State snafu hurts budget

Error makes school money scene grim

By Todd G. DicksonThe Las Cruces Bulletin

A calculation error by the state Public Education Department (PED) is going to make a tough budget picture for public schools in New Mexico even more bleak.

Las Cruces Public Schools Superintendent Stan Rounds said Tuesday, April

5, that he had previously promised employees who ended the school year in good standing with the district would have a job next year. But now, Rounds said he may have to take that back, meaning a reduction in force could be possible.

Rounds made the promise when it appeared the district would see about $10.5 million less from the state for the next school year than it currently has in its budget.

That's what both lawmakers and Rounds believed had been passed in the

But Rounds said Tuesday that he had just received word from PED that it had under-calculated the statewide total of units in the funding formula by 8,000. The state funds schools through a formula based on enrollment and educational needs. A student can be worth much more than a single unit depending on his or her age and needs. Units are multiplied against a value determined based on the appropriation from the Legislature.

Had the statewide unit count remained unchanged, the unit value would have come to a little more than $3,700. With the additional 8,000 units, however, the unit value will be less than $3,600, and Rounds said that will mean another $3 million less in the district's budget.

'This will be the most pressing budget we've ever built," the superintendent said. Rounds had been preparing to handle a reduction of some 230 positions See LCPS on page A23

Las Cruces bishop faces retirement

Ramirez finds home and family in the diocese he shaped

By Todd G. Dickson

One gets the sense that Las Cruces Roman Catholic Bishop Ricardo Ramirez isn't in a

But Canon Law will require him to submit a letter of resignation when he reaches the age of 75 on Sept. 12, even if his health is good, his mind still sharp and his heart devoted to the diocese he was charged with establishing nearly three decades ago.

That's because the Catholic Church holds his soul, since he was a youth in a small Texas town. In his letter to the Pope, Ramirez said he will write that he is "at your service."

Born to parents devoted to the church,

Ramirez said he has family roots to the area as his grandmother on his father's side was born in Las Cruces. Early on, the church called to him, he said.

'Once I became an altar boy, I became a church mouse," Ramirez said.

The first time his priest, Father Max Murphy, asked him to help serve Mass, Ramirez felt he had performed miserably, including spilling incense that burned a hole in the rug. After a couple of days avoiding the priest, Murphy caught Ramirez and asked him, "Where have you been? I need you all the time.'

"Now as I look back on that, it was a prophetic statement," Ramirez said. "Throughout my life, the church has always needed me." Ramirez said Murphy was his inspiration and he admired how he brought comfort to the sick, dying and grieving. But Ramirez also was under the false notion that only the smart and rich became priests.

Still, Ramirez attended a Catholic university in Houston, focusing on philosophy and liberal studies as he aspired to be a teacher. But he also felt the pull of the church – its sights, sounds and smells filling his senses - and decided to see if priesthood was his calling.

Ramirez was sent to a novitiate - which he describes as a "boot camp" for priests - in Pontiac, Mich. Ramirez recalls this period, however, as one of the happiest times of his life. He enjoyed the monastic traditions, from the quiet of long meditations to the awesome

Cleaning up with Curbside recycling

Photos by Todd Dickson

Las Cruces Mayor Ken Miyagishima tries his hand at emptying a bin into the recycling truck's hold Monday, April 4. The trucks then take the recyclable waste to a transfer station and consolidated for transport to the Friedman Recycling plant in El Paso.

Curbside recycling began in Las Cruces Monday, April 4, with Friedman Recycling trucks rolling into neighborhoods, such as this one on Settler's Bend, to pick up and empty the new blue recycling bins. Driver David Cordova, who had retired from the city's sanitation department, said it appeared that most homes were setting out their blue bins.

Coaching conundrum

Many Div. 1 NCAA basketball coaches earn a lot of money, but the job certainly is not easy

The frenetic 2011 NCAA Final Four has finally finished. Now we get to watch the college coaches compete for considerable compensation.

Rumor has it that the University of New Mexico's head coach, Steve Alford has agreed in principle to abandon the Lobos and his million-dollars-a-year agreement to move to the open position at the University of Missouri where he will have the opportunity to earn close to $2 million. Alford has denied that any such deal has been negotiated.

The Missouri Tiger position became available after the UM administration had just offered their coach, Mike Anderson, a 58 percent raise to $1.35 million. However, before the deal was completed, the University of Arkansas came calling on Anderson and offered him $2.2 million annually, a deal that he did not refuse.

At the top of the college coaches list of highly compensated coaches is Louisville's Rick Pitino, who earns nearly $150,000 a week for his skills, or about $7.5 million annually. At Duke, their respected coach Mike Krzyzewski receives $4.2 million. In 2009, Kentucky signed high-profile coach John Calipari for about $4 million a year, despite the fact that he had left two previous jobs (Massachusetts and Memphis State) under dark clouds of alleged NCAA violations.

The University of Oklahoma purportedly has offered UNLV coach Lon Kruger (Lou Henson's successor at Illinois) a seven-year deal worth $16 million. To make the job available to Kruger, OU had to dismiss their previous coach Jeff Capel (recruiter of former Sooner and current NBA superstar Blake Griffin) at a buyout cost of $2.1 million.

The top women's basketball coaches have joined the compensation carousel with Tennessee's Pat Summit leading the way with annual pay in excess of $2 million. She has coached at Tennessee for 36 years and has won eight national championships. Her current pay is a nice increase from her initial salary of $250 a month in 1974 when she also drove the team van and washed the players' uniforms.

Six other women's coaches earn more than $1 million a year including Connecticut's Geno Auriemma at $1.6 million. An interesting perspective on the top women's basketball programs is that, according to NCAA reports, in 2009-10 the top two women's basketball programs lost money. Tennessee lost $715,000 and Connecticut was in the red by $725,000.

There have been days that I look at the amount of money that the top coaches are earning and question why I didn't forsake journalism to become a coach. Of course, reality sets in when I realize that coaching can be really hard, and not every coach is highly paid. In fact, according to NCAA information, among all divisions, the majority of head coaches earn around $40,000 per year. Some other reasons why a person should think twice before choosing to become a college coach include:

- Recruiting top athletes is very, very difficult, even for the top programs. If the student athlete is really good, they will likely opt to play professionally.
- All great high school athletes and most college players (and their parents) are certain that they will earn millions of dollars playing professional basketball.
- College players are basically teenagers, and sometimes act just like the kids they are.
- Most administrators expect coaches to immediately produce winning teams, and have little patience to wait for a program to be built.
- Basketball fans are unrelenting in their expectation of winning championships.
- Coaches must politely accept the fact that outcomes of basketball games can be influenced significantly by the quality and consistency of the referees.

After considering these issues, I am glad that I chose newspaper marketing as my career. Compared to coaching, publishing is a profession where I have a bit more direct control, success" is more broadly defined than simply counting wins and losses.

My heart goes out to all the individuals who have chosen to be coaches. Most coaches are coaching, not because of money, but because they are doing what they love - helping develop our young people. We should respect each of them for their commitment.

Next time you encounter a coach, in any sport, at any level, you should give them a hug, and say, "Thank you."

Letters to the Editor

TNR program works for university campus

Alice Anderson, (Letters to the Editor, April 1) you obviously do not like cats, and that is OK for you. However, I do like them a lot, and it makes me angry when someone deliberately leaves out information to mislead the public with regard to a good program that is helping the feral cats at New Mexico State University, and would also benefit other feral colonies in the county.

You speak about 75 free roaming cats on the campus, but you conveniently forgot to mention that the number of feral cats at NMSU used to be around 250 to 300 before the trap, neuter and release (TNR) program was implemented.

The county could also realize these kinds of results, after a few years, if they implemented a similar program operated by TNR experienced people. They have tried to kill feral cats for more than 30 years around here, and it has absolutely not worked to reduce their numbers.

By the way, feral cats that have been spayed or neutered are not simply released onto the streets, school playgrounds, neighborhoods, etc., as you imply.

Why don't you educate yourself before speaking on something you so obviously know nothing about?

Evelyn Hancock

Recycling - It's the cat's meow

I'm puzzled by the senior citizens who must be either living off the land or are hoarders since they claim they have next-to-nothing

Do they not read newspapers and magazines? Do they not buy facial tissues? Do they not receive junk mail?

Catalogs, electioneering pamphlets, charity solicitations, newsprint supermarket flyers, envelopes that contain bills or greeting cards or letters from friends? Do they not eat tuna fish or soups from cans, dry cereal from cardboard boxes, drink coffee that comes in cans, liquor and juice and milk and soda in plastic jugs, sodas in aluminum cans? Do they not buy products packaged in plastic bags? Don't they discard broken small electric appliances? Do they never use mail order or receive gifts packaged in cartons? Don't they discard old phone books, outdated almanacs, instruction booklets and the like? Do they not pick up recyclable litter in their neighborhoods, such as aluminum cans and flyers left on driveways?

As a senior citizen I am happy to recycle and save our land from pollution and unnecessary landfills. I am also pleased, given the rising price of gasoline, not to have to drive to the recycle centers.

Guv not keen on GOP hopefuls

Martinez unlikely to enjoy sharing spotlight with Lt. Gov. Sanchez or former Rep. Wilson

The GOP U.S. Senate race to replace Sen. Jeff Bingaman in 2012 promises to be full of excitement if it ends up being a face-off between former U.S. Rep. Heather Wilson and Lt. Gov. John Sanchez.

Wilson already has announced. Sanchez is officially "considering" a run. But he slipped recently and revealed his decision already has been made. If he does run, the race should be even livelier than the 2008 battle between Wilson and Rep. Steve Pearce.

All the elements of suspense will be present: a lieutenant governor who looks strong in the primary election, a former U.S. representative who could be strong in the general election and a governor who clashes with both despite having close ties to both.

Gov. Susana Martinez, who gives indications of national political aspirations in 2012, will have to share the spotlight with her lieutenant governor and the former head of her transition team.

It won't be easy – or pretty. Martinez has given indications she doesn't like to share the spotlight. Soon after her election, she sent Sanchez on a fishing expedition to every county in the state to find out what businesses want. The results were to be turned into legislation.

No legislation in the 2011 session was publicly advanced as being a result of that tour. I received no news releases or saw any media reporting on the visits of Sanchez when he iourneved to each county.

Could the tour have been primarily to keep the lieutenant governor out of the way while Martinez put together her government? One definite result of the tour was to strengthen Sanchez's ties in every county of the state. It is highly likely that Sanchez met with every single GOP county chairman in the state.

Sanchez has run for statewide office four times already so he already knows the state. But this tour was as a public official and it is certain to have done him much good. Although Bingaman had not made his retirement announcement yet, Sanchez, 48, knew he would have future political opportunities even if Bingaman ran again.

66 ... he (Sanchez) didn't stand out as being the tea-party-type conservative he now says he is.

Sanchez says he's the true conservative in the Republican primary. He had only two years in the New Mexico House to establish a record, but he didn't stand out as being the tea-party-type of conservative he now says he is.

Wilson had 10 years in the U.S. House to build a moderate record, somewhat similar to that of Sen. Pete Domenici. It may have been Domenici to whom Sanchez was referring when he called Wilson a relic of the past. I hope so. It is difficult for a person of 73 to hear a 50-year-old referred to as a relic of the past.

Domenici may be a relic, but he never had any trouble winning elections. That is what Wilson is talking about when she says she is the only Republican candidate capable of winning a statewide election.

Republican winners of high public office in New Mexico during the past 80 years all have been rather moderate. Besides Domenici, they include Govs. Ed Mechem, Dave Cargo, Garrey Carruthers and Gary Johnson.

If Sanchez does win the GOP senatorial primary, you can be sure the Democratic candidate, whoever that might be, will tie every unpopular act by the Martinez administration directly to Sanchez. just as Martinez tied Democratic gubernatorial candidate Diane Denish to Gov. Bill Richardson. You might call it a game of pay-back.

As I have often noted, no New Mexico lieutenant governor has ever been part of a governor's administration. They always are kept out of the loop. But that reality never has been believable to the voting public.

For that reason, lieutenant governors have always had trouble moving to higher office. I can find only one governor, one U.S. House member and one state Supreme Court member who have moved up since statehood.

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

The wandering bull

June was taking a renegade bull with a tendency to "wander" to the sale barn in Dodge City. Her son helped her load the beast into their stock trailer. It was an authentic ranch trailer with lights that worked intermittently, gates that swung almost even, tires that didn't match, and compressed rubber floor planks whose 99year warranty had expired.

A few miles outside of Dodge, June heard and felt a thump, crack and crunch loud enough to be heard above George Strait on KBUF. In her rear-view mirror she watched a dark object helicopter out from under the second axle.

She swerved to the right and stopped on a slant in the bar ditch. Upon examination, she found a hole in the floor of the front compartment of the trailer. The bull, butt to the front, was eyeing the hole nervously. "Simple," she surmised, "I'll just open the divider gate and move him into the rear compartment and be on my way.

She unlatched the gate and swung it open. The bull was coaxed around the hole to the rear and June hurried around to close the divider. It was on a good slant. She pushed it closed and raced back around to latch it ... but not in time! It swung back

Three times she attempted the maneuver, when she heard someone say, "Can I help you?"

A handsome, strong Kansas

State trooper smiled.

June left him to push and hold while she went around to catch and latch.

When the divider banged closed it spooked the bull who tried to climb over the back gate, slid to the down side and spooked the trooper who fell back writhing in agony. He was on the ground grasping his knee.

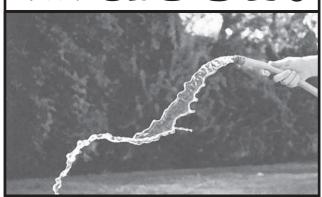

She reached to help him, "No," he groaned, "I can do it!" He keyed his collar mike, "Officer down! Officer down! I've been injured and need assistance!

Within five minutes the horizon in all directions was filled with red and blue flashing lights and sirens blaring! They closed Highway 400. Well, nobody could get around all the Dodge City police cars, Ford County sheriff deputy pickups, the ambulance, firetrucks, tow truck, first responders and one Wildlife and Park Service utility vehicle.

After a thorough questioning, they realized the truth. The upset June told them she thought they were going to handcuff her and leave her in the ditch while they searched her rig for contraband.

One big burly officer laughed and said, "Yeah, but if we'd done that, you could've told 'em it took six of us to get the job done, and you put one of us in the hospital!"

No country for geezers

Citizens who ignored 'Social Security facts' undeserving of columnist's pity

Ever been to marriage counseling and said to the counselor that you, yourself, do not intend to change your behavior at all? That you insist the other person must be the one to change because you are not changing. How did that work out for your marriage? Welcome to the debate about our national budget problems.

Both political parties say they are not going to change their spending habits at all. Wrong. Major change is coming regardless of what they say to the people.

In the last four years, our national debt has gone out of sight. Our nation went into debt more in February than in all of 2007. We are borrowing about half of what we spend, but that is only the bad news.

The putrid news is that Congress is running several scams that will come back to haunt all of us. The first one works like this: the treasury is out of money. It offers T-Bills, but most other nations are simply not buying. So it buys its own T-Bills. How does that work? Our treasury writes itself a check and then declares it has more money. Kids, do not try this at home.

As our nation runs out of real money, what is likely to happen? I suspect shortly our nation will have to scrap the Social Security system and just stop writing those Social Security checks. Have I got your attention? Good. The bad news is I mean it. Even if you depend upon the Social Security system, our nation has turned a blind eye to the financing or lack of it for Social Security. It does not matter if you need the money, our government does not have the money to write you the checks.

For 40 years, Social Security has been a Ponzi scheme with no money being saved. Everyone in the media, in Congress and most everyone else know this. We have no right to look surprised because we knew it was happening. All money collected for Social Security is spent in the year it is collected and an IOU is issued that says: "When Michael reaches the time when he is due any Social Security benefits, tax the citizens of that year for his benefits because we did not save any of his contributions."

contributions."

In every Ponzi scheme initially people get money. Then, at some point, the money runs out. Welcome to 2011. Now it is time for the recriminations.

Go for it. Tell all of us how – or even though you knew no money was being saved by Congress – you feel you should get your money despite ignoring that it was a scam. Tell us as many times as you want why young people today should pay off your intentional ignorance and then themselves do without Social Security as a resource since it is just a scam.

At some point the geezers and geezerettes are just out of luck, since they ignored for 40 years the scam that Congress was running. And I am one of them.

I have written over the years about the fact it is a scam and that I thought I might not get any return on my investment in the scam. I'm not happy, but not surprised either.

I could use the money, but I know that Congress can only write me a bogus check. Do I want a bogus check? Who is going to cash it? That is the question.

The money Congress is borrowing and printing is based on the principle that they

The media is with money and the nation flush

do not intend to pay it back. There is no plan to pay the money back. Every politician from both parties really does know these facts. They will still tell you that they will fight for your right to not have to make cuts.

Our federal government is borrowing with no plan to repay. When it comes to cutting, there is no one who is willing to cut anything. How sustainable is that? And, the media is talking about the government flush with money and the nation flush with money.

The only thing to do with that statement is to flush it to where it belongs. You have been told.

The 'gang of seven'

New Mexico state Sens. Mary Jane Garcia, Cynthia Nava, Steve Fischmann and Mary Kay Papen and Reps. Joni Gutierrez, Mary Helen Garcia and Antonio Lujan constitute the gang of seven who support, empower or enable illegal aliens in our community. It was this self-serving seven who opposed Gov. Susana Martinez's effort in the recent state Legislature to repeal the 2003 law providing New Mexico driver's licenses to illegal aliens. Rather than support the 72 percent of New Mexicans who wanted repeal of the law, they practiced "politics as usual" by pandering to those who support illegal immigration to our nation.

Taxpayers pay the bill for illegal aliens in our public schools, colleges and universities. Likewise, we financially support those illegals who access our health care services and other welfare benefits. Then, there is the spectre of vote fraud most recently revealed.

John Hamilton

Absurd observations

I see where some people are starting to make absurd observations about the Democratic Party, especially about Sen. Mary Jane Garcia. Garcia has passed legislation with regard to spousal abuse and animal abuse. She introduced the Baby Brianna bill, also known as Senate Bill 166, regardless of who took credit for it.

This session she has introduced a bill to address bullying in schools. I am sure she is aware that what happened at Robertson High School was a crime. I am also sure that most, if not all, bullying is a crime. All these issues are passed with the well being of all the citizens of New Mexico – especially the most vulnerable – in mind. She passes laws that positively impact people and they vote for her. I believe that is rather intelligent of the voters.

Those who truly think that she is ignoring the deficit and she does not care about exploding state government spending, do yourself and the rest of us a favor by calling and talking to her about it

Food bank morsels

The Bataan Memorial Death March took place recently. Those who participated in the heavy weight category carried an additional 35 pounds during the march. After completing the trek, participants carrying food donated their non-perishable food to Roadrunner Food Bank.

Marchers generated 16,882 pounds of food for the food bank, our agencies and the hungry New Mexicans we serve. Thank you to everyone who brought in food. Your support touches the lives of tens of thousands of New Mexico's hungry weekly.

Now that there are two locations for the food bank (one in Albuquerque and one in Las Cruces) we are able to directly serve 16 counties in the state including all southern New Mexico counties.

In late 2010, the Community Action Agency of Southern New Mexico discontinued its food bank activities to focus on other aspects of its mission. At that time, they asked Roadrunner Food Bank to assume responsibility for food distribution in Hidalgo, Grant, Luna and Doña Ana counties.

The Las Cruces branch re-opened as Roadrunner Food Bank in January. Since then, we have distributed 498,037 pounds of food in Hidalgo, Grant, Luna and Doña Ana counties through a network of agencies, helping thousands of vulnerable hungry people and households.

TNR misinformation

This letter is in response to one printed on April 1, from Alice Anderson regarding trapneuter-return (TNR) methods for cat population control.

Unfortunately, Anderson still has many of her facts wrong regarding TNR in general and the New Mexico State University program in particular.

Without TNR's efforts, what we have now will never stop ... cats procreating with no end in sight, a system that hauls them into our shelter and kills them at hundreds per month, with a kill rate of more than 80 percent and a persistence of all the issues Anderson listed about cats – feces in gardens, etc.

What TNR does do is lower the free-roaming cat numbers significantly. It creates safer/healthier cats because they are vaccinated/fixed, and it cuts down on nuisances as well, such as fighting, marking, mating, etc.

The program at NMSU is a success story. There may be about 75 cats on the NMSU campus now, but when the program started a few years back, there were more than 200. TNR may take time, but it is the only proven alternative that works versus the failed, expensive catch-and-kill method that got us to where we are today. Our situation will not change until TNR efforts are not only legalized but financed and endorsed by our local animal-welfare groups/systems.

There's a good reason for this. Our push for a new animal ordinance allowing TNR legally is only the beginning of our long road ahead regarding effective, humane control of cat populations.

Crossfield achieves Mach 2

Test pilot considered first astronaut by many historians

By Michael Shinabery

A witness said "he was trying to turn and he just went down," foxnews.com reported. "You could tell the motor was having

When Civil Air Patrol searchers in a mountainous area of Georgia got to the wreckage on April 19, 2006, they found the body of the man who, 53 years earlier, had been the first to break Mach 2. Albert Scott Crossfield was 84 when he died in a Cessna 210A, which the Associated Press called "a puny flying machine compared with the rocket-powered aircraft he flew as Crossfield was born in 1921. A World War II pilot, he earned degrees in aeronautical engineering and, in 1950, became a test pilot at NASA's predecessor, the NACA, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.

'Crossfield was always motivated by the dream of extending man's ability to fly from the Earth into space using a winged vehicle," Richard Hallion wrote in a Dec. 7, 1987, letter. Hallion, a professor of military history at the Army War College, was supporting Crossfield's induction into the International Space Hall of Fame. "To this dream," Hallion wrote, "he devoted a significant portion of his professional career, championing the creation of a special hypersonic research aircraft that eventually emerged as the North American X-15."

Crossfield's biography stated he piloted various experimental aircraft, including the D558-I and -II research planes. He flew more than 110 rocket flights, and undertook "primary design and development work on (the) first full pressure suit.

His "decision to make the outer layers silver, almost defined the public's view of astronauts," said Derek Webber in The Wright Stuff.

In 1951, piloting an F-84, Crossfield flew some of the first Keplerian trajectories, which are flights where the plane changes vertical direction "much like a carnival roller-coaster," said "Man in Flight." Suddenly diving after reaching apogee produces a period of weightlessness. At first Crossfield "reported befuddlement' ... but after his fifth flight he could handle it well." Astronauts now train for weightlessness during such flights, in craft referred to as the Vomit Comet.

On Nov. 20, 1953, Crossfield "flew the Douglas D-558-2 Skyrocket to Mach 2, reported "Wings: A History of Aviation from Kites to the Space Age." Douglas had built the Skyrocket using "captured German aerodynamic reports," according to Milestones of Aviation. Diving from 72,000 feet, Crossfield hit 1,291 mph, or Mach 2.005, the book documented. He accomplished the feat the year of the "50th anniversary of the Wright Brothers' first flight," said Webber, and just over six years after Chuck Yeager first broke the sound barrier.

Yeager, in his 1985 memoir "Yeager," declared that Air Force pilots were not "thrilled to see a NACA guy bust Mach 2." The remark was an example of ongoing contention between the military and civilian sectors. Crossfield exacerbated the friction when, on his first flight in an F-100, he rolled right through a hangar wall.

That stupid accident would never have happened to an Air Force pilot because he would have accepted a few pointers about what in the hell was going on with a new airplane," Yeager wrote. "His attitude was typical of the NACA bunch: there was nothing worthwhile that a military pilot could tell them."

"That was probably the worst experience I ever had in an airplane," Crossfield recalled in 1962 in The American Heritage History of Flight. "I got a fire warning during the flight, so I stopped the engine. At that time there was still considerable controversy over the ability of that airplane to make a dead-stick landing. But dead-stick landings in rocket airplanes were my business, so I made one, and it was not particularly difficult.'

He had landed similarly in the Skyrocket and simply coasted to a stop

"The (F-100) handbook said that without the utility hydraulic system (a pilot had) exactly three cycles of the brake, and it was right. I pumped the brake three times, but the airplane kept rolling and I went into the hangar and came out through the aluminum hangar wall," Crossfield said. "Yeager and the others gave me credit for breaking one barrier that they weren't interested in breaking."
In 1955, Crossfield joined North American Aviation as chief engineering test pilot. He dedicated himself to developing the X-15, a craft that "flew faster and higher than all its predecessors, and ultimately even reached the fringes of space," Webber said. "This became the model that Burt Rutan would follow when he designed his own space program," and built the Space-ShipOne.

Crossfield "flew the X-15 many times to the edge of space," said the Civil Air Patrol webpage capmembers.com. In addition, the site said, Crossfield "is considered by many aviation historians to be the world's first true astronaut," and the X-15 the "world's first aerospace plane."

"It is fair to state," Hallion wrote, "that without Mr. Crossfield's contributions to the X-15, the program would not have been as successful as it was."

Before the craft flew, however, the Soviet Union launched the world's first artificial satellite, Sputnik I, in 1957. In reaction, the United States created MISS, or the Man In Space Soonest project, reported acepilots.com. Among the astronauts chosen were Crossfield and Neil Armstrong. At about the same time "the Army ... proposed a tri-service man-in-space program which Finally, in October 1958, President Dwight Eisenhower signed the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958, creating a civilian agency to lead America in the space race. The NACA merged with NASA, and MISS evolved into Project Mercury.

During the 1950s," the AP reported at his death, "Crossfield embodied what came to be called 'the right stuff,' dueling the better-known Chuck Yeager for supremacy among America's Cold War test pilots.

Crossfield decried praise labeling him a hero. The AP quoted him from a 1988 Aviation Week & Space Technology article saying that society should "'divest ourselves of this idea of special people (being) heroes, if you please, because really they do not

Launch delayed

Student launch set May 20

After analyzing the results of a test on the parachute system for the SL-5 rocket, New Mexico Space Grant Consortium (NMSGC) Director Patricia Hynes has rescheduled the SL-5 Student Launch at Spaceport America to Friday, May 20.

Engineers from UP Aerospace conferred with NMSGC launch officials and it was determined that a portion of flight hardware became entangled during recovery and was damaged. Safe return of the students' 27 onboard experiments is a requirement of the launch, Hynes said, so in order to meet the mission specifications, the launch was postponed.

Hynes said she is optimistic about the student launch, even though it needed to be rescheduled.

Garcia honored nationally

NEA gives senator humanitarian award

By Todd G. Dickson

State Senate Majority Whip Mary Jane Garcia will travel to Chicago in July to receive the National Education Associations's National Humanitarian and Civil Rights Award.

In New Mexico, the Doña Ana lawmaker is known for achieving legislation to fight ills ranging from human trafficking and hate crimes to cock fighting and bullying. In response to the shocking death of the infant Brianna Lopez, Garcia sponsored a new law, called the Baby Brianna Law, to make child abuse resulting in death a life sentence.

In Doña Ana, Garcia had led the effort to make restorations of original adobe buildings and a church to highlight the village's historic position as a once pivotal community along the Spanish Camino Real trading route and as a central community in early U.S. territorial development in the Southwest.

Early in her legislative career, Garcia passed legislation to stop the growth of colonias subdivided properties without proper utilities and other infrastructure.

Nevertheless, Garcia said she is compelled to create legislation to fight ills such as hate crimes statewide because, as a state senator, she serves all New Mexicans.

Despite all this, when the state NEA chapter nominated her for the award, Garcia said she didn't believe she would win, considering there were nominations from across the United States.

"It's probably the highest honor I've received so far," Garcia said.

An NEA film crew followed Garcia when she visited the new Child Crisis Center Tuesday, April 5, to donate $790.50 from a state Senate fundraiser following passage of the ses-

Jim Hilley Bulletin in the Zone

Though the college basketball season is over, Aggie basketball fans want to know!

So in the interests of satiating that hunger for knowledge, here are some tidbits of interest.

Former New Mexico State University guard Jahmar Young was recently let go by Crvena Zvezda in the Serbian Superleague. The team had to release both of its imported players Ricardo Marsh of Old Dominion and Young because the team "is not in position to honor the contracts with the U.S. duo and pay their salaries."
Young quickly landed with the Charleroi team in Ghent, Belgium, and so far has averaged nine points in two games at his new team, coming off the bench. One plus for Young is that Charleroi is at the top of its division standings, while Crvena Zvezda was a bottom dweller.

Another former Aggie guard, Jonathan Gibson, originally played professional basketball for Oyak Renault in Turkey, and averaged 18.1 points per game in 11 games. He is now the back-up point guard for Askelon Ironi in Israel. In 11 games, he has averaged 9.2 points. Unfortunately, Askelon Ironi is another bottom-of-the-league

With Lon Kruger leaving Nevada-Las Vegas for Oklahoma, the job at UNLV has attracted the interest of former NMSU coach Reggie Theus. He has been named as one of four finalists for the coaching position at the Mountain West school.

Theus played his college basketball for UNLV and Jerry Tarkanian from 1976-78, before going on to play in the pros, primarily for the Chicago Bulls and Sacramento

After leading the Aggies to a 41-23 record and an appearance in the NCAA tournament, Theus left for a brief – but financially lucrative – stint coaching the Kings. During his first season, the Kings went 38-44, and he was fired during his second year with the team posting a dismal 6-18 record. He is currently an assistant coach for the Minnesota Timberwolves. The late, great John Keith had a lot of wonderful stories to tell about Theus, whom he said was a "high maintenance" type of coach. Keith said Theus would always return phone calls, but the coach would generally have about three other calls on hold on his cell phone.

One of Keith's favorite stories was about Theus calling and waking Keith's good friend NMSU Assistant Athletic Director Herb "Touchdown" Taylor at about 3 in the morning.

"Where are my office keys?" Theus demanded.

"Don't you remember?" Taylor replied, "I gave them to you."

'Oh, here they are in my pocket," the Aggie coach admitted.

Football was in the air Saturday, April 2, as the New Mexico State Aggies held their first practice of the spring. The team has 13 more practices before their spring game Saturday, April 30.

Third-year head coach DeWayne Walker said the team had a hightempo practice and it was good to get the guys moving around.

"Everybody was energetic," he said. "The guys are happy to get out, and the coaches are happy to get out of the office and start our 2011 campaign.'

After the first practice, Walker said the team knows what they're doing.

"It's the first practice, so obviously there are some mistakes and the guys have to go to the film room and back to the playbook, but that's expected," he said.

Walker has laid out three goals for the spring. He wants the players to believe they can win. He wants them competing hard, and finally, he wants their football IQ to improve, which he said will lead to out executing the opposition.

In discussing the team's football intelligent quotient, Walker wants the players to understand the game, from the basics of game play to the nuances of the players' respective positions.

"These kids have a lot on their plate, but we can't make excuses for them," he said.

"They have to lift weights, go to class, tutors, study hall and they're still kids, so they want to enjoy the college life. They've got a lot going on but they have to learn how to play football, too. They need to understand the game as well as the coaches to a certain degree."

While the Aggies don't officially start the season until Sept. 3, Walker has already discussed the importance of having a good spring and accomplishing their goals.

"To me, it's just continuing to push these guys to believe they can win," he said. "Right now, there are no wins and losses. My focus is in those three areas, and when we get the rest of the team here in July that's when we start worrying about wins and losses.

Mayfield hunting for another trophy

Trojan baseball tops district standings

Our defense has been tremendous, and

MIGUEL GOMEZ,

Mayfield coach

our hitting, too.

By Craig Massey

Separated by 30 years and one big, blue trophy, the current Mayfield baseball players met their 1981 counterparts at a weekend gathering two months ago.

It was the MHS baseball booster club's idea to bring back the school's last baseball championship team. There was a cook out, an alumni game and a golf outing. T-shirts and caps were handed out, and championship rings were given to the 1981 players who, for whatever reason, didn't get one 30 years ago.

Mayfield certainly knows all about state championships - their football and girls basketball teams have already earned blue trophies this school year. The school's baseball program has always been solid and produced some outstanding teams, but all agree that it's overdue for another championship team.

Head coach Miguel Gomez, a former Trojan player, guided the team to a second-place finish in 2007 – his first year in charge of the program. He believes this year's squad has a lot of the same qualities as his 2007 team, and hopefully some similar to the 1981 team.

This is a tight-knit group with great chemistry," he said. "We have a lot of young talent and some seniors that provide great leadership. It's a good all-around group. Good students. Good baseball players. Good kids."

The Trojans, who have a 12-4 record after a 5-4 loss to Las Cruces Tuesday, April 5, have seven seniors on the team, including pitchers Adrian "Lefty" Garcia and Austin Escalante, second-baseman Lucas Ogaz, catcher Taylor

Aggies

The Aggies' practices are open to the public and the next one is from 11:20 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday, April 9. Regarding what fans should be on the lookout for in practice, Walker said they can watch the team's organization and see the work the players

They're not going to understand our schemes but even the doing," he said.

The Aggies return 20 starters from last year's squad. While that's generally a step in the right direction for a team, Walker than we had last year," he said. "That's where the IQ part gets better. If it gets better with those 20 guys then it's a positive. If the IQ stays the same, then it's not as positive as we would like it to be.'

Two of the 20 starters returning are hoping for big years after stellar 2010 seasons. Wide receiver Taveon Rogers and strong safety Donyae Coleman are both glad to put the pads back on.

Rogers was a threat returning kickoffs for the Aggies last season, returning 52 kickoffs for 1,410 yards – both school records. His special team performance earned him a spot on the Western Athletic Conference's all-conference second team. Rogers also caught 18 passes for 278 yards and two touchdowns in 2010.

It's my second year and I feel more comfortable in the offense and the program," he said. "It's always a good thing when football season starts.'

Rogers said he worked hard in the offseason and is looking to be more of an offensive threat for the Aggies in 2011. He led the team last season in all-purpose yards, averaging 145.2 per game.

"I want to build chemistry with the quarterbacks and better myself to better the team," he said.

While returning kicks and running routes may seem difficult, Rogers said he is up to the challenge.

"I don't think anything's hard," he said. "I just think it takes hard work to do it, and it's something I'm willing to do." Coleman was a tackling machine for the Aggies last season, averaging 7.7 a game – sixth in the WAC. Like Rogers, he too, is excited to be back on the field honing his craft.

"It feels great coming out here with our guys," Coleman said. "We worked so hard in the off season."

Coleman said this year's Aggies have a lot of energy.

'We're going to go out there and see what we can do and get better each day," he said. "We're going to believe and compete everyday with our boys. At the end of practice we know we're all family."

Coleman said the Aggies didn't slouch around in the off season, hitting the weight room hard and improving their skills.

We had our nose to the ground like dogs," he said. "We didn't try to upstage anybody or downplay anybody. We just

Some other key players include Jordan Lunsford, Luis Carreon, Jacob Gomez, Bubba Zapien, Kyle Huerta, P.J. Esquivel and

We have a good bunch of seniors, but we're still a young group," Gomez said. "We start some sophomores and juniors, so we'll have a lot of guys coming back next year."

Mayfield, ranked No. 6 in the state, was predicted by many to be the top team in District 3-5A, and the Trojans have done nothing to change that thinking. They have outscored their district rivals 41-9 in four games heading into this weekend and have a 3-1 league mark.

"Our defense has been tremendous, and our hitting, too," Gomez said. "It all goes back to preparation. They work hard every day in practice and they're students of the game."

Pitching has also helped set the Trojans apart this year.

"We have more arms," Gomez said about the depth of his pitching staff. "Our guys understand that pitch count is important. We try to hit our spots ... try to get ground balls and Gomez said his squad is focused on the rest of the district schedule right now, but that winning the program's first state championship in 30 years remains the goal.

'Our ultimate goal is to be right there in the stretch drive," he said. "We've made a big deal out of it being 30 years since we won it all. We believe we can be there at the end, and we believe we can win it. We just have to take it in stages. We don't want to look past our district rivals.

Sonoma Ranch finds the right man

Despite youth, Dahrling blossoms as head pro

Charlie Blanchard Golf Doctor

In case you haven't noticed, spring is in full bloom and, hallelujah, it's Masters week. Augusta National - Bobby Jones' Legacy from the 1930s – host's the season's first major. It's our chance to watch the world's best golfers.

I watch a lot of PGA tournament golf (even more so during my rehab) and I never cease to be amazed at the talent and performance under pressure of these incredible players.

But this story isn't about the Masters. It's about the "other" PGA – the club pros. As members of the PGA of America (not the tour) club and teaching pros are in their own right a talented, highly educated, professional breed of business men and women who do an incredible job as they perform under pressure – mostly from the public they serve.

To give you a feel for what it's like working as a club pro, allow me to share the story of

Justin Dahrling, who took over as head pro at Sonoma Ranch Golf Course in early January. Not only is Dahrling the newest named head club pro in the Sun Country PGA Section (which includes New Mexico and El Paso) he's also the youngest. He started working at Sonoma Ranch late in 2008, while still in school, and ranking as a PGA professional in 2010. Before we get into the specific duties of a club pro, let me tell you a little about Dahrling. Having grown up in Albuquer-

received his PGA Class A que, he learned the game of golf at an early age, and was part of three 5A state golf championships at La Cueva High School. He graduated in 2005 from La Cueva with a first team all-academic > honor as a senior. That same year, he started in the PGA Professional Golf Management program at New Mexico

The PGM years turned out to be highly ful-filling time in his life of golf. In his four years as a college student, he won 15 PGM tournaments and finished in the top 10 numerous times. To say the young man is competitive would be an understatement. He's focused, goal-oriented and disciplined as well. Being a winning tournament golfer is nice, but it is not neces-To say the young sarily a prerequisite to becoming a successful Class A pro, or getting a position as a head pro at a major golf club. Unlike the situation many years ago – say prior to about 1965 – when a fellow who was a "stick" might apprentice to get to be a pro, today's Class A professionals have to pore through a huge load of training manuals, pass a number of written tests on technical subjects and complete various internships.

Moreover, a fact of life in the golf industry, which is known throughout the PGA of America, is that PGM graduates have a decided advantage in placement for desirable jobs at golf clubs all over the country.

It turns out that Dahrling passed his playing ability test in his first year in the program, breezed though the academics, completed his training "books" and did his internship in record time. He is a Class A and a head club pro, and is only 23.

But Dahrling belies his age of 23 because he is more mature and savvy to golf than that. As a head pro and director of golf (wearing two hats) his responsibilities include merchandising the pro shop, supervising the 10 inside and outside employees, controlling the 20 course marshals, managing the golf cart fleet and marketing the popularity of the golf course to maximize on-course play. As director of golf he sets up as many as 10 tournaments a month, an enormous undertaking which provides a major source of business to the operation. As far as fundraisers are concerned (most of the group play), keeping 70 hackers happy for the day as they make their way around a tough course with frequent stops at the beverage cart, is not an easy game.

Glover finds a fit

Member of famous football family returns to the City of the Crosses

Jack Nixon Jack's Corner

Through the early part of this decade, New Mexico State football benefited from the presence of "the Legend and the Legacy."

The legacy has returned to assist head coach DeWayne Walker this spring as the team matures and heads toward Walker's third year. Rich Glover is "the legacy," he is back in town as the Aggies' assistant to the linebackers coach. The legend is Glover's dad, Richard, who was on Tony Samuel's staff after a storybook playing career at Nebraska. Richard's play for coach Bob Devaney put him on the Millennium College Football All Star team that recognized the greatest players of all time.

Big and little Rich have been coaching high school ball in New Jersey of late, but the lure of the desert called the younger Glover back to the Mesilla Valley. The advantages of having this gene pool around are obvious enough, and little Glove's addition will be valuable in developing the young linebacking corps. Although his career didn't have as many highlights as his pops, one game sticks in my mind and remains a favorite.

In 2002, the football series with UTEP resumed after a two-year hiatus. For those who don't remember, Miner Athletics Director Bob Stull backed out of the annual home and home agreement when NM State wouldn't play all games of the series in the Sun Bowl. In 2002, they met in Las Cruces and the Crimson and White were ready and waiting. Some Aggie fans saw UTEP's behavior as cowardly and couldn't wait for a chance to prove it on the field.

On the Miners first possession, Glover picked off a pass and took it to the house. It was part of a 45-0 blowout that rekindled the rivalry and brought big smiles to Aggie fans everywhere.

There is another memory connected to the Glovers that will stay with me for awhile. After each homecoming game, Sonja Glover, Rich's mom, would host a party that included the greatest food on Earth. It was a time to celebrate an Aggie win and replay past Cornhusker glories with the Samuel staff. Rich went on to a shot at the NFL after graduating from NM State and eventually went back to coaching.

It is always encouraging to see past Aggies who are willing to come back and lend a hand in a practical way. Likewise, it's great to see a young man who wants to improve his own skills and is willing to volunteer to get that experience.

There is a selfish reason for my welcoming young Rich back to town. I hope it brings his mom back for the homecoming game this year, so I can enjoy that great cooking once again.

Making the grade for our student athletes

The spring is full of exciting events

Wayne Stickney
Associate Athletic Director for Development

There is much to look forward to as we near the end of the spring semester and the close of the fiscal year for the Aggie Athletic Club.

Student athletes will be honored Wednesday, April 13, for superior academic performance at the 21st annual New Mexico State Athletics El Paso Electric Crimson and White Society Banquet. Athletes earning a 3.5 grade point average or higher will be recognized during a program and dinner with esteemed representatives from El Paso Electric as well as NM State administrators and coaches. We thank Clay Doyle and our corporate partner El Paso Electric for making this event possible through their sponsorship of NM State athletics.

More than 450 student athletes and their coaches will come together with NM State Athletics administrators on the evening of Monday, April 18 when the Student-athlete Advisory Committee will host a pool party at the NMSU Natatorium. This event will celebrate strides made toward achieving the vision of becoming a premier mid-major athletic department. The highlight of the event will be the unveiling of a Community Service and Aggie Spirit Challenge Board.

Supporting student athletes is a rewarding experience. However, until recently, donations to our programs have been handled through laborintensive, manual processes that rely on our supporters to complete lengthy forms. Many donors have voiced the need for a simpler method. Soon, through the creation and official launch of the first-ever Aggie Athletic Club website, our Aggie friends and fans will be able to make one-time gifts, recurring donations and pay for membership dues. Online registration and payment for special events or banquets will also be available.

The official launch of the Aggie Athletic Club (AAC) website coincides with the AAC Membership Celebration from 5 to 7 p.m. Thursday, May 5.

Look for more information about the new website and the AAC Membership Celebration in the coming weeks. Please contact Felicia Mc-Cracken, donor services and special events coordinator, at aac@nmsu.edu or 646-5151 for further details on any of the events noted above or if you would be interested in being one of the first to make an online gift via the new website.

The passion Aggies have for NM State athletics is evident everywhere I travel. From Las Cruces to Albuquerque, Gallup, Santa Fe and over to Artesia, the Aggie Spirit thrives. Even on recent trips to Las Vegas for the WAC Basketball Tournament, and to Houston for the NCAA Final Four, it is always interesting to meet either new or long-time Aggie supporters and hear their exciting stories. The Aggie Athletic Club welcomes all supporters and has many ways to get involved. Volunteers are needed to assist with a variety of projects. I encourage you to join our team today and help our Journey to Excellence.

FishingReport

This fishing report, provided by the Department of Game and Fish and The Fish Phone, has been generated from the best information available from area officers, anglers, guides and local businesses. Conditions may vary as stream, lake and weather conditions alter fish and angler activities.

Northwest

Animas River – Fishing is reported as good for brown and rainbow trout.

Chama River - Fishing is reported as good above Heron Lake for rainbow trout using salmon eggs, PowerBait and worms.

San Juan River – (Upper section, catch and release) The visibility is reported at two to three feet in the river below the dam. The best fishing will be with midge pupa and larvae, size 22 and 24, clusters are working well. (Lower section) - Open waters, fishing is good with night crawlers, salmon eggs are working well.

Abiquiu Lake – No report. El Vado Lake – Fishing is reported as fair for trout on both sides of the dam.

Jackson Lake – Fishing is good to excellent for trout. Anglers are having success using PowerBait and any spinner with gold blades.

Lake Farmington – Trout fishing is reported as good on the dam side of the lake using salmon eggs or trolling spinners, such as Blue Fox with rainbow holograms and Arnies with red and gold blades.

Morgan Lake – Bass fishing is reported as slow. Navajo Lake – The pike continue to be fishing well when using Rapala DT 6-16 and Rapala XR 12-14. Perch, yellow perch, hot steel, rainbow and gold are reported as the hot colors right now.

Northeast

Cimarron River – Fishing conditions are good with trout being taken on various beadheaded nymphs in the quality waters.

Costilla Creek -No report.

Red River – Fishing is fair to good for rainbows below the hatchery with bead head nymphs and various flies.

Rio Grande – Slow for pike; slow for trout; poor for smallmouth bass. There are better reports on pike and trout at Pilar. Be persistent and focus on the tail outs of pools and right below the gravel bars. For trout, try a crane fly larvae or stonefly nymphs with a trailing caddis pupa or flashback pheasant tail. For pike, whisters and red and white Daredevils are reported as the best bet.

Rio Hondo – Lower section at confluence with Rio Grande is best. Trout are slow to fair with various flies, spinners and worms.

Cabresto Lake – No report. Road is clear. Charette Lakes – Fishing is reported as fair with some trout being landed in the range of 9 to 20 inches. PowerBait is the choice from the bank and when trolling use small perch baits in green and orange.

West Central

Jemez River, East Fork, Guadalupe and San Antonio – Fish are taking small dries and small nymphs presented on a dry dropper rig. As far as flies go, use buoyant dry flies to suspend a bead head dropper. Keep the droppers on the small side like No. 16 to 18. Spinners, salmon eggs, worms and Power-Bait are also working. East Fork, Guadalupe and Lower San Antonio are starting to awaken for spring and fishing is reported as fair using the same methods as the Jemez

Metro drainages - Trout fishing is reported as good for trout with all methods taking fish. The drainages were stocked two weeks ago with triploid rainbow trout and rainbow trout – Albuquerque with 702, Belen with 876, Bernalillo with 201, Corrales with 550 and Peralta with 876.

While most of the fish were 10-11 inches, the hatchery said one of the fish was 28 inches.

East Central

Coyote Creek – The water is low and fishing is slow with no pressure.

Pecos River - Not much change here. The fishing is on the slow side but really improving with the warmer weather. There is good fishing down at Villanueva State Park, if you can hit it on a weekday. Not much for dry fly fishing yet, so stick to nymphs. Egg patterns, red or green copper johns, prince nymphs and scuds tend to fool most of the stocked fish. For the browns and holdover rainbows upriver of Villanueva, including Pecos National Historical Park, show them a zebra midge or juju baetis or flash back peasant tail. Also anglers using spinner, worms and PowerBait are catching fish. The river from Villanueva to I-40 was stocked with 952 triploid rainbow trout last week.

Smallmouth reported as fair to good with nightcrawlers or minnows on the flats around the lake that are near the main channel. Channel cats reported as excellent. Crappie reported as poor.

Elephant Butte Lake - Good reports on the white bass and nice-sized fish being landed when using shiners on jigs. The fish are reported as scattered and being caught all over the lake. Catfish are reported as good with shrimp on the north end of the lake. Stripers are reported as slow by the dam. Crappie and walleye are reported as slow but a few fish have been landed here and there. No report on other species.

power of Gregorian chants.

The same year John Kennedy became president, Ramirez was ordained. He taught in Catholic schools in Michigan, but would also be sent on assignments to Mexico and Canada. In 1981, he became an auxiliary bishop in San Antonio, Texas. It was a short-lived but fateful assignment, because a new diocese was being formed for southern New Mexico, which was then under the El Paso and Santa Fe dioceses. Nine months in, he was picked to be the new diocese's spiritual and administrative leader.

As its bishop, Ramirez was given the task to create the new diocese, almost from scratch. In a small Downtown office, the diocese then was basically Ramirez and two other priests.

'The first challenge we had to do was to get the people to identify themselves as the Las Cruces Diocese," he said.

Creating that sense of identity as the Las Cruces

Diocese is what Ramirez cites as his greatest accomplishment. And it is a vibrant diocese. The diocese's center located in the Med Park area off Idaho Avenue is a "beehive" of activity with 30 full-time and part-time employees, along with assistance from numerous volunteers.

Ramirez also has translated his passions for education and social justice into driving concerns for the diocese. Ramirez said he made reaching out to young people an early focus of

"From the beginning was the understanding that we have to start with the youth," he said.

The early organization of the church included reaching out to the communities, the Catholic schools and even out into the farm fields. The desire was always to bring people together to work on problems and improve lives, he said.

Ramirez has written two pastoral letters to address chronic community problems. The first was on domestic violence called "Speaking the Unspeakable." Through the Internet, it has gained international attention as far away as Spain and India, he said.

The second pastoral letter was a follow-up to the first, this time focusing on the problem of child abuse, spurred by the shock of infant deaths, such as Brianna Lopez, now more commonly known as "Baby Brianna." The second pastoral letter was called "Speaking For Those Who Have No Voice."

Ramirez also is known for his proactive response to issues. Though not totally devoid of priest abuse cases, there have been very few under Ramirez's watch and the bishop said he has worked to make sure the diocese has very clear policies to prevent the abuse and a caring response to those who have suffered from abuse.

Ramirez said the Las Cruces Diocese was one of the first to establish policies and to take proactive measures - such as intensive workshops to detail the damage to lives and the church from priest abuse.

"Now, every diocese has these kinds of policies," he said.

Though proud of the Las Cruces Diocese's progress, Ramirez is quick to add that he has not been perfect, but he said his strengths are that he is a good listener, compassionate and has done his best to lead by example. Ramirez said he also still has a great love for learning and teaching what he has learned.

Ramirez also has found his home in Las Cruces. When a new leader occupies the bishop's residence, Ramirez doesn't plan to leave the area to find his new home - all he asks is that it have a small chapel for prayer and meditation. He would also like his future home to be near a hospital as Ramirez said he likes to minister to the sick.

"I really want to stay here," Ramirez said. "This is my extended family now. This is where through attrition and changes in school scheduling, based on what appeared to be passed by lawmakers. The new funding picture could mean another 100 positions cut, he said.

The district will soon be deciding on changes to the middle and high school schedules to save about half of the original budget reduction estimate. The district was already operating on temporary waivers to class sizes, Rounds said.

Some high school teachers are opposed to the current proposal for changing from block scheduling to four periods a day, saying a schedule of six or seven periods a day could also provide significant savings. Rounds said he didn't favor these schedules because students wouldn't be able to meet their credit requirements for graduation under the district's policies, which are slightly higher than state standards.

Although some of the high schools operated under these schedules in the past, Rounds said the graduation and testing requirements are different now.

Rounds said he needed to make a decision by the end of this week for high schools to begin registering students for next year's classes.

If there was no change made to scheduling, Las Cruces High School would end up with classes that have 34 to 40 students in classrooms not designed to house as many students, said Principal Nyeta Haines.

She and the other high school principals concurred that the schedule of four classes a day would prevent class sizes from rising again, Haines said.

Rounds said he would be willing to study other scheduling options in greater detail before making changes again in the 2012-13 school year.

School board member Bonnie Votaw said she understood the strong emotions felt by teaching staff about scheduling preferences, "but I'm thinking we're going to have bite the bullet on this one."

Votaw said she agreed there should be a working group formed to study and discuss the scheduling options.

"I want it to be cerebral, not emotional," she said of the district conversation that lies ahead.

Rounds said he didn't want to change the schedule this year, "but we're between a rock and a hard place."

Martinez signs bills

Gov. Susana Martinez has traveled around the state to sign bills and also announced some vetoes en route.

Also being studied on the road is the Legislature's budget, which Martinez said she hopes to sign off on by Friday, April 8. She has until the end of Saturday, April 9, to sign or veto the legislation. Any bills not signed by then also will be considered to be vetoed.

Martinez traveled to Carlsbad, the hometown of the late Katie Sepich, to sign legislation that expands Katie's Law.

Senate Bill 365, sponsored by Sen. Vernon Asbill, R-Carlsbad, and Sen. Mary Kay Papen, D-Las Cruces, and carried in the House by Rep. Al Park, D-Albuquerque, requires a DNA sample from anyone arrested for a felony in New Mexico.

The measure received bipartisan support in both chambers. Martinez was joined at a meeting of the Carlsbad Rotary Club by the Sepich family, Asbill, Park, Papen, Department of Public Safety Secretary Gorden Eden and first gentleman Chuck Franco.

"This legislation is a critical tool for our law enforcement community as we fight to make New Mexico safer for our children and families," Martinez said. "For five years, we have seen that Katie's Law has achieved real results – crimes solved, crimes prevented and lives saved. Now, we are able to do even more. Requiring a DNA sample from anyone arrested for a felony crime will make this important law even more effective. As Jayann Sepich said after its passage, New Mexico now has the toughest Katie's Law in America, with the exception of California."

Katie's Law was enacted in 2006, nearly three years after New Mexico State University student Katie Sepich was raped and murdered. Though her murderer left behind traces of DNA under Katie's fingernails, New Mexico did not at the time allow for DNA to be collected upon arrest. Martinez fought for the passage of the original Katie's Law legislation as district attorney in Doña Ana County.

Martinez also signed into law House Bill 172, legislation that prohibits corporal punishment in New Mexico's schools.

"The decision on whether or not to use corporal punishment on a child is one that is best left to a parent," Martinez said.

Corporal punishment was already banned in 53 of New Mexico's 89 school districts. According to the most recent data from the U.S. Department of Education, there were 705 incidents of corporal punishment in New Mexico during the 2006 school year, which represents 0.2 percent of the state's students. New Mexico now joins 30 other states that do not permit corporal punishment in schools.

Martinez also signed House Bill 652, creating a certification progress for gas pilot relighting technicians in the event that New Mexico experiences another crisis such as the one brought about by extremely cold temperatures and winter storms in February.

"During the recent gas crisis, it was eyeopening to learn just how few people were certified to re-light pilots in New Mexico, and I believe this bill will provide for a simple certification program that will ensure firefighters, police officers, National Guard troops and many others have the skills necessary to help our neighbors in the event that such a horrible crisis occurs again," Martinez said.

Among the bills vetoed by Martinez was an increase in cigarette taxes.

New Mexico State University professor Cynthia Bejarano and policy consultant Yali Lincroft visit with J. Paul Taylor at the conclusion Friday, April 1, of the two-day social justice symposium named for the retired state legislator.

Children's issues studied

Jailed parents a growing problem for children

By Todd G. Dickson

The two-day J. Paul Taylor Social Justice Symposium examined issues facing children whose parents are in jail or prison, which is becoming a greater problem for those children whose parents are being held for immigration

With concerns about terrorism making illegal immigration a criminal offense, it has become even more difficult for children to stay in contact with their parents, said Yoli Lincroft, a policy consultant for First Focus.

Attendees at the symposium told how difficult it is to even keep track of detainees held by federal immigration officials. The children often are afraid to make an attempt to contact their parents out of fear they will be jailed, too,

That just furthers their isolation and makes this population even more marginalized," Lincroft said.

Taylor said the symposium helped bring to light a hidden problem that makes children's lives more difficult.

Cynthia Bejarano, an New Mexico State University criminal justice professor, said these children also lose hope that they can achieve a better future.

NMSU Sociology Department Head Lisa Bond-Maupin said the problem needs attention because these experiences will adversely affect how these children view authority figures, especially law enforcement. Children of incarcerated parents was the subject of a recent public television documentary called "Invisible Children," she said.

These kids are in our schools, they're everywhere," Bond-Maupin said.

I had one major complaint – AT&T was not the majority cell-phone service provider.

When I drove around town, I dropped calls, and I could not get service at my house. Since I could not drive and talk (a law that I completely support), it was becoming difficult to keep in touch with my friends back home.

Since I moved to New Mexico on a whim, and they were never able to get a hold of me, I'm sure they started to get worried. Sorry. I still blame AT&T.

Now, that AT&T has bought T-Mobile and Alltel, I have a new major complaint – they are creating a monopoly.

As time progresses, people change what they rely on.

In the 19th century, it was agriculture and textile factories. Later, economics revolved around railroads, which evolved into the boom of the automobile.

Now, as we come into the age of technology people are becoming more dependent on their cell phones. Landlines, especially in younger couples, are becoming obsolete and cell phones are becoming more equipped with special features, such as navigation, apps, web searches, games, on-demand music, etc.

As wireless communication is becoming more monopolized, it is also becoming more affordable, which is why the first AT&T monopoly was broken up in the 1980s.

This is a benefit, but AT&T and Verizon now have more than 70 percent of all wireless consumers.

Another benefit, which I have seen firsthand, is the increased range of cell service. I can actually receive calls at my house and dropped calls are decreasing, although AT&T still remains the leader in wireless communication in dropped

In the long run, do we really want fewer choices?

America is the land of the free, and people in America want to feel free, or so I've heard.

Although I love being able to call my friends while I am at my house, and their faith in me has been restored, I don't want a monopoly.

Can I have my cake and eat it, too?

A busy day in Las Cruces

NM legislators move forward with bills, plans

By Samantha Roberts

Tuesday, April 5, was a busy day for legislators in Las Cruces, as Economic Development Secretary of New Mexico Jon Barela visited the City of Crosses and Gov. Susana Martinez signed three crucial bills in Santa Teresa.

Barela, who spoke at the Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance luncheon, Business on the Border, said he was excited about the future of New Mexico in regards to kick starting new jobs and spending.

Special guests from Union Pacific attended the event, in honor of the new bill Martinez signed later that afternoon that eliminated a tax on diesel fuel in New Mexico and contributed to the arrival of the new Union Pacific plant in Santa Teresa.

'This is a cornerstone to creating jobs in southern New Mexico," Barela said. "This $400 million project will create 3,000 construction jobs, 600 permanent jobs and many more will

In addition to the diesel tax bill, Martinez also signed the vehicle overweight bill, which Barela touched on during his speech. According to Barela, this bill will spur new job growth and encourage positive trade along the U.S.-Mexico border.

In addition to discussing the bills, including a third bill that will give border authority more power, Barela addressed the audience on key economic principles that he said will keep New Mexico competitive to bring in large corporations, such as Union Pacific.

The first principle is to balance the budget without increasing taxes.

"Although this was a tough session, we did it," Barela said, adding that New Mexicans can have security in the future of the Land of Enchantment. "We also did it in a bipartisan manner. While Texas, Arizona and California are still dealing with their $1 billion shortfalls, New Mexico is ready for the future."

The second principle was to establish a competitive regulatory environment, a reason Barela said he established a small business task

"We want to make New Mexico more business friendly," he said, "without compromising people's health, safety or the environment."

Third, Barela said he wants to create a competitive tax environment, looking to other states as soft guidelines.

"Arizona has raised the bar," he said. "Despite their huge debt, they have slashed corporate taxes, income taxes, property taxes, See Legislators on page B2

'Growing grapes in New Mexico is tough, and we're still learning," said Florent Lescombes of New Mexico Wineries in Deming, N.M.

He made the comment while also noting that in January, New Mexico Wineries won the Best White Wine in the Nation Award during the San Francisco Wine Competition with its Gewurztraminer white wine, which was selected from 5,000 wineries.

The Mimbres Valley is made up of sandy soil that allows water to penetrate deep to the roots, but it's also made up of alluvial layers

"You might have 100 acres of land with 10 different types of soils," Lescombes said. "And you might have one type of grape that grows well in one area. You move it 10 feet away, and it doesn't do well at all with the same type of grape and farm practices, amount of water, tillage and pruning.

increased funding to job incentive programs and lowered sales tax. They believe the private sector creates jobs, and we need to take that to heart. We can't ignore what the other states are

Other principles Barela touched on during his speech, included: a competitive local government structure, a competitive public education environment, increased capital availability and an environment that fosters innovation, an initiative that he said is crucial to the future of New Mexico.

"We are a global environment, and it is important we see it that way," Barela said. "We need to stay up to speed with global businesses, jobs, etc. The Chinese maybe be able to duplicate things, but they do not have the innovation."

In addition to his principles, Barela briefly touched on federal issues, specifically the nation's $14 trillion debt.

"We need to correct the climate in Washington," he said. "All of the principles can fit together – federal, state and local."

Following a questions-and-answer session, a majority of the attendees caravanned to Santa Teresa to see Barela's powerful speech put into effect with the signing of three bills.

Key legislative players who helped getting the bills passed and who also attended the event included Zoe Richmond, Union Pacific's director of public affairs, Arizona and New Mexico Corporate Relations; Sen. Mary Kay Papen; Rep. Jane Cullbert; Rep. Mary Helen Garcia; Sen. Cynthia Nava; Barela; and, of course, Martinez.

While each bill has weight of its own, together these pieces of legislation marked a monumental day for southern New Mexico.

"We have hit a home run," Garcia said.

Papen described southern New Mexico as "the stepchild that is often forgotten about," adding that today would change everything.

"(Senate Bill 179 and House Bill 523 - Locomotive Fuel Tax Gross Receipts Deduction) allows us to compete with Texas," Martinez said. "We need to be on the same playing field as Texas. They don't have a tax on locomotive fuel, and, now, we don't either."

Martinez also signed House Bill 24, authorizing special permits for the operation of certain overweight commercial vehicles near the southern New Mexico border, and House Bill 322, granting additional powers to the Border Authority.

"We're still learning. It might take you three to four years to figure it out, fix the problem and for each type of grape. But you cannot quit. Farming is always tough. But the recognition that you get in the end, like the Gewurztraminer's Best White Wine in the Nation Award, makes it worth it."

St. Claire grows 35 varieties of grapes on 180 acres near Lordsburg. The grapes use 2 to 2.5 acre-feet of water that is supplied by wells, underground lines and drip irriga-

The Deming winery contains 40,000 square feet, and Lescombes is planning to add 15,000 square feet. The winery has a production capacity of 500,000 gallons a year, but now the annual volume is 300,000 gallons.

Wineries also have to promote marketing, and Lescombes accomplishes that by expanding its bistro wine-tasting feature and restaurant near Mesilla and east of the present bistro. The bistro contains 4,000 square feet and Lescombes plans to enlarge it to about 10,000, including an open-air section for large receptions.

The bistro concept has gone through several stages. The site was formerly occupied by the Old West Brewery and then the Way Out West restaurant.

New Mexico Wineries opened its first bistro six years ago in Albuquerque, and opened the Mesilla bistro four years ago and another one last year in Farmington

"The bistros are a fine marketing tool," Lescombes said. "It teaches people the merits of wine and food together. The bistros have doubled our sales in the last three years. We sell about 10 different brands of wines."
"We pair wines with the menu," said

Lynne Ball of the Mesilla bistro. "Our servers are knowledgeable about wines. They can recommend what wines go best with foods on the menu."

Bistro manager Zan Steinberg said the bistro concept is to have customers feel comfortable with their meal with an international flair.

We question customers to find out might kind of wine they might like and pair it with the food," Steinberg said. "We try to find that balance between food and wine while customers can have fun with their

Finding help when you need it the most

Breast Cancer Support Group was created for a personal need, wish

Courtesy of the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico

When Bernadette Valdes lost her sister to ovarian cancer, she yearned for a group that could help her through the loss. Then, when she herself was diagnosed with breast cancer a year later, she needed a group to help her understand her illness and offer much needed support.

"I could not find accurate information from the doctor or hospital," Valdes said, "and I had questions with no answers – issues concerning wellness with nutrition, exercise, re-occurrence, prosthesis and all types of general breast cancer information. I especially needed someone to talk to for support."

As a trustee of what was then the Memorial Medical Center Foundation, now the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico (CFSNM), Valdes spoke to the foundation about the needs for a support group and Breast Cancer Support Group (BCSG) was formed with the foundation as the sponsor.

"My main goal was to help others with support, which I did not know how to give my sister," she said. "Our mission is to provide emotional support for all those touched by breast cancer, educate the general public on breast cancer issues and develop outreach strategies."

Over the past 16 years, with the foundation as a sponsor, the BCSG has been involved in many health-awareness functions and fundraisers, including an upcoming Chari-tea and Silent Auction from 1 to 4 p.m. Saturday, May 14, at the Kitchen Concept Showroom, 1990 E. Lohman Ave. The group will auction off donated items, such as lotions, potions, small accessories, inexpensive jewelry and other fun interest-COMMUNITY FOUNDATION

The Breast Cancer Support group meets the fourth Saturday of each month at MountainView Regional Medical Center from 10 to 11:45 a.m. For more information, contact Bernadette at 524-4373.

Through the CFSNM, the BCSG created the Endowment to Fight Cancer in Southern New Mexico. The endowment earns yearly distributable income, which income is added to the BCSG fund and from there it is used to pay for mammograms for underserved women.

"Most of these women do not have any insurance or means to pay," Valdes said. "We had funds to provide 24 mammograms in 2010, and 25 mammograms in

According to the BCSG, 1-out-of-7 women are diagnosed with breast cancer, and through their support group and the Endowment to Fight Cancer in Southern New Mexico, those touched by the illness can find the support they need, much like Valdes needed 16 years ago.

"We hope our mission and concern will become the community's passion of donating," Valdes said.

Dual credit pays more than double the reward

Cutting course funds could create more problems

Tracey Bryan Bridging the workforce

As the 2011 New Mexico state Legislature grappled with how to close a near half-billion budget deficit, funding for dual-credit courses found itself in the crosshairs, to the detriment of New Mexico's students.

Dual-credit courses are those college-level courses that students take in high school and earn credit in two places – credit toward high school graduation and credit toward a two- or four-year college degree. They are integrated into college-prep coursework as well as career and technical education. Dual-credit courses and accompanying textbooks are funded by the state just like public education.

Through dual-credit courses, students get exposure to the college environment and find out if they can handle college courses. For families that have never had a college attendee or a college graduate, dual-credit courses can be part of the path to a new definition of success for that student, their siblings and even future generations.

Sadly, the final budget passed by the House and Senate included cuts to dual-credit course funding for ninth- and 10th-graders. These courses are an easy target because, from the state's perspective, they are "double funded" the school district gets paid for the student and the college gets paid for the course. The cuts couldn't have come at a worse time for students and the state.

Dual-credit courses are an integral part of the state's first Early College High School - in which students, primarily first generation college attendees, will graduate from high school in four years with both their high school diploma and a two-year college degree. Dual-credit courses make accomplishing these simultaneous goals possible.

This innovative model for education is both effective (90 percent graduation rates across the country) and efficient (saves 16 percent on the cost to educate a student in a traditional high school). The students at the Arrowhead Park Early College High School – all ninth-graders have completed their first dual-credit course. All 116 students passed the course. Most importantly, no students have dropped out of this school – a huge accomplishment because ninth grade is the year in high school during which most dropouts occur.

Even outside the Early College High School, dual-credit courses are linked to increasing graduation rates and a higher likelihood that students will attend college. Dual-credit courses are woven into both college preparatory and career and technical education pathways, getting students further down the road toward graduating college with two- or four-year degrees by decreasing the length of time it takes

Additionally, a recent study by the University of New Mexico's Education Policy Research Center found that dual-credit courses were also linked to a reduced need for remediation. Remedial courses are college courses that students take because they failed to master them in high school and aren't ready for collegelevel courses. These remedial courses are truly "double funded," as taxpayers pay for students to get the same education twice.

According to the Alliance for Excellent Education, remediation costs the nation $3.7 billion per year – $1.4 billion for students who have recently completed high school. In New Mexico, the state would gain $32 million in annual savings and earning benefits if we reduced the need for remediation.

Conversely, remedial courses are proven indicators of future failure to complete college education. The same study showed that students who enroll in a remedial reading course are 41 percent more likely to drop out of college, and only 17 percent will receive a bachelor's degree within eight years.

Dual-credit courses are actually a good example of "getting what you pay for." The state pays for the student and the course and gets two outcomes for one student. The student won't have to go back and take that course later in college – it's done while they are still in high school.

More than that, dual-credit courses provide added value. In addition to credit in two places, you get a student who's more likely to graduate high school, more likely to go to college and become a contributing member of the 21st century workforce and less likely to need remediation. In doing so, they greatly reduce the likelihood they will be in poverty, unemployed, in jail and/or dependent on social services.

With all these benefits, we need to find ways to expand student participation in dual-credit courses, not limit it. It's certainly worth the

Great recession ending

Financial reforms are inadequate to avoid future repeat

Chris EricksonState of the Economy

When reporting on the strong employment gains last week – 218,000 new nonfarm jobs created – it was de rigueur to point out that such job growth only puts a small dent into the 8 million jobs lost. More than two years after the onset of the great recession, this is disappointing, but not unexpected.

In fact, an International Monetary Fund (IMF) study of recessions associated with financial crisis, such as the current United States recession, found that they last twice as long and are twice as deep as more typical recessions. By this standard, the great recession is right on course – 2011 should be better than 2010, 2012 should be better than 2011 and 2013 should be a normal year.

Rightly, government wants to avoid a repeat of the current situation. Unfortunately, the mechanism for doing this is the flawed Dodd-Frank Bill.

This legislation, passed last year, takes a number of steps to ensure financial stability, but fails to do the one thing that economists recommend most – dramatically increase capital requirements.

Capital, which consists of equity and qualifying long-term debt, provides a cushion should financial institutions run into trouble. Specifically, should a loss be incurred, it is the capital holders who must absorb the loss, giving regulators time to take corrective action.

Because capital holders take the first loss, it gives them an incentive to oversee management who otherwise would be inclined to take unwarranted risks. This is critical. By requiring adequate capital, we are harnessing market forces – that is, the self-interest of capital holders – to ensure sound financial practices. In this regard, a government bureaucrat is no match for a greedy, money-grubbing investor.

This is where Dodd-Frank falls down.

This is where Dodd-Frank falls down. Rather than impose adequate capital requirements, Dodd-Frank establishes the Financial Stability Oversight Council. Chaired by the Secretary of Treasury and consisting of representatives from most of the financial oversight agencies of the federal government, the Financial Stability Oversight Council is charged with ensuring the stability of "systemically important" financial institutions. That is, the council is in charge of those entities considered "too big to fail."

So rather than use the market discipline of strict capital requirements to regulate "too-big-to-fail" entities, Dodd-Frank creates a new council consisting of the same old regulators who failed to prevent the current recession.

The sad thing is that we have a perfectly fine example of how to deal with systemic risk. In the 1990s, the FDIC systematically shut down banks that had exhausted their capital. Hundreds of banks were closed with little impact on the FDIC or the economy. Meanwhile, savings and loans were allowed to operate with inadequate capital. When action was forced on the federal government, the result was several hundred billion dollars in losses to taxpayers.

The sub-prime mortgage crisis that triggered our current problems is much larger than the savings and loans crisis of the 1990s, but the principle is the same. When you impose and enforce strict capital requirements, you mitigate the losses from reckless behavior. Ignore capital requirements, and the result can be disastrous.

$269.8 million to spend and nowhere to spend It!

Business opportunities abound throughout Downtown Las Cruces

Gary Sandler's

Real Estate Connection

Talk about an opportunity with a capital "O"!

Have you any idea how many people work and live in the Downtown Las Cruces area? Have you any idea how much they earn in wages and salaries on an annual basis? Have you any idea how many retail businesses serve the folks who live and work in the Downtown area? If not, you're in for one heck of a supersized surprise.

The surprise in question came to light when the University of New Mexico's Bureau of Business and Economic Research released an assessment of the state of our Las Cruces area economy, with special emphasis on the pluses and minuses of our Downtown area.

Both the New Mexico Economic Development Department and New Mexico MainStreet funded the study. New Mexico MainStreet is New Mexico's division of the National Main Street Center in Washington, D.C., part of the National Trust for Historic Preservation. Our local Las Cruces Downtown organization is, in turn, one of 24 MainStreet organizations in the state whose communities are in the process of revitalizing their downtown areas.

While the study drew interesting and generally positive conclusions regarding the state of our area's economy, it was clear that Downtown Las Cruces was the star of the show. Why? The answers can be found in my three opening questions

Question No. 1: How may people work and live Downtown or within three minutes of the Main Street District? Would you believe just over 18,000 Las Cruces employers, employees and residents? It's true. Four thousand, four hundred forty-four (yes, 4,444) of them go to work every Monday through Friday in the Main Street District, which is bordered by Picacho Avenue on the north, Colorado Avenue on the south, Alameda Boulevard on the west and Campo Street on the east, and measures more than 1 square mile in area.

Another 3,118 people live in the Alameda and Mesquite neighborhoods adjacent to Downtown. Two thousand, one hundred ten of those folks live in the Alameda area to the west, with the remaining 874 residents living in the Mesquite neighborhood to the east. But wait, there's more! Another 10,500 people live within three minutes of Downtown. That adds up to a total of 18,062 Las Crucens who live and work in our Downtown area.

Question No 2: How much do those 18,000-plus folks earn each year in salaries and wages? Are you sitting down? Perhaps you should lie down. They earn $269.8 million annually. That's more than a quarter-billion – with a "B" – dollars. Keep in mind that the people I'm referring to either work or live in the Downtown district or within three minutes of its boundaries, not in other parts of the city.

The largest slice of the income pie goes to the 4,444 Downtown area employees. Together, they account for 11 percent of the jobs and 17 percent of the wages paid by all employers in the city. In addition, their annual income of $182.7 million is 62 percent above the Las Cruces' citywide average annual wage.

The Alameda area to the west of Downtown and the Mesquite area directly east of Downtown, account for an additional $18 million in annual area income. The total annual income for the 874 folks living in the Alameda area is estimated at $7 million, while the 2,110 people living in the Mesquite neighborhood generate another $10.1 million each year. Not to be forgotten are the 134 people actually living in the Downtown area who, together earn about $900,000 each year. That's a total of $18 million generated by the good folks living Downtown and in the Alameda and Mesquite neighborhoods.

On a side note, the study also estimated that the total retail spending by these three neighborhood households is around $10.1 million per year. Of that amount, residents spend about $2.2 million on groceries, $1.2 million on entertainment and recreation and $800,000 on clothing.

Then there are the 10,500 additional folks who live outside the Downtown, Alameda and Mesquite neighborhoods, but within three minutes of the Downtown district. Together, those 10.5 thousand people earn another $77 million annually. Have you done the math? It totals a whopping $268.9 million annually.

Question No. 3: How many retail businesses currently serve the 18,000 or so Downtown area people who earn almost $270 million each year? Not nearly enough, according to the UNM study. As of 2006, only 11 retail businesses with a total of 105 employees were located in the Main Street District. At the same time, there were only 12 food services and drinking establishments in the area, employing 281 people. The remainder of the Downtown jobs are in public administration, finance and insurance, utility companies, educational services, transportation and warehousing as well as a few other occupations.

More than 18,000 people currently work and live in the Downtown district or within three minutes of its boundaries, earning almost $270 million per year, with little in the way of retail businesses and restaurants to adequately service their daily needs. As a result, the Downtown area currently accounts for only 1.6 percent of all retail activities in the city and only 2 percent of all employment in the Downtown area.

The report also noted that in vibrant commercial districts across New Mexico, retail activities account for 20 to 25 percent of Downtown employment.

What's missing from our Downtown? Personal service businesses, such as beauty shops, cleaners, florists, drug stores, supermarkets and additional restaurants are on the list along with boutique retailers such as Trader Joe's.

Is that all there is, you ask? Not by a long shot. Thanks to our state and federal legislators, the City of Las Cruces, Doña Ana County, the New Mexico Economic Development Department, the New Mexico Main Street Program, the Las Cruces Downtown organization and the citizens of Las Cruces and the surrounding areas, our Downtown revitalization effort is in full swing and making amazing progress. More construction is just around the corner.

What's in it for those who might consider locating their business in Downtown Las Cruces? About 300,000 locals and visitors attended events Downtown last year. In addition, thousands more routinely frequented the Downtown area to conduct business and sightsee. If that's not a recipe for opportunity, I don't know what would be.

See you at closing!

Las Cruces leader is proud to call the City of the Crosses 'home'

By Samantha Roberts

Las Cruces Bulletin

After living and traveling throughout much of the Southwest, John Muñoz, site director at Sitel, said he loves calling Las Cruces home.

Muñoz grew up in New Braunfels, Texas, and didn't travel far to go to college. He attended Texas State University in San Marcos, Texas (known as Southwest Texas State University from 1969-2003) and graduated with a bachelor's degree in political science and communications.

"I have always wanted to be involved in the public sector because I wanted to do good," Muñoz said.

Looking for a part-time job, Muñoz said he started working at MCI, a call center in Austin, Texas. Little did he know this part-time job would become his career.

"As time progressed, I got more involved because I liked the dynamic and there were entrepreneurship opportunities," he said. "Then they started making cuts in the public sector, and ... well ... I have been at it ever since."

The call center creates an environment that fosters challenges and overcoming problems, Muñoz said, adding that this is also the type of environment in which he thrives.

"Every day, there is a new challenge," he said. "I enjoy taking these on, fixing them and then trying to excel. I feel like I have control of my own destiny."

After Muñoz began working at Sitel, he lived in Oklahoma, Texas, Arizona and New Mexico, but said, "Las Cruces is a jewel that I'm is proud to call home.

"When the opportunity first arose (to move to Las Cruces), I didn't think much of the city,"

Muñoz said. "I remembered stopping at a gas station once and thinking it was a sleepy, old town."

Although Muñoz admits he disliked the drive from El Paso into Las Cruces, because of the "different smells," he said the Organ Mountains, stunning landscapes and tour of the city sealed the deal.

"I think Roberto's was the first restaurant we went to," Muñoz said. "We wanted to get a feel for the people, and during my first trip, I fell in love with the city.

"My wife had the same experience. She was skeptical on the drive to Las Cruces, but couldn't wait to see the Organ Mountains."

Other than the breathtaking views and sunny skies, Muñoz also said he saw unmatched potential in the City of the Crosses.

"There is so much in store for this area and the future of Las Cruces, including the spirit of creativity, college atmosphere, natural resources and innovation," he said. "Doña Ana Community College is progressive and forward thinking. I have not seen a highered community college such as DACC, ever. I have seen so many community colleges, but this is very cool."

In addition to singing its praises, Muñoz also sits on the DACC advisory board and is involved in other organizations, such as the Doña Ana Arts Council, Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce, The Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance, Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico and the Hispano Chamber of Commerce de Las Cruces, which he serves as president.

"Our mission at the Hispano chamber is to advocate for all businesses," Muñoz said. "Our diverse group of members focuses on culture and business development as well as education. This is important because our educational force is the future workforce."

In his professional life, Muñoz said the growth and potential at Sitel is just as exciting as the growth of the city.

"We are ready," he said. "This is an exciting time with the expansion and aggressive recruiting campaign."

Sitel is currently recruiting hundreds of new employees, especially bilingual speaking, to accommodate an additional client.

"Basically, this is one of the largest growth spurts we have had since we opened our doors," Muñoz said. "We will be hiring hundreds of new employees and adding new members to our family. We are looking for people who know how to treat others well. We have had a robust number of folks apply."

Muñoz credits the large applicant turnout to the positive work environment and support from the community.

"It's precisely this mosaic of people which makes Sitel Las Cruces strong and unique," he

the first week-and-a-half because the work was harder than expected, Muñoz tributes the high-caliber training programs and group support to his personal success and said he tries to create that same environment at Sitel.

"We have a superior training program, which takes you through the trek of learning processes and technology," he said. "These different learning styles work together with the secret ingredient to our success – our people. New employees quickly come to realize this is a great place to work.

"Here the sky is the limit, but we know not everyone is going to stay here forever. Most people stay three to four years. It's all a part of the walk of life."

Muñoz said the future of Sitel is bright and he hopes to continue to see steady growth.

"The Las Cruces branch started with three employees and now the company is 100 strong," he said. "Even in a bad economy, we have been able to enjoy ourselves. What else do I want to happen in the next 10 years? Maybe lose 10 pounds."

In Good Company: Mercedez Salon & Day Spa

A talent founded by chance

Hair stylist perseveres during adversity, challenges

By Samantha Roberts

In 1992, Mercedez Hollister started to get an itch to try something new – that itch turned into Mercedez Salon & Day Spa.

Hollister, who graduated from New Mexico State University with a bachelor's degree in criminal justice, started her career in the state courts. But in 2008, Hollister was diagnosed with a brain tumor that caused her to resign and she knew "things would never quite be the same."

"I was aware that changes would need to happen," she said. "I knew things would be different."

After getting her full cosmetic license, Hollister's dreams grew into owning her own salon, but decided to work under Master Hair Design for the experience.

"I really saw it as a second shot at life," Hollister said. "I don't take anything for granted, and really wanted to do something that made me happy."

As time progressed, Hollister was ready to start on her own. "I thought, 'I could do this myself," she said.

So in September 2010, Hollister opened Mercedez Salon & Day Spa, which specializes in high-caliber salon treatments. "I have been everywhere – taking classes, from Las Vegas and "I have been everywhere – taking classes, from Las Vegas and California to New York, Florida and everywhere in between," she said. It was my goal to learn every type of hairstyle – fine, course, straight, curly. They are all different and I wanted to master them all."

Hollister said she also expects the same high quality from her staff.

"I like them to be open to change because I like to train them," she said. "I want everyone that works here to be able to offer the same services that I offer – I want consistency."

Other than being flexible to change, Hollister said she also looks to surround herself around positive people, at work and throughout her life.

"Any future employee must be optimistic," she said, adding that her optimism helped her cope with her illness. "There is no negativity here. I can't stand it. Work should be fun and enjoyable."

Offering services that extend beyond basic hair salons,

Hollister said she hopes her salon, which is located in Hotel Encanto de Las Cruces, becomes a spa destination for locals and tourists.

"We offer it all," she said, adding that the growth in Las Cruces and lack of similar businesses encouraged her to open her company. "Our services include body sliming wraps, which help with weight loss – inch loss, detoxifies, tones, tightens and reduce cellulite. Most women are drawn to this service after they hear about all of the positive benefits."

Other services include facials, all hair services, massages (30 minutes, one hour and 90 minutes), waxing, manicures and pedicures and spa and wedding packages.

"We also offer gel nails," Hollister said. "They are acrylic, last longer and are more gentle on the natural nail."

Most people go to El Paso for these services, when they are actually offered right here in Las Cruces, she said.

"I have taken all of the amenities I used to have around me in California and brought them here," she said.

Even though Hollister is around relaxing treatments, such as massages all day, and said her work environment is always positive, there have been some struggles to owning her own business.

"It has been quite a challenge," she said. "The hardest thing has probably been the people. Not that they are difficult, but wanting to get them everything they want. I have set high expectations for myself. I want to give people a high quality of service. I want everyone to have a wonderful experience here."

Hollister also said she and her employees have stayed active in a community that has supported her business, such as giving to nonprofits.

"It is important to be a part of the community – to put back into a community that has given me so much," she said.

After successfully running her salon for less than a year, Hollister is getting that itch again and said she is already ready for more.

"We are going to merge with Oasis Body Treatment and Aging," she said. "We are going to make Hotel Encanto de Las Cruces and true relaxation oasis. This will be the two biggest spas merging and we are very excited."

In addition to the merge, Hollister said the services they plan to offer will cater to larger parties.

"We are adding (several) new facial beds," she said. "Instead

"We are adding (several) new facial beds," she said. "Instead of coming here with three friends and having to take turns, everyone can get pampered at the same time."

There is really no preparation for entrepreneurship, but having prior experience and ownership in other businesses has definitely been helpful.

What advice would you give to others starting a business?

The only advice I can offer to anyone with the dream of owning their own business is to go for it, follow your dreams and let no one tell you it can't be done.

What items do you carry, in brief, and their price ranges?

We carry most of the professional products available with prices that vary from $10 to $60, depending on the hair or skincare needs.

AVANCE auctioning "heartart" to help young families

Shall we dance?

Program an enriching experience for local celebs and dance students

By David Edwards

Las Cruces Bulletin

In 1974, Leo Sayer sang a song titled "Long Tall Glasses," that told a story of a "man of the road, a hobo by name" who was forced to dance for his supper.

There was ham an' there was turkey, there was caviar

An' there was long tall glasses, with wine up to yar.

An' then somebody grabbed me, an' threw me outta my chair

Said before you can eat, you gotta dance like Fred Astaire.

After initial resistance he ultimately discovers:

Of course I can dance, of course I can dance

I'm sure I can dance, I'm sure I can dance

I can dance.

I would definitely have starved because as Sayer sings at first:

You know I can't dance, you know I can't dance.

Anyone who knows me and has seen my participation in various musically oriented stage endeavors can attest to this. I dance about as good as I swim – and I swim like a rock.

That's why I'm so impressed with those who can and have nothing but respect for those who have participated in past versions of Look Who's Dancing – a program created in 2009 to help raise money to support the New Mexico State University DanceSport Company – and those gutsy individuals who are being thrown "outta their chairs" this year.

In addition to helping the DanceSport team offset expenses incurred during the year by presenting performances and participating in various competitions, the hosts of Look Who's Dancing – The DanceSport Society (essentially the team's booster club) and NMSU's Dance Program – want to further the art form and encourage social dancing in Las Cruces.

Look Who's Dancing committee member David Clements talked about the improvement of the DanceSport program and some of their future hopes.

"We have raised just over $19,000 dollars in the two years of Look Who's Dancing," Clements said. "At a recent competition in Arizona, involving 25 colleges, two of their teams qualified for nationals and a number of others finished in the top 10. NMSU wants to bring in staff members who have been national and world champions to teach dance students. They want to be the top dance program in the country. And, of course, that takes money. That's why this fundraiser was created in the first place."

NMSU is offering a unique opportunity for its dance majors and minors – not only can they receive the training to be professional dance instructors or themselves professional dance competitors, but they can also learn how to become professional dance judges.

With what seems like a new television dance show each week – with granddaddy of them all "Dancing With The Stars" still going strong – dancing's entertainment profile and numbers of participants seem to be on the rise.

And the whole concept mimics the DWTS model. Local personalities and community and business leaders are paired with a member of the DanceSport company. Each team practices and prepares for seven to eight weeks before the final competition, which will be Saturday, April 16, at the Pan American Center.

According to Clements, this year's competition will up the number of judges from three to five.

"Three of the judges are professional dance instructors," he said. "But two will be former contestants (2009's Emily Guerra and last year's Dolores Connor). We hope that the addition of two judges that know what it takes to participate in the competition will balance the dance instructors' scoring based on technical execution."

Last year, three former contestants voted on an Entertainer Award, so that will be eliminated this year. However, the audience can still select a People's Choice winning couple by dropping dollars (one dollar for one vote) in buckets with each couple's picture on it. The couple with the most money wins the People's Choice Award. This contest will stimulate audience interest and also increase the amount.

This year, there are five female contestants and three males. Each one has a mandatory dance to prepare that best shows off the physical skills of their particular gender. The women will all do the cha cha and the men will all do the East Coast swing. The contestants' dance partners will select an alternative or choice dance they feel can be learned in the time allotted that will best show off what the contestants can do.

The alternative dances this year are: Mesilla Mayor Nora Barraza – Rumba; NMSU's Paul Couture – foxtrot; Amanda Cruz – salsa/mambo; Lynz Green of 99.5 The Rocket – waltz; Savonne Griffin of FirstLight Federal Credit Union – West Coast swing; Audrey Hartley – American tango; Lucas Peerman of the Las Cruces Sun-News – Night Club twostep; and Lt. Col. Andrew Taylor of NMSU's Army ROTC program – the Hustle

Other departments at NMSU have thrown their support behind LWD, for example, the School of Hotel, Restaurant and Tourism Management is creating desserts that will be sold throughout the evening at the Tango Terrace.

Look Who's Dancing not only presents an entertainment for the community but offers an opportunity for the community to get behind the DanceSport program and, through the fundraising effort, will help it reach that top echelon of dance programs in the country.

I can dance, I really hit the floor Ah feels good, look at me dancin'

Recipients respond to recognition

All have contributed significantly to the arts community

By David Edwards

The Doña Ana Arts Council will recognize contributors to the arts community during its 25th annual Arts Awards at 6 p.m. Friday, April 8, at the Rio Grande Theatre, 211 N. Main St.

Festivities will begin at 5:30 p.m. with cocktails and dedication of the Clute/Muggenburg Gallery in the Rio Grande Theatre. Jan Seale Clute and Carolyn Seale Muggenburg are the granddaughters of the original owner of the theater, and donated the building to the Doña Ana Arts Council to restore and manage.

In keeping with the era, old photographs of Las Cruces will hang in the galleries, and images from Carolyn Muggenburg's scrapbook will be on display.

After the brief ceremony, guests will enter the theater for the

Each year, the arts council honors those in the community who have given significantly of their time, talents and financial contributions to the community.

Doug Roby – Community Arts Award: Individual

"I started working with the local high schools helping to give kids something to do to keep them off the streets. I am just one of the workhorses who likes to stay on the sidelines helping out and doing my thing. This is really a community award because it recognizes a lot of people – teachers, parents, theater people. It's a much bigger picture than just me."

DEVASTHALI

Ammu Devasthali – Excellence in Public Service Award

"In these tough economic times we often find that the programs that are most adversely affected in schools and universities are those connected to the arts. It is therefore imperative that the people in the community step up and help to keep these programs going. If I have been able to help in any small way to focus attention on the arts in our community, I count that as a win."

PALOMARES

Rene Palomares – Arts and Education Award

"I looked up some of the past recipients, and it's definitely a humbling experience. From what people told me, I am probably the youngest recipient, and the nervousness about the presentation is starting to kick in."

GRIFFINS

George and Maggie Griffin - Newcomer's Award

"Even being on the (DAAC) board, I really had no idea that we had done work worthy of an award. We were quite surprised and very flattered. We care a lot about Las Cruces – we think it's a great place to live. This is our home, and we wanted to contribute to the community. We are just volunteers who really care about DAAC and the Rio Grande Theatre."

SHEARER

Jim Shearer – Papen Award

"This is obviously a tremendous honor. I have been in Las Cruces for 20 years and this makes me really feel a part of the community – like a local. And while I feel proud of the support for my efforts, this is really a group award. I work with so many great people on the (NMSU) Cultural Series, like Bobbie Welch and the folks at the Pan American Center. And there was such a wonderful group who worked on the Jam Session. We served more than 10,000 people, and I think that bodes well for the future.

Thomas Gale – Dr. John Glowacki Lifetime Achievement Award

Tom Gale will be accepting this award for his late father. "My father would have been very humbled and wondered why he was getting an award, but he would have been very honored. Dr. Glowacki was instrumental in getting my father to apply for the position of dean of Arts and Sciences at New Mexico State University. My dad was very focused on academia with me and my brother, but felt strongly that the arts were an important piece of the pie. He always supported the arts wherever we lived and always came to our recitals and concerts no matter how terrible we were."

Judge Robert Brack – Art in Public Places Award

"I am certainly honored and proudly accept this award on behalf of the great team we had in place for our public art program (at the federal courthouse). Heather Pollard was a great help and the inclusion of the local artists as part of our permanent display was the brainchild of Ron Saltzman. I have recommended to the General Services Administration that our process become a model, and they are planning to adopt it for future building projects. So it has affected both the national and

The Potters' Guild of Las Cruces -Community Arts Award: Organization

Barbara Williams, guild president, said, "The guild is thrilled to get this award this year, which is our 30th anniversary. The guild sponsors many activities and educational programs; probably the most satisfying one is Empty Bowls. Started in 1993, the first one in New Mexico, it is designed to support El Caldito and feed the hungry. It is very rewarding because the whole community comes together: individuals make bowls, restaurants donate soup, clay and glazes are donated and more than 1,000 residents attend the lunch. The last several years the Guild has raised more than $20,000 for El Caldito."

Fraud is an 'Inside Job'

Film identifies the greedy hand in society's pockets

Review by Jeff Berg

Feel that hand in your pocket? It's not mine, and although others may think otherwise, it is not necessarily the hand of the "guv'mint." Certainly it is at times, but take a better look at the face connected with that hand.

It is the phantom hand of someone you don't know and probably didn't even know existed. Even worse, before they put that hand in your pocket, they didn't even buy you dinner. They just cheated you outright and you gleefully bought them dinner.

The Oscar-winning film "Inside Job" is another of a small cadre of films that tries to, and in this case successfully, use layman's language, explaining the timeline, exploring the methodology and hanging accurate accusatory nametags on those who are really responsible - mostly different "financial institutions" that are responsible for a lot of our current worldwide financial horror stories.

I doubt there is a person in this country who has not been affected by this massive outpouring of greed, most of which was caused by those who cooked up phantom (aka "looks good on paper") financial schemes and ignorant boneheads who thought that their $10-an-hour job would allow them to have what used to be called the "American Dream" back around 1950 when something like that actually existed.

There hasn't been an American Dream for years. Corporate hacks and cretin politicians have seen to that. I note the latest scam, boiling out of Wisconsin, to eliminate bargaining rights for union employees. Well, ahem, who else has jobs that pay more than minimum wage and don't require that you get elected to office or have a friend or brother-inlaw who does?

Umm, excuse me? Wasn't the American Dream once based on jobs that paid a fair wage, offered certain benefits and a livable retirement, and weren't those jobs often part of a union operation? Did the fry cook at Woolworth's in 1955 have the American Dream? Not 66 'Inside Job' tells you what you need to know ...

> If you do a bit of research, you will see what has happened and what will continue to happen as long as we have corporate junkies who can live a lifestyle of grandeur (one wonders why anyone wants to live like that), while eliminating jobs and entire corporations

Dominique Strauss-Kahn, managing director of the International Monetary Fund, is interviewed in the Oscar-winning documentary "Inside Job," which exposes the financial industry.

via the "global" economy system. Think NAFTA is good? Just ask a woman who lives in a maquiladora in Juárez. Or don't you even know what a maquiladora is? Won't matter soon, since they are closing left and right so corporations can ship jobs to China and pay those people less than the $70 a week that a maquila worker receives.

"Inside Job" does not really touch on the paragraphs I've just written, rather it stays in the corpulent corporate boardrooms where power-drunk financial wizards have created the greatest fraud ever conceived in this country. There is no financial recovery, and there will never be because "prosperous" years prior to this financial crisis were fake as well. existing only on paper.

"Inside Job" tells you what you need to know, but you should also know that there is nothing you can do about what has happened and what continues to happen. It won an Oscar for being as brave as it is, but no amount of tea party or anyone else's rhetoric will ever allow things to be the way they "were."

But as Mick LaSalle noted in the San Francisco Chronicle, you can achieve a sort of "smart anger" as you witness the bankers, economists, pundits, traders and other financial-based riff-raff who have ripped you off and continue to do so. Bought gas lately?

It has nothing to do with the fictional "lack' of a "birth certificate" or government-supported health care, but rather it has to do with greed, a sociopathic attitude toward the masses and the lack of common sense that infects this country.

As the old saying goes, "If you're not outraged, you're not paying attention.

Just make sure your rage goes in the right direction.

There is nothing wrong with true socialism, says jeffberg@lascrucesbulletin. com. These reviews reflect his opinion of the movie, not that of anyone else connected with the film society.

'Gabriel Over the White House'

Political fable is a can't-miss film

The CineMatinee for Saturday, April 9, is "Gabriel Over the White House" (1933, 86 minutes, not rated). Film historian Jay Duncan will be present during the screening.

'Gabriel Over the White House" is one of the most amazing artifacts to have emerged in the DVD era. The film was little seen when it came out and prints were out of general circulation for many years. Its notoriety as a political fable grew in infamy. Seeing it is a truly amazing experience.

"Gabriel" was produced by newspaper magnate William Randolph Hearst - the same gent that became the model for Orson Welles' "Citizen Kane" (1941). The film is almost a dramatized political campaign speech. It sits right atop the major issues of the Great Depression era – unemployment, homelessness, Prohibition bootlegging and mobsters. It is a fantasy of a desire for ruthlessly decisive action to solve these sweeping problems.

Walter Huston, as The President, is initially portrayed as a flabby politician who ignores the pressing problems until an accident and the ambiguous suggestion of angelic intervention. It is what he becomes after that point that makes the film so amazing (and notorious). Newly reformed, he initiates martial law; fires his weak-minded Congress; nationalizes bootlegging; and mobilizes the Army against mobsters, court-martials them before a military tribunal and sentences them to execution before firing squad even admittedly without any evidence.

Although, it is when "Gabriel Over the White House" finally starts to take on U.S. foreign relations that it starts to embody all the most obnoxious attitudes of American imperialist bombast, wherein the U.S. builds up a massive Naval power (the scenes of which contain an interesting early prediction of an Air Force of bombers), all to scare other nations into paying outstanding war debts. "The United States must have the greatest Navy in the world because we want world peace," The President says at one point. A truly unique film," says moria.

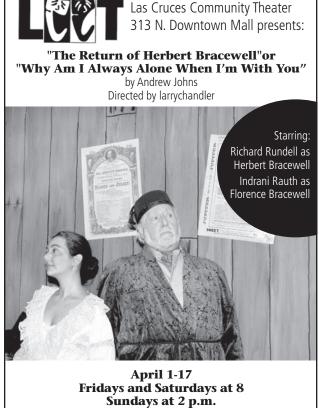

Join Duncan for a fascinating look into this obscure, yet contemporary ognized film historian, archivist and collector. He has been film program chairman, guest speaker and panelist to over a dozen film conventions.

CineMatinee is a unique blend of movies presented by the Mesilla Valley Film Society which showcases unique films, past and present, often with an emphasis on life in the west - which could mean the new west, the old west, or anything in between - and "movies that missed us" – films that are notable but never had a lot of publicity.

The series is designed to show area residents that film is a form of art and education as well as entertainment! At least one film a month for this series has a "New Mexico Connection," drawing from the vast pool of movies made in the state (nearly 500) or perhaps featuring a star/story from New Mexico talent - film festival-quality movies in an old adobe theater.

Unless otherwise noted, screening time is 1:30 p.m., and admission is $4 for everyone except film society members who are admitted for $1. The theater is located one-half block south of the Mesilla Plaza. For more information, call 524-8287 and

'Bracewell' is sweet, charming fluff

LCCT play is a tour de force for Rundell

Review by David EdwardsLas Cruces Bulletin

Richard Rundell – a local stage veteran for more than 30 years – always says he is best at playing "bumblers." Those older fellows with a touch of pomposity, perhaps a touch of self-importance and a more than an average dose of blowhard are what he deems his specialties. But he undersells himself. He can also be a commanding force on stage in everything from Shakespeare (both comic and tragic) to 1930s screwball comedy and contemporary dramas. He can also charm your socks off.

It is a blending of the puffed up and charming that makes for an enjoyable evening (or afternoon) of theater in Andrew Johns' "The Return of Herbert Bracewell or Why Am I Always Alone When I'm With You," currently playing at the Las Cruces Community Theatre, 313 N. Main St.

Directed by one of LCCT's most experienced directors, the soon-to-be-departing Larry Chandler, Rundell is impressively alone on stage for about 90 percent of the first act, where he rambles through his memories of a less-than-stellar theatrical career.

It seems that our hero has never really been in the limelight, playing peripheral characters, such as servants or guards – a "second soldier from the left" sort of career. He has had some juicy roles such as Marley's Ghost (but never Scrooge) in "A Christmas Carol" or Julius Caesar (who is assassinated early in Shakespeare's version), but never Marc Antony. The critic describes his Iago in "Othello" as "beyond praise" – well, you get the picture.

We discover that a fellow actor/soothsayer has predicted he will die at either age 78 or 87 (she was upside down when the numbers appeared to her), and it is going to be his birthday shortly. He will either die (he believes) within the next few minutes or he will have another nine years.

In the meantime, Herbert is planning a comeback (can you come back to a career you never really had?) – a one-man show of his "greatest roles" sprinkled with some of his reminiscences. He relates a number of those memories to us while rambling around his attic (a fun set created by Chandler and LCCT resident whiz Doug Roby), which is filled with posters, scripts, trunks, old props and costumes – including a life-size version of himself named Homer (by local artist Flo Hosa Dougherty) that he had made to "take the fall" during a precarious stunt involving a tumble into a chasm. There is even a stuffed raven and a pet leech among the clutter.

Enter Herbert's wife Florence (Indrani Rauth), who reminds him that he is turning 87 and that he has forgotten the last nine years. In fact, there are many details about Herbert's life that seemed to have slipped away. Just a small detail is Florence's presence in the house as Herbert has told us of her dalliance with another actor and running off with same.

Florence is 31 years Herbert's junior and had an acting career filled with leading roles. The two reminisce, bicker a bit about details of those memories, engage in dueling death scenes and drink teapot martinis.

We easily forget that Rauth is considerably too young for the role, and she creates a believable "grand dame" of the theater. She and Rundell play off each other nicely, and we enjoy having the record set straight about plays they have done and actors they have worked with, including the crazy Irishman who temporarily swept Florence away.

Florence suggests that perhaps Herbert's one-man show – while a wonderful idea – might need her name to help launch it. Will Herbert allow some of his thunder to be stolen, or will he insist on it being strictly a solo effort?

Kiva Patio Café is made to order

Like dinner at an old friend's

By David Edwards

I have always liked the atmosphere of the building on the corner of South Tornillo Street and East Amador Avenue – it has housed a number of Mexican-food venues over the years. First it was Fajitas, then one of my all-time favorites – Little Nellie's – and now the Kiva Patio Café.

It used to be a house, in fact, and the adobe walls, heavy vigas in the ceiling, heavy wooden furniture and tiled floors just make for the right feel when it comes to Southwestern cuisine.

I now discover that all three of those aforementioned eating establishments had something in common - Kiva's owner Maria Subia, whose connection goes all the way back to when the house was just a house.

Subia was a silent partner in the first two ventures, working behind the scenes. Finally, about 10 years ago, she decided to buy out her other partners and take over the operation herself. That's when the Kiva was born.

Subia is definitely making things happen – cooking and serving things up – while manager and server George Cheng is the face out front everyone knows.

Subia has been in the restaurant business longer than she cares to say. She is also extremely camera shy, being perfectly content to stay in the background. But she prides herself in the family feeling of the place and the homemade style of the food.

"It's like eating at your house," she said. "Or at your friend's house."

Kiva's menu is extensive to say the least – with 135 items, including an entire page of vegetarian items.

"I came up with that because a lot of my friends are vegetarian," Subia said, "and they complain about that. They go out, and they have to dig through the whole menu to find out what they can eat. We decided to just put it all in one place."

My first trip had me not looking at vegetarian options, but for something to close out the last restaurant profile before the end of the Bulletin's weight loss challenge. Since the detox part of my diet is over, I wanted something with corn (not fried) tortillas now that I am able to add that grain back into my eating plan.

George directed me toward the tacos al pastor with chicken and was more than willing to make sure there was no cheese on the tacos or beans. He encouraged me to slather on the salsa, the first of which I had eaten right out of the bowl using only a fork – no chips.

'Go ahead. Pour it on," he said, as he brought my entrée along with a second bowl. "Lots of people just drink it."

It was very tasty with a solid kick – a nice addition to the soft chicken tacos, rice and beans.

Lunch buddy, my mom and sister joined me the next day, and we pretty much were all over the map with our choices. Sis totally surprised me by having the vegetarian tacos with ranchera beans instead of meat - one with green chile and one with red. Mom went for one of her mainstays – the chicken flautas, and Jack tried the Kiva chowder with shrimp and avocado – a huge bowl by the way. I had to try the red chile pork with corn tortillas. Everything won our hearty approval.

of the kiva that is the restaurant's namesake

One thing I didn't get to sample was the chocolate tres leches cake - the only place in town I know of where you can get it.

Subia prides herself in making everything from scratch and using local ingredients, especially local chile.

'We try to have something for everybody," Subia said. "For the vegetarians, for the people who like their chile, steaks and potatoes and seafood."

People still ask for items on the menu of previous restaurant incarnations. I fondly remember the red and green "Christmas" smothered burritos the "double barrel" burrito from Little Nellie's. Subia is happy to accommodate those

'Since everything is made to order we can add this or take away that," she said, adding that some people even order enchiladas without chile. "But people tell me they love to come here because they can eat what they want to eat. And I'll cook it the way they want it."

Sometimes Subia will prepare items that aren't even on the

"We try to cater to everyone," she said. "Just ask, and we can cook you just about anything you want. That's always our motto.

"We have one lady who makes a special trip from Ruidoso once a week," Cheng said. "She comes here because nobody else can cook for her except Maria. She has a lot of dietary problems.

"Maria is really what makes things go around here. She is behind everything."

And Subia is much like the actual kiva that sits in one corner of the restaurant and was at one time used to cook those homemade food items - she's the real deal.

Hoppin' down the bunny trail

Can a human find true happiness with a rabbit?

Review by David EdwardsLas Cruces Bulletin

I wasn't really much in the mood for a "kid" movie. Here I was on a Saturday night with a theater full of the little darlings – complete with crying, talking, bathroom and concession stand trips.

Why wasn't I ogling Michelle Monaghan in "Source Code" or Emily Blunt in "The Adjustment Bureau" instead of James Marsden and a computer-generated bunny? The frivolous previews of inane-looking coming attractions almost made me change theaters at the last minute. Heather Graham as Aunt Opal in "Judy Moody and the Not Bummer Summer"? This was Rollergirl in "Boogie Nights!"

But I stuck it out. And believe it or not, it didn't take long before I found myself – along with most of the audience – swept up in "Hop." At least I think they were swept up. I don't think they were bored. They laughed at stuff and weren't too restless. They were paying attention – pretty much.

The Pink Berets – the Easter Bunny's personal bodyguards – search for his missing son.

Our story begins on Easter Island (which may be one of those touches where cleverness is likely lost on the younger viewers) with E.B. – the young hare or heir to the Easter Bunny crown – playing bongos on top of one of those Easter Island statues. This is the day that our young rabbit hero is given the "all-of-this-will-be-yours" speech by Dad (current Head Bunny voiced by Hugh Laurie). The Easter egg factory is quite a place to behold – all those chocolate eggs, gummy thingies, chocolate bunnies and marshmallow chickies were more than enough to start craving a Peep or Cadbury egg.

We even get to see the Easter Bunny load up his egg-shaped

We even get to see the Easter Bunny load up his egg-shaped "sleigh" – pulled by not eight tiny reindeer but lots of little yellow chicks – and deliver some baskets and hide some eggs.

One specific delivery is to the home of Fred O'Hare, a young California boy who witnesses this spectacular sight, but by the time he gets downstairs with his camera, bunnies, sleighs, chicks and all have disappeared leaving only baskets and goodies. Of course, no one believes he actually saw the Easter Bunny himself.

Flash-forward and Fred is a direction-less slacker who can't seem to find a job or his niche – much to his father's (Gary Cole) dismay. Back on Easter Island, E.B. (voiced by Russell Brand) is much more interested in being a drummer than taking over the family business. He takes off – through one of the high-tech rabbit holes which allow instantaneous transport to anyplace in the world (helping with the Easter Bunny's onenight worldwide journey) and ends up in Hollywood.

E.B. and Fred's worlds collide – literally, Fred nearly runs him over – and feigning injury, E.B. convinces Fred (who is more than a little freaked out by a talking rabbit) to give him a place to stay while recuperating. It happens that Fred is mansion-sitting for his much more successful sister's (Kaley Cuoco of TV's "Big Bang Theory") boss.

Fred's life is disrupted, naturally including a disastrous job interview with a video gaming company. One of my favorite moments – once again whose irony is lost on the little ones – is when E.B. sits in for a missing drummer at the video game company's recording studio.

Fred O'Hare (James Marsden) hones his hopping skills as he trains to take over as the Easter Bunny.

E.B. (voiced by Russell Brand) leaves a pile of ... um ... jelly beans, a skill that proves he is the true Easter Bunny – but he doesn't want the job.

because the performers are the Blind Boys of Alabama.

Although Fred doesn't get the mailroom job, E.B. gets a tip from the Blind Boys about auditioning for "David Hasselhoff Knows Talent." The Hoff does an amusing parody of himself and of course loves E.B.'s act.

Does the Hoff think a talking bunny is weird?

"Hey," he reminds us, "my best friend is a talking car."

Once again, this is a retro-reference and faux hipness over the little ones' heads.

E.B. is being pursued by the Easter Bunny's personal bodyguards – The Pink Berets. Another clever touch I enjoyed. What's not to love about girl-bunny ninjas with tracking devices and tranquilizer dart blowguns?

In the meantime, during E.B.s absence, Carlos – a chick (hilariously voiced by Hank Azaria) – is tired of being second in command and has plans to pull off a little coup d'etat, "which is French for coup d'etat."

Fred decides that he could take over E.B.'s job and become the Easter Bunny so the two begin his training. Will Fred be able to cut the mustard? Will E.B. realize his rock-drummer dreams? Will Carlos pull off his plan to take over Easter and fill the baskets with crickets and earthworms instead of jelly beans and chocolates?

The animation is really good, and the mix of live actors and computer-generated characters is seamless. Marsden showed me that he has a bit more range than just a mutant with powerful eye beams, and I always enjoy Brand (although I am approaching the remake of "Arthur" with more than just a little trepidation.)

Upon reflection, there really are a number of jokes and situations that only adults will find humorous – from the opening Universal Studios "world" logo being egg shaped to

E.B.'s attempt to get into the Playboy Mansion ("I'm a bunny, and I'm very sexy.") Maybe there were too many things like that, but I felt the kids in the audience found enough to enjoy.

"Hop" was created by the same company that made one of my favorite animated films of 2010, "Despicable Me." That was enough to convince me to see it. It isn't quite the home run, but it was good enough to make me want to chew the eyes out of a chocolate bunny.

I hate it when they stare.

How important is art to you?

With advent of technology, valuable experiences are being missed

David Salcido Art Happens

In February, the National Endowment for the Arts released the results of the Surveys of Public Participation in the Arts (SPPAs). Those results weren't very surprising, but they proved something those of us who have made it our life's work to advance the arts have known for some time: there's been "a steady decline in the rates of adult attendance at most 'benchmark' arts events – specifically classical music and jazz concerts, musical and non-musical plays, opera and ballet performances – since 1982."

Much of what this study strives to show is that it is the decline of arts education in schools that has led to this dismal state of affairs. Fewer art and music teachers in schools means fewer students being introduced to those finer things in life that President Kennedy said, "Call forth creative genius from every sector of society, disregarding race or religion or wealth or color."

In light of the fact that the very same month this study was released, the U.S. House of Representatives voted to slash funding for the National Endowment for the Arts by $43 million and to terminate the Arts in Education programs at the U.S. Department of Education by late 2011, it doesn't appear that this trend will be changing any time soon.

So, what can we do about it? Well, I don't know about you, but my belief is that arts education begins at home. Like good manners and the idea that all men are created equal, an appreciation for things that better the human condition through the exploration of beauty and emotion is an ongoing pursuit, not something that can be relegated to one-hour slots in an academic schedule. And certainly not something that ends when academics are left behind in pursuit of the almighty dollar.

Stopping to smell the roses or count the stars on a moonless night; a trip to the local museum of art or to see a neighbor's child in a school play; the gift of a book instead of the latest computer accessory; getting out to see a live performance instead of watching the latest episode of "Jersey Shore"; these are the things that truly shape our view of the arts. Even better, there's no time limit. You can start right now.

As the manager of one of the finest arts and entertainment venues in southern New Mexico, I am constantly amazed by the quality of the performances that regularly pass across my stage. In the past few months alone, we have been treated to a heartbreaking and thought-provoking study of the Holocaust through dance, a jazz legend, an Irish fiddle master, an environmental goodwill ambassador to the United Nations, Julliard-trained classical musicians who have played the Vatican and royal palaces and local performers who simply transcend the notion that greatness can only be found on Top 40 radio or in arena shows. Yes, all right here in Las Cruces.

The ticket price for each has been minimal and the attendance small, but the rewards have been many. To be told that an audience member was moved to tears by a performance or another feels he or she has been witness to genius or that something important has been learned, these are the reasons I do what I do.

Arts education never ends. It happens every time you or I step into an art gallery, museum, theater or performance hall. If you don't leave that venue feeling something has changed inside you, you have wasted your time. As amazing as YouTube can be in presenting imagery that can astound and bewilder, nothing beats actually being present in the moment while art is being created out of thin air. Nothing.

The question is, how important is art to you? In a time when newspapers are failing all over the country because more and more people are getting their information from the Internet, how important is it to actually leave your home and experience a live performance when you've got the world at your fingertips and can see video clips of your favorite musical artist any time you want? Is that enough?

Is there any reason to see a performance by an artist you've never heard of when you can be inundated by the images and exploits of Lady Gaga and, thus, be part of the national popularity trend?

If your answers to the above questions are "not very," "not at all," "yes" and "no," then you, my friend, have no idea what you've been missing. Art is happening all around you, whether you choose to acknowledge it or not.

As has always been the case, if you're getting all of your entertainment needs from one source, you're only getting one small fraction of the bigger picture. Because when the latest American Idol has been forgotten, Lady Gaga has been abandoned in favor of the next big thing and Charlie Sheen is nothing more than a sad footnote in the annals of tabloid history, truth, beauty and passion will still be lurking in the corners of our society, enriching the lives of those who strive to engage.

The truth of the matter is arts education begins – and ends – with you.

True success

Natisha Hales Adventures in Dieting

Whether we reached our physical goals or not, one thing is true – each participant of the Bulletin Weight Loss Challenge has gained something out of this three-month-long event, and it's not weight.

We now have the tools and knowledge to continue on the path to a healthier lifestyle, and that's the original goal I set when I sought to start this challenge.

There were originally 18 of us, and only three have left the group, recognizing that it takes a huge amount of commitment to continue with something like this. I even surprised myself. While I have struggled with my eating habits and exercise routine, I have made many changes to my diet that I was unaware of.

During our final meeting Tuesday, April 5, Bill asked each of us to go around the room to talk about our final "numbers" and what we got out of the challenge. Laura gave each of us a certificate of completion for the challenge with our starting weight and our current weight. The energy was amazing and some challengers' contributions even brought others to tears. Because it's not just a battle to lose weight.

Some of us have had to overcome huge obstacles that we've lived with our entire lives. We're set in our ways, and to even nudge a little bit speaks volumes.

At first, I just wanted to do a challenge because it seemed like the thing to do around New Year's, but it turned in to so much more, and I never imagined it to be the motivating force it has become. Whether it's as little as 0.8 pounds or as much as 40, each of us lost weight and inches. Collectively, the group lost 240.4 pounds and 184.25 inches.

Theresa Basaldua went from taking dips in the "Grease River" to eating her first salad and having the discipline to give up carbs.

Lou Holguin went from a sedentary lifestyle and a fried-food diet to running five times a week.

David Edwards was moving like a snail, but now his face lights up with a whole new energy.

Daniel Basaldua went from sitting in his favorite recliner to pushing the family SUV down the block (yes, I'm serious).

Steven Parra has gone from always being the "big kid" in the family to someone who is unrecognizable to former co-workers who knew him when he was "fat."

Selene Mata went from a size 11 to a size 7.

Anthony Avallone gained a spiritual reawakening when he really studied the deadly sins of sloth and gluttony and their effect on a person's lifestyle.

Natasha Lawson went from crash diets to consistent exercise.

Beth Sitzler didn't like water with lemon at first, but now she craves it in the morning.

Jason Scott, while he was familiar with working out as a football player at New Mexico State University, now has the tools to shape his eating habits as well.

Advancing autism awareness

Local organization is working to raise funds

By Natisha Hales

Las Cruces Bulletin

As the entire country observes National Autism Awareness Month during April, Las Cruces organizations will also work to educate the Mesilla Valley of the disability that affects approximately 1.5 million Americans, according to the Autism Society.

The complex developmental disability typically appears during the first three years of life and affects a person's ability to communicate and interact with others. Defined as a spectrum disorder, autism has different effects at varying degrees, but its cause is still unknown, despite its rising prevalence. In 2009, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) issued a report that concluded cases of autism had risen to one in every 110 births in the United States.

Local organizations are working to raise awareness and funds to support research on the disability, holding several events during April.

More than a dozen local businesses and nonprofit organizations are sponsoring the Mariposa MASCquerade Ball, which will be held from 5:30 to 11 p.m. Saturday, April 9, at the Las Cruces Convention Center, 680 E. University Ave. Along with an evening of See Autism on page D2

Should junk food be taxed?

NMSU professor finds price doesn't matter

By Justin Bannister

For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Few people argue that Americans are overweight and don't eat healthy food. While advocates say providing calorie information or taxing junk food may help consumers make better choices, one New Mexico State University researcher says that when the two are combined, they may actually cancel each other out.

"Policy measures, such as providing calorie information and taxing junk food, do not affect everyone the same," said Collin Payne, an assistant professor in NMSU's College of Business who studies consumer food behavior. "You need to take into account who you are targeting. It's important to understand all the factors involved."

He said when it comes to people who already watch what they eat, additional taxes and food information may not work.

Payne, along with co-authors from Maastricht University in the Netherlands, recently published a study in the American Journal of Clinical Nutrition that looked at the combined effects of providing calorie information and taxes on the total number of calories purchased for lunch. During the study, university students chose a meal from a menu three different times – each time the cost of the meal increased by 25 percent. For some students, calorie information was given for the meals, for other students, calorie information was absent. The study also looked at the factors of budget and dietary restraint.

"It took taxing the food by 25 percent or more to decrease the selection of less healthy food. Providing calorie information also decreased selection of less healthy foods," Payne said. "Taxing the food, however, didn't seem to change the selection habits of people who already watched what they ate when these people were given calorie information. In fact, these people actually increased – slightly – their choice of less healthy food."

According to Payne, it may be difficult to be vigilant consistently regarding watching what one eats and providing calorie information and higher taxes on certain foods may only increase their desirability leading to their eventual choice and consumption.

"With high-restrained eaters, it seems higher taxes and calorie information aren't going to move behavior that much, but with low-restrained eaters it will," he said.

This result suggests that for companies it is important to know their target market.

Payne says further research is needed to better understand the relationship between consumers, taxes and calorie information, including field studies that follow participants at restaurants.

Payne's past research has suggested that trans-generational feeding practices, such as "cleaning your plate" at dinner, may not be very healthy as in times past because of a serving size that is much larger today, and thus has more calories, than in the past. He's also found that consumers tend to buy healthier food when shopping carts have a designated place for fruits and vegetables.

Stopping to smell the daffodils

It may have a weird name, but an interesting story

Bob Nosbisch Getting the Word Out

A few evenings ago, my family and I were eating dinner when out of the blue (I don't know why it's out of the blue and not out of the "magenta" or "yellow ochre"), my son, Dylan, asked, "Do you know what's a funny word?"

"What?" I replied, thinking he would say "onomatopoeia," "jabberwocky," or "hornswoggle."

"Daffodil."

"Daffodil?" my wife echoed. "What's so funny about that word?"

"It just sounds funny to me, Mom," Dylan replied. "I don't mind names of flowers like 'rose' or 'sunflower,' because those are normal names. But 'daffodil'? Who made up that word?"

My daughter Laura, who had been sitting quietly during this discussion decided to enter the conversation.

"Dylan, you're such a dork," Laura said in the tone that only a sister can use on a younger brother.

Thinking "daffodil" might be a misspelled hybrid of "daffy" and "Dylan," I did a little investigating and learned that the flower is also called a "Lent lily," is a Eurasian amaryllidaceous plant and that its scientific name is 'Narcissus pseudonarcissus." If you, dear reader, are ever on "Jeopardy," this information might just come in handy.

Famous writers have used

"daffodil" in their poetry and prose. Virginia Woolf scribed, "What is meant by 'reality'? It would seem to be something very erratic, very undependable - now to be found in a dusty road, now in a scrap of newspaper in the street, now a daffodil

T. S. Eliot gave us this line: "Daffodil bulbs instead of balls stared from the sockets of the eyes!"

Let's not forget Ben Jonson with this line: "Since nature's pride is, now, a withered daffodil."

You may think the daffodil is beautiful, but did you know the flower contains an alkaloid poison – lycorine – in its leaves? In May 2009, when a daffodil bulb was added to soup in a primary school's cookery class in Martlesham Heath, Suffolk, England, many children got sick.

The flower can also be an annoyance to florists who may suffer a common dermatitis problem called "daffodil itch." This occurs when the hands experience dryness, scaling, fissures and erythema. Also, the skin beneath the nails gets thicker. Exposure to calcium oxalate in the flower's sap is to blame for this condition.

Here's the good news: The National Institutes of Health report that a compound in daffodils called narciclasine was used by ancient Greek physicians as a cancer treatment.

"Scientists have been digging in odd corners to find effective treatments for brain cancer for decades, and now they've found one in daffodils," said Dr. Gerald Weissman, editor-in-chief of the FASEB Journal. (FASEB is the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology.) "It doesn't mean that you should eat daisies or daffodils for what ails you, but that modern medicinal chemistry can pluck new chemicals from stuff that grows in the garden."

In Britain, researchers found that a drug derived from daffodils – Reminyl (galantamine) – has been effective in stopping the progress of vascular dementia, which is caused by damage to the blood vessels leading to the brain.

The name "daffodil" may sound funny to some people, but researchers are finding scientific use for parts of this flower. So as our weather gets warmer and you're taking time to smell the roses, don't forget to sniff the daffodils, too. Fans of this Eurasian amaryllidaceous plant will entertainment and food, the event is a masquerade ball, and guests are encouraged to wear masks to the black-tie affair. Proceeds of the event benefit Hearts for Autism Fund at the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico.

The event is hosted by the Mariposa Autism Service Center (MASC), and funds raised also go toward the New Amigos Camp. Last year's camp, held in June 2010, was southern New Mexico's first-ever camp for children with autism spectrum disorders. The camp served 14 children, who participated in many activities - art, swimming, music and recreation - under the guidance of 10 counselors from New Mexico State University and Aprendamos.

Tresco Inc., an organization that serves people with developmental disabilities, is working to spread awareness during National Autism Awareness Month. The organization is asking people to visit its website, www.trescoinc.org, to understand the disorder and how Tresco is committed to helping people "reach their potential and realize their dreams."

Health foundation accepting grant applications

Con Alma Health Foundation is accepting proposals for its 2011 Small Grant Cycle.

The foundation's Small Grant Cycle awards grants of up to $15,000 each to nonprofit organizations serving residents of New Mexico. Priority consideration is given to proposals that demonstrate strong collaborative relationships and address systemic change rather than direct services. The application deadline is Wednesday, June 1.

Grant investments will address key findings and recommendations made in the foundation's report, "Closing the Health Disparity Gap in New Mexico: A Roadmap for Grantmaking," which is based on statistics provided by New Mexico government agencies and non-profit organizations.

"We recognize that evidence is needed to help guide our grant making and galvanize targeted action and strategies to address priority health issues in New Mexico," said Dolores Roybal, executive director.

A free pre-proposal tutorial is available online at www.conalma.org.

For more information, email grants@ conalma.org or call 438-0776, ext 2. A hard copy of the application may also be requested for those with limited computer access.

New option for uninsured

The Pre-Existing Condition Insurance Plan, created as part of last year's Affordable Care Act, is making health care coverage available to people who couldn't buy or afford it because they have a pre-existing medical condition.

As many as 7 million Americans, including 56,070 uninsured New Mexico residents with pre-existing conditions, may be eligible for the new insurance. The federal government and individual states are administering the PCIPs, as they're called. The publicly funded PCIP program has been designed to help the uninsured until 2014, when the Affordable Care Act will begin requiring the private insurance industry to cover people despite their pre-existing illnesses or disabilities. The new plans are an alternative to the high-risk pools that many states now offer to people locked out of the insurance market. The PCIP's have lower premiums, and they require no waiting period for the coverage of pre-existing conditions.

To qualify, you must be a New Mexico resident and a U.S. citizen or legal resident with a pre-existing condition, and you must have been uninsured for at least the last six months. Income isn't a factor in determining eligibility

To apply, download an application at www. nmmip.org or request one by calling 877-573-3676. To prove you have a pre-existing condition, you'll need a signed physician's statement, a denial letter from an insurance company for individual coverage or an offer of individual coverage that says your illness or disability won't be covered if you purchase the policy.

Humane society provides spay assistance

To help counter an extreme pet overpopulation in Doña Ana County with the resulting overcrowding and accompanying 11,000 to 12,000 cats and dogs killed annually at the Animal Services Center of Mesilla Valley (ASCMV), the Humane Society of Southern New Mexico (HSSNM) has dedicated $4,000 for spay-only assistance for female dog and cat pet owners of Doña Ana County.

Current cat and dog owners who avail themselves of the low-cost spay surgery at the Animal Services Center of Mesilla Valley will be reimbursed for the $25 spay fee for cats and the $35 spay fee for dogs currently charged by the ASCMV shelter through a grant provided by HSSNM until grant funds are expended.

Reimbursement is provided only for spaying of female cats and dogs and can be redeemed by submission of copies of the paid spay receipt provided by the ASCMV program and proof of ownership (rabies vaccination certificate or micro chip registration) to Humane Society of Southern New Mexico, P.O. Box 13826, Las Cruces, NM 88013. The reimbursement program begins with spay procedures completed after Friday, April 15.

Due to limited veterinary services in areas of the county, a difficult recession, income issues and the need to accelerate the reduction of unwanted litters of cats and dogs as rapidly as possible, the grant fund assistance for spayonly is a different approach to reducing our pet overpopulation in the short term.

Spaying four out of five female cats could reduce the number of offspring from 150 to 30 in a perfect reproductive year regardless of the intact males available.

For information about the public spay and neuter program at ASCMV, call 382-0018 between noon and 5 p.m. daily or visit the shelter during the same hours at 3551 Bataan Memorial West.

MountainView gets the gold

MountainView Regional Medical Center is the first hospital in New Mexico to receive the prestigious Joint Commission Gold Seal of Approval for hip and knee replacement surgery.

Reviewers from The Joint Commission certified MountainView's Joint Replacement Program following a full review of the program, including all hospital caregivers. This certification is awarded to a hospital that has a proven commitment to providing best-practice patient care. A team of doctors, nurses, therapists and others began the process toward certification in January 2010, led by Physician Champion Dr. Ed Sweetser, Director of Therapy Services Blanca Morales-Peña and Program Coordinator Mary Ferreiro. The program utilizes a care team of highly trained personnel to assure that each patient receives individualized, quality care.

"MountainView is setting the standard for best practices in our community and throughout the state of New Mexico. We are now a center of excellence for hip and joint replacement surgery and will continue to pursue nationally recognized best practices for other disease specific care areas," said Chief Nursing Officer Gayle Nash.

The closest certified Joint Replacement Program exists at Northwest Medical Center in Tucson, Ariz.

"We are proud of our Joint Replacement Team and their efforts to bring the highest quality health care services to Las Cruces," said Chief Executive Officer Denten Park. "We are delighted to remind our community that they do not need to travel outside of Las Cruces to receive the best possible care."

For more information about the Joint Replacement Program at MountainView Regional Medical Center, call 556-6620.

Red Cross campaign kicks off

The American Red Cross in Southwestern New Mexico kicked off its local Champions campaign in celebration of American Red Cross history, volunteers and supporters, while providing creative ways to raise money to provide local services.

This year's event began with the announcement of the 2011 Champions Co-chairs Vic Villalobos and Ken Binkley of Las Cruces. The Champions event will be running through the end of April with a wrap-up recognition event in May. The annual Champions campaign allows individuals, groups, corporations and other organizations to raise funds in creative ways to benefit local Red Cross programs and services in Catron, Doña Ana, Grant, Hidalgo, Sierra, Luna and Otero counties. Each champion pledges to raise at least $1,000. The goal for the chapter is $50,000. Champions are still welcome to join in and support the local American Red Cross.

"I have witnessed first hand the positive impact that the Red Cross of Southern New Mexico has had on our community, I consider it an honor to be helping them reach their goals," Villalobos said.

"The Red Cross is there to help people when things are darkest and that likely could be anyone one of us," Binkley said. "We all need to support the Red Cross so that it's there to support us when we will need it most."

For more information on how you, your business or organization can become Champions for the American Red Cross, call 526-2631 or visit www.redcrossnewmexico.org.

New regulations for poultry, eggs

Effective immediately, the regulations regarding bringing cooked poultry (e.g. chicken and turkey) meat, including deli-sliced poultry meat and cooked, hard-boiled eggs into the U.S. from Mexico are changing.

Officials are urging travelers to be aware of the new requirements and to always declare all food items to U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) officers when crossing the border. The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service (APHIS) informed CBP that APHIS is implementing new requirements for processed (including cooked) poultry meat and cooked, hard-boiled eggs brought by passengers arriving from regions where APHIS considers exotic Newcastle disease (END) to exist. Currently, Mexico is a country recognized by APHIS as being affected by END.

According to the new requirements, processed poultry meat brought by passengers coming from Mexico must be accompanied by government certification confirming that the meat was cooked to a minimum internal temperature of 74 degrees Celsius, or a USDA APHIS Veterinary Services (VS) import permit. Thoroughly cooked eggs from Mexican states other than Sinaloa and Sonora must now be accompanied by a VS import permit

CBP officers and agriculture specialists enforce hundreds of laws at the border for other federal, state and local law enforcement agencies. Following other agency regulations, CBP is required to take action when encountering poultry meat and eggs – importations presented without the required certification will be seized or refused entry.

As a reminder, travelers are encouraged to declare all food items to CBP officials. Failure to declare prohibited agricultural items can result in civil penalties. Penalties for personal importations of undeclared, prohibited agricultural items, depending on the severity of the violation, can run as high as $1,000 and up to more than $250,000 for commercial importations.

Elementary students raise money for heart association

Students and staff at César E. Chávez Elementary School raised more than $4,400 during the school's Jump Rope for Heart event held March 18, said physical education teacher David Rivera.

During the past three years, the school has raised more than $9,000 for the American Heart Association through the event.

"During the event, students and their parents participated in 30-minute blocks of jumping rope to help raise money for the American Heart Association," Rivera said. "The students did a three-week unit of jump rope training leading into the culmination of our Jump Rope for Heart event. This was our third year of doing this event, and each year the students at our school have beaten that year's schoolwide goal.

Our first year, we raised $1,500. Last year, we raised $3,100. This year we surpassed last year's total by approximately $1,340. We are very proud of our students and their parents, especially in this time of economic hardship."

"I am very proud of our kids and Mr. Rivera," said César E. Chávez Elementary Principal Carmen Gallegos-Marruio.

- The U.S. House Committee on Territories was expected to report the Flood House Joint Resolution approving the constitutions of New Mexico and Arizona at a meeting at the House. The sentiment of the committees was described as unanimous. Judge A.B. Fall had postponed his trip to Europe on the belief that statehood would become a fact at once and was working with delegate Andrews and ex-governor Curry for prompt action on the approval of the New Mexico Constitution.
- R. H. Sims was elected to the school board over W. M. Adair. Sims would take the place of D.V. Peacock, who had resigned.

• Phil Kaltenbach, secretary of the Las Cruces Country Club, said he will have one of the best dances of the year on Saturday, April 18. He has engaged a 12-piece orchestra, Don Clifton and his Syn Collegians and promises that everyone will be pleased with the music that night.

• Vaughn Corley, track coach at the college, said he will enter a 15-man team in a triangular meet with the University Lobos and the Texas Miners. The meet will be held at the state college fields. On the basis of records, the Lobos appear to have the strongest team, however, the Aggies defeated the Texas Miners decisively at a dual meet the week before and were expected to offer the Lobos stiff competition in nearly all the events. Corley would use Jonathan Cunningham, Walter Nations, Anthony George, Carl Emminger, Benjamin Stevens, Gilbert Fountain, Pablo Roybal, Dan Kelly, Lem Pratt, Floyd Bailey, Merrill Thompson, Robert DeBusk, Bill Parr, Mansell Scrivner and Ed Mechem – only four of the men were lettermen.

During the period between the Treaty of Guadalupe Hildalgo, (Feb. 2, 1848) ending the Mexican American War and the Gadsden Purchase (ratified 1854), many communities in the Mesilla Valley, including La Mesa, were founded on land grants issued by Father Ramón Ortiz, the Mexican land commissioner in El Paso del Norte (Juárez) to accommodate Mexican citizens wishing to remain on Mexican territory.

• Doña Ana County residents receiving property tax valuation notices were often in for a shock. In some cases, valuations were up 50 percent. The hike, according to Chief Deputy Assessor Robert Isaacks, was due to a legislative mandate for a statewide reappraisal of property values. Among the reasons for increased valuations, Isaacks said, were rapid growth and high demand for property.

• Ceremonies marking the completion of the Rio Grande Research Corridor's north-south New Mexico TechNet linkage were attended by Gov. Toney Anaya and New Mexico State University President James Halligan. The network connected research facilities from Las Cruces to Los Alamos. Several officials exchanged "electronic mail" messages between a computer terminal at NMSU and other locations around the state. Anaya sent the first electronic mail message to "the people of New Mexico" to the network headquarters in Albuquerque.

What if you had the opportunity to get involved with a revolutionary scientific breakthrough before most of the world even knew about it?

What if this breakthrough was projected to be so big it could potentially be a multi-billion, if not TRILLION dollar product? There is NOTHING like this product on the market and we have the PATENT and the WORLD EXCLUSIVE. Because of the expected demand, we have upgraded our systems to handle one million orders a day! We are looking for customers as well as business partners in this area. You will be stunned when you learn about what could be one of the biggest discoveries in the history of the planet! If that sounds extreme, we dare you to attend and decide for yourself. No pressure, just the facts.

Our All Star Award candidates were nominated by their coworkers with anonymously written letters. It is through these letters that the winners were chosen. Although the quarter is not yet complete, I would like to take this time to nominate

David Ulloa, PCT for the 4th quarter All Star Award. Besides his unfailing and very consistent top-notch patient care that we are all very aware of, David continues to exemplify our Guiding Principles and is truly a special

David has been voluntarily working many extra shifts during this time of low PCT staffing, and in spite of working many days in a row, continues to have a "can-do" attitude, models team-work, and receives regular appreciation from patients and family members.

Just this week alone, I have received two separate All Star nominations from patient family members for David's great work and good attitude.

His great care is noticed by patients and families and I believe that David is a major contributor to our regular high patient satisfaction results. I also feel that we are very lucky to have David working with us.

David is truly an employee who regularly goes "above and beyond", to the extent that he has set a very high standard for PCT's.

Custom cabinetry with ornate detailing complements the elegant granite island.

Built-in shelves can be found throughout the home, including in the master bedroom.

A two-way, stacked-stone fireplace is located in the living room. The living room also features carved vigas lining the 12-foot-high ceiling as well as numerous windows to the backyard.

Sonoma Ranch home includes privacy, easy access to amenities

By Beth Sitzler

After living on 12 secluded acres in Ruidoso, Dr. Vince Straley said when it came to selecting a home in Las Cruces, he wanted one that offered that same sense of privacy while also being close to necessities.

The dentist and his daughter Hanna were driving around town looking at homes when they came across 3549 Cave Creek Manor, located in the Sonoma Ranch area over looking the golf course. The owners weren't home, so Straley said they hopped the fence and peeked in the windows.

"And I said (to Hanna), 'This is our home,'" he said.

Built in 2005 by Sonoma Ranch Construction, the contemporary Southwest home was featured in the Spring Showcase of Homes that year.

'It's a showcase home so it has a lot of extras," said Straley, adding that detailed carving in the lintels and corbels as well as upgraded materials, such as custom cabinetry, can be found throughout.

Flagstone paths lead to the front courtyard. Featuring a seating area and various colorful plants, the courtyard is an enjoyable place to relax and take in the quiet neighborhood, Straley Glass blocks surround an 8-foot, iron and glass front door. These elongated doors can be found throughout the 2,500-square-foot home.

A medallion of sandy pink granite and ceramic tile accents the foyer, which also features a chandelier hanging from the 12-foothigh ceiling. A mail area is tucked into a small recessed wall near the fover. The space, which includes shelves and cabinets, is an added convenience for residents who need a drop off area when entering the home.

Separated by columns, the formal dining room is next to the foyer. The carpeted area is lit by three large windows overlooking the front of the home and a chandelier that graces the tiered ceiling.

Beside the dining room is a half bathroom. Straley said while the other bathrooms include Corian countertops, the area features granite, and is an elegant complement to the wood-framed mirror and custom cabinetry.

The master suite is located down a short hall. Built-in shelves and crown molding along the ceiling fill the large bedroom. The feeling of space and relaxation continues in the bathroom.

A jetted bathtub encased in ceramic tile rests below a large window of glass blocks, which washes the room in light. A freestanding tiled shower rests in between the bathtub and walk-in closet.

"I've done tile work, and I've look around and I have never seen such nice tile work," he said of the entire home.

The other side of the home includes three more bedrooms. From her bedroom, Hanna said she can peer out her window and enjoy the surrounding scenery.

"You have a great view out at the golf course," she said.

In addition to the view, the room includes an attached three-fourths bathroom.

Another full bathroom is located between the other two bedrooms.

The center of the home includes the living room and open kitchen with an informal dining area. The living room showcases the builder's style with vigas lining the ceiling and a stacked-stone, two-way fireplace in the corner.

The kitchen features an oversized island covered in granite that includes a prep sink and decorative stone. The large space also includes ornate cabinetry.

"The kitchen is fantastic," Straley said. "Every feature in here is really nice."

The same granite and ceramic tile design found in the foyer is used to decorate the kitchen's backsplash, creating a feeling of cohesion, Straley said. The fine details of the cabinets are also repeated in the built-in hutch found in the informal dining area.

"I like the openness," Straley said. "It's a very open floor plan. If you're an entertainer, it's a great place to host parties."

Another favorite area of Straley's is the backyard, which includes a covered patio that extends the length of the home. While there are neighbors to the left and right, strategically placed shrubbery blocks them out, creating a serene, secluded environment.

Among the colorful flowers and areas of grass is a 1,200-gallon pool. Going no deeper than 4 feet, Straley said the pool is perfect for cooling off on those hot Las Cruces summer days. Attached to the pool is a spa, which features a waterfall, a feature Straley said he likes to listen to.

In addition to the soothing tone, the backyard not only features a view of the Sonoma Ranch Golf Course, including its lake, but also looks down to the valley.

"I like going out back and sitting out there in the evenings," said Straley, adding that it is perfect for watching sunsets and the starry

New uses for old berry baskets

Reuse the plastic container in the kitchen or garden

By Beth SitzlerLas Cruces Bulletin

Spring is the season to eat light and refreshing foods, including berries.

Whether dining on strawberries or grazing on blueberries, most berries come in small, plastic baskets. After time, these baskets can add up. If you have a bundle littering your home, put them to use in some creative ways.

1. Store cleaning tools: Small and lightweight, a berry basket can be used to store your soap pads and sponges next to your kitchen sink, keeping them close at hand without taking up too much room. Line the bottom of the basket with a layer of heavy-duty aluminum foil so those small bits of steel wool won't fall out. Be sure to cut off the corner of the aluminum, however, and let it hang over the sink. This will allow any pooling water to drain out of the basket.

2. Create a makeshift colander: For those big pots of cooked pasta or bunches of grapes, it's best to break out that industrial-sized colander for your cleaning and draining tasks. For smaller portions, however, skip that oversized colander and instead make your own from an old berry basket. The perfect size for individual portions, be sure to wash the basket before using it for straining.

3. Keep small items safe in the dishwasher: Smaller items, such as baby bottle caps, jar lids and appliance pieces, tend to get knocked around and lost when washed in the dishwasher. A good way to keep them in place is with the help of a berry basket. Set the items inside one basket and use another to cover it. Fasten the baskets with a strong rubber band and place on the top rack of the dishwasher.

4. Arrange flowers: Give droopy flowers and lopsided arrangements some

ket. Known as a frog by those in florist industry, place an inverted basket into the vase. Cut the basket to make it fit, if necessary. Insert the stems into the holes of the basket. This will help the stalks stand tall and remain in the same place.

5. Shield seedlings: With mighty gusts crossing the Land of Enchantment, your seedlings may take a beating. Give them some protection by covering them with an old plastic berry basket. The holes in the basket will allow water and sunshine in while stopping the seedling from becoming excessively rattled by wind or devoured by wandering animals. Burry it in the ground a bit and use a few rocks to secure the basket, if desired. This trick also works to keep your bulbs safe from rodents and other pests.

6. Create an Easter basket: Just in time for Easter, which takes place Sunday, April 24, turn that old berry basket into a container of Easter-related goodies. Simply create ears, eyes, a nose, whiskers and buckteeth from construction paper and attach them to the basket to for a rabbit face. Next, fill it with strips of fake grass and candy. The little ones in your life will appreciate the extra care as well as the delicious treats.

7. Fabricate your own bubble wand: Creating bubbles from scratch can be a fun weekend task for the wee ones. In addition to making your own bubble solution from water and dish soap, make your own wand from a plastic berry basket. Just cut out a piece that consists of several holes and handle, if you can, dip it in the solution and blow.

If that once-vibrant lantana is nothing but twigs, you should probably remove them.

Caring for red bird of paradise and lantanas

Winter freeze may have harmed your old plants

Gary Guzman Gardening Guru

Since this past winter had some especially cold temperatures, some "weak" perennial plants may not have

If you still have dead twigs from last year's lantana or red bird of paradise, you should remove them. Cut them back to about one inch above ground. If you do not see any signs of new growth, it could be that the soil is still too cool. When the soil warms up, the new growth should flourish.

You can now remove mulch, if any, around the immediate area so the sun can warm up the soil faster. Once you see new growth, you can replace the area with fresh mulch again.

If these plants do not emerge by the end of this month, they are probably gone. The extreme winter temps may have just been too much for these to survive.

If you want to plant these again, try finding a warmer sunnier spot, such as against a west or south wall. Avoid shade, especially for the red bird of paradise. It may develop powdery mildew and not bloom well.

If you do find some new growth emerging, be sure to give them plenty of water to start. You can feed them with a water soluble or granular fertilizer now.

Some articles may suggest that you do not need to fertilize these plants. My experience has been if you feed them well, they will perform much better. You don't want to feed them excessively, however, doing so may contribute to poor blooming performance and possible insect infestation. Overfeeding will lead to too much lush soft tissue growth, which aphids love.

Try to use a fertilizer with a high middle number, which is phosphorus. This nutrient will help stimulate flowers on just about any blooming plant or tree.

Whatever you choose to fertilize with, read and follow directions exactly. You need to stop fertilizing in late September or October, for most plants. Removal of old, spent flowers regularly will give you a longer blooming season. This rule also applies to just about any other flowering plant.

Builder finds rewarding career

Former police officer gives back to those in public service

By Beth Sitzler

Since 2003, Robert Jones of Jones Construction has been providing stylish, affordable and energy-efficient homes to members of the Las Cruces, especially those in public service.

Born and raised in Deming, Jones said he has been a part of the building industry for about 30 years, and even learned a few skills from his father Robert Jones Sr.

"Ever since I was a lot younger and was doing framing, it was something I enjoyed," he said. "And I enjoyed working with the customers."

After Jones became a police officer, he continued to work with Deming builders part time to help supplement his income. He was then hired by the Doña Ana County Sheriff's Department and relocated to the City of the Crosses.

"I love the Mesilla Valley and I enjoyed working for the sheriff's department," he said.

With retirement nearing, Jones said he decided to establish Jones Construction to help transition into a new chapter in his life. He also brought his father on to help run the job sites during the day when he was working.

After retiring in 2005, he fully devoted himself to the company and the Las Cruces housing industry.

Since creating Jones Construction, Jones said he has built about 20 to 30 homes a year – each designed to fit the owner's tastes, needs and lifestyle.

Working closely with each customer, he said they have floor plans already set up, which can then be modified.

"We rarely build any plan twice," he said, adding that several clients have given him their own drawings, which he then sends to a drafter. "It's truly customized for the client. It's their home."

Building "anything from $150,000 to $1 million," Jones said he can create homes in a wide variety of styles, from Tuscan and Southwestern to country and contemporary.

"We try to really customize the home to fit the customer," he said.

He added that he has also built handicap accessible homes, and as a standard, all of his homes include 3-feet-wide door frames.

In addition to producing customized stylish homes in just about any price range, Jones said he creates Energy Star-certified residences. Incorporating several energy-efficient elements, such as 2-by-6 construction, in his homes as a standard, Jones said he wants to help his customers with their long-term expenses.

Robert Jones, who retired from the Doña Ana County Sheriff's Department in 2005, began Jones Construction to serve the community, especially those in public service.

"Anytime you spend that much money on a home, it's someplace you're going to be at a long time," he said. "It shouldn't hold you hostage."

Allowing the customer to choose how energy efficient they want their home to be, Jones said he plans to continue to include green features in his projects.

"There is an expense with doing green homes," he said. "Over the long term, though, you'll make the money back, plus some."

A retired police officer, Jones said he often works with fellow service personnel as well as those in the military.

"Working with them and others is really rewarding," he said.

To further assist police officers, military personnel, veterans and others in public service,

Jones began the Jones Construction Hero Program in 2006. Through the program, Jones said his subcontractors give him discounts that are then passed on to the homeowner.

"It's a different approach and it works, and they deserve it," he said.

Since starting the hero program, it has continued to grow in popularity, and Jones said about 90 percent of the homes he builds are under it.

Whether a participant in the program or not, Jones said he follows the same philosophy with all of this customers – to be honest and up front. Explaining that "everything is included," Jones said when it comes to his homes, what you see is what you get.

"I tell them the price right up front. There are no surprises," he said, adding that his homes include a complete appliance package as a standard. "I use quality materials. I'm very conscious about quality."

To keep on top of the quality, and ensure his customers are happy, Jones said he remains focused on communication, especially at the Details

"I want to envision what they envision for their home," he said. "I'll do whatever needs to be done to (get) their vision to fruition."

Despite any challenges that comes his way, Jones said working closely with the customer and being able to contribute to an important part of their lives makes it worth it.

"I've made some lifelong friends out of this business," he said, adding that this includes the subcontractors, sales personnel and customers with which he works. "It's been very rewarding."

Finding much success in the building industry due to word of mouth about his dedication, Jones said there is still a lot he hopes to achieve.

"I don't think I've reached (my greatest accomplishment) yet," he said. "I strive every day to reach my greatest accomplishment with each house.

"I'm planning on being in the building industry a long time. I'm going to continue to focus on what the market is doing and what the customer wants."

Blossoms in the air

38th annual iris show held Saturday, April 16

By Beth Sitzler

Spring is in the air, and as gardens begin to bloom around the Mesilla Valley, the public will have the opportunity to admire some of the finest blossoms around during the 38th annual Mesilla Valley Iris Show Saturday, April 16, at Ramada Palms de Las Cruces, 201 E. University Ave.

Established in the late 1970s as an affiliate of the American Iris Society, the Mesilla Valley Iris Society began with seven members who desired to share their mutual interest in the flower with one another and the public. One way members aimed to do this was through the annual iris show.

"The idea was to promote iris as flowers for the general public," said 2011 show Chairman Howard Dash.

The show will kick off at 8:30 a.m. with exhibitors filling the Ramada Palms atrium with an array of iris to be judged by a group of six American Iris Society Region 23 which covers all of New Mexico - members from Santa Fe, Albuquerque and Roswell.

Dash said community members can enter iris of their own, and must include on a tag the name of the flower, its variety, the date it was introduced and its hybridzer. To be considered for judging, the plants must be set up by 10:30 a.m. Judging will begin at 11 a.m.

After judging has been completed, the show will be open to the public for free from 1 to 5 p.m. with the presentation of awards at 4:30 p.m.

"They can see what's available out there and the different iris," he said, adding that there will be more than a hundred plants on display. There is so much more out there than just the historic purple iris."

While the tall bearded variety of iris is the most common, Dash said other varieties also thrive in the Mesilla Valley, including the arils and arilbreds.

"Arilbreds do well here," he said, adding that they bloom early in the season. "They're a hybrid iris from the Middle East."

A hospitality table will be manned by Mesilla Valley Iris Society members to answer any flower-related questions.

"The real purpose of the show is to educate the community about iris," he said. "We want to encourage the public to grow iris."

One of their most popular questions, however, doesn't have to do with growing, Dash said.

People will always ask where they can get the iris," he said. "We have our annual sale the weekend after Labor Day."

For those who don't want to wait for the annual Mesilla Valley Iris Society Rhizome Sale, to be held Sept. 10-11 at Mesilla Valley Mall, Dash said a number of potted iris grown by members will also be sold during the show. Proceeds from both sales will benefit future activities held by the organization.

While the show has typically taken place at Mesilla Valley Mall, Dash said the area designated for community events will be occupied by the Easter Bunny that weekend due to Easter occurring late this year.

"It's nice, we have more space now," he said. "We won't get the people passing by in the mall, but we're hoping to get those who are interested in iris."

The Ramada Palms will also be the site of the Iris Society Regional Convention the weekend of Sept. 23, which will include a presentation by hybridzer Paul Black.

This year, the iris show has been dedicated to Margaret Dean and Herb and Lillian Lagerfeld, society members who have recently passed away.

Dean, who moved to Las Cruces after her husband Roy retired from the military, joined the Mesilla Valley Iris Society shortly after it was formed. An avid participant in the shows, she earned numerous honors, including Sweepstakes Medals and Best Specimen awards. She also wrote for American Iris Society publications.

Herb and Lillian Lagerfeld came to Las Cruces in 1987 and joined the Mesilla Valley Iris Society in the 1990s. Always willing to lend a hand, the Lagerfelds were enthusiastic and active members for several years.

Dash said community members can join the Mesilla Valley Iris Society for $10 a year. The organization meets the third Sunday of the month at a member's house.

Big blue bins help Curbside Recycling Kick-off Las Cruces go green

What about plastic grocery bags?

Those are just some of the questions residents had during the first week of curbside recycling in the city of Las Cruces.

Collection of the big, bright, blue bins for recyclable materials began this week for those in the city. The bins will be collected every other week. To find out what day that will happen in your neighborhood, go to_www.friedmanrecycling.com/LasCruces/recycling_las_ cruces_when.html and look at the maps and

"This is a momentous occasion for the city of Las Cruces, and we're just glad to be a part of it," said Morris Friedman of Friedman Recycling, whose staff will be collecting the bins and taking the recyclables to the Friedman plant in northeast El Paso.

Friedman spoke at the Las Cruces Green Chamber of Commerce's monthly First Friday event April 1. Also speaking was Las Cruces Mayor Ken Miyagishima.

Since 2001, when I was first elected to City Council, I've never had an issue that more people talked about than this one," Miyagishima said. "We did a survey and found that 82 percent of citizens wanted curbside recycling.

Suzanne Michaels, coordinator of education and outreach for Friedman Recycling, said the average American produces five pounds of trash per day. Every pound that can be recycled means a pound that stays out of local landfills.

The people of Las Cruces have kept pushing this issue, and the elected officials have listened," Michaels said.

For the record, here are the answers to the opening questions.

- No pizza boxes because of food contaminants. Cheese, sauce and meat that sticks to the boxes can create mold and health risks for workers at the recycling plant. Even grease that seeps into the box can be a problem.
- If the pickup day for your recycle bin is the same day as your regular trash pickup, you should place the bins at least five feet apart so the separate trucks will have room to pick up each bin.

Plastic grocery bags are OK, as long as they are clean and completely empty. If even the receipt from the store is still in the bag, that becomes a problem. And, again, any food residue could cause health risks for workers at the recycling plant.

Friedman used the example of plastic peanut butter jars to illustrate why it's better just to toss some food-laden items.

We don't want to waste 15 gallons of water trying to clean it out," Friedman said.

Here's a look at some other items and whether they are fodder for the blue bins. As Michaels said, "If in doubt, throw it out," meaning in the regular trash.

OK to throw in the blue bin: plastic caps of jugs and bottles, pots and pans, small electronics, cell phones

Not OK: foil-lined tea bags (and other items that blend two materials, like plastic and cardboard), computer or TV monitors, pet food cans, carpet, extension cords (or Christmas lights or anything with a long cord or cable).

For more information on your recycling pickup day or what can and can't be included in the bins, go to friedmanrecycling.com and click on the red "Las Cruces Recycles" tab.

Recycling's loose ends

It's an ongoing question: Do we put our recyclables in bags and then drop them in the bin? The ongoing answer: No.

Everything should be loose when it's dropped in your new bin so it can be easily sorted out at the processing plant. Friedman Recycling sorts 25 tons of recyclables an hour off fast-moving conveyor belts. There's no time to open bags and reveal recyclables, so anything in a bag is generally treated as

There are two exceptions, however. No. 1, shredded paper should be put in a clear plastic bag so it doesn't blow all over the place, and the employees at Friedman Recycling can see what it is. No. 2, plastic bags should be bagged inside a plastic bag.

Yes, you can now recycle plastic bags – but please "bag the bag." That means only clean plastic bags - grocery bags, shopping bags - go in. No paper receipts. No vegetable trimmings. Just clean plastic bags, bagged together, so they don't get caught in the equipment and conveyor belts.

Remember, with the launch of curbside recycling earlier this week, the list of recyclables has expanded and is now one of the most extensive lists in the United States. The list includes: plastics No. 1 to 7, plastic tubs and jars, rigid laundry hampers and baskets, detergent bottles, milk and juice jugs, water and soda bottles, pots and pans, small electronics (no TVs or computers), aluminum and steel cans, paper bags, cereal boxes, milk and juice cartons/boxes, paperback and hardback cover books, newspaper, magazines, office paper, junk mail, catalogues, phone books and cardboard.

Thank you for recycling! If you have curbside recycling questions, please visit www.friedman-recycling.com, or call Friedman Recycling at 877-500-RECYCLE.

Out with the old, in with energy savings

Las Cruces couple participates in EPE refrigerator recycling program

By Beth Sitzler

Sometimes your electric bills can help you

After taking a glance at the inserted newsletter that accompanied their El Paso Electric Co. bill, Keith and Tracey Kouba learned about the refrigerator recycling program and decided to let go of the family's almost 20-year-old spare refrigerator.

for a long time and thought we'd take advantage of the program," Keith Kouba said. "It served as an expensive beverage cooler."

"It reached the point where the cost of operation exceeded its benefit," said Tracey Kouba, adding that it added about $150 to their electric bill each year.

After calling the program, crew members from JACO Environmental - a national appliance de-manufacturer partnering with EPE – picked up the refrigerator, a feature that "sealed the deal" for Keith Kouba.

Since beginning the refrigerator recycling program last April, JACO Environmental has de-manufactured 1,696 refrigerators in the EPE service area.

Steven Ludi, manager of the JACO Environmental warehouse in Albuquerque, explained that once a refrigerator has been removed from a home, it is stored in a 53-foot trailer near Sunland Park. Once the trailer is full, the refrigerators are then taken to Albuquerque to be recycled.

At the warehouse, the appliance is de-manufactured. Removing about 150 pounds of metal, 25 pounds of plastic and 20 pounds of polyurethane foam insulation - which can be harmful - Ludi said about 90 percent of the refrigerator is recycled to create other materials, including nails, computers, metal cans, cell phones and concrete mixture.

They also remove the oils and refrigerant, which can be harmful if not disposed of

Happy to take their energy-guzzling refrigerator off the grid, the Koubas also received a $30 rebate from EPE for participating in the recycling program.

For more information about the EPE refrigerator recycling program, call 877-643-1956 or visit www.epelectric.com.

After being loaded onto the truck, the old refrigerator will be transported to an area outside of Sunland Park before finally being shipped to Albuquerque, where it will be de-manufactured.

JACO Environment Navigator Ariel Lopez and Crew Leader David Luna take away an almost 20-year-old refrigerator from the home of Keith and Tracey Kouba Wednesday, March 30, as part of the El Paso Electric Co. refrigerator recycling program.

Keith Kouba signs the final document for Luna before his inefficient refrigerator is hauled away. For participating in the program, the Koubas will receive $30 from El Paso Electric.

Energy Star presents new version

Homes 3.0 requires even more energy efficiency from builders

Miles Dyson Living Green

April is an important month this year for the Energy Star for Homes Program. After qualifying more than a million new homes nationwide to the Energy Star standard, this program is determined to step it up a notch.

Energy Star for Homes is a voluntary program administered by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. Energy Star requires participating homebuilders to construct abovecode homes that incorporate industry-best practices to ensure better comfort and energy efficiency.

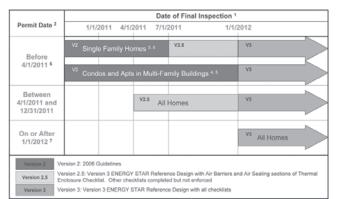

Energy Star has been so successful in educating builders and homebuyers about these better ways to build homes that many of the ideas and strategies are now being incorporated in the residential building code. The 2009 Energy Code already adopted by the state of New Mexico and, pending implementation in Las Cruces, includes requirements for thermal bypass (heat loss or gain) reduction at insulated walls, ceilings and floors and testing of duct work to minimize conditioned air loss. Each of these measures was introduced to residential construction through Energy Star for Homes.

Over time, as mandated code requirements have become more rigorous and builder standard practices have become more efficient, EPA has periodically modified the Energy Star guidelines for new homes to ensure homes earning the label continue to represent a meaningful improvement over non-labeled homes. Energy Star for Homes 3.0 represents the next major step in the evolution of affordable, durable, comfortable and energy-efficient homes.

The first big change for Energy Star 3.0 is better efficiency. Homes permitted before April 1 required a Home Energy Rating (HER) index of 85 or less. Energy Star homes permitted after the first of this month will require HER index scores that are even lower. Ratings are now calculated on a scaled format and, for the most part, in Doña Ana County will need a HER index of 65 to 75 to qualify.

Size does matter. Bigger homes use more energy compared to similarly equipped smaller homes. New larger homes (more than 2,200 square feet) with only two or three bedrooms need to be significantly more efficient to become Energy Star certified.

Heating and cooling contractors, always key to home comfort and efficiency, will now play a larger role in Energy Star for homes certification under version 3.0. Energy Star approved HVAC contractors will correctly size equipment,

This schedule shows when Energy Star will begin to implement their Home 3.0 standards.

The final big change to Energy Star 3.0 is enhanced structural durability through moisture management. Even in our Chihuahuan Desert climate water damage to wood framed wall and roof structures is common. Plumbing leaks or high humidity levels can jeopardize our health indoors. The moisture management requirements of Energy Star 3.0 provide builders guidance and industry-best practice details to limit the risk of moisture caused structural damage and homeowner/occupant respiratory health issues.

Homebuilders who participate in the Energy Star program recognize the advantages that an Energy Star-certified home provides. No one is making them build their homes better – they simply realize it is the right thing to do. We have dozens of Energy Star builders in the Las Cruces area, be sure to talk to one before you build or buy a new home.

Crawling ants can be found in town

Tiny bugs spread bacteria

Local Truly Nolen of America Expert

Ants might be small, but their impact can be big. Many people feel ants are merely a nuisance to be brushed aside like the crumbs that attract them, but some species can cause structural damage to your home or business, contaminate food, destroy seeds, damage plants and even attack and injure animals and humans.

Ants are seemingly everywhere; they eat almost anything and have few natural predators to control their numbers. They are also among the most difficult pests in the world to control.

People use various extermination methods, yet the ants seem to keep coming back – and in larger numbers. Add to that the proliferation of non-native species, and there is no doubt that there are more ants now than there were 20 years ago.

These imported ants, such as the South American fire ant and the white-footed ant from Japan, have no natural enemies and aggressively out-compete native species for food. In the case of the white-footed ant, they simply out reproduce native species.

The fire ant causes millions of dollars in damage annually. They nest in soil at the base of trees, shrubs, grass or in homes and are extremely aggressive, swarming and killing livestock, short circuiting electrical equipment and burrowing under rural roads. Single queen mounds can be 30- to 100-per acre with up to 250,000 ants each.

The white-footed ant drives homeowners to distraction simply because of their ubiquitous presence and appetite for sugar. They are extremely prolific, reproducing at alarming rates. Unlike other ants that rely on a single queen and specialized ants to reproduce, 50 percent of the white-footed ant colony can produce offspring. Their colonies can house more than 1 million ants. Fortunately, they don't cause damage or injury.

The same cannot be said for the carpenter ant, the most common species found in homes throughout the northern United States. A silent menace that destroys wood and can cause worse damage to homes than termites, carpenter ants thrive in the same environment as humans. Outdoors, colonies are usually located in dead wood. Indoors, they settle in roofs, ceilings, walls, ventilated crawl spaces and in the attic. The queen can live 15 years. Her workers live as long as seven years and can forage up to 300 feet from the colony. Carpenter ants feed on insects and human food and will bite when disturbed.

Other common ant varieties include:

- Ghost ants, whose colonies contain several reproductive females and hundreds of thousands of extremely small workers, can occupy several nesting sites and spread a variety of bacteria.
- Nesting in wall voids behind baseboards and between liners, pharaoh ants spread a variety of bacteria.
 Colonies contain several reproductive females and hundreds of thousands of workers.
- Big head ants feed on meats, greases and breads and may invade homes in search of food. They nest in soil or rotten wood and are found in warmer and dryer sections of the United States.
- Normally found in decayed wood outdoors, acrobat ants may infest a home in search of food. Their name comes from their tendency to raise their abdomens over their heads when excited.

Remember, it's much easier to deal with ants if you take action as soon as you see them. It doesn't take long for ants to swarm and take up residence in your home or business, spreading bacteria and destroying your property. They should be taken seriously.

Serving springtime patio brunches

Calm, enjoyable weather makes outdoor eating great for Easter

"Easter in America is a mixture of a lot of cultures, stories and Christian beliefs. However, the reason for the celebration remains the same – to call to mind our crucified Jesus who rose from the dead to save us." – Barbara

It doesn't seem possible that Easter is almost here. Didn't we just celebrate New Year's? When I think Easter, I think spring, colorful baskets, outdoor hunts, fluffy bunnies, pink tulips, rosebud teacups, crunchy carrots, creamy chocolates, juicy ham and decorated eggs. I also think "brunch," especially eggs and

Spring and Easter in the desert is an ideal time of year to host a brunch for family and friends. The weather remains benign – not too hot for a patio gathering. Select two or three mimosa recipes – I share one below – to pair with egg entrées and enjoy springtime in the desert.

Spicy Carrot Sunrise Mimosa

Use this recipe as a guideline for making mimosas for a crowd. 1 part fresh carrot juice 1 part fresh squeezed orange juice 3 to 4 parts champagne or sparkling wine Dash of cayenne Orange slices, for garnish

Mix and serve in chilled champagne glasses. Garnish with orange slices, if desired. Makes 1 serving.

Easter Egg Scramble with Diced Chile

4 tablespoons milk

Serve spicy scrambled eggs on thick, crusty bread slices.

1/4 teaspoon ground black pepper 2 tablespoons butter 6 spring onions, finely chopped 2 fresh green chiles, seeded and diced 1 teaspoon finely grated root ginger

1/8 teaspoon turmeric 2 tablespoons cilantro, chopped 1/2 teaspoon ground cumin

Beat eggs until well mixed. Add milk, salt and pepper. Heat butter in a large heavy frying pan and slowly cook onion, chiles and ginger over a low heat until soft. Add turmeric and cilantro and cook for a minute or two longer. Stir in egg mixture and cumin.

Cook over low heat, stirring and lifting the eggs as they begin to set on the base of the pan. Mix and cook until the eggs are of a creamy consistency; they should not be dry. Serve topped on toasted or grilled crusty bread brushed with olive oil and garlic. Makes 3 to 4 servings.

Bunny's Fresh Produce Quiche

1 (9- or 10-inch) piecrust 1 cup onion, chopped 1 green chile pepper, chopped (favorite) 1 cup fresh broccoli, chopped

1 cup fresh tomatoes, seeded and diced

1/2 cup fresh mushrooms, sliced 2 tablespoons butter

1 teaspoon garlic, minced

Salt to taste

1/2 teaspoon ground black pepper 1/2 cup shredded

Mozzarella cheese 1/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese 5 eggs

1/4 cup milk

Line a 9- or 10-inch pie pan with piecrust. Line crust with a double thickness of aluminum foil. Bake at 450 degrees for 5 minutes. Remove foil and bake an additional 5 minutes. Place on rack and let cool while preparing remaining ingredients. In large skillet, melt butter. Add onion, chile pepper, broccoli, tomatoes and mushrooms. Sauté until vegetables are softened. Add garlic, salt and pepper. Mix well. Remove from heat. Spoon vegetables into crust. Sprinkle with cheeses. Whisk together eggs and milk. Pour over vegetables.

Bake at 350 degrees for 30 to 40 minutes or until knife inserted near center comes out clean. If edges get too brown, cover edges with foil during baking.

Let stand 5 minutes before

Egg Basket Soufflé with Jam

2 cups flour

1 1/4 teaspoons kosher salt

3 to 6 tablespoons sugar

4 large eggs, preferably room temperature 1 1/2 cups whole milk

3 tablespoons unsalted butter, melted 1 tablespoon of butter for coating pan

For this recipe, use an enamel cast iron frying pan or a well-seasoned cast iron skillet for baking.

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Place preferred baking vessel in oven. In a large bowl, mix all dry ingredients until combined. Create "well" in center.

Melt butter. Crack eggs into measured milk. Pour milk/eggs into center of dry ingredients and whisk, from center out, until almost uniformly combined. While just barely whisking the mixture, pour in melted butter and whisk until just combined. Carefully pull the hot pan from oven and swirl about a tablespoon of butter in bottom to melt and coat. Pour batter into hot pan, using spatula. Place in oven for about 20 minutes or until sides are puffy and browned. Serve with jam, recipe below. (Recipe adapted from bayareabites.com.)

Easy Homemade Pineapple-Habanero Jam

1 (20-ounce) can crushed pineapple

3 tablespoons lemon juice 1 teaspoon habanero powder

3 1/4 cups sugar

1 liquid pectin pouch such as Certo

Combine pineapple and lemon juice in a kettle. Add sugar and stir well. Place on high heat and, stirring constantly, bring quickly to a full boil with bubbles over the entire surface. Boil hard for 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat; stir in pectin. Skim. Let stand for 5 minutes. Pour into hot, sterile canning jars to 1/4-inch from top. Seal, and process 5 minutes in boiling water bath. Makes 4 or 5 half-pint jars. (Recipe adapted from canning-recipes.com)

Chile Decorated Eggs (Roasted Chile Frittata)

12 large eggs, lightly beaten 1 teaspoon salt

1/2 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper

1 to 2 teaspoons goodquality chile powder 1/2 bunch cilantro leaves, finely chopped 1 tablespoon olive oil 1 small onion, finely chopped

1 1/2 roasted red bell peppers, sliced into strips 2 poblano chiles, roasted, peeled, seeded and diced

1 cup grated Jack cheese

Cilantro sprigs for garnish In a large bowl, combine the eggs with the salt, pepper, chile powder and cilantro. Whisk until evenly blended and set aside. Heat the olive oil in an ovenproof 10-inch non-stick skillet over medium heat. Sauté the onion 5 to 6 minutes, until softened and slightly golden.

Add the red pepper and poblano and cook 2 minutes more. Pour the egg mixture into the pan, swirling to make an even layer. Reduce the heat to medium-low, scatter the cheese over the top and cook, covered, until the eggs are nearly set. Shake the pan occasionally to prevent sticking.

Turn on the broiler and place the pan under the broiler for a minute or two to set the top. Remove from heat and let cool in the pan for 10 minutes. Place a round platter on top of the pan and invert to remove. Garnish with cilantro, cut into wedges and serve warm or at room temperature. Makes 6 to 8 servings. Say goodbye to brown avocados

Avo Saver slows down oxidation process, keeps fruit fresh

Bv Beth Sitzler

Currently four months into 2011, many are still holding to their New Year's resolution while others may have let them go

If your resolution this year was to drop a few pounds and gain new healthier eating habits, then look no further than the avocado, a fruit that is both nutritious and full of flavor.

Grown in both tropical and temperate climates, the avocado is grown from California and South America to China and Ethiopia. The No. 1 country for growing the tree fruit, however, is Mexico, which commonly grows the Hass variety that are produced year-round.

Consisting of a creamy texture, avocados contain about 20 essential nutrients, including fiber, potassium, vitamins E and B and folic acid.

Unfortunately, the avocado has a bad reputation because it's high in fat and calorie content. While these are high, it is the good, healthy fat. When eaten in moderation, the avocado can assist you in losing weight because it will help produce the feeling of being full faster.

Also, when eaten with other fruits and vegetables, the lutein and alpha and beta-carotene in the avocado will act as a booster, making it easier for the body to absorb nutrients from these

While a key ingredient in guacamole, avocados can be used in a variety of ways. They can be sliced and added to salads and sandwiches or whipped into cold soups or protein shakes.

A drawback to eating avocado in moderation is that the fruit turns brown quickly when exposed to air. Although this shouldn't affect the taste, it does make it look unappetizing. To help the avocado look fresh and green longer, use the Avo

What is it?

Oxidation in avocados takes place because of the enzyme polyphenol oxidase, which turns brown when exposed to air. While some avocados begin to change colors as soon as a few minutes after being cut, others take longer.

The best way to keep your avocado looking green longer is by limiting how much air it is exposed to – this is where the Avo Saver comes in.

The Avo Saver is a specially designed gadget aimed at keeping your avocado fresh longer than other storage methods, such as in a plastic baggie.

Created from hard plastic, the secret to the Avo Saver is its strap, which will hold the cut fruit in place, helping to create a seal around the exposed innards and slowing the oxidation

This will not only save at-home chefs time, but also money, because they will no longer have to throw away the avocado half before it can be eaten.

How does it work?

Before using the Avo Saver, be sure to wash it thoroughly by hand, using warm soapy water.

After the avocado has been cut, place the half containing the pit into the saver. The cut side of the avocado should firmly rest against the plastic, creating a suctioned seal.

Lastly, strap down the avocado. You want to make sure it is fastened tightly so the avocado is secure and the seal remains intact. If the avocado can move around, make the strap tighter.

The avocado can then be stored in the refrigerator. The seal between the avocado and plastic will keep air out, allowing it to

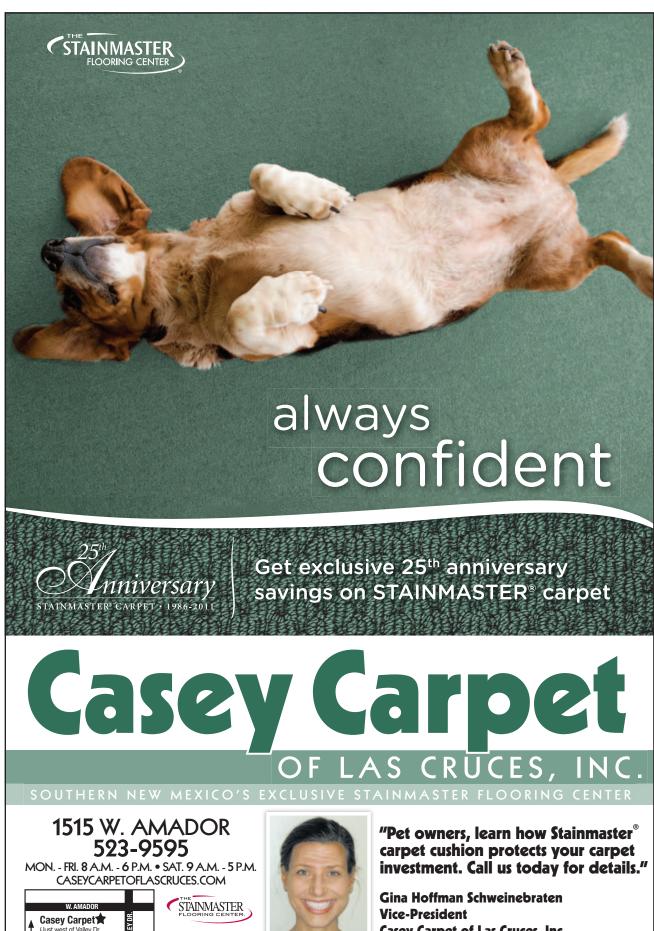

When you're done, be sure to wash the Avo Saver. It can be placed on the top rack of the dishwasher, if desired.

Where can it be found?

The Avo Saver can be purchased at grocery stores around town including Kohl's and Bed, Bath & Beyond. It can also be bought online at www.cheftools.com.

How much does it cost?

The Avo Saver costs about $4 a piece. A set of three can be purchased for around $10.
