Senator asks $1,200 fine be waived

Garcia says cash for travel expenses legal By Todd G. Dickson

State Senate Majority Whip Mary Jane Garcia sent a letter Tuesday, Oct. 24, to Secretary of State Dianna Duran to ask her to waive a $1,200 fine related to the legislator using campaign funds for expenses related to her legislative work.

In the letter, Garcia said she did not believe she violated New Mexico's campaign finance laws when she used cash from campaign funds for travel expenses, which she said is allowed under state law.

New Mexico lawmakers are not paid, but are reimbursed for per diem expenses while doing legislative work. Garcia said she doesn't use credit or debit cards, and many gas stations won't take personal checks, so she uses cash for her travel and lodging expenses while serving in the Legislature and on committees. Garcia, a Demo-ing to a complaint filed by the campaign treasurer for Lee Cotter, Garcia's GOP opponent in the Nov. 6 election.

After reviewing the complaint about the possibility that Garcia was using campaign funds for legislative work while also getting reimbursed by the state, Duran demanded she pay $1,200 back to state.

Garcia said she pays back her campaign fund when she receives reimbursement checks from the state.

"I don't think that I violated the law," she said.

In her letter, Garcia cites the state statute that she believed allowed her to use campaign cash for travel expenses and she asked Duran to seek an opinion from the Attorney General's Office about whether

Over the past two years, residents have seen the New Mexico State University Center for the Arts take shape on the corner of University Avenue and Espina Street.

Now, with the anticipated December completion date just around the corner, construction crews are working nearly round the clock to finish the 59,000gross-square-foot structure.

"We're working six days a week," said Orasa Vaught, project manager with the facilities and services department, during a tour of the structure Wednesday, Oct. 17. "I started working on the project in 2007, but work was being done on it even before that."

A project in the works at the university for several years, the Center for the Arts was designed to be a central location for art activities at NMSU, as well as a way to connect the university with the general community. "With most of the university's

NMSU jewelry sale Oct. 29

Original, handmade student work offered

One-of-a-kind jewelry is what New Mexico State University art students are designing for the department's 30th annual jewelry sale.

Using surprising materials, jewelry and metalsmithing students have crafted handmade, original pieces as part of a project to stretch their technical and artistic abilities.

The jewelry sale is scheduled from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday, Oct. 29, in the lobby of the D.W. Williams Art Center, located at 1390 E. University Ave..

"It's an opportunity for our students to focus on designing innovative and unusual jewelry while exploring the use of new materials in body adornment," said Julia Barello, head of the art department. "Part of the project requires them to use their imaginations in designing the kind of jewelry that cannot be found anywhere else."

Materials used this year include silver, enamels and bronze, as well as unexpected materials such as dyed vellum, tin-type photographs, castbronze parachute cord pendants and textiles.

Proceeds from the sale will be used to support student activities in the jewelry and metalsmithing field. For more information, call Barello at 646-1705.

Opinions Amazing C4CR tribute honors cancer victims

Moving moment illustrates the impact of disease

Years from now, thousands of people will likely claim they were there, but the reality is, in the early morning hours at Sproul Arena Oct. 13-14, the attendance was relatively sparse.

Among those who did attend, however, there was not a dry eye in the arena.

It was not planned, but spontaneously developed the participants at the 30th Annual Cowboys for Cancer Research Team Roping.

Prior to the national anthem and opening prayer Saturday morning, Oct. 13, C4CR's Denny Calhoun, Kevin Davis and others were talking, and the idea materialized.

While C4CR has raised millions of dollars for breast cancer research in its 30 years, there is still no cure. And while medical research has allowed many more people to survive their fight against cancer, many still die from the disease every year.

How do you adequately honor those people?

I'm not sure there is a perfect way, but what C4CR did is as close as anyone will ever get.

Calhoun outfitted a white horse with a pair of chaps over the saddle, a hat on the horn and backward boots in the stirrups. Then, after the prayer and the anthem, Tiffany Whetten played "Amazing Grace" solo on the fiddle.

While the music played, Calhoun led the riderless horse on a lap around the arena. "I was all choked up, and while Kevin was reading the tribute, he was all choked up," Calhoun said.

I was not one of those in the arena that morning, but as Calhoun relayed the story to me, I was all choked up.

"Amazing Grace" is a powerful enough melody in itself, but imagine it on a lonely violin, arcing across the rodeo arena. That alone would put a lump in your throat. Now, envision the pale horse walking with the empty chaps, boots and hats.

Some might think that after 30 years, it would be difficult for C4CR to bring anything new to its incredible efforts. Clearly, anyone who would think that would be wrong.

The riderless horse is destined to be a tradition for the next 30 years of C4CR's Team Roping event. It poignantly paints the picture of the purpose of the project.

Simply put, cancer takes our friends and loved ones away from us. We realize none of us gets out of here alive, but cancer all too frequently takes people away while the music is still inside them, while they've still got much to contribute to their families, their friends, their livelihoods and their communities.

One reason Cowboys for Cancer Research has been so successful is because everyone involved brings a complete sincerity to their efforts.

The whole thing began as a tribute to a dear friend lost to cancer, Alma Cohorn. The work they do has always been, and continues to be, completely from the heart.

A riderless white horse, guided by Denny Calhoun prior to the 30th Annual Cowboys for Cancer Research Team Roping Saturday, Oct. 13, represents all those who lost their life to cancer.

Good neighbors

I am convinced that some of the finest people on the planet live in Las Cruces and Doña Ana County.

We are all fortunate to have the Masons among us. They work tirelessly to collect and loan out durable medical equipment. Their efforts provide miracles every day for the people they serve.

We also have the veterans at the VFW Post No. 3242 on North Mesquite Street who also have medical equipment such as wheelchairs and walkers to loan out. They are all true heroes to many.

I feel especially blessed to have the City Barber Shop in my neighborhood on North Main Street. The barbers have been wonderful neighbors. I consider them to be guardian angels to my family and I.

We have many caring individuals and groups in our area. I am very proud to call Las Cruces my "home town."

Yet, many women are unaware of human papillomavirus (HPV), and the relationship it has to cervical cancer, they are also unaware of the role of the Pap test in decreasing the incidence rate of cervical cancer as well. Many barriers to HPV vaccination and Pap test include costs, safety issues, and fear as well. It's important to raise awareness about how the HPV vaccine and the Pap test can potentially decrease the incidence by 91 percent.

The state of New Mexico has introduced legislation in 2007 in which parents or guardians of female students must receive educational information about cervical cancer and the human papillomavirus vaccine; the school also would have provided for the human papillomavirus vaccine for school entry. This legislation failed.

I'm asking the New Mexico legislators to revise this legislation in the next New Mexico State legislature in January of next year.

A future without cervical cancer is possible. We need to adopt a comprehensive national health care program that delivers compassionate care to all women, as well as reduce the disparities in access to screening and overcome the obstacles to vaccination.

Remembering Rep. George Buffett

Colorful conservative legislator sported independent streak

Burned up about ethanol requirement

Jay Miller Inside the Capitol

Former Rep. George Buffett makes the list as one of New Mexico's most colorful politicos. Buffett, who died recently, wouldn't particularly appreciate being called colorful or a politico, but that is part of why he was colorful.

Buffett was as conservative as they come. He was conservative in all things. He introduced few, if any, bills during a session. When he spoke on the floor of the House, he was stingy with words. He didn't appreciate legislators appropriating money to projects in their own districts. He didn't do it himself and he voted against members of his own party doing it.

His independent streak was part of the reason Buffett never served in a leadership position in the Republican Party despite his 24 years in the Legislature. The average tenure of a Republican legislator in New Mexico is much shorter than 24 years.

Buffett said the quick in and out is because it isn't as much fun always being in the minority and never getting to be a committee chairman. He pointed to the large number of Democratic retirements when Democrats lost the majority in Congress.

Although Buffett never was a party leader in the Legislature, he was elected as New Mexico's Republican national committeeman in 2004, two years after he retired from the Legislature. At the time, the state Republican Party was in turmoil over whether to back Gov. Gary Johnson's marijuana initiatives. Buffett was the candidate of those who wanted nothing to do with any type of drugs. My lobbying career began with the New Mexico Education Association in 1965. My duties consisted mainly of lobbying Republican legislators. When Buffett came along in 1979, I didn't get many votes out of him but I got much good conversation and many valuable insights on how things worked behind the scenes.

By 1989, after 10 years of frustration at how politics worked in Santa Fe, Buffett decided to start telling the story to business owners throughout the state. He called the publication 'Buffett's Bullets.

Buffett sent the newsletter to 9,600 businesses. He asked for contributions to offset the printing and postage and only published a new edition when sufficient contributions had arrived. When he retired in 2002, Buffett continued his Bullets until 2008.

The candy business owner said he printed the stories the media missed. He also suggested the media may have done more than miss the stories. He also didn't care for trial lawyers, union bosses and lobbyists for gambling interests. And he picked on the Albuquerque Chamber of Commerce because he felt it wasn't aggressive enough.

I still got to keep up with George after he left the Legislature in 2002. Every year at the Rodeo de Santa Fe, he ran a concession booth with a young staff he brought from Albuquerque each night. Buffett always got the best location, next to the entrance where my Lions Club sold programs. George always had an extra folding chair for me to sit and talk when I got tired.

We always had plenty of talking to do. We both had married women named Jeanette back in the 1960s. Jeanette Franzen and I had been friends at the University of New Mexico. George liked to tell me about his first cousin Warren Buffett and the conversations they had around the kitchen table in Omaha. George had been an early investor in Warren's company.

Our conversations often reminded me of those I regularly had with former Gov. Bruce King in our home. Alice King had founded the New Mexico Children's Foundation and my wife was its executive director. Bruce and George both were annoved with the number of bills introduced in the Legislature. King told of introducing bills during the second year he was a lawmaker to repeal bills he had introduced the first year.

Ethanol requirements in gasoline are almost a complete disaster. Not quite, but close.

Michael Swickard

In My Opinion

Let us count the ways ethanol is good: there is only one. If no conventional fuel is available during a crisis, such as a war in the Middle East, we are glad to have ethanol. Is there anything else good about ethanol? No, the harm is profound.

To be sure, gasoline is better, cheaper, less polluting, non-corrosive and ultimately less risky. Ethanol is so very corrosive that it cannot be transported by pipeline; rather, it must be shipped in stainless steel tanks either on the railroad or by truck.

for the consumer. Ethanol is so corrosive that people with older vehicles will see the destruction of gaskets, steel tanks and rubber fittings.

Car companies like ethanol because it guarantees the public will have to discard their vehicles sooner than otherwise. The car companies get to sell more cars. And the farmers of Iowa get more money for their crops with the demand for their corn being both food and fuel.

The sad fact is, in the last few decades, drilling for oil has been opposed by so many political groups that our country is not energy has the energy reserves to be a net exporter of fuel but for political reasons, we are not. We would not be talking ethanol, wind and solar if our policies for energy development were to insure our country not be beholden to our enemies, both avowed and possible.

During the past century, the agricultural lobby in Washington, D.C., has wielded considerable influence. Ethanol is an extension of agricultural policy and is tied lately to the presidential elections, since Iowa, producer of most ethanol, is the first presidential election site.

The harm of ethanol is not just to our pocketbooks and our vehicles - the use of food to make fuel when our nation has abundant energy resources causes food only corn products – wheat and rice prices increase as consumers react to corn prices, so all three food prices increase. And, since beef, chicken and pork use these same grains, the price of meat increases dramatically.

In our country, this is hard for people who live on subsistence calories. But the real damage of ethanol is that it injures fragile populations throughout the world. This has been seen with the price of corn tortillas in Mexico and food in the Middle East. Increases in food price cause fragile citizens to be

From the moment students enter the doors of Doña Ana Community College, they become the focus of faculty, staff and administration, who not only help them master the subject matter related to their fields of study, but also help them learn life lessons and gain leadership skills through participation in the student clubs and organizations that college personnel sponsor.

Mario Correa, president of the Associated Students of Doña Ana Community College (ASDACC), said his rewarding experiences at DACC and student leadership opportunities have encouraged him to give back to the community.

"We have such a wonderful support system here. Students get a good education, and we have some great teachers," Correa said. "Student leaders like myself are so grateful for the support, and we want to give back by being good role models and good citizens of our community."

Steinborn worthy of support

Every vote is a serious matter and it's not often we get to meet someone who inspires our confidence and who will represent New Mexico in a fair, just and proper manner. There are, however, fine upstanding citizens who are worthy of our time, effort, contributions and energy in supporting them with our votes. One such individual with a proven record of accomplishments is Jeff Steinborn.

In a short period of time in the New Mexico House of Representatives, Steinborn initiated and implemented important legislation that benefited all New Mexicans.

Steinborn's deeds as a state representative are too numerous to mention in detail, but he was instrumental in passing legislation including the veteran's tax exemption, protections for our water quality, increased consumer protections, campaign contribution limits, state land office reform, web-casting of legislative meetings, the first law in the nation overseeing sonogram professionals who perform breast cancer screening and other vital tests, and the expansion of efforts to recruit and retain quality health care providers in New Mexico.

In addition, Steinborn is the recipient of the prestigious "Top Supporter of Public Education" award, which says much about his support for a strong education system for all our young citizens.

Meningitis vaccine important

Meningitis is a rare bacterial infection that can cause permanent disablement, brain damage, limb loss, hearing loss and death. Meningitis is spread through air droplets and by direct contact with infected persons, and occurs mostly during late winter and early spring.

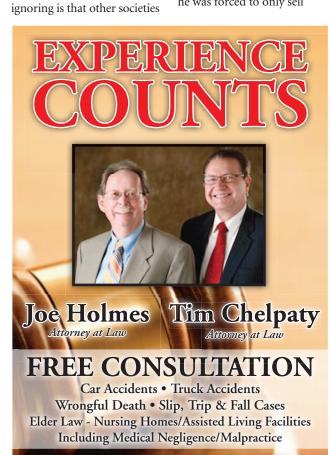

The bacterium enters the nose and throat where it can penetrate the mucosal lining and enter the blood stream. The infection is especially significant among college students, especially for incoming freshmen. Studies show that the majority of infections among adolescents are vaccine preventable.

The highest rates of meningitis are reported in those ages 16 to 21 years. Many universities are now requiring students show proof of the meningitis vaccine before admittance is granted. The vaccine protects against four of the five strains of bacteria that cause meningitis.

As with all vaccines, minor reactions to the vaccine include pain/redness at injection site and a mild fever lasting a couple of days.

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

A Mariposa Saturday night

It was a late Saturday afternoon when Donelle glanced out the front window and saw a cow, one lone cow, standing on her front porch.

She did not look docile or friendly like some cows do. This one had a wild look in her eye. Donelle was pretty sure the cow came from a bunch that Mr. Mark had unloaded into a nearby pasture near the Mariposa County fairgrounds several weeks ago. He'd come back to gather them this particular Saturday.

The whole bunch was spooky and skitterish as a bag of yellow hornets in a paint shaker. Since he couldn't ride within 50 yards of one, he had brought along his prized Catahoula hounds. Within 25 minutes, he and the dogs had managed to get one cow into the trap, almost. She was the one that ended up on Donelle's front porch.

Mark was careful as he approached the lone cow. He was holding his dogs back since an all out frontal attack might put the cow through the $2,500 plate glass picture window in Donelle's living room.

This was not the first time they had issues about loose cows. It was obvious the cow was on the fight. She would snort and bawl at her reflection in the window. Anytime, anytime, he thought, she was going to charge.

Mark made a decision. He jumped up on the porch and clung to a corner pole. She pawed the front porch boards. The three hounds came up the other side snarling and nipping. It was an easy choice for the cow, she charged Mark. He swung like he was decorating a May pole as she flew by, smashing the decoratively carved porch railing into smithereens. The cow whirled to run him over but was hit by a squadron of Catahoulas.

Inside, Donelle was watching her house and yard the same way the Cajuns watched Hurricane Katrina coming. She raced to the back door just as the cow jumped up on the back porch 6 feet off the ground. Pretty good jump for a cow! She heard Mark whistle his dogs off. They slunk back, salivating.

Donelle started closing windows in the kitchen to keep the cow from having any thoughts of making a house call. The cow stood her ground. She was still worked up. Donelle let one or two minutes go by, then decided she might just be able to shoo the cow off the porch. Carefully, she pushed the screen door open just as Mark yelled, "Don't open the door!"

The cow charged through the screen door scattering hinges, springs and boards and mowed down Donelle. Into the living room the mad bovine coursed at full gallop with a screen door picture frame flapping around her neck.

She hit the hardwood floor, recently waxed, and slid like a hockey player going in for a body slam. The sofa flipped over, the cow stuck a foot through the bottom as springs flew sideways and stuffing filled the air like a bomb in a chicken house.

In the interim, Mark raced back around the house to the front porch. He looked through the window glass in the door. He could see the cow plowing through the living room like a bulldozer. She saw light at the end of the tunnel. She jumped right through it, glass breaking, boards tearing, doorknobs flying, and Mark, who was catapulted backwards, hit the wounded rail, flipped and landed on his feet just in time for the cow to run over him.

Too late.

What can I say? No one could make up a cowboy story that good.

Letters to the Editor

Laughing stock

On the anniversary of the terrorist attack on the World Trade Center Sept. 11, 2001, in which 3000 Americans were killed, Muslim Islamists attacked our consulate in Libya, murdered our ambassador and three other Americans and totally destroyed U.S. property. Simultaneously, 20 other embassies in other Muslim countries were attacked.

The response to these atrocities by President Obama, Hillary Clinton, Susan Rice, Jay Carney and others in positions of responsibility in the Obama Administration – as well as many in the alphabet liberal media - were quick to declare that a video produced by a cowering little man in Hollywood was the spark that lit the fuse to these attacks.

A highly placed official in the State Department, in charge of world wide security of U.S. consulates and embassies testified before Congress that she was in contact with our personnel in Libya while the attack was underway by a force of at least 100 well-armed men, and that no public demonstration had taken place prior to the attack.

Even this intelligence from Charlene Lamb, the official of the State Department, and with reinforcement from reports by the FBI and CIA, Obama continued to insist that the attacks were the result of a video. One day after the attack in Libya, and after the bodies were returned to the U.S., the president callously boarded a plane to Las Vegas and other destinations to complete fundraisers for his campaign. Further, he and Hillary Clinton spent $70,000 U.S. dollars to buy a TV advertisement in Pakistan in which they apologized to the Mus-lim-Islamic world for the video – ultimately proved to have absolutely nothing to do with the atrocities committed by the terrorists.

This fiasco by this administration, Barack H. Obama, president of the United Stales has further eroded our world influence, respect, and has made our country a laughingstock of the world.

Governor says state still not competitive

Martinez: Taxes barrier to growth

By Isabel A. Rodriguez

It's been almost two years since Gov. Susana Martinez took office and made the transition from district attorney of Doña Ana County.

In a Governor's Update Luncheon hosted by the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce Thursday, Oct. 18, Martinez told attendees her focus during the second half of her term would be on education and bringing jobs to New Mexico.

"This is a great opportunity to discuss with you the steps we still need to take ... to elevate New Mexico's position in the region," she said.

Since taking office, Martinez said she eliminated the projected $450 million deficit in the state budget, and the state saw a 900-job gain over the course of a year.

"Within one year, New Mexico jumped from 38th to third place in the country in terms of overall export growth," she said.

Still, she added, there is work to be done. For example, while Texas is ranked the best place to do business,

New Mexico stands at 32. "Why does this matter? National unemployment is hovering at 8 percent," Martinez said. "The federal government is slashing budgets, and that has a disproportionate impact on New Mexico.

"More than ever, New Mexico needs to be able to compete – for jobs, for investments and for talent. We need to prioritize and sharpen our focus. Creation of jobs is our No. 1 priority."

Martinez offered the example of Arizona, which has reduced corporate income tax to attract jobs creators in an attempt to compete with Texas.

New Mexico's own corporate income tax is the highest in the region, and one of the highest in the nation.

"I, for one, am sick and tired of hearing high taxes are justified as the cost of what one must pay for the privilege of doing business in our state," she said, suggesting New Mexico follow the example of its western neighbor. "We need to strip away the multiple layers of tax we apply to goods and services in our state.

"If we are to attract outside companies to invest in New Mexico, would like to see us reform the way we calculate the taxes owed by companies that operate inside New Mexico, but also conduct business in other areas of the country. Right now, when a multi-state company either hires an employee in New Mexico, or invests in its New Mexico operations, they are hit by tax increase, which is triggered by added growth to New Mexico operations. Instead, what I propose is to give companies the option to choose between the current system and a new, simpler method of calculating taxes ... based only on the amount of their sales in the state."

To ensure infrastructure projects are properly implemented, Martinez proposed a new approach to capital outlay, including "vetting the projects, prioritizing and finishing the projects," based on their regional and statewide importance.

Martinez spent the second half of her speech addressing education.

"We all know a skilled workforce is key to attracting and retaining jobs, and preparing that workforce begins in the classroom," she said.

Gov. Susana Martinez greets Manuel Pacheco, New Mexico State University's interim president, at the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce Governor's Update Luncheon Thursday, Oct. 18. Besides reforming the state's tax structure, Martinez said schools need to do a better job of preparing the future workforce for more businesses to locate in New Mexico.

Speaking on education reform, Martinez said she hopes to close the achievement gap between the highest and lowest performing students.

She boasted about the success of Anthony Elementary School – an "A" school – and credited the accomplishments to the principal and teachers.

"A critical component of reform to ensure students are prepared for the future is that we don't continue to pass them along if they can't read," she said. "Children learn to read from kindergarten to third grade. In fourth grade, they read to learn for the rest of their lives."

Martinez said she has proposed investing $30 million of the budget for education to ensure students are at the appropriate reading level by providing training to teachers and reading coaches to schools.

The governor described her frustration meeting legislators who oppose her education reform, especially with one who called teaching children to read "an unfunded mandate."

Identifying schools that need improvement is not to embarrass educators, she said, but to push resources in their direction.

"We need to retain the best and brightest teachers ... and we need a method to evaluate teacher effectiveness," Martinez said.

"I promise to put people above the politics. There are politicians, and there are leaders. I fight really hard to stay out of the politician side." After Martinez's address, Bill Allen, president/CEO of the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce, said the chamber contributes to improving Las Cruces through its Las Cruces Day in Santa Fe.

"The chamber has the opportunity to be a powerful entity," he said. "We don't just go up to Santa Fe with one person. We bring up over 200 of our local business people. It's an outstanding display of support of everybody down here ... to do exactly what she recommends.

"We're planning a 2013 version of that, and looking forward to another successful event."

To ensure the success of Spaceport America, Allen said he'd like the state to get on a level playing field with other states in terms of liability protections.

Multiple woes afflict first manned Apollo mission Astronauts annoyed by human frailties

By Michael Shinabery New Mexico Museum of Space History

For the Apollo 7 crew, addressing their basic needs was, at times, "annoying," the website nata.gov documented.

The first manned Apollo flight splashed down on Oct. 22, 1968, after a mission that tested a new command service module incorporating a "docking probe and tunnel that would connect it to the lunar module," said "Men From Earth" (Bantam/1989).

Commander Wally Schirra, Lunar Module Pilot Walt Cunningham, and Command Module Pilot Donn Eisele lifted off on a "hot" Oct. 11, nasa.gov said. For the first time, men rode atop a Saturn IB booster filled with "a lot of liquid hydrogen."

Schirra was a well-seasoned commander. He was a test pilot when he learned NASA was recruiting. At first, he said in "We Seven" (Simon and Schuster/1962), he wasn't "keenly interested." At the initial briefing he informed a NASA representative "quite frankly that I was not about to chuck a 13-year career and a fairly promising career in the Navy on the basis of one short briefing." He made his first spaceflight in 1962 aboard a Mercury capsule as the "fifth American to fly into space," said wallyschirra.com. He was the first to exceed three orbits when NASA gave thumbs up for an additional three. He flew to a record 176 miles in altitude and reached a record 17,557 mph.

On Dec. 15, 1965, Schirra and Tom Stafford launched in Gemini VI. Eleven days earlier, Frank Borman and Jim Lovell had lifted off in Gemini VII. The two capsules met up and, nasa.gov said, "maneuvered, as Schirra later (described it) ... 'window to window and nose to nose' close enough to wave to each other through the portholes."

Subsequently, Gemini VI was the first live televised splashdown.

Apollo 7 made Schirra "the only astronaut to fly in all of America's first three space programs," wallyschirra.com said.

Cunningham, who joined the Navy in 1951, and Eisele, a Naval Academy graduate who chose the Air Force, joined NASA in 1963. For both, Apollo 7 was their only mission. The woes the three endured began during "an ill-conceived hunting trip in the Florida marshes," said the Florida marshes," said "Men From Earth." What they caught were colds. According to nasa.gov, the illnesses showed up "about 15 hours into the flight. ... Several days before the mission ended they began to worry about wearing their suit helmets during re-entry, which would prevent them from blowing their noses. The buildup of pressure might burst their eardrums. Deke Slayton in mission control tried to persuade them to wear the helmets anyway, but Schirra was adamant. They each took a decongestant pill about an hour before re-entry and made it through the acceleration zone without any problems with their ears."

There were other complications. "Three of the five spacecraft windows fogged because of improperly cured sealant compound," nasa. gov said. "Visibility from the spacecraft windows ranged from poor to good during the mission. Shortly after the launch escape tower jettisoned, two of the windows had soot deposits and two others had water condensation."

Their basic needs were a struggle as well. Nasa.gov said "the waste management system for collecting solid body wastes was adequate, though annoying. The defecation bags containing a germicide to prevent bacteria and gas formation were easily sealed and stored in empty food containers in the equipment bay. But the bags certainly were not convenient and there were usually unpleasant odors. Each time they were used, it took crew members 45 to 60 minutes, causing them to wait for a time when there was no work to do and postponing it as long as possible. The crew had a total of only 12 defecations during a period of nearly 11 days. Urination was much easier, as the crew did not have to remove clothing.'

To the public, the crew endeared themselves during the first live television broadcasts from space, billed as "The Walt, Wally, and Donn Show." They won an Emmy. "Genesis: The Story of Apollo 8" (Four Walls Eight Windows/1998), documented how the astronauts performed three times using "the world's first handheld black-andwhite video camera." Schirra welcomed his audience to "The one and only original Apollo road show starring the greatest acrobats of outer space!" Behind him, Cunningham and Eisele "did somersaults and pinwheels." Worldwide, millions watched, seeing for the first time men float in space. The "TV coverage was a competence, their humor, and the Apollo spacecraft's sophistication went a long way to raise the national mood in an extremely troubled year."

"Although these early pictures were crude," nasa.gov said, "it was informative for the public to see astronauts floating weightlessly in their roomy spacecraft, snatching floating objects and eating the first hot food consumed in space. Like the television pictures, the food improved on later missions." Post mission, the crew recalled their experience in a magazine article.

"The space age is very hungry," Schirra wrote. "I have been completely devoured by this business."

Eisele discussed photographing the 200-mile wide Hurricane Gladys. "There was nothing but white as far as you could see," he said. "I grabbed the camera and hopped from one window to another, just using my feet and leg muscles to arc my body." Cunningham described dealing with his cold: "We had a stowage compartment with a little hole that you could stuff things into, and by 6 p.m. on the first day we realized this would make a good locker for our used handkerchief tissues. Over the next 10 days we used up the equivalent of about nine big boxes."

Little Sister Rug on display

One of the largest Navajo rugs in the world is currently on display at Fort Sumner State Monument through Sunday, Oct. 28. The Little Sister Rug measures 26 by 28 feet. Twelve weavers, members of the Chilchinbeto Chapter of the Navajo, worked simultaneously and in two groups - one on each side, their work meeting in the middle. The project began in 1981 and was completed a year later. The rug appears to be a compilation of smaller rugs, all with distinct borders and designs, yet the multiple panes each tell a story and are one continuous weave. The rug is displayed at special events on the reservation and in nearby areas. Its journey to the Bosque Redondo Memorial will be the first time it has traveled so far to be on exhibit, and never for such a long period of time at one location.

Members of the Chilchinbeto Chapter had to first determine whether it would be appropriate to allow the rug to be displayed at Bosque Redondo, a site of suffering as a result of the forced march and imprisonment of Navajo and Mescalero Apache referred to as The Long Walk. Their decision to permit the exhibition of the rug is a major step toward healing the wounds endured between 1864 and 1868.

OASIS club presents film series

The New Mexico State University OASIS Club - the Organization of Aggie Students Inspiring Sustainability – has announced the lineup for this year's Fall Sustainability Film Series. The documentary films focus on environmental and social issues: the small farm movement, climate change, happiness and the economics of localization, cancer and the environment and farming in Cuba.

All films are free and open to the public. Each showing will include a faculty expert as a guest speaker and to lead the discussion about the films and their subject matter.

On Tuesday, Oct. 30, "Living Downstream" (2010) will be shown. The film is based on a book by ecologist and cancer survivor Sandra Steingraber, who works to highlight links between cancer and the environment. Aaron Rowland, an assistant professor in the Department of Chemistry and Biochemistry, will speak.

The final film, on Thursday, Nov. 8, is "The Power of Com-munity: How Cuba Survived Peak Oil" (2006). The film examines the transition in Cuban farming that followed the collapse of the Soviet Union and the resultant shortages of oil and imported food. Alison Newby, assistant professor in the Department of Sociology, will provide commentary.

All films will screen at 6 p.m. in the Senate Gallery, Room 302, of the NMSU Corbett Center Student Union.

The OASIS Club was founded in January 2008, and is probably best known for hosting yearly Earth Day festivals. The fifth such event was held this past April 22 at Young Park. The tradition is slated to continue.

"I will do whatever the secretary of state deems I should do because I want to get past this," Garcia said. "I don't have time to deal with this – I'm campaigning."

Garcia said the publicity around what she calls a campaign tactic has been painful when young relatives have questioned her about it. Garcia said she believed the accusation is supported by Gov. Susana Martinez's super PAC (Political Action Committee), which she said is focused on unseating the Legislature's Democratic Party leadership.

The original complaint from Cotter's campaign treasurer Bryan Stegall said Garcia had reported using nearly $5,500 in campaign

According to Duran's finding, Garcia violated the law by making disbursements of more than $100 from campaign funds payable to "cash" rather than to an individual or entity.

"Contrary to Mr. Stegall's allegation that my campaign reports do not contain any information regarding the cash expenditures, my reports indicate the money was spent on expenses I incurred while attending interim legislative committee meetings throughout the state," Garcia wrote in her letter to Ken Ortiz, Duran's chief of staff.

Garcia said use of campaign funds for nonpolitical travel expenses are allowed by Section 1-19-29.1 NMSA 1978 in that they are "reasonably related to performing the duties of the office held, including mail, telephone and travel expenses to serve constituents."

Armed robbery and drive-by shootings

Las Cruces Crime Stoppers is offering a cash reward of up to $1,000 for information that helps investigators identify three young women suspected of committing an armed robbery at a fast-food restaurant.

Shortly after 8 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 21, police were dispatched to the Sonic Drive-In at 930 N. Valley Drive, where three young women, one of whom was armed with a knife, threatened a carhop and took an undisclosed amount of money. The three suspects fled and were last seen headed southeast toward Picacho Avenue.

The three suspects were all described as young Hispanic women in their late teens or early 20s. All three were said to be thin and were wearing heavy makeup.

The woman with the knife was described as around 5 feet 6 inches tall and spoke with a heavy Spanish accent. She was wearing a brown hoodie and gray sweatpants.

The second suspect was described as 5 feet 4 inches to 5 feet 6 inches tall, and was wearing a black hoodie and sweatpants. The victim was unable to describe the third woman who participated in the armed robbery.

Las Cruces Crime Stoppers also is offering a $1,000 reward for information that helps investigators identify the suspects who committed at least six drive-by shootings on the East Mesa, one of which seriously injured a dog.

Udall visits Oñate Senator advocates for P.E., improved athletic safety

U.S. Sen. Tom Udall visited with student athletes, coaches and staff at Oñate High School Thursday, Oct. 25, on the importance of physical education and sports safety.

Udall met with Las Cruces Public Schools' athletic program officials, as well as Timothy "Doc" Acklin, who is president of the New Mexico Athletic Trainers Association.

Udall has advocated for increased physical education programs. In 2011, he introduced the Promoting Health for Youth Skills in Classrooms and Life (PHYSICAL) Act to make physical education programs more accessible to students.

"Evidence shows – and Las Cruces students prove – that physical education improves student attendance, academic achievement and motivation to learn," Udall said. "With (childhood) obesity on the rise, we must get our children moving again. Our school officials, coaches, parents and students know how important exercise is and what the benefits of sports like volleyball and football are, and I'm excited to see their work in action."

Udall also met with student athletes who have suffered sports-related head injuries. Last year, Udall introduced the Children's Sports Athletic Equipment Safety Act to protect young athletes from the dangers of such injuries.

"This bipartisan legislation, which has been endorsed by the National Football League Players Association, would help ensure that new and reconditioned football helmets for high school and younger players meet safety standards that specifically address concussion risk and the needs of young athletes," Udall said.

NM STATE SENATE DISTRICT 31 · VOTE NOV. 6

Joseph has taken action to reform government:

In 2007, Joseph passed the Fraud Against Taxpayers Act, to recover hundreds of millions of our tax dollars misappropriated by Wall Street insiders.

Also in 2007, Joseph amended the Government Conduct Act to restrict gifts for elected officials, including state judges, and penalize those who use their office for financial self-interest.

In 2009, Joseph put a stop to legislators spending millions of state taxpayer dollars behind locked doors. Before that, six legislators worked in secret in Santa Fe to finalize New Mexico's state budget.

In 2010, Joseph passed the Whistleblower Protection Act to assure wrongdoing in state government is exposed without the threat of retaliation. After learning that low-income housing funds were misappropriated, Joseph conducted legislative hearings that uncovered millions of dollars going to line the pockets of Santa Fe insiders.

Your vote matters. Take action and re-elect Joseph Cervantes to help him continue reforming New Mexico state government.

New Mexico State Fair & Rodeo, Sarabia said this Civil War event was not about politics at all.

"For us, it's all about the history, so we don't do this again," Sarabia said.

The American Civil War was the bloodiest of all the wars fought by the United States, said Tom Holman of Rio Rancho, who played a Confederate soldier. Some experts believe that more than 700,000 lives were lost in the war between the North and the South.

Recently, it was the 150th anniversary of one of the war's bloodiest days. On Sept. 17, 1862, there were 23,000 casualties at the Battle of Antietam in Maryland.

"It was the 150th anniversary of Antietam, just as it was the 150th anniversary of the battle here," Holman said. "There will be 150th anniversaries for four years, because that's how long it lasted,"

Holman said he will travel to many of the battles for 150th anniversary commemorations and battle recreations, such as Gettysburg, Pa. For three days in early July 1863, between 46,000 and 51,000 soldiers in the pivotal conflict of the Civil War.

"No one understands what it was like," Holman said. The armies were huge – some 50 to 60 miles long as they marched, he said. Such large columns would be supported by 2,500 supply wagons, he said. Recreating the battles and the camps – such as the four-day Mesilla event – brings a better understanding of what happened, Holman said. Because Mesilla has held onto to its agricultural roots, the battle recreated was probably close to how it really played out, he said.

The battle was a recreation of what has been referred as the First Battle of Mesilla, fought on July 25, 1861. It was an engagement between Confederate and Union forces and the confederate victory led to the establishment of a Confederate Arizona Territory, consisting of the southern portion of the New Mexico Territory. The Second Battle of Mesilla was a skirmish in the desert near Mesilla on June 1, 1862, between Arizona rebels and New Mexican militia. The Union won the second battle and prompted the rebels to withdraw from Mesilla.

Lee Monks of Las Cruces, who had watched the morning battle, said he was impressed about how seriously the re-enactors took making the event as historically accurate as possible.

Organizers of the commemoration emphasized the teaching of history. On Friday, Oct. 19, an estimated 800 school children visited the camp. Later that evening, a military ball was held on the plaza and featured speakers with guest lecturers, a candlelight procession and a concert featuring Civil War-era music.

Friends Amelia Lukens and Ken Dusenberry in authentic mid-1800s attire attended the Civil War ball on the Mesilla Plaza Friday, Oct. 19.

the community. This building is facing the community," said College of Arts and Sciences Dean Christa Slaton. "That was intentional. We wanted the building to open up to the community."

"There is so much glass that the public will be able to see in and look at the art in process," said Theatre Arts Academic Department Head Tim Smith.

Before construction began on phase one of the center, it was discovered that the project was $5 million over budget and cuts were going to have to be made.

"One way to get it back within the budget was to take out the balconies. I said, 'No way," Slaton said.

Slaton assembled a team of faculty members, and together looked over every square inch of the building's plan to make cuts.

"The architect really tried to use products from the state, like pecan doors, but those had to be cut," she said, adding that other decorative items, such as sandstone walls, and theater equipment had to be cut. "We can get that equipment later, but we can't get balconies later."

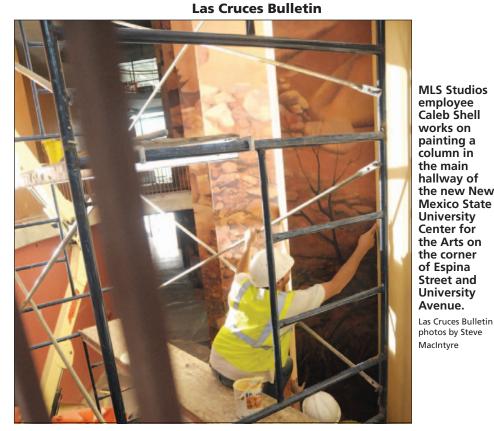

With the project back within budget, a groundbreaking ceremony was held Oct. 8, 2010. Since that time, the construction has been underway, with weekly inspections by the facilities and services department reported to the President's Office.

"There are three parties involved – the owner, contractor and architect," Vaught said. "There is a lot to work with. There have been problems along the way and we solve them as we go."

Tours have been held throughout the process to give an inside look to faculty and staff, as well as members of the media.

Mark Gladden, director of development for the College of Arts and Sciences, said he has toured the Center for the Arts about six times, and is excited to see how it is taking shape.

"It's gone from looking like a skeleton of a building to the beginnings of a beautiful home for future artists," Gladden said. picturesque landscape of the Organ Mountains and different layers of the desert, she said.

The tour Wednesday consisted of about 14 interested spectators, who entered the Center for the Arts through its south entrance, which will be the campus entrance used by students and staff. Local travertine from a quarry in New Mexico covers the support beams, as well as the façade and areas throughout the interior.

Vaught said there are three public entrances – two at the north and one at the southwest of the building off Espina, which will be used as a support entry – and parking will be at Skeen Hall.

Concrete floors lead to the Arroyo Lobby. Artist Meg Saligman created a mural that lines the hall, extending the entire height of the three-story building. When standing in the lobby, the protruding walls line up to reveal a orchestra level, allowing for the actors to interact more with the audience, Slaton said. "From any seat in here, you can see the actors," said Vaught, adding that every seat is the best seat in the house.

ing red and blue seats wrap around the stage at

For Jim Billings, scenic and lighting designer for the Department of Theatre Arts, one of the performance hall's most exciting features is its advanced stage lighting system.

Composed of 36 LED pars – canned lighting – that feature seven different pure colors, the lights of the system give off more light than a standard 1,000-watt fixture, while at its peak using only 96 watts.

"It's the best stage lighting inventory in the Southwest," Billings said.

The Center for the Arts is being built to LEED silver standards, as required by the state. However, Vaught said it is her goal to meet gold certification.

Some of the LEED items include solar collectors and cooling system, which makes ice at night that will then be used to cool the building during the day.

"Even though this building is much, much bigger, we'll end up using half the power and energy we're using in the current building," Smith said.

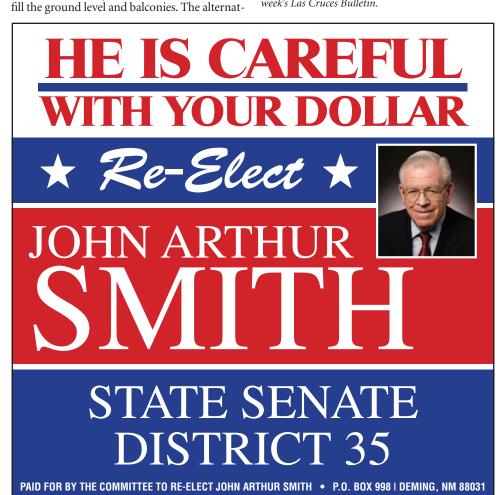

Vaught said they hope to receive the certificate of occupancy by Dec. 10, so faculty members – which include those from the art history department – can move into the center Jan. 7, 2013. The first show at the Center for the Arts will be "Our Town," opening Feb. 22, 2013, and running for eight performances.

When the Center for the Arts opens, Hershel Zohn Theatre will be taken over by the College of Business and turned into the Pete Domenici Institution on Public Policy, Slaton said.

Slaton said phase two of the Center for the Arts, which includes the visual arts, is dependent on General Obligation Bond C. Currently, the university is looking at two options with phase two: remodeling the existing art building, D.W. Williams Hall, or building a new structure at an appropriate location near phase one.

phase one. "The plan is to congregate the arts and bring them closer together," Slaton said.

Busy week for Aggie volleyball

By Jeff Neptune For the Las Cruces Bulletin

The New Mexico State volleyball team swept I-25 rival New Mexico on Tuesday, Oct. 23, after going one and one on the road over the previous weekend.

After falling 3-1 to the University of Texas Arlington, Thursday, Oct. 18, the Aggies bounced back to defeat Louisiana Tech in four sets Saturday, Oct. 20.

Against UT-Arlington, the Aggies had more kills than the Mavericks, posting 54, while the opponent only posted 48. The Aggies also out hit the Mavericks .140 to .086, but it wasn't enough to come away with the victory.

"Defense and blocking was our biggest struggle against UT-Arlington," coach Mike Jordan said. "Our offense looked pretty good but we just couldn't stop them."

Sophomore Meredith Hays posted her ninth double-double of the year while Junior Desiree Scott finished the night with a total of 12 kills and eight blocks. Junior Lauren Loerch also added a total of 12 kills on the night.

After the disappointing upset in Arlington, the Aggies bounced back strong Against LA Tech, posting a .328 hitting percentage in Ruston, La. Scott was very efficient on offense posting a .684 hitting percentage while tallying 13 kills and nine block assists.

Hays tallied a match high 16 kills and also added eight digs. Junior Ciara Brown split setting duties with freshman Taylor Livoti. Brown posted 25 assists with nine digs while Livoti posted 19 assists and three digs.

"It was good to see us bounce back strong after the upset," Jordan said. "Our blocking and defense certainly was back against LA Tech."

Traveling to the Pit in Albuquerque, the Aggies finished up this match in total domination. Sweeping the Lobos, the Aggies posted a .276 hitting percentage while holding their opponent to a .040 hitting percentage.

Hays led the offense, posting a matchhigh 16 kills and .438 hitting percentage. Scott posted a .429 hitting percentage and added five kills on seven swings. Loerch added eight kills on the night while Brown posted 18 assists. Livoti tallied 13 assists while having a team-high eight digs on the evening.

"We played all around great volleyball against the Lobos," Jordan said. "I am very pleased with our performance but we still have improvements to make.

The Aggies travel to Denver next to take on the Pioneers at 7 p.m. (MT) Saturday, Oct. 27. The Pioneers sit at 6-5 in WAC play and 12-9 overall as the Aggies are 9-2 all-time against Denver.

The Aggies return home to host Seattle at 7 p.m. Monday, Oct. 29, and San Jose State at 7 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 1, in the Pan American Center.

Aggies shoot for upset of No. 24 La Tech Bulldogs

By Jim Hilley

Pistol Pete better have his six-guns ready, because New Mexico State University football coach DeWayne Walker says his team is facing 'murderers' row.

You start feeling a little better about improving in certain areas then you hit what I call murderers' row,' when you play some of the better teams in the country," Walker said.

Walker could be talking about Ohio (7-0), Texas San-Antonio (5-2) or Utah State (6-2), but if they are murderers, then the Aggies' opponent for homecoming at 6 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 27, is a cold-blooded serial killer.

Coming in to Aggie Memorial Stadium, Louisiana Tech is ranked No. 24 in the AP College Football Poll and is putting up an impressive 56 points a game. At 6-1, the Bulldogs only loss was a 59-57 shootout loss at No. 21 Texas A&M on Oct. 13.

The Texas Aggies drew first on La Tech, jumping out to a 27-0 point lead before the Bulldogs unholstered and blasted the Texas A&M defense full of holes, outscoring the Aggies by 35 the rest of the way.

"It seems if you get too far ahead of them they get a little ticked off at you," Walker said.

Yes coach, Anton Chirgurh, the villain in the movie "No Country for Old Men," was a little ticked off, too.

Unfortunately for New Mexico State, the Aggies offense has been shooting blanks lately, or at least it seems like their powder is wet.

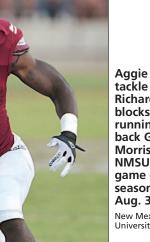

Against Utah State, the Aggies moved the ball well, but came away with only 7 points. After the Utags scored on their first possession, NMSU marched down the field and appeared to score a touchdown on a 33-yard pass from quarterback Andrew Manley to receiver Austin Franklin, but it was called back for an illegal block. NMSU ended up punting from the 41-yard line.

"If we scored that first touchdown and didn't get it called back, the game could have gone a different way," Manley said. "The defense could have got a little more excited, and different things could have happened.

"We just have to score, that is what it's been every week. We put up 400 yards against Idaho but we didn't score that many points and this week, same thing, we just have to score."

At the trigger for the Bulldogs, who are second in the nation in total offense, is senior quarterback Cameron Colby, who is fifth in the nation in passing yards per game, sixth in pass completions. The leading rusher for La Tech is Kenneth Dixon, who is leading the WAC with 109.6 yards a game rushing and 13.7 points per game scoring. The Bulldog's top receiver is Quinton Patton, who leads the WAC in receptions with 8.43 per game, but trails the Aggies' Austin Franklin receiving yards per game 118-115.1.

"They are good," said NMSU safety Davis Cazares. "They are a really good offense, they are able to move the ball really well. It's not a very complicated offense, but it is a well-oiled machine."

Seven seniors say 'so long' after playing a big part in helping launch Aggie program By Jeff Neptune

The New Mexico State soccer team recognized its seven seniors at home Sunday, Oct. 21, against the University of Texas-San Antonio, when they were defeated in a tough 2-1 loss. Six of the seven seniors for the Aggies started their college careers here as freshman.

The seven seniors recognized were Courtney Irwin, Megan Hendler, Vanessa Thomas, Elise Nordin, Yolanda Mcmillion, Lauren Cope and Cassie De Leon.

"These girls mean a lot to me and this program," NMSU coach Blair Quinn said.

"Although I've only got to coach them for two years, it will still be hard to see these girls go."

All seven of these senior girls started and played a good portion of every game this year for the Aggies.

"These seniors were dedicated to the game and this team and were all great leaders," Quinn said. "I appreciate each and every one for not only giving everything they've got but also helping me get better as their coach.

The Aggies look to end their season strong as they still have two games left in the regular season. They travel to Seattle to play at 4 p.m. Friday, Oct. 26, and to Moscow, Idaho, where they play at 2 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 28.

Move over Emily Post and Miss Manners Doctor Golf weighs in on golf etiquette players are putting on.

Charlie Blanchard Golf Doctor

A few years ago, during the third round of the WGC-CA Championship at Doral in Miami, Sergio Garcia was caught on camera spitting into the hole after bitterly missing a short putt.

All PGA Commissioner Tim Finchem had to say about it was, "These are distractions (and) ... I'll be having a conversation with him."

Tiger Woods (now world No. 2) has been recorded on world broadcast microphones blurting vile expletives that are not fit for children.

For golfers and golf fans, the incidents bring up the issue of acceptable behavior on the golf course. Basically, we're talking "etiquette." This is a nice word for "stop doing stupid things that annoy others and make you look like a fool."

Unlike sports such as tailgating and mud wrestling, golf is thought to be a genteel game that is rich with tradition and has quite a number of practices falling under the umbrella of sporting manners.

Arnold Palmer had this to say: "From the time I first stepped on a golf course, my father made sure that I observed golf etiquette. What that meant to me then, and what it means now, is being considerate of other golfers, taking care of the course, playing quickly and controlling my temper."

Arnold, Gary, Jack and Tom have always been the poster children for golf manners. For some who are new to the game, and some who simply have not had anyone explain golfing things to them, golfers are expected to adhere to a rather universal set of customs and behaviors. In other words, they practice good golf etiquette. Golf is a game that relies on the integrity of each player to show respect for other players, to not only abide by the rules of the game, but to play fair and be considerate to fellow golfers.

According to the official USGA dictum, "All players should conduct themselves in a disciplined manner, demonstrating courtesy and sportsmanship at all times, irrespective of how competitive they may be. This is the spirit of the game."

Here is a review of the general application of golf etiquette that applies to young and old alike.

- With the help of USGA guidelines, let's look at the basics with some "dos" and "don'ts." Be on time and ready to play so that you
- don't inconvenience others.

Dress neatly and appropriately in normal golf attire and in accordance with local dress codes

- Choose the teeing ground that best matches your ability.
- Play "ready golf" whenever possible, meaning that the player who is ready to hit
- should step up and play without delay. Stay silent and still while other players are hitting their shots or putting.
- Wherever you stand, strive to be as unobtrusive as possible when others are hitting.
- Wait until the group up ahead is out of range of your best shot. Hitting into the group ahead is the most common source of antagonism on the golf course.
- Walk or ride briskly between shots, and be ready to play when it's your turn.
- Respect the golf course by replacing or sanding divots and raking bunkers. It's a courtesy to leave the course in better condition than you found it.
- Carry a small ball mark repair tool with you and be sure to repair your ball mark (called a "pitch" mark) on the putting green.

Avoid stepping on the line that other

- Replace the flagstick into the hole with great care so as not to disturb the cup edge.
- Brush up on your rules of golf so that rules and decisions and procedures go smoothly and quickly.
- If there is a chance of an out-of-bounds shot or a lost ball, hit a provisional ball.
- Throwing and slamming of clubs, temper tantrums and rude, obnoxious behavior are never acceptable.
- Keep your motorized golf cart well out of the way and behind other players; drive safely, away from greens, while minimizing damage to the turf.
- Treat others with respect. Behavior should always be as a gentleman or a lady.

Other suggestions will not necessarily be found in USGA or PGA instructions, but they are certainly worth heeding. First, never stand directly behind a player hitting on the tee, or any other place on the golf course for that matter. It's simply inconsiderate, and on tour, it may be grounds for a penalty

On the putting green, be conscious of the line of the putts for other players and walk carefully to avoid stepping on the "through lines," which are those lines directly on the other side of the hole following the through direction of the putt. Through-lines are roughly 0 to 8 feet as an extension of the player's putt beyond the hole.

Watching the through-lines was impressed on me when I worked my one and only tournament as a tour caddie. Caddying is hard work Regarding pace of play, the main thing I notice on busy days at local golf courses is that slow groups seem oblivious to others trying to keep the pace reasonable. If everyone uses their heads and is considerate of others, pace will not be an issue.

Remember, if you take slightly more than 100 shots per round (most common), and take an extra 30 seconds for each one, you will add nearly an hour to the length of your golf game. That's atrocious. Try to walk briskly, carry a couple of clubs that you might need and hit within ten seconds of addressing the ball. C'mon man!

Of course, we haven't covered everything on this subject, since there are lots of other situations where you should be informed of prevailing protocol and customs. Examples are: playing "business golf" with a client; being invited to an exclusive club; playing in "memberguest" events; playing in foreign countries; proper decorum as a spectator at tournaments; corporate outings and scrambles.

For a good read, and as a handy reference, get a copy of "Golf Etiquette" by Pruett and Apfelbaum, available at www.amazon.com. For networking advice and avoiding those deal-killing faux pas on the golf course, consider "On Course for Business" by Suzanne Woo, and also "Business Golf" by Pat Summerall. As Mr. Palmer said, "True golfers help protect the game by observing golf etiquette.

I disagree with the idea that a breach of golf etiquette should be met with severe punishment (such as insurance cancellation) in a manner similar to not telling your doctor about "all your medical conditions."

I do agree with those who say bullies and miscreants with regard to expected gentlemanly and sportsmanlike behavior should be roundly criticized and even have their names published in golf clubs' "do-notplay-with" lists.

There is kind of an adage in public speaking that goes "tell 'em what you're going to tell 'em, tell 'em, then tell 'em what you told 'em."

OK, here's what I told you. Watch your step, repair divots, always rake bunkers, remain safety conscious, play "ready" golf, don't dawdle, follow the rules, be courteous.

On-track success

Cross country team readies for championship; hoops inspiration to be right now."

The fall "Championship Season" begins this weekend.

The New Mexico State men's and women's cross country teams head to Ruston, La., for the WAC title. They have a good "track record," - I couldn't resist - at this event.

The twin reasons for the team's success are named Schultz. Courtney Schultz is coming off being named the WAC Cross Country Athlete of the Week, the third time she has won the award this season. She is a senior from Cloudcroft and finished first overall for all scoring individuals at the Bronco Invitational in Sunnyvale, Calif. This is the second time this season Schultz has finished first overall and the fourth time she has finished first for NM State.

Her sister, Camille, finished a close second in Sunnyvale, which has been par for the course this year as well.

The women's team is more than a pair of Schultz - Jenna Padilla, Diana Hawk and Caroline Lewiecki have had good seasons as well.

Assistant coach Chris Huff said it was a good tune up, "Coming out to California was definitely a good test for the women's team. It gave our girls a lot of confidence and they are right where they need

On the men's side, senior Jonah Ruybalid is running well. He finished first for NM State and 15th overall at the Sunnyvale event. Terry Williams, another senior, finished second for NM State and 22nd overall. Freshman Paul Raymond finished third for the Aggies and 44th overall, and seniors Ian Ruybalid and Ryan Fenton were the top-five Aggie runners

Huff is happy with the momentum his team has headed to Ruston.

"The men's side has a strong group right now," he said. "The last outing gave them a lot of confidence going into the conference meet, knowing they can run and compete with anybody out there.

The Aggies, under the overall tutelage of Orin Richburg, are in good hands learning from a man who has coached American runners in the Olympics. I expect a pot of first-place medals at the end of this trail for the Aggies.

Hoops here it is: Tickets are available for the Aggies Tip-off Dinner Tuesday, Oct. 30. Head coach Marvin Menzies will preview the season and a special guest will also be present. Herman Boon, the real life coach portrayed by Denzel Washington in the film "Remember the Titans," will also speak. Meeting the team and hearing from a man whose inspirational work is renowned is a bargain.

Aggies are reloaded, ready for new season

Marvin Menzies Men's Basketball Head Coach

The dream of "Dancing In March" ignites the engine that drives the enthusiasm for college basketball throughout the country. Preseason rankings, marquee matchups, projected impact players and the anticipated rival battles propel the change in seasons.

The 2012-13 New Mexico State men's basketball season is here, and I feel the excitement of the campus and community.

WAC Tournament Championships in two of the last three seasons have led to NCAA Tournament appearances. The culmination of last season produced the 15th, 18th and 21st all-time leading scorers in Aggie basketball history. Wendell McKines, Hernst Laroche and Hamidu Rahman are playing professionally in France, Ukraine and Slovakia, respectively.

This year's team has 12 returning players, including seniors Tyrone Watson and Bandja Sy. Tshilidzi Nephawe and Sim Bhullar will combine to produce the biggest center tandem in the country. The emergence of sophomore guard Daniel Mullings is electrifying. In addition, our recruiting class solidified our perimeter shooting. Established programs are characterized by "reloading" versus "rebuilding" and this applies to your Aggies.

The application of the NCAA rule changes, which allowed us to work individually with our student athletes this summer, enabled us to build a foundation academically as well.

Our overall team GPA was above 3.0. Additionally, we are currently on pace to achieve the highest team GPA in team history this semester. Producing successful student athletes will be another component of our program that will make you proud.

This season's schedule provides 16 home games that should be identified on your calendar as premier social events of the year in Las Cruces. Do not miss Thursday. Nov. 15, which is the home opener against Southeastern Louisiana.

We have a number of outstanding teams coming to the Pan American Center, including NCAA Tournament participant Southern Mississippi, Missouri State, as well as rivals UTEP and New Mexico.

The rare visit from the Miners in February 2013, will be a tremendous opportunity for the campus and community to showcase their support. In addition to your home Aggie experience, the season will include four ESPN network games.

The entire campus and community are an integral part of our past and future success. You are entitled to share in the ownership of our accomplishments as well as the commitment to elevate to a higher level. Success breeds success.

I am personally reaching out to the community for support and anticipate the response to be overwhelming. I look forward to seeing you in the stands this season as we continue to build something special together. Go Aggies - it's time!

MVCS SonBlazers turn football season around Tough challenge expected at Tularosa

By Craig Massey

Change is never easy, and the football coaching change at Mesilla Valley Christian Schools has been a challenge for all involved.

When Charles Gleghorn left last winter to take the head football coaching job at Hobbs, MVCS turned to veteran coach Mike Draper to guide the program. Gleghorn, the program's first and only head coach, led the SonBlazers to the Class 2A state title last year.

Draper, whose successful career features head coaching stops at Mayfield and Moriarty, has led MVCS to a 4-2 record this season. After a 1-2 start, the SonBlazers have improved, winning their last three games, 27-21 over NMMI, 33-32 over Hot Springs and 18-16 over Cobre.

Draper's biggest challenge early on was numbers. The SonBlazers had as few as 16 players at one time, but the coach said he now has 22.

"It's hard to function and practice," Draper said of the low numbers. "We tried to make up the difference by working on conditioning. We need to be in shape and stay strong."

With so few players, injuries also are magnified and coaches were forced to shift players around.

"Any time you move players around, it messes up the chemistry," Draper said.

He said the team's three-game winning streak is partly due to the fact that the players are getting healthy, he has more players on the team and the players and coaches are understanding each other better.

"They're learning and have a better idea of what I expect," he said. "I'm a different style of coach than coach Gleghorn. I'm definitely more vocal. It's different for all of us."

Draper said the team's offense is different than Gleghorn's wide-open passing offense, but he has kept some of that and added to it.

"It's kind of a blend and it seems to be working pretty well," he said. "We're doing more zone blocking and trap blocking.'

The SonBlazers are led by running back John Jung, who had three touchdowns last week against Cobre, wide receiver Christian Jimenez, who has nine touchdowns this season, and quarterback Tristan Franzoy, who has shown improvement since becoming the starter in the third game of the season. Jung has more than 600 yards rushing this season.

Mesilla Valley is also getting good line play from players such as Isaiah Avalos, Garrett Coppedge and Chaz Glines.

The team faces a great challenge this week with a game at Tularosa at 7 p.m. Friday, Oct. 26. The Wildcats are ranked No. 2 in the state in Class 2A.

Draper said his squad needs to be more consistent on defense and will face a challenge against Tularosa.

"They're big and physical and have several great athletes," Draper said. "Their middle linebacker, Cameron Martinez (5-10, 270), is one of the best linebackers I've seen."

Mayfield at Oñate game offers salute to military Fans in military uniform get free entry

The football game between the Oñate High School Knights and the Mayfield High School Trojans Friday, Oct. 26, is Las Cruces Public Schools' annual Military Appreciation Game.

Anyone who attends wearing a military uniform will be admitted to the game free of charge, said LCPS Athletic Director Ernest Viramontes.

"Military Appreciation Night, which we hold every year near Veterans Day, is just one way LCPS honors the men and women who serve in every branch of the United State military," Viramontes said. "It's our way of saying 'thank you for all you do for all of us." The game begins at 7 p.m. at the LCPS Field Dreams, 2501 Tashiro Drive.

The game will be presented live on the LCPS website. To view the webcast, visit www.lcps.tv and click on "Click to View" a few minutes before the start of the game. Friday, October 26, 2012 Las Cruces Bulletin WSMR Hall of Fame to add two men

Dirk, Duggan to be inducted

White Sands Missile Range will induct Las Crucens Gene Dirk and Dan Duggan into its Hall of Fame Tuesday, Nov. 6, during a luncheon ceremony at the installation's Frontier Club.

Induction into the Hall of Fame is the highest honor WSMR can bestow upon an individual locally. It was established in 1980 to recognize those who have made outstanding contributions to WSMR during their tenure on the range.

WSMR has elected two men from totally different backgrounds to its Hall of Fame for 2012. One is a civilian with a very technical background he used in modernizing equipment and improving the processing of data about missile range tests. The other is an Army officer who, while on active duty, served in a series of management positions during an unprecedented nine-and-a-half years at WSMR.

In the early days of WSMR a great deal of missile test data was captured on film. Even radars produced film in the form of video showing the blips of missiles and targets on an illuminated scope. To read those strips of film and gather the information locked in each frame required a small army.

Through the efforts of Dirk and his team, the process was partially automated and what took three years to read by hand could be done in just a few days. Later, Dirk would be a leader in automating the reading of film from cinetheodolites, which filmed the action in a missile test and recorded data. That also saved time and money.

In 1995 Dirk retired from the government. He joined New-Tec at WSMR in 1999 and became project manager for various test support services. He retired from NewTec/TRAX in 2011 and lives in Las Cruces. In Duggan's first position at WSMR with Nike Zeus, he frequently gave briefings on the system. He was soon added as a command group briefer, which quickly turned into a long stint as the chief briefer.

When President John Kennedy visited WSMR June 5, 1963, Duggan gave a private, 20-minute classified briefing.

Duggan left Nike Zeus to take on management of the Anti-Tank Test Branch. In 1980, Duggan found himself with orders for Fort Huachuca, Ariz. Maj. Gen. Duard Ball, then WSMR commander, found out about his assignment and requested Duggan come to WSMR to be his deputy. When Maj. Gen. Niles Fulwyler assumed command of WSMR in September 1982, he insisted Duggan stay on as his deputy. Duggan moved on to be director of National Range Operation in 1984 and then retired from active duty in November 1985.

Scam artists may be using utilities Credit cards purchased to pay overdue electric bills

El Paso Electric Co. (EPE) has received calls pertaining to a scam that preys on EPE customers.

The scam artists represent themselves to be EPE employees, telling customers their account is past due. They then attempt to convince the customer to go to a local store and purchase a cash card (Visa, Master Card or American Express) and to call them back with a card number, or they offer to send someone to the home to collect the card.

El Paso Electric reminds customers to only use EPEauthorized methods to pay their electric bill. Customers are urged to never give personal information over the telephone unless the customer initiates the contact with EPE.

For verification of any account information, customers can call EPE's customer service number at 915-543-5970 in Texas and 526-5555 in New Mexico. EPE urges those who believe they have been the victim of a scam involving payment of electric service to contact the police department.

Thomas S. Cooper

Early in the morning of Wednesday, Oc-tober 17, 2012, our beloved Thomas S. Coo-per passed into the loving arms of our Lord. Tom was born on July 27, 1940 in Cooper, New Mexico to Mark and Faye Cooper. Tom was the 3rd of 4 children, and was preceded in death by his parents, his sister Leta Fern and one brother, Doyle. His remaining brother Carl Cooper and sister-in-law Mardine reside in Roswell.

Tom is survived by his loving wife, Carol Cooper of Las Cruces, New Mexico. He is also survived by his three daughters, Marla Cooper of Las Cruces, Carla Bell & husband Michel of Midland, Texas, and Carrie Cooper of Hobbs, New Mexico, as well as one son, Greg Cooper of Las Cruces, and step sons Gary Thurm, Jr. of Minden, Nevada, and Evan & Renee Thurm of Portland, Oregon. He loved and was dearly loved by his 4 grandchildren, Jessie and Christie Rankin, Scott Macatee and Brenna Bell.

Tom was raised on a ranch northeast of Roswell, New Mexico, and was a proud graduate of Roswell High School's Class of 1958. He later graduated from New Mexico State University, after which he began his life-long career in public accounting. In 1976, he purchased the first of several ranches that would become Cooper Cattle Company. He loved the cattle business - the cattle, the horses, and being outdoors in God's country - almost as much as he loved his children.

Tom was a leader in issues he held dear to his heart, especially regarding private property rights and public lands issues, constitutional policymaking and private enterprise. He served as an officer in Las Cruces Tea Party, chaired People for Preserving our Western Heritage, and also served on the Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce Agricultural Committee. He was a firm believer in capitalism and free enterprise. As an accountant and businessman, he was devoted to his clients, who have often spoken of him as the most honest, knowledgeable and clear thinking individual with whom they had ever worked.

Tom was a member of Mission Lutheran Church, coming to regard his fellow parishioners as brothers and sisters in Christ. He will be greatly missed by his family and many good friends, but they rest secure in the assurance that Tom now resides with our Lord.

A memorial service was held at Mission Lutheran Church, 2752 Roadrunner Parkway in Las Cruces. In lieu of flowers, please consider a donation to the charity of your choice to honor Tom's memory. Arrangements by Getz Funeral Home and

Alumni donate more than money

Richard Coltharp That's the Way of the World

Learning about distinguished alumni from New Mexico State University and Doña Ana Community College got me to thinking.

Colleges and universities rely on alumni more than most of us realize.

Former NMSU and NFL football player and Spanish language television pioneer Danny Villanueva is one of the more visible alumni, and he has contributed a great deal to the university and its athletic program.

Paul Klipsch, a 1926 NMSU (back then it was New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts) electrical engineering graduate, revolutionized the world of audio and speaker systems.

Growing up in Tulsa, Okla., my high school buddies and I coveted some of those pricey Klipsch speakers. We had to settle for Panasonic Thrusters instead.

I just learned recently that Alvy Ray Smith, a 1965 NMSU graduate, also in electrical engineering, was the co-founder of Pixar Studios.

He will be speaking on campus Friday, Oct. 26, talking about his career, which also includes important, groundbreaking work as director of computer graphics research for Lucasfilm. A friend recently suggested – because the University of New Mexico has both a law school and a medical school, two often lucrative professions – the Lobos have a built-in advantage over the Aggies when it comes to alumni donations.

There's a logic in that observation. In fact, it might be a factor around university donations in Oklahoma, too.

The University of Oklahoma, OU as it is commonly known, is the home of that state's medical school and largest law school (Gov. Susana Martinez got her degree there). Oklahoma State University, like NMSU, a land-grant university, and also my alma mater, traditionally trailed OU in donations and, perhaps not coincidentally, football victories.

In the past decade or two, however, OSU alum and oil tycoon T. Boone Pickens has poured unfathomable amounts of money into the Oklahoma State program, which just last year upstaged OU for national prominence and victory in the annual "Bedlam" football game.

Galleria of Businesses replaces showcase

Bulletin Staff Report

As many as 150 businesses will be telling their stories at the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce's Galleria of Businesses Thursday, Nov. 1.

The event, formerly known as the chamber's Business Showcase, provides an opportunity to visit with representatives from all manner of local businesses.

The event takes place from 3:30 to 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 1, at the Las Cruces Convention Center, 680 E. University Ave.

"Each year we try to make each of our events bigger and better than before," said Joel Courtney, the chamber's leadership and communi-cation director. "With the move from the mall to the convention center, it gave us a chance to rebuild the event from the ground up.'

Part of the change, Courtney said, will be the elimination of presentations and a focus on one-on-one time, where people can get to know other local businesses.

"We want people to see and get to know our members," he said.

The change also means the people visiting the business are there to see them.

We loved being at the mall," Courtney said. "But quite a few people would come by who weren't really interested in the businesses themselves.

'This way, members know everyone who See Galleria on page B2

We're looking for a top-end event," Courtney said. While the galleria is open to everyone, the event will be accompanied by two chamber-exclusive events: A Taste of Las Cruces and Business After Hours. Those events will run from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m.

- Chamber members can come and go between those net-
- working events and the galleria.
- "We expect more businesses than ever at Taste of Las Cruces," Courtney said.

The galleria is free and open to the public.

Chamber member businesses interested in participating still have time to sign up for a basic booth for $150. Nonprofits can have a booth for $100. Non-chamber members can purchase a booth for $500.

Businesses interested in a booth can call Courtney at 524-1968.

Booth Appeal

Janet Honek of Sunspot Solar Energy has some tips for operating a booth at a business event.

- Decorate your table with color and ornaments to highlight your product. Flowers work great.
- Don't sit behind your table. Stand and be active and engaging.
- Provide giveaway items with information relevant to your business.
- Have a way to get sales lead information from prospects. An "Enter to Win" prize drawing is a great way.
- Have a good time and connect with people.

Manuel Medrano, '04

Medrano currently works as an administrator information technology special-ist for the U.S. Department of State and teaches as an adjunct instructor for Vir-ginia International University in Fairfax, Va. He also provides online instruction at DACC and New Mexico State University. Medrano earned an associate of applied science degree in computer and informa-tion technology, Business and Information Systems Division.

Sylvia Caraveo, '07

After receiving an associate of arts degree in general studies, Caraveo continued her academic aspirations and earned a bachelor's degree in social work from New Mexico State Uni-in social work in 2012. A Mexican immigrant, she overcame many challenges. She went from being a caregiver to her children to a DACC student, gave birth to a fifth child, worked part time and lost her father and motherin-law to cancer within a two-year span.

"I was brought by my parents, along with my six siblings, to this country to have a better future. My father taught us if we work hard we can achieve anything we want," she said. "Although life is unpredictable and there are always obstacles that are going to come ... if we set our mind and work hard we can accomplish anything."

Maia Sideris-Dorame, '07, '10

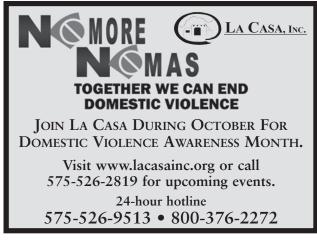

Sideris-Dorame began her career in high school, working with senior adults and volunteering at a nursing home. She has experience with resident care, long-term and skilled care and recently with the New Mexico Chapter of the Alzheimer's Association in which she oversees eight core programs

At DACC, she became a certified nurse aide and earned associate degrees in general studies in 2007 and in public health, Health and Public Services Division, in 2010.

Rachel Courtney '04

Courtney earned a bachelor's degree in journalism from NMSU in 2003, and after being introduced to graphic design through her journalism studies, she decided to continue her education at DACC, where she earned a certificate in digital graphics technology. For the past seven years, she has managed the Bulletin's graphics team, which has won many state and national awards. She serves on the DACC Digital Graphics Advisory Committee and enjoys making blankets for Project Linus. The luncheon will be 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the Commons Area of the East Mesa Student Resources building, 2800 N. Sonoma Ranch Blvd. For information, call Kristi Martin at 528-7059.

OU has resumed its historical place this year, but OSU's program is these days several notches closer to becoming a perennial national powerhouse.

I like to say Pickens and I have combined to contribute more than $350 million to our alma mater. That statement is technically accurate, but you'll note they're not naming any buildings after me. Another famous OSU alum and donor is, like me, a former journalism major at Oklahoma State. He took a different career tack, however. You know him as country singer Garth Brooks.

Of course, alumni can contribute many things other than just money.

During this Homecoming weekend, NMSU will cel-ebrate the Distinguished Alumni from each of its colleges. Many have supported their alma mater by providing internships for Aggies. Some have served as mentors to students, faculty members and even administration. Others have spread the gospel of New Mexico State University far and wide. And many serve simply as an inspiration to those considering the value of education.

As Andrea Tawney, the assistant dean of NMSU's Col-lege of Business said, "People don't always realize what a great institution we are – from the College of Business, the College of Engineering and all across NMSU. We have had some amazing alumni." Who knows? NMSU's next Villanueva – or its first Pickens – could right now be a 1992 business grad in Chicago, a 2001 marketing grad running a small business in Las Cruces, a 1985 arts and sciences grad who just sold a computer company in California, or a 2013 graduate-tobe walking the International Mall as we speak.

Sandia Science & Technology Park in Albuquerque. The park is a 300-plus-acre technology community affiliated with Sandia National Laboratories and adjacent to Kirtland Air Force Base. Resident companies and organizations have easy access to world-class facilities, technologies, scientists and engineers. Moore oversees all aspects of the Park – management, marketing and recruiting of tenant companies.

Beasley and Moore will also speak at the College of Business Scholarship Luncheon earlier in the day.

'The luncheon is a time for students to come together and express appreciation for their scholarships," Tawney said. "It's a time for these award recipients to express ways of giving back, from donations to mentoring."

One way Beasley has given back is through internships for students.

Beasley's firm actively seeks NMSU accounting student interns and graduates. Each year, the firm brings in 10 to 15 in-terns, which helps the students with both academic credit and finances.

Despite the pressures and responsibilities of running a facility that is home for 33 companies and organizations employing almost 2,500 people, Moore has consistently served as an advocate for NMSU and lends her expertise for the advancement of the Arrowhead Research Park. She is a strong supporter of Arrowhead's Entrepreneurship Center and mentors staff and faculty. She has supported College of Business endeavors and engaged with faculty.

'Ă really neat thing about the James Cole award is that it is an NMSU-wide award that anybody can compete for," Tawney said. "And in recent years, it has gone to College of Business alumni. That speaks to the service of our graduates and how much they give back to the college and to NMSU."

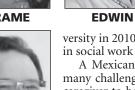

The criteria, in part, for selection of the Cole Award are based on support to New Mexico State University, involvement with NMSU, civic and humanitarian service and professional service.

Beasley's roles have included past president, NMSU Founda-tion; member of NMSU Accounting Advisory Council; NMSU Alumni Association president; treasurer, Aggie Sports Association; and past president, Mil Gracias Society, NMSU.

Beasley serves as an advocate for all things "Aggie" and takes his mentorship role very seriously. His service to NMSU has created natural partnerships with the business community that have been vital to the growth of NMSU, the accounting department and profession, and the College of Business.

His mentorship actively encourages the next generation of alumni and community members to serve and partner with NMSU.

B4 | Business Las Cruces Bulletin November is Realtor Designation Month

Gary Sandler's Real Estate Connection

Every industry has its areas of specialization, and real estate is no exception. At last count, an estimated 2.6 million individuals currently hold real estate licenses issued by one of America's 50 individual states, possessions or territories. Approximately 1.3 million of those licensees are members of the National Association of Realtors (NAR) and are authorized to carry the Realtor designation. As members of the NAR, Realtors may choose to take advantage of additional training in general real estate practice or in particular areas of specialization. The NAR has nine affiliated institutes, societies and councils that provide a wide-ranging menu of programs and services that assist members in increasing skills, productivity and knowledge. To the surprise of the general public and some Realtors, there is an official NAR designation for practically every specialty area in the real estate industry.

How many areas of real estate specialization are recognized by the Realtor organization? In all, more than 20 individual designations are currently available to Realtor members, with a couple more on the distant horizon. What are these areas of specialization? Let's take a tour through the list:

Accredited Buyer Representative or ABR is first on the list. The Real Estate Buyer's Agent Council (REBAC) is the largest association within NAR with more than 40,000 members. Agents with this designation have completed classes on buyer needs and have passed a test and provided documentation of experience representing buyers.

Accredited Buyer Representative Manager or ABRM. Office owners, brokers and managers earn this designation by completing educational courses and provided documentation of past buyer agent management experience.

Accredited Land Consultant or ALC. Agents with this designation are the recognized experts in five types of land brokerage: (1) farms and ranches; (2) undeveloped tracts of land; (3) transitional and development land; (4) subdivision and wholesaling of lots; and (5) site selection and assemblage of land parcels. They obtain the designation through educational classes Certified Commercial Investment Member or CCIM. The approximately 7,500 agents who carry this designation are the recognized experts in commercial real estate brokerage, leasing and valuation and investment analysis, principally in North America, but also in Asia and Europe. Another 7,500 agents are currently candidates for the designation, which is backed by a respected education program and superior technology.

Certified International Property Specialist or CIPS. The CIPS network is composed of 1,500 real estate professionals from 50 countries who deal in all types of real estate, but with a focus on the "international" market. Some agents travel abroad, while others assist foreign investors or help local buyers abroad. CIPS may also serve immigrants in their local communities.

Certified Property Manager or CPM. This designation helps property managers acquire valuable management skills that give them the competitive edge in every area of real estate management. They acquire the designation through educational offerings from the Institute of Real Estate Management.

Certified Real Estate Brokerage Manager or CRB. The Council of Real Estate Brokerage Managers makes available this designation, which is awarded to Realtors who have completed the council's advanced educational and professional requirements. CRB designation holders consistently increase their level of industry knowledge, advance their rearing and career potential and increase their firm's profitability.

Certified Residential Specialist or CRS. More than 35,000 Realtors currently carry the CRS designation, which is awarded to experienced agents who complete advanced training in listing and selling and meet rigorous homesale production requirements. The designation, first awarded in 1977, is a product of NAR's Council of Residential Specialists.

Counselor of Real Estate or CRE. Only about 1,100 practitioners throughout the world currently carry the CRE designation. This elite group of internationally recognized professionals provides objective advice on real property and land-related matters

General Accredited Appraiser or GAA. This designation is awarded to general appraisers whose education and experience exceed state appraisal certification requirements. It is a product of the National Association of Realtors Graduate Realtors Institute or GRI. Realtors holding this designation are involved in residential real estate and are in pursuit of a solid base of information for their practices.

NAR's Sustainable Property Designation. This new designation goes to those Realtors who are trained in green-building concepts, including LEED certification, Energy Star and other energy-saving rating systems as well as consumer awareness campaigns

Performance Management Network or PMN. This designation brings real-world skills to keep Realtors on top of their respective markets. Skills required for this award include: negotiating strategies and tactics, networking and referrals, business planning and systems, personal performance management and cultural differences in buying and selling. This designation is awarded by the Women's Council of Realtors.

Realtors Association Certified Executive or RCE. Realtor associations from coast-to-coast are administered by folks who we refer to as association executives. Only those AE's that are interested in demonstrating commitment to the field of Realtor association management pursue this designation.

Residential Accredited Appraiser or RAA. Similar to the GAA designation, this award is obtained by appraisers whose education and experience exceed state appraisal certification requirements.

Senior Real Estate Specialist or SRES. This designation is awarded to Realtors who seek to specialize in the needs of those of us who are age 50 and over. Modules include how to ethically and profitably serve the needs of our older clients and customers. Society of Industrial and Office Realtors or SIOR. Individuals certified with this designation are top producers in industrial and office real estate brokerage. The 2,800 members of this organization operate in 480 cities in 20 countries on six continents. The society's mandatory recertification requirement assures clients that his or her agent excels in the field.

At Home With Diversity Certification or AHWD. This certification puts the public on notice that those certified have been professionally trained in and are sensitive to a wide range of cultural issues inviting a wider volume of business from a greater variety of cultures.

E-PRO or Electronic Professional. Realtors holding this designation have been trained and certified as Internet professionals. In addition to understanding Internet technology, this certification also addresses internet communication and client services.

RSPS or Resort and Second-Home Markets Certification. Looking for a specialist to handle your second home or vacation-home needs? This designation assures clients that agents are up-to-date on the state of secondhome markets and the intricacies of the taxdeferred exchanging of properties.

Short Sales & Foreclosure Resource or SFR. For many real estate professionals, short sales and foreclosures are the new "traditional" real estate transaction. Knowing how to help sellers maneuver the complexities of short sales as well as help buyers pursue short sale and foreclosure opportunities are not merely good skills to have in today's market - they are critical. And while short sales and foreclosures are not for the faint of heart, agents with the proper tools and training can use these specialty areas to build their business for the long term. Realtors with the SFR certification can be a trusted resource for short sales and foreclosures.

Statistics show Realtors who carry at least one designation also have higher incomes than do agents who don't pursue a designation.

Based on 2012 National Association of Realtors survey data, the median income of Realtors without a designation was $28,900 and the median income of those with at least one designation was $50,000, a difference of $21,400. (Source: 2012 NAR Member Profile).

Since agents don't earn more until they sell more, it is obvious your chances of success are significantly enhanced when your agent has a few extra letters at the end of his or her name. See you at closing!

Russell Hernandez: Green team influence spreads

Local manager commits to corporate policy

By Alta LeCompte For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Las Crucen Russell Hernandez was an Olive Garden manager in Albuquerque five years ago when the company offered him a management position in the Tuscan-themed restaurant on Telshor Boulevard.

Although the move would bring him back home where he wanted to be, Hernandez hesitated before cutting a deal.

He said he would come down and work as a server before deciding whether to accept.

He liked what he saw, and became one of four local managers for the new Las Cruces Olive Garden.

As serendipity would have it, the restaurant also wanted someone to head up its recycling and sustainability program, something that keenly interested Hernandez. So he took on the added challenge of building a green team.

The team was formed to carry out a company-wide initiative begun in 2008 that set the ambitious goal of reducing water and electric use by 15 percent and generating zero waste by 2015 across the 780-restaurant chain.

Policy gets personal

Green is policy for Olive Garden. It is far more for Hernandez.

"I take it personal," he said. Hernandez said launching the green team was "a learning experience all around." "We went from zero – no recycling – to a strong focus throughout the company. This company has my heart." He noted that, thanks to a green team initiative, Olive Garden no longer sends Styrofoam into the waste stream.

"This restaurant is excited to be Styrofoamfree," he said.

Green teams successfully advocated for togo boxes made from recycled plastic that are recyclable, microwave and dishwasher safe, he said.

Although the city doesn't recycle glass, Olive Garden has become known to crafters and collectors as a go-to place to get handsome wine bottles.

"Conservatively, 20 to 30 percent gets recycled," Hernandez said. "Unfortunately, the bottles are empty – we can't dispense full ones."

Green behind the scenes

Many of the local team's initiatives are invisible to restaurant patrons.

"Our location focuses on water," Hernandez said. "I grew up on a farm in Mesilla, exposed to the importance of water sustainability."

He said changes prompted by the green team include cleaning floors with an enzymatic product rather than buckets of water. All hand-washing faucets are equipped with low flow aerators. The kitchen has eliminated its dipper wells for utensils, where water used to run constantly. Instead, chefs use a hot-water well.

Olive Garden pasta is boiled in low-flow cookers.

Hernandez said one initiative he pushed is the complete removal of incandescent lighting throughout the building.

The kitchen area switched to compact fluorescent lighting, and Hernandez's green team began lobbying for the installation of LED lighting in the restaurant. Las Cruces was the first Olive Garden location to be fitted for the energy-efficient lighting, he said.

"It cost a big chunk of money," Hernandez said of the initial LED investment. "The only way it happens is if the company hears from the teams."

Teamwork saves resources

Green teams "get those closest to the action involved in the decision making that affects the restaurant," he said.

Although some Olive Garden locations have been able to inspire only one or two staffers to volunteer for the green team, the Las Cruces restaurant has more than 10 percent of its staff participating, Hernandez said.

Active members receive a lapel pin, which generates questions from customers. Engaging customers in a dialogue about the restaurant's green initiatives helps spread the word beyond the four walls of the restaurant, Hernandez said.

Hernandez's green team began meeting quarterly to discuss sustainability issues, but now convenes each month. Prior to every meeting, a member conducts a 30-point leak inspection to determine whether the restaurant is losing any water or energy or missing out on any recycling opportunities. "We focus on what's going on in the company and what we can do now," Hernandez said.

Since all billing is handled at the corporate level, the team can't directly measure its dollars and cents impact. It does, however, monitor quarterly reports on BTUs and kilowatt hours used.

"We're always looking at the kind of impact our efforts are having, not only on the environment and on future generations but also from the business and corporate standpoint of how the initiatives affect investors," he said.

A farm foundation

Hernandez, in fact, brings a business perspective to the culinary enterprise and its sustainability program.

He majored in agricultural business and economics at New Mexico State University, with minors in marketing and management.

At the university, he served as president of the National Agricultural Marketing Association chapter, was committee chairman for the Hotel, Restaurant and Tourism Management Association on campus and was an ambassador for the College of Agriculture and Economics.

"I went into agriculture primarily because my family background was in agriculture," he said.

His mom, a former horticultural teacher at Las Cruces High School, currently is teaching agriculture from a medical perspective, introducing students to careers in testing, pharmacology and related fields.

Hernandez said he grew up on a small farm, where the family kept goats, chickens, ducks and horses.

"Beingraised on a farm is a great background, a place to learn ethics and the importance of family and friends," he said. "There are always chores that need to be done."

He said his family always was involved in the Mesilla community, which had a tradition of farmers helping one another.

His family also participated in the politics of the community, and he currently serves on the Mesilla Planning and Zoning Commission.

Career begins in high school

Hernandez has been immersed in various aspects of the restaurant business for13 years, starting as an intern at Eddie's Bar and Grill in the Best Western Mesilla Valley Inn when he was a student at Las Cruces High School.

He worked his way up the ranks to manage the restaurant.

"Peggy (Smith), the GM of the hotel, was one of the best mentors a person could have," he said.

His career then took him to Applebee's, where he was a server and team leader.

"What got me to Albuquerque was outside the restaurant business, working on claims for an insurance company," he said. Hernandez returned to the restaurant life as a manager at Olive Garden in Albuquerque. Prior to the Las Cruces opening, he helped out at other locations, including Vancouver, Canada, during the Winter Olympics. He was away from Las Cruces almost six years.

"It's great to be back home," Hernandez said.

Remodeling his house, repairing and refinishing furniture, caring for two dogs, a cat and tropical fish, hunting and, of course, cooking occupy his leisure time.

"I love to cook," he said. "Much of what I cook is Mom's home cooking with Mexican influence. Lately I've gotten more into Asian, though it's a tough one to master."

He also enjoys eating at his favorite local restaurants and trying out new ones.

"It helps support our local community," he said.

His preferred foodie travel destination is Dallas, for the variety and quality of its restaurants. For Dallas-bound travelers, he recommends the Green Papaya for Vietnamese cuisine and a little Mexican place in the Bishop Arts District that opens early for breakfast.

Centennial Spotlight

In Good Company: Rawson Inc. Builders Supply

Doors open to public Business extends family tradition

By Alta LeCompte For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Rawson Inc. Builders Supply at 2355 Nevada Ave. is one of a handful of Las Cruces businesses that grew from a half-century-old family tree now laden with branches.

One recent Saturday morning, Rawson Builders Supply owner Leonard "Lee" Rawson took on the role of genealogist, tracing his family's business roots, telling the story of the enterprises they built and grew along with Las Cruces.

While he talked, his son and the company's general manager, Ben Rawson, moved with ease from the retail showroom to the fabricating area to the offices, tending to the needs of customers and employees.

At his heels, wearing a smocked plaid frock, was his daughter, Heidi, 5.

"Grandma will soon have her filing – learning the alphabet," Lee Rawson said, referring to his wife, Moira.

He smiled at the prospect of another generation of Rawsons taking the helm of the business he founded in 1973.

Products and services for builders, homeowners

The home center today comprises two divisions, commercial and residential, housed in a former industrial park that has been expanded to almost 100,000 square feet.

A 50-foot banner hanging from the top of the Rawson Home Center Building addresses what Lee Rawson believes is the biggest challenge facing his business: a misperception that it is open only to the trades.

The banner reads: "Open to the public."

Commercial and residential products include standard and custom doors and all the fittings, as well as glazing with all the trimmings. Fireplaces and outdoor kitchens are available, and the retail showroom displays a growing inventory of outdoor living accessories, including patio furniture.

Lee Rawson said the business model originally was 100 percent contractor services – for both residential and commercial structures.

"We began to push retail as new construction dropped off," he said. "In recent years our goal has been to be one-third residential, onethird retail and one-third commercial."

In addition, Rawson Builders Supply now operates a branch in El Paso and is affiliated with Do It Best, which offers a 65,000-item online store.

Lee Rawson's company initially specialized in pre-hanging doors.

"Then we added locks, moldings, windows and other specialty products," Rawson said. "Everything we did, we could deliver on a pickup."

He said Rawson Home Center ventured into commercial construction products in 1976 to keep commercial contractors from going to El Paso for their locks, doors and frames. The same year, Rawson moved the business to a 40-footby-100-foot building on West Hadley Avenue and kept adding on until the complex included five separate buildings.

"In 1978, we started to install," he said. "Everything we sell except a stick of molding moves. We add value by installing, which means less service calls, less warranty issues and better products for end users."

Moving north to expand

Following a fire in 2006 at one of the West Hadley Avenue buildings, he decided to relocate, consolidating all functions under one roof.

Rawson Builders Supply moved to an 80,000square-foot former factory on Nevada Avenue. Soon after acquiring the property, the Rawsons built a 13,000-square-foot showroom and office space in front of the cavernous warehouse.

Behind the showroom is the current work area, divided into residential and commercial sections.

In the residential area, one-of-a-kind doors standing ready for delivery include a large double door and frame surrounded by elaborate glass sidelights and featuring Palladian windows in the doors. The doors themselves are flush, no trim or detail of any kind.

"It's what the customer wanted," Lee Rawson said.

Craftsmen in the workroom not only can execute any design the customer requests, they also can go to the customer's home or business to correct problems.

"If your garage door isn't working, you can call us," Rawson said. "If a kid throws a rock through your window, our glazers will come out and fix it."

Commercial glazing is a major component of the business.

Glass projects include the windows for El Paso International Airport, as well as for schools and government buildings, predominantly out of state, where Rawson said there is more opportunity to bid on large commercial jobs. The list of projects includes blast-proof work at White Sands Missile Range.

During the building boom in the early years of the 21st century, the business employed about 90 people. The count now is 35 to 40.

"We hire only full-time people," Rawson said. "One hundred percent of our projects are installed by our employees. You own your project from start to finish. We bring the advantage of accountability. All our employees pass drug and background checks. We want to be sure whoever is in your home you're comfortable with."

Building Las Cruces

The Rawson family business tree has other branches – Las Cruces businesses owned by Lee Rawson's mother and brother.

All their stories began when Leroy "Lee" Clifford Rawson moved from Illinois to Lordsburg for his health and started restaurant, motel and painting businesses.

"They made the circuit, asking the question, where can we make a living," Rawson said.

Arriving in Las Cruces in 1950, Clifford Rawson continued painting. He also built houses.

His wife, Ellen, opened a restaurant on Solano Square and Lee Rawson's uncle, Leonard Lane Lawson, ran the enterprise.

"My dad (Bernard "Barney" Rawson) built the first house east of Locust Street in Las Cruces," he said. "He built another and put them both up for sale. We would move out of whichever one sold and into the other. Those were tough times and he was just glad to put food on the table."

Asked how old he was when he first started working for his dad, Rawson said, "About 3."

He and his brother, George Bernard Lawson, learned the building trade straightening nails at job sites, he said.

"Dad's heart was to help young men succeed," he said. "He taught them skills and ethics. Through the years, he raised up about 20 competitors, and they all were very successful."

The community became flooded with good builders, but they had nowhere to buy their supplies in Las Cruces in the 1960s and '70s, Rawson said.

"All the supplies were coming from El Paso." His dad began selling supplies for the local homebuilders and also started building storage buildings near Chestnut Street.

He brought the first storage units to New Mexico in 1969.

Lee Rawson and his brother, George, did the construction work, which paid their tuition at New Mexico State University.

The business evolved into light commercial construction, a path Rawson's brother George Bernard Rawson continued to pursue. His company is Pueblo Builders Inc.

Next Gen Rawson

All four of Lee Rawson's sons grew up in the business and continue to be involved in varying degrees.

Ben Rawson, the eldest, watched from his playpen in the showroom while his dad assisted customers, Lee Rawson said.

A Verity College graduate with an MBA from NMSU, general manager Ben Rawson has expanded the leisure living product line. He also brought in door-making technology that can build a whole house full of doors of assorted sizes at the same time, ensuring quality and efficiency.

Simon Rawson, an RN at MountainView Regional Medical Center, was a glazer with the home center and returns to help when needed. Philip Rawson, a mechanical engineer, does IT and mechanical work for the company, but will leave in May 2013 to enter the ministry.

Caleb Rawson, 20, is a student at Colorado Christian University and works with Philip on the company's information technology.

The boys grew up in politics as well as business.

Lee Rawson said during his 23 years in the New Mexico State Legislature, the entire family moved to Santa Fe each year for the session.

"We do everything as a family," he said.

"Our goal was to teach them to work and to love the Lord. The rest they can do themselves."

Friday, October 26, 2012 Las Cruces Bulletin Business | B7 Coalition for Pets and People works to end animal deaths

CFSNM handles fiscal details so group can focus on its mission

More than 8,000 healthy or treatable dogs and cats are killed at the shelter each year, but a coalition of animal lovers and animal welfare agencies are working to bring that number down to zero.

The Coalition for Pets and People became an official organization in January when Mayor Ken Myagishima brought together a group of animal welfare organizations and County Commissioner Billy Garrett stepped up to serve as co-chair of the organization with Thomas Townsend.

There are a lot of hardworking people in this community, both within the coalition and outside, that are doing great things for our animals," said Ann McCullough, coalition member-at-large, who added that the group has a strong and positive working relationship with the Animal Services Center of the Mesilla Valley and animal control officers. "As a coalition, we are determined to reduce the intake of animals into the shelter and increase the number of live animals going out."

To meet its goal of bringing the number of animals at the shelter down to zero, a comprehensive and community-based plan is in place and is being implemented by the coalition. The 12-point plan includes: positive support for the shelter director and staff; adequate public and private funding for the initiative; public relations for more community involvement; engaging many volunteers; increased pet retention by owners; proactive approach to returning lost animals; high-volume, lowcost sterilization; a program to address feral and free roaming cats; more innovative programs at the shelter; active reliance on dog and cat rescue groups; foster care for dogs and cats; and a comprehensive adoption program.

One project of the coalition is Project Save a Kitten, which places condos of kittens in businesses around the county for the purpose of increasing the adoption and foster rate of kittens from the shelter. Jackve Meinecke, chair of the Tabby Team within the coalition, worked with 50 volunteers to place 100 cats in homes this past spring

Another coalition project is the Doña Ana County Big Kitty Fix (www.dacbigkittyfix. com), with a goal to reduce the number of cats entering the shelter by encouraging spaying or neutering of all cats in Las Cruces and Doña Ana County and by facilitating as many affordable spay/neuter surgeries as possible.

When the coalition formed, the group opened a special projects fund within the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico (CFSNM).

"Instead of wasting time setting up our own nonprofit, we chose the Community Foundation to serve as our fiscal manager,' McCullough said. "We pay a small fee to the Community Foundation, an organization with a very good reputation in our community, and they handle everything. We can focus on our 12-point plan."

The Coalition for Pets and People includes members from animal welfare organizations including ASCMV, Animal Welfare and Responsibility Education (AWARE), Doña Ana County Humane Society, Feral Cat Management Program (FCaMP), Humane Society of Southern New Mexico, numerous dog and cat rescue groups and the Spay and Neuter Action Program (SNAP).

We all hope we are out of a job in seven years COMMUNITY because that will mean we accomplished our goal, to FOUNDATION achieve zero euthanasia of Of Southern New Mexico healthy and adoptable pets within seven years or less in Doña Ana County. Zero in STANDARDS" seven," McCullough said.

The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico is dedicated to helping the Southern New Mexico community now, and in the future. Founded in 2000, the Community Foundation offers opportunities for local people who want to give back locally. The beauty of the Foundation is that you need not be wealthy to make a positive difference in the lives of people throughout our area. Through the establishment of permanent funds you can sustain local charitable organizations, provide scholarships to area students and fulfill wishes that are close to your heart. Through our planned giving programs, you can honor loved ones or leave a legacy that benefits the people of Southern New Mexico for generations to come. The Community Foundation of Southern Having More Retirement Accounts Is Not The Same As Having More Money.

When it comes to the number of retirement accounts you have, the saying "more is better" is not necessarily true. In fact, if you hold multiple accounts with various brokers, it can be difficult to keep track of your investments and to see if you're properly diversified.* At the very least, multiple accounts usually mean multiple fees.

Bringing your accounts to Edward Jones could help solve all that. Plus, one statement can make it easier to see if you're moving toward your goals.

Edward Jones MAKING SENSE OF INVESTING

NATIONAL

By Marvin Tessneer

The heavy pumping of ground water has kept drilling and well-servicing companies busy in the Mesilla Valley, Marvin Magee of Maverick Drilling said.

"One reason is because we have to drill deeper because of the declining water table," Magee said.

Excessive ground water well pumping for agriculture has been stressing the water table, and climate condition reports are not optimistic regarding prospects for recharging the table.

The water table decline varies along the span of the Mesilla and Rincon valleys

We're seeing a minimum of 20 feet or more to reach the water table," Magee said. "A lot depends on where you're located. Next to a large production well, I've seen drillers go down to 40 to 60 feet before they can start pumping water. But when they stop pumping, within a week the water table can come back again to where it was five years ago."

The heavy well pumping can cause what farmers call "salt water intrusion," water that contains minerals that stunts plant growth, Elephant Butte Irrigation District consultant Phillip King said. "If a well is pumping heavy amounts of water, that can pull in salty water from sur-rounding areas," he said.

Hatch farmer Scott Adams understands what he is referring to when discussing salty irrigation water.

The salt or mineral content in the Hatch Valley ranges from 800 parts per million to 3,000 parts per million, he said.

"We have a shallow aquifer," he said. "We don't use wells if we don't have to."

And the 2013 outlook for river surface water is less than normal. The reservoirs' storage, as reported by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation El Paso field office, is 113,555 acre-feet for Elephant Butte, or 6 percent of a full reservoir, and 5,527 acre-feet for Caballo.

The Office of the State Engineer keeps track of the water table at a U.S. Geological Survey monitor wells south of Las Cruces located between two pecan orchards, OSE public information officer Lela Hunt said.

"The water table at that location has dropped about 18 feet since 2003, with about 8 feet of the drop occurring in the past two years," Hunt reported.

One resulting impact of the surface water shortage is that the Elephant Butte Irrigation District has delivered less than 1 foot of water for three seasons.

"A low surface water supply for EBID farmers greatly reduces the recharge to the aquifer from canal seepage and requires farmers to pump more ground water in order to supply their crops," Hunt said.

Business Matters

"The Men Who Built America" is a new mini-series running on the History Channel. Despite a decidedly progressive tilt to the overall narrative, the series does a decent job of telling the story of how some of the greatest 19th century American entrepreneurs risked their entire personal savings, committed to providing great new products and services and ultimately made life much easier for millions of their fellow citizens.

They also transformed America from an economic backwater into the country with the highest living standards on earth.

Oh yes, and one more thing. Those who accomplished all of these things got rich.

During the first episode, the development of the nation's railroad and oil industries is featured.

As is typical with any progressive-slanted presentation of American history, there was an almost twisted overemphasis on the competitive aspects of the personalities of great men like Cornelius Vanderbilt and John D. Rockefeller. The incredible wealth they amassed seemed to be repeated over and over. If the same approach were used in a documentary about Michael Jordan and Nolan Ryan, there would be a relentless overdramatization of Michael Jordan's rough fouls on defense and the number of batters Nolan Ryan hit with the ball.

Lost in the shuffle of portraying John Rockefeller's battles with his competitors as particularly ruthless was an important fact. His very first product, kerosene, put an end to the merciless slaughter of whales for their oil by the whaling industry.

It comes as no surprise that there were many missed teaching points in "The Men Who Built America." At least in the title it is acknowledged that these men built their own businesses.

The worst segment of the first episode was the absurdly naive comments made by Senator Jay Rockefeller. The senator repeatedly lamented the aggressive ways in which his great grandfather whipped his business competitors. Though the senator has lived in high style thanks to the wealth left to him by his great grandfather, somehow he failed to mention that oil titan John D. Rockefeller actually used 98 percent of his wealth to fund some of the greatest charities in history. Not only did America's original big oil man leave almost all of his money to charities, he did his homework on intelligent gifting. John D. Rockefeller managed to establish truly effective charities that thropic results in human history.

Justice would have been better served if the old man had left Senator Jay's wing of the family with a small bottle of whale oil to burn for light instead of a gigantic trust fund.

Questioning a history professor about the historical significance of John D. Rockefeller recently proved to be enlightening. I asked a committed progressive to consider the fact that 98 percent of Rockefeller's after tax wealth went to charity. In the final analysis, when considering the body of his life's work, did Rockefeller serve the greater public interest, or the progressives' favorite lamentation, only "selfish private interests?"

When the question was posed there was considerable hesitation, followed by a hem, then a haw, and finally a change of the subject. The obvious answer to such a simple question was not going to be forthcoming. To acknowledge everything that John D. Rockefeller's efforts as an entrepreneur did for America would require a complete contradiction of everything the anti-business indoctrinators are doing to diminish the sense most citizens have for the magnitude of the positive contributions successful entrepreneurs provide for our country.

What used to be a fine public education system has become a statist indoctrination mechanism that first and foremost teaches suspicion of all businesses.

The argument for voting third party

> Chris Erickson State of the Economy

I want to send a message to the main political parties. I'm anti-crony capitalism, the unholy alliance of big government and big business. I want cronyism out of national politics.

Unfortunately, both major parties have been captured by the big business interests, to the detriment of small business and the general public. Voting for either major party only rewards bad behavior.

But how to send a message? How to let the Republicans and the Democrats know how I feel? The answer is to vote third party.

In fact, I have nearly always voted for a third party in presidential politics, starting with John Anderson in 1980. In recent elections, I've voted for the Green party twice and the Libertarian party otherwise.

Green and Libertarian parties you say? Aren't those two extremes of the left and right?

The answer is no. Read their platforms. Both parties are anti-crony capitalism. The Libertarians emphasize the antigovernment side of the argument while the Greens emphasize the anti-big business side. Yet, the policies recommended by the two parties are remarkably similar, except that the Greens believe in some regulation.

A common argument against voting for a third party is that such a vote is waste.

I would argue just the opposite. A vote for a third party sends a powerful message to the major parties. Shape up, because there is an alternative out there. You can be replaced.

Don't believe me?

Think of 1992, the year that Ross Perot first ran for president. His issue was balancing the budget. By 1999, the budget was in surplus for the first time in 39 years. George Wallace's run as a neo-Dixiecrat in 1968 helped finish the transformation started by Roosevelt, converting the Republicans into the party of the white majority. Teddy Roosevelt's Bull Moose Party advocated social insurance, especially old-age pensions.

Then there is the most successful third party effort of all time, the 1856 campaign by Republican John C. Fremont, which led to the presidency of Abraham Lincoln. I needn't rehash the historical implications of that.

When I tell people I routinely vote for a third party, they ask me if I really want one of those third-party knuckleheads elected president. Do I really want a President Ralph Nader or Gary Johnson?

The answer is no. If I thought one of these clowns would actually win, I'd not vote for them. But there is an advantage to voting for a kook, especially if that kook focuses on a single issue or small set of issues with which you agree: It sends a message, and the message I want to send is, "Get big business out of politics; get big government out of business.'

By supporting third parties that more closely parallel your own views on important issues, you can send a message using the only thing that the major parties understand: Votes!

Downtown Las Cruces will likely be overrun by zombies again during this year's Doña Ana Arts Council Zombie Walk, 6 to 8 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 27.

Halloween comes Downtown

Visit the Rio Grande Theatre for the Doña Ana Arts Council's 3rd annual Zombie Walk

Carrie LaTour Executive director, Downtown Las Cruces Partnership

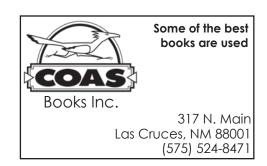

According to the Rio Grande Theatre website, the premiere Downtown undead event, the Doña Ana Arts Council Zombie Walk, is back for another shamble.

As in previous years, in keeping with nationally recognized "rules" of the Zombie Walk trend, zombie attire is mandatory to be included, and all participants are asked to remain in character, communicating only in a manner consistent with zombie behavior, i.e. grunts, groans, moans and the occasional slurred call for "brains."

Zombies are asked to begin gathering in front of the Rio Grande Theatre at 6 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 27.

The walk will take place from 6:30 to 7 p.m., along Main Street Downtown mall with prizes for "Most Disgusting," "Most Original" and "Best Couple or Group" awarded after the event.

For more information, call the Arts Council office at 523-6403.

Bring the family to the Farmers Market Oct. 27

Certain farmers market vendors have been known to hand out candy to costume clad youngsters during the Saturday market before Halloween.

I also have it on very good authority that some zombies may be visiting the market this Saturday, say, around 10 a.m. Very talented zombies who may know some good dance moves.

Pixar co-founder to speak at NMSU

Aggie engineering alum will present his story

New Mexico State University College of Engineering welcomes Academy Award-winning computer graphics innovator Alvy Ray Smith to campus to speak 4 p.m. Friday, Oct. 26, in Thomas and Brown Hall Room 104.

An NMSU alumnus, Smith returns as part of the Verge Fund Lecture Series in Innovation, Ventures and Entrepreneurship. He will speak about his expertise as the co-founder of Pixar, the former director of computer graphics research for Lucasfilm and the founder of Altamira Software.

Smith will present his personalized story of the group now known as Pixar. The story will emphasize entrepreneurial events, from early work on Long Island in the mid-1970s to the movie studio days at Lucasfilm to the spinout of Pixar, the IPO and sale to Disney. Smith will describe the heroes and tyrants he encountered along the way, the strokes of luck, the camaraderie and the fun.

Smith received a bachelor's degree in electrical engineering from NMSU in 1965. He earned a doctoral degree in computer engineering from Stanford University in 1970 and was awarded an honorary doctorate from NMSU in 1999.

In 1974, Smith was a visiting scientist for Xerox PARC where he created the HSV color space. He began working at New York Institute of Technology in 1975 and co-invented the concept of the alpha channel, which is the rendering of image elements into separate passes and then combining the resulting multiple 2-D images into a single, final image.

With that concept, he went on to be a founding member of Lucasfilm in 1980.

In 1986, he co-founded Pixar and served on the board of directors and as the executive vice president. In 1991, Smith founded Altamira, later acquired by Microsoft, and became the first Graphics Fellow at Microsoft in 1994.

Smith has received two technical Academy Awards for his alpha channel concept and for digital paint systems. He was elected to the National Academy of Engineering for "fundamental changes in the graphic arts and motion picture industries." He was co-awarded the Computer Graphics Achievement Award by the Association for Computing Machinery Special Interest Group on Graphics in 1990 for "seminal contributions to computer paint systems."

He directed the first use of full computer graphics in a successful major motion picture, "Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan," while at Lucasfilm. He hired John Lasseter, Disneytrained animator, and directed him in his first computer graphics film, "The Adventures of Andre and Wally B." The team he formed for these pieces later proceeded, under Lasseter as artistic director at Pixar, to create "Tin Toy," the first computer animation to win an Academy Award, and the first completely computer-generated film, "Toy Story," Disney's Christmas 1995 release and also an Academy Award winner.

Smith retired in 1999 to devote time to the emerging art form of digital photography and to scholarly genealogy, to which he has contributed two books and several journal papers. He is currently writing a book for the lay reader, "Digital Light: A Biography of the Pixel."

The lecture is free and open to the public. For more information, contact Spyros Angelis at 646-2975 or loky@nmsu.edu<mailto:loky@ nmsu.edu>.

Dia de Los Muertos Festival of remembrance begins next week

Make your merry way to the 41st annual Renaissance ArtsFaire Art, music, theater and fun collide at Young Park

By Isabel A. Rodriguez

For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Just as the Renaissance period was a cultural movement that swept through Europe in the 14th century, the annual Renaissance ArtsFaire has swept through the City of the Crosses the last 40 years, bringing with it a tradition of fine food, fun and flair.

Each year, the festival welcomes a myriad of vendors and entertainers from all over the country, with more than 25,000 damsels and knights flocking to partake in the cultural affair.

"The good thing about the Renaissance ArtsFaire is that it has no demographic," said Summer Irvin, event coordinator. "It's a family affair, and there's a little bit of something for everybody. That's why it's a great fair to attend – you literally do so much for one price."

The largest juried art show in Southern New Mexico, the Renaissance ArtsFaire truly offers entertainment for all ages with the Rio Grande Main Stage, the Merry Court of Sherwood Oak, the Middle Eastern Village and the Children's Realm.

New to this year's Children's Realm is a children's rollercoaster, as well as a few activities.

The production "King Henry VIII and Wives: Married, Beheaded and Died" will be staged on the Merry Court.

Randy Granger and Chris Baker are a few of in the artists who will perform at this year's event.

The Renaissance ArtsFaire is the perfect place to get a head start on early Christmas shopping.

When asked which attraction she would be most excited about, were she not involved in the event planning, Irvin said it would be the vendors, which will offer a variety of items perfect for unique gifts. All the items sold by the vendors are

All the items sold by the vendors are required to be handmade, so "you know you're getting something authentic," she said.

While vendors are encouraged to dress in Renaissance attire, their products aren't necessarily in accordance with the theme.

One thing missing at this year's festival will be Magellan, the special Renaissance ArtsFaire dragon that can usually be found in the pond. The 22-year-old mascot, designed by local artist Bob Diven, will be recovering in a tent at the park, where fairgoers may stop in to wish him a speedy recovery and take pictures with him for $5.

"The Black Knight tried to slay him," said David Salcido, manager of the Rio Grande Theatre.

Proceeds from the attraction will go towards Magellan's repairs, hopefully in time for next year's festival.

Salcido, who has helped organize and promote the event for four years, said the reason the fair is so popular among Las Crucens and out-of-towners is that it's an

"There's a lot of art and performances," he said. "It's exactly the kind of thing families can do together – and there aren't a lot of those events. There's a lot of stuff people can see they won't see other times of year."

Although the fair has gone through a few changes since it began in 1971, it's been successful because the Doña Ana Arts Council has found a formula that works, Salcido said.

The Renaissance ArtsFaire began as the Holy Cross CraftFaire, and was held annually at the Holy Cross Retreat in Mesilla, until 1980, when it moved to Downtown Las Cruces.

Young Park has been the festival's home since 1983.

Although the event is organized by the Doña Ana Arts Council, Irvin is quick to credit much of the fair's success to the numerous volunteers who donate their time to make the festival a local favorite year after year.

"We have about 200 volunteers (who also help set up and tear down, before and after the event), and we wouldn't be able to do this without them," she said.

The Renaissance ArtsFaire is the biggest fundraiser of the year for the Doña Ana Arts Council. Proceeds help bring different acts into town, including the Missoula Children's Theatre and Artes de la Rosa – a Fort Worthbased theater company that presented "El Conejito Verde" at the Rio Grande Theatre in early October.

Featured artist: Bob Diven

Multi-talented artist eager to take on new challenges

Diven embraces his role in the community By Isabel A. Rodriquez the Las Cruces Bulleti

If you live in Las Cruces, you've likely heard the name Bob Diven associated with the local arts scene in one way or another.

The painter/actor/photographer/musician has been an active artist for more than 30 years. However, he wasn't always sure he'd be able to make a living from his artistic efforts.

"There have been times I thought I wasn't going to make it as an artist," he said. "I considered teaching and becoming an EMT."

Mostly recently, he starred as Don Quixote in the Las Cruces Community Theatre's production of "Man of La Mancha."

Diven said his love for the arts was instilled in him at a young age by his father, a school teacher, and his five "creative" older brothers.

After a military stint in the Coast Guard, he enrolled in the Rocky Mountain School of Art.

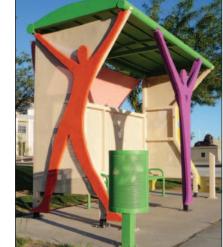

One of his first jobs, he said, was working as art director of CBS affiliate news station in Albuquerque.

"I created all the in-house and local print advertising for the station, took photos, did illustrations and created a logo for the station," he said.

When asked if he had a favorite medium or preferred art form, Diven said it's the variety that he enjoys, as well as the freedom to explore different forms.

'Ilike a lot of the community work, like the sculptures and murals for specific places," he said. "I keep my hand in the performing community theater.

"Celebrate." Bob Diven's "art bus stop sculpture" stands in front of the City of Las Cruces City Hall and the Thomas Branigan Memorial Library on Main Street.

I really don't want to give anything up. It's cliché, like a mother saying she can't pick a favorite child. Right now, I like writing a lot."

Unlike some artists who think they have to migrate to powerhouses such as New York or Los Angeles to succeed, Diven is quite content to continue working from the City of the Crosses, his home since he was five years old.

"I've gone away many times to work on projects, but I always come back," he said. "I'm a small town kid in a lot of ways. It's something in my DNA. I want to be some place where my presence matters and I can make a difference. "This is my home. I embrace my role in the community not that I wouldn't like my work to go other places."

Although Diven couldn't settle on a favorite project, among his fondest is a "Rex Awakes," a street drawing he did for the El Paso Street Festival in October 2011. Diven spent 10 hours creating the drawing, and took home the Best in Show award for the piece.

In August he spent two weeks creat-ing 240 feet of "street art" for an installation at The Lore Degenstein Gallery at Susquehanna University in Selinsgrove, Pennsylvania.

"I rubbed my fingers raw drawing with chalk on the wall," he said.

His reprisal in "Man of La Mancha" 12 years after he first took on the role of Don Quixote was also a challenge, he added.

Despite the many artistic media he's explored, the multi-talented artist said he is eager to continue honing his skills.

"I tend to take on big projects," Diven said. "I always have to learn new things for every job. It's challenging.

"I like getting paid for a job, because that pays for the next thing I want to work on.'

He cited Norman Rockwell, John Singer Sargent and Joni Mitchell as just of the few artists who have influenced him. On the local level, Diven spoke highly of playwright Mark Medoff.

"I aspire to the naturalism Medoff has as a skilled writer," he said.

Of his goals, Diven said he'd like to one day have a cartoon published in The New Yorker and to make a feature film.

"I want to keep doing what I do, for as long as I can, and keep getting better," he added. "People get the most out of my work when they have access to it. I feel it locally, and that's really satisfying. I don't expect Las Cruces to be something it isn't, but it has supported me, and continues to support me."

'Magnolias' in bloom at the LCCT

Review by Gerald M. Kane

Before leaving your home to head down to the Las Cruces Community Theatre to see the current production of "Steel Magnolias," which will be playing through Sunday, Nov. 4, you must leave your memories of the iconic film starring Dolly Parton, Julia Roberts, Daryl Hannah, Shirley MacLaine, Olympia Dukakis and Sally Field locked away in your DVD storage cabinet.

In the words of Tony Soprano, "Fuggedaboudit!" This outstanding, sensitive staging of Robert Harling's 1987 classic strips away all of "Hollywood" of the film and takes us deep into the souls of six women whose lives in Chinquapin, La. run the gamut of emotions from the joy of an upcoming marriage to the tragic death of that young bride/ young mother in the course of three short years.

This well-written, award winning "dramedy" is centered around the interactions of these six unique ladies in Truvy's Beauty Salon for cuts, sets, manicures and camaraderie.

Some may be unaware that "Steel Magnolias" is a true story of the life and early death of Harling's own sister. This, his first play, was his form of therapy and "grief work." Much of the plot and cast expansion found in the film version takes away from the deeply personal stories behind the lives of these six women. The play allows us a great opportunity to internalize the feelings of these six characters, take them more fully into our hearts and grapple with our own feelings of love and loss, life and death.

Directed lovingly and carefully by Gail Wheeler, the play moves along effortlessly and naturally. The performances are clearly defined and presented by an ensemble cast whose affection for each other transcends across the stage and into the audience.

The inimitable Janet Mazdra, who stole my heart in "Shirley Valentine," the Black Box Theatre's opening production this season, portrays Truvy, whose motto is "There's no such thing as natural beauty!" She pampers, listens and spreads sunshine all over Monte Wright's bright and cheerful set.

Newcomer Karen Buerdsell provides an exceptional and nuanced performance as M'Lynn, the mother of the bride. Hers is perhaps the most challenging role in the production and I hope we get to see more of her elegant, natural acting in future productions in our community.

Veteran theater favorites Sam Muir and Melissa Chambers seem to have a real blast portraying the most outre roles in the show, Ouiser and Clairee. They play off of each other in the most dynamic and natural way, much to our delight. Alex Wheeler, the director's daughter snagged the role of Alex Wheeler, the director's daughter snagged the role of Anelle, the newly hired shop assistant. Her performance is heartfelt and sweet, most especially in the second act.

The greatest kudos are saved for Nora Brown, an assistant director who stepped in with just three days notice to take over the pivotal role of Shelby, the central character in the play. How she could learn the massive amount of dialogue and staging, elicit kindness, sympathy, affection, flightiness, and Southern charm – and be "off book" on such short notice is astonishing. Brava, Nora! With additional performances under your belt, your star can do nothing but go higher and higher.

The magnolias are blooming beautifully on the stage of the Las Cruces Community Theatre, and I urge you to smell their sweet scent and admire their lush beauty before they fade away.

away. "Steel Magnolias" runs through Sunday, Nov. 4 at the Las Cruces Community Theatre, 313 N. Main St. Performances are Fridays and Saturdays at 8 p.m. and Sundays at 2:00 p.m. Tickets are $10 regular admission, $9 for students, seniors and military , $8 each for groups of 10 or more and $7 for children 6 and younger. Reservations: 523-1200 or www.lcctnm.org.

Gerald Kane has reviewed theater, music, opera, film and books for NPR stations and newspapers in New Orleans, Phoenix and Kansas City as well as for the Las Cruces Bulletin. A former member of the American Theatre Critics Association, he is the Rabbi Emeritus of Temple Beth-El in Las Cruces and teaches "Jews on Screen" at NMSU.

ghosts from New Mexico's past. As visitors are led throughout the museum's main building, they will bump into a variety of historical manifestations.

Speaker Series: Made in New Mexico Westerns - The Last Shootout 7 p.m, Nov. 8

Santa Fe-based writer and New Mexico film historian Jeff Berg returns to Las Cruces to present the "premiere" of "Made in NM Westerns: The Last Shootout," an all-new compilation of clips from westerns that have been partially shot in New Mexico. Berg has compiled film clips from about 15 different Westerns, starting with a 1912 oddity starring silent film star Mary Pickford and continuing up to present day. After each short clip is shown, he does live narration, offering tidbits about the film, such as where it was shot, any historical reference and sometimes even if it is worth your time to see the entire movie that the clip is from. Audience participation is strongly encouraged. Some of Hollywood's most noted actors, besides Pickford, will make an "appearance" on the big screen, including Gregory Peck, Robert Duvall, Burt Lancaster, and maybe even Jerry Lewis, of all people. This presentation is part of the museum's monthly speaker series. Admission is a suggested donation of $2.

AtTheMovies 'Found memories' sweeps away reality

Review by Jeff Berg For the Las Cruces Bulletin

If you are patient and attentive, you'll find "Found Memories" very, very rewarding. If not, well, better luck next time, since this is a pace-of-life kind of movie, one that endeavors to allow for becoming part of a community as it has always been.

All of the action, such as it is, takes place in a small Brazilian town, where nothing ever really changes, but that's quite OK.

It is mostly a drama, but there are moments of levity that embrace the daily routine, such as when the elderly baker, Madalena, takes her goods to the local coffee shop run by Antonio. Every day, Antonio yowls at her to stack the goods "his" way, not her way, and every day, she ignores him.

FILM REVIEW

Lost your memory? Find it at the Fountain

Theatre beginning on Friday, Oct. 26, for a whole week. Its 98 minute running time is in Spanish, w/subtitles. Life is much like that in this village – very routine, very peaceful.

There is no technology in this village, although it is modern times, and most of the inhabitants are even older than I am. There is not much happening other than funerals, which offer the suggestion that once the deceased is spoken over, he or she will not last long in the memories of the others.

Again, this is not bad, as that is often what happens to most humans anyway. We're born, we live and we die. Few remember us, and with the technology the way it is nowadays, even fewer will remember us.

I find it interesting that I lived, worked, supped, loved, cried, laughed and even married once in the 15 years I lived in Montana. I have not heard from any of friends or lovers for many years, since leaving in 1995.

Into this scenario drifts a young woman photographer, Rita. Looking for new subjects and inspiration, she believes, subtlety, of course, that she has found same in the village of Jotuomba. She ends up staying with Madalena, one of the few locals who goes beyond basic acknowledgement of her presence, and is even allowed to set up a tiny temporary darkroom

Lisa Fávero stars as Rita in Júlia Murat's "Found Memories," opening Friday, Oct. 26, at the Fountain Theatre.

(again, thankfully, no technology here) in Madalena's home.

From here, one would think that director Julia Morat would take us on a journey of transformation for the villagers, but again, gladly, that is not to be. Rita is a catalyst of sorts, but is quiet and reserved herself, as most photographers can be, allowing their camera to tell their story or to be their focal point. Rita tends to the daily routines of the town – Madalena's baking, others going to market, or going to church, another unending ritual. The locals, by habit and rote, have long ago lost interest in these daily acknowledgements and keep going on by practice and routine. "Found Memories" is a finely crafted film, more of a meditation on the simple things in life rather than something that will sweep you out of reality.

Featured Musician: Lawrence Montes

From sol to soul Musician stays true, never compromises

By Zak Hansen For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Lawrence Montes' story is an unusual one. It's taken him from the Mesilla Valley to California, from civilian to sailor, and back again.

Many musicians start playing an instrument as children; Montes didn't pick up a guitar until he was 20. Most musicians only dream of appearing on television; Montes did it before he played in his first band.

In 1998, Montes enlisted in the Navy, just two years after graduating from Mayfield High School, and was stationed in San Diego. Once aboard the ship, he started teaching himself to play guitar as a way to whittle away the dull hours.

During his stint in the Navy, Montes appeared on a segment of "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno." Months after 9/11, Leno filmed a segment aboard the USS John C. Stennis, on which Montes was a mechanic. The popular talk show host was getting footage of crewmembers singing or playing instruments when one of Montes' fellow mechanics volunteered him. When Leno and the cameras approached, Montes broke into an a capella version of "Sittin' on the Dock of the Bay."

"When the show aired, we all went to a bar to watch," he said. "My friends told the waitress I was going to be on there, so she brought us pitchers of margaritas, free food, everything."

The segment aired, first a female crewmember, then a male one - but not Montes.

"Everyone started making fun of me, saying I got cut." Montes said. "Then, at the very end of the show, there I was. They dubbed music in behind me and closed the show with it. That was so cool?

While a sailor, Montes kept honing his skills on the guitar and soon, in 2003, he had formed a band, Stellar, in the San Diego area with a few other servicemen. The band achieved a level of notoriety in southern California, playing shows at venues including the Hard Rock Café in La Jolla and even the famed Whiskey A Go-Go on the Sunset Strip.

Stellar's upward trajectory, Despite including plans to cut a record and continue playing shows, the band dissolved when the members finished their military enlistments and moved away from San Diego. Montes finished his commitment in 2005 and returned to Las Cruces, his hometown, to attend New Mexico State University.

Five months after arriving back in the Mesilla Valley, Montes formed Zia Soul, a rock band heavily rooted in Latin sounds. Zia Soul played shows in the Las Cruces area for about three years, but disbanded in 2007.

Later that year, Montes began playing with other local musicians, and Nuevo Sol rose from the ashes of Montes' previous band. Incorporating Latin, reggae and grassroots sounds in their music, Nuevo Sol did well, playing shows here at home as well as touring out of town, with appearances in Santa Fe, Albuquerque and Scottsdale and Phoenix, Ariz.

They also played larger events, including the wine festivals, at the Southern New Mexico State Fairgrounds and at La Viña winery in La Union, as well as headlining the first ever Bad Ass Mountain Music Festival in Cloudcroft.

"We did really well," Montes said. "We were doing what not a lot of other Cruces bands were doing. We played almost entirely original material, and not a lot of people did that. What few covers we did weren't the ones crowds always wanted to hear the most, but the ones we liked, we cared about. I think that really helped us.'

Despite its successes, Nuevo Sol was not without its challenges, and the band phased out in 2010. Montes cites problems with balance between the members as a primary reason for their end.

"When you put four or five really talented, really committed musicians in a room, all with their own input, there's bound to be problems," Montes said.

"I was kind of bitter for awhile there that we never really got to our full potential. I had such high expectations. But I have no regrets at all. You've gotta experience all those things, the fights, the breakups, to find and represent yourself as a musician."

This idea - to stay true to yourself and never compromise - is an important one to Montes. When Nuevo Sol called it guits, he began focusing more heavily on his own solo acoustic work. He also formed the Son's of Soul, but they were, unfortunately, not to last.

Since 2010, Montes has been performing on his own around the area, relying more heavily on the grassroots style of music he is closest to. He's also focused heavily on school and a career. "It's been really good," Montes said of the time he's spent focused on his own work. "It's helped me see where I'm at and where I want to go."

Montes plans to record an album of original material early in 2013, bringing in the other musicians he has worked with over the years to sit in and play. He also indicated that a reunion might be in the works for one of his previous bands

While nothing is confirmed yet, Montes said there is a big possibility that Nuevo Sol may be getting back together.

'It's been a cool break," he said. "I'm really excited to graduate and to see where all the other guys are at, see how the time has changed evervone. I think we've all matured a lot."

Montes will graduate in December from NMSU with a degree in secondary education, and is currently working as a student teacher at Gadsden High School, teaching two history classes and a psychology class. "I'd like to give a shout-out to my students," Montes said. "They'll get a kick out of this."

A hidden treasure in La Mesa

Chope's offers the very best of Mesilla Valley's history

By Zak Hansen

When discussing a place like Chope's in around 800 words. where does one begin? With so much to say, what to keep in and what to leave out?

Should I spend my time telling readers of Chope's illustrious

That the restaurant first started selling enchiladas in the 1930s? As the story goes, Longinie Benavidez, wife of bar owner Margarito, used to sell her homemade red enchila das to the farmers of La Mesa and patrons of the bar.

As an asthmatic, Longinie was unable to cook every day, so to tell hungry passers-by that she was well enough that day, a lantern was lit and hung outside; the lantern remains today. It's said that the people of La Mesa would walk over to the bar with their own plates to stock up on Longinie's renowned enchiladas. It's also rumored that Longinie, during our country's ill-fated dalliance with prohibition, was a part-time bootlegger. When the bar was dry, she would drive down to Mexico and return with gallons upon gallons of sotol for thirsty

Margarito ran the bar until 1937, when he took ill. His son, Jose "Chope" Benavidez, came to work the bar while still in high school. When Margarito passed away, ownership and operation of the bar passed to Chope; his mother still

When the bulk of the operation moved to Chope and his wife, Guadalupe, their four daughters worked in the bar. Chope, who didn't like the idea of his girls working in the bar, purchased the building next door, at the time a welding shop, and moved the liquor establishment over. The restaurant would remain in the original building.

This is how it would stay for several decades: Chope ran the bar, Guadalupe and their daughters ran the restaurant. Over the years, Chope's reputation for his charm and wit grew. It's said that "everywhere he went, Chope knew someone." His years found him friends with his neighbors, politicians, NFL players and even a couple Dallas Cowboy Cheerleaders.

In 1990, Chope Benavidez passed away, to the great sadness of all those he met over the years. The walls of the restaurant and bar are covered with memorabilia, letters, photographs and paintings, all of Chope's life. After he passed, Chope's wife Guadalupe ran the restaurant and took over the bar as well. She continues operations today, still aided by three of her daughters, Margie Martinez, Amelia Rivas and Cecilia Yañez. It remains much the same today that it has for more than 70 years.

The bar is everything you should want in a road bar. Motorcycles often line the building in front. Inside, it's a bit dark. The walls are covered in neon signs, plaques and trophies from the last eight decades; the jukebox is always on, usually cranking out some classic rock or a corrida. During restaurant hours, you can order from the full menu and they'll bring your plate over to the bar

The kitchen is small, and preparing this much food is an amazing feat in and of itself. All of the food is prepared before each meal, so when t's gone, it's gone. Don't worry, this rarely happens. The dining room is small, cozy and often bustling with people. Meals come out fast and hot, and the servers know what many of the regulars want even before they sit down.

The food is nothing short of amazing. The green chile is spicy and packed full of flavor; the red, not often my favorite, really surprised and delighted me. The menu serves all the Mexican standards, as well as some American classics. Chope's specialty, without a doubt, is their chile rellenos; they easily earn their reputation as some of the best in the state.

I tried a lot – and I mean a lot – of food. The Doña Lupe trio came first: a bowl of chile con queso, a cheese quesadilla and a bowl of chile beans a la Chope, whole and simmered in chile, served with beef and topped with shredded cheese. Then came the green chile cheeseburger, cooked just right, a slight crisp on the outside of the perfectly cooked patty, topped with melted cheese and fresh green chile. It's the best GCCB I've ever tasted.

My final plate, and the one I'd recommend the most to the uniniti ated, is the combination No. 4. It holds a taco, one of Chope's world famous rellenos, along with one red and one green enchilada, served with beans and rice. Here, you get a little bit of the best of everything. and maybe some idea of what you'll order on your next visit, which, if you have any sense, you're already planning.

It should be said, here, that a mainstay of Chope's has been forced into extinction, but not completely. Due to a recent change by the legislature to New Mexico's alcohol laws, only 24 ounces of beer can be served at a time to an individual; that means Chope's is no longer able to serve their legendary 40 oz. beers to someone riding solo.

But don't worry.

"We still have them," insists manager Vanessa Quesada. "You just have to bring some friends with you to enjoy them.'

If you're a good friend, though, you'll be bringing them down to Chope's, anyway.

Review by Zak Hansen For the Las Cruces Bulletin

"Argo" tells the dramatized story of an operation undertaken through a joint effort by the CIA and the Canadian government to extract six American diplomats trapped in a hostile Iran during the Iran Hostage Crisis, in which 52 Americans were held by revolutionary forces for 444 days from 1979 to 1981.

To extract the Americans, the CIA and Canadian officials send in an "exfiltrator," Tony Mendez, played by Ben Affleck, under the cover story of a location scouting mission for a phony film, a Star Wars knock-off titled "Argo." Mendez is aided by his contacts in Hollywood, including a make-up artist and a director, who help make the fake film "real." Mendez plans to smuggle out the six under the guise they are a Canadian production crew. This would later become known as the Canadian Caper. Their other option, we're told, is a plan to get the six captives bicycles and have them ride out to the Afghani border - more than 300 miles away, through the mountains, in the middle of winter. The film crew idea becomes their only hope.

It is, as Mendez puts it, "the best bad idea we've got." Mendez, along with U.S. government officials as well as the captives themselves, have doubts as to how well the plan will work.

"Argo" is a superb international thriller that provides nail-biting, edge-of-your-seat, insert-cliché-here suspense and drama. It's a lot more than that, too. It's part globetrotting espionage caper, part Hollywood satire, part human drama. This sounds like a lot to balance, but star/director Affleck manages to keep all these pieces hanging perfectly.

His cast is stellar, relying on a few stars and many lesser-known actors By not relying heavily on star power, Affleck has done this film a great service – the performances his cast turns in are fantastic. The six Americans trapped in the Canadian ambassador's house are all emotionally wrought, multidimensional characters. Even with the film moving at such a rapid clip, their humanity comes through clearly.

The Hollywood scenes are nothing short of brilliant, and serve as an interesting sort of breather from the white-knuckle tension of the situation across the world. John Goodman turns in a great performance as John Chambers, a veteran film and television makeup artist, known best for his work in the "Planet of the Apes" series. For many years, the CIA turned to Chambers to disguise their operatives. Later in life, he was awarded the Intelligence Star, the highest civilian honor the agency bestows. Goodman's Chambers is immensely likeable and funny.

Aiding Chambers in Hollywood is director Lester Siegel, played by Alan Arkin. Arkin turns in perhaps the film's best performance. Siegel is cynical, sarcastic and frequently obscene; one of his recurring lines, a raunchy play on the fictitious film's title that I can't come close to repeating here, provides several much-needed moments of release in an oth-

"Argo" is a smart, exciting Grade

One particularly fine moment of Hollywood satire, as well as one that's oddly relative to the events at hand, comes between Siegel and Chambers. "History starts as farce, ends as tragedy," says Siegel, only to be corrected by Chambers: "It's actually the other way around." When Siegel asks who said that, Chambers replies it was Marx; Siegel, in turn, says, "Really? Groucho said that?" It's a particularly funny moment, but one with serious implications in this context.

Affleck, splitting duties as director and star, does a particularly good job. He never falls into action-hero territory; his personal life is a mess, but he never plays up the role of tortured hero searching for redemption. He is simply doing his best job in a terrible situation. This subtlety of character is one of the film's strongest assets, and one that is unfortunately rare in many big-budget films. Affleck's direction also demands attention. Since this is a film based in real events, chronicling one of the worst diplomatic crises in U.S. history, it requires a bit of backstory. The first few minutes of the film tell, briefly, the events and situations that led up to the revolution in Iran and the ensuing Iran Hostage Crisis. This is all presented as storyboards interspersed with actual news footage. It's by no means a full account of the centuries of strife leading to these events, but it's intelligently presented and gives the audience enough background to make sense of all of this.

The film, as necessitated by the material, jumps from Iran to Washington D.C. to Los Angeles and then back again, but it never feels like too much to keep track of. There's a rule in this kind of movie, called the "ABC rule." It says, briefly, "always be cross-cutting" between shots. Affleck's film certainly cuts a lot, but he's also willing to slow the camera down, to let the frame linger a bit longer than most. These moments are some of the most tense, the most humane and sometimes even the funniest. It's a credit to his skills as a filmmaker that he's willing to slow down and let his story breathe.

Laura Smart Health Smart

Saturday, Oct 27 is "Make a Difference Day." It's America's largest annual day of volunteering. Earlier this month, the Junior League of Las Cruces sponsored Teddy Herrera from San Diego. Herrera's mission is to fight childhood obesity. His website, www.AA4CO.com, stands for Across America for Childhood Obesity. He engages kids by instructing them to respond back to his cheer.

"One person," Herrera yells. "Can make a difference!" they yell back.

He realized how technology was hindering the imagination of the youth of America, and how the inactivity of children had dramatically resulted in the obesity epidemic.

Herrera witnessed this first hand when he asked his niece and nephew to ride their bikes with him – they looked up from their video games and answered 'No." Herrera's dad had died at the age of 47 from cardiac arrest so he began his quest to "make a difference" in kids' lives. He decided to bike across America and back - a total of 11,000 miles. Herrera had a bike, a Facebook page and $36 when he began his first journey from San Diego in 2009.

He believes he's inspired at least 100,000 youth. Herrera gave an energetic presentation focusing on his "The High 4" points of succeeding:

1. Decide to do it.

2. Set goals.

3. Believe in yourself.

4. Do it!

Herrera also advocates listening to people and advises to "give people a chance to tell their story." I believe Herrera is making a difference all across America.

Speaking of a local community leader who has made a difference, I'd like to mention Barbara Berger, a registered dietician. She is the health and nutrition specialist for Las Cruces Public Schools.

Berger offers free workshops to the public on food fundraising rules and nutritional standards in the LCPS. She is a knowledgeable and passionate person who truly wants to make a difference and

One person Halloween safety tips

Taking precautions helps keep kids safe

By Lorena Sanchez

Halloween is one of the most rapidly growing holidays in the United States, with a reported 170 million people set to celebrate, according to the National Retail Federation.

With children and adults looking forward to the holiday, it's important to take precautions to ensure everyone enjoys a safe and healthy Halloween.

Safekids.org estimates 73 percent of children in 2011 chose to trick-or-treat door to door as their No. 1 Halloween activity.

This activity requires both parents and children to act responsibly.

The Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) offers the following safety tips when trick-or-treating:

Fasten reflective tape to costumes and bags to help drivers see you.

Hold a flashlight while trick-or-treating to help you see and others see you.

- Walk, don't run, from house to house. Look both ways before crossing the street.
- Use crosswalks when possible. Walk on sidewalks whenever possible, or on - the edge of the road. Visit well-lit homes; don't stop at dark
- houses. Never accept rides from strangers.
- The majority of parents who allow their

New way to help shelter

Kennel sponsorships fund repairs

By Lorena Sanchez

Adoptions from the Animal Services Center of Mesilla Valley are often thought of as the primary way to help.

However, thanks to an idea from a volunteer, there is a new option available for those looking to help the shelter.

Kennel sponsorships offer the public a way of providing financial support so the shelter can make necessary repairs and sponsors can honor their four-legged friend. A kennel sponsorship costs $180 a year or $100 for six month.

"It helps people know where their contribution is going," said Robin Prok, ASCMV volunteer coordinator. "It makes people feel appreciated and is one way that lets us say thank you."

The sponsorship includes a plaque with a dedication of the sponsor's choice placed above the kennel. A certificate, picture of the animals in the sponsored kennel and plaque are mailed to the to the sponsor as well.

There are 11 kennels that are part of the shelter. The kennels are the rooms in the shelter, Prok explained. Within those rooms are pens, which are referred to as runs at the shelter. There can be anywhere from five to 20 runs in one kennel. Sponsorship plaques will be placed over the runs in the sponsored kennel.

Clare Kapner, a volunteer at the shelter, has advocated for the sponsorships for more than two years after coming up with the idea. "It's finally coming to pass," Kapner said. "People will feel like they have a stake in the shelter."

Proceeds from the these sponsorships will fund new kennels for the puppy litters, which require a concrete pad, new kennel enclosure with a permanent canopy so the puppies don't escape. Kennels and floors will be resealed to prevent disease. A new run also needs to be constructed so the dogs can be safely walked to the playpens where they can enjoy the outdoors.

Prok does clarify that although each sponsor will have a specific kennel, the money will go where it is most needed, so necessary repairs can be addressed first.

"ASCMV has a tight budget," Prok said. "The additional funding goes to extra projects for the shelter and gives the animals a better environment and healthier space."

Kapner said she has a passion for animals, which keeps her invested in helping the shelter.

"My passion is to make sure every animal has the optimum op-portunity to get into a good home," Kapner said.

Through this project, Kapner said she is determined to educate the community on the overpopulation issue and hopefully parents can teach their children the importance of properly taking care of their pets, spaying and neutering them and treating their pet as a member of the family.

For those who want to contribute, but don't have the means to adopt, Kapner and Prok see the sponsorships as a perfect alternative.

Halloween safety tips that include other ways Make sure young children are accompanied

Safety

- If you can't accompany your child, instruct them to stay in well-lit areas in their own neighborhood.
- Know which friends your child will be with and which route they are taking. Choose a costume that is light and bright so
- motorists can easily see your child. This will be Sasha Lujan's first year taking
- her daughters Marisol, 3, and Nalani, 2, out trick-or-treating.

"They were too scared to go last year," Lujan said.

This year, Lujan said they will be going while it's still light outside so it's safer and the girls feel safer.

Because her daughters are still young, Lujan said she'll probably head to the trunk-or-treat at First Baptist Church.

Events are a good alternative for kids that are younger and not able to venture out trick or treating too late.

For a list of Halloween event, see page A3. For Steven Parra, his daughter Serenity, 7, and son Antonio, 2, will be going door-to-door for Halloween.

Parra and his wife, Shacoy, always take precautions to ensure their children's safety while out trick-or-treating. "We do glow sticks or reflective tape, and their Halloween flashlights," Parra said. "We are always with them when they are trick-or -treating, no matter what. We usually go in a big group so everyone sticks together."

Parra said he and his wife also check the candy before the kids are allowed to eat it.

There are other issues parents should be aware of when Halloween rolls around to keep their kids safe and healthy. Among them, the CDC includes:

- Swords, knives and similar costume items should be short, soft and flexible.
- Examine all treats for choking hazards and Expecting trick-ortreaters or party guests?

- Provide healthier treats for trickor-treaters such as low-calorie treats and drinks. For party guests, offer a variety of fruits, vegetables and cheeses.
- Use party games and trick-or-treat time as an opportunity for kids to get their daily dose of 60 minutes of physical activity.
- Be sure walking areas and stairs are well-lit and free of obstacles that could result in falls.
- Keep candle-lit jack-o'-lanterns and luminaries away from doorsteps, walkways, landings and curtains. Place them on sturdy tables, keep them out of the reach of pets and small children and tampering before your kids eat them.
- never leave them unattended. Remind drivers to watch out for trick-or-treaters and to drive safely.

- Limit the amount of candy children are allowed to eat.
- Always test make-up in a small area first. Remove it before bedtime to prevent possible skin and eye irritation.
- Wear well-fitting masks, costumes and shoes to avoid blocked vision, trips and falls.
- Eat only factory-wrapped treats. Avoid eating homemade treats made by strangers.
- Never walk near lit candles or luminaries. Be sure to wear flame-resistant costumes.

Mayor sponsors luncheon to raise awareness

By Lorena Sanchez

For the men, women and children who are organ recipients, those willing to make the commitment to donate are giving them a second chance.

The Southern New Mexico Transplant Support Group is hosting a luncheon sponsored by Mayor Ken Miyagishima from 2 to 4 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 17, at Lorenzo's Italian Restaurant, 1753 E. University Ave. Tickets are $30 per person.

Proceeds from the luncheon will benefit the group's endeavor to construct and maintain a memorial to honor organ/tissue donors, organ/tissue recipients, volunteers and sponsors. It will represent a second chance.

"If we get this memorial built, it will be one of only six memorials built in the U.S. and the only one built in New Mexico," said Susan Brown, secretary and treasurer of the support group

In July, Brown said, during the groups annual car show, the mayor offered to host the luncheon after hearing that funding was still needed to get the memorial built.

"My brother is a transplant recipient," Miyagishima said. "It basically gave him a second chance at life.'

Miyagishima's experience with his brother has led him to continuously support the group, which Brown said provided resources to the family.

Now, Miyagishima and the support group would like to bring awareness to the need for organ donors and their desire to honor those who have been donors, recipients and supported the cause.

"Out goal is to get the word out," Brown said. "We would like to have all 100 tickets sold so we have nothing to worry about (once the memorial starts to be built)."

Raffle tickets will be sold at the event for the opportunity to win one of five grand prizes. There will also be guest speakers to discuss the importance of being a donor.

For Miyagishima, the event is one the community needs to be aware of and support the cause.

"We need to honor those who are donors and bring awareness to the lives you can touch when you are a donor," Miyagishima said.

Veterans PTSD Conference held Methods and resources for treatment to be discussed Integrating evidence-based therapies for treating Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) with complementary and alternative methods will be the centerpiece of the 2012 PTSD Veterans' Wellness Conference from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, Nov. 2, at the Las Cruces Convention Center, 680 E. University Ave. Check-in begins at 7 a.m.

The free conference is for veterans and National Guard/ Reserve members from southern New Mexico and the El Paso area. Spouses, family members and caregivers are also encouraged to attend. Lunch will be provided.

"We are excited about presenting this conference because of what it offers for both veterans and behavioral health professionals," said Timothy Hale, New Mexico Department of Veterans' Services cabinet secretary. "We need to think outside the box for treating veterans diagnosed with PTSD, because sometimes the traditional treatment methods are not as effective as they should be."

As an incentive to encourage PTSD-diagnosed veterans or National Guard/Reserve members to attend, a $40 Walmart gift card will be given to the first 150 veterans or National Guard/Reserve members who pre-register.

Nationwide, the Veterans Association estimates up to 15 percent of veterans from the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan may be suffering from PTSD, though the number could be higher because many go undiagnosed due to an unwillingness to come forward and seek help.

"There should be no shame in coming forward and seeking help for post-combat readjustment issues," said George Marnell, New Mexico VA Health Care System director. "If a veteran will not do it for themselves, they should at least do it for their family and loved ones because they also suffer along with the veteran."

The conference will present the latest in traditional clinical treatment methods used by the New Mexico VA Health Care System, as well as presentations showcasing non-clinical methods such as massage, faith-based, acupuncture, yoga, equine-assisted and other non-traditional healing therapie.

"The VA is the recognized leader in treating combat PTSD with evidence-based approaches," said Hoyt Roberson, a licensed marriage and family therapist and behavioral health trainer for Presbyterian Medical Services.

This innovative conference is presented by the New Mexico Department of Veterans' Services in cooperation with the New Mexico VA Health Care System, Presbyterian Medical Services, the New Mexico Behavioral Collaborative, Optum Health Care and the New Mexico Aging and Long-Term Services Department.

"The New Mexico Behavioral Health Collaborative is working hard to provide an array of services for veterans to meet their treatment needs, that encompasses both clinical and recovery support services in order to treat the mind, body and soul of our veterans," said Diana McWilliams, CEO of the New Mexico Behavioral Health Collaborative.

Though the conference is free, early registration is strongly recommended. For more information and to pre-register, contact New Mexico Department of Veterans' Services Public Information Officer Ray Seva at 866-433-8387 or ray.seva@state.nm.us.

"It turns out they were in the old courthouse years ago," Linda Lundeen said. "Billy the Kid swaggered through those doors."

She said the couple opened the gallery, which holds as many as 300 pieces of art at any given time, and then opened the inn. Originally the boutique hotel had 21 guest rooms, but was downsized to seven in 1999. The property was split, and a portion was turned into condos.

"There have been so many transformations, I have to stop and think about it," Linda Lundeen said.

While the original home was adobe, various construction materials were used with each remodel throughout the years. The couple did, however, try to stick with a consistent style, she said.

Arts have a history, Linda Lundeen said. "We've had guests give us a potbelly stove," she said. "They wanted it in a special place. There is just story after story in here."

The concrete pathway that leads from the parking area to carved French doors at the entrance of the inn is lined with lush vegetation. The wooden doors enclose tiled steps that take guests through the front door to the entrance, or lobby.

The tile continues along the lobby floor and up the under-window benches. Stairs near the entrance lead to the 2,400-square-foot owners' apartment. The apartment was built seven years ago and features a living room with fireplace and kitchen area, as well as an office, bedroom and balcony.

"I read the paper out here," Jerry Lundeen said of the balcony, sheltered from disturbances by the foliage of tall green trees.

Spruce covers the floors as pressed tin with crown molding accents the ceiling. The press tin, which looks like gold, was installed by Jerry Lundeen and the couple's daughter.

Across the hall is another turquoise door, which accesses the bedroom space of the apartment. A door to the outside leads to iron stairs that take guests to Jerry Lundeen's next work in progress – a room on the roof that offers a panoramic view of the Organ Mountains and city.

Downstairs, behind the check-in desk, is access to the gallery. Originally a garden that was turned into the couple's dining room, the gallery, which features tile that resembles marble, weaves throughout a large portion of the home.

A hall off the gallery leads to Jerry Lundeen's upstairs office and other work areas downstairs.

Back near the entrance, a hall leads to the great room, in which is the building's second fireplace. Featuring an 18-foot-2-inch-tall ceiling, the great room is where guests of the bed and breakfast enjoy breakfast and hang out in the morning, Jerry Lundeen said.

The room is filled with architectural artwork, from the old pine floors to the blue pressed tin ceiling with gold leaf and crown molding. On opposite sides of the room are large doors and windows – one of which leads to a courtyard and the other to the backyard.

"My architectural philosophy is to have a continual space and tie the outdoors to the indoors," Jerry Lundeen said.

Next to the great room is the kitchen, which was added 30 years ago. Down the hall are three guest rooms. All of the rooms are named after artists, such as Georgia O'Keeffe, Ray Swanson and Gordon Snidow. The other four guest rooms are upstairs.

Outside, at the center of the large grassy yard is a chapel. Built a year and a half ago for the Lundeens' daughter's wedding, the chapel features an altar accented in blue tile work under a gazebo.

A shed to store all the things needed to care for such a large building completes the backyard, Jerry Lundeen said. Featuring a 15-foottall garage door, the structure was built out of rock by the man who did the walls surrounding the property.

After operating the inn for more than 40 years, Linda Lundeen said they are ready to explore other passions – she is currently working on a book about the inn and Jerry Lundeen is pursuing his real estate license.

She added that she sees the building being bought by someone with vision.

"It could be a home or a business," she said. "We want to find someone who has big ideas."

Hold the moving van, first things first

What you should do before moving into an existing home

Maureen Villmer Practical Design

With your new home completely empty, take a look around and determine what would be the messiest job and do it first.

Some things should be done before the furniture is delivered. Painting is one of those things. If you are taking down popcorn ceilings, don't wait until you move in, do it first. Start from the top down. That means paint your ceilings first, paint the walls next and paint the trim last.

Don't bring your clothes in until the closets are painted. You know you will never paint a closet if you have to take your clothing and shoes out again. The same goes for your kitchen cabinets and drawers. Clean them out, line them with paper, put in dividers and then put your items away. Once you bring all of your things and put them away, you will never go back and take it all out to refresh the drawers and cabinets.

If you're going to refinish wood floors, do it before you move anything in. If you're going to clean carpets or your existing area rugs, do it before you put the first piece of furniture in your new home. Anything else that requires sanding, spraying, or any other messiness such as waxing or stripping, make sure you do it before you bring any of your things in the home.

If you are having work done in your home by others, most of them will want to be last. That last position will keep their work in perfect condition. If you are refinishing floors, the refinishers will want to be last. If you are using a painter, the painter will want to be last. Even after the floors are done, the painter will need to come back in and do some touch-up, so I usually have the painter as last one in.

Remember, there is an order in which items should be completed. A general rule of thumb is the messiest go first and so forth down the line. I am working on a very large remodeling job now with so many things to do that each one of them is causing a mess. Requiring each of your workers to clean up after themselves on a daily basis is a big part of the job. If you are doing it yourself, leave time for the cleanup at the end of each day. As Halloween nears, the homes of Las Cruces will be transformed from picturesque abodes to twisted manors

Owned by Lenny Silverman, the collection consists of antique Halloween items, from noisemakers and wall decorations to glowing lights of cats and haunted houses. "A lot of them are party things, like napkins and paper cups," he said. "They have interesting Halloween graphics.'

Silverman said his passion for Halloween began in childhood, but his collection didn't com-now includes more than 1,000 items. The oldest piece of his collection is an advertisement from the 1920s. Most of the items, however, are from the 1940s, with the most recent items being from the 1970s. "In the 1990s, there was a change in décor," he said. "Things became more cute. ... Also, later on, they began to put more colors into the decorations, like purple. Generally, Halloween colors are orange, black and white, and sometimes green.

These traditional colors are used throughout the world, as seen in his collection, which includes mainly American products, but also those far off countries, including Germany and Japan

Many of the items were created by Beistle, a Pennsylvaniabased company created by a German family that moved to the U.S.

Nowadays, Silverman said he still visits antique stores on occasion, but most of his searches for Halloween treasures are through eBay.

"EBay is the best way to find things, a lot of collectors use it," he said. "I'll look around here in Las Cruces and I'll occasionally find something of interest. I always have my radar on."

One Las Cruces item that caught his eye was an iron owl that rested atop a window in an abandoned building on Picacho Avenue. After driving past the owl for nearly a year, Silverman finally contacted the landlord and was allowed to take it. He added orange lights to the eyes to enhance its spooky vibe.

Silverman's wife, Katherine, has also gotten into her husband's collection.

"Lenny got me very interested in antique decorations," she said. "We've done a lot of research and Halloween was once a nice time to party and gather. People would make their costumes out of crepe paper.'

"At the turn of the century, Halloween was mainly for adults," said Silverman, adding that it was a time for adults to have costume parties, until the 1970s, when it became more of a holiday for children.

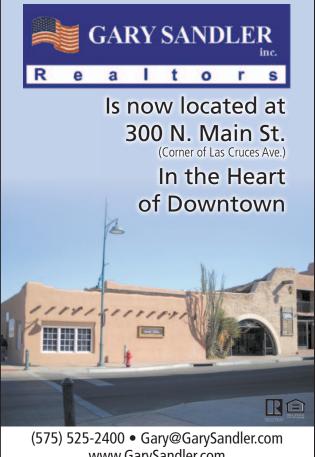

Silverman's collection will be on display during his and Katherine's annual Halloween party. Holding the party since they arrived to Las Cruces in 1999, the Silvermans begin decorating for the occasion in September and often work up until Halloween day.

"We make it dark and mysterious," he said. "We show old Disney Halloween movies on a projector.'

While most of his Halloween collectibles will be packed away come November, there are a select few items that Silverman keeps out year-round.

"I like the autumn season. It has a feeling of youth and nostalgia," he said. "I think Halloween is one of people's favorite holidays because it's about magic and mystery. Thanksgiving is about family, but Halloween is a time to let go and have fun.'

Getting to know: Keep Las Cruces Beautiful The many ways to keep Las Cruces beautiful

City organization dedicated to education and beautification

By Beth Sitzler Las Cruces Bulletin

If you were driving around town Saturday, Oct. 20, there is a good chance you crossed paths with a group of dedicated community members picking up trash along the road. Throughout the city, community mem-

Throughout the city, community members, service organizations and various groups volunteered a chunk of their weekend to beautification projects – ranging from collecting litter to pulling weeds at area schools – as part of Toss No Mas, an annual event organized by Keep Las Cruces Beautiful.

"We had 1,100 people registered for Saturday," said Keep Las Cruces Beautiful Coordinator Craig Fenske. "There were 670 people who registered a year ago, and 16 tons of trash were collected."

Keep Las Cruces Beautiful began more than 20 years ago by a group of citizens committed to the care of the community. As time went on, it grew into a City of Las Cruces organization and by 1991, it became an affiliate of Keep America Beautiful.

For several years, Keep Las Cruces Beautiful was part of the Community Development Department. Eight years ago, however, it was moved to Las Cruces Police Department Codes Enforcement at the encouragement of Chief of Codes Alma Cortez.

"It brought together law enforcement with community empowerment and volunteerism," Fenske said. "The partnership works really well. I think there are some groups that need encouragement from the law enforcement side and there are other groups willing to volunteer, they just need some guidance. And that's what Keep Las Cruces Beautiful does."

Keep Las Cruces Beautiful offers a range of programs focusing on the three E's: education, eradication and enforcement. The programs allow Las Cruces residents to take action in their neighborhoods.

"We have an adopt-a-spot program," said Fenske, adding that spots range from medians and parks to neighborhood rights of way. "We supply them with garbage bags, gloves and safety vests and they're responsible for the care of their spot. This includes picking up litter and weed control."

Fenske said Keep Las Cruces Beautiful is responsible for graffiti abatement – a large problem in Las Cruces, with 2,000 graffiti incidents a year.

The graffiti eradication and prevention activities include a hotline citizens can call to make a report that codes officers will then check out.

"We work to quickly remove graffiti," said Fenske, adding that this helps discourage the spread of graffiti. "It seems to be about ownership. They're saying, 'I own this.' By cleaning the graffiti, we, and private residents, are claiming it back as ours."

Along with removing graffiti, Keep Las Cruces Beautiful has a prevention program. It works with the Juvenile Citation Program to paint murals throughout the city.

"We find that when a mural goes up, it stays clean," he said. "It's a diversion program. (Participants) have some type of defense and they have to do community service. They take pride in the murals and it connects them to the city and their community."

Fenske said mural locations are usually in areas that are frequently tagged. They're also determined by citizen input. Approximately 15 murals have been painted by the program throughout the city.

topics, including recycling and graffiti and litter prevention.

The organization is also reaching youth through "LIBBY the 'Green' Dog," a book inspired by the LCPD Codes Enforcement and Keep Las Cruces Beautiful service dog.

'It's about her adventures and her quest to be green," said Fenske, adding that LIBBY stands for Las Cruces is Beautiful Because of You.

The book features local scenes and attractions, such as the trash roadrunner and Rio Grande, and covers a range of topics, including recycling and illegal dumping. Over the next three years, the English-Spanish book will be distributed to third-grade students throughout Doña Ana County through Keep Las Cruces Beautiful and the county's beautification program.

Å new program offered by Keep Las Cruces Beautiful, in partnership with the City of Las Cruces Parks and Recreation Department, is the Tree Stewards program. Introduced earlier this year, Tree Stewards are community members who care for trees in the city's tree nursery and in public spaces. There are currently 12 Tree Stewards.

While the organization has numerous programs aimed at the beautification of the city, Las Cruces still has a major problem with littering, Fenske said.

"Litter is always an ongoing issue," he said. "It's not just about picking up trash, but preventing it and not throwing trash in the first place.

To help raise awareness and clean the city, Keep Las Cruces Beautiful holds two annual community cleanup events: in the fall Toss No Mas, part of the state's Toss No Mas program, and in the spring the Great American Cleanup, a Keep America Beautiful national event.

"I'm finding that, in my six years here, (the cleanups) have grown year after year," Fenske said. "There are neighborhood groups that keep coming back. They anticipate it and plan on it. And there are new people coming in to help."

Several activities took place during the 2012 Toss No Mas. A dozen trees were planted in the Villa Encantada Park off Birch Circle, one of the parks hardest hit by the February 2011 freeze.

Campus cleanup projects were held at East Picacho Elementary School, Sierra Middle School, Alameda Elementary School and Conlee Elementary School. This included plantings, clean up, soil amendment and the addition of a labyrinth. "We gave each school a $100 grant for supplies and beautification materials," Fenske said.

About 11 students with the Juvenile Citation Program painted a desert-themed mural at Elks and Avondale drives. Community members also scoured the city, collecting litter along parks, rights of way and drainage ditches.

Toss No Mas participants included Boy and Girl Scouts, Associated Students of New Mexico State University members, about 10 Doña Ana Community College groups, churches, kids, parents and neighbors.

"It's rewarding to come off of Toss No Mas and see 1,100 people helping," Fenske said. "It's amazing.

"The goal is to get people to throw less trash and to prevent littering." A portion of the $33,000 grant the organization received from New Mexico Clean and Beautiful is used to fund cleanup events held throughout the year by youth programs. The youth programs, such as sports teams, receive $300 for their group in exchange for four hours of cleanup.

"We have enough funds for about 20 cleanups," Fenske said.

The grant also is used to fund three parttime work-study students through NMSU.

"They're a great asset to the program," Fenske said. "It's nice to work with energy and expertise."

An example of this is the organization's recycled fashion show. Known as "Trashion Show," the idea for the spring show came from employee Carmen Del Castillo, an NMSU clothing, textiles and fashion merchandising major.

Pumpkin carving kits makes easy work out of jack-o'-lanterns

By Beth Sitzler

The ghouls will take over Las Cruces in less than a week when All Hallows' Eve strikes Wednesday, Oct. 31.

Don't fret, my dear creatures of the night, there is still time to prepare for a happy and spook-tacular Halloween. Even if you don't have a frightfully impressive collection of Halloween antiques and decorations like Las Crucen Lenny Silverman (see page E5 for more information on his hair-raising collection), you can still get into the spirit of the occasion.

Skip the commercially sold adornments and instead take a trip to the pumpkin patch for possibly the easiest do-it-yourself Halloween decoration: the jack-o'-lantern.

The exact origins of the jack-o'-lantern are unknown, but the carved gourds have been creeping out - and entertaining - citizens for centuries. In fact, pumpkin carving is so popular, major pumpkin-producing states - California, Ohio and Pennsylvania - produce around 100 million pounds of the squash a year.

The great thing about pumpkin carving is the possibilities are endless. From the scarily simple triangle eyes and crooked teeth to detailed haunted houses, anything is possible with a little imagination and the right tools.

What is it?

In the olden days, those interested in making a jack-o'lantern would have to do so using what they had available in the kitchen - a large knife and spoon. While often times efficient, the knife didn't allow for intricate designs and details. And there was always the risk of one cutting a finger off - talk about scarv.

Candidates, public come together at the LCHBA Meet 'n'Greet

Las Cruces Home Builders Association Managing Director Steve Chavira addresses a crowd of about 200 community members and 28 candidates during a Meet 'n' Greet the association held in conjunction with the Las Cruces Association of Realtors and the local chambers of commerce Tuesday, Oct. 23.

Luckily, nowadays, there are pumpkin carving kits available that make creating a jack-o'-lantern easy for everyone at just about any age

- While each kit is different, there are a few staple tools:
- Long serrated knife
- Short serrated knife Scoop
- Poker
- Patterns

More advanced pumpkin carving kits can include a skinning tool that removes the outer rind of the pumpkin, allowing for more light to peer through the skin.

No matter the kit you have, be sure to follow the instructions and always have an adult monitor children when using the sharp tools.

How does it work?

After selecting your perfect pumpkin, wipe the exterior with a damp towel and dry cloth to remove any dirt.

Next, trace a circle around the top of the pumpkin. You want it to be large enough that your hand can easily fit in and out. If the stem of your pumpkin is short and uneasy to handle, carve a notch in the top so you can remove the top without problems.

Remove the top with the large serrated knife and scoop out the innards, making sure to save the seeds for roasting, of course your design if the provided patterns don't suit your fancy. Use the poker to create tiny holes along the pattern. This will give you a better idea of where to cut.

Remove the pattern and start cutting out the design, using the large and small serrated knifes.

Pumpkin carving kits can be found at grocery and hobby stores around town, including Albertsons, Target, Walmart and Hobby Lobby.

Depending on what tools are included, a pumpkin carving kit can cost between $4 and $15.

LCHBA Government Affairs Chair Kimbal Hakes explains the purpose of the event – to let political leadership know the concerns those in the building industry have, as well as provide an opportunity for those in the industry to get to know the candidates.

The great bottle of gold

Mustard can be used on everything from eggs to aches

By Beth Sitzler Las Cruces Bulletin

With the World Series of Baseball kicking off Wednesday, Oct. 24, pitting the Detroit Tigers against the San Francisco Giants, you might find yourself craving hot dogs, a stadium staple.

While everyone is different, the majority of American adults prefer their hot dogs slathered in mustard – a concoction made from ground mustard seeds, water and vinegar with additional flavors and spices sometimes thrown in.

It shouldn't come as a surprise, after all, as Detective Harry Callahan, played by Clint Eastwood, said in 1983's "Sudden Impact," "Nobody, I mean nobody, puts ketchup on a hot dog.

But mustard doesn't have to be limited to your hot dogs.

Las Cruces Bulletin General Manager Richard Coltharp enjoys a heaping helping of mustard on his scrambled eggs. Using a recipe by his great uncle Victor Valentine Stiles of Terrell, Texas, circa 1929, Coltharp whips up two eggs and tops them with French's yellow mustard.

Yellow mustard was created by George T. French in 1904 as a milder alternative to that typically found in Europe. Also known as American mustard, this variety features a bright yellow coloring. No matter if you like yellow mustard, Dijon mustard - a type originating from Dijon, France that includes white wine - or the sweeter honey mustard, don't keep your mustard caged to only food. The spicy condiment can be used around the house in some unusual ways.

1. Soothe aches: An aching back can be an unpleasant result of a hard day on the job. Give yourself some relief by taking a nice hot bath - with a bit of mustard mixed in. Pour a 6- to 8-ounce bottle of yellow mustard into the hot water. Mix the solution well and climb in. Soak for 15 minutes. This remedy will also help with arthritis pain. The mustard can be applied directly to the area. Be sure, however, to use a mild yellow mustard and try this on a test area first. Undiluted mustard has been known to irritate the skin.

How to remove a mustard stain

Use a dull knife or a spoon to gently scrape away as much mustard as possible. Be careful not to scrape so forcefully that you damage the fibers of the clothing.

Using cold water, rinse through the back of the stain to force the mustard out of the fabric. It's important to rinse from the back of the stain so that the mustard has less distance to travel out of the clothing.

Rub liquid laundry detergent onto the mustard stain. Allow the clothing to sit for up to 10 minutes. Rinse the stained area thoroughly. Repeat this step until no more mustard stain can be removed.

Following the directions, apply a stain remover to the mustard stain. Wash normally with liquid laundry detergent. Before drying the clothing, check to make sure all the mustard has been removed. If any hint remains, repeat the steps above.

2. Relieve congestion: The days are getting shorter and the nights are getting colder welcome to cold season. If you get congested this winter, open up your passages with an at-home mustard cure. Rub your chest with prepared mustard – remember to test it on a small area first – and place a damp, hot washcloth on top.

3. Treat a sore throat: Along with that bout of congestion, a sore throat will most likely accompany your cold. Maybe your sore throat is the result of yelling too loud at that awesome concert or frustrating football game. Either way, relieve that raw throat with mustard. Combine a dash of mustard with the juice of half a lemon, 1 tablespoon of salt, 1 tablespoon of honey and a 1/2 cup of boiling water. Mix the ingredients thoroughly and let it cool for 10 minutes. Gargle with the mixture several times. While you might not find it tasty, it will help.

How to fix window scratches

1/4 cup isopropyl alcohol 1 cup water

- 1 tablespoon ground
- mustard seed 1 tablespoon distilled white vinegar

Clear nail polish Run a fingernail across the damaged area. If the nail drops into a groove, the scratch is considered deep and may require professional repair; however, if the nail skips over the surface, the scratch is considered light and can easily be repaired at home.

Wash the affected portion of the window in a solution made from 1/4 cup isopropyl alcohol and 1 cup water. Dip a soft cloth in the mixture, then rub the surface of the glass to remove any dust or dirt.

Measure 1 tablespoon ground mustard seed into a small bowl. Add 1 tablespoon distilled white vinegar and stir well. Spread the vinegar treatment evenly over the scratch, then allow the paste to dry. Buff the vinegar mixture lightly with a dry, lint-free cloth to remove the paste. Work carefully using small, circular motions, applying pressure only where needed. Mustard seed is mildly abrasive and grinding it into the glass can lead to more scratches.

Re-wash the window with the alcohol solution, then fill in any remaining nicks or cracks with clear nail polish. Brush the polish over both sides of the glass, seal-ing the crack in a thin layer of varnish. Allow the polish to dry, and repeat, if necessary.

Burn in hell

Scovie Awards judges and top culinary experts awarded the 2013 Overall Grand Prize to Albuquerque company Lusty Monk Mustards for its Burn in Hell Chipotle Mustard.

Winner of 11 Scovie Awards since 2008, this is the first Overall Grand Prize win for Lusty Monk Mustards.

Lusty Monk Mustards owners Steve and Kris Monteith moved their operations from Asheville, N.C., to Albuquer-que in 2008, producing small batches of mustard out of the South Valley Economic Development Center kitchen. The product line includes Original Sin, an old-style coarse-ground original recipe mustard with a kick, Burn in Hell that features a smoky bite of chipotle and Altar Boy Honey Mustard. Jungle Heat Sauces & Jellies of Oshawa, Ontario, Canada, took home the grand prize award in the advertising and marketing division for their laid-back company logo.

Competition for the 2013 Scovie Awards was stronger than ever, with a recordbreaking 805 product entries. Dave DeWitt, founder of the Scovie Awards and National Fiery Foods and Barbecue Show, said entries came from 31 states and five countries including Australia, Bermuda, Canada, England and the United States.

We're thrilled that participation in the Scovie Awards continues to skyrocket. Companies recognize our awards as the most competitive blind taste tested event in the world," DeWitt said.

4. Banish skunk smell: Skunks have a strong, distinct odor that lingers in the air. If your vehicle happens to have an unpleasant encounter with the smelly member of the weasel family, there is a good chance it will need a thorough cleaning. Ğet rid of that skunk odor by pouring 1 cup of dry mustard into a bucket of warm water. Splash the mixture on your tires, wheel wells and underbody of the car. It will get rid of the pungent smell in no time.

5. Clean smelly bottles: In an attempt to save the environment, you probably decided to hold on to those old plastic bottles, reusing them from time to time. What you probably didn't plan on, however, is that, over time, a smell would inside form them. Sometimes simply

The Scovie Awards, an annual competi-tion in October, recognize the top fiery food products in the world. The awards were named after the Scoville scale, a measurement of the spicy heat of a chile pepper. It is one of the most competitive blind tasted food competitions. Hundred of products are entered and go through rigorous tastings to receive the top honors.

Visitors to the upcoming 2013 National Fiery Foods & Barbecue Show, March 1-3, 2013, in Albuquerque will encounter many of this vear's Scovie Award winners, including Garden Fresh Gour-met from Michigan, which took home a total of 21 Scovie Awards and eight first-place awards for products ranging from Sesame Seed Tortilla Chips to its All Fruit Salsa.

Hankerings from Arkansas City, Kan., will be there and is likely to be a new crowd favorite with its nine 2013 Scovie wins, including first-place wins for its Salvy Sousa brand OMG BBQ Sauce, Shake 'Em Up Steak Sauce and Boom Boom 2nd Gear hot sauce.

Celebrating 25 years, the 2013 National Fiery Foods & Barbecue Show will be held at Sandia Resort and Casino in Albuquerque. The show opens to the public at 4 p.m. Friday, March 1, 2013. Vendors from across the country will be in attendance. For more information visit www.fieryfoodsshow.

out and the unwanted odor will be gone.

6. Protect your plants: Has your garden fallen victim to visiting vermin? Keep these unwelcome pests away from your plants with mustard. Rub mustard on a tin pie pan and hang it on a post near the garden. Do this in all four corners of your garden. Animals, such as deer, won't like the smell and will keep out.

7. Prevent weeds from growing: If weeds are running rampant in your yard, get help from an unusual source. Recent studies by the Agricultural Research Service show that planting white mustard seeds will kill or suppress certain weedy grasses and annual broadleaf weeds from growing. This is because the compound that

Add pumpkin to your spicy tacos

Sunny Conley Chile Knights

What's the most popular taco in Mexico? It's taco al pastor, and its main ingredient is smoked and spicy shredded pork.

Another favorite taco, especially in Ensenada, Mexico (and San Diego), is fish small chunks battered, fried and wrapped in a steamed corn tortilla

In the Southwest, stuffed breakfast tacos reign. "Breakfast tacos" refer to "anything goes," and you're limited only by your imagination. Think seasoned meat, sausage, chorizo, eggs and veggies mixed with onions and sassy salsa as examples. Breakfast tacos can be served morning, noon and night, and in between as a snack.

And since anything goes, consider "pacos" - tacos filled with a tasty mixture that includes pumpkin or pumpkin spice.

Recently, I sampled tender beef stew meat topped with fresh blackberries slathered with a commercially prepared blackberry sauce that the home chef seasoned with pumpkin spice. As ghoulish as it sounds, it was berry good.

Pumpkin purée or cubes of cooked sweet pumpkin can be added to oodles of taco recipes, including vegetarian. Pacos make an ideal treat for Halloween and for a hearty autumn meal.

Spicy-Hot Chorizo Breakfast Pacos

6 ounces chorizo sausage 1/4 cup pumpkin purée 8 (6-inch) corn tortillas 6 eggs 1/4 cup milk 1/2 teaspoon pepper

1 cup shredded Monterey Jack cheese 1 dash hot pepper sauce or to taste

1/2 cup favorite salsa Crumble chorizo into a skillet over medium-high heat. Cook and stir until evenly brown. Add pumpkin purée. Stir thoroughly until pumpkin is heated through. Set aside. Heat one small iron skillet over medium heat for warming tortillas, and heat another skillet over high heat for egg mixture. In a medium bowl, whisk together the eggs, milk, salt and pepper. Spray the medium-heat skillet with cooking spray and pour in the eggs. Cook and stir until almost firm. Add the sausage-pumpkin mixture, and continue cooking and stirring until firm.

Meanwhile, warm tortillas for about 45 seconds per side in the other skillet until they are hot and crispy on the edges, but still pliable. Sprinkle a little shredded cheese onto each tortilla while it is still hot. Top with some of the scrambled egg and sausage-pumpkin mixture, and then add hot pepper sauce and salsa to your liking. Makes 8 tacos.

Spicy Pacos from the Patch

2 tablespoons vegetable oil 2 cups fresh pumpkin, cubed 1/2 cup vegetable stock 1 tablespoon ground cumin 1 to 2 teaspoons cayenne pepper Salt and ground black pepper to taste 12 flour or corn tortillas, warmed 3/4 cup fresh tomato, diced 1/2 cup onion, diced 1/2 cup ripe avocado, diced 3 tablespoons fresh cilantro, chopped

Heat the oil in a large skillet over medium heat. Cook the pumpkin in the heated oil 2 to 3 minutes. Stir in the vegetable stock, cumin, cayenne pepper, salt, and pepper. Cook until the pumpkin cubes are easily pierced through with a fork, 5 to 7 minutes. Fill warm tortillas with pumpkin; top with tomato, onion, avocado, and cilantro as desired. Makes 12 servings.

Serrano Chicken Pacos

2 bell peppers (1 red and 1 green), stemmed, seeded and chopped

(consider replacing the green bell with a mild heat poblano pepper)

Olive oil (about 1 tablespoon) Ground black pepper and salt to taste

1 teaspoon cumin

- 1 teaspoon chili powder
- 1 pound chicken tenderloins cut into bite-sized pieces
- 1 (15-ounce) can pumpkin purée

2 serrano peppers, stemmed, seeded and chopped (leave in seeds for a hotter hit)

Garnishes: 1/2 cup sharp Cheddar cheese, grated 1 tomato, stemmed and chopped bite-sized Spinach leaves torn

Cilantro, chopped (optional)

Sauté the sweet peppers in a small amount of olive oil seasoned with salt and pepper. Add the cumin and chili powder and cook until soft and golden. Put the cooked mixture in a bowl, cover to keep warm and set aside.

In the same skillet over low heat (add more olive oil if necessary), cook the chicken pieces (sprinkle with salt and pepper, if desired) until just done and no longer pink.

Add chopped serranos, canned pumpkin and frozen corn. Cook until thoroughly heated through and frozen corn is thawed. (Corn can also be roasted first in a small dry skillet over medium-high heat. This will add a smoky flavor to the mix.)

To build your paco, top a warm corn tortilla with the chicken-pumpkin mixture, roasted corn (if prepared separately), Cheddar cheese, spinach and cilantro. Serve immediately with favorite salsa and sour cream, if desired. Makes 6 tacos.

Toasted Avocado and Pumpkin Tacos

3 avocados peeled, pitted and mashed

- 1/4 cup onions, diced
- 1/4 teaspoon garlic salt

12 (6-inch) corn tortillas 1 bunch fresh cilantro leaves, finely chopped

Jalapeño pepper sauce or other hot sauce, to taste

Preheat oven to 325 degrees. In a medium bowl, mix avocados, onions and garlic salt. Arrange corn tortillas in a single layer on a large baking sheet, and place in the preheated oven 2 to 5 minutes, until heated through. Spread tortillas with the avocado mixture. Add pumpkin. Add salt and pepper to taste. Garnish with cilantro and sprinkle with jalapeño pepper sauce. Makes 6 servings.
