Many honor 9/11 sacrifices

City ceremony sets resolved atmosphere

By Todd G. Dickson

Although a 9/11 remembrance has become an annual event in Las Cruces, this year's ceremony was, of course, different because it marked the 10th anniversary of the worst terrorist attack suffered in the United States.

Whereas 10 years ago people were so shaken there were tears and faces full of anguish and confusion, the mood at this year's ceremony, held in front of the new City Hall Sunday, Sept. 11, was more solemn with mostly dry eyes and faces showing more resolve than sadness.

Though the first responders were wellrepresented at the ceremony, the most emotional moment came as White Sands Missile Range Garrison Commander Leo Puller spoke of the remarkable men and women who volunteered to fight in the two wars and other related conflicts far from home, often for long separations from family and loved ones.

"This is the first war since the Revolutionary War to be totally fought by volunteers," Puller said to citizens who filled the parking lot.

Despite the decade of fighting with repeated lengthy deployments, he said with a voice slightly cracking from emotion, these volunteer soldiers remain ready, willing and able to take on any mission given them.

"Your Army can meet any challenge," Puller said, "and keep America safe."

That kind of resolve was also reflected in statements by first responders who spoke.

Las Cruces Fire Chief Travis Brown said the anniversary reminded him of President George W. Bush's words after the attack: "We will not tire, we will not falter and we will not fail."

Brown said the terrorists wanted to make Americans fearful, but instead the attacks brought greater unity, noting the variety of people who came out to the ceremony that included prayers and thoughts by a bishop, pastor and rabbi.

Schools are failing Hispanic students Reformers say schools must adapt to changing population

By Todd G. Dickson Las Cruces Bulletin

One of every 24 students in public schools is Hispanic and getting that population to finish school and succeed in higher education is critical to the future of the country, according to a visiting White House official.

During a visit Monday, Sept. 12, to a leadership summit at New Mexico State University, Juan Sepulveda, director of the White House Initiative on Educational Excellence for Hispanic Americans, said this new statistic makes children from the Latino community the largest minority group in the schools, but they also have a higher dropout rate - 50 percent - and higher unemployment rate - more than 11 percent.

"This is not just something that's coming down the road," Sepulveda said. "They are here right now."

The schools need to change to reach this population because they offer the greatest potential See Hispanic on page A11

New dispatch center will cost $9.7 million City Manager Robert Garza said. MVRDA outgrowing current location to handle 911 requests By Rachel Christiansen

The City of Las Cruces, along with all of Doña Ana County, may soon get the ball rolling on a new emergency dispatch center.

The Las Cruces City Council hired the engineering and archi-tectural consulting firm Huitt-Zollars, from Albuquerque, to assess initial plans for building a new emergency police and fire dispatch call center.

The current facility, as you know, is something that's rapidly become overused and undersized,

The council took a closer look at blueprints of projected designs and costs Monday, Sept. 12, during a work session.

How about those Aggies?

Our Aggie athletic teams have had a very good week and are likely to shine throughout the 2011-12 year

Wow! In the past week, the New Mexico State University student athletes have compiled an impressive winning record.

The Aggie volleyballers dominated four teams in the Texas State University tournament as they won the tournament and placed three players on the all-tournament team – Jennah DeVries, Kelsey Brennan and Meredith Hays. DeVries was also named the tournament's MVP. DeVries, an All-American and three-time all-conference player was named Player of the Week by the Western Athletic Conference. They followed up the tournament title with an impressive 3-0 win over archrival UTEP Tuesday night, sweeping the Miners 26-24, 25-23 and 25-18.

The Aggie soccer team also had an undefeated week as they shut out Northern Colorado 1-0 and whipped up on Arkansas-Little Rock 3-0 as they rolled to their sixth consecutive victory.

With help from Aggie fans throughout southern New Mexico, NMSU also resoundingly beat UTEP in the Sonic "Battle of I-10" competition, where Sonic customers voted this past year for their favorite team. The victory trophy was presented to NMSU head football coach DeWayne Walker by Sonic Marketing Director Donna Volz Monday, Sept. 12, at ceremonies at the Foothills Road Sonic Drive-in in Las Cruces.

Without question, the biggest win of the week was earned by Pistol Pete's pride, the Aggie football team, as they played their best game of the DeWayne Walker era. For the first time ever, NMSU footballers defeated a Big Ten team, the Minnesota Golden Gophers, 28-21. In a game that was scheduled as a "money" game, the Aggies surprised a bunch of folks across the country as NMSU took home both the money and the victory.

Among the impressive highlights of the game were two incredible goal line stands where Minnesota's touted running game was unable to break through the Aggies' solid defensive line. Also, sophomore quarterback Andrew Manley completed his first 12 passes as the Aggies built a 21-7 lead in the first half.

And for only the second time during their tenure in the WAC, the Aggies picked up individual WAC player of the week honors for outstanding performance on both offense and defense. Manley was named the league's offensive player of the week, and senior defensive back Jonte Green earned the defensive recognition for his 10 tackles against Minnesota.

At 6 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 17, the Aggie footballers host the hated UTEP Miners. For the first time in a long while, there is buzz on the street throughout Las Cruces about Aggie football. There are even rumors about a potential sellout of the game. Many fans are planning to take advantage of the relaxed tailgating rules around the stadium and will begin their pre-game parties early in the day.

At about 4 p.m., families are invited to join Pistol Pete and Aggie cheerleaders in Pete's "Kids' Corral" just north of the stadium prior to the pregame activities inside Aggie Memorial Stadium that will last almost up to the 6 p.m. kickoff. And, of course, fans will be entertained at pre-game and halftime by the Pride of New Mexico marching band.

With the milder weather predicted for Saturday's contest, the Aggie-UTEP rivalry football game is certain to provide excitement and entertainment for all. Hope to see everyone there. GO AGGIES!

Ending social promotion

Ending social promotion at the end of the third-grade year has a lot of appeal to those who play politics with public education. People with no classroom experience - in New Mexico, Gov. Susana Martinez, perpetually interim Secretary of Education Hanna Skandera and Paul Gessing, executive director of the Rio Grande Foundation - advocate the idea to advance a reform that has successfully manipulated scores without improving education in Florida.

People knowledgeable about education know that students learn to read through grade four, not grade three, and read to learn thereafter. The question is why aficionados of everything Floridian prefer third grade. The answer is that holding back poor students in third grade limits testing to good students in fourth grade and thereby boosts tests scores. Whatever else might be said about social promotion, this proposal is a deceptive political stunt. This crowd wants to grab headlines by claiming that it has improved education when it has merely manipulated test data.

The proof that this proposal is not a serious educational one is the governor's claim that interventions for those held back will be so effective that no Plan B is necessary – a presumed belief in its magical perfection. If the governor knows that such interventions will work, why does she not urge their adaptation in grades K-3 to ensure proficiency in the first place? Indeed, the way to end social promotion is to improve education in ways that make it unnecessary. Worse, the governor lacks even a Plan A to back each year: no extra classroom space for deal with the estimated 12,000 students held the additional students, no additional funding, no specially trained personnel to intervene, no specially defined curriculum or instruction to improve reading – nada, nothing, zippo.

Of course, under these circumstances, it is likely some of these 12,000 students held back one year will still not achieve proficiency. The question is whether to continue to deny them social promotion (for some, for how many years?). And I have not until now even mentioned the effects of ending social promotion on graduation rates, future academic performance, student behavior, and truancy and dropout rates.

Talk about waste, fraud and abuse – this is it. Watch the positions and votes of your state senators and representatives on this one.

Special session taking shape Redistricting likely will be wrapped up before Legislature takes on governor's agenda items

Jay Miller Inside the Capitol

The master plan for this special session on redistricting seems to be falling into place. Although surprises always are possible in the give-and-take between the governor and lawmakers who aren't particularly fond of each other.

Gov. Susana Martinez says the session can easily be over in two weeks. The Legislature appropriated enough money for three weeks. The maximum length allowed by law is 30 days, but no one would benefit by it going that long.

The likely scenario is for lawmakers to wrap up redistricting in about two weeks and then turn their attention to the governor's agenda for several days

By remaining in session, Gov.

Martinez will have to act on the redistricting bills within three days. That will give lawmakers an opportunity to override any vetoes. It also allows for all sorts of horse trading.

The governor will be very busy during those days analyzing the redistricting bills plus advocating for her own package of an expected 11 bills.

Of course, Martinez said before the session that she was planning to work hard and intimated that most lawmakers weren't anxious to work. Some legislative leaders during last winter's regular session charged that Martinez hadn't adequately prepared for the session.

But she did prepare for this session. Rep. Paul Bandy, R-San Juan, has introduced a 72-page bill to merge the Tourism and Cultural Affairs departments. Reportedly two more governmental-restructuring bills will be introduced soon.

A year ago, government reorganization was a hot topic. A large committee of legislators and others met often during the interim and presented a major report to the 2011, but little was done with the report.

In Martinez's defense, the job of restructuring government takes a great amount of time and thought, which a new governor doesn't have. She did the one thing she could and it actually was the most important step. She told her top appointees restructure was possible and to be prepared to cooperate.

This didn't happen during the last year of the Bill Richardson administration. Former Gov. Richardson was amenable to reorganization, but his appointees had developed loyalties to the present organizational structure and fervently fought any change.

So reorganization has a chance under Martinez. It just won't happen during this session. It requires much more analysis and debate.

There are some items on the governor's agenda that lawmakers really want to see. They intended to pass the capital outlay bill in the regular session, but it got caught up in a political spat involving other legislation.

Bills strengthening preference for in-state bidders and clarifying tax credits for companies paying high wages should get through easily.

That could be about it. Both sides want to shore up the unemployment fund. The governor wants to take the money out of reserves. Lawmakers voted to hike employer premiums during the regular session. The courts said to agree on something. Compromise could be an answer, but that's a bad word.

Both sides know the state needs to increase highway-maintenance funding. Martinez has asked for $41 million, which is the amount that was transferred for the Rail Runner. That complicates the matter.

The governor and a majority of the Legislature want fireworks restrictions but that can be handled just as well in January so Democratic leaders may postpone.

G Both sides know

the state needs to increase highway

funding.

That leaves the tough stuff. Martinez wants to repeal the law granting driver's licenses to illegal aliens. The Senate proposed a compromise during the regular session, which it says meets all her objections. House Speaker Ben Lujan has introduced that Senate proposal in the House. Martinez says she'll veto. The court has said to figure out the third-grade social promotion. As the battle continues, more good ideas surface. Everyone wants better reading. This seems to be the Legislature taking another slap at Education Secretary Hanna Skandera. She deserves a chance.

A nation with serious financial structural defects Texas Gov. Rick Perry is right about Social Security bills. Often, in the Defense Authorization Bill, there are several other spending authorizations for pet projects that fly under

Michael Swickard In My Opinion

The presidential election heated up when Rick Perry correctly labeled the financial structure of Social Security to be the same as a Ponzi scheme. Other candidates cursed quietly to themselves that they had not told the folks back home the bad news because the folks back home might blame them for the problem.

Social Security became a Ponzi scheme in the late 1960s. The other presidential candidates were caught not telling the truth about Social Security. They, in mass, politically attacked him. Each crossed their fingers and shouted Social Security is as solid as the Rock of Gibraltar. But their voices quivered and their eyes rolled wildly. Each knew it was a huge lie and a day of reckoning was coming, as they always do for Ponzi schemes.

The good news is that, little by little, some of the candidates are grudgingly admitting that Rick Perry is right about Social Security. As quick as a flash, though, out of the other side of their mouths, many say that people should not worry since full disclosure of the Ponzi scheme will not be made on their watch. So much for telling the truth.

Is it a Ponzi scheme? Yes, because the money paid by each person into Social Security is not put in an annuity account in their individual names; rather, the sum total of the money is entirely consumed each year, some on Social Security and the rest in the general budget. None of their money is saved. Metaphorically, a piece of paper is put into the donor's account telling the next generation to tax themselves to pay this account since this person's money has already been spent.

Structurally, even the way government runs its budget is terrible. At the end of each year most public-sector departments spend all of the available money regardless of need.

The thinking is if they do not spend all of the money, the difference will be subtracted from next year's budget. Add to that the issue of baseline budgeting where there is a built-in increase, regardless of need, to every department. Any cut to the increase is portrayed as a cut to the budget. Baseline budgeting guarantees the growth of government for no other reason than just to grow.

The "mother" of all bad structures is known by the term "log rolling," where legislators agree to vote for each other's "pork" legislation as a way of getting it through. At times this practice is referred to as earmarks, in that each legislator is given a certain amount of money to buy the votes of citizens back home.

The incumbency effect for re-election is about 97 percent, and it is no accident that the products of earmarks are in every newspaper almost every day. We see a new library, senior citizens center, highway and more projects. Integral with that is the practice of putting "pork" projects inside other unrelated other spending authorizations for pet projects that fly under the radar. Tens of billions of dollars are spent each year for pet projects. The Obamacare legislation passed on Christmas Day 2009 without any legislator reading it completely is full of special projects unrelated to health.

None of these structural defects are sustainable over generations. Each will cause catastrophic effects at some point. Nothing will ever get better in our government if we do not tell the truth about the effect of bad structures within our government. We cannot continue to have bad structures without bad outcomes. While it is not always easy to see, everything ultimately is in the open. The Social Security change to the structure of a Ponzi scheme was covered by the news media.

Young people today, the victims of this Ponzi scheme have the ability to see the truth. What they do with that ability to see the truth is up to them. Perhaps they will vote to cancel Social Security, that is, outvote seniors who have known for decades that it was a Ponzi scheme that will provide no benefit to young people. Who would blame them if they finally shut down that Ponzi scheme?

The misery index

Economists have a mythical figure called the misery index. It is the total of the unemployment rate added to the inflation rate. This summer in the U.S., it's running about 13. The lower the better. In both the '90s and '00s it's been as low as 7.

To calculate indexes like this, the conclusion can be broadly accurate. But, to make it more personal, one can include more variables.

For instance, take one inch of rain as a factor. The misery index of an alfalfa farmer with hay on the ground would be 15.6. It would have been 16 except his prize pumpkin patch was getting parched.

Or say you were entered up in Cheyenne at the big rodeo and that one inch of rain fell the hour before you were to compete in the bull dogging. Your misery index could be as high as the weight of your hazer.

Another broad category would be the temperature. At the winter Olympics, the misery index would rise as the temperature did. But say Billy Bob went to the three-day tailgate party at the Oklahoma versus Kansas football game. The hotter it got in the parking lot, the more beer you could hold. So the misery index would decline.

To personalize the misery index even more - and remember lower is better, you could include factors such as:

- Years since you bought a new pair of boots plus unemployment plus inflation;
- Semesters till your daughter graduates from vet school plus;
- Months you have left on your truck payments;
- Age of the horse you are riding;
- Payments left on your alimony;
- Therapy sessions until your hip heals so you can get back on your horse;
- Time you have left wearing the court-ordered ankle bracelet.

I was at a livestock convention a while back and after the big show, a group of pretty salty cowmen were conversing. They got to comparing injuries and insults.

I mentioned the misery index. They loved it. They could compete in who was the worst off.

However, they began to get far afield in the categories to be counted as the evening went on: i.e., the number of missing teeth with no cavities you still have left; the number of times you've been bucked off lately; number of horses that have been dumped on your place; number of times you've been turned down by a barmaid until you met your wife; the number of times you lost your wallet, car keys and/or glasses in the last week.

Bud was finally judged the winner of the misery index by counting the number of times his old, incontinent dog peed in the pickup seat, plus inflation and unemploy ment. It nearly reached President Carter's old record of 21.9.

Guest Columns Litigation adversely affects farmers Rio Grande Project has worked well for a century

By Gary Esslinger For the Las Cruces Bull

New Mexico Attorney General Gary King has filed suit against the Bureau of Reclamation (BOR) attacking the "Operating Agreement" negotiated among the Elephant Butte Irrigation District, the El Paso County Water Improvement District No. 1 and the BOR.

This is unfortunate because one of the key ingredients in this valid and wellthought-out compromise is it protects New Mexico farmers and their right to pump underground water during times of severe drought, just as we are currently experiencing. That is called conjunctive management.

If not for the Operating Agreement, you can be assured that your ability to pump and grow crops for food, feed, fiber and potentially fuel would be tied up in litigation and many farmers would be out of business. In the case of litigation over water such as this, the U.S. Supreme Court will end up with the case and there's no telling what that body may do. Alleviating the unnecessary risk involved with such litigation is the very reason farmers in this valley took control of their own destiny and constructed the Operating Agreement.

Our Rio Grande Project and Compact have worked well recently and for 100 years without the interference of a politician who only has his sights on a higher office, instead of having any real basis for interfering with and dictating our way of life. The implications of King's philosophy in filing this recent lawsuit that southern New Mexico cannot adequately look out for our own interest is offensive and condescending.

The bottom line is that the way the BOR has operated the Rio Grande Project does not reduce New Mexico's water. In fact, on Jan. 1, 2012, upstate New Mexico (above Elephant Butte Dam) will have more water than if BOR had accounted as New Mexico is insisting that they should. New Mexico is suing to have less water for its upstate constituents. This is just politicized hydrology.

It has long been said colloquially that Whiskey is for drinking, and water is for fighting over." Our farm families and the thousands of businesses and consumers that benefit from agriculture in these green valleys will fight for their water and associated rights, and are perfectly capable of protecting themselves.

But they want a fair fight where one of our own state officials is not using our water to irrigate his political career.

Gary Esslinger is treasurer-manager of Elephant Butte Irrigation District.

King misrepresents water allocation Attorney general would undo established agreement

By Jesus Reyes

New Mexico Attorney General Gary King's recent news release titled "Working to Save New Mexico's Water" contains many errors in fact and misleading statements.

I am disappointed that King, as New Mexico's lead attorney, has misrepresented the truth. Perhaps he is getting bad advice, or maybe he is trying to distract his constituents away from his other issues. Either way, by his own admission, he has started down a path that is going to be very expensive for New Mexico taxpayers. I address each of King's allegations as follows. King stated, "You may have heard that I recently brought a lawsuit against the federal Bureau of Reclamation because the agency unilaterally reclassified 65,000 acre-feet of New Mexico water so that it could be made available for release to Texas."

The Bureau of Reclamation did not unilaterally or otherwise reclassify any water. Reclamation is and has always accounted for the amount of water that evaporates from water stored in Elephant Butte and Caballo reservoirs. King's claim regarding 65,000 acre-feet is in regard to the bureau's estimate of the amount of water that has evaporated from these reservoirs since Jan. 1. This is water that has physically evaporated from the reservoirs into the air.

King would have you believe that somehow this water magically exists and is available to New Mexico. King needs to face reality - water evaporates. And water in a desert reservoir evaporates fast.

La Buena Vida Women's Club

King stated, "A formal survey conducted by the federal government indicated approximately 88,000 acres were irrigated by Elephant Butte Irrigation District (EBID), or 57 percent of the total amount of irrigated lands. The remaining 67,000 acres (or 43 percent) were irrigated within the El Paso County Water Improvement District (EPCWID). The historic allocation of usable water in Rio Grande Project storage vessels, Elephant Butte and Caballo Reservoirs, was allocated to the two districts using this 57/43 ratio."

King is correct that 57 percent of the irrigable land in the Rio Grande Project is within EBID and remaining 43 percent is within EPCWID. He is incorrect that the "historic allocation of usable water" was 57 percent to EBID and 43 percent to EPCWID. Historically, New Mexico water users had taken significantly more than 57 percent of the usable water.

EPCWID filed suit in federal court in 2007 to stop New Mexico from taking Texas' water. The settlement of that litigation (the Office of New Mexico Attorney General had an opportunity to participate in the settlement and elected not to) was embodied in the Rio Grande Project Operating Agreement. This agreement partitions the non-treaty amount of Rio Grande Project Water Supply approximately 57 percent to EBID and 43 percent to EPCWID, and promotes conservation of water.

Under the Operating Agreement, water was conserved by both EPCWID and EBID in previous years for use in drought (such as this year). Without the agreement, the amount of water in Elephant Butte Reservoir this year would have been significantly less

New Mexico water users have drilled thousands of wells and pump more than 100,000 acre-feet of water each year. These wells deplete the flow of water in the Rio Grande to the expense of EBID and EPCWID. Proper accounting for these depletions was settled by the Operating Agreement, something King has sued to undo.

Stafford had long career in the U.S. space program Harvard dropout was first general in space

By Michael Shinabery

He was the first general "to make a space flight," in 1975 aboard the Apollo-Soyuz Test Project, Michael Cassutt wrote in "Who's Who In Space: The First 25 Years."

He piloted Gemini VI-A on NASA's first rendezvous flight and became the Gemini IX command pilot after prime crew Elliott See and Charles Bassett died in a T-38 jet crash. As commander of Apollo X, which Cassutt described as "the final, full-scale dress rehearsal for a manned lunar landing," Stafford flew "the lunar module (LM) Snoopy to within 50,000 feet of the lunar surface to test ... propulsion and navigation systems." Snoopy "was too heavy to survive a lunar landing and liftoff," otherwise Thomas Stafford, born Sept. 17, 1930, "might have become the first man to walk on the Moon."

Stafford entered Air Force pilot training after the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis graduated him in 1952. Seven years later, the Experimental Flight Test Pilot School at Edwards Air Force Base graduated him, and he stayed on as an instructor. In September 1962, NASA chose him as a Gemini astronaut.

In an October 1997, NASA oral history, Stafford said his interest in becoming an astronaut began "when the Mercury Program got started," but at the time he was a student at Edwards. When President John Kennedy challenged America to land on the Moon on Sept. 12, 1962, however, Stafford made his choice.

He was in his third day of classes at Harvard Business School when he said Deke Slayton "called me and said, 'Are you still interested?'" Stafford said he had the notoriety of being the first dropout of the class of '64 at Harvard Business School.

His fellow astronaut-trainees included Neil Armstrong and Pete Conrad, the first and third men to walk on the Moon; See and Ed White, both killed, the latter in Apollo I; and Frank Borman who, in his autobiography "Countdown," pointed out Stafford had been his instructor at Edwards. Stafford, at 6 feet, was the tallest of the group.

We knew in the seat of our pants and all the training we had, we hadn't lifted off.

THOMAS STAFFORD, NASA astronaut

"Without Gemini," Stafford said, "we could have never gone to the Moon." Gemini tested rendezvousing, docking, and spacewalks. On Dec. 15, 1965,

On Dec. 15, 1965, Stafford piloted the fifth manned Gemini flight, VI-A, which made "the first rendezvous in space," said his biography at the website www.jsc.nasa.gov. The mission was to have launched in late October to rendezvous with an Agena rocket, but engineering changes to the oxidizer fuel lead-in turned disastrous. "The (Agena) lit off and blew up and blew all over the Atlantic Ocean," Stafford said.

Gemini VI was renamed VI-A and rescheduled for Dec. 12. Stafford and Wally Schirra were perched atop the Titan booster when the Titan – which Alan Shepard and Deke Slayton said in "Moon Shot" (Turner/1994) was "modified from a secondgeneration intercontinentalrange war missile" – suddenly shut off.

"All of Wally Schirra's training dictated immediate ejection," Borman wrote in "Countdown." "But in this emergency, his airman's instinct overrode his astronaut training. He hadn't felt lift-off, so in not much more time than it takes to blink an eye he made the decision to stay in the spacecraft."

"We knew in the seat of our pants and all the training we had, we hadn't lifted off," Stafford said. "Furthermore, the only one who can call liftoff is a fellow astronaut looking at the base of a booster, you know, on a TV screen, and when he sees first motion, he's the only one that can call liftoff. It was (Alan) Bean, and he didn't say a thing."

According to Stafford, ejecting from the capsule's oxygen-rich atmosphere into a situation where engines had already ignited, and the booster was still erect, would have set their suits on fire. The men "would have been two Roman candles going out" over Cape Canaveral, he said.

The astronauts finally launched three days later. Three hours into the flight, said the NASA publication "Project Gemini: A Chronology," the "first radar lock-on indicated 246 miles between the two spacecraft." Schirra made course corrections and, Stafford said post-flight in Life magazine, "We sighted them about 50 miles away."

Thomas Stafford "prepares to take part in parasail training" on Aug. 23, 1965, the documentation attached to this NASA photograph stated. He "was carried into the air by a deployed parachute and guided over (Galveston Bay, Texas) where his tow line was released, and floated to the water to test airdrop and water survival techniques."

"We have company tonight," said Borman, aboard Gemini VII, informed James Lovell after Borman spotted VI-A 10 miles distant. Before long the two capsules were "within a foot of each other more than 100 miles above the Earth," said "The Complete Idiot's Guide to NASA." The crews then engaged in a bit of rivalry. On Earth, Army was playing Navy, and "Annapolis graduates Schirra and Stafford held up a sign that said 'Beat Army.' Borman, a West Point grad, replied with a sign of his own, reading 'Beat Navy,'" said "The Complete Idiot's Guide to NASA." "As it turned out, none of them got their wish as the game ended in a 7-7 tie.'

In June 1966, Stafford "commanded Gemini IX and performed a demonstration of an early rendezvous that would be used in Apollo," his biography said. In May 1969, he commanded Apollo 10. The "first flight of the lunar module to the moon" was also the first capsule-LM rendezvous around the Moon. Subsequently, Stafford "was cited in the 'Guinness Book of World Records' for highest speed ever attained by man ... when the spacecraft attained 24,791 statute miles per hour" during re-entry.

From July 15-24, 1975, Stafford commanded the Apollo segment of the Apollo-Soyuz Test Project, which his biography described as "a joint space flight culminating in the historic first meeting in space between American Astronauts and Soviet Cosmonauts."

"As commander of the Apollo crew," cosmonaut

Col. Alexei Leonov wrote in "Two Sides of the Moon," "Tom was often referred to as 'Granddad.' This was not because he was old, and he did not then have grandchildren. Rather, it was because of his considerable experience of spaceflight."

News | A7

Stafford retired from the Air Force in November 1979, the biography said. Before then, however, he "was personally involved in initiating the F-117A Stealth Fighter. In early 1979, he wrote the initial desired specifications on and started the advanced technology bomber development, now designated the B-2 Stealth Bomber."

Birds are the subject of the class on Oct. 8. How do they fly? What keeps them gliding in the air? Meet a greencheeked conure parrot and his handler.

On Oct. 15, the class concentrates on mammals, warmblooded animals, focusing on mammals that lay eggs, marsupials and plant-eating or herbivorous mammals.

The series concludes Oct. 22, when meat-eating or carnivorous animals, such as lions, tigers and whales are studied, as well as apes, who dine primarily on fruit. As part of this class, children will discuss the place of people in the animal kingdom and will also meet a handler of exotic cats.

"Could Tsunamis impact New Mexico?" Tim Lawton, professor of geological sciences at NMSU, will answer that question and reveal historic geologic data that may surprise those who think we are adequately remote from Japan's trauma. Lawton, Manasse chair, will lead a discussion of how distant geological events impact our life here in New Mexico.

for the country to compete in the global economy, he said.

"Our kids are trilingual," Sepulveda said. "They speak Spanish, English and computers."

Hispanic entrepreneurs are also some of the most creative business creators and often more capable of understanding how to succeed in a non-U.S. marketplace, he said.

The United States has fallen behind in education and its ability to compete in the global marketplace, Sepulveda said, especially in the fields involving biology, health and engineering.

Sepulveda said the White House is taking the challenge seriously by starting a series of community conversations to change policies and spend money where it can make a difference. One of those community education summits could be coming to Las Cruces as early as next month, he said.

The Obama Administration sees New Mexico as a state that is trying to meet these challenges, he said, and Sepulveda acknowledged the new early college high school on the NMSU campus.

In an interview with media following his keynote address to the NMSU summit for Hispanic faculty and staff, Sepulveda told of a superintendent in Texas who has reshaped his school system so Hispanic students can better succeed.

Danny King, superintendent of the Pharr-San Juan-Alamo school district, reclassified school counselors as college coaches. He even placed half of them on the college campuses that most of his graduates would attend to help them through those first critical years in higher education.

The national picture, Sepulveda said, is to form broad policies to support such innovations and supporting proven targeted programs, such as bilingual and migrant programs. These targeted programs should be limited, he said, because expectations by teachers are often low for these students and ignore their true talents and abilities.

While not all students are destined for college studies, Sepulveda said, vocational education shouldn't become "tracks" that keep students from going on to college. Even those taking Adult Basic Education courses in community colleges with Las Cruces Bulletin photo by Todd Dickson the goal to improve their English, he said, should also be encouraged to take advantage of the college's other classes and training.

If the problem with Hispanic dropouts in the public schools is acute, it is worse in higher education, Sepulveda said. Those who do achieve a bachelor's degree rarely return to earn master's or doctoral degrees, he said.

Many Hispanic students have more daunting challenges from work and family than those in other ethnic groups, Sepulveda said.

The need for higher education is to help them reach the goal of obtaining a degree, he said, despite the pressures from state officials to get students through their courses of studies in a shorter – and thus more cost-effective - time frame.

Many of Sepulveda's themes were echoed at the day's panel discussions at the summit, which was titled "Fomenting Change."

Fernando Valle, a former high school counselor now teaching at Texas Tech University, said educators need to stop blaming the students and their families. Instead, educators need to look at themselves to find out how they made the school experience unwelcome or even untenable, he said.

"It's been my experience that many of these students didn't drop out, but were pushed out by the schools," Valle said. "We've all worked in schools that are really dropout factories."

Êducators should be focusing on those parents who don't come to the school to find why they feel they don't belong, he said. Some systems make silly mistakes, he said, such as holding open houses all on the same night, as if the parents only had children in one school. And why should a parent go to the schools when the only time they've had a home visit was when their child was in trouble, he asked.

Christina Chavez Kelley, assistant vice president for Student Diversity and Outreach at NMSU and chair of the Hispanic Faculty/Staff Caucus committee that organized the event, said she works with the higher education system to get faculty and administration to understand realities in minority populations. For example, distance education – classes taught over Internet – isn't a very viable option for American Indian students who live on reservations lacking Internet access.

Institutionally, higher education is still paying lower salaries to women and minority faculty members than their male Anglo colleagues, she said.

NMSU English professor Monica Torres, a native Las Crucen who earned two of her three degrees at NMSU, said despite growing achievement, Hispanics are not keeping pace with the population or other population groups.

"We're in better shape than we've been, but we're not in particularly good shape," she said.

Torres said negative educational myths about Hispanics – such as parents not caring about their children getting a good education – creates predisposed limitations in teacher expectations for Hispanic students. They forget, she said, they come from families whose talents and strong work ethic brought them to this country.

"Hispanics are living and navigating in this world," she said. "They are able to survive and thrive in 21st century United States. We need to recognize the assets they bring to campus. ... We must go from seeing our students as problems to be solved to focusing on the talents and abilities they bring."

Also, limited progress for Hispanic students is divisive politics, according to Sepulveda. For example, he said President Barack Obama's American Jobs Act includes $24 billion to rehabilitate 35,000 crumbling schools. These are not just "makework" jobs, but money targeted to address priority needs, he said.

"Almost every single one of the ideas proposed has already been proposed by Republicans," Sepulveda said. "This is not new crazy leftist stuff. This is where the two parties can come together."

Las Cruces Police Chief Richard Williams said terrorists have underestimated the resiliency of the United States. A beautiful memorial now fills the space where the World Trade Center once stood, and the Pentagon has been repaired. Meanwhile, the terrorists responsible for the attacks have been captured, killed or forced to run and hide, he said.

Williams recounted the story of a New Mexican – Sgt. Leroy Petry, the recent Medal of Honor recipient who saved the lives of his fellow soldiers in Afghanistan by lobbing back grenades thrown at them by insurgents. Though wounded himself, he continued to fend off the attack with one of the grenades exploding in his right hand.

At the start of the ceremony, Las Cruces Mayor Ken Miyagishima honored two local wounded warriors, Army Sgt. Matt Zajac and Spc. Will Grumet – both had been wounded during tours in Iraq and Afghanistan – by presenting them with medals during the ceremony.

The ceremony included moving performances by the New Mexico State University Aggie Pride Band and Doña Ana County Youth Choir, as well as a bagpipe player. Along with the adults were children – including Boy and Girl Scouts – many of whom were infants or not even born yet when the 9/11 attacks were committed. The scouts took part raising an American flag to half-staff a City Hall flagpole.

But overlooking the event was the new garrison American flag made possible by the donation of Zia Engineering's President/CEO Ed Martinez. The 20foot-by-38-foot nylon flag draped off the end of the Las Cruces Fire Department's highest truck ladder. Las Cruces Bulletin ity, according to Huitt-Zollars architect John Girard, and is non-conducive for repairs or growth since surrounding properties are already owned.

"All of these are issues and factors that really prevent it from being an adequate dispatch center," Girard said.

Girard concluded by listing the projected staff need over the next 15 years to handle expected growth in call volume, a blueprint of a 30,000-square-foot, state-of-the-art building and its cost.

A rough floor plan was provided to give councillors a visual idea of how space would be used. The blueprint included a layout for a training area, a main dispatch center, emergency dispatch areas, a dorm room, a locker room and a fitness center.

The estimated cost of the building reached a total of $9.7 million.

"The equipment (dispatchers) rely on in every emergency has just got to be top of the line, because they have lives on their hands, literally, as they talk someone through an emergency," said City Councillor Dolores Connor, who also sits on MVRDA's board.

Connor said she is looking forward to putting the plan into a motion and "fitting all the puzzle pieces together" in order to figure out how the city will manage the total cost.

Las Cruces and Doña Ana County are collaborating on the project, and have received letters of support from the mayors of Hatch, Mesilla and Sunland Park in favor of the building relocation.

An exact location for the new building has not yet been determined, although city officials have speculated an area off of East Lohman Avenue and Sonoma Ranch Boulevard. Councillors are considering the possibility of having MVRDA share a building with a police substation and firehouse.

An Aggie storm brewing?

The last time the University of Texas at El Paso Miners came to Aggie Memorial Stadium, they brought a storm.

On that September evening in 2009, fans had barely settled in their seats when one of those beautiful New Mexico lightning shows lit up the sky. Nice to look at, but not good for running around on open fields.

Officials evacuated the stadium. A monster downpour ensued, and about three hours later, the teams re-took the field in front of a few hardy, soaked-tothe-bone fans. The final gun sounded near midnight, and the Miners headed south on I-10 with a 38-12 victory.

At 6 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 17, there will be another storm in Aggie Memorial, and it will be wearing Crimson and White.

Bolstered by last week's landmark victory over Minnesota, every Aggie player, every Aggie coach and every Aggie fan is as energized as that 2009 electrical storm.

NMSU Athletics Director McKinley Boston played college football for Minnesota, and the 28-21 victory against his alma mater was sweet.

"Not bittersweet – it was totally sweet," he said. "It was a really special weekend. A couple of former teammates hosted a party for me and we got to have some quality time. It added something extra."

The victory was great, but the Aggies still have 11 games left on the schedule, starting with the Miners.

"You create a special win, and you create a belief in yourself that you can compete," Boston said. "But you've got to follow that up with a quality performance."

How do you define quality performance?

"The biggest thing was we played four quarters on all three phases of the game (offense, defense, special teams)," Boston said. "We were dictating the play on the field and were not constantly in longyardage situations. And on defense, we just made plays."

One of those making plays was senior safety Donyae Coleman. He's also the only person I know who openly predicted victory over the Gophers. A lot of people, including me, had an

A lot of people, including me, had an inkling of optimism about the Minnesota game, but none of us were as bold as Coleman.

At a practice last week, here's what Coleman told me: "We're going to go to Minnesota and take it to 'em."

I don't know what Coleman said in practice this week. A whole lot of victory-hungry NMSU fans, however, are sure interested in what Coleman and his teammates do in the game this weekend against UTEP.

Here's hoping lightning can strike twice for the Aggies.

NMSU hopes to build on huge upset win over Golden Gophers

By Jim Hilley

The New Mexico State Aggies' 28-21 win over the Minnesota Golden Gophers was big. Often, after such a big win, a team will have difficulty focusing on their next opponent.

With the University of Texas at El Paso Miners coming to Aggie Memorial Stadium at 6 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 17, it won't be a problem for the "Goph' Busters."

"I'm going into that game remembering that we got our butts kicked two years in a row," coach DeWayne Walker said.

Jonte Green, who was named WAC Defensive Player of the Week, isn't having any problem remembering UTEP either.

"This is going to be the biggest game of my career," defensive back Jonte Green said. "UNM is a big rivalry, too, but they (UTEP) beat us the last two years."

Chances look good for the Aggies to turn the tables on their rivals from El Paso. The Miners' starting quarterback Nick Lamaison is out with an injury, and he will be replaced by freshman Jay Hall.

In addition, the Miners have yet to find success running the football. They have been held to less than 40 yards rushing in the first two games of the season and are averaging just 1.3 yards per carry.

Do the Aggies plan to blitz?

Coach Walker was tight-lipped when asked.

"I'd rather not say," he said with an impish grin. "That's a little bit of the game plan.

"We are going to have to be aggressive. I know that's one thing coach Mike Price had mentioned in his press conference.

"I'm very fond of him. He's a good coach and a good man, and that's one thing that we noticed on tape is that this team is very aggressive, so we want to continue to be aggressive as a whole team."

Last year, the Aggies only blitzed the Miners See Focused on page A16

Mike Dirks hired as Aggie golf coach

NMSU President Couture: 'Icing on the cake'

By Jim Hilley Las Cruces Bulletin

When Scott Lieberwirth accepted the job as golf coach at the University of Texas at El Paso in July, it looked like New Mexico State University's golf program was in the deep rough. After all, Lieberwirth had guided NMSU to six conference every fairway bunker.

With the hiring of Mike Dirks as the Aggies' new coach, however, it looks like they have played a tough lie into an eagle.

Though Lieberwirth's résumé is impressive, Dirks' may be even better.

While Dirks was coaching the University of Houston from 1994-2003, he led the program to Conference USA men's team championships in 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, and 2001. Houston was the NCAA Central Regional champion in 1997. Dirks was named the NCAA District VI Men's Golf Coach of the Year in 1998 and 1999 and was selected to coach the USA Junior National Golf Team in Japan in 2001. In 2005, Dirks was named Conference USA Men's Golf Coach of the Decade. He was a three-time C-USA Coach of the Year (1997, 1998, 1999) and coached 10 All-Americans, four league individual medalists, 14 first-team All-Conference USA selections, three C-USA Freshmen of the Year and the 2003 NCAA Central Regional individual medalist. Dirks also coached six C-USA Commissioner's Academic Medal recipients and nine members of the C-USA Commissioner's Honor Roll.

Prior to coaching at Houston, Dirks had been coach at Tulane University from 1990-94. A Fort Worth, Texas, native, Dirks was a twice in a 42-10 loss. In 2009, NMSU blitzed 30 times against the Miners in Las Cruces. The Aggies lost that one 38-12.

"They've beat us pretty good the last couple of years, so I don't think we could overlook this game," Walker said. "That's crazy for us to keep talking about Minnesota."

Much like UTEP, the Aggies had difficulty running the ball in their first game, but unlike UTEP, the NMSU running game showed considerable improvement at Minnesota. After gaining only 23 yards on the ground in a disappointing loss at home to Ohio, the Aggies bounced back with 181 yards against the Golden Gophers. In that game, the Aggies were led by running back Robert Clay, who had 97 yards on 20 carries.

"We just made some adjustments," Walker said. "We didn't run the ball very well against Ohio. It was good to see those adjustments help us win.

UTEP coach Mike Price was complimentary about this year's Aggie team.

"This is the best Aggie team I've seen since I've been here," Price said. "They have done a great job in recruiting and they play hard.

They're real aggressive. They made big plays against Minnesota. Taveon Rogers made two touchdowns against Minnesota that were tremendous catches. These are as fast and good of wide receivers as I've seen at NMSU.

They have the best running back we've faced this season in Robert Clay. He's fast and quick and hard-nosed. The Aggie quarterback (Andrew Manley) spread it around to about 10 receivers against Minnesota. He was 12-for-12 at one point."

"They rushed poorly against Ohio, but they really improved that. Walker is a scheming coach who isn't afraid to change things up. He will try to find your weakness and exploit it, so I don't know what they're going to do on defense."

"With DeWayne, there's nothing he hasn't seen and he could adopt any of the blitzes SMU did with his unit."

Walker said the Aggies have to seize the opportunity to build momentum.

Every victory helps' Bennett sets the bar high for Oñate volleyball

By Craig Massey

The Oñate High School volleyball practice is all business.

There is no joking around. Players run from station to station. They listen intently as coach Marian Bennett delivers specific instructions. Are they having fun? It's hard to tell, but winning certainly is fun.

Ōñate goes into this weekend with a 6-4 record under Bennett, the El Paso Sports Hall of Fame coach who took the job last summer. Bennett's record of success speaks for itself and it has been a good fit for a program that needed steady leadership and discipline.

"It's great how she coaches," said libero Alexis Villegas. "It's a lot different, but a good different."

Villegas, who is in her fourth year on OHS varsity, has played for previous coaches Jennifer Jordan as a freshman and sophomore, and for Alice Borden last year as a junior. Adjusting again to a new coach hasn't been easy, but she believes it's what the Knights needed.

"It's hard because you're adjusting to new techniques and how she wants to do things, but once you get the hang of it, it's pretty good," Villegas said. "Over the last four years, this is the best yet."

Bennett, who coached at Santa Teresa High School the past two years, didn't arrive in Las Cruces until late in the summer. She is still getting acquainted with her new players.

"They're learning a lot about me, and I'm learning a lot about them," Bennett said. "I set the bar high and we're teaching them not to settle. It's still a new thing to them."

Bennett said she likes "gamers" and has found a few in players such as Villegas, Maisha Grant and Ryanne Medore.

"But we have to have some more," Bennett said. "They've all come a long way. We have very hard workers. They're very dedicated."

Bennett's practices have a classroom feel to them, but more intense. She is constantly shouting instructions, occasionally halting the flow of activity to make a point. She said she has spent some time breaking the players of bad habits and teaching them basic things such as how to hustle and call for the ball.

"I try to make every drill game-like because I want it to become a habit instead of them having to think about it," she said. "We've made some progress."

Villegas said the players are learning what their new coach wants, and in return, their new coach is giving them direction and stability. "It takes heart, dedication and effort," Vil-

"It takes heart, dedication and effort," Villegas said. "We have a coach that is always there for us."

Among the six wins was a triumph over a tough Carlsbad team. The Knights also won the Loretto Academy Tournament in El Paso and played in the championship side of the Las Cruces Sweet 16 bracket for the first time in 10 years, winning their pool.

They play in arguably the toughest district in the state with perennial state championship contenders Gadsden, Mayfield and Las Cruces High School.

"Each victory helps," Bennett said. "Winning helps you get over a lot of stuff."

Five seniors provide Aggie leadership

Aggielnsider

Riding the momentum Aggies, Walker poised for more

It's rivalry time again and round one is this weekend. The NM State football team hosts UTEP in the Sonic I-10 Rivalry series at 6 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 17, and momentum is wearing Crimson and White.

The Aggies' victory over Minnesota was no fluke. They put together their most complete game since they joined the WAC. The signature win shows that coach DeWayne Walker and his staff are building something that is blooming in the desert.

The offensive line was readjusted with quantifiable results as the team rushed for 133 vards, which provided a counterpunch to the high-powered passing game. Senior center Mike Grady's return added experience, which proved to be the rock of stability that enabled freshman Valerian Ume-Ezeoke to relax and play like an upperclassman rather than a frosh playing his first varsity game. The line play and offensive coordinator Doug Martin's kaleidoscope of offensive plays sprung Robert Clay for 97 yards and upped the Aggies' execution to a 40 percent conversion rate on the critical third downs that sustained drives all day.

It was the defensive side of the ball where the game was settled. The Golden Gophers converted only twice on third down and were thwarted by a turnover claimed by NM State on a scoring drive and by the stifling defense after Minnesota recovered an onside kick. The "piece de resistance" was the stand between the 1-yard and goal line that showed these Aggies believe in themselves and those that are teaching them.

Martin has brought back the excitement to the passing game with Taveon Rogers operating in the jet stream with his speed. The air game is balanced around a variety of tight ends, with clutch receiver Todd Lee a reliable target and Clay coming out of the backfield. One thing the Aggies haven't shown is a lack of concentration, which can lead to breakdowns in discipline. Penalties have been relatively scarce, and the team has been unflappable thus far in pressure situations that have presented themselves in both games.

I feel the Aggies have improved to a point where they can beat a higher-level opponent than in the previous WAC campaigns. It will take the type of play exhibited against Minnesota every time out, which is something Walker can deliver since the foundation of fundamentals and belief in the plan and the team is there.

Rebuilding a college football program is a process that takes patience as well as hard work. I feel the Aggies have the potential to put together an early season win streak with this belief system in place. They believe and so do I; show them you do in person on Saturday night.

We are a month into the season, and what a ride it's been so far.

We are fortunate to have five great seniors to help carry us, and they're all good players and great people.

Jennah DeVries and Brynja Rodgers give us two really good setters with a lot of experience. It's great to get Brynja back after her redshirt season of a year ago.

Now, we have the ability to play in the 5-1 or 6-2, and we're very confident in their ability to do well in both systems. There is nothing better than having experience, especially at setter and libero.

Kelsi Phillips gives us a great senior libero with a lot of experience as well. Phillips has a great competitive personality and has become one of the leaders of this team.

That group of upperclassmen has played well so far and our young players are getting better each time out. We started the season playing fifth-ranked Nebraska, and we had them on the ropes winning the first two games.

Unfortunately, Bradley Nash, one of our outstanding young outside hitters, went down with a knee injury early in the third game. She will have surgery this week, and we are hopeful she will be back in time for spring practice. It's a terrible loss for our team as she is a very good all-around player and not someone you can replace easily.

We've been experimenting with different lineups and feel comfortable that we can win in any of them. Fortunately, we have a few players that are versatile enough to play multiple positions. Kelsey Brennan, who has been a middle hitter her entire career, is playing on the right side some now, and Deirdre Pajares can play the left or right. Hopefully, the improvement of some of our young players will help make up for the loss of Nash but it will take some time.

The great news is we are currently 8-2 overall, with both of our losses coming to great teams in Nebraska and LSU, and we had our chances to win both. We just beat a good and athletic Texas State team at their place, and we head to Big Ten country this weekend and play Northwestern. Later in the season, New Mexico and Colorado State will be coming to the Pan American Center for non-conference matches, and of course, WAC play is drawing near.

This team plays hard and has a really good chemistry about it. We are going to get better each day and contend for a WAC title and NCAA Tournament berth. This team is certainly fun to watch, and we're asking all of you to come out to each and every home match and go crazy cheering us on.

For those of you that don't know this, NM State volleyball has a great group of tailgaters that are outside the Pan Am before every home match. If you haven't been to a volleyball tailgate, everyone is welcome and you have to experience it.

Make sure you come out and support Aggie volleyball. You'll love the environment, the pace of the game, and you'll be helping us reach our goals. Thanks to all of you who do support us and go Aggies.

Conference Championship in 1982 and received both all-conference and honorable mention All-America honors.

Two weeks after graduating from Lamar in 1985, Dirks found himself the university's golf coach.

"I guess I was just in the right place at the right time," Dirks said. "The good thing about it was, the players on the team, we were there for the right reasons, they were good people and they could distinguish now that somebody has to make the decisions and they were good with that."

A year later, Dirks directed Lamar to a seventh-place finish at the NCAA Championships in 1986.

After Lamar, Dirks became coach at Tulane in 1990-94, and was named Metro Conference Coach of the Year in 1994.

'Mike Dirks has certainly had a history of coaching success at several schools including one of the premier programs in the country at the University of Houston," NMSU Athletics Director McKinley Boston said. "I am very excited that he has chosen to lead our golf program. The search committee was unanimous in support of Coach Dirks and all have pledged to help him with his transition and supporting the golf program."

NMSU President Barbara Couture was also impressed with Dirks' success.

"I was one of the first after the search committee to see Dirks' résumé and I have to say, my eyes lit up right away," Couture said. "Coach of the decade - need I say more?"

"We are very proud of having a quality ath-letics program here at New Mexico State University. We are building towards excellence and we've had a great week all around. This is the icing on the cake."

At a press conference announcing Dirks as the new Aggie coach on Tuesday, Sept. 13, Dirks expressed his excitement and enthusiasm for his new position. He said he was especially impressed by the commitment the community has for a successful program.

"The commitment from everyone here – a lot of programs don't have that. They've got a commitment from a golf coach," he said. "New Mexico State wants to succeed, from the president to the athletic director, everybody I've talked to has said 'What can we do to help?

"That's all you can ask for," he said.

One ace for Dirks was the New Mexico State University Golf Course.

"We've got a university golf course, which I have never had before. I've had to travel forever for practice facilities and here we've got a great facility close to campus," he said.

"The kids can do all the things they need to do from practice to academics, all the things we want our young people to excel in we have here at New Mexico State.'

Aggies sweep UTEP NMSU owns 14-match streak

The New Mexico State volleyball team improved to 9-2 after sweeping UTEP 26-24, 25-23 and 25-18 in the Pan American Center, Tuesday Sept. 13. NMSU has not dropped a NMSU has not dropped a match to the Miners since Nov. 21, 2004, when UTEP won 3-1 in El Paso. The Aggies are now on a 14-match winning streak against UTEP.

Senior Kelsey Brennan and freshman Meredith Hays powered the offense with 12 and 13 kills respectively, with Hays earning the fourth double-double of her career as she added 10 digs. Senior libero Kelsi Phillips also tallied 10 digs and senior setter Jennah DeVries tallied a match-high 34 assists.

Although NMSU committed more attack errors than the Miners, the Aggies found a way to come out with the victory. The Aggies had 40 kills compared to UTEP's 35 and out-blocked the Miners 10-8. NMSU also posted four service aces with sophomore Stephanie Ziegler serving two of them.

"We made a lot of silly errors, and I think we can go back and learn a lot from our mistakes," coach Mike Jordan said. "Sometimes you win ugly, but we were still able to come up with the win."

NMSU took an early 5-2 lead in set No. 1 after Hays got the 1,830 fans in attendance on their feet with a monstrous kill. After a service error by the Miners that took the score to 11-6, the Miners would win seven of the next nine points to tie it at 13 all. A huge block by senior Michelle Kuester and Brennan made the score 21-17, but the Miners used a six-point rally to take a late 23-22 lead. The set would be tied for the fourth time at 24-all before the Aggies took the next two points to win 26-24.

The second set saw 12 ties and seven lead changes, with the final tie coming at 20-20 when Brennan slammed down her eighth kill of the match. The Miners cut the lead to one at 23-22, but another hard hit ball by Hays gave NMSU a 24-22 cushion. After a point by UTEP, DeVries scored her only kill of the match to help her team to a 25-23 victory.

NMSU put its offense together in set three, tallying a .333 hitting percentage with only three attack errors in the set. The Aggies forced UTEP to make seven attack errors and three service errors to win their ninth victory of the year. A late rally gave NMSU some separation at 20-14 and the Aggies finished off their I-10 rivals, scoring the final two points of the match.

NMSU heads to Evanston, Ill., for the Wildcat Classic hosted by Northwestern Sept. 16-17. NMSU faces Colgate at 3:30 p.m. Friday, Sept. 16. Fans can listen on KSNM-AM 570 with Kyle Doperalski giving the play-by-play.

DeVries' voice is being heard Aggie setter takes more vocal role for Aggie volleyball

By Kyle Doperalski

New Mexico State senior setter Jennah DeVries received another award Monday, Sept. 12, the latest on a sturdy mantel full of plaques, certificates and trophies.

She was named Western Athletic Conference Volleyball Player of the Week after garnering Tournament MVP honors at the tournament hosted by Texas State University last weekend. Ironically for the two-time All-American, it was the first time she has earned WAC Volleyball Player of the Week.

"Jennah is playing well, like the player we know she is," said NMSU coach Mike Jordan. "She is able to make a lot of plays that most setters can't make because of her athletic ability. Jennah is a very good athlete."

DeVries certainly makes a tremendous difference with her athletic ability on the court, but perhaps her greatest contribution this season is her leadership. Now in her senior year, DeVries feels the pressure to lead the team to a WAC Championship and a return to the NCAA Tournament after a two year absence.

"My leadership has progressed," said the Sedalia, Colo. native. "I've always thought of myself as a leader by example. This year I'm being more of a vocal leader. I want this team to win the WAC and go further in the NCAA Tournament than ever before."

Jordan is happy to see his floor general take a more vocal role on his team.

"We need voices out there that people are willing to follow," he said. "She has done the best job of being a leader this year compared in past seasons. She has been more vocal when things aren't going well in a certain match or drill in practice, and that is when it counts most."

A team develops in practice when there are no fans in the stands and the lights aren't quite as bright. DeVries has always been as great a player in practice as she is in matches.

"Jennah has always been motivated to improve and has always worked hard in practice," Jordan said. "She has been very consistent in training, and we've never had to worry about her in practice."

The role of the setter is similar to a quarterback in football, which comes with the demand of success. If the setter has a good match, the team usually wins and vice versa. The setter touches the ball on almost every single rally and distributes it to the hitters. DeVries continues to climb the career-assist chart, a clear sign she has mastered that part of the game.

"From a setting standpoint, she is as good as we've had," Jordan said. "Her ability to locate the ball and make the tough set is very good. That is only part of it though. She has to make the call on who is the best option on every play, and that is based on a lot of things like who is performing well, the matchup between the hitter and blocker."

Jordan is often seen communicating with the setters during a match and calling a play. Playing for a coach who wears his heart on his sleeve is something DeVries has adjusted to.

"It is a challenge for me every day," DeVries said of Jordan's coaching style. "He is tough on me in practice, but that makes game day easier."

As the non-conference schedule winds its way into the start of conference play, the challenges will continue to increase but if DeVries' senior season ends the way she envisions it, she'll have to build another mantel to hold another WAC Championship trophy.

Letters from the front Personal notes to respected friends

Note to the Biads, owners of Picacho Hills Country Club:

Keep doing what you've been doing. The golf course looks like a new place from what it was a couple of years ago. The fairway grass is healthy, but be careful of the weeds, as they proliferate and are hard to control once they've taken over.

The updated (and expensive) sprinkling system (with some 1,000 new sprinkler heads) was an awesome improvement. If your bunker re-building project will make them fairer, more power to you.

Congratulations on hiring a new club manager with Tony Cosgrove, all the way from Mayfield Country Club in Lyndhurst, Ohio – a golf course just a short bike ride from my boyhood home, and where I caddied briefly as a 10-year-old. Also, you made the right move giving Paul Hinde a chance to work himself into the head pro job permanently.

My only advice, at this point, with the golf course is to have the superintendent cut the rough a little more often so we can actually find the golf balls down in there. And find a new process for programming the hole locations, so that they are varied from week to week, and aren't boring. But the greens seem to be rolling true and the crew has nicely all but eliminated to poa-annua, making them look professional.

Note to Guy Wimberly, PGA golf professional and director of golf at Sierra Del Rio in Elephant Butte:

I love to play the golf course and like the welcome you all give us when we travel the one hour north to play your awesome layout. I understand that a new golf management company, Escalante Golf out of Fort Worth, Texas, has gotten the contract to run the golf course, which will create a challenge for all concerned. You mentioned that your staff has been cut back a bit, but the golf course is still in great condition and doing well. Everyone appreciates that businesses have to do more with less these days, and that is no more real than in the golf industry.

I will continue to do all that I can to encourage folks from Doña Ana County to play occasionally at Sierra Del Rio because I believe that the course ought to be in the top 10 in New Mexico.

Note to fellow golfers who really need to speed it up a bit:

Slow play hurts everybody. A slow pace of play irritates a lot of golfers, and leads to fewer rounds played on individual golf courses, eventually causing them to up their green fees. People who would consider playing golf, but don't, say that "golf just takes too long."

It takes too long because too many golfers don't adhere to the 'max-four hours" norm for playing an 18-hole round of golf. Don't follow the routine of the tour professionals that you see on television, because they play way too slow (the announcers say "deliberately"). There's a huge amount of money at stake, so I can understand it to some extent. But slow play on tour influences slow play with recreational golfers, and all the tours need to find ways to speed it up, just like college football needs to find a way to speed up "plays under-review" rulings on the field.

We need to play "ready golf," which means being ready to hit when you are able to. Play a provisional ball when you fear your ball may be lost; and please follow the five-minute max rule for looking for a ball.

In an article I wrote earlier this year, I urged management to come up with policies to identify "notorious groups" of slow players, who tend to engage in ego-driven betting games and bog down the golf course. They don't care who they inconvenience, and those groups need to be put on the clock and relegated to starting times that don't get in the way of others.

Note to Tiger Woods:

It's been nearly two years since your world caved in on you when you ran your SUV into that unfortunate fire hydrant in the middle of the night at your Florida mansion. I. for one, think you've paid your dues with your lost endorsements, disruption of your family and a reputation that has left you one of the most unpopular athletes in the entire world of entertainment. I hope you find a swing that leaves your knees and hips in one piece, and hope you find your winning ways again.

New stars are emerging practically weekly on the world tours, but it's not too late for you to return to the form that once was the envy of everyone in golf. When you finally find your game, the other studs on the tour are not going to fear you like they did before. The new stars don't fear anybody, let's face it. But that's all right.

You might have to learn to win as an underdog, which would be an alien sensation I realize, but it might be necessary. Jack Nicklaus suffered a two-year winless drought in the middle of his career, and then came back to win several more majors, including the last at age 46. If I were your sport shrink (do you even have one?), the advice I would give you is to discover a brand new belief in yourself, dedicate yourself to being a nicer person (not be so dismissive to the media and everyone), and don't always try so darn hard. Overstriving is sometimes a hindrance to someone who is an over-achiever.

Note to Justin Dahrling, head PGA pro, and Peter Raitt, club manager, at Sonoma Ranch Golf Course:

Thank you for hosting the upcoming New Mexico North-South Senior Challenge golf tournament at Sonoma Ranch, to be held Sept. 25-27. This is the sixth annual North-South Senior and we will be up to 20 golfers on each team.

The play is similar to a Ryder Cup format, with three rounds, including a four-ball, an alternate shot and individual match play. Anyone is welcome to come out and be a spectator, because these golfers are good. Players on the North team are from northern New Mexico (Albuquerque and north), while players from the South team are from all over the southern half on the state. All participants are lower handicap, accomplished golfers, with the age cut-off at 50 years old or higher. Super-seniors (five per team) are 65 and older.

I am pleased to tell my faithful readers that I have played in all five pervious North-South competitions, and will be playing this year. Early this past spring, I thought that playing serious golf was out for the rest of this year, but I have made substantial recovery, and was invited to play. I'm still missing about 15 pounds of body weight (any donors?), and my driving distance is down, but short irons and putting are better than ever.

As country singer Toby Keith says, "I ain't as good as I once was, but I'm as good once as I ever was." Note to the execs and employees at Ping golf:

My heartfelt praise to you and your associates at Ping golf for what you're doing, in an un-heralded way, for our heroic veterans. As part of the discharge process from the rehabilitation hospital, Ping comes in and provides three days of golf instruction, followed by club fitting.

You won't see this imaginative and appreciative service in any Ping ads, but Ping gives each of the discharged veterans who want to play golf a brand new set of customfitted clubs, along with impressive golf bags. One humble, returning wounded veteran was quoted as saying, "Being fitted for those clubs was one of the best things that ever happened to me and I am determined to learn to play golf well enough to deserve the gift Ping has given me."

All I have to say is God bless America and the game of golf.

• George W. Gardiner retired from two directorships at New Mexico State University. Gardiner had been director of basic research and director of Physical Science Laboratory (PSL). The retiring educator was credited with growing the university physics department from two employees to a $5 million a year research program.

• The new academic year began at NMSU on Sept. 7. New programs included a new four-year police science course and a name change for the Department of Geography and Geology, which would become the Earth Sciences Department. The department had added a new research astronomer Clyde Tombaugh, the discoverer of the planet Pluto.

• Ron Logback of Antonito, Colo., was named as starting quarterback for the Aggies after Charley Johnson graduated. The Aggies were set to host the Arizona State College Lumberjacks in the season opener.

• The Las Cruces High School Bulldogs routed El Paso Cathedral 48-12. Scatback Alvin Wright scored three touchdowns and had one touchdown called back on a penalty.

• The Las Cruces Board of Education unanimously approved the middle school concept for the Las Cruces Public Schools.

When both the Doña Ana County Farm Bureau and the Elephant Butte Irrigation District were housed in the same building, it was labeled the "Temple of Agriculture," as seen in this photograph from around 1920.

• A 17-year-old was charged with aggravated assault after shots were fired at Mayfield High School. Police reported the juvenile walked into the main office lobby and began firing a 20-gauge shotgun. The youth arrested was not a student at the school, and police said he appeared to be emotionally disturbed and had left a suicide note.

• Penalties and turnovers led to a 47-33 loss to UTEP at Aggie Memorial Stadium. A crowd of 32,904 watched the game. (Still the second largest crowd in stadium history.) The Aggies battled back from a 33-17 deficit to tie the score on two Jim Miller touchdown passes and a pair of two-point conversions, but two interference calls in the final minutes allowed Miner Sammy Garza an opportunity to score the go-ahead touchdown on a 6-yard keeper with 47 seconds left in the game. The Miners scored again after intercepting a Miller pass and returning the ball to the 1-yard line.

Finding relief at the gas pump

Thou shalt not complain

Samantha Roberts Business Editor

Does your job consist of flying thousands of miles above the Earth with hundreds of people on board, while the fate of their survival lies in your hands? What about shooting photos in the middle of a war zone or saving people's lives at the scene of an incident?

It is easy to say you have a stressful job, but I might think twice before letting out my next I-am-so-stressed complaint, especially after learning about the "10 Most Stressful Jobs in America," according to Careercast.com.

Coming in at No. 10 on this poll and on many similar polls is a real estate agent.

"Well you hit the nail on the head," said Elsie Bonafantini, a Realtor with Steinborn & Associates Real Estate. "We have no control over the market, and once we have a property under contract, there are many other influences from contract to closing that can keep the deal from closing."

Bonafantini said there is also no guarantee of an income. "It is an expensive job to be in, and there are a lot of upfront costs," she said. Scheduling interviews and a little writer's block is looking better and better. However, in my defense, newscaster is No. 5 on the list. A reporter/writer/ editor does many of the same things.

On that same note, photojournalists fall in at No. 4. A special "thank you" to all the photojournalists out there. But juggling closing costs, bankers, clients and potential buyers sounds a lot more difficult than the No. 1 most stressful job in America, which consists of steering a machine that is made to fly itself. Yes, the No. 1 most stressful job in America is a commercial pilot.

But don't judge someone until you've walked a mile in their shoes, right?

- The rest of the list is as follows:
- 1. Commercial pilot
- 2. Public relations officer 3. Senior corporate executive
- 4. Photojournalist
- 5. Newscaster
- 6. Advertising account executive
- 7. Architect
- 8. Stockbroker
- 9. Emergency medical technician 10. Real estate agent

By Samantha Roberts Las Cruces Bulletir

In 2004, motorists paid $1.80 for a gallon of gas, on average. Today, New Mexicans pay an average of $3.42 per gallon, down from last month and below the national average.

Higher gas prices are typically found in the summer months and some believe it's because oil tycoons are business savvy. "People travel more during the summer, so let's charge them more" is a common saying during the summer.

"Summer is always peak driving season, and we see the highest gas prices of the year," said Gregg Laskoski, senior petroleum analyst with Gasbuddy.com. "At the same time, we notice a decline in prices around Labor Day.'

While filling up her car at Sam's Club, Erika Albidrez, a commuter from El Paso, takes note of the gas prices. She said lower prices could provide her some much-needed relief.

"I buy my gas from Sam's Club because it is the cheapest I can find," said Albidrez, adding that she has seen gas as high as $3.48 per gallon recently. "It is $3.42 at Sam's and that is not bad, but lower prices would be very cool, especially since I fill up a truck."

Another factor that causes the highs and lows - winter and summer gasoline blends.

These versions of gasoline are not a new concept. In fact, they have been around since 1995, as a specification to the Clean Air Act's amendments.

'The summer blend burns cleaner," Laskoski said. "And since there are more cars on the road ... you get the picture. The summer blend

For Erika Albidrez, commuting to Las Cruces from El Paso every day has created a game of, trying to find the cheapest gas. However, expected relief at the pump could be just what she needs to ease the burden of the daily drive. Albidrez said the cheapest gas she saw lately was $3.38 per gallon.

is made available May 1 to Sept. 30."

The term summer blend is a nickname for a specific recipe designed to cut down on smog emissions.

'The gasoline we use is always refined from an intricate blend of ingredients; the process combines coffee-dark crude oil with various additives that increase performance or make fuel burn more cleanly," said Sam Schechner, a writer for Slate. "Because overlapping federal and local requirements call for different recipes in different locales and seasons, there are approximately 20 distinct 'boutique blends' of gasoline sold in the United States.

According to Schechner, refineries brew their summer blends by removing hydrocarbons that are more prone to evaporate in hot weather.

Unfortunately, switching production from one to another requires more than turning a knob.

Drought takes no prisoners

Lack of rainfall breaks records, hurts farmers By Marvin Tessneer

The current drought is posting records, and climate patterns indicate the lack of rainfall and above-average temperatures are expected to continue in the Lower Rio Grande Basin, according to the Drought Watch on the Rio Grande.

The Drought Watch is published by Texas AgriLife Research Center and Texas Water Research Center, Texas A&M University.

The first six months of 2011 in the Lower Rio Grande were the driest on record with 118 days of no rain and 49 days above 100 degrees. August was also the hottest month on record, according to Dave Novlan, El Paso climatologist with the National Weather Service (NWS)

The NWS forecast for the Lower Rio Grande Basin during the next few months is 40 percent less than average, and the average rainfall for those months are 1.31 inches in September, 1.88 in October and 1.45 in November, the See Drought on page B2 operations in March, April and that does tighten the supply of gasoline," said Laskoski, adding that this is why most people see a spike in prices around May 1.

"Memorial Day to July 4 is the peak," he said.

So it's not so much that the summer blend is more expensive, although it does cost a few cents more to make, but rather that refineries are manipulating the supply to get the biggest bang for their buck.

Since the winter blend is cheaper, refineries try to sell this gas the longest, cramping the production of summer blends and therefore creating a shortage. "Refineries are manipulating the supply," Laskoski said. "Other factors have also influenced this supply-and-demand chain."

The unstable economy has created extreme highs and lows in the Dow Jones, and crude oil has suffered, with a series of steady losses, Laskoski said.

The high unemployment rate is also causing negative repercussions on the industry, Laskoski said.

"There is a really weak demand for gasoline, the lowest level in nine years," Laskoski said. "People are more aware of the costs and don't drive as much. Also, the high national unemployment level means fewer people are commuting. Without work, people aren't going anywhere."

The problem is blamed on the South Pacific's La Niña, which is expected to persist into winter. La Niña is directing the storm track into northern New Mexico and southern Colorado.

The basin started out with a poor mountain snow pack runoff, about 15 percent of its average of 573,000 acrefeet, according to the Natural Resources Conservation Service.

A visual indicator of the water status was the water level on Labor Day weekend at Elephant Butte, which was 96 feet below the dam spillway. Last year at the same time, the water level was 77 feet below the spillway.

The combined storage in Elephant Butte and Caballo reservoirs is about 200,000 acre-feet, or 9.6 percent of their capacity. Of this amount, 189,000 acre-feet are Rio Grande Compact "credit water," which cannot be used for southern New Mexico or Texas irrigation districts.

The credit water had been collected in previous years by over delivery to the irrigation districts and belongs to the State of New Mexico. The compact will decide the water delivery by following recommendations by the Office of the State Engineer, according to the Drought Watch.

Laskoski said he is also concerned about the effects ethanol could have on automobiles.

"We know that vehicles without ethanol get better gas mileage, but what else do we know?" he asked. "How is ethanol affecting how our cars run?"

Though implementing the summer blend year-round seems like a viable solution, petroleum experts say the cold weather could be troublesome.

Summer blend's low-evaporation rate makes engines less likely to stall in hot weather but can make them difficult to start in the cold, Laskoski said.

county lines, summed up the range conditions as "terrible." He reported his range hasn't received any rain since October 2010, about 1.5 inches.

"Without the rain, the ranges are deteriorating," he said. "It's very difficult for the cattle. If we don't get some rain in a couple of weeks, we'll likely start cutting back on herd numbers."

West of Wilmeth, Ken Treadwell sees a cow herd reduction that will hurt the beef industry. Treadwell runs Angus crossbred cows in Luna, Sierra and Grant counties, but his headquarters are near Deming.

Rain has been erratic on his ranges. Some spots have not received any rain since September 2010, and in other spots small rains were recorded a couple of weeks ago.

ple of weeks ago. "And it's a long distance between green spots," Treadwell said. "A lot of cattle will be leaving the country, probably to slaughter plants. Right now, there's a backlog at meat plants, and the supply and demand will begin to affect prices. What's going to happen is we're going to have to sell calves for slaughter for about $500, but we'll have to buy replacement cows that will probably bring up to $1.50 a pound to rebuild herds."

The lack of rainfall in the eastern part of the state is forcing many cattlemen to reduce their cow herds.

"A large portion of cow-calf operators in eastern New Mexico and west Texas are selling off their cows," said Rustin Rowley of Clovis Livestock Auction. "We get a little sprinkle occasionally, but not enough to grow grass."

Anthony Cosgrove: Bringing in big-city expertise

Local country club welcomes new general manager

By Samantha Roberts

Las Cruces Bulletin

The search for a new general manager of Picacho Hills Country Club (PHCC) has been extensive, but the owners could have found the perfect fit.

Anthony "Tony" Cosgrove brings a wide range of experience and said he hopes to apply some of the things he has learned to the club on the hill.

Cosgrove was born in a small town outside of St. Louis – Belleville, Ill. – Cosgrove and his family did an extensive amount of traveling due to his father's career in the Air Force.

"I lived in Germany from kindergarten through third grade," Cosgrove said. "I had a unique perspective of living – growing up. There weren't any fast food places or theaters to go to."

Cosgrove said he and his siblings – two brothers and one sister – grew up playing outside in the forest.

When the family moved back to the United States, they settled in northern San Antonio, Texas.

Cosgrove attended the University of Texas and graduated with a bachelor's degree in biology and chemistry.

"The intent was to be in medicine because I wanted to provide that personal touch. I wanted to help people," said Cosgrove, adding that he is amazed how much his current profession, managing country clubs, fulfills that initial desire.

In 1997, Cosgrove married his fiancée Carla and said the prospects of medical school weren't looking bright.

"I didn't like the thought of my wife supporting our family while I went through school," he said.

So Cosgrove settled for a career in restaurant management, unbeknown to the passion he would develop for the line of work.

"When we hold a wedding and are part of something so special, we have the ability to provide a level of happiness to people," he said about his job. "It is a fun atmosphere, and I enjoy interacting with people."

Cosgrove said his first restaurant job in San Antonio was centered on a group of regulars.

"This was my debut to the club industry," he said. "But my big break came in 2000 when I was offered a management position at the Sanctuary Golf Club in Florida."

Cosgrove said a man he now considers to be his mentor – Steve Ernst – recruited him for his personality.

"The country club scene was never on my radar," he said, "until Steve brought me in. He was a regular at the restaurant and had experience with the City Club, a large international company."

Cos grove said the transition from restaurant to country club was night and day - in a good way.

"The restaurant business is cutthroat and profit driven," he said. "Every service has to be justified with profitability and measured. At a country club, things are done just because they are fun. The event may have intangible results, but fits the mission of the club."

Though Cosgrove agrees the bottom line is another factor in country club success, he said he also sees the establishment as an extension of someone's home.

"People go to a restaurant to eat and drink, but people go to a country club to do more," he said. "If it's golf, tennis or something social, there is an industry here that works to connect with one another."

Las Cruces Bulletin photo by Samantha Roberts Picacho Hills Country Club general manager Anthony Cosgrove said he hopes to bring some of his skills in other country club arenas to Las Cruces.

Cosgrove was in Florida for eight years when he left his position as the food and beverage director to become the assistant general manager for the Mayfield Sand Ridge Club in Cleveland, a difference in weather and club climate, he said.

While economies in 2008 were still in the slumps, Cosgrove said he saw a lot of changes to the clubs in Ohio.

"The economy was down and the club industry suffered," he said. "It is run on disposable income."

To combat the hardships, Cosgrove said clubs began to merge, eliminating the saturation of clubs and increasing memberships.

"Mayfield merged with Sand Ridge," he said, adding this occurrence allowed him to get experience with a high-end golf club as well as a family oriented atmosphere. "We realized we had to provide more incentives to members and weave that fabric of membership, making incentives for each member of the family to participate and connect members with each other."

After a few years in the north, Cosgrove said he was ready to come "home."

"I just wanted to be in the south," he said.

When the general manager position became available at PHCC, Cosgrove said he jumped at the opportunity.

Moving to Las Cruces in August and taking the reigns just a few weeks later, Cosgrove said he is diving into the deep end.

"I want to utilize what I have learned at other clubs and elevate Picacho," he said. "We are the only private club in Las Cruces. We are a small town, but I know some people feel like they have to cross state lines just to get out here. I want to make that drive worth it.

"I hope people ask, 'What's going on on top of the hill?' And see this for more than just a golf course."

Cosgrove said his personal and professional goals run parallel.

"I want to raise the bar," he said. "Las Cruces has a lot of potential and it is one of the greatest cities to retire in. Nothing would make me happier than to make this club nationally relevant."

As for Cosgrove's family, he said his two daughters and son are adjusting well.

"One of my daughters was nervous," he said about the move. "But we have met so many friendly people in Las Cruces, and the girls have been accepted and welcomed to the community. She is a big soccer player. If everyone is like that, then I think we will be just fine in Las Cruces.

"And seeing those smiles on their faces makes it all worthwhile."

B6 | Business Las Cruces Bulletin A new generation of donors

Young Philanthropists rise out of demographic, economic circumstances

Courtesy of the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico

There is a new trend in the world of philanthropy and charitable organizations, and communities are reaping the benefits.

Emerging demographics and economic circumstances are leading to a new generation of financially savvy donors who are well learned in taxes and business as well as philanthropy. With that new generation of giving comes a desire for change as well as charity.

"Philanthropy goes far beyond placing a dollar in the hand of someone who needs it," said Leonard Jimenez, owner of Studio 037 Salon and one of the founding members of the Young Philanthropists, an organization within the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico (CFSNM). "Philanthropy is about changing the way we think about charity. It is about making a difference now and in the future."

According to the Planned Giving Design Center, most young adults who donate hope for control of their financial and philanthropic assets while also creating and managing change within society. To do that, they create partnerships for charity, teach family members the importance of philanthropy and integrate philanthropy into their personal financial and estate planning needs.

'The difference I make today should have a long-term effect," said Jimenez, who, like many younger donors, also expects accountability from charitable organizations. "I want my money to change the world."

Changing the world is happening because today's donors such as Jimenez are younger, financially focused, control and planning oriented and full of expectations from their charity. Change is also inevitable because today's donors have a longer life, meaning a longer income stream as well as additional income for retirement years. Organizations such as the CFSNM have a longer relationship with the donor and the donor's family after the gift is made. They also have the ability to assist donors with various planned giving tools to enhance the donor's retirement income needs as well as other personal estate and tax planning objectives.

While a new generation of giving is the trend, the Planned Giving Design Center does point out younger donors expect something different than the older generation, including professionalism, stewardship, accountability and giving options.

'Being a part of the Young Philanthropists and the Community Foundation allows me to be a vital part of giving," Jimenez said. "I am able to both participate in and change the way philanthropy impacts our community."

The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico is dedicated to helping the southern New Mexico community now, and in the future. Founded in 2000, the Community Foundation offers opportu-nities for local people who want to give back locally. The beauty of the foundation is that you need not be wealthy to make a positive difference in the lives of people throughout our area. competition are awarded cash premiums.

All steers participating in the production competition remain eligible for the traditional market steer show later in the day and a sale position in the junior livestock sale.

'One of the biggest reasons our local ranching families wanted this expanded program was to give their kids more education," En-cinias said. "Through this program, the youth understand that they have a responsibility and standards to uphold as young beef producers, because their market steers will eventually end up on someone's dinner plate."

As a requisite of the program, every participant and at least one of their parents must complete a formal training in Beef Quality Assurance, which provides the framework of best management practices to produce safe, wholesome and quality beef.

The fair competition also introduces the youth and their families to the technology of real-time ultrasound as it is commonly used throughout the nation's beef industry.

"Ultrasound is used by seedstock producers to predict economically important traits in growing bulls and females tied to carcass com-position," Encinias said. "Feedlots also use the technology to sort cattle into uniform lots and determine feeding end dates based on carcass size and quality.'

Marketing is another component of the beef industry that participants learn.

'This program gives our kids an idea of a real world marketing situation," said Mike Barnes, agriculture education teacher at Clayton High School and sponsor of the Clayton FFA chapter. "Most of our steers are homeraised cattle, so using the ultrasound gives some data to the parents to see how it is used as a marketing strategy. The competition is helping open parents' eyes to the change that is happening in the beef industry."

"Unlike other counties in New Mexico, most of the youths and steers exhibited in Union County come directly off the family ranch," said Manny Encinias, New Mexico State University Cooperative Extension Service beef specialist, one of the organizers of this competition. "Because these families and the community are embedded in the beef business, the program was an easy sell from the very beginning."

Encinias, Grenville rancher Kathy Roberts and retired Union County Extension Service agricultural agent David Graham proposed the program in 2008 to add an educational dimension for youth and families interested in the economically important aspects of the junior market steer project. The program's goals also included attracting more local producers to the fair, and promoting careers in production agriculture in the areas of nutrition, genetics, meat science and feedlot management.

Eighteen youths participated in this year's program, which involved measuring the average daily weight gain over a 180-day period beginning in early February. Once at the fair, Encinias and fellow technician Raymond Rivale utilized real-time ultrasound to estimate the composition of each steer's carcass by measuring the ribeye area, backfat and marbling.

This information on each steer, combined with a ranking in the show ring by a three-member panel of local feedlot managers, and the results from a written exam taken by each participant are used to compute an overall champion for the competition. The top five places in the Social promotion to be eliminated if Governor's education reform adopted

Chris Erickson State of the Economy

When it comes to flunking, I have a more personal interest in the subject than most observers. You see, I flunked the second grade. This was one of the worst experiences of my life. So when Gov. Susana Martinez proposes to end social promotion for third graders, I take notice.

Being held back is a traumatic experience for a child. It means friends and playmates will continue into the next grade while the child is left behind. Both former and current classmates will be aware of the circumstances, and the result likely will be taunts and teasing. And make no mistake, children can be cruel.

Martinez's proposal would cause students not reading at grade level by the end of the third grade to be ineligible for social promotion to the fourth grade. An estimated 12,000 third graders each year would be affected at a cost of $30 million.

Still, the cost is chump change if the policy works, which it might. A recent study by New Mexico Coalition for Literacy reports 700,000 New Mexican adults are illiterate. If the plan can prevent today's children from becoming tomorrow's illiterate adults, the benefits will far exceed the costs.

The proposal would require intensive intervention to help deficient readers. The plan calls for screening kindergarten through third-grade students for reading deficiency, then developing an individualized plan to help those students found deficient to catch up. The cost of this is borne by the schools through eighth grade and by the student's parents in ninth through 12th grade.

There is nothing like a hanging in the morning to concentrate the mind, as they say. Faced with real possibility of flunking, many students and their parents might well become more open to intensive interventions, such as extended school hours or summer school. Still, flunking a grade is a devastating event for a child. When it happened to me, I didn't benefit. I suffer from dyslexia. Like most dyslexics, I ultimately learned to read. But flunking is not the reason why. For me, it was a matter of maturation. About 10 years old, a neuron must have connected because like a light bulb switches on, I learned to skim read. I simply learned to ignore all the things my teachers had been telling me to pay attention to. I stopped worrying about each word, but read for content only and quickly became a strong reader. But don't ask me to proofread.

Of course, each student's circumstance is different. My experience may not be typical; indeed, probably isn't. Early intervention can be helpful for many problem readers, but flunking every slow-reading third-grader isn't the solution either.

And indeed, the governor's reforms have a number of exceptions for students with special circumstances. Students who are English learners, but are proficient readers in their native language or who have been determined to have a learning disability, are exempt.

Still most students will be subject to retention at the end of third grade if they aren't reading proficiently. Flunking is not to be taken lightly. Looking back on it after nearly 50 years, I still view my parents' decision to hold me back as a mistake.

If reading all this, you come away with the feeling that I have mixed feelings about the Governor's proposal, you are correct. Flunking third-graders may, on net, improve educational outcomes. If it does, the effect will be worth it. But I think a lot of miserv will be inflicted on a lot of students in the process.

Bank owned, short sales are the best deals

Before you pay full price, research other options

Looking for a good deal on a house, town home or condominium? Opt for a bankowned or short sale offering. Why? Because distressed properties are selling for almost 20 percent less than problem-free homes, according to statistics from the Las Cruces Association of Realtors (LCAR).

Between Jan. 1 and Sept. 10, a total of 742 new and existing homes, town homes and condominiums were sold in the greater Las Cruces area. Five hundred fifty-one of those sales were of problem-free properties that were sold under "normal" circumstances. The remaining 191 homes were either owned by banks or sold for less than what was owed on them (a short sale).

As the accompanying table shows, the average sales price of the 191 bank-owned and short sale properties was $154,335, which is more than $36,000 - or 19 percent - less than the $190,578 average price paid by buyers of problem-free homes. The median sales price, where half sold for more and half sold for less, produced a similar result.

Buyers of distressed properties also got more home for their buying dollars. On average, distressed homes contained more than 1,900 square feet of heated and cooled living space. Problem-free homes were more than 3 percent smaller, averaging about 1,850 square feet each.

When it comes to price-per-square-foot, distressed properties sold for an average of $80.51 per square foot, which is almost 22 percent less than the $103 per square foot buyers paid for problem-free properties. Distressed properties also sold much more quickly than problem-free homes, shaving almost two-months off the time required to close a "normal" sale.

There's little doubt that sales of distressed properties will continue to account for upwards of 26 percent of all Las Cruces area sales, and about 30 percent of existing-home sales for the foreseeable future. So if you're shopping for a new place to live, seek out the problem properties first. Doing so will significantly increase the chances that I'll soon ... See you at closing!

NMSU students earn internship with luxury retailer

Sarah Kesler, Maria Rodriguez and Torre Stobb competed with students from across the country for the internship opportunity at Neiman Marcus in Las Vegas. All three graduates said they are happy not only have earned degrees from New Mexico State University in clothing, textiles and fashion merchandising, but to also have an opportunity to apply what they've learned in an internship with a famous luxury retailer.

"There was a national search and they picked me," Rodriguez said. "I'm from Hatch, which is pretty small, and I came through NMSU's College Assistance Migrant Program. I would have never gone to college if it wasn't for CAMP, and I'm so excited because so many doors have opened for me.'

Stobb of Portales was energized by the news. "I am so honored to have been given the opportunity to work for Neiman Marcus," shesaid.

Second time is a charm

Jewelry store owner returns to Las Cruces, finds success

By Samantha Roberts

The Southwest is her home, and jewelry is her passion. Wright Jewelers owner Nancy Wright has been in the jewelry business for a long time, but recently ventured into entrepreneurship with partner Chuck Saari. The duo owns and operates Wright Jewelers, which previously was Jones & Co., located at 1300 El Paseo Road.

Wright was in Denver before moving to Las Cruces where her mom owned the Palms Hotel on Picacho Avenue in the 1970s. After selling the business, Wright and her family moved to California.

"I missed Las Cruces," she said about her move west. "I wanted to stay, and I was upset that we were leaving."

With the Land of Enchantment tugging at her heart, Wright moved back to the City of the Crosses in the '90s and started working for Jones & Co., a Las Cruces-based jewelry store.

"The Joneses groomed and trained me," Wright said about her new sales position. "I developed my passion from them. They taught me a lot."

As Wright's passion grew, so did her drive to be a business owner, and she opened Wright Jewelers Feb. 1, 2010, buying the former Jones & Co. and transforming the store into an allencompassing jewelry store, including fashion jewelry, antique jewelry, high-end jewelry and even some pieces from overseas.

"I wanted (the store) to be a little more youthful and modern," Wright said. "But we still carry a lot of diamonds."

Wright said the change in merchandise followed the change in the economy.

"People are not looking to spend $10,000 right now because the economy is so bad," she said. "We have a huge selection with a wide range in prices. I think our least expensive item is $12 and prices go all the way to $10,000. We will keep moving with the times and also change the fashion pieces as trends change. But we will always carry the traditional pieces, and have high-quality diamonds."

When entering the jewelry store, Wright said clients are greeted by qualified professionals who are interested in learning their needs.

"I value experience in my employees," she said. "I want them to be able to help the customers as much as possible."

Wright said the customers are her favorite part of the business.

"If anyone has a problem with their jewelry, we want them to know they can come here," he said. "We have a jeweler on staff, and learn our customers' needs. We want to know their preferences, major holidays, sizes.'

When leaving the jewelry store, Wright said she wants people to say, "We'll be back."

"Most of them say it," she said. "They will say, 'See you soon' or something similar. And we hope they do come back and tell their friends.2

In addition to the jewelry, Wright Jewelers also specializes in bridal gifts for bridesmaids, flower girls, groomsmen, ring bearers, the bride, groom and everyone else involved.

"We have hundreds of ideas," Wright said. "And the ability to order so many more items."

In a small town, Wright said her biggest competitor is the Internet.

"I would like to think we can provide more than ordering online," she said. "The customer service sets us apart. We know people's history, and if we don't have it here, we will find a way to get it." While some people can only dream of a perfect career, Wright said hers fell in her lap. "I had no plan to buy this store, but when the Joneses retired, the opportunity was here and I realized it was meant to be," she said. "I never thought jewelry would be my passion, but I have switched my love of shoes to my love of diamonds.

"At Wright Jewelers, you will get gorgeous diamonds at a great price. We have the best quality."

Another passion for Wright is to keep her jewelry company involved in the community by supporting various organizations, such as Cowboys for Cancer Research, Race for the Cure, Relay for Life and the New Mexico State University Aggies are Tough Enough to Wear Pink campaign.

"Our store will be full of pink in October," she said. "But we also carry specials year-round."

Wright said another upcoming event includes a Halloween party with a '50s theme.

The employees are going to dress in poodle skirts and everything will be 50 percent off," she said. "We are also fully stocked for the holidays and offer layaway plans."

I would like to think we can provide more than ordering online. The customer service sets us apart.

When the hot days of summer are finally behind us, and the chile is roasted and safely put away in the freezer, Las Crucens know it is time for the City of the Crosses' biggest party -The Whole Enchilada Fiesta.

Karaoke stages, food booths, craft vendors, a car and truck show and carnival rides are all part of the fun during the huge three-day celebration of Las Cruces' favorite food.

The 31st annual Whole Enchilada Fiesta will take place Friday through Sunday, Sept. 23-25, at the Hadley Complex on Hadley Avenue. Tickets to the family-oriented festival are $4 for attendees age 7 or older and available at local Pic Quik stores, www.holdmyticket.com or at the gate.

The fiesta kicks off at 4 p.m. Friday, Sept. 23, continues from 10 a.m. to midnight Saturday, Sept. 24, and from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 25.

For the kids, Enchilada Land will be set up with games, activities and other events to keep the little ones happy. Enchilada Land booths are set up to raise funds for nonprofit organizations. No activity will cost more than $2, and the kids are guaranteed not to walk away empty handed.

Everyone loves a parade, and this year's Whole Enchilada Fiesta Parade will be held Saturday at 10 a.m. Also on Saturday are a 1-Mile Fun Run at 7:30 a.m. and a 5K Run at 8 a.m. Awards will be given at 9 a.m.

For those looking for a little competition, don't forget the horseshoes and huachas horseshoes courts just east of Unidad Park. Cost is $20 per team. Registration will take place from 10 a.m. to noon the day of the tournament.

It's big, it's cheesy and we love it

A little later, attendees can take part in a horseshoes tournament beginning at 4 p.m. Also a double-elimination tournament, the cost to enter is $15 and registration will be from 2 to 3:30 p.m. at the site.

Two stages are set up to provide entertainment during the fiesta. On Friday, the Main Stage will feature Tequila Nights from 5:30 to 6:45 p.m.; Fandango USA from 7 to 8:15 p.m.; and Ruben Ramos and the Mexican Revolution from 8:30 to 10 p.m. Roberto's Stage will feature Fastlane from 5 to 6 p.m.; The Yarbrough Band from 6:15 to 7:30 p.m.; Mr. Black from 7:45 to 9 p.m.

Saturday's entertainment on the main stage will feature blues artist C.W. Taking the next step Local actor follows a 40-year dream

By Natisha Hales

Growing up, most children are encouraged to follow their dreams - singer, dancer, rocket scientist or actor. But when those children get to adulthood and life has gotten in the way, those dreams are often never realized.

Local actor David Edwards, however, is still following his dream of becoming a professional actor, a goal for the past 40 years

"I've wanted to be an actor since I was 19," Edwards said, "and I put that aside for almost 40 years. But you have to - at some point – follow your dream."

Edwards will be taking the next step in his acting career by moving to Los Angeles in the coming weeks. Obviously, it wasn't an overnight decision, although he said he has enjoyed acting since being cast in a sixth-grade operetta or playing an insurance-selling, mambo dancing baseball player in his high school's production of "Damn Yankees."

Raised to make more "practical" decisions, Edwards majored in elementary education at New Mexico State University, but took an introduction to theater class with Arlene Belkin as an elective. He was hooked.

'She was so charismatic and interesting," Edwards said, "I signed up for another class the next semester. I wanted to change my major to theater, but I had practical parents."

Staying on the practical path, but still pursuing his new-found passion, Edwards changed his major to secondary education so he could teach theater at the high school level.

"I guess you could say I settled, but it was the practical thing to do," he said.

Edwards taught drama, speech and English at Mayfield High School for five years before his dream of pursuing an acting career resurfaced.

He decided to enter the Master of Fine Arts program at the Dallas Theater Center. Instead of becoming the actor he wanted to be, Edwards said his time earning his master's degree was a scene of "tremendous personal and professional failure."

Edwards not only endured a divorce and entered parenthood, but the graduate program he was in dissolved, leaving him 18 months to finish his thesis. Although he submitted his thesis – even submitting work from his ventures in Australia and Hawaii – he was told he missed the deadline.

"It didn't upset me too much," he said. "I had gained the recognition by my peers in graduate school as being a good actor, but I didn't get cast a lot, hardly at all, actually."

Edwards carried that easygoing attitude with him back to Mayfield High School. He taught for a little more than seven years before he decided to get out of teaching. From there, he dabbled in other professions, including writing for local publications. While he worked in various positions, there was one constant in his life - acting.

Since 1973, Edwards has been active in community theater, starting with the Las Cruces Community Theatre.

His first role in the community was a Puerto Rican deliv-ery boy in Neil Simon's "The Gingerbread Lady." Mark Medoff was directing "Gingerbread Lady" until his play, "When You Comin' Back, Red Ryder?" got its break on Broadway.

From there, Edwards played numerous characters - most recently a distinguished English gentleman in "An Inspector Calls," and an easygoing guy from Oklahoma in "August: Osage County."

Whatever the role, Edwards said he is ready for it, from his hair down to his socks.

"I do a lot of hair acting. My hair is one of my best features," he joked. "But I don't take my characters home with me, unless they drink a lot. It gives me a good excuse.'

His longtime acting career in Las Cruces has flourished, and many who know him have grown to love him and his sharp sense of humor. Edwards has acted, directed and been involved in performances of the Las Cruces Community Theatre, Black Box Theatre, Doña Ana Lyric Opera, lo-fi Productions and others. He acted with his girlfriend, Cindy Murrell. He worked on locally made films, such as "Boom," "Refuge" and "100mpg" and made lifelong friends along the way.

But that dream of acting resurfaced yet again.

"I heard that everyone goes through an uncastable age dur-ing their lives," Edwards said. "For whatever reason, you just California in pursuit of his lifelong dream of acting. don't fit whatever they're looking for. So I thought, I'll just keep doing this till I get to a castable age. I've been mulling it over for quite a while.

Before heading west, Edwards turned to his longtime friend and mentor, Medoff, for opinions on heading West.

"I started working with Dave when he was a teenager, and he's not only a good actor, which I recognized immediately, I recognized his potential when he was very young," Medoff said. "He's the single actor I have worked most with in 43 years as a playwright and director, and some of that is I know I can always depend on him as an actor, and equally important is the generosity of the spirit people bring to a collaborative endeavor, which is what theater and moviemaking is. There's nobody I know any more generous in that collaborative enterprise than David.'

It's true, Edwards confessed. In fact, he didn't finalize the decision to move to Los Angeles until he followed through on his commitments with local productions. But now, he said, he's finally at a point where he can take the next step.

Never mind that he is nearly 60, Medoff said.

"I joke that I find it hard to find really good character ac-tors in middle age who are sane and sober," Medoff said. "The dependability of people is so crucial.

"I've encouraged (Dave) for a long time to spread his wings a little bit to find out what he can do. A lot of people end up saying, 'I should have, would have and could have,' and there's always a but, so I respect his courage in going out to L.A. now and seeing if he can work as a character actor.'

Murrell, his girlfriend of 12 years, also encouraged him to go, Edwards said

"It's important to have my life partner to support me in this," he said.

On the road, traveling buddies make an impression English duo keeps things lively in 'The Trip'

Review by Jeff Berg For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Drive, check-in, eat, tell bad jokes, do impersonations. That's about the sum of the plot of "The Trip," a droll, but mildly amusing road trip movie, starring English comedians Steve Coogan and Rob Brydon and based on a British television show, which is mostly improvised.

Coogan lucks onto a great writing gig, assigned to write a half dozen or so reviews of the snootiest restaurants in northern England, and he invites Brydon to go along. They hit the road and "My Dinner with Andre" takes a new twist. Ah, good food, good conversation, and a road trip. Life doesn't get much better. Or does it? Well, maybe.

Coogan and Brydon are OK as traveling companions, but as one might expect, things venture into areas that guys are wont to talk about, that being most anything. They spar back and forth, and according to both of them, their performances in the film are close to who they are in real life. This is not a gross-out comedy by any means, but more of a friendship-at-odds roads, relationships come into play. Coogan, who may be in a committed relationship, talks his way into the boudoir of several lasses while on the trip, while Brydon exchanges passionate and kinky cell phone calls with his ultra busy wife who could not accompany him on the journey.

The film follows the same recipe as mentioned in the opening of this review. It is FILM REVIEW an interesting and fun way to meet the characters and Fountain Theatre Sept. GRADE learn about them. Director Michael Winterbottom has a long and varied résumé of films, covering everything from comedy to documentary to heavy drama to pure sex, and he touches on many of those subjects in this droll little piece.

And no one is safe from the silly impersonations done by these two noted comedians ... Woody Allen, Richard Burton, and Michaels Sheen and Caine all fall victim to their vocal whimsy. They also spar about noted English authors such as Wordsworth, who is represented fully at one of the bed-and-breakfasts where they stay.

"The Trip" is a small and clever film, but expect a touching surprise ending.

I want to go on a long road trip so bad, that I'd even buy a big SUV with shiny wheels. jeffberg@lascrucesbulletin. com. These reviews are his own opinions and do not reflect those of the film society.

Steve Coogan plays a restaurant reviewer traveling the English countryside with his friend, played by Rob Brydon, in "The Trip." The film is screening at the Fountain Theatre through Thursday, Sept. 22.

The Mesilla Valley Film Society CineMatinee for 1:30 p.m. Sat-urday, Sept. 17, is "The Robber" (2011, 90 minutes, in German with English subtitles, rated R). 'The Robber" concerns a man who robs banks. He also runs.

One is a compulsion, the other a vocation. The two may be indistinguishable. But we're left to decide for ourselves, because the robber who runs (or the runner who robs) doesn't say much about anything - whether he's having sex, jacking cars or bounding down the streets of Vienna with bags of cash on his shoulder. The point of the film isn't our understanding of this man, who remains a cipher from beginning to end, or even his own understanding of himself and his "life" - a notion he flatly rejects.

The point is in the running.

And as he runs, we follow.

Directed by German filmmaker Benjamin Heisenberg and cowritten by Heisenberg and Martin Prinz from Prinz's novel, "The Robber" stars Andreas Lust as Johann Rettenberger, a fictionalized version of infamous 1980s bank robber Johann Kastenberger.

Lust has the spare physiognomy and granite face of a marathoner or maybe a monk – and he boasts, as well, the ability to transmit no emotion of any kind for long periods of time. Johann barely talks. What he thinks remains a mystery until he acts on it. The actions can be inconsequential (watch him unstrap his heart monitor after a workout or a heist) or downright shocking, but they're performed with a graceful precision.

There's no extraneous padding on any level, either visually supporting characters, one a love interest, the other a nosy parole officer play their very specific roles in some very specific scenes that don't waste a single word or glance or gesture.

In an era of wobbly cinematography and blathery scripts, Heisenberg has created a spare and firm-handed portrait of a restless loner. As Rettenberger hoofs it through city and suburb and forest, on bank jobs and races and training runs, Reinhold Vorschneider's steady camera keeps the pace - accompanying him step for step with long, smooth tracking shots that whoosh along to a frenzied drumbeat.

These jogs begin in the prison yard, where Johann is finishing up six years for attempted robbery, and end in an "ultrathon" through the rolling hills outside Vienna. As a runner, the robber is dogged; as a robber, the runner is efficient, explosive and fast.

CineMatinee is a unique blend of movies presented by the Mesilla Valley Film Society that showcases unique films, past and present, often with an emphasis on life in the West and "movies that missed us" – films that are notable but never had a lot of publicity.

The series is designed to show area residents that film is a form of art and education as well as entertainment. At least one film a month for this series has a New Mexico "connection," drawing from the vast pool of movies made in the state (nearly 500) or perhaps featuring a star/story from New Mexico . talent.

Unless otherwise noted, screening time is 1:30 p.m., and admission is $4 for everyone except film society members who are admitted for $1. The theater is located at 2469 Calle de Guadalupe, one-half block south of the Mesilla Plaza. For more information, call 524-8287 and leave a message.

Roll me or flatten me

Enchiladas are the bomb By David Edwards

Need to talk enchiladas a bit. They're comfort food. Nothing picks me up on a down day or is the perfect evening meal on a good day like Mom's red enchiladas. I know. There's likely no one less Latina than mi madre, but she's always done a great job with the Mexican food. Ask me about her chile rellenos sometime.

But Mom's red enchiladas are so significant that we included a plate of them on the altar we made at last year's Día de los Muertos celebration in honor of my late father. (Dad passed away three years ago next week on his 83rd birthday.)

Mom usually uses a pint of Roberto's frozen red chile, which obviously contributes to the goodness. She dilutes it a bit with water and then adds about a tablespoon of oil, a touch of garlic and salt as it heats in a small saucepan. Corn tortillas are skillet heated in a bit of oil. A little of the heated sauce is spooned on a plate, then the tortilla and more sauce goes on top. Sprinkle on the grated cheese – no onions on mine – and then two more layers. Microwaving for about 30 seconds makes sure everything is melty, and I always top mine with an overmedium fried egg, which Mom finds disgusting. If she didn't feel like cooking eggs, she would push for green. Green enchiladas use cream of mushroom soup, green chile and onions (OK if they're sautéed with the chile) and the sauce smothers the same three tortilla

Before my family came to Las Cruces, the only enchiladas we had experience with were the rolled kind. Flat enchiladas were a revelation and are now my preference. I started thinking about memorable enchiladas I have had in my life. One that stands out was during a trip to Los Angeles in 1979 to see the Mark Taper Forum production of Mark Medoff's "Children of a Lesser God." Several of us were cruising around in the rented van and ended up in some little place in Hollywood. I think. It might have been somewhere off of Alvarado Street as Warren Zevon's "Carmelita" kept running through my

"I pawned my Smith-Corona and I went to meet my man. He hangs out down on Alvarado Street by the Pioneer Chicken stand."

Whether it was the occasion, circumstances or thrill of being in LA, the crabmeat enchiladas were outstanding. The peach margaritas probably didn't hurt, either. Kiki's in El Paso serves a krab (as in imitation crab) mole enchilada. Mole sauce is primarily a mixture of red chile and chocolate that dates back to the Aztecs. Very good, but would be better with real crab – easier done in California, I bet.

In the past, I have even created a Spam enchilada. Pork, cheese and red chile always works for me. Try the Spam burger at El Patrón Café sometime.

Red enchiladas are normally the first dish I try when I go to a new Mexican food restaurant. They are the establishment's signature dish in my opinion, although one could argue for burritos or tacos, but if a restaurant can make decent red enchiladas, then chances are the rest of the menu will be up to snuff.

I have discovered most local Mexican restaurants are up to the challenge and a recent blitz of enchilada sampling – six restaurants during a five-day period with a repeat visit to one of them and a stop at Mom's – revealed a fairly consistent quality. Some were spicier, some had a better texture, some were cheesier or had fresher tasting chile, but all were good enough to meet my stringent standards. In other words, I ate them with no complaint

While I have my favorite restaurants with my favorite enchiladas – green chile/chicken at La Nueva Casita and Andele's green enchilada with "liquid gold" cheese sauce for example – what I found was that a few eateries had some special choices I really enjoyed.

On the surface, The Shed seems an unlikely place for Mexican food, but their red sauce is thick and has a unique sweet/hot flavor that is really delicious. One of the few places that offer a choice of yellow or blue corn tortillas, its southern New Mexico-style enchiladas come in the traditional flat form – either green or red – and you can add chicken, ground beef, brisket or shrimp.

Calabacitas is a Mexican squash dish made with zucchini, yellow and Mexican squash, green chile, corn and mushrooms. Try that between two blue corn tortillas with cheese and topped with creamy sauce and you may forget about traditional enchilada fillings.

The Shed serves breakfast and lunch all day and that includes the breakfast enchiladas - two blue corn tortillas with a choice of pork, turkey sausage or brisket, onions and cheese with red or green chile sauce. And you can add an egg.

Habaneros restaurant offers an amazing spinach and artichoke enchilada with a very tasty green sauce, a traditional molé and chicken enchilada and a pipián and chicken enchilada. Pipián, or pipián verde, is a sauce made of pumpkin or squash seeds and spices. It doesn't have the heat of their green sauce, but has great flavor.

Paisano Café has four very unique mole enchiladas, or enmoladas, as they call them. The mole negro is made with chichilo peppers and tomatillo mole sauce. Mole poblano is more traditional with ajillo pepper and Oaxaca chocolate. The molé verde makes use of the pipián sauce with a touch of the hoja santa or root beer plant. Pineapple, red apples, fried plantain and spices are used to create the mancha manteles molé.

Especially in this "enchilada time" of year, you can go traditional, go specialty or even try the world's largest. Or, if you are really lucky, you can stop by Mom's for some comfort.

Doña Ana Arts Council photos

On Friday, Sept. 9, more than 30 artists from throughout the Southwest gathered up their paints and easels and set out to capture the subtle beauties of Las Cruces in a timed painting competition during the second annual Color Las Cruces Plein Air Competition and Community Arts Festival.

The resulting paintings were exhib-ited Sept. 10 and 11 at 201 N. Main St., where guest judge Preston Thayer, the director of the New Mexico State University Art Galleries, did the honors.

The winners of the 2011 Color Las Cruces Plein Air Competition were: Meg Freyermuth – first place; Beth Ray – sec-ond place; and Judy Licht – third place. Honorable Mentions went to Arlene J. Tugel and Ouida Touchon.

An interesting fact about this competition is that first-place winner Meg Freyermuth was last year's second-place winner, while this year's second-place winner was last year's first-place winner.

Winners of the quick draw competition, held Sunday, Sept. 11, were: Krystyna Robbins - first place; Beth Ray - second place; and Lois Griffel - third place. In the 15-and-Under category, the winners were: Reyna Andazola – first place; Santana Andazola - second place; and Alyssa Garnett – honorable mention.

Community members and artists gathered outside the Rio Grande Theatre for a VIP reception Saturday, Sept. 10. Winners of the plein air competition were announced during the event.

Reyna Andazola won first place in the quick-draw competition 15-and-under category. The event was held Sunday, Sept. 11.

New Mexico State University students created a sculpture from donated mugs during the second annual Color Las Cruces Plein Air Competition and Community Arts Festival held Sept. 9-11.

Please pass the sanitizer 'Contagion' is feel-good movie of the year

Review by David Edwards

Las Cruces Bulletin

Call me a jaded elitist, but when I see a virus movie, I expect the people who catch it to – at the very least – kill and maybe eat people who haven't caught the disease. It wouldn't hurt for cries of "Brains!" to fill the air, either.

Some of the brains involved with the new film "Contagion" were the ones behind the creation of the trailer that leads one to believe it is both scary and suspenseful. It is neither. But the trailer makes sure to get your hopes up.

I know I warn against the evils of having expectations when you go to a movie but, dang it, the preview for "Contagion" just makes that little germ (or fomite as we learn it's called when passed via touch from person to person) of anticipation leap off the screen and infect us with the hope of being creeped out of our seats.

And "Contagion" is a little creepy and scary, but in the sense of "Could this really happen?" and the answer is in the affirmative. We have, after all, had to deal with pod people, crab monsters and Mechagodzilla just in my lifetime. But this virus thing is much more probable – probably – and the speed it travels is pretty scary even if passing it along doesn't involve anyone getting bitten by anyone else (darn it!).

"Contagion" reminded me a little of those '70s disaster movies in which an A-list group of actors must survive a weak script as well as burning buildings, capsized ocean liners or earthquakes (complete with "Sensurround"). Or maybe some B-list performers have to fight off killer bees, rats or some other nature-gonehaywire phenomenon. "Contagion" is fortunately better than that.

It does have an all-star cast – Matt Damon, Gwyneth Paltrow, Kate Winslet, Marion Cotillard, Jude Law, Laurence Fishburne and, one of my current faves, Bryan Cranston. (If you haven't seen "Breaking Bad" on AMC, you are Oscars, Oscar nominees, Emmy winners and that cussing guy from "Snakes on a Plane." (Just kidding, it's really that Morpheus guy from "The Matrix.") Director Steven Soderbergh won an Oscar for "Traffic," was nominated for "Erin Brockovich" and directed the new versions of "Oceans 11," ... and "12" ... and "13." So no shortage of talent here.

As the story unfolds, we see a woman (Paltrow) in a Chicago airport bar on her way to Minneapolis. Beth Emhoff, it appears, has just had a sexual assignation with a man who isn't Mr. (Matt Damon) Emhoff. She coughs, rushes to catch her plane and by the time she gets home is pretty sick – actually really sick. From there, as you can imagine, things get a lot worse.

The film is structured so we see the progression of the virus at various day "markers." When after just a few days, people start dying in the U.S. and Asia, the CDC and the World Health Organization start to take notice. Beth was in Hong Kong for the groundbreaking of a new factory and she may be the infamous "patient zero," or the first infected.

A video of a Chinese man having a seizure and dying on a train goes viral – as it were – thanks to blogger Alan Krumwiede (Law) who fans the conspiracy theory flames. Could the CDC and WHO be in cahoots with the pharmaceutical companies? Is there a homeopathic cure they aren't telling us about?

While scientists scramble to isolate and identify the virus (Thank God Elliott Gould agreed to do an uncredited cameo!), Dr. Leonora Orantes (Cotillard) is dispatched to Hong Kong to trace the origins of the virus while Dr. Erin Mears (Winslet) does the same in Minnesota. Dr. Ellis Cheever (Jackson, I mean Fishburne) tries to manage much of the operation while dealing with all the government agencies (including the Department of Homeland Security, which has biological weapon concerns) and the media. (Remember how you over-hyped the swine flu?)

While the filmmakers and performers are highly skilled, the overall tone of the film reminded me more of a PSA or PBS look at how disease is spread. We learn, for example, that the average person touches their face three to five times every minute.

Other than Damon and his teenage daughter Jory (Anna Jacoby-Heron), and perhaps Winslet's dedicated epidemic intelligence officer, I wasn't too emotionally involved with any of the characters. It could be that I was numbed by the potential deaths of a billion people and the potential loss of some of the main characters lacked some personal impact. There wasn't much in the dramatic tension department either. The only thing "scary" was the simple cause of the outbreak and its complete randomness.

I'm not sure the filmmakers achieved their desired goal – scaring everyone into thinking about how vulnerable we are. Seeing a wellknown actress staring blankly as a saw cuts a flap of her scalp which then folds over her dead eyes shouldn't elicit laughter, but that was the case.

Steven Spielberg convinced me a long time ago not to swim in the ocean, and I almost never approach a big guy with a machete wearing a hockey mask. (At least until there are girls taking a shower.) But scaring me into getting a flu shot that became available this week – Coincidence? – I don't know.

to live by Local vertice the run

I believe things happen for a reason. Sometimes we may not know what those reasons are, but that does not mean the reasons do not exist.

A prospective interviewee for this column informed me late last week that he needed to reschedule. With other pressing responsibilities on Friday, there was no time to find a replacement interviewee.

That was probably a good thing, because perhaps the underlying reason for the cancellation was to give me the opportunity to write about something else.

You see, just like many others around the world, I also watched the memorial ceremonies on the 10th anniversary of the horrific attacks on Sept. 11, 2001, hereafter referred to as "9/11."

Some people thought the news coverage was overkill.

One guy posted on Facebook that he would stay off the social site until "all the flag-waving died down." (Ironically, he was back on a few hours later, "needing" a game piece for something or other.)

Others said the news coverage was cathartic.

In the political science class I teach on Saturday mornings at the Doña Ana Community College East Mesa campus, I asked my students to recall what they were doing on that sad day 10 years ago, how they felt about the increased level of security now in the U.S. as a result of 9/11 and if they felt the past 10 years have united or divided us as Americans.

One of the students in the class was working in Washington, D.C., at the time the Pentagon was attacked.

Two other students said the events of that day were the impetus for them to join the military. Their papers were amazing.

And that brings me to the crux of this article.

The events of 9/11 not only reflect the importance of our nation's military and law enforcement, but also spotlight the importance of having trained professionals in the growing arena of health care.

The need to have trained doctors, nurses and other medical personnel was evident.

As plumes of smoke billowed into the sky from the World Trade Center creating environmental health problems, the need for trained public health specialists was underscored.

As individuals and families dealt with loss, grief, hurt and heartache, the spotlight shone on the need for trained social workers, too.

Social workers, public health specialists and nurses have had a long history of responding to other emergencies as well.

A few years after 9/11, these experts arrived in New Orleans by plane, train, bus and car, ready to help the people whose homes and livelihoods were See Reasons on page D4

Local volunteers rock the runway for a cause

By Charlotte Tallman For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Seven continents of style will be making an impact for the March of Dimes during the fifth Annual High Heels for High Hopes Runway Style Show.

This year, four salons, 21 fashionable women with big hearts and host Steve Chavira will take the stage Friday, Nov. 18, at the Las Cruces Convention Center, 680 E. University Ave., to bring hope to babies born prematurely, like Nathon Lerma, this year's March of Dimes New Mexico Ambassador.

Nathon's mom, Melissa Pacheco, was only 28 weeks along in her pregnancy with twins, and on Nov. 1, 2006, "I moved over in bed and my water broke," Pacheco said.

"Contractions started and they tried really hard to stop them. On Nov, 5, the contractions started again and this time they wouldn't stop."

At 7 a.m. Nov. 6, 2006, Anthony Lerma was born by cesarean section, and one hour later, his twin, Nathon, was brought into the world the same way.

"Both were breathing and crying normally," Pacheco said, but soon doctors realized something was wrong. "I had no idea what was going on until I was in recovery, and instead of the doctor coming in to give me the news that my boys were amazingly well, he told me of my son's life-threatening condition."

Both boys were in the Neonatal Intensive Care Unit (NICU), and Pacheco could not see them.

Nathon was born with a diaphragmatic hernia and had surgery at 4 days old. Throughout his young life, he has experienced medical technology, treatment and preventive measures including NICU technology, intravenous feeding, medication and multiple surgeries – many

Old medicine in a new world

Using acupuncture to restore your 'chi' By Rachel Christiansen

as Cruces Bulletin

Anytime the word "needles" is mentioned, more than likely someone in the room will cringe.

Those who are used to the modern, Western medicinal traditions are conditioned at an early age to fear those doctor visits where shots are involved. Anyone who has had a rough time getting the kids to the doctor's office for routine shots could tell you this is true.

Needles are not all bad, however, and not all of them cause pain.

On the contrary, acupuncture is a practice actively sought throughout the world to cure hundreds of different pains and illnesses, using – yes – needles.

Acupuncture is an ancient form of Chinese medicine that focuses on energy channels throughout the body called meridians to restore one's chi (pronounced "chee").

Chi is considered the vital living force that See Acupuncture on page D4 devastated by Hurricane Katrina.

This year, they have responded to problems caused by hurricanes, tornadoes, drought and other natural disasters, as well as the everyday needs of people and families. And as new medicine helps people live longer, the need for nurses, public health professionals and social workers continues to grow. Fortunately, New Mexico State University is helping to meet the needs of our various populations. In the College of Health and Social Services, a student can earn an undergraduate or graduate degree in the fields of nursing, community and public health and social work.

As someone who has worked in this college for only a few short years, I am grateful for the opportunity to work with and know many dynamic people in each of these fields.

I also am grateful for the support and assistance provided to this college by the upper administration at NMSU as well as by many community organizations and individuals. Thanksgiving may be two months away, but I'm proud to say "Thank you" now. And that is the reason for this article.

separates the living from the dead.

According to the Chinese doctrine, there are 14 meridians, or energy channels, coursing through the head, arms, hands, legs, feet, torso and internal organs, which directly affect a person's chi.

Any imbalance within the meridians can cause a disruption to one's chi, and acupunc-turists use specific "acupoints" to stimulate healing.

Many acupuncturists choose to focus on techniques that give them a specific expertise on certain areas of the body.

things that were possible thanks to March of Dimes research.

"Nathon has had so many treatments and technologies used in order to survive, and the majority have been researched by the March of Dimes," Pacheco said. "The March of Dimes provides so many new ideas, some of which saved my son's life."

Nathon, now 4 years old, loves playing T-ball, swimming, playing video games and spending time with his family.

In August, Pacheco and Nathon shared their story with High Heels for High Hopes models and salon owners at MountainView Regional Medical Center, where they toured the labor and delivery unit and the special care nursery.

"Babies born at 32 weeks can now receive care at both MountainView Regional Medical Center and Memorial Medical Center, instead of going to El Paso or Albuquerque," said March of Dimes Division Director Becky Horner.

Horner said the community is also working toward its own Level III neonatal intensive care services to keep more babies who need intensive care "close to home."

Premature birth can happen to any woman, and about half of all early births happen for unknown reasons.

Many of these babies are so small, their lives hang in the balance, and many don't survive. Babies born even just a few weeks early are three times more likely to die before their first birthday than full-term babies. Others suffer lifelong consequences, like mental retardation, chronic lung disease and blindness.

Which is why March of Dimes is dedicated to the fight against premature birth, and through the High Heels for High Hopes campaign, community members can help.

Leading up to the Nov. 18 event - presented by MountainView Regional Medical Center, the Las Cruces Bulletin and Radio of Las Cruces - an elite group of outstanding women in Doña Ana County nominated for their active community service and leadership within the community and salons dedicated to ending premature birth, will raise funds that will ultimately support research, education and community service opportunities through the March of Dimes, an organization whose mission focuses on preventing birth defects, premature birth and infant death.

Community members can help by donating to one of the High Heels for High Hopes women, becoming a sponsor for the Nov. 18 runway show or purchasing tickets for the event.

months with having no signs of relief," Cornelius said. Cornelius said she has only had six acupuncture appointments and isn't "100 percent better" yet, but has already seen immense improvement.

'I'm scared to death of needles, but it's not bad at all. You don't feel them being put it or taken out, Cornelius said. "I've even fallen asleep during visits before."

Typically acupuncturists try to make the patient as comfortable as possible through playing peaceful music and creating an overall calm environment.

In addition to pain and discomfort, acupuncture is sought for a wide variety of ailments, including women's health, stress, anger, insomnia, alcohol and drug addictions and more. Cornelius said once she has completed her current therapy, she plans to continue acupuncture treatment to try and alleviate her allergy symptoms.

Her advice to those who might be nervous about the needles?

"I would tell them it isn't as bad as it seems. I never thought you would catch me getting acupuncture, but now I have no problem with it," Cornelius said.

Gibson began studying acupuncture since 2001 at the National Institute of Chinese Medicine in Albuquerque, and has been practicing as a licensed practitioner in 2005.

For more information on the benefits of acupuncture or for a free consultation, call Gibson at 202-1625.

The benefits of eating a plant-based diet

Which one's best for you?

Could we be turning the corner to becoming a healthier nation?

As obesity rates continue to rise across the country and health-related issues take center stage, everyone from health experts and government officials to the American public are becoming more conscious of the role diet plays – healthy or otherwise – in a person's overall well-being and how the effects of poor nutrition impact our nation's burgeoning health care costs.

Vegetarian versus vegan versus raw

As some Americans are making strides in eating healthier, a growing number of individuals are becoming increasingly aware of the health benefits of a plant-based diet and are changing the way they think about food and how they eat.

In another era, they may have been called vegetarians, but today's plant-based diets come with a number of options.

There's the vegetarian diet – which can be broken down into a variation of sub-categories, depending upon the specific foods consumed – the vegan diet and the raw food diet.

They all offer different food options, but all are rooted in plant-based foods, including fruits, vegetables, nuts, seeds and legumes.

The vegetarian diet omits the consumption of meat and sometimes dairy products, eggs, fish and seafood depending upon the individual's own preference and personal beliefs.

The vegan diet takes the vegetarian diet a few steps further, cutting out all forms of meat, fish, seafood, eggs and dairy.

Becoming increasingly popular in recent years, especially with the endorsement of Hollywood celebrities is the raw foods diet, which concentrates on the consumption of uncooked, unprocessed and often organic foods.

Foods are either unheated or cooked to a temperature below 104 degrees, with the belief that foods cooked at higher temperature lose much of their nutritional value. Although some raw foodies include raw meat products in their diets, the raw vegan diet is most common.

Health benefits of plant-based diets

All plant-based diets are believed to share a number of health benefits, including a healthier heart, reduced risk of certain cancers and chronic disease, glowing skin, a leaner body mass and increased energy.

Since individuals consuming plant-based diets generally eat more nuts, heart health is often increased.

The "good" fats found in nuts – monosaturated and polyunsaturated – help lower LDL or "bad" cholesterol levels, keeping arteries clear. Nuts also are a good source of omega-3 fatty acids, fiber and vitamin E, all found to be beneficial to a healthy heart.

Fruits and vegetables are high in fiber, which is not only good for your heart but also helps to flush toxins from the body, contributing to healthy skin.

Plus, fruits and vegetables are rich in vitamins A and E, also considered to be good for glowing skin.

Antioxidants – which destroy free radicals and help prevent certain diseases – are another health benefit to the plant-based diet.

Consuming fruits and vegetables provides added vitamin C and vitamin E, two strong antioxidants.

"There are so many health benefits achieved by incorporating more fruits and vegetables into your diet," says Anne Thacker, a registered dietician and recipe development manager at Vita-Mix Corporation, the nutritionally focused manufacturer of high-performance blenders.

"Whether you plan to focus on a plantbased diet or simply aim to make a few healthy changes, adding more fruits and vegetables to your list will reap many healthy rewards in the long term," Thacker said.

'Strut Your Mutt Across America' comes to town

Local animal programs benefit from dog walk

By Rachel Christiansen

Whether waiting at the door with a leash in its mouth or just giving that sad, forlorn look, chances are your pup makes sure you know – and feel guilty – about putting off that walk. Alas, a chance to redeem yourself in the eyes of your furry friend is here, with the inaugural Strut Your Mutt event from 8:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 17, at Young Park, 1905 E. Nevada Ave.

The Best Friends Animal Society, a "no-kill" sanctuary in Kenab, Utah, started "Strut Your Mutt Across America" as a way for animal programs throughout the country to fundraise for their cause.

All proceeds of the event go to benefit the Spay/Neuter Action Program (SNAP) and the Doña Ana County Humane Society (DACHS) emergency vet relief fund.

SNAP board member Shannon Murray said dogwalks have been very successful in cities throughout the country, including Albuquerque, and it is time for Las Cruces to step up to the plate.

"You know it's just such a fun day, hopefully we will see more of these to come," Murray said.

The day's lineup includes food, face painting, a jumping balloon, dog adoptions and "Poochie Cones" from Caliche's.

SNAP aims to control animal overpopulation and the number of homeless animals within Doña Ana County by offering low-cost spays and neuters to those who would otherwise be unable to afford such vet costs.

According to the Animal Services Center of the Mesilla Valley, in 2010, the intake of homeless animals in Doña Ana was more than 14,000, and of those, more than 8,000 were euthanized.

"It's a serious problem," Murray said.

Since the beginning of the year, SNAP has facilitated 803 spay/neuter surgeries, and the DACHS emergency vet relief fund has helped 50 animals recover at a cost that owners would otherwise not have been able to afford.

For those who don't have a dog but would like to keep one company for the day, dogs of all shapes and sizes in need of a good stroll will be available to "rent" for $5.

Murray said she hopes there will be some good "bonding" resulting from the rental program, and if that be the case, the rental fee will be taken off the adoption fee.

Cat people are also encouraged to attend, Murray said, as the proceeds benefit causes that help both cats and dogs.

"If people want to wear a button with a picture of their cat on it and rent a dog to walk, that's fine with us," Murray said.

Adoption fees are $75 and include the first set of vaccinations, a spay/neuter and a microchip. Microchipping will also be available during the event.

Tickets are $15 for adults, $5 for children 12 and under and $50 for a team of five. The first 75 people through the gates will also receive a free T-shirt.

Modern-day orthopedics for animals Keeping them in shape is best method of prevention

Strong bones, joints, ligaments and muscles are vital to healthy movement and a healthy lifestyle in animals.

When these functions go awry in a pet due to unhealthy habits or unfortunate circumstances, a pet's quality of life can still be sustained due to the modern-day procedures of orthopedics in veterinary medicine.

Dr. Sharon Kerwin, professor at the Texas A&M College of Veterinary Medicine & Biomedical Sciences (CVM) and a specialist in orthopedics and neurosurgery, said orthopedic procedures in animals are much more advanced than most people are aware.

"We perform many of the same types of procedures that are available for treatment of similar problems in humans, with the goal of getting the injured animal back to normal activities as quickly and comfortably as possible," Kerwin explains. "Advances in anesthesia, implant technology, pain control and physical rehabilitation have made this a great time to access top quality care for animals with injury or disease of the bones and joints."

Kerwin said two of the most common problems she sees in dogs and cats are cranial cruciate ligament disease (similar to an ACL tear in humans) and hip dysplasia.

Twenty years ago, affected patients of these problems would have resulted in cases of crippling osteoarthritis.

Fortunately, with today's modern conveniences and knowledgeable specialists, these patients may enjoy full recoveries. Preventive measures are always important for owners to keep in mind, and there are many that may help alleviate future orthopedic diseases. Kerwin suggests the best thing pet owners can do to prevent many diseases is to keep your pet healthy and in shape. This will not only help ease orthopedic diseases, but it will help in all aspects of a pet's livelihood.

"Research in dogs indicates that dogs kept in an appropriate body condition will live two years longer than their overweight counterparts, which is a very long time in dog years," Kerwin said. "In addition, their risk for osteoarthritis is much lower."

Kerwin also pointed out the necessary environmental precautions an owner can take on a daily basis.

Such as, allowing your "trained" dog to ride in the back of the truck may result in a tragic accident or even death. Always keep your pet on a leash in an unfamiliar environment to keep them out of harm's way. If you have a house cat, ensure that all of the furniture is secured to the wall and will not fall in case your cat likes to explore.

Bring out the cowboy boots and hats for a good cause C4CR fundraising events kicks off October

By Marvin Tessneer

This year, Cowboys for Cancer Research will hold its dinner, dance and silent auction Friday, Oct. 7, at the Las Cruces Convention Center, 680 E. University Ave., to celebrate the 29th anniversary of the fundraiser.

The C4CR fundraiser was started by Rawley Jackson and the U.S. West Telephone-Sunshine Club, to honor the memory of Alma Cohorn, who died of cancer in 1981.

The dance will feature the Delk Band of the Gully Jumpers tradition, which was organized by Joe Delk's father, the late Forrest Delk.

The fundraiser also will feature the second annual "Stewards of the Saddle" traveling trophy to the highest bidder at a live auction, which will allow the winner to display the saddle and have "bragging rights," for one year, said co-executive directors Denny and Geraldine Calhoun.

Each year, the saddle is returned to C4CR in exchange for a custommade trophy belt buckle.

Last year's winners were Brett and Dena Parkey who won with a $5,000 contribution.

The hand-tooled miniature saddle was made by David Porter of The Tanned Calf. Also being offered at live auction will be an original "Shoofly" pencil drawing.

The annual team roping will be conducted at 8 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 8, and 8 a.m. Sunday, Oct. 9, at the Sproul Arena north of Las Cruces on Harvey Farm Road.

The C4CR team roping is the largest cancer fundraiser roping event in New Mexico, and all of the money is kept in New Mexico for cancer research.

Teams from across the country compete for cash from entry fees and donated prizes.

Team roping requires strong coordination of the header and heeler ropers as well as the horses.

After the steer is released from the chute, the header ropes and turns the running steer, allowing the heeler to rope the rear legs.

Once this is accomplished, the flag is dropped, and the clock is stopped. The action is timed in decimals of seconds.

The fastest time on four heads is the winner. A trophy trailer will be given to the highpoint draw pot winner of the roping.

Money contributed by C4CR is placed in the Alma Cohorn Memorial/Cowboys for Cancer Research Endowment at the University of New Mexico Cancer Center and the recently established Cowboys for Cancer Research Endowed Fund at New Mexico State University.

The UNM endowment has reached $1.7 million in the past 12 years, and only the spendable portion of the interest is used to fund cancer research. The NMSU endowment is currently $275,000, with a pledge of $1.5 million over the next seven years.

The UNM Cancer Center's symbol El Oso Sanador, the healing bear, is an Indian symbol meaning "to serve those whose lives have been touched by cancer with strength, courage, grace and great ability," Denny Calhoun said.

Last year, the UNM Cancer Center, which is a National Cancer Institute-Designated Center, saw more than 15,000 patients for clinical trials, technology and examinations by oncologists.

Funding is also marked for research at NMSU where Jeffrey Arterburn is conducting studies on what is identified as a protein receptor, which shows how cancer cells grow and can be used in the diagnosis and treatment of breast cancer.

This event is enjoyed by all with a weekend of family fun, fellowship and support of a good cause.

The New Mexico State Aggies Are Tough Enough to Wear Pink partners with C4CR to support these endowments.

The C4CR is a 501(c)3 non-profit organization.

Denny Calhoun rides his horse before the start of the 2010 Cowboys for Cancer Research team roping at the Sproul Arena on Harvey Farm Road.

Southwest-styled home takes advantage of area's attractions

By Beth Sitzler Las Cruces Bulletin

Whether hosting family dinners during the holidays or backyard barbecues in the summer, a home should be a welcoming place to gather friends and loved ones.

This inviting feeling of entertainment was one of the characteristics Fernando and Kelly Lopez have captured in their home at 8175 Constitution Road.

"It's a great entertainment house," Kelly Lopez said. "We're both very social people, and this house has a lot of open space. ... We've been able to fit a jazz band in here."

Built in 2005 in the gated Coronado Ridge Subdivision, the 3,168-square-foot home combines a Southwest style with Mediterranean elements, creating a unique location atop Picacho Hills Drive.

Rock landscaping sprinkled in native plants around a stone-lined natural arroyo decorate the front of the home. Crosshatched double wood doors enclose the front courtyard. Slate tile encases the path and leads to a covered patio. A fountain resides on one side of the path as do several small plants.

Inside, a mosaic of ceramic tile accents the entrance. To the right of the welcoming area is a hall that leads to two guest bedrooms. Each containing a walk-in closet, the two rooms are joined by a Jack and Jill bathroom. The bathroom includes bright red sink bowls imported from Mexico and deep blue lights, all of which complement the colorfully speckled solid surface countertop.

One of the bedrooms includes access to a private patio located behind a tall wall. Realtor C.J. Pierce of Steinborn & Associates Real Estate, who represents the listing, said the patio is a great place to escape for a moment of peace.

At the center of the home is the living room. With three points of entry, which are decorated in carved spiral columns, Pierce said the space is a comfortable gathering place for party guests.

The room features a 12-foot-high ceiling covered in vigas and planks laid in a tongue-and-groove pattern, as well as a large, custom-made, built-in entertainment center. The gem of the area, however, is the fireplace. Drenched in faux stacked-stone detailing, the fireplace is nestled against a brightly colored wall of deep red and goldish orange.

"All of the colors were the same, so I thought it would be fun to experiment with paint," said Lopez, adding that she is constantly repainting the nichos and accent walls to give them new flair. "It's our own unique touch."

> G It's a great entertainment house. We're both very social people, and this house has a lot of open space.

Beside the living room are the kitchen and dining area. Soapstone countertops can be found in the kitchen. A creamy tile backsplash contrasts the darkly colored stone. Underneath the skylight, adorned with a checkered pattern, is the oversized island. Designed for function in addition to style, the island is covered in wood, like a chopping block. A hall from the kitchen leads to the at-home office - which is also accessed from the entrance - and continues to the three-car garage.

Back at the shared living space, the dining room overlooks the spacious backyard and view of the Organ Mountains. The space also includes a wet bar. Perfect for those nights of entertaining, Pierce said the bar includes the same soapstone countertop found in the kitchen.

Past the dining room is the master suite. The large space includes a built-in entertainment center with a small fireplace. The room, which has a door to the back patio, transitions into the relaxing bathroom. Copper sinks encased in soapstone countertops are nestled beside custom-made stacked cabinets. A jetted bathtub finishes the room.

The living space of the home continues outside to the covered patio and backyard the couple's favorite space, Lopez said.

"We spend almost every night out here, enjoying the view and the peace and quiet," she said, adding that in addition to admiring the Organ Mountains, they can also take in the city lights.

Made up of several seating areas, the covered patio features a built-in grill recently covered in faux-stacked stone, surround-sound speakers, slate tile and a fireplace.

"In the winter, we'll sit out here around the fire," Lopez said.

Beside the fireplace is the entrance to the private casita with bathroom.

"It's nice to have this for guests," Lopez said. "It's like they have their own villa.

Outside of the casita is an outdoor shower, great for washing off after a dip in the lagoonshaped swimming pool. Measuring 6 feet at its deepest end, the pool includes an attached spa.

While the home offers plenty of amenities, Lopez said the location in the Coronado Ridge subdivision is also ideal.

"It's actually a little community," she said. "People get together, and we have street parties. We're neighbors who take care of each other. Whenever someone new moves in, we throw them a party."

In addition to the friendly atmosphere, Lopez said the home is close to the Picacho Hills Country Club, which offers social interaction, golfing and "the best restaurant in Homes & Southwest Living | E3

What's that?

Misconceptions surround centipedes and millipedes

Scott Svenheim ACE Pest Detective

Centipedes and millipedes always seem to get lumped together into one group of critters, however, they each belong to their own class within the Subphyllum Myriapoda – they are not insects.

When you think of these creatures, you may think of the caterpillar in Alice in Wonderland or thousands of fast-moving legs. Some people think millipedes have 1,000 legs and that centipedes are slow-moving garden eaters, but those misconceptions couldn't be further from the truth.

While there is a millipede species called the Illacme Plenipes, which is known to have up to 750 legs, this is rare. A millipede can have anywhere from 36 to about 460 legs, while a centipede is similar with about 20 to 300 legs. The big difference between the two groups is that a millipede has two pairs of legs per body segment while a centipede has a single pair of legs per segment.

Centipedes can range from 3/8 inch to 10.5 inches (worldwide), and they're fast movers. Centipedes are really beneficial, in that they eat other insects that are more of a nuisance to us. Still, their venomous claws can deliver a sting or a pinch, which can cause swelling. For most people, that's the extent of it. This "bite" can be more dangerous for children and those who are allergic to the venom.

The slow-moving millipede ranges from a 1/8 inch to the largest in the U.S., 6 1/4 inches. They're usually the bug curled in a tight little ball as it protects itself in the moist soil of a garden. They feed on slightly decayed vegetation and are essentially harmless since they will rarely bite.

Both critters are seen in and around gardens. As temperatures start to drop in the upcoming weeks, they may look for a warm, moist spot in your home and or garage. Millipedes seldom need to be controlled since they don't cause any damage indoors and don't pose a health hazard. Those that stray indoors can be swept out or picked up with a vacuum cleaner.

Left, despite its name, the millipede has between 36 and 420 legs. Right, the pesky centipede can sting humans and leave them red and puffy.

On the other hand, centipedes can become a nuisance in the home because of their bite or sting. They're also hard to catch and get rid of because they're so quick. Tips to help keep them outside include:

- Relocate firewood, compost, boards, rock piles, landscaping materials and other attractive centipede hideaways if they are stored near the walls and foundations of your home.
- Check your foundations, walls, windows and doorways for cracks, crevices or other openings that might serve as a point of entry for centipedes.
- · Block passageways with caulk, weatherstripping or other filling materials.

BIA-SNM members listen to the ups and downs to be expected

By Beth Sitzler

As many Las Crucens wonder where the local, state and national economies are headed, New Mexico State University economics professor Chris Erickson outlined what could be expected during the Building Industry Association of Southern New Mexico luncheon Thursday, Sept. 8.

Erickson began the presentation by explaining that a natural business cycle sees dips and peaks. The type of recession the nation recently dealt with, which lasted 20 months, has been experienced around the world about 40 times, he said.

"It's twice as long and twice as deep as a typical recession," he said, adding that the United States hasn't experienced one like this since the Great Depression.

While some areas were hit drastically, Erickson said New Mexico was slow getting into the recession and has been choppy coming out of it.

"Las Cruces has been doing better than the state as a whole, and the state has been doing better than the nation," he said.

He said this is because the city has a small goods-production sector, which is more sensitive to the economy, and has a large government sector, thanks to NMSU, the school district and White Sand Missile Range.

Erickson said it has been difficult for the state to recover because the national laboratories have been hit and may not receive their planned budget increases. Also, military projects in the state – which included bringing in more troops and civilian employees to Fort Bliss – are now done.

"It was estimated that the expansion added 1 percent to the economy per year for five years," he said.

A sector hit throughout the nation, including in New Mexico and Las Cruces, is real estate, which has seen a steep decline in housing prices and is currently at a historic low. Once again, he said the city is doing better than the state and the state is doing better than the nation, especially when it comes to foreclosures.

"One in 611 homes in the nation are foreclosed upon, while one in 1,000 homes in Doña Ana County are and one in 1,488 in Las Cruces are," he said, adding that Santa Teresa has been hit harder with one in about 720 homes being foreclosed upon.

There are some good signs for things to come, however. One plus, Erickson told BIA-SNM members, is that the state budget is doing well, and there won't have to be drastic cuts as there were in the last few years.

Also, he said statistics have shown that citizens are spending more than they have in recent years.

"The economy is better than it was right off the recession, but it still isn't doing as well as it was prior to the recession," he said.

Erickson said the city, state and nation will see a few problems as things move forward. He predicts that there will be a "shift down" of 1 to 2 percent below output levels prior to the economic crisis. This will make job creation difficult, he said, and can cause inflation.

Another possible problem is policy uncertainty. Outcomes from things such as health care reform and high debt in Greece, other parts of Europe and the U.S. could drastically affect the state of the economy.

Shuffle your space

As needs change, so to should your rooms

Maureen Villmer Practical Design

Have you ever thought about changing how you use the space in your home?

Recently, I worked with a client who no longer needed a guest room. All the family lived in town, and guests just weren't staying. At the same time, the needs for their children were growing. As their life cycle was changing, so was their need in how the rooms were being used (or not used). This started a "chain reaction" in which we changed the use of several spaces in the home.

A toy room/playroom was made out of what had been a guestroom; an office was turned into a children's bedroom; a home office was put into an alcove in a master bedroom; a den has been made out of the old children's bedroom.

Remember, it is just space. How you use it and arrange furniture in it makes for improved living and increased usable space in your home. I have only had compliments on how much better life is with the changes. All we did is reshuffle the space. Try it – you may like it. All it takes is a little imagination, good floor plans and the insight to see the future of how your home and its space can be used.

As your life cycle changes, so do your needs in a home. Parents with young children have different needs than empty nesters or retirees. Analyze your space with your lifestyle. Ask yourself, how often is this room used? If your answer is very seldom, perhaps you should analyze what additional space you need and how you can use the space in your home appropriately. Whatever the changes, they may simply require moving furniture and perhaps a little painting. In some cases, it may require more work such as changing flooring or electrical outlets to accommodate the movement of televisions, etc.

A new trend is the "man cave." Space can be shuffled in a garage to make into a sports-themed area with a game table for cards, darts, flat screen TV, pinball games or whatever you need in your man cave. You may lose a garage, but you can gain a lot of fun and family activity in your home. Don't skimp on flooring, bar area or kitchen space in this man cave. HGTV can give us some unrealistic expectations of how long a project will take and how much it will cost. In a halfhour show, we see it from beginning to end, and it really doesn't show the time and work that has to be put into it. As I always share with my clients, the most important part of any project is the planning stage. On TV we see decorator meeting with a new client one time, and a week later the designer shows up with a complete plan. They often give the appearance that the actual work is done in a matter of a couple of days. Of course that's the way it happens ... it's television.

Whatever

the changes, they may simply require moving furniture and perhaps a little paint.

If you work through your decisionmaking process properly and establish an overall plan of how to use your space, you will no doubt be pleased with the outcome in the long run. In real life, planning and designing even one room can take months or more. Why? Because good design takes time. It may take weeks or longer to really solidify plans for your room or rooms. New furniture may need to be ordered, recovered or re-painted. Custom or special-ordered furniture can take up to eight weeks to be delivered. Custom drapery can take four to six weeks for completion.

In the meantime, there are other workers who must be scheduled, including flooring installers, painters, carpenters and/or electricians.

Have fun in shuffling your space or adding new space to your home without adding on. I think you will find it very satisfying and you will find new space within your "old" home.

We don't

JIMMIE WILLIAMS,

MVHFH volunteer children ...

By Beth Sitzler Las Cruces Bulletin

For Mesilla Valley Habitat for Humanity (MVHFH) volunteers Jimmie Williams and Theodore Jones, their work begins well before the October start of the build season.

That's because for the last five years the duo has worked to pre-build important items of the homes, such as door and window frames, trim and beams.

"It saves a lot of lumber and time," Jones said.

"We just want to make it as easy as possible for them," Williams said.

A Durham, N.C., native, Williams came to southern New Mexico and Las Cruces for White Sands Missile Range, where he worked for the Department of Defense, the Army and the Air Force in logistics and security as well as intelligence.

"It was a fun job, for the most part – that is until they sent me to the Sahara Desert," he laughed.

Retiring after working with WSMR for "41 years and six months," Williams said he wanted to spend his time helping those around him.

"Life has been good," he said. "In April 1993, instead of becoming a couch potato, I said that I was going to help my community."

Coming from a family of master carpenters, Williams said since the age of 4, he has helped his grandfather at his workbench. At 14 years old he worked with his father building houses for returning World War II veterans. When looking for an organization to help, he decided to use this knowledge to help MVHFH.

Originally from St. Louis, Jones said he has lived in southern New Mexico for 50 years. After a spell in Deming, his wife's hometown, he moved to California shortly before returning to New Mexico and this time Las Cruces.

Working for the Las Cruces Fire Department for 10 years and as a customer service representative for Truck Stops of America for 18 years, Jones said he also had some experience in homebuilding. When he was younger, his stepfather was into home construction and remodeling and showed him "a thing or two." These skills would come in handy after retirement, when he began to look for a new way to pass the time.

"I wanted something to do," he said. "I went down (to the MVHFH office) and asked about volunteering."

Joining the MVHFH network of volunteers in 2000, Jones met Williams and the two struck up a friendship. Although both would spend hours climbing ladders, tiling floors, hanging mirrors and doing whatever other task was asked of them, they said they wanted to do more.

"We were sitting around talking, and we figured we could save those Care-a-Vanners and those who worked on the houses time if we did some of this work upfront," Williams said.

Taking on the task of pre-building, Williams said they save MVHFH volunteers about two days of work that would otherwise have to be completed onsite. It's not as simple as cutting and nailing pieces of wood together, however.

Beginning about a month before construction on a home is kicked off, Williams and Jones review its floor plan and make a shopping list for everything they will need for each door, window and other structural elements.

When they have their materials in hand, the duo works five to six hours Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays measuring, cutting and assembling the pieces.

"One home takes us about three days – four with shopping," said Jones, adding that they pre-built materials for six homes the last build season.

This year, Williams said all of the elements must be completed before the Oct. 10 framing date. Everything must be built perfectly squared with the blue prints and labeled accordingly so the volunteers can easily match up everything.

While Jones and Williams are currently

An important part of the pre-building process is reviewing the floor plans, as Williams is doing. The duo have pre-built MVHFH homes for the last five years, saving volunteers about two days of work per home.

Las Cruces Bulletin photos by Beth Sitzler Jimmie Williams watches as friend and fellow Mesilla Valley Habitat for Humanity volunteer Theodore Jones cuts wood to pre-build window and door frames.

pre-building only one home, which will be located on Calle Bella in the Mesa Grande Drive area, they said they hope to do five more for the 2011-12 build season.

Even when the pre-building is completed, their work will not be done.

"After we're finished, we'll ask the construction supervisor if they need any help onsite," Williams said. "We're just available to help."

"They are such an integral part of what we do," said MVHFH Executive Director Ed Johnson. "Their quality and their craftsmanship, they save us so much time. They do so much and they do anything to help us."

The long hours in the workshop and on the construction site are worth it, the duo said, because it helps children who have no control over their living situations.

"When you have a child come up to you and you're in the process of building their home and the child says, 'This is going to be my bedroom,' that's my payment," Jones said. "For a young child, it's outstanding to have their own bedroom."

"We don't do this for any sort of pay, we do this for the children – and we have a whole lot of fun while we do it," Williams said.

In addition to helping the community and a nonprofit dear to their hearts, pre-building allows the two friends to spend time together, enjoying one another's company and creating things as a team.

"There is nobody else I'd like to work with than Jimmie," Jones said. "We just click."

Antix celebrates 35 years

Focus on relationships, not just cabinets and countertops

By Beth Sitzler Las Cruces Bulletin

In April 1977, after coming to the City of the Crosses, Tony Harris began Antix, a cabinet, casework and countertop company.

While he may not have known it at the time, that one-man operation in Mesilla Park would someday grow into a community staple celebrating 35 years of business.

"I always wanted to feel that my business was an integral part of the community," he said. "Being accepted – that to me is the most satisfying thing."

Harris said when he first began Antix, he had dreams of making handcrafted furniture.

"But I realized that I needed to be in Santa Fe for that to be viable," he said. "So I shifted to residential cabinets."

Harris said he found his niche focusing on three elements – cabinets for residences; casework, which is industry-strength cabinetry for commercial operations; and countertops, which range from Formica to solid surfaces, such as quartz and other engineered stones.

Within five years, he said the company expanded and outgrew its location. He moved the business in 1982 to 717 W. Organ Ave. and created a showroom in the front area of the building.

"It's a nice, cozy showroom," he said. "People say it feels warm and welcoming."

Antix designs kitchens that are stylish, functional and, most importantly, fit the homeowner's wants and needs.

Las Cruces Bulletin

The staff of Antix has contributed to the business' success, including Marty Peña, Rick Hernandez and Gilbert Sanchez. Not pictured are Oscar Segobia and Jesus Sanchez.

Harris also hired a staff, which now comprises of office manager Joyce DeLanoy, countertop and commercial casework specialist Luis Mendez and a crew of five installers.

"If we had a slogan, it would be to do it right the first time," Harris said. "We don't cut corners, which will only create problems in the future."

Focusing on customer service, Harris said his team has also been able to keep up to date on the changing times throughout the several years of business.

"Customers are much more cost-conscious," Harris said. "With all of the prices and providers out there, it's harder to maintain brand loyalty. Price is such a sensitive thing."

In addition to being more aware of price, he said homeowners are becoming more educated on what is available, thanks to the Internet, which has opened up the industry.

"Over the years, there has been an explosion of so many choices," said Harris, adding that this includes material, finish and style. "People get way overloaded with so much information, we try to narrow it down and try to help fit the person's likes and budget."

Doing the complete design of a space, Harris said they have seen several changes over the years, especially to kitchens. While 15 to 20 years ago, there was more emphasis on function, modern-day kitchens must also be stylish.

"There are a lot more elements to it," he said. "You can have staggered cabinets, some can be deeper and have molding. Appliance manufacturers have changed, too. You can get a dishwasher in a drawer now."

With such endless possibilities, Harris said it can be easy for a homeowner to get bogged down with options – which is where the staff at Antix come in.

"You're kind of a kitchen counselor," said Harris, explaining that his team uses the homeowner's ideas, wants and style to create a functional and unique space to fit them. "We take the things they want and integrate them into a design that works best for them. As professionals, we want to work with them to make a kitchen that is functional."

Harris said by being a local business, he and his team are able to offer more one-on-one services – including manufacturing items at its location – then larger out of state items at its location – than larger, out-of-state corporations.

<sup>w</sup>A lot of big-box companies can offer what we offer, but the end result is different," DeLanoy said.

"The biggest problem is getting a hold of people at those places," Harris said. "They have high turnover and lack product knowledge. We have knowledge and experience – we've been doing this a long time.

"We're here for the long haul. We're here because we've earned a reputation of quality."

Working in both the residential and commercial sectors, Harris said since the economic decline, they have managed to receive contract to several commercial projects, including the magistrate courthouse, New Mexico State University and its branch campuses, The Power Center, Holloman Air Force Base and the White Sands Federal Credit Union branches on Lohman Avenue and Main Street.

"We've done quite a range – minor projects to some major remodels," he said.

"With all of our employees, we have more than 100 years of combined experience," DeLanoy said.

To thank the community for its contribution to the success of the company, DeLanoy said they will hold an open house from 4 to 6 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 29.

"We're having it to reintroduce ourselves," she said. "We want to show how things have changed. Our showroom has been revamped and we have new product lines."

Not looking to slow down anytime soon, Harris said he and his team are constantly looking to expand what they offer, which includes new products, such as Showplace Renew, a line that provides cabinet refacing options.

"In business, you constantly have to make sure you're giving people what they want with both the products and price you offer," he said. "The need out there for what we are won't change. People need that more one-on-one treatment."

Ice cream utensil serves up more than cold treats

By Beth Sitzler

ruces Bulle

Whether you prefer chocolate, vanilla or strawberry, most people will agree on one thing - nothing beats a bowl of ice cream on a hot day

Despite the rough economy and the nation's shift to healthier eating habits, the ice cream industry still produced $9.7 million in 2010, with bulk and novelty ice creams being the most popular, followed by low- or nonfat ice cream and frozen yogurt, according to IBISWorld.com.

Along with a carton of your favorite flavor comes the challenge of serving it up. The hard, frozen food can be hard to penetrate, leaving you with a draw full of bent spoons. Luckily, in 1897, Alfred Cralle of Virginia created the ice cream scoop.

Thick in design, the ice cream scoop can cut through heavy, stiff materials. Modern-day ice cream scoops come in a variety of sizes and styles, including electric.

Although ice cream is considered a more suitable summertime treat, you can still get use out of the ice cream scoop during the winter off-season.

1. Scoop a perfect portion: When baking a batch of cookies or plateful of meatballs, recipes will call for the items to be uniform in size to allow for even cooking. A great way to ensure that you get the same-size ball every time is to use an ice cream scoop. The scoop will allow you to plop a perfectly portioned ball of meat or dough every time. Not only will this allow them to cook evenly, no one will argue about getting the bigger one.

2. Make butter balls: Placing a stick of margarine on a glass dish might be enough to please your family during dinner, but for those special occasions, why not fancy up your tabletop with butter balls? Using a small ice cream scoop or a melon baller, dig out individual portions of the condiment.

3. Get creative with sand: Although a tool typically used in the kitchen, the ice cream scoop can also be handy in the sandbox. Give it to the kids to dig in the dirt or create unique sand castles. This diverse tool will also be useful during that next family vacation to the beach.

4. Plant seeds: Getting the seeds in the ground can be half the battle of creating a vibrant garden. If planting a large number of items, make the job go by quicker with an ice cream scoop. Use the scoop to dig our perfectly sized holes in your plot of dirt. Not only will it help the process go faster, the ice cream scoop will also make the holes equal in size.

5. Repot a plant: The ice cream scoop can be beneficial to your houseplants as well. Repotting your plants can be a messy task that results in dirt scattered throughout your countertops and floors. Shovel potting soil into the container in a more controlled fashion with an ice cream scoop. When you're done, the scoop can be washed with soap and water and, hopefully, your work area will only need a quick wipe down.

6. Pre-scoop ice cream: As enjoyable as ice cream is, scooping it out of the container can be a pain. Straight out of the freezer, the hard dessert can be difficult to penetrate, leaving you with bent spoons and whining children. Avoid this by having pre-scooped ice cream on hand. Setting the ice cream on the countertop long enough to soften, grab your trusted ice cream scoop and ladle out the balled dessert onto a cookie sheet lined with wax paper. Be sure to leave space between each sphere. Place the sheet in the freezer to harden, then remove them from the paper and store in a sealed plastic bag. Now, whenever anyone wants a scoop or two, they can just pop them out of the bag.

7. Fill a muffin pan: The scent of Mom's blueberry muffins wafting through the home is probably a fond memory many people share. Cleaning the pan and the spills and drips that cover its surface probably isn't. Reduce the burnt-on mess by plopping the batter into each cup with an ice cream scoop.

This trick will make the task go by quicker and help you get uniform portions.

8. Frost cupcakes: Someone you know wins an award – give them a cupcake. Your child had a bad day at school – give them a cupcake. Your best friend gets a job out of state – give them a cupcake. With so many reasons to share a batch of cupcakes, you could spend hours in the kitchen baking and decorating them. Save yourself some time with an ice cream scoop. Use the scoop to plop on the right amount of frosting every time. A quick swipe of your frosting knife and they will be beautifully decorated in no time. This technique also works on regularsized cakes, you just may need a few more scoops.

9. Serve proper portions: According to a recent article published by MSN.com, portion sizes in America have grown almost double since the 1940s. This increase has had several impacts, especially on our waistlines. A good way to monitor how much you eat is by dishing up your meals using an ice cream scoop. A 4-ounce ice cream scoop is the right size for side dishes and is easy to use.

Get in the action, photographers Be in front of the lens with the bottle cap tripod

taking group photos - just think

By Beth Sitzler

Blurry, out-of-focus photographs can be an artistic choice - or the result of not having a tripod. Used for both still and motion photography, a tripod prevents the camera from moving. This is important during a long exposure when the slightest amount of shaking can affect the sharpness of an image.

A tripod is also useful when about how many times the poor photographer was left out because someone had to hold the camera and click the button. While there are various commercial-sold tripods available to fit any need - be it height or strength - resourceful photographers can turn just about anything into a tripod. Now, they have one more tool in their arsenal, the bottle cap tripod.

How to clean a point-and-shoot camera

A shaky hand isn't the only thing that can ruin your photographs - dirt and grime can also play a disastrous role. Cleaning your camera, however, isn't as easy as rubbing a little spit over the lens. To ensure that you don't scratch or damage anything, follow these tips provided by www.cnet.com.

- Use a small blower brush to remove dust and debris from the lens. Do not blow on the lens with your mouth. Not only do you run the risk of accidentally spraying the lens with saliva, but there are acids in our breath that can actually damage the lens coating.
- Put one or two drops of a lens-cleaning solution onto a lens tissue and wipe the lens in a circular motion starting from the center and moving out. Do not put the cleaning solution directly onto your lens. If you don't have lens tissue available, use a soft, lint-free cloth, such as a microfiber cloth.
- Carbon-based lens pens can also be used for cleaning the lens. They are very convenient because they have a soft brush on one end and a cleaning tip on the other end.

Cleaning the LCD display and camera body

- Wipe away dust and smudges with a dry microfiber cloth. Don't use your T-shirt or blow on it.
- For more stubborn spots, gently wipe the display or body with a lightly dampened microfiber cloth.
- Do not use alcohol or other abrasive solvents to clean any part of your camera.

What is it?

The bottle cap tripod is just as it sounds - a tripod that fits over the cap of your bottle. To be more exact, this pint-sized gadget has the capabilities to transform any regular bottle – whether it is of the plastic or glass variety – into a handy tripod.

Created from a soft rubber, the 'cap" of the gadget stretches over any standard-sized bottle top while the hard plastic top can hold a pointand-shoot camera. The hard plastic also pivots 15 degrees in any angle.

Great for travel or everyday use, the bottle cap tripod will allow photographers of any skill level to take clear photos. No longer will you have to awkwardly stretch out your arm to fit in the photo or sit behind the lens, missing out on the action. Thanks to the gadget and the self-timer, you can be in on the action.

How does it work?

The bottle cap tripod is easy to use. Simply screw any compact digital camera onto the universal mount and slip the rubber black cap over the bottle top.

Depending on the size and weight of the bottle and your camera, you may need to fill the liquid container. This will help weigh it down so it won't tip over and potentially damage your camera.

If you're using the tripod to take a group picture, set the timer according to the camera's instructions and get in front of the lens. If using it to take a long exposure, just press the shutter button and stand back.

When done, remove the bottle cap tripod and toss it into your bag or pocket.

Where can it be found?

The bottle cap tripod can be purchased from camera specialty stores and online at websites including www.dynomighty.com and http:// photojojo.com.

How much does it cost?

This pocket-sized gadget costs around $10. If you choose to purchase the item from the Internet, be sure to factor in the cost of shipping and handling as well as tax.

Some tailgate temptations

Football season never tasted better

Sunny Conley Chile Knights

Now that college football season is officially under way, it's time to unearth tailgate party recipes - and I've discovered several palate-pleasers that are easy to prepare and share. Some are tried and true; others are new.

Curry lovers will go for the All Red Dip prepared with red lentils and red chile whipped with sweet coconut milk. And what's a party without poppers? Give Pistol Pete's a try - each grilled "canoe" is loaded with three velvety cheeses: goat, cream and Parmesan. But there's more: Ham and Cheese Chipotle Deviled Eggs, Chipotle Spicy Wings, Suds and Cheese Dip and the Best BLT Chile Bites. Each offering is touchdown quality.

All Red Dip

1 cup red lentils

 $2 \frac{1}{2}$  cups water

1 tablespoon vegetable oil 1 cup onions, diced

 $1 \frac{1}{2}$  cups apples, peeled, cored and diced

- 3 garlic cloves, minced
- 1/4 cup raisins
- 1 teaspoon curry powder
- 1 chile de arbol, crushed
- 1 teaspoon garam masala
- 1/4 cup coconut milk
- 2 tablespoons fresh lemon juice

1/2 teaspoon salt

In a medium saucepan, bring the lentils and water to a boil. Lower the heat and simmer until the lentils are soft and most of the water is absorbed, about 20 minutes. Meanwhile, heat the oil in a skillet and sauté the onions, apples and garlic with a dash of salt for about 5 minutes on medium heat.

Add the raisins, curry powder, crushed chiles de arbol and the garam masala and continue to sauté for 10 minutes, or until tender. In a food processor or blender, purée the cooked lentils and sautéed onion mix with the coconut milk and lemon juice. Add the salt and adjust to taste. Can be served warm or chilled with rice crackers, bagel chips or fresh pineapple chunks. Makes 2 cups.

Pistol Pete's Poppers

1/2 cup (4 ounces) soft goat cheese 1/2 cup (4 ounces) low-fat cream cheese, softened

- 1/2 cup (2 ounces) grated fresh Parmesan cheese
- 1/2 cup cherry tomatoes, finely chopped and seeded
- 2 tablespoons green onions, thinly sliced 2 tablespoons fresh sage, chopped
- 1/2 teaspoon kosher salt

16 jalapeño peppers, halved lengthwise and seeded Cooking spray

2 tablespoons fresh cilantro, chopped

Prepare grill to medium-high heat. Combine first seven ingredients in a bowl, stirring well. Spoon about 2 teaspoons cheese mixture into each pepper half. Place pepper halves, cheese side up, on grill rack coated with cooking spray. Grill peppers 5 minutes or until bottoms of peppers are charred and cheese mixture is lightly browned. Carefully place peppers on a serving platter. Sprinkle with cilantro. (Recipe adapted from Cooking Light magazine, June 2009.)

Ham and Cheese Chipotle Deviled Eggs

- 12 hard-cooked eggs
- 1/4 cup mayonnaise
- 3 tablespoons chipotle pepper sauce
- 1 teaspoon prepared mustard
- 1/4 teaspoon hot pepper sauce
- 1 cup smoked ham, diced
- 1/2 cup shredded Cheddar cheese

Pinch paprika

Slice eggs in half lengthwise; remove yolks and set whites aside. In a small bowl, mash yolks. Stir in the mayonnaise, hot pepper sauce, ham, Cheddar, mustard and chipotle pepper sauce. Spoon mixture into egg whites. Sprinkle with paprika. Refrigerate until serving.

Suds and Cheese Dip

1 (12-ounce) bottle beer

- 8 ounces Cheddar cheese, shredded (2 cups)
- 3/4 cup mayonnaise
- 1/2 teaspoon chili powder
- 1/8 ground New Mexico red chile powder

In a medium pot on high heat, boil the beer about 5 minutes, or until reduced to 2 tablespoons. Add cheese, mayonnaise, chili powder and red pepper.

Reduce heat to medium low. Stir until cheese is melted and all ingredients are combined. Cool. Serve with tortilla chips, chilled veggies or baked potato fries. Makes about 2 cups.

Sweet-and-Spicy Chipotle Chicken Wings

- 1 (15-ounce) can tomato sauce
- 2 tablespoons butter

1/2 cup honey

- 1/4 cup chipotle-flavored hot sauce
- 1 tablespoon grated lime rind (about 3 limes)
- 3 tablespoons fresh lime juice
- 1/4 teaspoon ground red pepper
- 4 to 5 pounds chicken wings
- 1 tablespoon salt
- 1 teaspoon pepper
- 1 cup all-purpose flour
- Peanut or vegetable oil

Heat tomato sauce and butter in a small saucepan over medium heat, stirring until butter melts. Stir in honey and next four ingredients, and bring to a boil. Reduce heat, and simmer, stirring often, for 5 minutes. Set tomato sauce mixture aside.

Cut off wingtips, and discard. Cut wings in half at joint, if desired. Sprinkle wings evenly with salt and pepper; dredge lightly in flour, shaking off excess. Pour oil to a depth of 1 1/2 inches into a large, deep skillet or Dutch oven; heat oil to 375 degrees.

Fry the wings, in three batches for 8 minutes per batch or until golden and crispy. Remove wings from oil using a slotted spoon; drain on layers of paper towels. (Allow oil to return to 375 degrees before adding next batch of wings.)

All Red Dip adds spirit and plenty of pizzazz to tailgate parties.

Place wings in a large bowl. Drizzle with tomato sauce mixture, tossing well to coat. Let stand 5 minutes before serving. Makes 4 to 6 servings. (Recipe adapted from Southern Living magazine, August 2004.)

BLT Chile Bites

1 cup mayonnaise

- 1/2 cup dried tomatoes in oil, drained and chopped
- 1 serrano pepper, stemmed and minced
- 8 (10-inch) flour tortillas
- 1 large head iceberg lettuce, chopped
- 1 medium onion, thinly sliced (optional) 16 bacon slices, cooked and crumbled
- 1 teaspoon salt

1 teaspoon pepper

Combine mayonnaise, tomatoes and serrano in a small bowl. Spread evenly over one side of each tortilla, leaving a 1/2inch border.

Layer lettuce, onions and bacon evenly over tortillas; sprinkle with salt and pepper.

Roll up tortillas; cut in half diagonally, and secure with wooden pick. Makes 8 to 16 servings.
