaniego, a faculty member at NMSU, said she attends various business dinners, meetings as well as luncheons and it was important to her to know how to eat properly.

"We just want to make sure that we represent NMSU properly," Samaniego said.

People walked in to find tables set up with various plates and utensils. Some may have known already exactly what to do with the multiple forks and spoons upon entry, but the others were about to find out.

Once everyone took their seats, and possibly unintentionally broke some etiquette rules, Sonia Zubiate took the stage for her presentation on business dinner etiquette. Zubiate is an etiquette coach and is founder and director of The Protocol Academy.

On stage, Zubiate had her own table setting under the watchful eye of a video camera. A screen on the wall projected the video feed so everyone in the ballroom could see what exactly she was doing with her utensils, napkins, plates and glasses.

Zubiate gave an introduction and tips on attire for events that may require the skills presented.

"You will need these skills," Zubiate said. "You're there to put your best foot forward."

Everyone was then served salad as the first part of the four-course meal. The following courses were cream of tomato basil soup, chicken picatta and strawberry cheesecake for dessert. Vegetarians were served stuffed portabella mushroom instead of the chicken.

Before each course, Zubiate explained how to eat it, and gave proper etiquette rules. Once her explanation was through, she walked around while everyone practiced. Zubiate answered various questions from the crowd.

"It's all about how you handle everything," Zubiate said, rattling off advice.

Make sure you spoon your soup away from you, and don't slurp it from the bowl. Don't saw at food you are trying to cut, use smooth strokes one way. Your drink is on the right side; don't take the drink on the left.

"Once one person does that, everything is off," Zubiate said.

Correct utensil usage was one of the big lessons of the night. Attendees were taught how to properly eat in the American fashion as well as the Continental style, which is more for international usage.

She taught proper placement of hands and utensils.

"When you look at your plate, think of it as a clock," Zubiate said.
When finished with a plate, a diner should

When finished with a plate, a diner should place utensils together and at an angle that would read 10:20 if it were a clock.

There is even proper etiquette for putting lemon and sugar into your water or tea.

"You don't want to squirt juice at your interviewer," Zubiate said.

Those attending offered some intriguing questions.

It is not OK to ask for a doggy bag at a business dinner.

Even if the food is something the interviewee is not sure of or doesn't like, it should still be tasted.

"That wouldn't be very polite," Zubiate said.

If ever served crusty bread, it should be left alone. Exploding bread crust does not make a good impression.

When it comes to eating a garnish, such as the basil leaf in the soup, it should also be left alone.

"It could get stuck in your teeth," Zubiate said, which was possibly too late for some.

Zubiate also gave pointers on seating someone and shaking a hand. "Dead-fish" handshakes and "bone-crusher" handshakes are not OK.

Boris Higgins, an instructor and student at NMSU, said the presentation "cleared up some uncertainties."

It was the second time attending for NMSU student Christopher Gomez.

"It's really good info," Gomez said.

After the dinner presentation many of those who attended were positive in the new skills acquired and ready to use them.

"You just never know when we might go to the White House," Samaniego said. "We're readv."

"It impresses your employer if you know how to use the right fork," said Liz Vazquez, a career research coordinator for NMSU Career Services. "It shows how you value yourself in a professional setting." Vazquez, who had an internship for the Vazquez, who had an internship for the Department of State, said she attended a lot of events with diplomats from all over the world, and it was important to know these table skills.

"It also shows that you're cultured," she said.

"It's an Aggie tradition that has been going on for years and years," said Roseanne Bensley, associate director for Career Services at NMSU.

"Definitely I'm going to recommend it to other people," Gomez said.

Neely taught construction management at El Paso Community College and later worked as a building inspector in Ruidoso before founding Allied Burglar & Fire Alarms Inc. in November 1989.

"The security industry was a good fit for my skillset and I saw an opening in the Las Cruces market," Neely said.

In the early days of his business, Neely ran a one-man shop.

"I used to keep two sets of clothes in my car – dress clothes for making sales calls and work clothes for service calls and installations," Neely said.

Allied now has nine employees and installs and services security systems for residences, offices, and retail stores.

The company specializes in "remote access" security products from Honeywell. These devices allow clients to interact with their systems via laptop or smart phone. Moreover, the devices do not require a building to have a land-based telephone line, Neely said.

Among other things, remote-access security devices can send clients text message alerts when a system is disarmed, send clips of surveillance video to a client's email and control a building's thermostat.

"With these devices you can monitor your property and know who is there 24 hours a day," Neely said.

Besides the advances in security technology, the security systems market has changed in other surprising ways, Neely said.

"Twenty-three years ago, only rich people could afford security systems and cameras," Neely said. "Now, almost everyone can afford it"

Also, the business security system market has expanded, Neely said. In the past, only businesses that kept inventory on site were interested in security systems, he said.

Now that virtually every company relies on computer hardware, all businesses should have a security system for their property, he said.

"You have to protect your hardware from theft, tampering, and sabotage," Neely said.

Allied has a customer-centric business philosophy, he said.

"I offer true 24-hour service," Neely said.

He lists his personal cell phone number on his business card and his home phone number in the phone book.

"I want your business at 3 in the afternoon and I want your business at 3 in the morning," he said.

The customer-comes-first business philosophy is another reason why Allied sells Honeywell security products, Neely said. Unlike many other security products on the market place, Honeywell's products can be serviced by any security company.

"Most security devices have lockout codes that allow the original installer to render the systems unusable should a customer change companies," Neely said. "Honeywell products do not have lockout codes and can be serviced by any company. The customer owns the equipment, not the original installer."

After more than two decades in the industry, Neely has retained his enthusiasm for the security systems business.

"I will never get tired of this," Neely said. "Every day is rewarding."

Advancment in the body of knowledge

Investing and science share approaches

Jim Spence Business Matters

The processes that have led to advances in the body of knowledge in physics, chemistry and biology are a great source of fascination.

Scientific advances tend to be layered. Without the foundations laid by Issac Newton (universal gravitation), Dmitri Mendeleev (the table of periodic elements), Daniel Bernoulli (hydrodynamics), Michael Faraday (electromagnetic induction), Rudolf Clausius (thermodynamics), Albert Einstein (relativity), Karl Heisenberg (uncertainty principle) or Neils Bohr (quantum mechanics), modern-day scientists would not be modern.

Likewise, students of investing can learn plenty from the layers of investment knowledge available. Peter Lynch is one of the most brilliant money managers to ever run a stock portfolio. His book, "One Up on Wall Street," was published more than 20 years ago.

There is a chapter titled "I've Got It, I've Got It, What Is It?" that provides an overview of company types including: fast growers, slow growers, stalwarts, turnarounds, asset plays and cyclicals.

If there were a Smithsonian museum devoted to investment thought processes, this chapter would be a major exhibit.

The first volume of Bernard Baruch's two-volume biography, "My Story," is an investment knowledge jewel.

According to Warren Buffett, Ben Graham's the "Intelligent Investor" is the best investment book ever written. Phil Fischer's "Common Stocks and Uncommon Profits" explained qualitative analysis with extraordinary preciseness.

Gerald Loeb's "The Battle for Investment Survival" is considered a classic in our circles. "Poor Charlie's Almanack: The Wit and Wisdom of Charles T. Munger" is also a must read. Finally, Buffett's annual letters to shareholders since 1977, which are available at Berkshire Hathaway's website for free, are loaded with deep insights.

Returning to science, the field of physics continues to be a fascinating field to observe for the curious lay person. More than 80 years after Bohr and Einstein tried to reconcile the mathematical contradictions between quantum mechanics and general relativity, the effort to do so continues. Both theories are considered valid. Practical applications for both theories have changed the modern world in ways too extensive to describe here. But the mathematics of the two theories still cannot be reconciled.

In investing there are also competing thought processes and principles. Some portfolio managers employ strict quantitative strategies. Others rely more heavily on qualitative approaches. Anytime we make a presentation to a consulting team they want to know about the nature of our thought processes and principles. The majority of consultants are particularly interested in data. They want to know what data we consider relevant, how we gather it, how we organize it, and how we make decisions based upon it.

Because data is so widely available there are many professionals in the investment industry who lean toward the quantitative data-centered approach. Some view the idea of delving into qualitative thought processes, like assessing the durability of competitive advantages, as too subjective.

Mathematics and extensive data aggregation are certainly critically important tools for us and for professional investors.

However, we recognize that tool of "imagination" is also crucial.

Einstein once said, "Imagination is more important than knowledge. Knowledge is limited. Imagination encircles the world."

Like the good physicist, a seasoned professional investor should answer "yes" when asked if he or she relies on quantitative or qualitative approaches.

Jim Spence is the portfolio manager at Spence Asset Management Inc., a federally registered investment advisory firm in Las Cruces. He has been involved in the investment business since 1983.

NMSU's Carruthers, Key, Keys and Kias Archuleta honored

Health care company recognizes Aggies

By Janet Perez

A Colorado-based health care company is recognizing two distinguished New Mexico State University alumni for their years of community service.

NMSU College of Business Dean Garrey

Carruthers and Molzen Corbin & Associates CEO Adelmo "Del" Archuleta are being honored at the 2012 New Mexico Spirit of Achievement Award Dinner.

The dinner, set for Monday, April 23, in Albuquerque, is a fundraising event for National Jewish Health, a health care company based in Denver that specializes in treating patients with respiratory, cardiac, immune and other related disorders.

"Knowing the significance and past honorees who have received this award, I am truly humbled and honored to be considered," Archuleta said. "But beyond the award is the importance of the work done by National Jewish Health, and its contribution to the improved health and quality of life for many of our families here in New Mexico. That is what makes the honor even more meaningful."

According to a press release from the company, the Spirit of Achievement Award is presented to individuals throughout the nation "who have built a legacy of contributing their time, talents and resources in all areas of their lives – personal, business and civic."

"Both Del Archuleta and I are NMSU graduates and we have been friends for a long period of time," Carruthers said. "I think it's great that National Jewish Health has picked two Aggies at one time.

"We're always trying to promote the service rendered by Aggies and the prominence of Aggies in the community, and here is a case where they recognized Del, who has an outstanding public service record," he said.

Carruthers, governor of New Mexico from 1987 to 1991, was selected to receive the award for having "dedicated his life to service and education," according to the company.

Archuleta, who served two terms as president of NMSU's Board of Regents, was chosen for devoting "his life to improving the lives of New Mexicans and giving back through community service," a National Jewish Health press release stated.

Carruthers earned his bachelor's degree in science in 1964 and his master's in agricultural economics and agricultural business in 1965 from NMSU. In 1968, he earned a Ph.D. in economics from Iowa State University. That same year, he joined the NMSU faculty in the Department of Agricultural Economics and Agricultural Business. From 1976 to 1978, he also served as director of the New Mexico Water Resources Research Institute at

He remained at NMSU until 1985, taking two breaks to serve in the federal government; first as a White House Fellow assigned to the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture in 1974 and 1975, and then as assistant secretary in the U.S. Department of the Interior from 1981 to 1984. In 1987, Carruthers became the last constitutionally limited single-term governor of New Mexico.

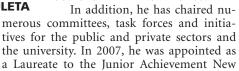

During his governorship, he was selected by President George H.W. Bush to be the official U.S. representative at the first free elections in Romania. Fortune magazine also named Carruthers one of the Top Ten Governors for Education in the United States.

After leaving the governor's office, Carruthers was president and CEO of Cimarron Carruthers was selected from a national pool of candidates in 2003 to serve as dean of the College of Business at NMSU. In 2006, he was named the university's vice president for economic development and in 2009 he was appointed the first director of the Pete V. Domenici Institute for Public Policy, which is housed at NMSU. Carruthers has been recognized by both NMSU and Iowa State University as a distinguished alumnus.

EBID board agrees on limited delivery

Drought may have long-term detriment

By Marvin Tessneer

The Elephant Butte Irrigation District Board of Directors, responding to drought stress, agreed to set the 2012 farmer water delivery at 6 acre-inches, slightly better than last year's quota of only 4 acre-inches.

"Due to extraordinary circumstances and unpredictable conveyance losses in the river, the board members approved an allotment of 6 inches," the board wrote in its announcement. "The allotment may be adjusted if additional water becomes available.'

The average EBID delivery is 3 acre-feet.

An acre-foot of water covers one acre of land a foot deep and contains 325,900 gallons.

The board based its decision on a reported 50 percent mountain snow pack - which has already started to melt - and the less-thanaverage spring precipitation.

EBID dispatchers will start taking orders April 23, and the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation will release water May 15 into the EBID laterals, depending on how many orders are placed, the district reported.

"The maintenance crews are finishing cleaning up and removing brush from ditches to have everything ready for the water delivery," EBID head ditch rider Ricardo Bejarano reported.

Cotton farmer Keith Deputy said he started planting on Monday, April 16, following preirrigation with well water. His 2012 cotton acreage is 1,200 acres of pima and upland.

"I've cut back a little because cotton prices are down," he said.

Deputy raises crops from Santa Teresa to Chamberino. He also is planting about 600 to 700 acres of corn silage.

"It looks like we're going to have to get by with only one irrigation this summer," he said. Most growers have planted their chile, according to EBID ditch riders. But they had to prepare fields with well water. Farmers prefer irrigating with river surface water because well water is mineral-laden and can stunt plant

The storage at Caballo Reservoir, where the water is released, was 19,200 acre-feet, 9 percent of a full reservoir as of April 16. At Elephant Butte Reservoir, storage was 388,000 acre-feet, 20 percent of capacity.

"There's some inflow at San Marcial," said Derrick O'Hara, Bureau of Reclamation hydrologist. "The snow runoff is similar to last year at this time.'

EBID farmers survived the 2011 season by pumping subsurface water. All indications are, because of the shortage of surface water, they will be pumping again this summer.

The Office of the State Engineer is concerned about the effect of more excessive Active Water Resource Management meters show that during the 2011 growing season, farmers pumped 280,000 acre-feet of water from the Lower Rio Grande Valley aquifer, twice as much as in either 2009 or 2010.

'Less surface water in the canals means less recharge to the aquifer," said Estevan Lopez, Interstate Stream Commission director.

New Mexico has been collecting data on pumping irrigation, municipal, mutual domestic and industrial ground water from the Lower Rio Grande for four years.

"Unfortunately, despite repeated requests for data, Texas ground water pumping amounts remain unclear," said State Engineer Scott Verhines. "New Mexico data show EBID farmers, who were given less Rio Grande Project water, are obligated to pump from their wells. The drought combined with less Rio Grande Project surface water has created an unsustainable situation for EBID farmers in the long term."

Big Kitty Fix has sights on no-kill community

Local programs showing initial success

In 2011, approximately 80 percent of cats that entered the shelter were euthanized. Doña Ana County Big Kitty Fix wants to change that by bringing awareness to the community as well as low-cost spaying and neutering services.

Big Kitty Fix is a subgroup of the Community Coalition for Pets and People, the goal of which is to move the community to a no-kill status in seven years or less.

"We are working to make sure we spay and neuter every darn cat we can get our hands on," said Michelle Corella, a staff member at New Mexico State University and program director of Big Kitty Fix.

Spaying and neutering does not just dwindle down a thriving population of unwanted cats, it saves taxpayers money. In 2011, using a very conservative estimate of $50 per cat, approximately $200,000 in taxpayer dollars was spent on euthanizing cats at the shelter.

Corella is no stranger to services for abandoned and homeless cats. She is the program director of the Feral Cat Management Program (FCaMP) on the NMSU campus. FCaMP began in 2002 in an attempt to stabilize the feral cat population on campus. The group employs the Trap-Neuter-Return (TNR) methodology, in which the cats are trapped, surgically sterilized, vaccinated, microchipped, eartipped and returned to the area where they were trapped.

In the case of abandoned or lost adult cats or kittens, the group fosters these felines until they can be returned to their owner or a permanent home can be found.

Over the years, FCaMP has reduced the cat population on campus by approximately two-thirds through a combination of TNR and finding homes for more than 100 lost or abandoned adult cats or kittens. Now, less than 70 cats remain on campus, and over the past year, there were only two litters known to be born on main campus.

Through programs such as Big Kitty Fix, Corella and other supporters want to see a community where 90 percent or more of the animals that enter the shelter live, and only the sickest and most vicious are euthanized.

To start the process that will lower the number of animals euthanized, Big Kitty Fix is working with Dr. Amy Starr, a local veterinarian, to subsidize feline spaying and neutering services and rabies vaccinations for $25.

In January, FCaMP created a special projects fund within the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico and Big Kitty Fix is taking the same route, recently opening a separate fund.

Through a special project fund, the CF-SNM manages incoming donations, taxes, bookkeeping and the administrative process while recognizing contributors with a tax receipt and thank you letter on behalf of FCaMP and Big Kitty Fix. A 4 percent fee is paid to the CFSNM for administrative costs. Currently, the CFSNM manages 25 special project funds.

"We believe that high-volume feline sterilization is the most effective way to reduce the number of cats being impounded, and subsequently euthanized, at our shelter," Corella said.

Corella said she hopes the resultant success in reducing the feline population will prompt changes in laws, policies and general perceptions and approaches regarding feline management in Las Cruces and Doña Ana County.

"We are hoping to provide these spaying and neutering events every six weeks," Corella said. "As long as we have funds to facilitate, we will provide the services until we do not see unnecessary deaths."

Want to sell your home?

Increase its value by fixing up, staging

66 A good rule

try to achieve a

$2 or $3 return for every fix-up dollar spent.

Gary Sandler's
Real Estate Connection

Home sellers are facing more competition than ever. As a result, sellers of both new and existing homes are now offering property upgrades, building improvements and cash incentives in an effort to attract as many buyers as possible to their properties.

Whatever the incentive, the bottom line is sellers of all kinds are going to greater lengths than ever to attract paying customers. One of the easiest ways to accomplish that task is to simply offer a better product for the money.

While sellers of new and existing homes can add value to their listings by offering incentives, such as paying loan and closing costs, owners of existing properties have an additional tool at their disposal: the fix up.

Fixing up before sale is certainly a good idea, but the rationale behind dipping into the elbow-grease dispenser goes much further.

Ideally, the end result of a fix up is to remove any and all of the reasons a buyer may cite to reduce your asking price or reject your home completely.

That sounds simple enough, but how can a seller accurately identify the physical obstacles that need to be removed from his or her property?

The most comprehensive and effective way to understand which repairs will benefit a seller in the long run is through the collection of market sales data. The first step is to study the sales prices, days on the market and physical descriptions of all recent comparable sales.

Comparable sales are those that match most closely the age, size, location and physical condition of your property. The data is recorded monthly and easily obtained from your local Realtor. The amount of sales data required often differs, depending on the individual characteristics of the property. When enough information is compiled, an accurate picture of what Las Cruces buyers are willing to pay for properties like yours will begin to materialize.

Next, identify the top and bottom ends of the range. The homes sold at the highest end of the range most likely offered greater value and more amenities than competing homes, and were probably described using adjectives such as "sparkling" or "beautiful."

Homes at the bottom range wouldn't have necessarily been fixer-uppers, but were more likely average in nature with no particular value-added features. Advertisements for homes such as the latter usually describe amenities that exist around the property (i.e., "close to schools and shopping"), rather than touting amenities specific to the property itself.

The third and, according to some, most difficult part of the exercise is to objectively and accurately determine where on the pricing scale your property fits. If the condition of your property is the same as the condition of the homes at the top of the scale, you need only worry about the marketing (to get buyers to the property) and the staging (to allow buyers to experience the home at its best). If you find yourself at the middle or bottom of the scale, you can still achieve a higher selling price, but you must make sure your price and condition "match."

Buyers are anxious to purchase clean and sharp properties and often pay full price when a home's price and condition match exactly. If a price/condition gap does exist, it can be closed by lowering the price, raising the home's condition or employing some combination of the two.

Because each property and marketplace is unique, there isn't one specific fix-up rule that can be effectively applied to all situations. Some homes can get by with a bit of landscape work and some touch-up paint, while others may need thousands of dollars invested in carpet, paint, roof repairs, etc., before the condition of the property will match the price the seller would like to achieve.

If your property's condition doesn't quite reach the top of the scale, you can easily determine whether it's worth your while to try a higher selling price by comparing the price that your property would bring in its present condition with the prices buyers are paying for like-properties in top condition. For example, if your property would bring $150,000 in its present condition and $170,000 with improvements, you may choose to improve the property in order to snare the additional $20,000.

Improving may not be a good idea, however, if the cost of the improvements exceeds approximately 33 to 50 percent of the dollar value of the price/condition gap. In the preceding scenario, it might be worth the seller's while to fix up the property if the cost to do so didn't exceed around $6,600 to $10,000.

A good rule of thumb is to try to achieve a $2 or $3 return for every fix-up dollar spent. In markets where buyers are scarce, sellers may not realize any additional return on the cost of their fix up. They may, however, attract a buyer who says, "Heck, since the houses are all priced about the same, lets buy the one that's already fixed up."

When it comes to the interior of your home, don't forget to lose the clutter.

Remove excess furniture, clear the walkways, and make a clean slate of horizontal surfaces.

Homebuyers react more favorably to homes that feel light and bright, so ask a professional to stage your home to enhance the amount of available light and space it has to offer. Staging typically costs about 5 percent of the value of a particular property.

Ditch the provocative pictures of Uncle Harry taken during his graduation from clown school. Homebuyers will have an easier time picturing themselves living in your home if their image doesn't include mug shots of your relatives.

Following these steps will make it easier for buyers and sellers alike to clearly see the value of any property they're considering buying or selling. That, of course, greatly increases the chances that I'll soon ...

See you at closing!

Master Barbers looks to support community needed

Social Security disability headed for insolvency

Program offers few incentives to return to work

Chris Erickson State of the Economy

Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI) is a small corner of the Social Security system that may be a bellwether of the future of the entire system.

It has expanded rapidly in the last few years. The result is a rendezvous with insolvency, perhaps within the next five years.

How did SSDI get into this state? A little history can help here. President Ronald Reagan made qualifying for SSDI benefits difficult. Many seemingly deserving potential beneficiaries were turned down. The consequence was a sort of mini-revolt where state courts took action to reverse Reagan actions. Congress also got the message and initiated a series of reforms aimed at making qualification for disability easier.

As things stand now, a person can qualify for SSDI if they have worked 20 quarters during the last 10 years, are disabled and do not expect to recover in the next 12 months.

On medical issues, the Social Security Administration does hire its own expert, but must defer to the medical opinion of the applicant's own doctor. Moreover, for subjective symptoms, such as pain, which are hard to verify objectively, the benefit of the doubt goes to the patient. Consequently, a determined applicant with five years' work experience and the help of a lawyer can get SSDI.

Thus, the system has moved from one that was too strict under Reagan to the permissive system we have today. Not surprisingly, the number of recipients on SSDI has doubled since the early 1990s; today, about one in every 20 Americans receives benefits.

Disability is not a medical term; there is no diagnosis called "disability." Rather, disability as used by SSDI is an employment status. If you are unable to find work due to mental or physical infirmity in the American economy, then you are disabled.

This is a very elastic concept. When things are going well and jobs are plentiful, even those with relatively severe mental or physical issues will be able to find jobs – fewer qualify for SSDI. When times are tough, a mild disability may make finding employment difficult – more qualify for SSDI. Thus, SSDI expands during recessions, the more severe, the greater the expansion.

There are few incentives to move off SSDI and back to work. If a beneficiary were to work and earn income access of the "Substantial Gainful Activity" threshold, the beneficiary loses benefits for that month. Do this several months and the beneficiary can lose benefits altogether. There is no phase-in or partial benefit as one seeks to ease back into work, but rather an all-or-nothing approach. This gives little incentive for beneficiaries to try at the margin to seek gainful employment if doing so means a loss of benefits.

Disability advocates are not fans of the current SSDI system as they view it as promoting dependency among the disabled. The current system as structured is not sustainable as the fund is currently expected to be insolvent within five years at the current pace.

Reform is needed. Congress is devoting little attention to the issue and likely won't until a crisis forces its hand.

LCCT celebrates its 50th season

By Amanda GreenLas Cruces Bulletin

In honor of its 50th anniversary, the Las Cruces Community Theatre, 313 N. Main St., has pulled out all the stops to bring crowds a wonderfully diverse and extended theater season.

In addition to its standard six-show season, there will be a special, extra production: Mark Medoff will direct his Obie Award-winning "When You Comin' Back, Red Ryder?"

The mastermind behind the theater was Michael Coquat, an English graduate student at New Mexico State University. He had done considerable theater work elsewhere and was chagrined to find that Las Cruces had no community theater.

There had been a theatrical group in town years before, which performed in the Thomas . Branigan Memorial Library's multipurpose room, but it was no longer active, and there was still considerable talent with no stage.

The Las Cruces Community Theatre opened its first production in the summer of 1963 with a short series of plays and musicals in the churchyard of St. Genevieve's Catholic Church.

The first production was titled "Noah's Flood," and was directed by Bill Alford. Although proceeds totaled only $5, the community came together to create a theater that could house and feature local talent.

The church was demolished in 1967, as part of the renewal effort for Downtown Main Street, and LCCT had to find a more permanent home.

'They moved to the Fountain Theatre in Mesilla shortly after organizing the members and actors," said Joe Pfeiffer, the current president of LCCT. "In 1977, the theater company moved into the old State Theatre, where we are today.

One of its first productions in the new location was the musical "Man of La Mancha." The LCCT will bring the musical back to life for the current season, as part of the 50th year celebration.

"This is the first time we've had seven shows in a season," Pfeiffer said. "Three of those are musicals, and I'm excited to see them all come together."

Season tickets for LCCT's 50th season will be on sale during performances of it's current production, "Belles."

"Belles," the story of six sisters who spend most of their time on the phone, runs through Sunday, April 29. Performances are at 8 p.m. Fridays and Saturdays with a matinee show at 2 p.m. Sundays.

"This season is going to be our best yet," said Janet Mazdra, public relations organizer with LCCT. "We are an all-volunteer, nonprofit organization that really strives to provide local actors and others interested in theater a chance to be a part of a variety of shows and performances.

Season passes are $50 and include admission to all of the season's seven productions.

"The great thing about the passes, is they are completely transferable," Pfeiffer said. "They work on a punch system, so even if you don't want to see all of the shows, you still end up with seven tickets for any shows you do want to see."

Plays include "When You Comin' Back Red Ryder?" directed by Mark Medoff; "Steel Magnolias," directed by Gail Wheeler; "The Mousetrap," directed by Ceil Herman of the Black Box Theatre; and "Twelve Angry Men," directed by Pfeiffer.

"I'm especially excited to be directing this season," Pfeiffer said. "Twelve Angry Men' is a great production, and it's the first time its ever been done in Las Cruces."

LCCT members hope this season will give them a good starting point to begin the process of purchasing their current theater home.

We currently rent the theater from a group of wonderful families," Pfeiffer said. "But we're looking to the future, and we want to see what it will take to purchase the theater and make it our own."

Quillin's talent knows no end

Local artist transcends the borders of media

By Christine Peterson

It seems no art form has been untouched by Sally Quillin.

The Mesilla Valley Fine Arts Gallery's April "Artist of the Month" has dabbled in everything from acrylics to beadwork, which is displayed about her studio in a way that, if you didn't know it was all her artwork, you'd be surprised that the diverse subjects and media all came from the same artist.

Quillin, an artist who has owned her own gallery and studio space for more than 20 years, is a regular featured artist in the Mesilla Valley Fine Arts Gallery. While running her gallery and studio, she also teaches creative painting workshops at her establishment during the week and once a week at Las Cruces Catholic Schools.

Flowers, Greek goddesses and maritime landscapes are just a taste of what Quillin does.

"I had a few exhibits, one was paintings of Greek goddesses and one was portraits of ethnic women," she said. They showed at the Branigan Cultural Center and at the (New Mexico State University) Corbett Center Art Gallery."

Her latest projects involve working with photographs and floral arrangements. In these endeavors, Quillin uses a photograph taken by her husband or a floral arrangement made by her friend, and draws on it as inspiration for her paintings.

"The photographs are just a suggestion, an idea. I finish it my own way, Ouillin said.

Quillin also takes part in a contest held by the Mesilla Valley Fine Arts Gallery, in which each artist is assigned clues about a famous piece of art, and tries to replicate as best as they can. In the past, Quillin has replicated "Starry Night" by Van Gogh and "White Trumpet Flower" by Georgia O'Keefe.

The recreation of "White Trumpet Flower" was done by first painting the entire flower, then adding an outlining layer of beads to the petals.

This piece took a while," Quillin said. "Painting white on white is the hardest thing to do, especially with all of the shading."

She said that with "copying, you learn so much." Quillin uses this technique with her students, ages 6 to 86, so they can learn the process of art techniques.

Impressionist artists and American modernists such as O'Keefe inspire Quillin.

"I painted a scene of the Amador Hotel, but when in reality there is one tree, I added three," she said.

She added that she likes to put her 'own twist" on things.

Another of Quillin's impressionistic takes on an unconventional medium is a three-canvas waterfall. The waterfall, made of oriental paper, is situated so the texture of the painted paper looks like it is rippling down all three canvases.

Quillin also has dabbled with modeling paste, Chinese packing paper and handmade paper to make a highly texturized piece that encompasses seashells within the various papers on a painted cerulean blue canvas.

"Aphrodite" is a piece artist Sally Quillin said just came to her. Quillin's work is currently on display at the Mesilla Valley Fine Arts Gallery, 2470 Calle de Guadalupe.

Another technique Quillin has played with is using water to stain some of her watercolor painting. In the middle of her studio stand huge canvas boards spanning more than 4 feet.

"I pay for all their supplies, I want to make sure that they can experiment with all the mediums," she said.

DO YOU PLAY THE PIANO?

Young at Heart, a senior chorus of 25 to 30 enthusiastic singers, is looking for a pianist to accompany them.

The chorus sings at assisted living facilities four Thursday afternoons each month, and practices two or three times before that on Monday afternoons. They specialize in songs they love and that are loved by their audience – that is, mostly music written before the 1970s.

If you are interested in assisting this community service on alternate months, call Marilyn at 642-3675.

A lesson in modern technology

'Belles' connects a family

Review by Cindy Murrell

Remember telephones?

Not the cell phone that travels with us everywhere and is completely hidden by the hand when we hold it up to our ear, but the 5-pound hunks of metal and plastic sitting on a desk or hanging from a wall, anchored in one spot by a wire plugged into a telephone jack.

I remember thinking in high school that if I had to choose only one item of modern technology to keep, it would be the telephone. Television? – books are better. Electric lights? Candles are prettier.

Even cooking over an open flame would be workable, but without a telephone, how could I make plans for the weekend with friends scattered around town? This was long before the internet, email, Facebook and texting.

Las Cruces Community Theatre's current production, "Belles," is set in a time when telephones were the only way to connect in real time with people we cared about - or didn't.

The six adult sisters in this play are separated by thousands of miles, by years of different experiences, and by unspoken pain, but they still have the opportunity to reach each other by telephone. Of course, talking on the phone is no guarantee of communication or closeness; it's easier to misunderstand or lie over the telephone lines than when talking face-to-face.

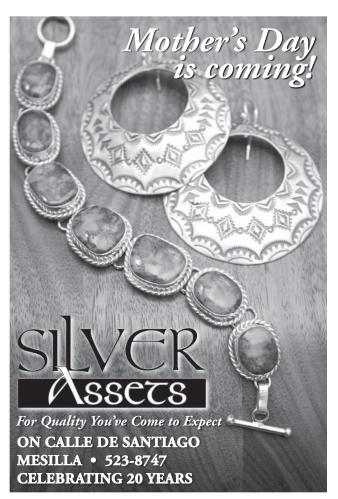

Written 25 years ago, Mark Dunn's play includes many of the quirks allowed by old-fashioned telephone lines: prank calls, busy signals, no dial tone because the person on the other end picked up to make another call before the phone started

The sisters reveal their deepest selves as they call not only to each other but hotlines and boyfriends and police and Western

The audience comes to understand the symbolism of why the sisters' mother, who never appears in the play, refuses to talk on the phone: she fears lightning will strike and travel through the telephone line to incinerate the caller.

From the moment the audience enters the theater, we get an impression of the personalities of the six sisters from the rooms with their telephones. The chairs, tables, wall coverings, and accessories have been carefully selected to say something about the unique personalities and lives of each sister, a reality not always shared with the person they are calling.

Bob Diven created a set design that gives each of the sisters her own spot on the stage with ample space to move. All of the actors are close to the front of the stage, so the audience understands every word when personal and family secrets are

Terri Conatore, Karen Trujillo, Allison Bunker, Melissa Chambers, Jamie Bronstein and Nora Brown star in LCCT's production of "Belles."

"Belles" is the 25th play Gail Wheeler has directed for Las Cruces Community Theatre.

Her experienced direction shows in how naturally the characters react and how well the play flows. Comic lines are never overemphasized but are all the more humorous because of the characters' sincerity.

The playwright, Mark Dunn, attended "Belles" opening night with his wife, and they were all smiles afterward. He was delighted by the production and by the creative choices made by the cast and director.

The clever script brings out both the pain and humor of family relationships. Melissa Chambers is marvelously funny as Audrey, the sister with ambitions as a ventriloquist. Nora Brown, as the wacky sister self-named "Dust," delivers her crazy pronouncements with a deadpan earnestness that makes us believe in and care about her.

Karen Trujillo is very real and empathetic as a stressed-out mom, and her desperate anxiety is compelling.

Terri Conatore as the widowed caretaking sister Peggy, does what she can to keep this widely dispersed family in touch with each other, while Allison Bunker as the tightly controlled Paige refuses to risk herself in a real relationship.

Jamie Bronstein portrays well sister Aneece's boozy anger and refusal to sugarcoat the family past.

We come to care about these characters: we want Paige to learn to trust, Roseanne's pain and Peggy's loneliness to end, Aneece to release her anger, Audrey to get the attention she longs for, and Dust's creative spirit to find constructive avenues

"Belles" runs through Sunday, April 29, at Las Cruces Community Theatre, at 8 p.m. Fridays and Saturdays an 2 p.m. Sundays. Regular admission is $10; students, military and seniors pay $9, and tickets for groups of 10 or more are $8 each.

For more information or to make reservations, visit www. lcctnm.org or call 523-1200.

With six strong characters and so many mini-dramas enacted on stage, the audience is surprised at how quickly the play is over. In only two hours including intermission, conflicts are on the road to a satisfying resolution.

You may even have time afterwards to "reach out and touch" a long-distance family member you haven't spoken to in a while - but beware of lightning.

An animated tale for adults

Story explores desire, and a love of music

Review by Jeff Berg

Animation for adults.

Movies seldom get better than this. And it is not, of course, of the "Beavis and Butthead" or "Simpsons" variety.

Eschewing the new-fangled versions of animation, such as Pixel and CGI enhancement, "Chico and Rita" reverts back to the simple hand-drawn, and does so in a grand style.

Utilizing three directors, the story carries itself well on all levels, by depicting the characters as real people with real needs, such as love, sex and acceptance.

"Chico and Rita" is the story of two young musicians, both with different skills, wanting to use them and taking different paths in order to do so while living in 1948 Cuba

Chico (voiced by Eman Xor Oña) is a musician who plays the piano and has a bit of chip on his shoulder.

Rita (voiced by Limara Meneses) is a singer, who is more interested in her career than in love at first, especially since Chico has a tigress-like girlfriend already.

But they can only go along, as they are, for so long.

Things change, and Chico and Rita become a couple, but not an overtly happy one.

Yes, they have great sex and fun times, but Chico is a bit of a wanderer, and Rita wants more in her life.

Her career eventually leads her away from Chico, first to New York, then to a film career and finally to Vegas.

Chico makes it to New York, but is deported shortly before the Cuban Revolution and the days of Fidel Castro.

His life becomes one of ups and downs, while Rita's road takes some decidedly different twists and turns.

The movie is more or less shown in flash-back, through Chico's memories, now that he is old and alone in a squalid apartment.

Best of all, the picture is punctuated by a great jazz score from the times, featuring work from Charlie Parker, Thelonius Monk and Dizzy Gillespie, among others.

The music becomes the bridge for the film as we travel through 60 years and several continents, and we are always allowed to care about the characters, which are loosely based on real musicians from the same era.

"Chico and Rita" is one of the best animated films I have seen in quite some time.

The film was nominated for Best Animated Feature Film (the first time that a Spanish full-length animated film has been nominated) and has won the Goya Award in Spain for best animated film.

Publication deadlines deny me the right to know if it was indeed the dark horse winner. But even if it was not, "Chico and Rita" is a marvelously real look at life, music and love.

Thanks to the El Paso Jazz Exchange and Dennis Woo of KTEP radio for their help in promoting the film.

Jeff Berg is a board member of the Mesilla Valley Film Society and freelance writer for several publications. His reviews reflect his own opinion, not of the film society or the board.

Rita (voiced by Limara Meneses) and Chico (voiced by Eman Xor Oña) find love in all the wrong places in this Oscar-nominated animated film now playing at the Fountain Theatre in Mesilla. It is the first Spanish-language, animated feature-length film to be nominated in the Best Picture category.

A cultural treasure comes to the Fountain Theatre

Visionary dancer from the Joffrey Ballet to speak

The CineMatinee for 1:30 p.m. Saturday, April 21, is "Joffrey: Maverick's of American Dance" (2012 87 minutes, not rated) with special guest, Rochelle Zide-Booth, a former Joffrey dancer.

"Joffrey: Mavericks of American Dance" takes a look at this groundbreaking cultural treasure, known as the first truly American dance company.

Narrated by Tony and Emmy Award-winner Mandy Patinkin and directed by Bob Hercules ("A Good Man"), the film documents how the Joffrey Ballet revolutionized American ballet by daringly combining modern dance with traditional ballet technique, by combining art with a social statement, and setting ballets to pop and rock music scores.

Co-founded in 1956 by visionary teacher Robert Joffrey and dancer Gerald Arpino, who would become the principal choreographer, the Joffrey Ballet began as a do-it-yourself dance company of six dancers touring the United States in a borrowed station wagon.

What started as a childhood dream quickly grew into one of the world's most exciting and prominent ballet companies. Together, Joffrey and Arpino transformed the face of dance with bold new perspectives for edgy ballets that challenged conventions.

Aggressive touring took the company from school auditoriums across America's Heartland to the White House at Jacqueline Kennedy's invitation and to Russia for a month-long tour during the height of the Cold War.

The company also garnered extensive media attention for its daring originality, which included appearances on "The Ed Sullivan Show," the cover of Time magazine and in major motion pictures such as "Save the Last Dance" and Robert Altman's "The Company."

"Joffrey: Mavericks of American Dance" weaves a wealth of rare archival footage and photographs along with interviews featuring former and current Joffrey star dancers, showing the full history of the company from its founding to the present.

It describes how the Joffrey repeatedly resurrected itself after devastating financial and artistic setbacks and introduced cutting-edge choreographers, such as Twyla Tharp, Laura Dean and Margo Sappington, to larger audiences.

The film features rare excerpts from many seminal Joffrey works including "Astarte," "Trinity" and "Billboards," as well as breakthrough collaborations with choreographers Twyla Tharp, Kurt Jooss and Leonide Massine.

CineMatinee is a unique blend of movies presented by the Mesilla Valley Film Society which showcases unique films, past and present, often with an emphasis on life in the West – the new West, Old West or anything in between – and "movies that missed us," notable films that never had a lot of publicity.

The series is designed to show area residents that film is a form of art and education as well as entertainment. At least one film a month for this series has a New Mexico "connection," drawing from the vast pool of movies made in the state – nearly 500 – or perhaps featuring a star/story from New Mexico talent.

Unless otherwise noted, screening time is 1:30 p.m., and admission is $4 for everyone except film society members who are admitted for $1.

Featured band: Beyond the Ash

A face-melting good time

Local band blends melody and metal

By Amanda Green

Few metal bands would join the motley lineup of musicians whose particular styles lean toward acoustic, pop or country flavors.

But the progressive metal band Beyond the Ash stepped up to join Chris Baker, La Cella Bella and Crooked Beaver Creek to help support the Southern New Mexico March for Babies Saturday, April 13, at the inaugural Marchapalooza.

The March of Dimes helped my wife, Seren, and I when our son Ethan was born at 28 weeks," said lead guitarist Daniel Estrada. "We really wanted to do something for them in return, so we began planning Marchapalooza and knew Beyond the Ash would be a part of the battle of the bands."

During Marchapalooza, attendees voted for the band of their choice by donating money to jars marked with each of the performers names.

Each vote was purchased with $1, and at the end of the night, Beyond the Ash's jar held $178, making them the winner of the battle.

Beyond the Ash was created after Estrada, guitarist Camron Curnutt, and singer Chris Mirabal, part of the band Line of Sight, wanted to play harder, faster heavy metal.

We really wanted to see how far we could push it," Estrada said. "We wanted to achieve that facemelting type of metal that all of us are really into."

Estrada played the bass in Line of Sight, and when he wanted to branch out and play guitar, he knew it was "time to start a new project."

"I wanted a chance to be the guy playing the intricate melodies, a few heart pumping rifts," Estrada said. "Musically, I wanted to be challenged."

Originally, the trio joined with bassist Ray Ward and drummer Aaron Ruthven, members of the band Accolade, to create their new handle. They began playing in the garage of Estrada's home, using only a couple of small amps.

"I'm lucky that my wife loves the type of music we play," Estrada said. "She's been really supportive

The band booked several gigs in venues across the greater Southwest, including shows at the House of Rock in El Paso, Tucson and Albuquerque.

In 2012, as Beyond the Ash began recording in the studio, Ward announced he was moving to Seattle in order to pursue other musical endeavors.

Carpio splits his time between Beyond the Ash and the band Disengorged, adding brutal drumming and the double base the band had been searching for.

"Carpio is new to the group, but in the short amount of time he's been with us, he's really brought a lot to the group," Estrada said. "We've been practicing more often, getting used to playing with each other, and it's going great."

Beyond the Ash can be found most often at El Patio in Las Cruces, where they play most of their local gigs. They also have an upcoming show May 27 at the House of Rock in El Paso.

La Esquina, located two blocks from the historic Mesilla Plaza, is in the same building that Los Mariachis was in. Owner Lupe Hernandez bought out Los Mariachis, where she worked for seven years. A majority of Los Mariachis staff stayed on with Hernandez for the transition to La Esquina.

"You can tell that the environ ment is really different from Los Mariachis," Hernandez said. "Our regulars say that La Esquina is more homey."

Hernandez said during the transition, she kept her head cook, Barbie, from Los Mariachis. "Then Priscilla came in and asked if she could paint the walls," Hernandez said. "I told her sure, and she went on to paint them how she wanted."

Dining at La Esquina is like visiting with an old friend. The restaurant provides a take-yourtime atmosphere with prompt food

The interior is reminiscent of a scaled-down hacienda, and has wall-length windows, murals on every wall of southwestern landscapes and homes.

As guests wait for their food to be served, management personally greets you and inquires about your day. At 5:30 p.m. Friday nights, a live mariachi band livens up the atmosphere with traditional music

"We cook all our food from scratch," Hernandez said. "We boil our chile and start from scratch. Our desserts, sopapillas and Chocó flan are also homemade."

Hernandez said one of the most popular dishes is the chile huevos

La Esquina offers seven combination plates – each priced at $8.50. The combinations include all the great Mexican food staples: enchiladas, flautas, tacos, sopapillas, gorditas, chile con carne and Another popular item seems to be quesadillas. The quesadilla can be made with either shredded or ground beef, steak or chicken.

The first bite into the quesadilla validates everything being made from scratch. You can almost taste the flour in the tortilla. The cheese is practically still melting. The richness makes it at once hard to finish because it is so filling, but hard to put down because it is so good.

La Esquina also offers a take-out

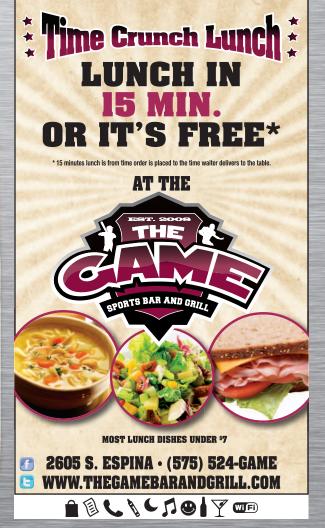

Hernandez said she is happy to pass on tips to customers on how to cook their food, and shared her wisdom to a customer wanting to know how to cook her chile. Hernandez explained the steps in detail for a few minutes, making sure the customer was comfortable with the procedure.

'Cabin' gives an old plot a creepy twist

Review by Amanda GreenLas Cruces Bulletin

Everyone thinks they know what happens next. They don't.

The plot is timeless and has been repeated in a variety of ways with a colorful cast of brutal killers. Dismembered, strangled or eaten alive, the characters' youthful inhibitions – prior to the arrival of the monsters – often include heavy amounts of drinking, drug-use and fornication.

"The Cabin in the Woods" is no different, initially.

The alpha male (Chris Hemsworth), his promiscuous girlfriend (Anna Hutchinson), the virginal best friend (Kristin Connolly), the hot nerd (Jesse Williams) and a foolish stoner (Fran Kranz) all have their roles to play in the weekend's events.

When the door to the cellar mysteriously opens and a game of truth or dare leads the teens down into the dark, most know what is waiting for them down there.

Instead of mutated serial killers, the room is full of toys, trinkets and random vintage treasures. The curious fellows immediately take to playing with everything in the room, read creepy Latin passages from an ancient journal that sets events in motion.

Meanwhile, we join laboratory technicians Sitterson (Richard Jenkins) and Hadley (Bradley Whitford) who have video and audio access to the cabin where the teens are staying.

Immediately, we learn the cabin might be part of a twisted reality show, produced and directed by some careful manipulation of technology. From pheromones pumped into the house to a creepy two-way mirror, the teens have been set up for bloody, gory failure.

The organization plugs some key humor into the storyline in an unexpected way. Never have I laughed at such inappropriate moments.

and created a film horror fans will cherish until the

I do get dragged to one, it's watched through my fingers and plugged ears.

"The Cabin in the Woods" had plenty of those heart-stopping moments, and I was glad the seats on either side of me were empty, or I'd probably have leapt into my neighbor's lap. The film stayed true to its horror genre with plenty of screaming and gore for all slasher-film fans.

Kranz ushered in the humor with his overthe-top demeanor and a heavily used bongturned-coffee mug – ingenious really.

The other actors were perfectly cast, as stereotypes demanded, and audiences expected. What should have been a cheesy B-rated horror film, transformed before my eyes into a witty, hilarious film about all the reasons audiences love this genre.

The script was wonderfully crafted to march side-splitting humor right along the brutal slaying of the country's youth. Several times, the film even called me out on laughing at moments that should have been terrifying.

Joss Whedon, known for his huge sci-fi hits "Buffy the Vampire Slayer" and "Firefly," produced the film, and worked alongside director Drew Goddard ("Cloverfield"). The team, who worked jointly on "Buffy" and the spin-off "Angel," has masterfully created the perfect balance of laughter and gore.

The film was everything it was supposed to be and so much more. There's an especially fantastic elevator scene, conducted like an orchestra. One by one the doors open and unleash utter chaos in a way that was as terrible as it was unique.

Imagine my surprise as I cheered when Hadley finally got to see his mer-man, and laughed when it promptly ate his face.

Ben Gabriel Outdoor Adventurer

As warm weather arrives, people begin to leave the confines of their homes and venture outside.

There are a number of benefits you can gain from engaging in outdoor activities. The greatest impact is on your mental, physical and social health – the foundation to a balanced life.

Outdoor pursuits provide opportunities to reduce stress and improve mood, attention and concentration. These activities provide opportunities for personal growth and improved self-confidence. Studies have shown significant reductions in people's depression levels.

Those who participate in outdoor activities have increased performance in the workplace, including better time management and interpersonal performance. Children playing in outdoor spaces have increased cognitive functioning and development.

Regardless of your skill level, embracing outdoor activities, such as hiking, biking, climbing or canoeing, will have a direct impact on your physical health. Each form of exercise can improve overall fitness and muscular endurance. A consistent exercise routine also improves cardiovascular fitness and wards off cancer, heart disease and diabetes.

Shared outdoor experiences help build relationships and communities. These activities unite families through trust and teamwork and create positive memories that build lasting relationships.

Communities also benefit through social interactions that break down barriers in diverse multicultural populations. Towns with a high percentage of outdoor activities have shown lower occurrences of crime.

Senior citizens benefit through increased socialization opportunities that help them stay active.

Regardless of your age or skill level, there is an outdoor opportunity for you. I hope to see you on the trail.

IPad and new software help with vision issues

By Lorena Sanchez

Hannah Blachford will complete her freshman year at Oñate High School in May, but as her first year winds down, Blachford is gearing up for an exciting opportunity.

It's hard to image losing your vision at age 14 and seeing the world with double vision, but that's exactly what Blachford is dealing with.

At 3 years old, Blachford was diagnosed with optic nerve hypoplasia, which is when the optic nerve is under developed as the result of a congenital condition. What caused her condition to progressively get worse was her 2003 diagnosis of ocular albinism, which reduces visual acuity due to nystagmus - involuntary

"I am almost legally blind," Blachford said. As Blachford entered her freshman year of high school last fall, Kevin Moreman began his first year as the associate director of bands.

Moreman had traveled from Colorado to Las Cruces to complete his master's degree in instrumental music conducting at New Mexico

In his downtime, Moreman worked as a band director at Oñate, and one of his students was Blachford, who played the clarinet for concert and marching band.

Before school let out for winter break, Moreman approached Blachford about the issue and found out about her condition.

Edgar R. Garrett center celebrates 50 years

By Lorena Sanchez

The Edgar R. Garrett Speech and Hearing center is celebrating 50 years with a bang. The center will throw a celebration from 5 to 8 p.m. Friday, May 4, at the center across from the Barnes & Noble at New Mexico State Univer-

The celebration, titled, "The Garrett Legacy of Excellence: 50 Years of Service!", will include a live jazz band, free Mexican food, a silent auction and a tour of the therapy rooms.

The event is free and open to the public. Alumni, clients and families are invited to attend. There will be family-friendly activities, including face painting, crafts and a scavenger hunt.

There will also be an opportunity to join the NMSU football players for a football toss, and a signed jersey and football are up for bid as part of the silent auction. Proceeds will benefit the center's scholarships, hiring of clinical supervisors and new equipment for the clinic.

'It's 50 years," said Marlene Salas-Provance, interim department head for special education and communication disorders and program director. "It's a continuation of (providing services to) thousands of patients and providing important services to the community.

Once Moreman knew about Blachford's issue, he started to look for assistive technology.

In February, Moreman approached the school district about ordering an iPad for Blachford, including The Gig Easy software and hardware.

"I knew about the app, and it just clicked," Moreman said.

Moreman knew of a friend, Darren Kramer, in Colorado who started a new company. Kramer and his partner, Brian Monroney, co-founded The Gig Easy, which creates music software and hardware for the iPad.

The Gig Easy app allows music to be downloaded to an iPad. The iPad can be attached to The Gig Easy mount, which acts as a music stand for the iPad. A foot pedal can then be attached to the iPad so after a musician begins to play, all they have to do is push on the foot pedal to turn the page.

Luckily, Kramer and his band had agreed to come to Las Cruces to perform a concert with his group The Darren Kramer Organization April 4 and brought the technology for Blachford to try.

"(Blachford) is the first person (with a visual impairment) we're testing it on," Kramer said. "The big thing with her is she can enlarge the text with the pinch of a finger and change the background color so she is able to view her music more clearly."

Kramer said when he and his partner developed the software, they knew it could make things easier for musicians, but also help visually impaired musicians.

The hardware, such as the mount and food pedals, is available for purchase. The Gig Easy software is set to be released this summer. The hardware is not just limited to musicians, but is also being used in medical facilities and educational settings. For more information, visit thegigeasy.com.

"We're going to contact (Blachford) at the end of the school year to see how it's working for her," Kramer said.

The school district agreed to purchase an iPad for Blachford, which will be in before the school year is finished. Not only will Blachford be able to use The Gig Easy software to help her read music, but she will be able to place her textbooks on the iPad and do her other schoolwork on the device. Being able to adjust the contrast and enlarge the text will make things easier for her as her illness progresses.

Moreman credits the school's principals, his fellow director Shawn Silva and the district for their support and willingness to invest in his student's future. Blachford will have access to the technology until she graduates.

"(Blachford) is a brilliant kid," Moreman said. "It's her desire to be successful and we want to do what we can to make her successful and if we have to invest (money) to do so, we will."

Due to her condition, Blachford's vision is constantly changing, which requires her to get new lenses for her glasses every three to six months.

Although doctors are unsure of how far the condition will progress, her condition could become more severe.

Two months ago, Blachford began to have double vision. Despite all of these set backs, Blachford is determined not to let it prevent her from doing what she loves.

"I never said I couldn't do it," Blachford said.

Speech

The speech and hearing center is used to train graduate students studying for their degree in speech pathology. The center was founded 50 years ago by Edgar R. Garrett, who provided clinical services to the community, a tradition that continues today.

"We're going to continue to offer great services for the community and training for our students," Salas-Provance said.

Information will be available at the celebration for families and individuals interested in the center's clinical services. The center provides care to patients of all ages, from infants to seniors. Services are not free, but they are available at a reduced rate.

Since its beginnings in 1962, the speech and hearing center brought the community to the campus for "large-scale medical service provision." Clinical services are open to those with a cleft palate, autism, hearing disorders, articulation problems, Down syndrome and learning disabilities.

Treatment and evaluation are also available to stroke and head injury victims. Individuals suffering communication problems, such as stuttering or dyslexia, can also receive evaluation and treatment at the center.

Examples of these services include examination of vocal fold movements for people suffering with vocal issues, vocal fold paralysis or vocal nodules with a video-stroboscopy. Teachers, singers and individuals suffering from Parkinson's disease or other neurological diseases are prone to these types of problems.

The celebration is meant to highlight the services past and present that the center offers to thank members of the community who support these efforts.

"We want to thank the community for the opportunity to provide services to them," Salas-Provance said.

NMSU students hold the first Relay for Life of 2012

So far, almost $10,000 raised to fight cancer

By Lorena Sanchez

or the Las Cruces Bulletin

Students at New Mexico State University will host the year's first Relay for Life event beginning 6 p.m. Friday, April 27, and ending 6 a.m. Saturday, April 28, at the horseshoe off South Espina Street.

"What's different about this Relay for Life event is that it's put on by students," said Kayla Vigil, event chair for the NMSU relay. "A lot of the participants and teams are student groups and groups of friends."

Because the event has been organized by students and is attended primarily by students, the activities are tailor-made for college students.

There will be root-beer pong, live music, Las Cruces extreme wrestling, Zumba and other events that are meant to keep people awake and walking.

There will even be a relay Olympic competition for the teams to compete in.

"A lot of teams do on-site fundraisers," Vigil said. "People sell food, burgers and there will be coffee."

Relay for Life is an overnight relay-style event that raises funds for the American Cancer Society.

A track will be created and lined with luminaries in honor or in memory of family and friends diagnosed with cancer.

"It's impressive to see these college students out there, giving up their Friday night to help fight cancer," Vigil said.

Anyone interested in participating in the event can register online at www.relayforlife. org, under 2012 Relay for Life of New Mexico State University.

Spots will be reserved on the grass for registered teams and individuals; however, there will be plenty of room for anyone else who'd like to participate.

The next Relay for Life event will be held Friday, Aug. 24, and Saturday, Aug. 25.

Fourth annual Black and Silver Auction raises funds for those in need

By Adam R. Baca

On Saturday, April 28, St. Vincent de Paul Charitable Services will host the fourth annual Black and Silver Silent Auction at the Rafael Lucero Hall inside Las Cruces Catholic School, 1331 N. Miranda St.

The event will start at 6:30 p.m. and will run until 9 p.m. Anyone is invited, even if not a church member.

'It's always fun to try and get something for as little as you can," said Pat Mueller, a volunteer with St. Vincent de Paul.

The auction will be free, but people must be 21 or older to enter, as there will be complimentary wine served. Along with the wine, there will be cheese and hors-d'oeuvres served. Seating will be available and the hall will be decorated for the event.

One of the big attractions of the event last year was the performance by the band Oldies but Goodies. Due to the band's popularity at the event last year, the band will perform at the auction for the second year in a row.

Harold Matteson, president of St. Vincent de Paul, said the band plays hits from the 1940s, '50s and '60s and will get people dancing. "They sound pretty authentic," Matteson

There will be a huge variety of items ready to be auctioned off. So far, some of the items available will be paintings from local artists as well as reprints; Southwest style jewelry, which have been appraised; pottery; Asian pieces; cut glass pieces; and furniture.

A one-night stay along with breakfast for two at the Inn of the Mountain Gods Resort and Casino in Mescalero will be available as well as a dumbbell set.

"I think we have a large variety of items," St. Vincent de Paul Treasurer Sharon Carr said. We have like 140 to 150 items right now."

She said the opening bids will be from about $20, and will go up from there. It is a silent auction, so people will be able to write down their bids rather than try to decipher what a fasttalking auctioneer is saying, and there will be no pressure on the bidder.

'People have been very generous," Carr said about the items donated for the auction. "It's really increased dramatically.

community.

'It's just a major fundraiser for us," Mueller said. "There's a lot of need in this community."

St. Vincent de Paul also raises funds through the Santa Cruz Thrift Store at 1250 W. Picacho Ave. The store is open from 9 a.m. to noon Monday and Tuesday. At the store, people are able to donate unneeded, but usable goods, including appliances, clothing or household

Carr said some of the better items donated to the thrift store were set aside for the upcoming auction.

In 2011, St. Vincent de Paul provided $51,778 in assistance to the needy of the community and provided 488 individuals with clothing and household items.

Not only does the charitable organization run the thrift store, but it also provides emergency assistance for those in need. If a family is in an emergency situation, the organization can possibly help pay utility bills. They also can provide vouchers to purchase needed goods at the thrift store.

"It's one of the active missionaries of the

The organization consists of about 25 active members, who are all volunteers.

Carr said there are many snowbirds who are not in Las Cruces year-round, but are very active in the organization as well.

Carr said the Black and Silver Auction will be an evening of fun with people bidding on great items, while giving assistance to the poor.

"It's a great cause and a wonderful group of people who provide the service," Carr said. We've worked hard.

"We're happy to take volunteers that might just be interested doing the work."

Come April 28, people can sit down, socialize, snack, drink and give assistance to the poor all in one night.

Mueller said there will be "a wide variety of enticing items" available at the auction and items are still coming in.

"Enjoyment and providing for the poor," Matteson said. "I think it's a very positive activity.'

"It's fun. Great items to look at and bid on," Carr said. "Bring your friends and have a good

Anyone interested in volunteering can contact the organization at 523-0167.

Carr said anyone is allowed to volunteer, even if they are not a member of the church.

314,524 stories could be told

Moving towards the 'No Kill Equation'

Jake Sims Pet Connection

Of the 314,524 dogs and cats these stories belong to, 227,443 died because they didn't have a home – that is, they were euthanized as part of our system for disposing of unwanted pets. Over a period of two decades, almost all the stories are lost to time – except one.

Her name was Darcy, a beautiful tortoise shell cat. She came to the shelter in late January, dropped off by her owners who were moving out of state and were unable to take Darcy with them.

They left contact information with the shelter staff for a relative who was supposed to claim her. Repeated attempts to reach the relative failed, Darcy was designated adoptable and placed at the Animal Services Center of the Mesilla Valley's off-site adoption location at PetsBarn.

At first, Darcy seemed to be adjusting to the stressful change in her life, but then she began to show signs of distress. She quit eating and lay quietly in her condo.

We have seen this before when a pet is separated from their familiar people and surroundings. We transferred her to a foster home where she could get personal attention and care. Since she was not drinking water, she had to be taken to the shelter daily for injections of fluid.

After a few days, Darcy showed no inclination to eat. The shelter veterinarian examined her and found signs of liver failure. The foster caregiver then took her to a private veterinarian to do the necessary blood work and other examinations to ensure the diagnosis and proper course of care.

Unfortunately, the examination confirmed Darcy had rather advanced liver disease and due to her age - between 12 and 15 years old – the recommendation was to let her go.

She spent her last few days lovingly cared for – we hope she felt that. We wish she could have lived out the remainder of her life with her original family.

What's the point of all of this? We now have the knowledge and ability to create a far more joyous outcome for our pets.

In recent years, several communities that share our heartbreaking dilemma have taken systematic action to dramatically change their handling of homeless pets.

This led to the development of a nationwide revolution in pet care and treatment applying the No Kill Equation. The equation is clear, easy to understand and effec-

- 1. A trap, neuter and release program for free-living cats
- High volume, low-cost spay/neuter
- Working with rescue groups
- A foster care program
- Comprehensive adoption program
- Pet retention efforts
- Medical and behavioral rehabilitation
- Public relations and community involvement

9. Working with volunteers

10. Progressive field services and redemption 11. A compassionate shelter director Experience of the communities successfully applying the No Kill Equation strongly underscore that it starts with a commitment to reject kill-oriented ways of doing business. No Kill starts as an act of will.

It is to pursue this goal that many of the Las Cruces and Doña Ana County animal advocate groups, individuals and elected officials formed the Community Coalition for Pets and People.

The coalition is co-chaired by County Commissioner Billy Garrett and Doña Ana County Humane Society Board Vice-President Tom Townsend. You will be hearing much from this group in coming weeks.

We invite your active involvement in making sure we have a community where all animals receive the respect and consideration that is one of the hallmarks of the finest place to live.

Jake Sims is the facilitator for Animal Welfare And Responsibility Education (AWARE). He is passionate about educating the public on animal welfare and lowering euthanization rates in Doña Ana County. Sims can be reached at info@awaredac.com.

"I'm the type of person, when I build a house, I want to create a work of art," said Tony Quintero of San Antonio

That's just what he did when he constructed his family home at 5080 Catamount Drive, in the Talavera area.

After he built the Angel Fire Estate subdivision in the Las Alturas neighborhood, Quintero said he wanted his personal home to be closer to the Organ Mountains.

"I love the mountains," he said. "I'm a mountains type of person and I love the outdoors."

Selecting the 2-acre lot on Catamount Drive, in 2007 Quintero began work on designing a masterfully crafted 3,606-square-foot residence, a task he received help on from his family.

"My daughter, Bridget, helped me with the design of the home," he said, adding that his daughter was studying civil engineering at New Mexico State University at the time. "And my wife, Sonja, helped with the interior design."

When it came to the style of the home, Quintero said he used influences from various places he traveled to and the architectural details he saw. He received great inspiration from a tour of Spain, which is reflected in the rustic look and Moorish tile work.

"I got some really good ideas from Spain," he said. "It's a mix of Spain and Santa Fe styles with the Mexican culture,

"You've got three different cultures in this house and it's really interesting. There is a lot of detail and flavor from all of the places I've visited."

The incorporation of the various cultures is evident from the entrance of the home. Taking a page from the Santa Fe style, an arch surrounds a gate enclosing a front courtyard. The courtyard features rock landscaping, brightly colored plants and a water feature on a wall.

A chandelier from Spain hangs on the porch, which includes rock detailing around the supporting columns to further the rustic feel. This touch of Spanish flavor is also seen on the 4-by-8-foot front door, thanks to the eyebrow arch and iron hardware.

Quintero said the pitched roof and European arches create 'a nice entry" for those coming inside the home.

The entrance features a 14-foot ceiling with Spanish-style corbels and a tray ceiling accented in stone and a chandelier. Rectangular windows line the top of the ceiling, bringing natural light into the entrance.

"I live light," Quintero said. "I love to light up a house with windows and skylights."

The floor, with a Moorish-inspired tiled medallion, is as ornate as the ceiling.

Two nichos covered in Venetian plaster are found in the entrance. This architectural feature is one of Quintero's favorite, he said.

"My family calls me the nicho king," he said. "Every room has one.

A family room is located near the entrance. Quintero said he chose a Santa Fe style for the room to make it warm and "I was trying to give it that homey feeling more than anything," he said. "There are arches and nichos, and there is builtin surround sound to bring the modern age into it."

Across from the family room is the living room. Featuring 12-foot ceilings accented in vigas and tongue-and-groove slats, the living room is heart of the home. A fireplace is set against one wall, while large windows capture the landscaped backyard and surrounding view.
"When I built the home, I built it for the views of the Organ Mountains," Quintero said. "Almost every room has a view of the mountains, and the rooms that don't still have a nice

The living room transitions into the kitchen.

"You probably won't ever see (a kitchen) like this," Quintero said. "There is a lot of detail with the arches with lighting and corbels. The (tray) ceiling has different steps leading to the top, which had wood on it. It's layered like a painting.

Granite with black and red stripes covers the countertops, including the island, which has a prep-sink. Quintero said the family chose walnut cabinets with rope trim to continue the upscale feel of the home.

A short hallway with a barrel ceiling leads to a wing of the home that features two bedrooms. Quintero said each bedroom includes its own bathroom and feature detailed tile work in the showers.

Down another hallway, the ceiling of which is covered in planks and skylights detailed in trim, is the master suite, a luxurious escape. The bathroom of the suite features a garden bathtub set in a Moorish arch encrusted in tile and glass blocks. A tile-covered snail shower with two showerheads completes the relaxing oasis.

Just as important to the Quinteros as the interior space was the outdoor living area. Out back is a kitchen with a tilecovered bar as well as several seating areas.

'You can just hang out and enjoy yourself," Quintero said. "There are some beautiful sunrises and sunsets."

A casita finishes the amenities of the property. Accessed from the front courtyard, the casita includes a living room, kitchen with oak cabinets, laundry facilities, two-car garage, RV garage and a master bedroom with an oversized shower.

"I liked the soothing colors," she said.

While the colors are different, Quintero said the casita includes the same fine detailing as the main home.

'Overall to me, (the property) has been a work of art," he

In conjunction with Earth Week, and to bump up curbside recycling, Friedman Recycling launched "Recycling Rewards" in Las

"Now we want to reward those who recycle right and bump up the excitement by awarding hundreds of dollars in prizes every month to recycling residents."

Starting Monday, April 30, curbside recycling pickup drivers will stop at randomly selected addresses to see if the blue curbside recycling bin is at the curb and if the items in the bin match the list of accepted recyclables:

Denmark talks on need to build relationships

Better communication focus of luncheon

DENMARK

By Beth Sitzler

To help further communication between the city and those in the building industry, City of Las Cruces Assistant City Manager Brian Denmark spoke during the Las Cruces Home Builders Association luncheon Thursday, April 5.

"(LCHBA Managing Director) Steve (Chavira) and (LCHBA President) Jim (Reedy) came and met with me on building a better relationship with the association and the city," Denmark said. "The message today is the fact that we need to do a better job communicating and understanding."

Denmark said as the association goes through changes – such as its recent name change from the Building Industry Association of Southern New Mexico back to the LCHBA – so too is the city.

"There have been a lot of changes over the last few years," he said, explaining that this includes splitting the assistant city manager duties between himself and Mark Winson. "The economy has greatly impacted us, like it has impacted you.'

Operating on a budget established in 2008, Denmark said the city "can't afford to do everything." However, Las Cruces is in better condition than other places in the country that have seen large reductions in their budgets.

"Some think that we don't support housing, but housing is a huge benefit to us as a revenue generator," he said.

Because of the downturn economy and decrease in gross receipts. Denmark said the city has had to make cuts to be more efficient. One area that has been reorganized to cut out the fat and improve operations is Community Development, which went from four sections to two.

With the new configuration, Building Officer Robert Kyle is overseeing building and development services, which includes zoning and subdivisions, building development and engineering development.

We've never had one person before,"

Denmark said. "What he is doing is going through and instilling leadership qualities."

Denmark said this process includes enhancing communication and training staff to make decisions in a professional, respectful manner.

"We've got to create a different paradigm," said Denmark, adding that this will help with cus-tomer service and make the process smoother.

Something Denmark recognizes as a hindrance to those in the building industry is the time it takes to get permits or make changes and get approval for plans.

"People get frustrated trying to get permits," he said. "You represent the industry and you have concerns. We need to make communication more efficient.

'Some of your frustrations are my frustrations, too."

Another concern the city is looking into is directional signs guiding visitors to homes within a subdivision.

"Almost every one of them are illegal and violate sign codes," he said. "We decided to do a pilot project ... that allows for one sign to go up and for all of the builders' names to be on it. It's up on North Del Rey Boulevard.

"We really want your opinions when we go through these issues. Anything to create a better relationship and collaboration."

Denmark said some concerns, such as impact fees and the dust ordinance, are out of the staff's hands.

'You have to recognize that the staff aren't the policymakers," he said. "The city councillors are. Ultimately, it is the city council you have to convince.

"Unfortunately, there are a few out there who create problems for us and policies are made that affect you."

While the city undergoes change, Denmark asks those in the building industry to be patient.

"It's a process to get the department to change," Denmark said. "It's going to take time. To help bridge that, talk to us about the issues that are important to you.

Tour features variety of styles, prices

Bulletin Staff Report

The Las Cruces Home Builders Association is hard at work preparing for the 2012 Spring Showcase of Homes, to take place April 27-29 and May 4-6.

During the 2012 showcase, 27 homes created by 15 area builders will be featured. The homes will display varying styles as well as price ranges, said LCHBA Managing Director Steve Chavira.

"I'm excited about this year's showcase," he said. "We've got some great, quality homes. There is a wide variety to see. A lot of builders have come to the table. It's going to be a great tour."

A new activity to be featured during the 2012 Spring Showcase of Homes is a scavenger hunt. In the Spring Showcase of Homes magazine is a page devoted to the game. It can also be found on the LCHBA

"One house from each builder will participate in the scavenger hunt," said Kathryn Blessington of Helping Hands Event

Blessington said to participate, showcase visitors must read clues provided on the page and find the correlating item.

There is a clue to each item and the builder or Realtor at the house will give a sticker when the item is found," she said.

After each item has been found and all stickers have been collected, the page must be turned into the LCHBA office, 2825 N. Main St., or Radio of Las Cruces office, 1355 California St., by Monday, May 7.

The free tour of homes will take place from 4 to 7 p.m. Fridays, 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. Saturdays and noon to 5 p.m. Sundays. Showcase magazines can be picked up at the LCHBA office, 2825 N. Main St.

Staying Lush & Lean in Las Cruces

City program teaches the importance of water conservation

By Beth Sitzler

Living in the desert, Las Crucens have one common issue they all face: water conservation.

To bring awareness to the importance of water conservation, the City of Las Cruces created the Lush & Lean program, which held its first workshop Thursday, April 12, at Las Cruces Utilities.

"One of my jobs is to show where every drop of water goes," said Leeann DeMouche, water conservation coordinator of the city, who led the workshop.

As water conservation coordinator, a position created in 2011, DeMouche said she relies on two reports to determine how Las Cruces uses its water.

A report created by the American Water Works Association – which sets the standards the city must follow – works as a report card that examines consumption and non-revenue water uses, such as a water main break or water used by the fire department, DeMouche said.

DeMouche said she also uses the Gallons Per Capita Per Day Calculator (GPCD), which breaks down the water that comes out of the area's wells into different categories.

"In 2011, we pulled 7.1 trillion gallons of water," DeMouche said. "(The report) takes that total diversion and breaks it down."

The different categories include single-family and multi-family residential, commercial, reused/reclaimed and non-revenue.

DeMouche said water usage went up from about 191 gallons per person per day in 2010 to 203 in 2011. She credits this increase in part to the freeze in February 2011, which resulted in several burst pipes as well as an over usage of water from residents trying to revive damaged plants.

According to GPCD requirements, Las Cruces must get its total water usage down to 180 gallons per person per day and its single-family unit usage to 125 by 2030.

"In 2010, we were 6 percent away from that and in 2011 we were 11 percent away," De-Mouche said.

To help reach the goal, the city established a water conservation plan, which covers three areas, DeMouche said. In addition to program actions, which consist of what the city is doing internally, the plan also covers voluntary measures and mandatory measures.

The city is looking at ways to reduce water usage. One way residents can help conserve water is abiding by the city's watering schedule.

"We're trying to create more structured guidelines (for water conservation)," De-Mouche said. "For example, setting standards that 80 percent of your front lawn can be turf with low-water usage."

When it comes to voluntary measures, however, DeMouche said these are mostly changing one's behavior, such as switching from baths to showers. The biggest water users in a house are the toilet, taking up 26 percent of water used; washing machines, with 23 percent; and showers with 20 percent.

"Things you can do to reduce your use is turn off the water when brushing your teeth," DeMouche said. "Don't spend more than five minutes in the shower. You can also capture the water you use to wash vegetables and use it to water your plants."

In addition to flushing less, residents can also save water when using their toilets by checking for leaks and using a plastic bottle or toilet bag to displace water in the tank.

Voluntary measures don't stop inside the home, however.

"In the summer, 50 percent of a home's water usage is on landscaping," DeMouche said. Systems, such as gray water and rainwater harvesting, can help ease water usage as does efficient irrigation. Using a shut-off valve on an irrigation system or hose is a quick fix, as is retrofitting landscaping.

When selecting turf, DeMouche said to choose one that uses less water. Also, think about what the grass is needed for. If the grass doesn't serve a purpose, replace it.

Overwatering and problematic design are also issues, DeMouche said. If your lawn is located on a slope, she recommends watering in 10-minute intervals to ensure the water penetrates the soil and root system.

"It's little things like that that make a difference," she said.

While behavior changes take time, DeMouche said the city is going to help things get going by providing promotions and incentives.

"We're providing free water audits to the community," she said.

These audits include testing all toilets, retrofitting sinks with aerators and retrofitting showers with 1-inch showerheads, if desired. By next summer, DeMouche said she hopes to be able to provide landscaping audits for homeowners.

DeMouche said because the department isn't funded by the city's budget, she is applying for grants to provide residents with rebates on water-conservation features.

"This would help encourage people," she said

The city will provide educational events for the community, such as Lush & Lean workshops, as well as for schools.

<sup>a</sup>In the future, I want to come up with a publication for this area on gardening and irrigation," said DeMouche, adding that she is also looking into creating classroom modules that will include videos and materials for teachers and students.

Soil temperature plays a role in when your plants emerge

Gary Guzman Gardening Guru

These warm days may make you wonder why some of your plants are not "waking up" from their winter slumber. You have to have some patience.

Plants such as lantana, red bird of paradise, figs and tecoma stans need significant soil warmth to begin their new spring growth. This is assuming they actually survived the previous winter's temperatures.

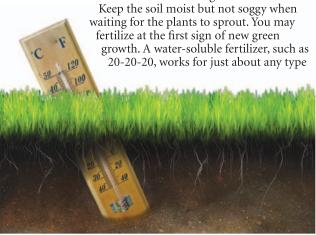

Notice I mentioned soil warmth. It is the soil that has to warm up, not just the ambient temperature. This typically happens after the above ground temps stay at 80 degrees consistently and the nighttime temperatures are above 50 degrees. Keep in mind this has been one of the coolest springs in a long while.

If these plants are placed where they receive some shade, the process of emerging will be delayed even more. Even a little shade will have a big effect on the soil temperature.

If you have mulch around the plants, you may want to consider removing it so the sun's rays can heat up the soil much faster.

On the other hand, plants that have been planted next to buildings or rock walls will emerge much sooner than those that are not.

It is best to remove all of the dead twigs and branches if you have not already done so. In most cases, you will have to cut them back to an inch or two from the ground.

Keep in mind that the newest growth on just about any type of plant is more susceptible to insects, cold, wind or disease. This may be a great time to use a systemic fertilizer that will prevent insect infestation. This is generally used on non-edible crops.

If the temperatures or wind are going to be a factor, have some kind of cloth at hand to temporarily cover the tender new growth during harsh weather. Powdery mildew or other diseases can be prevented by watering early in the morning so the foliage is completely dry by nightfall.

Signs of overwatering will show up as a whitish yellow on the newest growth. Additional amounts of iron and reduced watering should remedy this. Signs of underwatering are more obvious and will show up as droopy, or dull colored leaves. A drip system works best as long as the system is left on long enough to saturate the original root zone.

You may see the same plants offered in nurseries already in their full glory. The reason is that those plants were grown in greenhouses or in areas that have extremely mild or no winter temperatures at all. Don't compare your planted ones to plants grown in "paradise."

Give your plants a chance. I know it is tempting to want to go and pull out the hesitant plants out and start with new ones, but give them until mid May. If they do awaken, they should be more vigorous growers since they already have a root ball older than a new replacement. If they don't emerge, consider a different type of plant or a "hot spot" in your landscape.

Getting to know: Rethink Real Estate

Finding their niche

Rethink Real Estate focuses on historic, green homes

By Beth SitzlerLas Cruces Bulletin

Padma Mott-Valdevit and Kate Mott love the look and feel of historic areas of town, so much so they have made it their niche through their company Rethink Real Estate.

We love to sell things that we love," Mott said. "It's so much easier to sell things you

'That's our taste – old houses," Mott-Valdevit said. "Their owners just gravitate to us."

The mother-daughter team came to the Mesilla Valley in the 1980s. Originally from New Hampshire, Mott began her real estate career in Las Cruces in 1983. A short time later, after completing her studies at Groton School, Mott-Valdevit ventured to the area.

"I took classes at the university and met the costume shop foreman and got sucked into the theater department," Mott-Valdevit said.

After graduating from New Mexico State University, Mott-Valdevit moved to New York, where she pursued her theater career, even working backstage on Broadway productions.

The green chile and the sky brought me back," Mott-Valdevit said. "I was walking to work one day and I realized that it had been months since I saw the ground. I knew it was time to leave.'

Returning to Las Cruces in 1994, Mott-Valdevit established PK Studio, a frame shop and gallery, which she ran for five years before selling.

"I sold the studio and started training and teaching horse back riding," she said. "Then I hurt my back and I couldn't do it on that level anymore."

Around that time, Mott was coming back to the Mesilla Valley after spending the previous five years in the Boston area.

"I never lost interest in real estate, in design and building," she said, adding that she became an associate broker with Emily Coss.

Mott-Valdevit joined her mother, helping her with the technology side of real estate before earning her own Realtor's license.

"I found that I love real estate," Mott-Valdevit said. "I love the challenge of it."

Wanting to create their own business, they opened Rethink Real Estate in 2007. When selecting a name, Mott-Valdevit said they wanted something that reflected their interests and desire of catering to various aspects of the industry.

"We talked about how we were rethinking how real estate happens," she said. "We're very interested in older section of town.

"Also, we're really interested in green and doing real estate but keeping an eye on the environment so it makes a little impact on the Earth."

Mott said they were able to further their dedication to older parts of town when the Downtown property at 535 N. Main St. became available.

"(Downtown) is an area where people meet and exchange ideas," she said. "We feel that (a vibrant Downtown) is a really important thing to develop."

In addition to its ideal location, the space also included framing equipment, allowing the duo to return to their art roots and establish MVS Studios, Mott said.

"We got back into the framing and gallery business," she said. "I love making art look beautiful, no matter what it is."

"(Real estate and the gallery) go together pretty well," said Mott-Valdevit, adding that events such as the Downtown Art Ramble, which brings community members into the gallery, provides them with networking duo said they were able to stay busy thanks to the niche they occupied and the relationships they formed.

I've always believed that if you do what you love, you'll be able to put food on the table," Mott said. "If you go to work every day and answer the phone, you'll be able to make a living.

Mott said Rethink Real Estate is a small office, and that's how they plan to keep it.

"I've always been drawn to a small office," she said. "In real estate, you're your own boss anyway, so you reap the benefit for what you

The ants come marching in

Don't let No. 1 pest live the high life in your home

Scott Svenheim ACE Pest Detective

As we enter a peak period for ants, many are surprised to learn that ants are America's No. 1 nuisance pest.

In fact, there are more than 700 species found in the United States, although only about 25 species commonly invade homes

Ants are especially attracted to sweets, so it will come as no shock when you wake up one morning to a parade of ants that have pounced on that unattended cake crumb or juice spill that was left unattended on your kitchen floor.

Ants are constantly foraging for food and when they do track it down, they lay down a chemical trail called a pheromone to make it possible for their fellow ants to follow their trail so they can go back and forth from their nest to the food source.

Have you ever stumbled upon a lone ant on your kitchen counter that's just wandering around aimlessly? Don't let that seemingly harmless loner fool you – this is where your ant alert needs to kick in. Although you may not be dealing with a true infestation just yet, you need to understand that lone ants are actually scouts sent to survey the landscape for resources. When it does indeed find an adequate source of food and water to feast on, the entire ant colony is days away from setting up shop and living the high life in your home.

To keep you informed of what type of ants to expect this season, the following list will help you identify a few of the common ant annoyances to be on the lookout for, including crazy ants, pavement ants and fire ants.

Crazy ants

These insects have a habit of running around in an erratic, jerky manner when hunting down food resources, hence the "crazy" name.

Because they are highly adaptable, crazy ants are capable of thriving in both dry and moist habitats. If indoors, crazy ants will usually nest underneath floors and carpeting.

The colonies tend to be smaller than other species, composed of up to 2,000 workers. Larger colonies have been discovered, containing more than 10,000 ants, in environments such as mulch beds and debris piles.

You'll be relieved to know that crazy ants pose no health threats – they are just a bothersome disturbance.

Pavement ants

Even though these ants are commonly known to nest in or under cracks in pavement, they still infest structures. Pavement ants tend to move in slow, deliberate motions and are not easily disturbed.

They feast on a variety of foods including meats, pet food, sweets, bread, nuts and insects. Keep in mind that your trash is a gold mine for these ants, so never leave food items sitting in your trash bin for days at a time.

Fire ants

These are the feisty little guys you want to avoid at all costs given their lively aggressive behavior. Fire ants nest in soil and build large mound nests. Unfortunately they can infest garages, too.

Surprisingly, they are one of the strongest creatures on this planet, given their amazing ability to lift a seed five times their weight

If any individual disturbs its nest, fire ants will not hesitate to come at them with a vengeance and sting multiple times.

Crazy ants are highly adaptable and can thrive in dry and moist habitats.

Fire ant stings are painful and often result in a raised welt that turns into a white pustule.

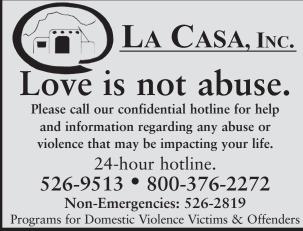

The diet of a fire ant consists of almost any plant or animal material, including insects, ground-nesting animals, mice, turtles, snakes, fruit and grass.

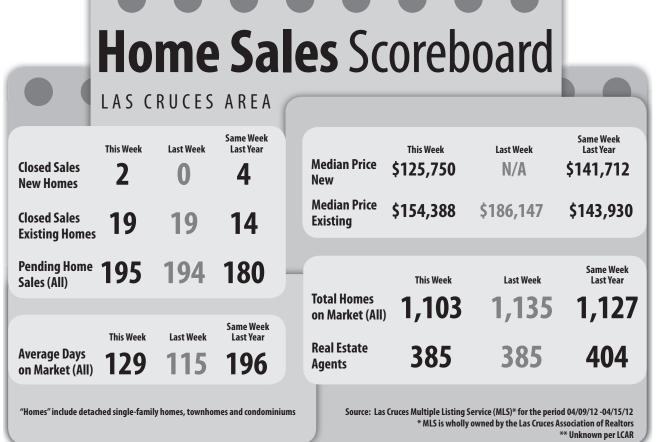

Besides being a nuisance indoors and out, ants are actually beneficial to our environment because of their feeding role in the ecosystem. Since they feed on other pests, such as caterpillars and termites, in addition to breaking down the natural decomposition of dead animals, they are actually doing society a favor and contributing to the circle of life.

On the flip side, if you do sense a potential ant infestation in your home, it's crucial to seek professional help to nip this in the bud.

This old remedy has modern-day household uses

By Adam R. Baca

With gas prices skyrocketing lately, it is good to see that the price of gasoline's relative, petroleum jelly, has stayed consistent.

In 1858, a man named Robert A. Chesebrough went to investigate an oil well in Pennsylvania, according to www.vaselineskinfund.com. It was here that he discovered something gooey from the well called "rod wax."

After Chesebrough discovered the "rod wax," he noticed it aided in the healing of cuts and burns, and he decided to extract the petroleum jelly. The rest was history.

By the late 1880s, Chesebrough was selling the product around the nation at a rate of about one jar per minute, according to the website.

Today, it is likely that a small container of petroleum jelly is sitting in your bathroom under the sink or in a medicine cabinet. Unfortunately, the jelly tends to go unused unless someone runs out of lotion or lip balm.

Don't let that bottle of petroleum jelly collect dust. Sure it is a moisturizer, but let's make Chesebrough proud and show him the versatility of his product.

- 1. Heal your cracked and chaffing hands or feet: It can be close to torture when your hands or feet become so dry they crack and bleed. Lotion does temporarily help, but it seems you need to use half of the bottle to soften your skin. Before you go to sleep, smear petroleum jelly all over your hands or feet and cover them with socks. When you wake up in the morning, you will be pleased at how soft your skin has become.
- 2. Get the creak out of hinges: It is pretty annoying when you hear a loud screeching noise every time you open or close your bedroom door. Don't let the creak get comfortable; it is really not necessary to settle for a creaky hinge on a door. Grease up the hinge with some petroleum jelly and kiss the irritating sound goodbye.

- 3. Remove your make up: There is no more make-up remover left and taking a trip to the grocery store for this one item seems ridiculous, not to mention a waste of gas. If you have some petroleum jelly available, you're in luck. It can be used as make-up remover and it softens your skin.
- 4. Prevent and heal diaper rash: Special ointments and creams for this use can become quite expensive at times. Petroleum jelly comes at a reasonable price. Use the jelly in place of the expensive solutions sold to heal diaper rash
- 5. Help protect and heal cuts and sores: It is not a problem to take it back to the old school. Even though the jelly has many unique uses, this was its original purpose. It is perfect for putting on cuts since it protects the open wound, not allowing germs in.
- 6. Remove ring that's stuck on your finger: We'll give you the benefit of the doubt that your finger became swollen. All of a sudden you can't pull your ring off of your finger. What happened? You remember it being able to slide on and off fairly easily. Quit tugging at your finger, go to your bathroom and grab the jelly. Apply the jelly around the ring to act as lubricant, which will help the ring slide off of your finger a little easier.

7. Use as body moisturizer: Sometimes lotion comes with a scent that you can smell from a mile away. Maybe you just don't think all of the chemicals listed on the back of a lotion bottle seem very attractive. Petroleum jelly may be the perfect body moisturizer for you, especially if your skin is sensitive. There are no scents or chemicals and it won't clog your pores.

- 8. Shine your dress shoes: Your dress shoes are dull in color and it seems every time you go to the airport, the shoe shining stands are empty. It is not necessary to wait for the airport shoe shiner. Grab the petroleum jelly and apply a light coat to your shoes giving them the necessary shine.
- 9. Remove gum from hair: If you have children, it might be a good idea to grab a jar of petroleum jelly for this one reason. Gum will probably get stuck in your child's hair at some point, or maybe you fell asleep chewing gum and woke up with the wad somehow clinging to your locks. Rub petroleum jelly around the wad of gum and slowly massage. The gum should easily come out.

- 10. Protect your new tattoo: You just got a new tattoo and you are afraid to hop in the shower in fear of the ink messing up. Smear petroleum jelly over the tattoo. It will protect it while helping to keep your skin moisturized.
- 11. Fish bait: You already promised your buddies that you would go fishing with them, but you forgot to buy bait. Maybe you are too ashamed to ask to borrow some bait and you can't buy more because you lost your wallet. Grab little pieces of sponge and cover them in petroleum jelly. This can simulate a fish egg for bait.
