NM trust land back in play

Pegasus possible, East Mesa redux

By Todd G. Dickson

Las Cruces Bulletin

In an effort to bring greater transparency to the deals made by his office, State Land Commissioner Ray Powell is asking for community input on possible uses of three state trust land areas around Las Cruces.

Just prior to Powell holding a community input session Tuesday, April 3, at Las Cruces City Hall, his office announced that Pegasus Global Holdings put in lease applications for two sections of state trust land to build what is being described in the national media as a scientific ghost town

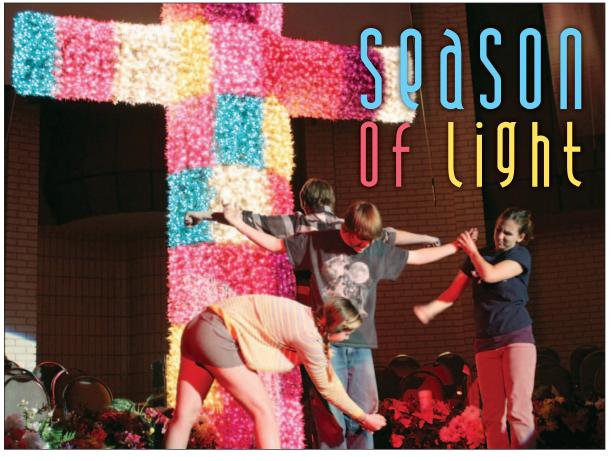

In state trust land around Coralitos Ranch west of the Las Cruces International Airport, Pegasus filed for a lease on more than 15,000 acres. Pegasus also is working through Lea County for a sublease of about 1,000 acres of state trust land near Hobbs, which is the other possible location for its Center for Innovation, Technology and Testing (CITE).

The CITE project would create a model smart city, for psuedo-real world research and development of technology such renewable energy innovations, intelligent traffic systems, next-generation wireless networks and smart-grid cyber security systems.

According to the State Land Office announcement, Pegasus would need to acquire some private land in the Hobbs location

That puts the Las Cruces location in a sweet spot for the project, which has been strongly promoted by Mayor Ken Miyagishima. The project during construction would create several hundred jobs, as well as during operations, said Don Britt, assistant land commissioner of commercial resources. That could translate into thousands of jobs related to CITE's work force, activity and support to the companies using CITE.

CITE's "footprint" would occupy 600

Martinez urges people to report child abuse

Governor also asks for more foster parents By Todd G. Dickson Las Cruces Bulletin

Public awareness has resulted in a 17 percent increase in child abuse reports in New Mexico. Gov. Susana Martinez is again urging New Mexicans to use the state's one-year-old hotline, as well as consider being foster parents to children taken out of an abusive situation.

Martinez talked about the hotline and need for foster parents Monday, April 2, at the Children's Garden Child Development Center on Sonoma Springs Avenue to kick off April as Child Abuse Awareness Month.

Before her speech, Martinez

read to 14 kindergarteners at the center and joined them in a silly class dance, which she joked would be on the front page of the next day's paper. National political observers keep citing her as a potential GOP presidential running mate, but Martinez has consistently said she's only focused on completing her first term as governor.

Joined by her former colleagues at the Doña Ana County District Attorney's Office, Martinez cited the "Baby Brianna" Lopez, case in which an infant was raped, tortured and killed 10 years ago in the county. Many people saw signs of abuse in "Baby Brianna" before that abuse became fatal, Martinez said, but people failed to report what they saw.

Current District Attorney Amy Orlando recalled a case of a father prostituting his child out of

Little questioned about residency

Lawmakers must live in proper district

By Todd G. Dickson
Las Cruces Bulletin

A liberal group is accusing a tea party-friendly lawmaker of not living in the district he's represented the past two years.

ProgressNow New Mexico of Albuquerque claims that Chaparral Republican Rick Little doesn't live in his House District 53 and is calling for the New Mexico secretary of state to investigate.

Little has responded that the group making the accusations didn't check his complex family situation thoroughly before making the accusation.

Little owns two residences in Chaparral, one in an expanded mobile home next to his moving business and another on the far northern end of the unincorporated community between White Sands Missile Range and El Paso.

Little listed his permanent residence as 305 Mesilla View, which is in District 53, but the other home, 2301 Nike Air Road, was in Rep. Joseph Cervantes' District 52 prior to redistricting. After redistricting, both residences are now in District 53.

The Easter story

Christ's resurrection gives all people hope that, through faith, 'good' can triumph

This weekend, many Christian churches across our city, our nation and throughout the world will be filled as congregations celebrate Holy Week and Easter, the most important holiday of the spiritual calendar.

The powerful Easter story commences as Jesus is betrayed by his friend Judas. Jesus is immediately arrested and placed on trial before a judge who was ordered by fearful government leaders to ensure that the "King of the Jews" would be found guilty.

Following the directed guilty verdict, Jesus was subjected to the most brutal and horrific treatment one can imagine, including public humiliation, mocking, torture, crucifixion and subsequent death while nailed to a wooden cross, among two common thieves, on a hillside near Jerusalem.

His broken body was laid to rest in a nearby tomb.

Jesus' death was mourned by friends and followers who could not believe that their Savior and healer was no longer living among them. How empty their lives must have felt.

Three days later, Christ's body had disappeared from the tomb and was feared to have been stolen. However, a short time later, he reappeared among his disciples and friends with his wounds still fresh. He proclaimed that the prophecies had been fulfilled, and that he had died for all the sins of man. After 40 days, Jesus ascended into heaven, giving hope of salvation for all believers.

What a joyful experience for those who were present at this miraculous event. Now, more than 2,000 years later, what a wonderf more than 2,000 years later, what a wonderful legacy we have received – the opportunity for a new beginning and the promise of eternal life.

The Easter story has been told many times, in many ways, from passionate sermons to solemn sunrise services to dramatizations, movies and music. Jesus' innocence, followed by extreme brutality, concluding with the understanding that all our sins can be forgiven, provides a powerful emotional narrative that reminds us of our need for fidelity to our faith and to our fellow men and women.

In America, we have the opportunity to enjoy religious freedom, a privilege that is denied in many places throughout the world. As Christians throughout our great nation gather this weekend with friends and family to enjoy the celebration of Christ's resurrection and our traditional Easter feasts, we should all give thanks that we live in an incredible country where we are safe from much of man's inhumanity to fellow men.

Our country is not perfect, but there is no other place I would prefer to live. According to a recent ABC News poll, 83 percent of Americans identify themselves as Christians. Only 4 percent say they follow a non-Christian religion and 13 percent profess no religion. I am proud that the United States of America is an exceptionally tolerant country that provides non-Christian individuals and organizations the opportunity and freedom to express their spirituality without fear of government interference.

As Christians, Jaki and I pray for all Las Crucens to have a safe and blessed Easter weekend. May the spirit of Christ be with every American. God bless America.

As you know, the 23rd Annual Bataan Memorial Death March took place March 25. Those who participated in the heavy weight category carried an additional 35 pounds sometimes more – during the march. After completing the trek, participants carrying food donated their non-perishable food to Roadrunner Food Bank – Southern New Mexico branch.

Marchers donated 15,300 pounds of food to the food bank, our agencies and the hungry New Mexicans we serve every week. Thank you to everyone who brought in food. Your support touches the lives of tens of thousands of New Mexico's hungry people.

Brightening the holiday

Thank you to everyone responsible for the success of the free Easter photography for families on Sunday, March 18, at GreenWorks in Downtown. This was our second photography session for families who can't afford professional portraits; the last one was in December 2011 with a Christmas theme. We intend to make this a twice-a-year event.

The generous sponsor/contributors included: Democratic Women of Doña Ana County who supplied snacks and drinks; The spacious GreenWorks facility which owner Doug Campion makes available for community events for the asking; Brilliant professional photographers Nicolas Bañales and David Shaw; Kate Mott of MVS Studios, who cut and supplied mattes for photos and matted each photo to give to the families moments after their posing; Duncan Noble Salon & Spa for hairstyling; Linda Comeau for floral props and stuffed animal gifts for the children; Scott McClanahan, Manager of OfficeMax who supplied the photographic ink and Crystal Bañales who printed the photos on site; and Mike Stewart, manager of Staples who supplied the photographic paper.

Special thanks for their participation go to Ernestine Simmons, Roberta Salazar-Henry, Pattie Gipson, Nicole Martinez, Pat Aguirre and photographer Michael Gutierrez. And of course thank you to the families who were such a delight to work with and who expressed their heartfelt thanks for the beautiful photographs.

It was all great fun and we look forward to doing this again in December 2012.

Colorful legislators part of state history

Eccentric Santa Fe solons sport unusual nicknames, pull shenanigans

As part of this column's centennial coverage, I am pleased to write about colorful legislators. I may miss a few from the early days before I arrived on the scene.

I begin with Louise Coe, the first woman elected to the state Senate. Her political rise was not easy. Women had attained the right to vote only six years earlier. Coe went on to become president pro tem of the Senate. She is the only woman ever elected to that

A strong, determined woman, Coe married into a Lincoln County ranching family that included George and Frank Coe who rode with Billy the Kid. Her husband Wilber Coe stayed home to run the Coes' "Ranch on the Ruidoso," the title of Wilbur's autobiography.

Because of Coes' unaccompanied status in Santa Fe, many stories grew around her, some of which she confesses in her book, "Lady and the Law Books." In 1940, she left the Legislature to run unsuccessfully for Former state Rep. Tweeti Blancett was part of a longtime San Juan County ranching family also related to the Coes. Tweeti had a rather brief but colorful career in the Legislature and still appears in the news, occasionally complaining about how natural gas developers treat her ranchland.

Tweeti brings up the interesting category of colorful names in the Legislature. Toots Green of Alamogordo, was a House Republican leader. At the same time, Smiley Gallegos of Clovis was a House Democratic leader.

The aforementioned were still in the Legislature when "Lucky" Luciano Varela was elected from Santa Fe. These aren't just nicknames we're talking about. These names appeared on the ballot. I didn't know of Varela's good reputation when he first ran, so I just couldn't bring myself to check the name of an infamous mobster.

Sen. Les Houston was an intimidating leader. He began his legislative career as a Democrat, but switched to Republican during the turbulent 1980s. Houston immediately became the Republican Senate floor leader. His battles with Democratic leader Manny Aragon are legendary.

Behind the scenes, the two likely had some laughs about their floor antics. But on the floor, they were bitter, and Houston usually won. He once was challenged that one of his maneuvers was illegal. Anything for which I can get 22 votes is legal, Houston firmly replied.

Despite his fierce manner, Houston privately admits that he cries at "Lassie" movies.

My vote for the most colorful legislator goes to Tom Benavides of Albuquerque's South Valley, which he once tried to get named Benavides County. Benavides has been a member of both the House and Senate and both the Democratic Party and Green Party. He also may have been a member of the Republican Party for a while.

Benavides wore an eye patch, which may

There are plenty of people who maintain that fairness requires everyone to have the same amount ...

have been a tipoff to his demeanor and loyalties. He looked like a good-time guy, but he didn't drink and had the stamina to be the last man standing during late night floor

Long after everyone else had lost interest, Benavides would sneak something through, like a bill to send him to Spain for a quincentennial celebration. The bill didn't fare as well in the House the following day, but somehow Benavides managed to arrange a special bottling of Benavides wine, a bottle of which resides somewhere in my house.

Many shenanigans are pulled by members of both houses to avoid being present for controversial votes. The state police search for members in all sorts of hiding places.

One night during a "Call of the Senate," Benavides was spotted at a reception for a visiting Spanish dignitary in Albuquerque. Police tracked him down but Benavides eluded them.

The following day, Benavides was questioned by leaders on the floor of the Senate as to his absence the night before. Benavides answered that he was, in fact, present and in his seat, but that he was having an out-ofbody experience in Albuquerque.

Lottery scratches fairness talk

Buying a ticket for wealth redistribution just a voluntary tax

Michael Swickard

In My Opinion

This last week was pretty tough on 100 million Americans. The Mega Millions lottery jackpot reached a reported $640 million. Oh, my!

Serious money – and to get it all anyone had to do was buy one lottery ticket. So there were many people who stood in long lines dreaming of what they would do with all of that money.

While all it took was having the one right ticket, some people chose to increase their odds from a reported 176 million to one, odds that reflect all of the combinations of numbers possible.

Get this: some people put $100 into the lottery, which reduced the lottery odds to a more manageable 1-in-1.7 million. Then, clutching the tickets they dreamed of $640 million, which was just six numbers away from them. They started mentally shopping for stuff.

Note: the real payout number they would receive is smaller since to take the lump sum payout one must divide the jackpot in half and then pay all applicable taxes. The effective jackpot was just over $200 million.

Still, that is serious money. But, it is not the $640 million some people repeated to each other in a frenzy. The media whipped up the interest and many Americans - who never play the lottery – felt compelled to stick some money into the pool. Good for them.

I think it is sweet of them to make some new American millionaires with their dollars. I really do. Our country needs more millionaires and this method works well enough. It does show that math education is lacking in many people. Not because they wager a dollar, rather, that they had any anticipation of winning. I do not know this to be true, but I bet at least one American quit his or her job in anticipation

For some people, even that much money might not even last a year, while for others they could change the world with that kind of money. So, by last Friday night, about 100 million people had placed $1.5 billion into the

Many were breathlessly waiting for the word that they and only they had won the biggest lottery in American lottery history. They dreamed of what the money would do. All of those people who were rude to them, well, it was going to take five bucks to send them a postcard because they would move so far away.

And that kind of money would remove the high school name of "Fish Face" from polite conversation. Lured by the dreams of having millions of dollars with only a small wager, 100 million people bought tickets for the lottery and 99.9 percent did not win. Curses! Who could have seen that coming?

The newspaper had stories last weekend of people who plaintively cried, "I really wanted that money." Three tickets split the big prize and there were a handful of others who won enough money to feel it, but most of the 100 million were brokenhearted and sad and left with just dreams that soured. It caused people to return to a common theme in today's society:

Is it really fair for one American to have more than another American? There are plenty of people who maintain that fairness requires everyone to have the same amount of "the good life." But in this case some people were going to put millions upon millions in their bank and others won nothing. Where is the government when we need fairness in our society? Oh, that is right, they run the lotteries.

Much of our political dialog is about wealth redistribution and fairness in our society. How can we concurrently have a mechanism for wealth concentration taking from many and giving to a few? The government loves the money the wealth concentration with lotteries gives them.

I like the lottery because it is a voluntary tax. People stand in lines to pay it. But would they, if fairness dictated, that everyone gets the same amount from buying a ticket? Doubtful. Lotteries exist to make winners and losers. Governments cannot talk about fairness and income redistribution while Everyone is free to buy those lottery tickets.

Justice for Trayvon

As a person of conscience, I want to add my voice to the clamor of voices crying out for justice for Trayvon Martin. Although we cannot bring his life back, we, as an American people – concerned at our core with issues of liberty and justice for all – must continue to speak up when issues of heinous injustice occur.

We will never know what Martin might have accomplished in his lifetime. Let us value, praise and sanctify his life by speaking out whenever and wherever crimes against people due to race, gender, class, sexual preference and all the many ways people are devalued and wounded occur.

May Martin's life not have been in vain. May we use his death to bring us to a collective understanding of the very real presence of racism in our American culture and society.

May Martin's sacrifice be our chance to stop racism in its tracks and replace hate with love.

Protect the Organs

This could be a pivotal moment in the history of southern New Mexico, Doña Ana County and Las Cruces. It is time to protect the precious Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks as a national monument. It will bring more prosperity and visitors to our community.

Wilderness is a sad story in New Mexico. According to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, our neighbor Arizona has 4,528,913 acres of designated wilderness areas while New Mexico has only 1,623,843 acres. This is a disgrace to New Mexicans

In addition, wilderness will be a boost to tourism and will help our local economy. It will be a job creator. The Republicans for Environmental Protection support the wilderness designation. It was President Ronald Reagan, who signed 43 wilderness bills into law designating a net total of 10.6 million acres, who said it best after signing legislation establishing the El Malpais National Monument in New Mexico: "I just have to believe that with love for our natural heritage and a firm resolve to preserve it with wisdom and care, we can and will give the American land to our children, not impaired, but enhanced."

It is time to designate the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks as a national monument.

On oil prices

A recent letter to the editor (Bud Russo, Las Cruces Bulletin, March 30) cited undisputed facts, but should more accurately have been undeniable opinion.

What is clear to me in the oil controversy is the fact that there is clearly two sides to this discussion.

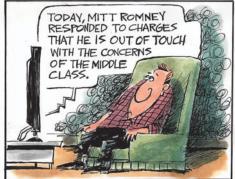

What is unclear to me is if speculators drive the price up (the price oil companies pay for crude) how does this translate to higher profits for the oil company? Part of the cost to produce oil is the cost of the material (crude) so how can it be said that cost doesn't change if the price of crude is increasing?

I am also not clear, if Russo admits the price of oil is determined by the world market, then a temporary drop in demand in the U.S. should have no impact if the demand is up in China and India – which it is.

Lastly, I am confused as to how speculators manufactured the threats from Iran and other unrest in the Middle East, and how that causes the fear in the ill-informed consumer to cause prices to spike? The unrest in the Middle East is real and it wasn't created by speculators, they simply observe it and act accordingly.

Agri-business and airlines, for example, speculate in oil futures to control their costs.

In short, I was more confused after reading this op-ed piece than I was before I read it. Some, not much, of the oil has recently been shipped to China. A couple of refineries have entered long scheduled short term shut downs mostly because their equipment is wearing out. The spot price of oil may be the same worldwide but the cost to ship it from the Middle East to a refinery in Louisiana has to be added in the true cost.

My understanding of the issue is fairly straight forward: It is a matter of supply and demand – as is the case with all commodities – and the demand is growing rapidly with the rise of nations such as China and India as well as other so-called Third World countries. As to the supply side of the question the debate continues.

Russo cites the lowest end of the U.S. reserves number but there is a great deal of information out there suggesting that the U.S. possesses reserves far in excess of the rest of the world combined.

Whatever those numbers are it seems to me that we ought to be developing every bit of oil we can get our hands on that provide U.S. jobs.

Whatever the numbers of our reserves, they are not enough. However much we consume we cannot live without it. I sat in line at gas stations in the '70s. Our reserves amount to days of supply and when that runs dry we are in deep trouble, and that is why the speculators are so active.

If we were pulling more crude out of our ground and if we had more functioning refineries operating in our country it would have a positive impact.

The president, be Democrat or Republican, can influence prices of commodities with sound policies and not questionable demagoguery.

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

'Et tu, uteri!'

Many country veterinary practitioners have invested money in their clinics for facilities to handle cattle and horses.

It is for the convenience of the vet but also for the restraint and treatment of the patient. However, there were those clients that assumed it was so the vet could charge them for an office call.

Dr. Blaine took an after-hours call from a third-generation cattlewoman in the rolling foothills of western Alberta

"We've got a prolapse and need you to come to the ranch straight away" she said away," she said.

"I've got this clinic here, eh?" he offered.

"Nay, it's too far, she's too big and she's down!"

An hour later Doc pulled into the pasture where the cow lay. Due to the mud, slush and frozen snow he was only able to get within 30 meters of the 1,500 pound Simmental cross. He positioned his vehicle so that he would have some light on the area.

The cow lay on a sloping hillock with her head to the upside. The prolapse, which he named Polly, as in, "Let's get Polly back in there!" was proportional to the size of her cow. That is to say, it was comparable to a four-foot-long, 50 pound breakfast burrito!

In spite of their efforts to manhandle the cow to face downhill so gravity was on their side, they were unable.

The rancher brought a Polaris ATV from the barn. Using a rope, they successfully moved the cow into the desired position.

Doc knew better than to tie the rope to his vet truck. It was already missing one side mirror and the passenger door didn't close properly from the previous cow encounter.

They tied it to the Polaris and snugged it.

At that moment the cow rose up and stood. She appeared to be in a trance. Quickly taking advantage, Doc smoothly injected an epidural. With the rancher's help they inverted Polly in a matter of minutes.

As soon as it plopped in, the cow had a miraculous recovery. She suddenly became aware of her situation, causing her to attempt an escape, dragging the Polaris behind her. They looked like two elephantine ice skaters in a post partum ballet.

The cow finally tangled in the line and they managed to slow her down. At that point she turned her newfound fury on her tormentors, attacking the good doctor and turning the 4-wheeler into a 3-wheeler.

Doc was leaning up against his pickup trying to catch his breath while the unlady-like rancher turned the air blue with curses, lamentations and threats of bovine felonies.

"Why does this always happen to me?" she moaned, "Why me?"

"I've got this clinic now, eh?" said Dr. Blaine.

Vaccinate your children

Shots are safe and provide important protection

By Dr. Joanne Ray and Dr. Michael Savitt

Vaccines save lives.

Vaccines do not cause autism.

These are two simple statements that lead to great debate and worry in America today.

Vaccines have transformed the landscape of modern medicine.

Many older physicians remember heart wrenching days spent performing spinal taps on babies with Haemophilus influenza, listening to the awful gasps of whooping cough in the pediatric ward and trying to comfort the mother whose bright, life-filled teenager died of Meningococcus meningitis.

We may not all remember the days when small-pox killed entire villages, but many of us have family members who lived through the measles and polio outbreaks in the 1940s and '50s.

People lined up and fought to get their children and themselves vaccinated in the early years of vaccines – even with much higher failure rates and severe side effects.

These diseases were tangible: nearly every family had a member who died of or was affected by a vaccine-preventable disease. Before vaccines, Polio paralyzed 10,000 children in the United States every year.

German measles (Rubella) caused birth defects and mental retardation in as many as 20,000 newborns. Diphtheria was a common cause of death in school-aged children.

Haemophilus influenza bacteria caused meningitis in 15,000 children a year, causing permanent brain damage in many. The disappearance or decrease of many childhood diseases has led some parents to question whether vaccines are still necessary. Furthermore, many people are worried that vaccines may be the cause of diseases such as autism. These concerns have caused some parents to delay vaccines or withhold them altogether from their children.

Unfortunately, falsified research led to the very wrong association of vaccines and autism.

Parents, advocates and scientists hopped on the bandwagon hoping this was the explanation and, if not a cure, at least a path to prevention. Now, years later we know the research results were fabricated; the associations untrue. Scientists have performed studies on hundreds of thousands of children and have proven there is no relationship between vaccines and autism.

We also have found that with careful observation, children with autism can be diagnosed at a very young age, long before many of the wrongly called "autism-causing vaccines" are given.

The CDC has released data that reports the rate of children diagnosed with autism spectrum disorders in the U.S. has increased from one in 110 children to one in 88 children.

We don't know why, exactly. Some of us believe we are more adept at diagnosing autism than before. Many children who may have been diagnosed in the past with such things as speech delay or developmental delay are now diagnosed with autism. Others believe there is a true increase in rates – and we don't know why.

It has been hypothesized by some that there may be an environmental link. Epigenetics, the study of how the outside environment affects our genetic structure, has become a focus of much medical research. It is the No. 1 issue for the American Academy of Pediatrics in our 2012 Agenda for Children. Many scientists believe we will find the reason for the autism increase through epigenetic research.

It has already been shown that there is some kind of genetic basis behind autism through twin and other studies.

Unfortunately, the vaccine controversy has caused attention and resources to focus away from a number of promising leads. We are very lucky to live in a vaccines-for-children state.

Vaccines are free for any child in the state of New Mexico. Doctors are able to protect our littlest patients against vaccine-preventable illness without worry about high costs to their families.

Parents and pediatricians have the same endgoal: healthy, happy futures for our children, our patients

Vaccinate and keep our children safe.

Racing kicks off C4CR year of fundraising

The first Cowboys for Cancer Research fundraiser of the year takes place Saturday, April 7, at the Southern New Mexico Speedway in Las Cruces.

Gates open at 5:30 p.m. for the second annual Cowboys for Cancer Research Benefit Night. Racing begins at 7:45 p.m. and admission is $10.

Since 1982, Cowboys for Cancer Research has worked to raise funds for breast cancer research and awareness in New Mexico.

"This is our 30th year and we decided to set a goal," said Geraldine Calhoun, co-chair of Cowboys for Cancer Research. "We got so close last year, we decided to go for an even million dollars."

Last year, Cowboys for Cancer Research, together with the New Mexico State University Aggies are Tough Enough to Wear Pink campaign, raised a combined $955,000 in cash and in-kind contributions.

The cash was recently distributed to the two endowments where cancer research is done in New Mexico.

Of the total $480,000 cash raised, $330,000 was placed in the C4CR Endowed Fund at NMSU. The Alma Cohorn Memorial Endowment at the University of New Mexico Cancer Center received the remaining $150,000.

NMSU Aggies Are Tough Enough to Wear Pink was established in 2007, and the two organizations have together grown the project exponentially.

"They are a good partner and together we are a winning team," Calhoun said. "It just shows the generosity of our community, as well as the whole state."

Calhoun said there have been contributions from soldiers in Afghanistan and donors in Canada.

Following the speedway event will be a steady stream of fundraisers from now through October, which is Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

On July 28, there will be a Sheriff's Posse Ride for the Cure, with proceeds going to C4CR.

A golf tournament is planned for Aug. 31.

The annual NMSU Aggies are Tough Enough to Wear Pink football game will be Sept. 29 against the University of Texas-San-Antonio. Many NMSU Tough Enough to Wear Pink events will take place the week of the pink football game.

The annual C4CR Team Roping, Silent Auction and Dinner-Dance will be Oct. 12-14. The Mesilla Valley Maze will have a C4CR day Oct. 27.

The American Interplanetary Society launches early effort to promote concept of space travel

By Michael Shinabery

Editor's note: This is part one of a three-part story.

America had been mired in the Great Depression for six months when, on April 4, 1930 in New York, "eleven men and one woman gathered in the third floor apartment of a small brownstone," the August 1980 Journal of the British Interplanetary Society (JBIS) said. Scientists attended, and there was a lawver and an executive: several were science fiction writers. Historian Fletcher Pratt showed up, meeting in the apartment of New York Tribune reporter and science editor G. Edward Pendray, and his wife, Leatrice, a writer under the nom de plume Lee Gregory. MIT graduate David Lasser, editor of Wonder Stories, was also present, said "The Rocket Pioneers" (Messner/1958).

All yearned to "promote the development of rockets," Pendrav wrote in a 1967 article reprinted in 1985 in "First Steps Toward Space." The attendees christened themselves the American Interplanetary Society, and two months later published their first Bulletin of the American Interplanetary Society. Within the four mimeographed pages they predicted that "'a trip to the Moon may be possible within 15 years.'

"Unquestionably," the JBIS said, "the founders of the American Interplanetary Society were inspired by their own and others' tales of flights to other worlds rather than upon any technical foundation. In brief, they were romanticists, not engineers."

They were drawn together by the dream they all shared – the vision of sending vehicles up into space," said 'The Rocket Pioneers." But if they were visionary about space ships, they were more realistic in their approach to one of the aims they established for their new society: the promotion of interest in interplanetary expeditions."

Two years later, membership had swelled to 114, the JBIS said. By then the AIS was publishing the Bulletin monthly, and with the May 1932 issue changed the publication's name to Astronautics.

Many of the articles were summaries of papers "presented at subsequent Society meetings," Pendray wrote. The topics explored the "wide gap (that) existed between current ideas and technical literature about rockets and the practical task of developing them as a potential vehicle for space exploration."

To that end, soon after the founding, the AIS in 1930 wrote the Army's Office of the Chief of Staff of Ordnance, according to the JBIS, "requesting any available data on rockets.

The Nov. 15 reply stated "this department has not conducted experiments with long range rockets," and suggested the AIS contact "Albert Goddard" in Roswell, misidentifying Robert Goddard.

Two letters to Goddard, who was experimenting with liquid fuel, resulted in polite explanations that he felt his efforts were not "sufficiently complete for a presentation. Later, Goddard was more amenable; in a July 29, 1940, letter reprinted in "The Pa-pers of Robert H. Goddard," he suggested a meeting, inviting Pendray to Roswell.

In the early 1930s, American newspapers, there seemed little reporting on Goddard's work. Conversely, Pendray said, "there had appeared in American newspapers and popular magazines ... numerous articles about rocket experiments in other countries, especially in Europe.'

So, in 1931, Pendray, as the group's vice president, and Leatrice, traveled "abroad," Pendray wrote. As "official representatives" of the AIS, the Pendrays (who paid their own expenses), went off on a combined pleasure/business tour of the continent. In Berlin they met with Willy Ley, who in the late 1920s had helped found Germany's Society for Space Travel.

"There was," Pendray wrote, "something of a communications problem: Ley's English wasn't very good at that time, and our German was non-existent. It was not easy to carry on technical conversations, but with the aid of drawings, sketches, and patient explanation on Ley's part, we managed it after a fashion."

The most memorable moment," the JBIS documented, "was when (the Pendrays) witnessed firings" of a rocket. Pendray later stated that it was at that moment he first "'visualize(d) how a spaceship would fly.'

The AIS' next step was to build their first rocket. Pendray, in "First Steps Toward Space," said the group "patterned" their model after the one the Society for Space Travel had built and launched.

The group constructed the 7-foot rocket in the basement of the Pendrays' apartment complex. Leatrice sewed the parachute, which was packed into "a ten-cent-store saucepan." On Nov. 12, 1932, on a New Jersey farm, a static test of the gasoline and liquid oxygen propellants damaged the rocket.

The second model reached "about 250 feet" altitude on May 14, 1933, far below the hoped-for apogee of one mile because of a burst tank. "The rocket dropped into the water of lower New York Bay, from which it was rescued by rowboat," Pendray said.

More launches followed with varying success. The fourth, a 7-1/2-foot rocket powered by gasoline and liquid oxygen, lifted off from Staten Island on Sept. 9, 1934. Fifteen seconds later the rocket went into a "ten-milea-minute dive" and "struck the water with a tremendous splash," "The Rocket Pioneers" said.

Pendray, whom the book quoted, stated: "The calculations of the official observers later indicated that its velocity at one point exceeded 1,000 feet a second – about 700 miles an hour, or nearly the speed of sound." According to Pendray, that launch preceded by six months a similar flight by Goddard.

"One of the important lessons the experimenters learned from this rocket shot was that their research program was more amateurish than professional, more enthusiastic than scientific," said "The Rocket Pioneers. "It had been great fun to build rockets and shoot them, but common sense now suggested that before they built further rockets they should apply themselves seriously to what was obviously their major problem, the designing of a dependable motor.

By then, the AIS had undergone a name change to the American Rocket Society. On April 6, 1934, attendees at the fourth annual meeting voted the change.

'The rationale," said the JBIS, "was that 'interplanetary' was felt not scientific enough and that it 'repelled' many who would otherwise join. The resolution made it clear, however, that the change did not imply 'that we have abandoned the interplanetary idea.'

press release claims Little actually lives at Nike Air Road with his wife, Cecilia, and his family.

But a drive to Chaparral reveals there is more on Mesilla View Drive than what ProgressNow claims.

There are five buildings, starting with a thrift store at 305-1 Mesilla View, and ending with Little's "R" Enterprises moving business at 305-5 Mesilla View. At the 305-4 lot on the block is a mobile home with a permanent addition, a fenced-in yard, a residential driveway and a watchdog. The house at 2301 Nike Air Road is a roomier, more traditional home, which Little said he moved to in 2000.

"It was actually the largest house I've moved in one piece," Little said.

Little said he and his wife Cecilia divorced in 2007, and 305 Mesilla View Drive became his primary residence, something Little said he was clearly aware he needed to maintain when he decided to run for office. Little was elected in 2010, beating Democrat incumbent Nate Cote of the unincorporated community of Organ east of Las Cruces. Cote is trying to win back District 53 in the upcoming election.

According to ProgressNow, many Chaparral residents believe Little to now be living at the Nike Air residence. Little admits to spending a lot of time there as he and his ex-wife are in the process of reconciling. But there are Chaparral residents who will vouch for Little also living at the 305 Mesilla View address.

For his business and for the legislative duties, Little said he is often on the road.

Even though the Nike Air home is now in District 53, Little has kept his residency address as 305 Mesilla View Drive in his candidacy application.

State rules for candidacy residency don't provide a clear answer to the question being raised by ProgressNow.

According to the Secretary of State Bureau of Elections' handbook for candidates:

"For the purpose of determining residency, permanent residence shall be resolved in favor of that place shown on the person's certificate of registration as his permanent address, provided the person resides on the premises.

This guideline refers to state statute 1-1-7.1, which simply defines residency as the place 'where he physically resides."

Pat Davis, executive director of Progress-Now New Mexico, has called Little's status as lawmaker "illegitimate" and has accused him of "fraud against voters on a monumental acres, Britt noted.

The Las Cruces location also is problematic, however, for the proposed national monument effort, which includes the area near Coralitos Ranch.

Powell expressed frustration that the wilderness supporters who have switched to seeking national monument status for large areas of mostly federal land only approached the State Land Office about their plans about a week and a half ago, even though it had been considered as an option for about a year.

"It was a real shock for me to learn this at the 11th hour with Pegasus at our doorstep," Powell said.

Throughout New Mexico, nearly all of the large federal land holdings include pockets of state trust land. Powell said he doesn't want state trust land in areas such as wilderness or national monuments because it could lead to conflicting uses. He cited the example of a former state land commissioner candidate's desire to open a resort hotel on state trust land at Peterogylph National Monument by Albuquerque. During his previous term as the state land commission, Powell negotiated with federal agencies to swap the land out of the monument.

If national monument status is given to land in Doña Ana County, Powell said he wanted to make sure it includes language to ensure state trust land gets traded out.

"That's why we need to talk to each other early on in the process," Powell said.

Working out these kinds of concerns cooperatively with all interested parties can avoid wrangling it out in court later, he

State Sen. Steve Fischmann said he was part of a call by wilderness supporters to Pegasus executives. Based on what was said at the conference call, Fischmann said he believed the conflicts between Pegasus and the wilderness supporters can be worked out.

Although Powell said he appreciates the desire to protect natural areas and open spaces, he also is bound by the state constitution to make money off the trust land for education and some medical facilities.

'I can't allow you lock up tens of thousands of acres of trust land intended to make money for the schools in the hopes of a federal land trade," Powell said. "That's why the land trades need to be written in at the beginning."

Also of interest to those attending the meeting was the status of the large East Mesa annexation for the now defunct Vistas at Presidio development. With the expiration of the business lease and master plans, the land remains in city limits with general zoning still in place.

Rather than have a company master plan and develop the land, Powell said he wants to begin a community conversation to shape the future development plans for the land in a direction the residents feels is a good fit

The failure of the controversial Vistas at Presidio offer a real opportunity for the State Land Office to work with the city to better meet community desires, Britt said.

Only after this kind of process is completed is when the office will approve business development leases, Powell said.

Providing a more transparent process for development of state trust is something Powell said he is committed to, even though the New Mexico Constitution gives the state land commissioner great autonomy.

NMSA to extend runway

Spaceport runway to cost $7 million more

The New Mexico Spaceport Authority (NMSA) board of directors recently approved a 2,000-foot extension to the existing runway at Spaceport America in order to better accommodate Virgin Galactic's spaceline operations.

The original 10,000-foot-by-200-foot runway was designed based on the known requirements at the time it was developed in 2008.

David MacKay, Virgin Galactic's chief test pilot, gave a presentation to the NMSA board Wednesday, March 28, on the need for longer

"Now that Virgin Galactic has performed more flight tests and analyses with their SpaceShipTwo spacecraft and WhiteKnightTwo mothership, their flight requirements are now better known and we have determined that a 2,000-foot extension of the existing runway is necessary to ensure safer operation," said NMSA Executive Director Christine Anderson. "Having a 12,000-foot runway will make Spaceport America more competitive in attracting future commercial space customers, as well as servicing our current anchor tenant's requirements.'

The NMSA board approved spending $7 million on the runway extension out of spaceport's $209 million construction budget.

Vietnam veterans gather

Wounds healing from divisive war

By Todd G. Dickson

When Blas Reyes returned stateside after serving his tour of duty at Vietnam, he didn't know that the country had become divided.

As he rode the bus back to a base in Oakland, Calif., in 1970, Reyes said he was puzzled to see people shouting and throwing rocks at the bus.

John Holguin, who returned from Vietnam in 1968, also to California, said he had a similar experience.

"We were basically shunned, for a lack of a better word," Holguin said.

Reyes and Holguin were able to talk about their experiences at a much more friendly venue and time while attending the Welcome Home Vietnam Veterans day-long event at Veterans Memorial Park in Las Cruces Saturday, March 31.

Sitting next to Art Ramirez and a sign he made for the event, the three men from the Vado-Berino area agreed they were treated better upon their return to southern New Mexico than on the West Coast.

Still, Ramirez said, there wasn't the kind of welcome home events that veterans returning from other wars enjoyed, which is why he was pleased to take part in the Las Cruces event.

During his speech, White Sands Missile Range Commander Brig. Gen. John Ferrari acknowledged that Vietnam veterans weren't treated as they should have been. But, he said, the country is again asking for their help.

The number of surviving veterans of World War II and even the Korean War are becoming fewer every day, he said. Meanwhile, new veterans are returning from Iraq and Afghanistan and they will need help transitioning back to civilian life.

"That burden fall to you all as the elder 'statesmen' of veterans," Ferrari said.

Valley View staff reorganized

Changes made to reverse dropping school performance

Superintendent Stan Rounds announced Wednesday, April 4, Valley View Elementary will undergo a reorganization targeted at improving student academic performance.

The day before, Rounds unveiled to school staff and Valley View parents what he described as a "turnaround plan," which goes into affect in the 2012-13 school year.

Rounds said Valley View was selected for the transformation because data from the New Mexico Standards Based Assessment showed low student performance has not improved overall in at least five years. Results from the Measures of Academic Progress assessments also showed the student proficiency is not meeting national norm targets.

A key component in the plan will be the selection of a staff that fits the reorganized model, Rounds said.

"It is important that the faculty and parents understand the fundamental reason why this turnaround plan is needed," Rounds said. "We must take a new approach to support Valley View's children. Reconstituting the faculty is one proven step in helping schools reverse downward trends."

Steven Sanchez, Las Cruces Public Schools associate superintendent for learning, teaching and research, said this plan does not mean Valley View's teachers and staff are not capable educators.

Rather, he said, when a school must go through a sweeping reorganization, they must "find staff to fit a new mold that incorporates differences in how we approach student learning - it's key to helping children through an academic shift."

ROBINSON

Rounds said of the current staff, those to remain are the principal, cafeteria workers and custodial personnel. Robinson anticipates some of the existing staff will apply to stay at Valley View and will be up for the challenge of restructuring how the school operates.

"I know it may seem like a radical change, but the first priority has to be the students," said Principal Sharon Robinson. "We have many, many dedicated employees here and I know they will be understanding that our consistently low student performance is what drives the decision to take a different approach so that our kids will be successful."

Rounds has scheduled a meeting to discuss the turnaround plan with any LCPS employee interested in possibly joining the Valley View staff. The meeting is scheduled for 5 p.m. Monday, April 9, in the Valley View cafeteria, 915 E. California St.

Rounds said employee interviews and selections will begin almost immediately. He anticipates the new staff to be selected before the end of April in preparation for many of them to work during the summer.

Among the requirements to join the staff will be a commitment from licensed educators to apply for National Board Certification – a rigorous educational process to obtain advanced teaching credentials. Plus, the staff must participate in professional development and will have a longer employment contract than other schools.

By 2013-14, the students will also move to a longer calendar school year, giving them more time for instruction, Sanchez said.

The superintendent also met with Valley View parents to explain the plan and ask for their support.

'Turning things around can't stop at the classroom doors," he said. "I will invite each and every parent to help us, whether it's at home or as a school volunteer."

Valley View, which for years has offered specialized services for children with disabilities, will continue to have experienced special education teachers. The school will also maintain a gifted program and all other curricular offerings.

Good times, bad times, letting go

Jim Hilley Deflections

The New Mexico State Aggies are one of the hottest teams in baseball.

Their 14-game winning streak is the longest in the country (as of Wednesday, April 4). Their 10-runs-per-game scoring average is 1.6 more per game than the second place team, Buffalo. It's a great time to be an Aggie baseball fan.

But times have not been so good for coach Rocky Ward and his father, assistant coach Gary Ward. Kathy Ward, Gary's wife and Rocky's mother, has been in the hospital battling serious

Life has its ups and downs. They are just not supposed to happen at the same

The situation made Rocky Ward a little philosophical as he talked to the Bulletin Wednesday, April 4.

"I had to leave a couple of weeks ago to be with Mom, and I wasn't there for the two games against Arizona," he said. "Dad didn't make the trip initially because she was sick before we left. I wasn't there for the Texas Tech games.

Nate Shaver and Mike Evans did an outstanding job in filling in for us, but more importantly, the ball club took responsibility for itself."

Rocky Ward said he was incredibly proud of his team, but had conflicting feelings about not being able to be with

"I talked to them after the Arizona series," he said. "I was honest with them, I said 'Guys, I'm jealous I wasn't able to be there. I was so proud of you, but I am trying to figure out how not to be upset that I didn't get to be a part of it.'

Ward said the team seemed to understand.

We had about a 30-minute talk about what happened that kind of let me feel involved. They said, 'You should have seen this play, you should have seen that play,' it was really a neat experience."

Ward said it made him think of things his father, Gary, a hall of fame coach, used to say.

"When I was a young kid playing and listening to his lectures in the prime of his career at Oklahoma State, I'd travel with him some when he would go speak at coaches conventions and things like that," Ward said. "He always said our responsibility as coaches is not how many games we win or lose or how well we teach, our job is to make ourselves useless, or make ourselves obsolete.

'It didn't make much sense to me, but what he was saying was, the ultimate success as a coach is when an individual has been trained to a level he no longer needs you, that he knows what to do, when to do it, how to do it.

"He can prepare himself to play and

NMSU defeats UNM to push win streak to 14 games

By Jim Hilley

The No. 20 New Mexico State baseball team put the nation's longest winning streak on the line against Western Athletic Conference foe Nevada starting Thursday, April 5, as the race for the WAC regular season crown begins.

NMSU will continue its series with the Wolfpack at 6 p.m. Friday, April 6, and at 11 a.m. Saturday, April 7.

Coach Rocky Ward expects a "challenging"

"They're an interesting club, they pitch pretty well in the top three guys and they have a pretty good closer – they get a little short after that," Ward said. "But now in the league instead of playing four-game series, we are playing three, so they have enough pitching to

"They are pretty decent in the middle of their lineup and yet they are not a great offensive club," Ward said.

As far as the computer ratings, they are the second-highest power rated team in the league

"It will be a challenging weekend," Ward said. "Nevada has always been a big rival, probably the biggest conference rival of everybody."

The Aggies extended their winning streak to 14-games Tuesday, April 3, by defeating instate rival New Mexico 7-5 at Presley Askew

It is the third time this season NMSU has defeated the Lobos and the fifth-straight victory over UNM dating back to the 2010 season. The Aggies are now 23-8 on the season while UNM falls to 12-15. ### Heredia, Selby will lead hoops squads at new high school

By Craig Massey

When Lori Selby and Steve Heredia got a tour of their new workplace Friday, March 30, there was more to it than just a big, beautiful, new gymnasium.

Selby was hired as Centennial High School's girls basketball coach last week, and Heredia was named the new school's boys basketball

"There was a tremendous buzz of energy throughout the entire school," Heredia said. "The excitement amongst the community and the staff members there is great. It was amazing. I felt like a kid on Christmas Day.

"The gym and everything is great, but from an academic standpoint, the technology and the foundation are there to really advance education," Selby said. "As a teacher, I found it very

Heredia and Selby are both from Las Cruces - Heredia attended Las Cruces High where he graduated in 1994, and Selby graduated from Mayfield High School in 1997. Both got their degrees at New Mexico State University and both spent time learning the craft of coaching

Heredia comes to Centennial from Chaparral High School, a relatively new school in the Gadsden Independent School District. Heredia, an assistant boys coach at LCHS for nine years under Mike Carr and Mike Smith, was Chaparral's second-ever coach for four years.

He took over a Lobos team that had won only one game the previous season (the school's first), and led them to 10 wins in his first season.

In the second year, Heredia helped Chaparral reach the district title game and qualified for the state tournament. He lost nine seniors from that team and season three was a rebuilding year. Last season, Chaparral lost in the semifinals of the district tournament.

"I feel like I helped (Chaparral) get headed in the right direction," Heredia said.

The Centennial Hawks will compete in District 3-4A with Chaparral, Deming and Santa Teresa, which won the state championship last Selby is the second LCHS girls assistant coach to move on to become a head coach for another school in the city in recent years. Ben Trujillo, also an assistant under LCHS head coach Matt Abney, just completed his second season at Oñate High School. "I think that speaks about our program and how we do things here," said Abney. "I'm very excited for Lori. There are very few assistant coaches who have the passion that she has and works as hard as she does, and she'll carry that into this head coaching job. She'll bring a lot of energy and do a good job."

closer Scott Coffman added another save to his total making it six on the year and 19 on his career. He went two innings, striking out two batters without giving up a hit or a walk.

T've been lucky enough to do this for the past couple of seasons, so I understand what I have to do now," Coffman said. "It was a total team effort and I have to give credit to everyone on the team."

Ward said Wednesday, April 4, the victory over the Lobos was an indication of how much the Aggie squad has improved.

"Historically, we would not have won yesterday's game," he said. "We didn't play very well late, we left eight or nine runners on in the last four innings, we couldn't make the key base hit to break it open, yet we were able to pitch well enough at the end to maintain the lead.

"We've been able to do that five or six times this year where historically it's not something our clubs have been able to do. We have always had to score late to be able to control the game from the offensive side. This team can control the game from the defensive side better than any team I've had."

Ward said the biggest difference between this team and past Aggie teams is the pitching.

This team can control the ball from the defensive side.

ROCKY WARD, NMSU baseball coach

"There's no question this has been the best starting rotation since I've been here," he said. "The quality of pitching top to bottom, from the starting rotation to the depth of the pitching staff has been outstanding."

Coffman has been a big part of that, Ward said.

We've had some pretty good closers," he said. "In 2002-03 we had a couple of kids named Garrison and Smith who really put up good numbers as closers, but from a standpoint of really having a guy that you 100 percent feel like the game is over when he enters, Scott is the only guy that I have ever had that feeling. With Scott, there's not anybody that doesn't believe he's going to come in and get it done."

Coffman got it done against the Lobos.

"He came in with the bases loaded, they had two runs in the had all the momentum and nobody out," Ward said. "He strikes out a couple and gets a pop-up and we are out of the inning.

"Nobody in our dugout is surprised by it, yet statistically speaking, you don't get out of a bases-loaded, nobody-out jam very often. The batting team in that scenario scores something like 95 percent of the time. It takes a pretty special effort to get that done and Scotty just keeps find-he can take responsibility for himself and accountability for his actions and for his play."

As Ward has had to deal with his mom's illness, he has seen that principle in action.

"I look at this stretch as a group of guys that have truly done that," he said.

'They've proven to themselves that they don't need me – that's kind of hard. Most of us who are coaches are servers, we are trying to give something of ourselves so that people have a better life. It's kind of hard when you train a guy to the point he doesn't need you anymore, it's kind of hard to get your mind around it."

I believe you're right coach, but you are not alone. I bet moms feel the same way.

coach, heading into the 2011-12 season, she had an overall record of 97-29. She was Abney's varsity assistant from 2005

"This is a great opportunity for me," said Selby. "I've always wanted to be a head (varsity) coach in this town and the timing is perfect. There is a lot of talent in this town.

'Working with Coach Abney prepared me for this," she said. "He's been a great role model for me. I'll take what I've learned, but also do my own thing, too. There will be a lot of energy here and this will be a fun place to be."

Spring football

Looking for signs of improvement

Jack Nixon Jack's Corner

So what do you want to see from this year's spring football drills? Probably the same thing as me, a continuation of the positive signs that show the Aggies are heading toward a winning year and their first bowl game since 1960.

To me, those signs would be the emergence of a real pass rush, the continuation of the yard chewing, point producing offense and special teams that are consistent game in and game out.

New defensive coordinator Dave Elson has brought along Romeo Bandison as defensive line coach to bring more vigor and fire to the pressuring of the quarterback. As far as personnel to make it happen, Donte Savage is back to team with Walton Tamopeau to keep opposing quarterbacks from getting too comfortable. Linebackers can help with the rush as well. They will miss Boyblue Aeolua, but Juco transfer Trashaun Nixon is expected to take a starting spot with Bryan Bonilla, Alex LaVoy and B. J. Adolpho in the mix.

The Aggies are expected to show a variety of looks on defense with both four and three down linemen putting their hands down, depending on what makes sense in the situation. Restocking the secondary is another job that will be approached this spring.

The hiring of Jerry McManus to replace Doug Martin was done to keep the offense on the same track of success as last season. McManus comes from the same system and will have Andrew Manley back to air it all out at quarterback but there is an opening in the running back department.

Germi Morrison is recovering from surgery, Lavoris Powell and Akeelie Mustafa are juco's with good statistics who appear ready to take over for Kenny Turner. Robert Clay is still around as well, having shown himself as a steady ground gainer in 2011.

Special teams are an area that has struggled to be consistent. Most years, DeWayne Walker has had to use his young players on coverage with overall squad depth gradually improving. Depth has been the one thing that has been a slow build for all Aggie football coaches since the 1970s. When athletes with more field experience are on the front lines of special teams, NM State will have taken a major step forward toward a regular winner.

Getting senior placement man Tyler Stampler back to his sophomore efficiency would be as joyous a spring site as a roadrunner scurrying onto the West Mesa.

This year's spring drills will run all month and will be the threshold to NM State's step forward to ending their bowl drought.

Free volleyball: The Aggies are hosting a one-day tournament Saturday with UNM, Arizona, UTEP and a squad of recent alums all taking part. It starts at 8 a.m. Saturday in the Pan Am.

All in a days work for NMSU student athletes

James Hall Associate Athletics Director, Sports Administrator & Student Development

The morning sun peaks over the Organ Mountains and you hear the football student athletes yelling with excitement as they work against each other to defend or catch passes and stop or break a long run.

At the same time, the baseball and softball student athletes are lifting weights to become bigger, stronger and faster, while the basketball student athletes are in the gym concentrating on individual shooting and defensive drills.

The swimming team has been in the pool perfecting their craft while the divers are doing acrobatic and gymnastic dives into the pool. The tennis teams make their way to the athletic training room for pre-treatment; heat packs, stem treatment and specific stretches before they hit the courts to swing the racquets for

Meanwhile, the golfers are on the practice green chipping and putting away for birdies while the cross country runners pound the payment around Las Cruces streets getting one step closer to a victorious morning run.

The track student athletes run with the wind as they glide around the track and the field athletes heave their equipment with grace. Equestrian student athletes bounce up and down as the horses gallop around the ring as other members direct their horse around barrels making sharp

Student athletes get cleaned up, catch their second wind, grab a quick breakfast and are off to the most important part of the day; classes, where they think about homework, quizzes, tests, papers, a group project or just take notes from today's lecture.

Time to grab lunch with friends and return moms text to let her know you're doing fine. Depending on what they haven't done in the morning athletic session, it's either time to practice, lift weights, or watch film.

Afterward, it's off to study hall to meet with a tutor, mentor or study. A visit to see the academic coordinator to make sure they're meeting all NCAA academic rules and regulations or get a jump start on preadvising for next semester's classes might be beneficial.

The thought of career development pops in their head and getting some direction in that area would be advantageous. However, the student athlete has to put a hold on that thought as their mind quickly shifts to this week's road opponent and then the thought of making the winning play creeps in their mind and brings a smile to their face.

As night falls, their bodies tire as they finally get a chance to relax watching their favorite reality TV

Their eyelids droop and they begin to drift off to sleep thinking about meeting the morning sun and doing it all over again for their chance to get one step closer to becoming a champion and ultimately becoming a proud alumni of NMSU.

Clearing up the clichés of golf

Golfers love 'em, but what are we really saying?

Charlie Blanchard Golf Doctor

Don't you just love clichés?

These are the clever little sayings you'll hear around any golf course – the old "saws" people have heard for ages. You know, "drive for show, putt for dough." And "never up, never in."

It seems I've been hearing more "mental" type clichés lately. Perhaps it's because the big-name guys announcing in the TV booth have just about run out of anything new with swing analysis, and are now thinking of other material.

So, I thought I would explore some of my favorite mental clichés and take a closer look at what we may really be saying, after My favorite is: "It's all in your head." This probably got started when folks felt sick, but had no obvious physical signs or symptoms to prove their illness. People suffering from fibromyalgia deal with this all the time.

I even hear this self-statement at our Performance Golf Schools, when a highhandicapper turns to me and said, "You know, my biggest problem is that it's all in my head."

I often have to fight back the urge to reply bluntly, "No, it's mostly because you can't get the ball airborne and you don't know how to make a correct golf swing."

I would be quick to add, however, "But we can help you fix that, for sure."

Here is one of the mental clichés I encounter regularly while playing golf, especially with folks who are in the midst of a score melt-down: "I just lost my focus."

After many years of this, I've come to substitute terms such as concentration, attention, thoughtfulness, commitment, or whatever, for "focus." This cutie is often trotted out with total oblivion to the cell phone that has been permanently affixed to the golfer's ear since the round began, and may need to be surgically removed sometime later.

The real message here is, "I'm too busy and important to put my total energy and interest into today's golf game." Still, there is no doubt that golf is a game of distractions, both inside us and all around us. If we want to improve our focus and ability to concentrate on the task right now, we simply must have a routine we follow that makes us comfortable and centered.

Total focus is something learned and practiced. Nicklaus had it. Hogan had it. Young Rory McIlroy has it. Yanni Tseng has it.

Almost every time a pro or a parent of a young golfer sends me someone to work with in my role as performance coach it's very likely they'll say, "he's a head case." Today they usually don't say "mental case" because they feel it would be way too demeaning. The parent might add, "he just needs to get out of his own way," whatever that means.

They can't quite put their finger on exactly what the kid's trouble is but it goes something like this: "This kid's got loads of talent, and hits the ball a mile, and putts great, but he can't seem to score."

By now, I've learned to decode "head case" as a good golfer who is probably a perfectionist, an emotional volcano, a rapid-cycling thinker and completely undisciplined when it comes to self-analyzing his own game. Ah, a perfect student for coaching.

"I was thinking too much," is one cliché I hear a lot. This is mostly a nervous reaction to a badly missed shot. What is really going on is something like, "I knew I was in between clubs, and I failed to make a decision and commit to it."

As I size up golfers, both chops and sticks, I don't see the problem as thinking too much, or too little for that matter. I see golfers thinking at the wrong time.

Most inexperienced golfers don't take the trouble to think through the shot and rapidly consider choices before making the right one. All golfers are prone to make the mistake (sometimes) of allowing the brain's cortex to actually try to operate (think) during the golf swing, which is practically impossible in reality, insofar as being able to transfer a thought into some practical or useful physical motion.

This can be disastrous, especially when the mind is already pre-occupied with fear and doubt. Thinking anything immediately before or during the swing would be precisely the worst time to do anything except move your body gracefully.

We must understand that the "think zone" is well behind the ball as we prepare for the shot itself. Once we step forward and address the golf ball, we have entered the "play zone" and all thinking must end so that we can just react and swing.

Closely related to the "think too much" mental cliché is this gem: "That's just what I didn't want to do!"

It's a painful shriek or wail in the wake of a ball sailing clear out of bounds or into a lake. It turns out that what our intrepid golfer has been doing, immediately before taking his swing, is focusing entirely on the very negative outcome he wants to avoid, thereby making it a self-fulfilling prophesy.

I'll give those of you who have done this stupid little cliché (you know who you are) a nifty cheap psychological tip: the mind doesn't understand the word "don't," especially under pressure, and with all those other vague swing thoughts swimming around in your head. The athletic mind is much better at processing self-generated visual images, located in the "mind's eye," of what we intend to do; the visceral golfer is much better at remaining steady and calm with strictly positive swing thoughts.

Yes, be aware of the hazards as well as the desired places to "miss" a shot. That's just smart golf. But we are wise not to train our full attention at what we don't want or what we know would be failure. Always focus your energy and your mind on what you actually intend to do – exactly what kind of swing, what type of shot and where you want it to go.

I adore hearing "Even a blind squirrel (or blind pig) finds an acorn once in a while," especially after Mr. Average pulls off an absolutely brilliant play, like sticking a five iron from 175 yards to three feet. By the way, I think a "blind pig" was a speakeasy during Prohibition, not a genuine acorn huntergatherer, but on the other hand, pigs will eat anything.

I respect self-effacing humor, but what Mr. Average doesn't realize is that all the ability, focus, attention to detail, planning, positive karma and shot making that went into the successful result were his and his alone, assuming the ball didn't run down the cart path and bounce off a rake.

If you can do it once, you can do it again and again, with lots and lots of practice and dedication, of course.

When Herb Wimberly and I work with recreational golfers at our Performance Golf Schools, we most often hear the complaint, "I just need more consistency." With all due respect to our loyal students, the reality is that they are consistent – simply not in the correct way. Most of their swings and shots go awry.

Beginner and high-handicap golfers consistently repeat swing mistakes and improper fundamentals – any teaching pro will tell you that. Basics such as grip, alignment, posture, ball position, weight shift, balance and clubhead speed have to be generally correct in order for the club to send the ball where you want it to go.

Do you often complain about your lack of "consistency?" Here's one suggestion that may help. Work on a reliable pre-swing rehearsal, including one (only one) pre-shot thought. Make this routine a habit and do it every time. In so doing, you will eliminate a big reason for inconsistency – failure to perform a consistent set-up.

All I can cliché you is simply this: Use the six inches between your ears, because it's mind over matter. So don't be a mental midget, get out of your own way, get in the game, and above all, when the chips are down and it's crunch time, just don't choke.

Spring practice continues

Coach Walker pleased with intensity level

The New Mexico State football team held its third of 13 practices Tuesday, April 3, at Aggie Memorial Stadium.

Practice ran a little more than two hours. The Aggies wore shoulder pads and shorts for the final time this spring.

"I like that wav we have practiced these first three times out this spring," coach DeWayne Walker said. "The intensity level is high and we are playing with lots of tempo.

"Are we doing things perfect? No. But we see really positive steps in the right direction and the guys are giving everything they have to become a very good football

Both defensive coordinator David Elson and offensive coordinator Jerry McManus continued to put in the defensive and offensive systems. NMSU participated in individual position drills and team drills during practice.

Practice continues to be noticeably different than in years past as the intensity level was higher and the pace of practice was faster with a high-energy tempo.

Players that seem to be making an impact for the AggiesarewidereceiversKevan Walker, Marcus Williams and Joseph Mathews, while defensive lineman Donte Savage is back in form after missing the 2011 season. Some of the NMSU newcomers also looked impressive on Tuesday morning, including

Is legion hall haunted?

Possible paranormal activity monitored

By Adam R. Baca

Could the American Legion Post 10 building, located on Madrid Avenue be haunted?

According to many of the people who work there, it is definitely a possibility.

Kevin Dasing, the public affairs officer, said there has been unexplained activity occurring at the building for the last six or seven years.

"Things start happening as soon as people start to clean up," Dasing said.

Maria Rodriguez, who works in the kitchen at the hall, said she once went back to the bar to get ice, and when she turned around from the ice machine, a bar stool had mysteriously moved. There was no one else in the room.

"It just scared her half to death," Dasing said.

One day, when the post's First Vice Commander John Flores was working in the kitchen during an antique show, a knife seemed to flip up in the air unexplainably.

Flores also said some of his children once went to use the restroom in the hallway and came running out. Flores said they never told him what scared them so much.

"They never went back in there," he said.

Built in 1987, American Legion Hall has a main large activity hall, where bingo and other events are held. A hallway that leads to the back includes the bathrooms and the door to the kitchen. At the end of the hallway is the museum room and bar. Model planes hang from the ceiling and old pictures and medals line the walls. The museum room also has an old bar from the original Downtown American Legion hall that was opened in 1919.

"You feel as if somebody is there next to you," said Martha Dozier, who works at the American Legion hall.

When workers started talking about their experiences, a paranormal investigation team, Afterlife Investigator Services (AIS), from El Paso, was hired and its team arrived Saturday, March 24, to investigate.

"We're going to use everything we have," Charlie Estrada of AIS said as the team set up equipment through out the building.

Infrared cameras were set up in each room throughout the building. There was even a light set up in the kitchen that shot out multiple light beams to catch movement.

A command station was set up in the museum room where one person would watch all the cameras throughout the night.

"I hope we can catch audio or a shadow," Gilbert Alvidrez of AIS said.

The team does not actually try to find ghosts, said Cathy Sierra of AIS. Instead, she said, the team tries to find an explanation for the strange occurrences a client reports.

"There are no experts in this field," Estrada said. "If they say they are, I would like them to present me a ghost."

With the equipment set up, lights were turned off and the investigation began. The team split into pairs and took electro magnetic field (EMF) readings throughout the building. Photographs were also taken. Just because some of the pictures had "orbs," doesn't mean there is some kind of spirit in the picture, Sierra said.

"You see those orbs," she said as she pointed to a picture she took outside. "Dust."

Sierra said areas with high EMF readings might cause a person to feel nervous, like they are being watched, or may experience an adrenaline rush people might think is paranormal. Places with electricity, such as refrigerators, can cause high EMF readings.

After the EMF readings were taken, the team split up in the dark building with flashlights to set up in each of the rooms. Each person carried with them a digital audio recorder searching for electronic voice phenomena (EPV). The team members would ask questions to the possible spirits to try and provoke activity.

A mop bucket was set up to see if it would move and a knife was even laid on the table in the kitchen in hopes of re-creating the experience Flores had in the same spot.

"Just be open with it," Alvidrez said about asking questions in hopes of capturing an EPV. "Ask questions like it was another human being"

There was activity, but the incidents also seemed to debunked. A swishing sound came from the bathroom, but after investigation, it turned out to be a piece of plastic swishing about the ceiling vent.

Noises such as water running through the bathroom plumbing were also heard. This was without turning on sinks or flushing toilets.

"It's either bad plumbing, or something we can't explain," Sierra said.

Estrada said the team can't claim if something is haunted or not. They just try to make sense out of things, yet may run into something unexplainable.

The investigation finished around 4:30 a.m. Sunday morning. The team packed up its gear for later review.

"That I can't wait to do," Alvidrez said.

It could be up to two months before evidence is released to the client, Alvidrez said.

"We've just got to wait for further analysis," Alvidrez said.

Things not seen during the investigation could show on audio and video recordings, he said

Now, visitors and workers at the American Legion Post 10 await the report by AIS.

"I'm not a big ghost believer," Dasing said.
"It's just interesting."

Water released April 1

EBID objects to water destined for Mexico

By Marvin Tessneer

The Bureau of Reclamation released irrigation water Sunday, April 1, from Caballo Reservoir so El Paso Water Conservation District No. 1 farmers can start preparing cottonseed beds, the bureau reported.

The El Paso district 2012 farmer allocation is 1.5 acre feet, District Manager Jesus Reyes

"We plan to run water until the end of April and then shut down the system and wait a month," Reyes said. "Then we'll turn it on again, probably in June. We're trying to extend the water season for June, July and August."

The irrigation districts' 2012 allocations are: Elephant Irrigation District, 110,050 acrefeet; EPWCD, 94,229 acre-feet; and Mexico, 12,275 acre-feet.

The snow pack runoff has started, but it hasn't reached the Rio Grande Basin reservoirs yet. The EBID board of directors is planning to announce the farm allocation at its next meeting Wednesday, April 11. The recommendation to the board is to begin the 2012 irrigation season with an 8-inch allotment.

Meanwhile, in a press release from EBID Tuesday, April 3, the April 1 release from the Caballo Reservoir was forced by the U.S. Section of the International Boundary and Water Commission (IBWC) in response to Mexico's request for delivery of water at the Acequia Madre on April 5.

El Paso County Water Improvement District No. 1 (EPCWID) and Elephant Butte Irrigation District (EBID), the U.S. districts in the Rio Grande Project, had not ordered water because of exceptional drought conditions. They planned on using their very limited water during peak demand in May, June and July.

The 1906 Convention between the United States and Mexico does not provide for delivery of water to Mexico when the districts are not taking water, according to EBID.

The IBWC proceeded with the release on April 1 despite the U.S. districts, which are now considering their legal options. Releasing the water for Mexico 45 days before the U.S. districts is contrary to the treaty, according to EBID.

EPCWID had agreed to come on with EBID in May to conserve water in both districts. The two districts contend they will absorb a large loss of water in a very dry year.

"The exact losses due to the forced early release will depend on how the rest of the season plays out," the release stated. "The increase in loss due to the early release will probably be about 21,000 acre-feet of water."

EBID's last official action on the release schedule was at the March 14 board meeting, which targeted mid-May to early June to begin water deliveries. A special board meeting was held on Tuesday, April 3, to decide how to work around the actions of IBWC and the Bureau of Reclamation.

To update growers on the situation, EBID has scheduled a series of meetings:

- 8 to 10 a.m. Tuesday, April 10, at Mesilla Valley Days Inn Conference Center, 902 Avenida de Mesilla
- 8 to 10 a.m. Thursday, April 12, Hatch Community Center, 400 State Highway 187
- 8 to 10 a.m. Thursday, April 19, Anthony Country Club, 2100 W. O'Hara Road, Anthony, N.M.

EBID's water records department will open to begin taking orders April 23. If there are sufficient orders, water will be released for delivery beginning April 27, for the Hatch Valley and May 15, for the Mesilla Valley.

Take care in handling chicks, bunnies, turtles

Use caution before purchasing these pets

By Lorena Sanchez

Spring is in the air, and who knows what the Easter Bunny will bring this year.

One popular gift is a small, cute and cuddly animal. Bunnies, chicks, turtles and ducks are most common.

But there are some cautions that parents and kids should take into consideration before taking in these animals.

"About two months after Easter we get a spike in the number of rabbits we having coming into the shelter," said Dr. Beth Vesco-Mock director of the Animal Service Center of the Mesilla Valley.

Vesco-Mock said rabbits can be great pets, but just like any other animal, they grow and require care and attention.

"As an adult, be aware that you will likely be taking care of the pet, especially if your child is young," Vesco-Mock said. "Any time you get a new pet, you need to be educated on the type of care they need."

This is the case with chicks sold in various locations around town, some only around Easter. But, unlike rabbits, these springtime pets come with a warning.

The New Mexico Department of Health and New Mexico Livestock Board recently warned of Salmonella risks associated with giving baby chicks, ducklings and small turtles as gifts.

While there are many good reasons to purchase baby chicks, we are asking feed stores around the state to strongly discourage people from buying baby chicks as pets, especially if they have young children," said Dr. Catherine Torres, Department of Health cabinet secretary.

Salmonella can be carried in the droppings of chicks and young birds. The department sites that "in the last six years New Mexico has had 16 Salmonella cases related to baby chicks.'

Small turtles sold at flea markets and roadside stands have also been known to spread the

Despite these warnings, Horse N Hound owner Curtis Creighton said there is an easy

"It's as simple as being sanitary and staying clean," Creighton said. "The care for a small chick is as easy. All they really require is heat, water, food and shelter.

Ambercare opens arms to Las Cruces

Richard Coltharp That's the Way of the World

Ambercare founders Mike and Mary Merrell are incredibly proud of their employees.

If they're all like Marisela Jimenez, it's easy to see why.

Ambercare staff filled their offices Friday, March 30, cheerfully greeting community members at the facility's ribbon cutting and open house. Both the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce and the Hispano Chamber of Commerce de Las Cruces read proclamations and jointly presented the giant scissors and welcome to Ambercare, now settled in its new digs at 3870 Foothills Road.

The Merrells founded Ambercare in 1994 in Belen. The Las Cruces operation makes their 11th facility, all in New Mexico.

"We're not going anywhere else besides New Mexico," Mike Merrell said. We've got 1,800 employees and 11 officers. All in New Mexico."

The Merrells have also arranged for their employees to have a key stake in the company's ownership.

"We just want to take care of people," said Mary Merrell of her company, which provides health services for people in the comfort of their home.

Offered are home health care with skilled workers, hospice, medical equip-ment and personal care services with unskilled workers.

Based on the way she paid attention to detail at the grand opening, Jimenez cares for the company's mission as if she indeed owned the place.

I met her when I was piling food on my little plastic plate at the grand opening. She was putting fresh ice in the tea dispenser, because the glass jar's location was in the sun, melting the ice quickly.

Jimenez manages personal care services, coordinating patients and caregivers.
Caregivers go to the home of a patient and provide personal services. They may do laundry one day, cook a meal the next or simply offer a sympathetic ear.

Some of the patients live as far away as Silver City or Alamogordo.

Jimenez does not, however, keep her distance.

One strength Jimenez brings is her language skill in both English and Spanish.

Hispano Chamber brings former U.S. treasurer to speak

Bulletin Staff Report

If you have a U.S. dollar bill made from 2001 to 2003, it will likely have the autograph of Rosario Marin.

Marin, the only foreign-born woman ever to rise to the post of U.S. treasurer, will be in Las Cruces Friday, April 20, as the keynote speaker for the 20th annual banquet of the Hispano Chamber of Commerce de Las Cruces.

If that weren't enough, the banquet will also feature your favorite superheroes.

"Our adventure begins that night," said Hispano Chamber President Jeffrey Silva who, along with other board members, will don the suits of cape-wearing crimefighters. "We want to tie the superhero theme in with the superheroes that live within our community."

The banquet's title is "Superheroes of the Southwest,'

The evening will feature a pre-party, the banquet and an after-party and dancing featuring the band Nosotros.

Marin's appearance as the keynote speaker is fitting, Silva said, because she represents opportunity "just like we believe in."

"Being Mexican born and becoming treasurer says a great deal," he said. "It shows

The pre-party, from 5 to 7 p.m., will actually be two parties. One will feature a cigar party on the patio of the Las Cruces Convention Center, with music and drinks, which will flow into the lobby. The second will be a reception with Marin, with one-on-one time and book signing; this reception is open to sponsors and

First quarter good for auto sales

Local dealers reflect strong national trends

By Jerome Littlejohn

Much like the rest of the nation, Las Cruces car dealers are reporting better than expected first quarter sales and large increases in sales of fuel-efficient vehicles.

According to a J.D. Power and Associates report on national car sales, March new-vehicle retail sales are projected to be 1,085,800 units; the highest monthly volume in more than two and one-half years.

Total sales of light-vehicles - new and used cars, pickups and SUVs, but not commercial trucks – in March are expected to be 1,372,400 units, which is a 6 percent increase from March 2011, the J.D. Power report stated.

During this time, sub-compact and compact cars accounted for approximately 23 percent of retail sales in the United States, the highest level since 2009, the report said.

Small-car sales are expected to remain strong throughout 2012, with a combined segment share at nearly 20 percent of total light vehicles, the report said.

Sales managers at local car dealers agreed that Las Cruces is mirroring these national sales trends.

David Wilson, spokesman for Borman Autoplex, said the same trends are happening here.

"We are coming off the best February since 2007," Wilson said. "No doubt the trend is larger SUVs and pickup trucks being traded in for smaller, more cost-effective sport utility

Care

"About 70 percent of our patients speak Spanish, and many of those speak no English at all," Jimenez said. "I can speak and communicate directly with the patient, without someone in the middle. It's very important to get the information accurately.'

A patient's needs, concerns and wishes cannot be addressed unless they are first correctly understood.

One thing evident right away is how much Jimenez and the caregivers care for their patients.

"A lot of these people are so lonely," she said. "They may be sick, but many of them are also very lonely."

Jimenez moved to Las Cruces from Ambercare in Albuquerque and at first was not sure how she felt about the Mesilla Valley.

But now I go to Albuquerque for meetings and things, and I'm so glad to come back to Las Cruces," she said. "That's how I know it's home for me now."

The patients make it feel like home.

"They become such a part of your life," she said. "I talk with them so much and their voice becomes imbedded in my mind. It's so sad when they pass away, but their voices are still with me."

The caregivers also get attached.

"They care so much," Jimenez said.
"Sometimes the patients even die in their arms.

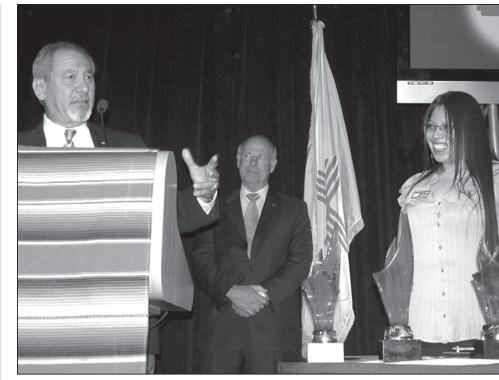

Many of the patients can afford the care only through Medicaid.

Jimenez, who is originally from Mexico, said, "We are so fortunate in the U.S. to have this system. It is so much better when patients can be in their own homes, with people who truly care about them."

Before joining Ambercare, Jimenez worked a Department of Defense job in Honolulu. She had choices in jobs when she left.

'But I didn't want to go to some corporation and make money for them," she said.
"I wanted to help people. To make a difference in their lives.

vehicles, hybrid cars and crossovers."

"Great," is how Las Cruces Toyota owner Paul Vescovo described first-quarter sales, noting strong sales for small cars as well as trucks.

"For Priuses, we're constantly taking orders and selling them as fast as they get off the truck, Vescovo said. "And Tacoma trucks, we're selling them as fast as they get off the truck."

John Tarro, sales manager at Sisbarro Volkswagen and Mitsubishi, said customers are not only trading in older vehicles, but also newer large-engine performance sedans and pickups.

"All of the trade-ins have been gas hogs," Tarro said.

You can get more money for your trade in now than anytime in the last six years," Vescovo said. "We've had cars we sold new two years ago that are getting more as trade-ins than they sold

"Historically, Las Cruces is a pickup truck market, but we are seeing an uptick in car sales," said Michael Washam, sales manager at Jack Key Motors.

Nat Molina, sales manager at Bravo Chevrolet and Cadillac, said customers this year are purchasing models for practical purposes and 'not just because they want a new car.'

Sales managers characterized car customers as being motivated by low interest rates on auto loans as well. At the time of this article's writing. bankrate.com quoted rates as low as 2.5 percent for a five-year auto loan in the Las Cruces area.

"Banks are loosening up a bit and finding ways to finance cars," Molina said.

Banks are offering aggressive rates, especially to those who have good credit scores," Washam said.

Vescovo said zero-percent financing is still available on most Toyotas.

First quarter auto sales are usually boosted by tax return season because some customers will use the influx of cash from their refund as a down payment on a new car.

However, local dealership sales managers said the growth in sales this year is not due to tax refunds. They characterized the amount of tax refund driven sales this year as being average or below average compared to recent years.

"I've noticed credit-challenged customers paying with larger down payments during these months, but our tax refund driven business is normal," Tarro said.

Another factor motivating buyers is the average age of cars on the road, Vescovo said.

There are cars on streets that are nine, 10 and 11 years old," Vescovo said. "It's a cycle we're going through where people need new cars. (The National Automobile Dealers Association) says this is the biggest number of potential buyers we've had in eight years. People having cars longer, they have equity in them. They've been putting it off because of the economy, and now they're ready."

Overall, sales managers said customers are approaching car shopping rationally and are focused on practical features and benefits.

"People are wiser consumers now, and emotional buyers are not in the market," Washam

"Customers are thinking about the long term," Tarro said.

In Good Company: Hayden's Hardware

Fix-it team has answers

Sparks flew when lovers of hardware stores met

By Alta LeCompte

Las Cruces Bulletin

Danny and Virginia Wiley Oxford of Hayden's Hardware courted in the plumbing and electrical aisles of an Oklahoma hardware store and honeymooned at a hardware convention in Orlando, Fla..

The husband and wife team shares a passion for the hardware business, bringing a new vitality to the Foster Road store where Virginia Oxford grew up.

The Oxfords are both high tech and down home.

Hayden's touts service, prices

The couple has carved out a niche based on competitive advantage – saving their neighborhood customers both time and money.

Their know-how makes their old-fashioned hardware store a go-to place, especially for contractors who are renovating or maintaining old homes and apartments in the Foster Road neighborhood.

"Most of our customers are maintenance guys," Danny Oxford said. "They don't get a lot of breaks to go shopping. They can park out front here, get what they need and get out in a hurry."

He said they don't just hand the needed parts to a customer they explain "how to get from this fitting to that fitting."

"We want them to say 'I get it,' and go home and do it," he said.

The couple is not timid touting their prices as a competitive advantage.

"We don't have the huge overhead of the bigger stores, so we're cheaper in some things, and they get the service," Virginia Oxford said.

To prove their point, they regularly print up price comparison flyers for their customers.

Business grows with online presence

Through its online presence and local networking, the business is reaching out to meet the parts and equipment needs of the city, county and university.

"We're slowly picking up business from the city, the county, the university and the schools," he said.

"The university and the largest government agencies are ordering online using credit cards. We wanted to make sure they knew they could do that," Virginia Oxford said.

Her husband added the agencies order weekly.

"There is no shipping charge on anything they order. They pick it up," she said.

He said Hayden's often can save money for their commercial customers

A case in point is commercial safety equipment.

Safety officers for the schools learned they could get fire-proof safety cabinets they had been paying to $2,000 for elsewhere for $700 at Hayden's.

Almost all business

The Oxfords are together almost 24 hours a day, including their twice-a-year vacations at hardware shows.

Pressed about what they like to do when they're not working, he held up a picture of his wife showing off a trophy fish and said: "We like to fish."

Danny Oxford drove a rover during the recent Bataan Memorial Death March, delivering supplies and giving rides to walkers who couldn't go on. His dad had served in the Philippines, though he was not in the grueling World War II march.

When she's not at the store, Virginia Oxford is assisting her Stull Real Estate LLC customers.

She said she got into real estate as a result of helping hardware store customers renovating rental properties in preparation for selling.

Wiley daughter knows hardware

Danny Oxford said his wife is the best trouble-shooter on their team.

"People don't understand," he said. "They think because she's a woman she doesn't know electrical and plumbing. But when they come in needing a problem solved, she figures it out."

Starting at the age of 10, she learned the workings of the hardware store on the inside, from her father, grandfather and uncle.

"I was raised here," Virginia Oxford said. "I would sit in my grandmother's office and color.

"I was always running around, causing trouble I suppose," she lucas_herndon@aflac.com Lucas Herndon is an independent associate representing Aflac said, looking across their back-to-back desks at her husband.

She attended Mesilla Valley Christian Schools and earned an agricultural economics degree at New Mexico State University.

Danny Oxford, on the other hand, grew up in Oklahoma and learned hardware from the customer's perspective while working in construction.

The Wiley family business was founded by Hayden Wiley, who bought Stull Hardware in 1960. Virginia Oxford's uncle, Joe Wiley, later ran the business until his death in 1984. At that time, Harry Wiley, Virginia's father, took over.

The Oxfords bought the business from him in 2007.

From dirt road to information highway

Their Foster Road store crammed with merchandise is a treat for those who love the smell and feel of an old-fashioned hardware store.

Hayden's inventory consists of "tens of thousands" of items, Virginia Oxford said.

"People are always surprised at how much we have," she said. Shelves, seven feet tall, fill every available space. They are packed with bolts, work clothes, circuit breakers and even pressure cooker parts.

The hardware store even sells RV and mobile home fittings and fixtures.

In addition they offer services such as key duplication, lock re-keying, pipe threading, glass cutting and window screen rebuilding.

Hayden's employs six, including Norma (Cookie) Mims, who has been helping customers since before Virginia was born.

"This used to be a dirt road out front," Danny Oxford said, setting the scene.

"The biggest overall change is that there are now a lot of rentals in the neighborhood," his wife added. "We had to adjust.

"When my grandfather ran the store he sold everything from guns to Corning ware."

In the days before Kmart, Hayden's took on the role of community general store.

Items stocked on the shelves have changed as the neighborhood, the times and business strategies have changed.

"Las Cruces is a good place if you're willing to work and think and adjust a little," Danny Oxford said.

Bank-owned properties selling at big discounts

Gary Sandler's Real Estate

Connection

Bank-owned and short-sale properties make up just 12.6 percent of the 1,060 existing homes, townhomes and condominiums currently listed for sale in Las Cruces' local multiple listing system. They accounted for more than 36 percent of our area's closed existing-home sales during the first quarter of 2012, according to data from the Las Cruces Association of Realtors. What's the big draw? Huge discounts.

Bank-owned properties sold during the first three months of this year brought a median price of $63.61 per square foot for the typical 1,885 square foot home. That's $18.18 per square foot, or just over 22 percent, less than $81.79 per square foot achieved by sellers of existing homes that were sold under normal circumstances.

The number is also more than $26 per square foot, or just over 29 percent, below the $90.04 per square foot achieved by new-home builders. The median is where half sold for more and half sold for less.

Short sales, in which a bank accepts a sale price below the amount owed on the property, provided similar discounts. Together, bankowned properties and short sales accounted for more than 36 percent of the total number of existing-home sales booked in the first quarter.

New-home sales, which consistently accounted for 16 to 17 percent of total sales during the 1990s and early 2000s, accounted for nearly 40 percent of all sales when the market peaked in 2007.

The big discounts offered by banks have been siphoning buyers from the new-home market, which today produces just 14 percent of the total number of area closings.

The 251 sales of new and existing homes closed during the first three months of this year represented an 18-unit, or 7.7 percent, increase in sales over the 233 closed transactions booked in the first quarter of 2011.

Unfortunately for sellers, the $144,900 median price achieved during first quarter 2012 fell $11,600, or 7.4 percent, from the $156,500 median price posted during the same period last year.

Home prices may continue to decline this year, according to economists at Core Logic, a leading provider of consumer, financial and property information, analytics and services to business and government. The company projects that a flood of foreclosures will soon be hitting the real estate market, "which will most likely pull down nearby home prices."

The foreclosures in question, which have been held up while lenders sort out the legal issues associated with the robo-signing fiasco of last year, are expected to hit the market this summer.

So there you have it. Las Cruces area home values remain soft and may decline further as the year progresses. I'm optimistic local prices will bottom out this year, but only if the job

Kary Bulsterbaum of Steinborn TCN Commercial Real Estate and Jake Redfearn of NAI First Valley spoke Tuesday, April 3, at the monthly Business in the Borderplex forum presented by the Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance. Both talked about the state of commercial real estate in the Las Cruces area. Among other things, Bulsterbaum said there is currently 4.1 million square feet of commercial space available for sale in the region, and 1.2 million square feet of commercial space available for sale in the region, and 1.2 million square feet of commercial space for lease. New commercial construction, Redfearn said, has been essentially non-existent the past four years, with virtually all of the major buildings built being government facilities. Some vacancies are beginning to fill in, however, he said. "Dick's Sporting Goods is done and it is signed. We will have a new tenant in that space," Redfearn said of the long empty Sportsman's Warehouse building behind Bank'34 on Telshor Boulevard.

What makes a good management team?

Taking a closer look at what they don't do

Business Matters

Hiring and analyzing management teams is tricky business. Some people ask us if we visit the companies in which we own shares in order to get a feel for management. Our answer is no. Frankly, we are like Groucho Marx when it comes to meeting with company management; any company large enough to meet our principles who would waste a portion of their precious time meeting with us would be likely to immediately disqualify itself from our consideration. Instinctively, we ascertain that when CEOs take the time to visit with investors outside of the regular quarterly conference calls, they are probably not managing their precious time very well.

So, how do we analyze management teams?

In the Jim Collins book, "Great by Choice," his research team tackles the question of what causes one company to be great while other similar companies, in similar situations, are mediocre. Over the course of seven chapters the author cites case studies that attempt to peel away most of the mysteries of a great management team.

Let's take the Jacobi approach to explaining the "Great by Choice" findings. You may recall Carl Jacobi, the renowned 19th century mathematician. He taught that difficult problems are often easier to solve when they are inverted. Thus, let us walk through what Collins found that great management teams don't do.

First off, most successful leaders in our turbulent world are usually not bold, risk-seeking visionaries.

This does not mean they are not sometimes bold and sometimes inclined to take risks. Instead they are usually more disciplined and fact-oriented in their processes.

Second, superior innovation does not distinguish greatly managed companies in a fast-moving and uncertain world.

Here again, this does not mean great companies are not innovative. But what is does suggest is great companies are not obsessed with innovation as much as they are with superior, day-to-day execution.

Third, in the highly competitive world we live in, speedy companies do not tend to be the best-managed.

Here again the study showed that while lethargy is not necessarily an attribute, companies obsessed with speed did not often carry the description of exceptional. Similarly, coach John Wooden's instructions to his championship basketball teams: Be quick but don't hurry.

Fourth, and tying right in with speed, is the notion of being capable of "radical change."

Making radical changes simply does not tend to be a common characteristic of the great management team. Once again, a more deliberate and fact-based approach is sufficient to achieve greatness.

I am reminded of championship-winning local high school football coach Jim Bradley's primary mission: Get his players to do ordinary things extraordinarily well.

Finally, great enterprises are not more likely to have had good luck on their side.

The study showed that great companies get their share of both good luck and bad luck. What they did to take advantage of their good luck and also to minimize the negative effects of their bad luck was much more important than the abundance of good luck.

Every so often there will be a single personality who, through the sheer power and force of his or her being, can override the five basic patterns listed above that lead to consistently great managerial choices. But we realize we can get hurt assuming these types of characteristics are even the least bit common.

Symposium kicks off year of exploring quality of life

College of Arts and Sciences sponsors events

More than 200 southern New Mexico residents attended the J. Paul Taylor Social Justice Symposium March 25 and 26 to hear about how quality of life and social justice have merged, and the focus will continue for the next year.

Sponsored on an annual basis by the College of Arts and Sciences at New Mexico State University, the symposium brings attention to a social issue of state and regional significance. The 2012 Symposium was broader in scope and represents an effort to expand engagement with community members, organizations and elected officials.

County Commissioner Billy G. Garrett helped create this year's focus, "Quality of Life as Social Justice."

"We know there are situations in the county where people are struggling," Garrett said. "What's important is that most of our current challenges have been around a long time. We want to take a fresh look at our situation and see if that won't lead to better results."

Funding in support the 2012 Symposium was provided by the W. K. Kellogg Foundation. The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico was the fiscal sponsor.

In the next 12 months, a number events will allow others the opportunity to explore Quality of Life as Social Justice in greater depth.

The symposium met three major objectives: including people who shared their stories that define quality of life in Doña Ana County; understanding the challenges residents face in achieving a fair quality of life; and exploring ideas about what we might do differently to reduce the obstacles people deal with as they try to improve their lives.

The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico is dedicated to helping the Southern New Mexico community now, and in the future. Founded in 2000, the Community Foundation offers opportunities for local people who want to give back locally. The beauty of the Foundation is that you need not be wealthy to make a positive difference in the lives of people throughout our area. Through the establishment of permanent funds you can sustain local charitable organizations, provide scholarships to area students and fulfill wishes that are close to your heart. Through our planned giving programs, you can honor loved ones or leave a legacy that benefits the people of Southern New Mexico for generations to come. The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico can advise you on how best to maximize contributions, no matter what size. ## Candidates criticize Fed Chair Bernanke prevented a bad

worse.

He deserves some of the criticism, not all

Chris Erickson State of the Economy

Ben Bernanke has been the object of criticism from the Republicans recently. Presidential candidate Ron Paul, who is also a member of the House Financial Services Committee, has accused Bernanke of destroying the dollar. Newt Gingrich refers to the economic wreckage caused by Bernanke's policies. Perhaps most hyperbolic was Rick Perry, who called Bernanke's policies almost treasonous.

All this partisanship is partially a consequence of the "silly season" that occurs every four years as the presidential nominating process ramps up. Still, the Republican vitriol seems over the top, especially considering Bernanke was originally appointed by George W.

appointed by George W. Bush. Indeed, the Fed has been a uniquely non-partisan institution. Every chair since 1979 has been appointed by a president of one party and re-appointed, at least once, by a president of the other party. Guess I shouldn't be surprised, though, Guess I shouldn't be surprised, though, given the current state of politics that even the consensus on the Fed has now broken down. Nevertheless, it's disappointing.

So how well has Bernanke been doing?

There is an increasing consensus among economists – a view I agree with – that back in the height of the crisis in 2008, had Ben Bernanke and the Fed not acted, and acted decisively, the result could have been a meltdown along the lines of the Great Depression. He gets high marks for this.

When the crisis began, we were lucky to have Bernanke around.

Where he is subject to criticism is on the issue of whether the crisis could have been avoided altogether. Bernanke should have anticipated the subprime mortgage problem, but he didn't. This is surprising because much of Bernanke's academic work – which I cited in my dissertation – was on the negative consequences when large businesses run into financial difficulty.

There were lots of indicators of problems to come. The failure of Bear Stearns in March 2008 made clear the vulnerability of financial markets. Under the law, the Fed could have forced banks to increase their capital, yet the Fed took no action. Six months later, Lehman Brothers threw the economy into crisis. Had Bernanke been more proactive, the crisis might have been avoided.

When the crisis did hit, Bernanke was the man on the spot. He gets an "A" for responding aggressively. The results are obvious when compared to the outcome during the Great Depression or when compared to Europe today. The Fed prevented a bad situation from being much worse.

Bernanke could have done better. Certainly there were big mistakes. But the Fed could have done much worse. When it really mattered, Bernanke came through in the pinch. Overall, Bernanke doesn't deserve the harsh words of the Republican presidential candidates, but he probably doesn't deserve to be nominated for a third term either.

Margarita Leza Porter: Opening doors, breaking barriers

Oñate grad returns home to lead New America School

By Richard Coltharp

Back when she was a student at Alameda Junior High School in Las Cruces, Margarita Leza Porter received an invitation.

English teacher Rosemary Kirby invited Porter to join an independent study program. Kirby did not know Porter, but they worked together, inspiring each other.

"She's the one who believed in me," said Porter, recalling a memorable educator who had a profound effect on her life.

After living the last 21 years in Albuquerque, Porter is returning home to Las Cruces, with hopes of paying that memory forward.

The New America School of New Mexico, a public charter school, opens doors in Las Cruces this August with the goal of helping people better themselves.

The premise is to empower immigrants with English language through immersion," Porter said. "We're also focusing on older students who have dropped out. We accept students age 14 and up, with up meaning as old as 49, 60 years old."

Porter comes to Las Cruces after a year with The New America School in Albuquerque, where she was student retention coordinator. Prior to that, she spent 17 years with the Albuquerque Public Schools. She was a teacher for 10 years and a district administrator for five years, working with English as a Second Language and bilingual programs. She also worked for the Department of Language and Cultural Equity at APS.

I've worked with different language programs - bilingual, immersion, dual language – and I've worked with principals to improve language problems, whether it's English only or bilingual," she said. "This has prepared me to see what is needed, and how we can prepare to get more people in the workforce."

Even with the successes she had seen in her career, the format and approach of The New America School stood out.

"I saw the great things it was doing in Albuquerque," she said. "It's the perfect opportunity to go and give back to my home community, to Las Cruces."

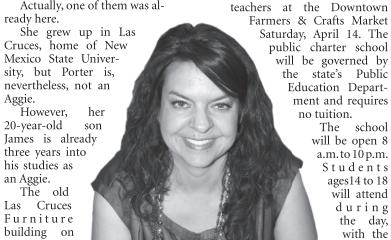

Her husband and children agreed if she got the job, they would come south with her.

Actually, one of them was already here.

New America School. Construction is scheduled to wrap in June, with a grand opening event this summer.

The school's August opening should take place just ahead of the ongoing re-construction of Main Street between Griggs and May avenues.

Porter is excited about the school's location and its role in helping bring life back to Downtown. She's also aware of the challenges.

"First is recruitment of students," she said. "We need to make sure word gets out we're available and ready to go in August. We have to have 150 students to meet our recruitment number. We already have five or six teachers who have sent in resumes."

The school will have a kickoff/ recruitment fair for students and Teachers will be ESL endorsed, and focus on students' trouble areas. Smaller class sizes and a smaller school community help, Porter said.

The school's goal is to grow enrollment to a maximum of 450 within five years.

"New America School will open doors for all of those students that don't think they can because of barriers," Porter said.

"I'm the daughter of an immigrant family," Porter said. "I'm a first-generation American. I'm bringing that home and living that. My parents are Mexican, and so I can say, 'This is where I am and this could be you too."

NM sees biggest beef decline in 26 years

Ranchers not hopeful for quick recovery

By Marvin Tesseneer

New Mexico beef cattle ranchers are holding down, or culling, herd numbers to survive the drought and poor grazing conditions.

Tom Mobley, who grazes Brangus cattle, reported that he is seeing good greening up of grass and weeds near the Uvas Mountains. Last year, his range received "pretty good" rains in July and August and, later, between Thanksgiving and Christmas.

But he's being cautious.

'I've done the normal culling, getting rid of cows that aren't pregnant," he said. "I'm not fully stocked, but not far from it. And I can appreciate the problems of ranchers who have to restock their herds because cattle prices are so

Tom Cooper, who runs cattle in Otero and Doña Ana counties, has cut back his herd the last three years until he is grazing about a fourth of his usual numbers. Since November 2011, his range has received 4 to 5 inches in Doña Ana County, and he is seeing some weeds and grass emerging on the range, he reported.

"If we have some good rains in 2012, we'll start rebuilding our cow herd by retaining heifers," Cooper said.

The National Weather Service forecast for April in southern New Mexico calls for continued dry conditions. The long-range outlook for summer rains is lower than normal, the NWS reported.

The average for New Mexico beef cattle numbers was 531,000 head. Because of drought conditions and poor grazing, ranchers have reduced those numbers to about 488,000, according to Manuel Encinias, New Mexico State Extension Beef Cattle Specialist.

During 2010 and 2011, New Mexico ranchers lost about 132,000 head of beef cattle either through shipment to out-of-state pastures, sales or harvest.

"Through Dec. 31, 2011, 82,100 head was the single largest decline in the last 26 years,'

As the drought persists, ranchers continue to reduce herd numbers, according to Caren Cowan, executive director of the New Mexico Cattle Growers Association.

There's some rain in the outlook, but not enough to reverse the trend," Cowan said.

Small can be big for NM

Micro- and nano-technology present many opportunities

By Todd G. Dickson

From making traditional livelihoods such as ranching better managed to futuristic cancer fighting on the molecular battlefield, micro- and nano-technology could be new fertile territory for economic development in New Mexico.

That was the message delivered by Scott Bryant, president of nano-network of New Mexico to the High Tech Consortium of Southern New Mexico (HTC) at its luncheon Friday, March 16, at the Sunset Grill in Sonoma Ranch.

Contrary to almost all other commercial sectors in the Great Recession, micro- and nano-technology has seen steady growth as the applications for very small technology have grown, Bryant said.

Micro- and nano-technology already is helping transform some of the state's more traditional industries, such as ranching, he said. Applications include using very small sensors to track movement of cattle and locate strays by GPS, he said, thereby requiring fewer resources to herd cattle. Also, the sensors can alert the modern-day cowboy about the health of the animals, providing tools for precise feeding, watering and medical care of the herds, he said.

This kind of use is just one small slice of what's being called the Third Industrial Revolution, which consumers are more familiar with through their iPads and cell phones, Bryant said.

In addition to communications and computers, there are all sorts of microand nano-technology developments being made in the areas such as food safety and medicine, he said.

"I believe the cure for cancer will come from nano-technology," Bryant said.

The newest area of development, especially in biomedicine, is using "smart swarms of sensors" to detect disease in the body, he said.

To "grow" light, strong "new steel" materials, nano-technology is being explored with plants, such as trees, he said.

As semiconductors also are becoming extremely small, researchers are looking for ways to have nano-systems interact with biological processes, he said,

"The convergence is powerful," Bryant said. "It's going to make some new products"

With its national labs and research universities, New Mexico has the technological infrastructure to be a player in this tiny, brave new world, according to Bryant. What gives the state an additional edge, however, is its strong system of community colleges, he said, which will be needed to employ the many technicians this technology will need to transfer lab research into product lines.

Outside the United States, places such s Alberta, Canada, are in the process of setting up the networks of businesses and educational resources to become a giant in small tech, he said.

"We can be that, too," Bryant said.

Inside in the United States, there are only a handful of lawmakers who are strong supporters of developing microand nano-technology, he said. If New Mexico can find political champions of the industry, the potential will emerge for creating a new thriving industry in the state's economy.

Part of Bryant's mission for nano-network of New Mexico is to connect those already doing work in small tech with the researchers and larger developers. As important is getting the word out about what the state has to offer small tech, he said.

"The marketing of New Mexico technology is pitiful," Bryant said.

HTC President Richard Majestic agreed, saying New Mexico doesn't come to mind like it should when technology-based industries are looking for places to "People go to other places because they don't know what's here," Majestic said.

That shouldn't be the case as New Mexico has earned national rankings in the past for its micro- and nano-technology potential.

In 2005, a New York-based consulting firm ranked New Mexico as No. 5 for its potential to develop economic growth through nano-technology. Massachusetts, California, Colorado and Virginia, respectively, topped New Mexico in Lux Research's rankings. It also put New Mexico ahead of Texas, Pennsylvania, North Carolina and New Jersey.

According to Lux Research, the top five states all shared the fact that all relevant stakeholders are included in developing nanotech initiatives.

In 2004, the industry publication Small Times magazine named New Mexico the No. 3 "hot spot" in the nation for micro- and nano-technologies.

Bryant said the state is about to get noticed again with the opening of the large Mesa del Sol development near Albuquerque, which has reserved industrial space for micro- and nano-technology.

Purina, Horse N Hound make hay donation

Feed will help NMSU horses affected by fire

Thanks to donations from Horse N Hound Feed N Supply and others, 110 horses on the New Mexico State University campus are eating well in the aftermath of a fire that destroyed their hay supply.

"A full semi load from Purina arrived on Monday (April 2)," said Joby Priest, NMSU horse farm manager.

He said the donation was set in motion by Horse N Hound owner Curtis Creighton, whose business split the cost of the hay with Purina.

"We work really closely with the horse farm, and they really needed some help," Creighton said. "We thought it was time to give back to the horse farm."

He said it is not unusual for Purina to respond to emergencies such as drought.

"They have been very, very generous," Creighton said. Priest said the university also has received a 65-bale donation from Deerman Hay Service of La Mesa and a one and a half ton shipment from Landmark Mercantile in Mesquite.

The university also is buying small quantities of hay and supplementing it with alfalfa pellets to ensure the horses remain healthy. It is being stored at another campus location.

Both Priest and Creighton said all the horses are safe, "which is the important part."

An 11 p.m. fire on March 7 destroyed the storage barn and its contents, 150,000 to 175,000 tons of hay.

Priest said five horses penned next to the barn were led out of harm's way by firefighters. They have returned to their regular location, but the adjacent barn is a total loss, he said.

He estimated the value of the lost hay at $65,000 and the value of the barn at "$50,000 or more."

The storage barn will be replaced, possibly by July, Priest said.

Marchapalooza madness

Music festival benefits the March of Dimes

By Amanda Green

In its inaugural year, Marchapalooza is already creating a stir in the community.

A music festival supporting the Southern

New Mexico March of Dimes will be held from 5:30 to 9:30 p.m. Friday, April 13, at St. Clair Winery & Bistro, 1720 Avenida de Mesilla.

"We are active participants in the March for Babies and the March of Dimes," said Marchapalooza co-organizer Theresa Montoya Basaldua. "So we asked ourselves what else we could do to help fundraise for these great charities.

Basaldua knew she wanted to create something to support the march, but didn't want to replicate any events already happening in the city.

"At first we thought we could hold a bake sale, or sell dinner plates," Basaldua said. "Then we tossed around the idea of a small concert, a battle of the bands.

Basaldua said that idea transformed and grew as she made connections with her family, friends and members of the community.

The event took on new life and excitement as Barbara Hubbard, New Mexico State University's beloved promoter, hopped on board.

"She thought it was a great idea, and really helped make it a reality," Basaldua said.

Steven Parra, a coordinator for Marchapalooza, who works with Basaldua at the Las Cruces Bulletin, added his own connections to the mix.

"My wife works for the Pan Am at NMSU," Parra said. "I had several friends in local bands, and knew we had what it took to pull an events like this together."

Planning began, and Basaldua reached out to Bravo Mic Communications to provide emcees for the event.

"Lynz Green and Jack Lutz from The Rocket volunteered to be hosts," Basaldua said. "All of the volunteers and the vendors have been wonderfully supportive and giving." St. Clair Winery & Bistro donated its new massive lawn and patio to provide space to host the seven band line up.

"We're excited to have this impressive line-up of talent at our restaurant," said John Furbush, operations manager at St. Clair. "Marchapalooza is the perfect event to kick-off our summer concert series."

The line-up of talent includes music for all

"We wanted the concert to have a little something for everyone," Parra said. "Jazz, country, rock and metal."

The night kicks off with the acoustic sounds of Chris Baker; soft melodies of La Cella Bella, a cello quartet; country music from Crooked Beaver Creek; and local rock group Wormhole.

The concert will end with music from Turncoat, a top-40 cover band, Archetyped, who offer a melodic metal, and finally Beyond the Ash, a heavy metal group.

"We're so excited to have these groups at Marchapalooza," Parra said. "They've all volunteered their time, talent and equipment for a good cause.'

Volunteers from all over the city have gathered to set-up and run the concert, including event organizers from the Pan Am center, stagehands to help set up and break down sets as well as Basaldua and Parra's March for Babies team, The Babysavers.

At 8 a.m. Saturday, April 28, The Babysavers will be one of the dozens of teams participating in the March For Babies at Young Park.

Creating art from sunlight

Artist embraces solar etching

By Christine Peterson

Amy Rankin couldn't have picked a better location to work on her art than sunny southern New Mexico.

Rankin is a Las Cruces native who uses solar etching as her medium. She has had plenty of sun in the area to produce works of art that will be at MVS Studios for a month beginning Friday, April 6. The opening of her show corresponds with the April Downtown Art Ramble.

Solar etching is a form of printmaking. There are two options when making a solar etch. One would be to etch on a solar plate (which is light-sensitized steel) using non-water-based pigments. The second is etching on a transparent film and exposing the solar plate to the transparent film. The artwork can also be made by drawing on acetate.

Once the plate and transparency are in contact with the sun, an etching is made. The process has been around since Dan Welden patented it in the 1970s.

"(Rankin) draws onto a plate, then puts it in the sun and it creates an image, as opposed to etching it in copper," said Kate Mott, owner of MVS Studios.

Entities depicted as being human bodies wearing animal garb are a strong theme running through Rankin's exhibit.

"My work is reaching a point where my ideology and imagery are coming together," Rankin said in her mission statement for the exhibit. "It reflects contemplation of life's process of growth, stagnation, learning and change both directly and metaphorically."

One such solar etching "Rabbit," is a young individual crouching on a golden floor. A midnight blue backdrop dramatically contrasts with the ivory rabbit outfit the individual is wearing.

She currently teaches solar etching at the University of New Mexico in Taos.

The chance to feel like a princess

Cinderella Project provides free dresses

By Isabel A. Rodriguez

With prom just around the corner, one Las Cruces woman is trying to help ease the financial burden that often comes with the excitement of the season.

Anna Cook, co-founder of Cinderella Prom Dress Project, is currently collecting used prom dresses to donate to local high school girls. She credits her youngest daughter for helping her come up with the idea for the project.

'I have two daughters, and the second one told me she didn't want to use the first daughter's prom dress," Cook said. "I was living in Austin, and I heard about a very similar project. When I thought about how many girls wear their dresses only once, I thought, 'What a great idea."

Cook contacted the woman in charge of the project to get ideas for her own dress drive. After visiting the website www.donatemydress.org, she got a basic idea of other organizations' guidelines.

While other organizations establish restrictions based on economic need, or only allow special-needs families to benefit from the project, Cook said her Cinderella project is available to any local high school girl.

In addition to Las Cruces students, girls from Truth or Consequences, Deming and Albuquerque are also welcomed to pick out a dress.

This year Cook is taking the project a step further. In addition to providing prom dresses, she will also have accessories available, as well as hairstylists offering advice to the girls when they go pick out their dresses.

"We've never tried it before, but this year we'll have stylists to show the girls some ideas," she said. "The majority of the stylists are students themselves (from Las Cruces' Olympian University College of Hair), and they'll be getting the chance to practice their newfound skills.'

So far this year, the Cinderella Project has collected about 250 dresses, including more than 80 donated from Helping Hands Event Planning.

In lieu of paying an entrance fee, the company offered women free admission to the 2012 Bridal & Special Events Showcase if they donated their used prom dress. Emerald Isle Boutique also made a donation.

Cook said she expects to receive several more donations the day of the event, when girls get to search the racks of dresses for the right one.

"Our biggest challenge has been get-ting girls to come," she said. "They're a little confused about it. I think there's a stigma associated with something being 'used.' We take very special care getting the dresses washed and steamed. It's really OK to do this - it's financially responsible.'

Cook likened the concept to the principle of "reduce, reuse, recycle." Since founding Cinderella Prom Dress Project in 2009, Cook said she's been overwhelmed by the support of the community and the donations she's received.

News of the project has even gone beyond the New Mexico area. A Las Cruces native living in San Francisco contacted Cook to let her know she was interested in donating her old prom dress.

North Carolina heard about the project, she also contacted Cook and explained that she wanted to convince her daughter to attend prom, but she couldn't afford a new dress. After exchanging several emails and pictures, the woman's daughter picked out a Afterward, Cook received a thank-you email from the woman, Elaine James.

"I did receive the beautiful gown," James said. "I love it, my daughter loves it and she will be wearing it to the prom."

Cook credited New Mexico State University sorority Zeta Phi Beta for helping her promote her cause through social media for the first time this year. This year's other sponsors include Able Signs, Comet Cleaners, Doña Ana Storage and the NMSU housing department.

After all the work that goes into the project, Cook said she is thrilled when girls finally find their perfect dress.

"Watching the girls come in ... at first they're so hesitant. You see their confidence grow as they realize, 'Oh my gosh, I can pull this off."

AtTheMovies

Pixar and Disney's animated short "La Luna" is about an Italian boy's adventure to the moon. It is one of the Oscar-winning shorts now playing at the Fountain Theatre in Mesilla.

A collection of Oscar shorts

Films appeal to a range of audiences

Review by Jeff BergFor the Las Cruces Bulletin

The past few years, the short films nominated for Oscar's tended to be dark, brooding and heavy.

Not so this year. Most of them are light and offer some mordant or tongue in cheek humor, and there are also a lot of U.S. and Canadian films selected.

To show all three sets of the films-animated, live action and documentary, would create a four-hour program.

So, the documentaries aren't going to be screened, but will be available online soon, if not already.

Interestingly, this year women direct four of the documentaries. Particularly worth seeking out are "Tsunami and Cherry Blossoms" and the brutally honest "Incident in New Baghdad."

The animated films include: "Sunday" - A 10-minute

Canadian film that most of us can relate to.

A young boy does most everything in his power and imagination to relieve the boredom of a typical Sunday afternoon with his family.

"The Fantastic Flying Books of Mr. Morris Lessmore" – 15 minutes – This touching, dialogue-free film which won the Oscar, tells the marvelous story of a young man picked up during a storm – much like "The Wizard" of Oz" – but transported to a land where books are living entities, where he remains forever.

"La Luna" – This 7-minute piece, free of talking of any kind, is from Pixar and Disney and is another charmer about an Italian boy and his companions who take a unique but necessary trip to the moon.

"A Morning Stroll" – Another speechless entry, is this U.S. made short, which covers three very distinct eras – past, present and future – of a man or something resembling one, taking a stroll, but encountering a chicken each time. It is 7 minutes of imaginative whimsy.

"Wild Life" – Another fine Canadian short, this one takes 13 minutes to tell the story of an Englishman whose enthusiasm shows his penchant for dishonesty and flights of fancy when he purchases a ranch on the Canadian prairie.

Live action films included:
"Pentecost" – In this quirky
Irish piece a young boy, in trouble as an altar boy, both from his family and the parson, tries to do better with unexpected results during its 11-minute running time.

"Raju," is an English and German language film about an East Indian boy being adopted by a young, German couple.

"Raju" – In English and German, this piece, which runs 24 minutes, is the only dramatic film this year. A young German couple adopts a young East Indian boy, only to discover they have been scammed, probably for good reason.

"The Shore" – Back to Ireland again for this 30-minute dark comedy, wherein a man attempts to reunite with his best childhood friend after they split up because of, of course, a woman. It won an Oscar but probably didn't deserve to.

"Time Freak" – Filmmakers and husband and wife Gigi Causey and Andrew Bowler, formerly of El Paso, have put a fun twist into this 11-minute, age-old time machine invention story.

A young amateur inventor introduces his creation to his best friend, who finds that his friend is using his fantastic machine to revisit his own mistakes of a few days earlier instead of heading back to the days of yore.

"Tuba Atlantic" – By far my favorite of all the shorts this year, including the documentaries. The 25-minute Tuba Atlantic uses the dark, dry and subtle humor sometimes displayed by Norwegians to tell the tale of an elderly man who is living his last week while getting revenge on various things, especially seagulls. The birds have bugged him for many years, while he tries to achieve forgiveness from his brother who lives in the U.S. To further his dismay, a young woman, his church assigned 'death angel,' complicates matters severely.

All in all it is a very good program, certainly surpassing the last two years, but please note, you'll welcome the intermission during this 3 and a half hour presentation.

Boxers, briefs or commando? What is your shorts preference? jeffberg@lascruces bulletin.com Jeff Berg is a board member of the Mesilla Valley Film Society and freelance writer for several publications. His reviews reflect his own opinion, not of the film society or the board.

An astronaut in NM

Thornton saves the family farm

The CineMatinee at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, April 7, is "The Astronaut Farmer" (2006, 104 minutes, rated PG).

In the shimmering first moments of the eccentric, endearing follow-your-bliss drama, "The Astronaut Farmer," a spaceman appears to be navigating the surface of the moon. Except that he's on a horse, wearing a NASA helmet and flight suit. The terrain turns out to be an expanse of farmland. And the homespun astronaut, played by Billy Bob Thornton, is a farmer – named Charlie Farmer.

Farmer was once a bona fide NASA man, but he left the space program to save the family farm. Now his freelance goal is to circle the earth in a rocket of his own construction – an orbiting Field of Dreams, let's say. And to that end, he's built a DIY rocket in his barn.

The townsfolk are tolerant enough (except at the bank, since he's defaulting on the mortgage), and his family is downright saintly, considering. Beaming wife Audie (Virginia Madsen) stands by her man, even though Farmer walks a thin line between aspiration and insanity. The three Farmer kids love their daddy, even though he eats dinner in his silver orbit-wear. Only the persnickety, rulesand-regs-hampered government objects to Farmer's project.

It's either a measure of Farmer's certifiable craziness or an expression of the gumption and enterprise that's generally considered all-

American that the would-be rocket man just can't fathom why the feds might frown.

Now might not be the ideal time to release a movie about an astronaut with an obsession, but Farmer's madness is far grander than any ho-hum NASA employee meltdown.

Twin filmmaking brothers Michael and Mark Polish have long been fascinated with the solutions dreamed up by men who don't fit into the patches of piquant America where they happen to be planted, going back to their strong 1999 Sundance debut "Twin Falls Idaho." But the unexpected streak of yearning sunniness — the Spielbergian touch of boyhood dreams propelling a grown man — gives "The Astronaut Farmer" a warmth that's new for them.

"Farmer is both maddeningly barmy and a fascinating, ornery mule. And as such, there's no one I'd rather see orbiting the earth than Thornton, who plays the part with the exact illogical, earnest seriousness required for the mission," wrote www.ew.com. "By the time Bruce Willis drops by, equally sincere, in a lovely cameo, the movie is so serenely in orbit that there's nothing to do but float along and enjoy the strange, sweet ride."

CineMatinee is a unique blend of movies presented by the Mesilla Valley Film Society which showcases unique films, past and present, often with an emphasis on life in the West – the new West, Old West or anything in between – and "movies that missed us," notable films that never had a lot of publicity.

The series is designed to show area residents that film is a form of art and education as well as entertainment. At least one film a month for this series has a New Mexico "connection," drawing from the vast pool of movies made in the state – nearly 500 – or perhaps featuring a star/story from New Mexico talent.

Unless otherwise noted, screening time is 1:30 p.m., and admission is $4 for everyone except film society members who are admitted for $1.

The Fountain Theatre is located at 2469 Calle de Guadalupe, one-half block south of the Mesilla Plaza. For more information, call 524-8287.

The story of four sisters

LCCT takes on 'Belles'

Bulletin Staff Report

The Walker sisters hail from Memphis, but now they are scattered all over the country. Only Peggy still lives in Memphis, so she becomes the caregiver for Mama.

When the play begins, Peggy is phoning her sisters to tell them that Mama is in the hospital – nothing serious – just ate some bad tuna. An intriguing story of vivid characters involving conflicts emerges in the ensuing phone calls among the sisters.

"I like the all female cast. There are so many shows and roles from men, and I wanted to do something that was more about women," said the director, Gail Wheeler. "I like the format of the script with the phone calls. It brings back a time before cell phones when speaking on the phone was a home-centered activity and people spent hours visiting on the phone with

Featured venue: St. Clair

Reviving the music scene

Winery caters to all music lovers

By Amanda Green

Las Cruces Rulletin

St. Clair Winery & Bistro is expanding its musical menu.

With the opening of the new location at 1720 Avenida de Mesilla, St. Clair was able to expand the amount of space for their diners and for live entertainment.

The addition of an outdoor patio and a large front lawn allowed St. Clair to add "music venue" to their impressive list of offerings.

"We have one of the nicest patios in town," said John Furbush, operations manager of the restaurant. "We have always had live music, but more space means we can host bigger and better bands."

The winery offers fine dining, an impressive list of New Mexico wines and live music every night of the week.

"We have a house jazz band every Wednesday," Furbush said. "But we've also added country, rock, easy listening and are preparing to hold several music events this summer."

St. Clair Winery & Bistro's new location, 1720 Avenida de Mesilla, has expanded its musical offerings with the addition of a patio.

The first big event to fill St. Clair's front lawn is Marchapalooza, a musical festival benefiting the Southern New Mexico March of Dimes.

From 5:30 to 9:30 p.m. Friday, April 13, visitors can enjoy an impressive line-up of bands to fit every musical taste.

"Our set starts with light jazz and La Cella Bella," said event co-coordinator Steven Parra. "We also have Crooked Beaver Creek, a country band and Beyond the Ash, ending the night with heavy metal."

Proceeds of all ticket and t-shirt sales benefit the Southern New Mexico March for Babies, which helps support infants born prematurely or with birth defects.

St. Clair is providing ticket holders 21 and older with 6 free wine tastings, and will have a menu of concert-friendly food available.

"We're really excited to host some of these events," Furbush said. "We really wanted to be able to serve great wine, food and music all under the same roof."

Also coming to St. Clair is the Barrels & Blues Wine Festival April 20-22.

"We're continuing to look and book fantastic local and regional talent," Furbush said. "We're featuring C.W. Ayon in an upcoming concert, as well as Yvonne Brooks from Phoenix.

"They're the real deal, and we couldn't be happier to have them at the Las Cruces location."

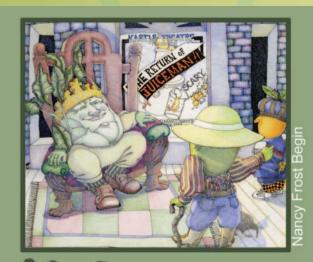

Events on the front lawn have concert seating, and guests are welcome to bring their own chairs and blankets to enjoy the music.

"The lawn is enormous," Furbush said. "And our view of the Organs is breathtaking."

Supporting local farms

Market features fresh, organic goodies

By Amanda Green

It is the vision of Mountain View Market Co-op, 1300 El Paseo Road, to find economic and environmental sustainability in the food cycle within our community.

The market has recently renovated a space near the front of its store to be an inviting place for the community. A bookshelf made of recycled pallets joins a new table, seating area and a bar counter with stools. The space has been updated with a new floor, and is tantalizingly close to the organic, shade-grown coffee the market brews daily.

The addition of grab-and-go food options, as well as the new fresh juices and smoothies, has become a quick favorite among

"We really put an emphasis on quality ingredients and waste reduction," Karrenberg said. "Customers know that we care about where our products are coming from and about the bigger picture.

Karrenberg said the juice bar relies on the produce used in the market and juicing helps to reduce the amount produce that may have otherwise gone to waste.

The cuisine varies depending on the seasonal availability of ingredients, some of which come directly from Mountain View's farm in Mesilla. Once a month the market hosts a "Farm Day" when community members can come out to the farm and help pick, plant and weed.

"Our menu expands depending on the ingredients we have," aid Karrenberg. "With the summer coming up fast, we expect an abundance of wonderfully fresh

The market also supplies several ocal restaurants with farm produce. The proceeds from the produce go right back into the ground in order to return back into the community, creating a local, sustainable economy of agriculture.

Recently, several documentaries have been created to address the sues of food sustainability for the economy and for our health. A few of these, including "Food Matters," "Forks over Knives" and my personal inspiration, "Fat, Sick & Nearly Dead" are all available on Netflix and Hulu.

Their message is clear: food is fuel. As a species we must eat to live instead of living to eat.

In "Fat, Sick & Nearly Dead," an Australian businessman is overweight, on daily medication and eating his way to an early death. In order to give his body time to heal itself, he must give it the right

The transformation is incredible, and the idea simple: you are what you eat. When you give your body the proper tools, there is nothing its incredible systems can't do.

"We're really looking to supply customers with local, organic food options," Karrenberg said.

The juice bar is open from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Saturday and closes at 5 p.m. on Sunday. It's grab-and-go options are vegan, vegetarian and gluten-free friendly.

Who's the fairest of them all?

Mirror Mirror's twisted fairytale

Review by Amanda GreenLas Cruces Bulletin

As a child, I lived and breathed Disney films.

My grandmother had an entire room of her house dedicated to Mickey Mouse and had shelves full of the colorful, bulky VHS

I've seen the classic fairytales told and retold, each director trying to infuse his or her own twist on the well-known stories. Sometimes they're wonderful adaptations. breathing new life into familiar tale. Sometimes they flop.

"Mirror Mirror," featuring Julia Roberts as the evil queen and musician Phil Collins' daughter, Lily Collins, as the pale-skinned Snow White, missed its mark by a mile.

Audiences know the story of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," considering it was the first full-length animated movie Disney had ever released. There is a collective knowledge of how the story begins, unfolds and happily ends.

The story seems simple. A beautiful princess is locked away by her evil witch of a stepmother who has serious jealousy problems.

The princess escapes, lives with seven dwarfs and eventually step-mommy-dearest comes knocking. One poisoned apple later, the prince shows up and dashingly saves the day.

The atmosphere Singh creates is one of incredible wonder and fantasy. It's unfortunate

DAILY 5:20 7:30 9:30 FRI-SUN 2:40 (PG13)

the story was just so poorly written.

Let's begin with Collins, a fairly new actress with some fortunately famous family members. Snow White is required to be pale-skinned, dark haired and stunningly beautiful. (Hello, Kristen Stewart. I really wish you could act.)

Collins is cute at best, but I was so distracted by the big black caterpillars crawling across her forehead I'd forgotten to remember she was lovely.

I'm not sure if they had to dye them for the film, but her eyebrows were so dark, bushy and close together. I was hoping to see a butterfly burst free and liven up the scenes.

Roberts, however, was hilarious. She pulled off the beautiful, vanity-obsessed queen pretty well, given her age.

I'm not sure if she was particularly evil, but for the humorous take on the film, she really worked. Roberts carried the entire film on her shoulders, though it was just too heavy even for an actress of her caliber.

This particular twisted tale leaned heavily on humor, which mostly came from the seven (real) dwarfs. Each one had their own joke, stereotypical personality and they ended up sounding like broken records.

The casting was done with most of the members from Animal Planet's show "Pit Boss." While their faces were familiar, knowing them on a reality show ruined their characters for me.

The prince, played by Armie Hammer, is suave, gorgeous and excellently cast. He threw himself completely into the role especially in a scene about puppy love – but the emphasis for "Mirror Mirror" was to have Snow White save herself.

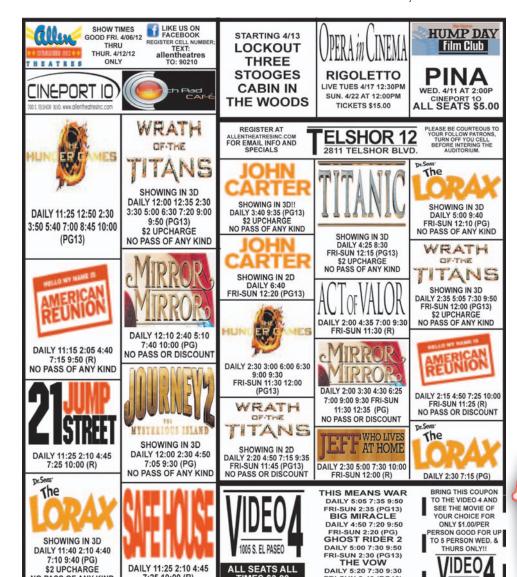

When you do not allow the obvious hero to save the day, there's a huge problem.

I'm all for female empowerment - a strong heroine is always a great change of pace for a fairytale – but not one with existing expectations.

Singh and his writers took huge liberties with the plot of the beloved tale, rearranging and omitting several important points. They added a few chuckles here and there, mostly thanks to Hammer, Roberts and Nathan Lane (Brighton).
What "Mirror Mirror" ended up with, was a lot of flair without substance. The storyline could easily confuse children and disappoint adults.

Fans of the tale might be impressed with the look of the film and the characters, but saddened by the lack of feeling.

'Need' is the other four-letter word

Dianne SageSage Advice

At least once a week, I run into someone I haven't seen in a while and they will ask me what I have been up to.

When they hear I have a women's fitness club, the response is an immediate, "Oh, I need to start working out."

Does this mean I will see them first thing tomorrow? Are they about to start taking after-dinner walks? Sadly, no.

When someone says they "need" to do something, it rarely means they will do it. They use the word "need" in the same way people manage to use a four-letter curse word in the place of a noun, verb, adjective and exclamation.

What's worse is we prioritize our wants over our needs. An expression of desire trumps an expression of necessity because we risk sliding down a hill rather than falling off a cliff.

To illustrate, if you see someone soak your cigarettes in poison that would kill in one puff, then you don't smoke the cigarettes. Never mind that you are slowly poisoning yourself – you can recover, right?

Eating packaged or fast food high in sodium, fat or sugar (or some combination of the three) because we don't have the time to cook, convincing ourselves that we'll get back to a better routine "someday" in the future. We take a spring break off from our New Year's resolution and don't get back on track until, well ... next year.

None of these things will kill you tonight or tomorrow, although your mother may swear you're killing her and your father.

In fact, they may never kill you, but they do take something away from who you are and how you see yourself. The slide down the hill is easy compared to the climb back up. But please don't let yourself get to thinking, "It's too hard so why try?"

To simply say you need to do something now means you wish for the results of good behavior without having to do the work. If you think I am preaching, know that I am not my ideal size. Legitimate issues get in the way for all of us.

How do I know when someone will really start exercising, learn another language or fix my ceiling fan (my husband will read this)? They say, "I want to do that"

Film sheds light on autism

'The Odd Way Home' to film in Las Cruces

By Lorena Sanchez

For the Las Cruces Bulletin

The goal was not to create a film about autism, but rather a film where the main character, Duncan, just happened to be autistic.

The independent film "The Odd Way Home" is in the final stages of pre-production, ready to cast, and on track to start filming this summer in southern New Mexico, including Las Cruces. Unlike most films, this one takes aim at a specific issue without really addressing it head on.

"The main character, Duncan, has autism but instead of feeling sorry for him, we're empoweringhim," said Rajeev Nirmalakhandan who co-wrote the script, is a producer and will direct the film. "I don't want to put that label on him. All we see is that he navigates and thinks differently."

Duncan, who possesses savant-like qualities, is introduced, in a rather amusing way, to Maya, described as a "firecracker of a woman, scarred by abuse and fleeing her shattered life in Los Angeles."

The two quickly strike up a friendship as they travel through New Mexico on a journey neither of them intended to take. Opposites attract, a common theme in films, but with a backstory that might hit home for some people.

Nirmalakhandan realized after taking part in a documentary about families with autistic children, that, although autism had become a common issue, there were still many preconceptions. He chose to approach the issue in a slightly unconventional way, in a fun, road-trip movie that's meant to tug at the heartstrings, tickle the funny bone, educate and inspire all at once

"It's a very poignant and compelling story," said Producer Peter Touche. "It depicts a very authentic and true-to-life portrait of a man with autism."

Touche, a London native, brings 15 years of producing and financing experience to the project. He recently finished the movie "Goats" that was partly filmed in Albuquerque and "Blaze You Out," filmed in Española, N.M.

Touche admits to having an emotional reaction to the script, "And that's always dangerous," he said

"It's been a long rewarding process bringing the film to where it is today," said Patrick Nelson, also a producer of the film. "We brought Peter in from Albuquerque, who has produced big films and big names, to help us make it a true-Hollywood film."

Supporting loved ones with dementia

By Lorena Sanchez

Las Cruces Bulletin

Dementia is a crippling and debilitating disease not just for the patient, but the caregiver as well.

"Dementia is the global deterioration of the memory and cognition that impairs thought and social functioning," said Maia Sideris-Dorame, the Southwest Regional Manager for the Alzheimer's Association.

Despite some stigmas, dementia is not just an old-person's disease. Different types of dementia effect individuals at different ages dementia effect individuals at different ages.

"Alzheimer's has no bias," Sideris-Dorame said. "It can occur in someone at age 30, 40 or 50. Sixty percent of people with Down syndrome are diagnosed with the disease. The youngest person diagnosed with dementia was 26, and they had Down syndrome."

Alzheimer's is the most prevalent type of dementia, accounting for 80 percent of dementia cases. In 2010, 31,000 New Mexico residents 65 years and older were diagnosed with Alzheimer's, according to the Alzheimer's Association.

Other common types of dementia are Dementia with Lewy Bodies, Parkinson's disease, Frontotemporal dementia, Creutzfeldt-Jacob disease and Normal Pressure Hydrocephalus.

Lee Corcos suffered from Alzheimer's. Her daughter, Sid Graft, stepped in after witnessing her mother's change in behavior. On one visit to see her daughter, Corcos packed a suitcase full of slips.

"When she'd come to visit, I'd be with her 24/7," Graft said. "Alzheimer patients are very good at not saying much, especially when they have lucid moments and are aware of some of the things they may have said or done. But it became apparent to me after spending time with her that she couldn't live alone."

After receiving an official diagnosis, Corcos moved to Las Cruces and lived with Graft for a year before moving into an assisted living facility.

During the year her mother lived with her, Graft slept on the couch to prevent her mother from wandering outside in the middle of the night. She would sometimes wake up to Corcos See Dementia on page D2

Graft decided that after a year, it was better for her mother to be in an assisted-living facility where she would be cared for all day and regain a sense of self-sufficiency.

Family and friends who witness this type of deterioration know the heartache that comes with seeing someone they love slip away.

"It's an extremely stressful job, caring for a loved one with dementia," said Adrian Rodriguez, administrator of Crossroads Home Care. "It's what we call the 'sandwich generation,' people who have dual stresses – full-time jobs, children, their own family to support - but who also care for a parent. They continue to

When David Barnhart's father passed away in 1999, Barnhart promised he would continue to take care of his mother. It wasn't until he moved in with her in 2001 that he realized his mother Dorothy suffered from Alzheimer's.

"The most difficult part for me was having her ask where dad was," Barnhart said. "My dad was in the military during the first years of their marriage, and at the time she thought he was in Afghanistan."

Barnhart, like most caregivers, tried to reason with her at first, but eventually just went

Otherwise, it was like I was breaking the news to her that my father had died for the first time over and over again," Barnhart said. "You have no idea what's going on in their mind. You can't reason with them, because it's not there.'

His advice for making these types of situations easier is "love and patience." Patience is difficult but it can make the situation easier.

Rodriguez explained that pressures a caregiver faces often comes from the disease's ability to strip their loved one's ability to perform common social practices and creates a communication barrier.

"The caregiver can become frustrated," Ro-driguez said. "The inability to communicate can cause the caregiver to lose their temper, and in some cases turn to drinking, drugs or other destructive means to cope."

There are resources and recommendations available that can help these types of behav-

Rodriguez recommends becoming educated about the disease to better understand the disease process is a key component to battling the frustration.

"It is also important to take care of yourself through exercise, regular doctors visits and sleep," Rodriguez said. "If you're broken, how do you expect to help someone else?'

Accepting help is an important part of this. Respite care (short-term care) is available so caregivers get a few hours to do something for themselves and take a break from the situaFinally, learn assertive communication.

"Learn how to communicate with dementia patients," Rodriguez said. "Learn ways to motivate them to do a task without being passive or aggressive, and do not antagonize them or they Rodriguez recommends taking a step back from the situation if frustration becomes an issue, because if a patient shuts down, it's difficult to get them to open up again.

Based on her experience, Graft recommends utilizing all the resources possible and stresses the importance of planning ahead.

"Investigate what is available before it becomes necessary," Graft said. "That way, you know what resources there are.'

The Alzheimer's Association has eight core programs for dementia patient caregivers: The Savvy Caregiver, The Veterans Project, safety programs, support groups, respite reimbursement, information and referral, a 24-hour help line and care consultations.

The programs offer financial assistance, support from caregivers who share the same frustrations, tracking bracelets in case a patient wanders off and much more.

Value Living: The will to survive

Every one has a desire to survive and endure

History and research have proven that in a survival situation, the person that makes it through a life-threatening situation has the will to survive.

A person's will to survive, live and endure is a key point in a survival situation. With the force of will, a person who values his or her life can overcome incredible odds. Other people, who have never been tempered or tested may give in or give up on surviving a life-threatening situation.

Having studied and interviewed survivors of prisoner-of-war experiences, I have an even greater respect and understanding of the importance of the "value living" concept. This is even clearer since we have just observed the 70th anniversary of the Bataan Death March.

Even as a graduate of the U.S. Army Survival, Evasion, Resistance & Escape (SÉRE) "High Risk" School, I know firsthand the importance of proper training and the will to survive. My training and life experiences pale in comparison to a POW's.

In the 21st century, these lessons can be applied to living a successful life. Some Americans are taking these lessons and applying them to their lives – not just surviving. They are thriving and succeeding in life and work. Some Americans are either ignoring the history and research or have not been educated on the importance of these life skills. They need to be taught these skills in order to give them an opportunity to become successful. This lesson begins with some basic understanding of the will to survive.

Every one has a desire to survive. This can be studied further if you research how an individual responds to stress (fight, flight or freeze). People with a rural upbringing that includes faith, service to others, hard work, hunting, fishing and camping skills are better able to deal with adversity.

Unfortunately, a significant number of Americans have not had the opportunity or requirement of this upbringing, education and experience. This is partly due to do less Americans having to struggle for their individual existence. That is why teaching these skills are so important.

You cannot force a person to learn these lessons. These lessons must be taught in challenging, yet nurturing, environments. My experience has shown me that leading by example, role modeling and mentoring is the best approach.

Many people may disagree with this approach. However, American and world history is full of examples and case studies where the individual, not the institution, is the key to survival and success.

You need to understand these effects and also reacquaint with the fight, flight or freeze inclinations human beings have when facing a stressful situation. Excellent books to read and study on this topic are "Man's Search for Meaning" by Viktor Frankl and "Five Years to Freedom: The True Story of a Vietnam POW" by James N. Rowe. It is worth noting that the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum has extensive resources describing how individuals survived and coped with traumatic experiences. You can access this informa-

In our community, this is even easier since we are blessed to have Bataan Death March survivors, Korean War POWs and other Veterans with similar experiences. Additionally, there are numerous other Veterans that can enlighten a person in what it takes to value living. As a Veteran, I challenge you to discover and understand about the "Will to Survive".

'My older brother has Asperger's," Nelson said. "He was an adult when he was diagnosed. At the time it was difficult to get a diagnosis, until we came to Albuquerque.

Based on his experience, Nelson is confident in calling the character of Duncan "authentic" and empowers the character.

Not only does the film already have two seasoned and committed producers, it has gotten approval from the two of the autistic community's most recognizable faces.

Temple Grandin and Stephen Shore, bestselling authors, professors, prominent speakers and advocates for autism, have voiced their support.

(Grandin) and (Shore) told us that typically in films you are meant to feel sorry for autistic characters, it's not centered around the wonderful qualities they possess," Nelson film.

"We're making this film on a tight budget and will be using students from New Mexico State University," Touche said. "Our team is eager to create something that will be impossible to ignore."

Nirmalakhandan's connection to the Creative Media Institute at NMSU means students will play an active role in the film's produc-

"We want to get two recognizable names for the lead roles, so we're sending scripts to Los Angeles," Nirmalakhandan said.

Once completed, Nelson said they plan on sending the film in to Sundance for consider-

Not only is the film meant to shed a little light on an issue that is becoming more prevalent in the country, but as a project that involves local organizations that provide services, resources and therapy for those affected by autism, and help with fundraising efforts.

Bulletin to debut worship directory

Publication is a resource for newcomers, lifelong residents

By Beth Sitzler

Those searching for a church home, or for more information on local spiritual organizations, will have a new resource when the Las Cruces Bulletin debuts its firstever Las Cruces Worship Directory Friday, April 13.

A labor of love between the editorial, advertising and production department of the weekly newspaper, the Las Cruces Worship Directory offers readers information on the more than 100 faithbased organizations in the Mesilla Valley.

'We feel that our church community is the base of our entire community," said Las Cruces Bulletin Publisher David McCollum. "When we look at the businesses of organizations of Las Cruces, our oldest and most enduring organization is our church community.

We wanted to provide a directory to show people the breadth and scope of our church community in the Las Cruces area."

Purchasing the Las Cruces Bulletin in 2003, McCollum said a publication dedicated to the area's religious community has always been a priority for him and his wife, Jaki, president of the company.

It was a project we always wanted to do," he said. "When we formed FIG (Faith in God) Publications, we added a church section and it became a vital part of our newspaper.

While always a priority, the decision to pursue the publication came about after the Bulletin team created a tabletop book in honor of New Mexico's centennial, "Las Cruces: A Photographic Journey," McCollum said.

Working closely for several years with a number of churches, many of which have served the community for more than 100 years, the McCollums decided to move forward with the publication in 2012.

"It's a natural extension and complement to what we do each week in the newspaper," McCollum said.

'I'm excited we're doing it because we do so many different things," Jaki McCollum said. "I hope it's informative not only for people living in the city itself, but also those coming to visit.'

The 36-page magazine includes two lists of area churches. The first shows churches by denomination. The other list is alphabetical. These two listings are designed for newcomers and natives alike to easily find a church or spiritual family to fit their needs.

There is also an editorial piece on the diversity of spiritual organizations in the Mesilla Valley, creating a melting pot that includes Baptists, Catholics, Lutherans, Buddhists and much more.

A resource for the community, the Las Cruces Worship Directory is designed to connect everyone with the love and support needed to grow their faith, an element that is important to the McCollums.
"It's part of my strength," Jaki McCollum said. "You need to be able to believe in something greater than yourself."

"We encourage everyone to have a spiritual center," David McCollum said. "Without our spiritual center, our company wouldn't exist. It's a community of people outside of your family, outside of your work, to support you. A church community can be very meaningful in people's

A cross-country trip promotes bicycle safety

Group makes stop in Las Cruces

By Lorena Sanchez

Ride America for Safe Routes made its way through the Mesilla Valley Tuesday, April 3, with a stop in Mesilla, to ride along with a group of more than a dozen students from Mesilla Park Elementary's Safe Routes to School weekly bike ride. Jeanie Ward-Waller, lead rider for the Ride America journey from Key West, Fla. to San Francisco, with her sister Chelsea, mother Jane Ward and Stephanie Palmer.

The journey started Feb. 5 and is on track to end April 28 in San Francisco. Las Cruces was the 3,500-mile mark.

'It's been really wonderful, no major problems," Ward-Waller said. Some days are more challenging than others, some over 100 miles. We've encountered rains and wind, but so far, we've had a great

The four women are making the 5,000-mile trek cross-country to educate bike riders about proper safety procedures and promote the need for more bike-friendly roads.

It's always safer to be visible in the road than... [to] risk not being seen.

> JEANIE WARD-WALLER, lead rider for Ride America

"It's a critical issue, bicycle safety," Ward-Waller said. "We go to schools, make presentations on bike safety, meet with cycling clubs and spread the word about Śafe Routes."

So far, the group said they have enjoyed their experience, and opted to take a break from their cause to relax in Las Cruces. They were unable to make a presentation and meet with students due to statewide testing.

For any cyclists, young or old, Ward-Waller has some words of advice to stay safe while sharing the road with motorists. First, it's always important to follow the rules of the road. Second, be visible.

"Act like a vehicle," she said. "It's always safer to be visible in the road than riding on the side of the road and risk not being seen.

Ward-Waller recommends that children always ride on the sidewalk to ensure their safety.

Although the group took the day off to unwind, they chose to wake up at 7 a.m. to join the Mesilla Elementary Students on the weekly bike-ride to school, organized by Ashleigh Curry, the Safe Routes to School organizer for Mesilla Park Elementary.

Unifying indoor with outdoor space

Contemporary Tuscan home captures 'earthy' feel By Beth Sitzler "The entrance looks like a cathedral," said varying shades of brown and white covering

Harlo Dynek of Summit Development discovered this when he and his team designed the home at 4260 Lyra Court.

"We threw out some ideas and this is what we came up with," Dynek said. "We wanted to come up with something different. It's traditional with modern lines.

Using design elements found in his previous homes, combined with styles used around town, Summit Development fabricated the 2,650-square-foot home in a contemporary Tuscan style just in time for the 2011 Spring Showcase of Homes.

Dynek said these "earthy elements" are carried throughout the house, beginning with the unique rock columns surrounding a front patio.

We were trying to bring the outside in and vice versa," he said.

Outside the large, wooden front door, a mosaic representation of the Organ Mountains covers the threshold, continuing the idea of merging the indoor and outdoor spaces.

Inside, a grand entryway, with wood beams and an iron chandelier accenting the top, greets guests.

Realtor Porkey Martinez with Steinborn & Associates Real Estate, who represents the listing.

An office, hidden behind a wooden door, is located near the entrance. The unusually shaped room includes wood floors and detailed trim. The trim was created by the Summit Development team specifically for

"We just took wood and made rustic moldings," he said. "We had fun."

The entrance leads into the open living room, dining area and kitchen.

"There's a lot of volume," Dynek said. "The ceilings go from nine to 12 feet."

Dynek said a diverse selection of tile, stone and wood was used to further his vision of comfort and luxury. This detailing can be seen on the tile-covered fireplace set in the corner as well as in the kitchen.

Combining different shapes, the living room features rectangular and square windows for natural light and to bring in the surrounding view, while the kitchen encompasses a curved design.

The shape of the rounded bar area, drenched in tile, is repeated on the ceiling, which includes recessed lighting.

A swirling granite countertop in shades of green, pink and brown lines the kitchen and is reminiscent of moving sand. This color palette is complemented by mosaic and glass tiles in the backsplash and the dark, stacked cabinets.

Next to this area is the master suite. Two tall nichos with faux finishes are recessed outside the door leading into the room. Not just a square, the bedroom features an angular design. The tray ceiling features the custommade wood trim. Wood also covers the floor.

Glass double doors lead into the master bathroom. The centerpiece of the room is the oval-shaped jetted bathtub, accented in tile and lit with glass blocks.

"They don't get any fancier than this," Martinez said of the bathroom.

Across from the bathtub is the rounded shower. Fine detailing went into creating the diagonal, diamond pattern of the shower, which includes two showerheads and a bench. An opening in the curved wall opens the shower to the rest of the room.

The same swirling granite countertops cover the two sinks. A large, walk-in closet completes the master suite. The closet includes a door to the laundry room for easy access.

The laundry room can also be accessed by a hallway leading to the home's other two bedrooms. Both rooms, which share a bathroom, feature walk-in closets and recesses for a desk or entertainment center.

Martinez said Summit Development used 2-by-6 construction when building the home.

"They're one of the few builders that in every house they build, they use 2-by-6 construction," he said.

The backyard has been left a blank canvas for the new homeowners to create their own

"All of the amenities of the home and the price make it unique," Martinez said.

Keep plastic bags out of the landfill

Grocery shopping can result in creative solutions for your annoying problems

By Beth Sitzler

Almost as commonly heard as "red or green?" is "paper or plastic?"

A personal choice many shoppers struggle with, there are benefits and disadvantages to using both bag varieties - which is why some are opting for reusable cloth bags.

If you're a shopper who selects plastic bags, you're not alone - approximately 500 billion to 1 trillion plastic pages are consumed yearly around the world. Even more astonishing, it's believed that every five seconds in the United States, 60,000 plastic bags are used, according to http://tlc.howstuffworks.com.

Sadly, many of these bags end up in the landfill, where they will then take 400 to 1,000 years to decompose.

In honor of the one-year anniversary of curbside recycling coming to the City of the Crosses, here are some ways you can do your part to keep those plastic grocery bags out of the landfill by reusing them.

- 1. Line a cracked vase: A good way to bring spring into your home is through homegrown flower arrangements. If your favorite vase is cracked, however, you may not feel like dealing with the mess of dripping water. You can still use that vase to create your bouquet if you have an extra plastic grocery bag lying around. Use the bag to line the vase before filling it with water and the flowers. The bag can be cut down to size to better fit the vase. You don't want any excess plastic to deter from your arrangement.
- 2. Use as stuffing: Whether creating a stuffed bear or your own throw pillows, there are thrifty ways you can make these do-ityourself projects. Rather than purchasing commercially sold stuffing, create your own using leftover plastic grocery bags. Just ball them up and place them inside your project.

- 3. Drain bath toys: Mr. Ducky is a lifesaver when your toddler is taking a bath. He and his fellow bath companions make the experience that much more enjoyable for your tot. Return the favor to your child's bath toys by allowing them to properly drain. Poke several holes into the bottom of a plastic grocery bag and place the plastic toys inside. Hang the bag from the faucet and any water roaming around in the toys will drain through the bag. Not only will this keep the toys from becoming moldy, it will also keep them organized in one central location.
- 4. Get help with the laundry: Growing up, there had been an occasion or two when my mother would open the washing machine or drier to find wads of paper, loose change and even, horror of horrors, gum littering the inside. If only she had hung a plastic grocery bag in the laundry room to place this items in before she washed a load - or have family members who remembered to check their own pockets before tossing their clothes in the hamper.
- 5. Store your skirts: Help relieve that overstuffed closet by storing your off-season skirts in your dresser. Simply roll them up, place them in grocery bags and pack them away. This will help them stay wrinkle free until you're ready to wear them again.
- 6. Give your purse shape: For those out there who have multiple purses to fit any situations, you may come across the same problem - your purse losing its shape when it's stored away in your closet. Help those floppy bags retain their original shape by filling them with your excess plastic grocery bags. When you need the bag, just take out the balled up plastic and use in another purse.
- 7. Make toilet bowl cleaning easier: There are some household tasks that are tedious and there are others that are just plain unpleasant.

Cleaning your toilet bowl would probably fall into the latter category. Even using a long-handled brush, the thought of sticking your hand in the commode can make your skin crawl. Guard your dermis by slipping a plastic grocery bag over your hand. You'll be able to scrub away without getting dirty.

8. Stop steel wool from rusting: While steel wool is designed to eliminate just about any baked-on mess your cookware can encounter, it isn't protected from rust. A few days after using the cleaning tool, you may notice bits of orange tinge forming on it. Prevent this from happening by placing the steel wool in a plastic grocery bag after it has been used.

9. Line a litter box: One of the joys of owning a cat is cleaning out its litter box. Save yourself some time, and mess, by lining the box with a large, plastic grocery bag or two before you pour in the litter. The next time you need to empty the box, just lift out the bag, tie it off and throw it away. Line the box with another bag and begin the process again.

10. Help fruit ripen: Peaches are on sale, but they're hard as rocks - what do you do? Buy them and help them ripen by placing them inside a plastic grocery bag with a piece of ripen fruit. The ripe fruit will release natural gases that will help the unripe fruit soften. Leave them in the bag only a few days, or else the fruit will spoil.

11. Protect small plants from frost: Although we're moving into spring, this is a good trick to keep in the back of your mind when Old Man Winter peeks his head around again. Keep your small plants protected from frost by shielding them with plastic grocery bags. Slip a bag over each plant and secure them with clothespins or paper clips. When the weather becomes warm again, remove the bags and let your plants soak up the sun.

12. Clean your grill: With the weather warming up, you may find yourself using your grill more often. A good way to clean the rack without exerting too much elbow grease is by covering it with oven cleaner and setting it into an oversized plastic grocery bag. Close the bag and let the rack sit for a day. When you open the bag, do it outside and keep it away from your face so not to breathe in the fumes. That caked-on mess should be much easier to wipe

13. Learn to juggle: Mastering the art of juggling can seem like an impossible feat to a beginner. Coordinating tossing the balls in the air without dropping them can be a challenge. Ease yourself into juggling by learning the basics with plastic grocery bags. Take three of the bags and work on throwing each in the air. After you get this down, you'll be ready to transition to firmed objects.

Fold the bag into a strip, then cut the bag into 1 1/2- to 2-inch pieces

City celebrates curbside recycling anniversary

Implementing pickups doubles area collection

By Beth Sitzler

Since curbside recycling was introduced to Las Cruces on April 4, 2011, more than 7,938 tons of recyclables have been created – a great leap from the 3,811 tons collected the year before

"About 4,400 tons of that was from curbside recycling," said South Central Solid Waste Authority Director Patrick Peck, adding that the rest was generated from drop off, commercial, scrap metal and electronic recycling as well as recycling from New Mexico State University. "In residential trash, that's a 15 percent diversion. Five years ago, there was only a 3 percent diversion."

Peck said this is the most recyclables ever collected in the city, proving that the curbside recycling program is a success. When the program began, however, he said there were some complaints and confusion.

"As people began to understand the program and as their questions were answered, people settled into the program," he said. "My staff did a great job handling the calls. They were very patient."

According to information collected by the South Central Solid Waste Authority, curbside recycling received, on average, a 65 percent participation rate from residents throughout its first year.

"Sometimes it was a little higher, sometimes it was a little lower," Peck said. "I'm extremely happy with the program and how it has gone this year."

While the idea of bringing curbside recycling to the city was bounced around for years, Peck said the creation of the Friedman Recycling Co. material recovery facility in El Paso – where the collected recyclables are taken – made it possible.

"Recycling benefits the community," Peck said. "It helps control costs as the city expands.

"People's reasons for recycling are personal and they're different. ... The program now allows them to fulfill that desire."

Peck said the city currently is taking 36 tons of recyclables to the Friedman facility twice a day. This amount isn't only credited to the introduction of curbside recycling in the city, but other recycling programs as well.

"The recycling culture has come into Las Cruces and it's expanding," he said. "It's taking off as part of the system. It's the norm, not the exception."

In January, NMSU introduced its single-stream curbside recycling program in student family housing and to date has collected about 100 tons of material. A single-stream drop off recycling program has also been created at NASA.

Thanks to curbside recycling, introduced last April, 38 tons of materials are taken from the area to El Paso daily.

"I think all of that is following the same momentum," said Peck, adding that they are expanding recycling opportunities in the county and are working with a recycling subcommittee in Anthony, N.M.

Las Cruces Public Schools has also gotten involved with the local recycling movement.

"The schools are taking it by storm," he said. "There are containers at all of the schools."

As awareness of recycling in the city continues to grow, Peck said more Las Crucens are glad to have it.

"About 99 percent of the feedback has been positive," Peck said. "Some people want second containers.

"We'll see how the program continues to grow and develop over the next few years. Right now, we're happy where we are going."

At the beginning of the year, a change came to the curbside recycling program.

"When Friedman came in and looked at Las Cruces, they created new routes, which trash pick up now follows," Peck said. "Now, both are picked up on the same day. It made it more efficient. People are a lot happier about it."

In the fall, Peck said there will be a big push for business recycling with the New Mexico Recycling Coalition showing how recycling influences the economical development of cottage industries and businesses

In addition to curbside recycling, drop off, commercial, scrap metal and electronic recycling has collected more than 7,938 tons in a year.

Western Stoves & Fireplaces enhances indoor, outdoor living

By Beth Sitzler

As Las Cruces embraces spring, some residents might to decide now is the time to update their old fireplaces or create an outdoor kitchen, and luckily for them, Western Stoves & Fireplaces is here to help with those needs.

Established in 1989, the company was operated out of a local's house until Jim Flores purchased it in the 1990s. The company continued to grow under his direction, said Devin Henry, current owner of Western Stoves & Fireplaces who went to work for the business after college.

"I did everything but install, but I can do that if I need to," Henry said. "I worked my way from the bottom to the top. When I got to the top, I was ready for that next level and the only thing left to do was to be an owner."

Having the experience in sales, accounting, ordering, purchasing and other aspects of the operation, Henry said when Flores decided to sell the company, she was ready to take that next step to becoming a business owner.

"I really enjoyed it," she said. "I really enjoyed working with people and helping them build their homes."

In 2009, Henry and her husband, Patrick, who had previously worked as a contractor, purchased Western Stoves & Fireplaces.

"We liked being able to call the shots," she

Since taking over Western Stoves & Fireplaces three years ago, Henry said they have worked to expand the company's services and reach in the community. The company, she said, specialize in fireplaces, inserts, stoves and outdoor living areas, a new feature the Henrys added to the company.

While the company originally catered to mostly track homes, she said after the economic downturn, they receive more business from high-end homes.

"We thought the economy would have a huge impact on us, but we've actually had a lot more higher-end homes than before," she said. "We've also been meeting with the client, not the builder. People want to choose and see what goes into their house, not just what the builder chooses for them. More people want to put quality into their home."

In addition to serving those building a new home, Henry said remodeling projects generates a large portion of business.

"We'll rip out fireplaces and put new ones in," she said. "In the last three months, we've done about seven to 10 of them."

The company also has broken into the outdoor living sector, providing everything a homeowner would need to create an outside retreat.

"The outdoor living areas have dominated business for the last two years," Henry said. "They can include barbecues, fire pits and pergolas. We customize our outdoor living areas, so the customer can get whatever they want. We can build an outdoor kitchen to be any shape, any form or any size they want.

any shape, any form or any size they want.
"We cover everything from the low to high end."

While some customers select a simple kitchen design, others want something more elaborate, which the company can accommodate with its array of stucco, granite, faux rock and tile.

"We recently did one that included a teppanyaki grill," Henry said.

Although the temperatures are getting warmer, Henry said business is still brisk, with many homeowners in Las Cruces, as well as Silver City and Alamogordo, turning to the company for their heating needs, which include biomass-burning stoves. These higher-end Continued on following page stoves heat a house using zone heating.

"We're still installing fireplaces and stoves," she said. "It never really stops, not even in the summer. The spring is the building season. Just today, we have three installations."

The company also has been busy servicing homes – which includes cleaning chimneys and stoves in preparation for fall – throughout the region.

"We changed our services," she said. "We used to only service our products, but now we can service every product out there. Our guys are trained to know every product."

Henry said something that makes Western Stoves & Fireplaces different is that each staff member in charge of installation is National Fireplace Institute certified.

"It's like a contractor's license, but in our field," she said, adding that the certification covers pellet, wood and gas stoves.

The crew also has a MM2 license, which covers gas and plumbing.

"When people walk in the door, we want to give them as much information as we can," Henry said. "Most people don't know about this stuff, so we want to help educate them."

Henry said they have worked non-stop to get the word out on the various products and services they provide. This includes participating in the March Home & Garden Show at the Las Cruces Convention Center, where many interested community members learned more about fireplaces and stoves.

"I actually enjoy being able to help someone," Henry said. "We like to say the fireplace is the heart of a home. It's where people gather.

"I like being able to see that result from the beginning of a project to the finished product. It's amazing what the bigger picture is. In the winter, a fireplace can make your home warm and cozy. And in the summer, an outdoor living area is great."

Henry said there are a few ways they keep Western Stoves & Fireplaces up to date on the latest the industry has to offer. In addition to watching HGTV, she said they travel to various exposés throughout the country.

"We see what's coming to the market and what sort of demand there is," Henry said. "A lot of what we do is try to fit the customer's needs."

Henry said more contemporary designs have made a splash in the market, with many customers requesting fire lines and glass, rather than the traditional fake log.

"Even if it is something we don't have, we will find it for them," she said.

Magnolia may be your winning tree

Evergreen as well as flowering, this plant can thrive with care

Gary Guzman Gardening Guru

There are few trees that are both evergreen and flowering that will successfully grow in this area. The magnolia is one of them.

Although they will require regular watering during their newly planted years, they will become somewhat drought tolerant once they are established.

This tree has beautiful glossy leaves and large fragrant flowers during the early summer months. They will require a fair amount of soil amendments before they are planted to look their best. You may use compost and or peat moss to help build the soil before planting. This will not only expedite quick root grow, but will also help retain soil moisture and nutrients as well.

Additional amounts of iron or a soil acidifier will also help keep the leaves deep green. This is to be used in conjunction with a water soluble or granular fertilizer.

If you have trouble getting your magnolia to bloom, you may add triple or super phosphate to your soil. This product will help just about any flowering plant bloom to its maximum potential. If you prefer a water-soluble fertilizer, look for one with a high middle number, above 50.

Although this tree is thought of as growing mainly in temperate climates, it has taken some of our toughest winters yet. This is including last year's winter blitz. They did look "winter bitten" but most in the area seemed to have made a full recovery. This is contrary to what has been written about them. I guess the magnolias do not know how to read.

There are now several cultivars to choose from. Some will grow under 20 feet upon maturity and some will grow beyond 30 feet tall with age. There are varieties with a brown color on the undersides of its leaves and some that are completely green on both sides.

Most that are labeled 50 to 60 feet or higher will not attain that height here in the Southwest because of our, climate, soil, or "dirt" and lack of rainfall, so don't take too much stock in the tag or label.

The "cons" to planting these trees are thrips in the flower buds, and water spots on the leaves. The thrips can be easily controlled with a spray that lists them on the label. The water spots can be eliminated with a light horticultural oil spray. This spray should not be used during the hottest time of the day, however.

All in all, the magnolia is worth planting if you enjoy year-round interest and a sweet fragrance produced by this tree.

Knowing spring nuisances

Pests can affect your health and well-being

As homeowners are swinging their doors and windows wide open to welcome the fresh spring air, they're also rolling out the red carpet for commonly known pests such as cockroaches, rodents and house flies.

Not only are these pests a nuisance, but did you know they pose a threat to your health? From irritating your allergies and triggering asthma attacks to spreading bacteria, it rings true, unfortunately. We often associate our health with physical fitness and diet so it often comes as a surprise when told that pests pose potentially serious health risks to humans.

It's imperative to understand the probable dangers stemming from some of these critters and to remain vigilant in preventing infestations.

Cockroaches

In recent years, several studies have surfaced pointing out the distinct connection between cockroaches and asthma. The National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID) reported that 1-in-5 children in the United States have severe sensitivities to cockroach allergens, which can cause or increase the severity of asthma symptoms.

These allergens are commonly exposed in homes through fecal droppings, saliva, shed skin and decomposing bodies of cockroaches. This has a direct negative impact on your home's indoor air quality.

Commonly found in the kitchen or bathroom areas, cockroaches naturally carry up to 33 various kinds of bacteria on the spines of their legs and body, which can contaminate food, cooking equipment and food surfaces.

Keeping your food properly sealed and stored, cleaning your kitchen daily, maintaining dry and well ventilated basements and crawl spaces and disposing of garbage on a regular basis will help to prevent an infestation of these germ spreading pests.

Rodents

It's always a good idea to regularly inspect your home for signs of rodents, which include droppings and chew marks. Mice and rats pose a major threat, given their capacity to produce more than 25,000 fecal pellets annually in addition to irritating allergies. They are known to spread diseases, including Hantavirus Pulmonary Syndrome, which is a respiratory disease with flu-like symptoms. This disease can cause headaches, fever, nausea, diarrhea and abdominal pain.

Rodents can also bring homeowners in contact with their hitchhiking buddies, who are fleas, mites, ticks and lice.

To steer clear of any rodent ailments, stay consistent with cleaning to ensure that there are no food crumbs or spills left behind, and keep your garage and storage spaces free of clutter to deter rodents that are on the hunt for nesting spots.

House flies

We're all familiar with this annoyance – the common house fly. These household disturbances are widespread because of their remarkable ability to reproduce quickly and in large quantities.

House flies are premier carriers of communicable diseases, given their capability to transfer more than 100 pathogens, including malaria, salmonella and tuberculosis. Not to mention they defecate on a constant basis and instantly contaminate food and surfaces by spreading disease-ridden organisms that are picked up on their bodies and through their saliva.

To prevent these tiny pests from becoming health burdens, keep your doors, windows and vents closed as often as possible and properly screen windows and repair any rips or tears in existing screens.

For your health's sake, take all necessary steps to avoid an infestation. You can stay ahead of the game by setting up routine pest control service inspections, which will certainly give you peace of mind that you and your loved ones are protected from pest invaders.

Iris show to brighten up Mesilla Valley Mall

Society holds 39th annual show to bring awareness to colorful flowers

By Adam Baca

The 39th annual Mesilla Valley Iris Show will take place from 1 to 6 p.m. Saturday, April 14, inside Mesilla Valley Mall, 700 S. Telshor Blvd.

The iris show is being hosted by the Mesilla Valley Iris Society, an affiliate of the American Iris Society. There will be no charge for anyone wishing to enter the competition or to enjoy the show.

"You're going to see some flowers you've never seen and most of them are beautiful," said Steve Kelley, treasurer for the Mesilla Valley Iris Society.

Although the show will be open to the public starting at 1 p.m., those who wish to enter the competition will need to arrive earlier. Anyone who wants to enter an iris into the competition will need to show up with their flower, between 8 and 10:30 a.m. to have it classified.

President of the Mesilla Valley Iris Society Howie Dash said people bringing flowers for competition must know the name, the year the iris was introduced and the type of iris.

Those bringing flowers need not bring the entire plant including the root, or just the flower. The contestant must bring the entire stalk, presented in a vase, and include the iris budding.

"You want to try to present your iris in the best possible way," Dash said.

Any flower that is submitted after 10:30 a.m. will not be able to enter the competition, but if time and space permits, it will be placed on table labeled as "for display only."

Once all flowers are entered and classified, judging will be from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. The competition will be juried and Dash said attendees would receive ballots so they also can vote on which flower they admire most.

There will be 15 sections in the competition, but Kelley said it really depends on how many people show up with flowers and what kind they are. There will be awards given to first, second, third and honorable mention.

Kelley said there have been more than 100 entries during shows from the past few years.

"They're going to see rows of irises," Dash said.

"You always hope to see some of the new introductions," Kelley said.

He said hybridizers introduce new varieties each year. Hybridizing is the act of breeding two different flowers with each other to create something new.

"The more varieties, the better," he said.

Not only is the iris show an opportunity for gardeners to show their beautiful irises, it is an opportunity to learn about the flower and its culture.

According to Kelley, people will be able to discuss the watering, fertilizing and sunlight needed for the flower.

"It's going to be educational," Dash said. "We also want to show people you can grow them in Las Cruces."

He said the show is meant to present the iris as a garden flower.

Dash said they decided to return the show to Mesilla Valley Mall after it was held at the Ramada Palms de Las Cruces last year. He said with the show at the mall, those passing by who did not know about the show might decide to stop by and show some interest in the flower.

The Mesilla Valley Iris Society also is interested in having more members join, Dash said. The society was founded in 1973 and its purpose is to encourage the growing of irises in this area.

"We hope to get more people interested in growing irises," Dash said.

"It's something different," Esther Jaurequi said while working at Eyemasters in Mesilla Iris will line Mesilla Valley Mall during the 39th annual Mesilla Valley Iris Show from 1 to 6 p.m. Saturday, April 14.

Valley Mall, close to where the iris show would take place. "I think it would be neat to see the different colors and sizes."

Not only will people be able to see all of the different flowers, it is an event for people to get out and go to.

Rachael Estell, who works at Flowerama, said, "I really like the bold of the purple."

She said any flower show is a good idea, as it will bring awareness to the flowers.

"Flowers are a good thing, they make people happy," Estell said.

Ingredients are not created equal

Better baking supplies enhance the taste, texture of your desserts

Ever wonder why your meticulously crafted, measured and rolled cookies are just slightly off – whether it's the way the texture feels in your mouth or the buttery taste that is yearning for a little something more. It could be that your desserts are rebelling against the ordinary ingredients you are using.

Even the most experienced home bakers use ingredients that do not enhance the flavor and texture of their decadent desserts. All baking ingredients aren't created equal. It is a misconception that vanilla is vanilla and that all-purpose flour works for everything.

The granular texture of sugar, the fat content of butter and the gluten content of flour all make a difference in the taste, fluffiness and moisture of the baked good. It's the blending of these ingredients that result in a spectacular, uncompromising taste.

To help bakers save their desserts from protest, Spice Islands partnered with bloggers Caroline Lubbers of "Whipped" and Gaby Dalkin of "What's Gaby Cooking?" to break down the myth that baking ingredients are all the same, and to share indulgent baking recipes that rely on high-quality ingredients for superior, unparalleled treats.

"Being a private chef, I am always looking for where I can buy the freshest and highest-quality ingredients," Dalkin said. "I've been known to trek across town just to find a perfect ingredient for my recipes, especially when it comes to what I consider the hero flavor in many desserts – vanilla

"I look for bourbon vanilla beans that are sourced from Madagascar, like those from Spice Islands, which are known for being the world's finest. Quality vanilla provides purity in taste you can't achieve with lesser-quality vanilla beans."

Choosing the right flour is a bit more complex. Understanding gluten content is most important when selecting the right type of flour for a particular baked good or dessert.

Creating the best-tasting desserts begins with quality ingredients.

baked goods, but the end result may not have the perfect texture the baker is trying to achieve," Lubbers said. "I think it's important to keep a few different flours in a pantry in addition to the standard all-nurpose all-purpose.

"One with very high gluten content for breads, usually over 12 percent protein, to achieve a more structured texture; pastry flour that has around 8 percent protein; and one of the most underestimated flours that is lowest in protein, cake flour. The delicate tenderness it gives to cakes is absolutely unmatched and can't be achieved with all-purpose flour. Bakers won't believe the difference it makes in their cakes."

Many bakers prefer wheat flour and it can be used for any baked good if the baker wants to achieve more grainy texture.

"I like to use wheat flour in anything with nuts to complement the nutty flavor," Lubbers said. "I also like to use wheat flour as a topping for streusels to provide added texture."

When it comes to making sure desserts are creamy, the butter makes all the difference.

"For baking, especially when the dessert relies on the distinct taste of the butter, such as in pound cake or butter cookies, I use a very high butterfat European butter," Dalkin said. "The higher butterfat intensifies the flavor of the dessert considerably."

To ensure desserts tantalize the taste buds, selecting cane sugar that is less processed or organic creates a purer, sweeter flavor when used in baking.

"I like to use cane sugar, but I really think bakers underuse brown sugar," Dalkin said. "I use brown sugar in almost everything I bake. It does give the desserts a brownish color, but using a muscovado sugar adds another layer of taste, depth and complexity you can't achieve with ordinary cane sugar."

The same purity factor applies to salt. "I use a fine sea salt for baked items," Lubbers said. "It has a much cleaner flavor without the aftertaste of table salt. It blends better with the other ingredients."

Sea salt from the Mediterranean, like Spice Islands', is not only rich in trace minerals, but it is flavorful without being overpowering or too salty.

The combination of all of the ingredients working together is what makes the flavor spectacular. That's why learning a little bit about each ingredient and the function it performs in the finished product is essential in making the right ingredient choices for the right baked goods.

"You don't have to be a professional baker to be mindful of your ingredients," Lubbers said. "When you put that much time into creating luxurious desserts, take the extra step to use the right ingredients."

Budget-savvy improvements

Great things can be done on a shoe string

Even with a bare-bones decorating budget, you can still give your home a fresh look for spring.

It just takes a bit of creativity and an open mind, according to Ginny Bean, publisher and founder of Ginny's catalog and www.ginnys.com.

"One of the easiest and least expensive ways to spruce up your home is to subtract from what's in it," Bean said.

Removing clutter is just one of Bean's low-cost, highimpact tips for giving your home a seasonal lift.

Clear the clutter. In the winter, it's comforting to have stacks of books and magazines on coffee tables and throws on couches. In the spring, you want open and airy. Put books on shelves, and magazines in a rack or basket. Tuck the throws in the linen closet, and pack away knick-knacks

Rearrange the furniture. Try floating furniture in the room rather than hugging the walls. It's a great trick for making the space feel different and less structured. Swap out an item in your living room for one in your bedroom, or slide something from the kitchen into the dining room.

Spring for some color. A few touches of bright, saturated color can refresh any décor and distract the eye from items that might be a bit dated. No one will notice a worn coffee table if it has a bold, oversized vase sitting on it. There's no need to break the bank. Think about pillows or placemats to incorporate the colors you want.

Accessorize. You can change your towels, shower curtain and bath accessories for less than $100. Jar candles are another inexpensive way to create an inviting room environment. Seasonal scents like honeysuckle, freesia and spring tulip add color, freshness and intoxicating fragrance.

Go sheer. Replace heavy draperies with bright, light-weight curtains or sheers. You won't believe the difference it can make. Just let them hang and blow in the breeze.

Remake your bed. Put away that heavy comforter or quilt in favor of a lighter bedspread. Mix and match solid-colored fitted and top sheets with pillowcases in various patterns. Tuck the top sheet tightly all around and fold the edge at the head of the bed over your coverlet or blanket. Fold your bedspread down to rest across the foot of the bed. Add accent pillows to create an inviting, luxurious-looking bed.

Assess your artwork. Is your wall decor warm and cozy? Switch out a few pieces for something lighter and brighter.

Plant an idea. Put at least one house plant in every room. Fill a low planter or kitchen serving dish with potting soil and some grass seed. When the grass is a few inches high, add Easter eggs or seashells for a conversation-starting centerpiece. For more seasonal decorating ideas and products, visit www.ginnys.com.

Try these masterful minis

Bite-sized doughnuts great for any occasion

Sunny Conley Chile Knights

Minis are in, and I like it a lot. Mini bites, not skirts. The newest dessert trend is bitesized sweets, an ideal snack when you're in want of a sugar fix.

Rather than a standard pie or cake slice, which are loaded with calories, mini desserts (I call them sweet poppers), usually weigh in at less than 100 calories. I enjoy them with a mid-morning or mid-afternoon mug of hot Joe, and now that the temps are edging in on the warm side, a tumbler of diet iced tea or lemonade.

During the recent holidays, I spotted a 12-cavity mini doughnut pan that I purchased for less than \$10 at www.surlatable.com. It's also available by its maker, www.wilton.com, and most likely at large department stores and specialty shops. Rather than frying these minis, they are baked. Another plus for calorie counters.  $\dot{\rm (I}$  recommend purchasing two to speed up baking time for double batches.)

I was eager to try the recipe that appeared on the pan's packaging – baked mini lemon doughnuts. Although I didn't need an excuse to make a batch, the timing was perfect for an Oscar dinner party to which I was invited.

I doubled the recipe (shared below), adding 1/4 teaspoon habanero powder for a zippy, spicy flavor. I wrapped each tiny bite with gold cellophane, securing them with a ribbon bow. Party results: red carpet winners.

Consider serving minis at your next themed party or surprise someone special by sneaking one into a lunchbox or a desk drawer. I bet Mom would like a batch on Mother's Day. They freeze well in an airtight

New way to help Habitat recipients

Program provides computers, instruction on PC use

Seeking to eliminate poverty housing, Habitat for Humanity International works with people of all backgrounds, races and religions to build houses in partnership with families in need.

Habitat recognizes the many benefits of a home PC and has partnered with Redemtech to help make a computer available to U.S. Habitat for Humanity homeowners. Redemtech provides refurbished, donated computers to Habitat. These computers are professionally packaged for a "like-new" experience for Habitat families.

Mesilla Valley Habitat for Humanity (MVHFH) received five computers and teamed up with Best Buy for computer training. Alex Sainz, Geek Squad agent from Best Buy, trained homeowners on basic computer skills and Internet safety.

"We want to thank Geek Squad, Best Buy and Alex for providing training to our homeowners, these are skills they will use for a lifetime," said Ed Johnson, executive director.

The benefits of the program:

- Habitat families gain access to much-needed technology to help them build better lives.

LIMITED TIME!

Imagining life without a computer is virtually impossible for most Americans. Many of us are immersed in technology 24/7. We take for granted easy access to what we need for doing our jobs, identifying career opportunities, helping kids with schoolwork and managing our households.

Yet one in every four households in the U.S. – about 28 million homes – does not have a PC. Habitat for Humanity International, which was founded on the conviction that every man, woman and child should have a decent, safe and affordable place to live, recognizes the importance of a home PC in helping partner families build better futures for themselves.

Best Buy Geek Squad agent Alex Sainz leads a class on how to use a PC for Mesilla Valley Habitat for Humanity home recipients Tuesday, March 27. Thanks to Habitat for Humanity International and Redemtech, the five local MVHFH home recipients each received a refurbished, donated computer.

MVHFH home recipient Monica Muniz learns basic computer skills and Internet safety during the class.
