City Clerk: Early vote rate 'steady'

Two days left for early voting before Nov. 8

By Todd G. Dickson

Voters who have already made up their mind in the Las Cruces municipal races have been casting their ballots early at a "steady" pace, City Clerk Esther Martinez said Wednesday, Nov. 2. Her office in City Hall, 700 N. Main St., will continue taking absentee ballots from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, Nov. 4, and from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 5. There will be no in-person voting allowed Monday, Nov. 7, just prior to the actual election day Tuesday, Nov. 8, when the polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Up for election are mayor, three City Council positions and the presiding judge for Municipal Court.

As of the end of the day Tuesday, Nov. 1, the votes of more than 1,500 ballots had already been cast, Martinez said. There were still about 100 absentee ballots mailed to voters that had yet to be turned in or arrive by mail, she said. If people are mailing in their absentee ballots, they need to send it in immediately, she said, to give the mail service a chance to deliver them on time.

On Monday, people can hand-deliver the absentee ballot, Martinez said. If the voter isn't able to bring it in, the ballot can only be delivered by a member of the voter's immediate family, she said.

Three-way mayor's race

Not surprisingly, the most attention has gone to the race between the three candidates running for mayor, which is elected by all city residents.

Incumbent Ken Miyagishima is seeking re-election, but has two challengers - Michael R. Huerta and City Councillor Dolores Connor.

In recent weeks, the candidates have been sparring over the veracity of each other's statistics, such as Miyagishima's claim the city has grown thousands of jobs over the past year, Connor's claim that the police force is the same as it was Mayfield Trojan Ty Stevers and the Las Cruces Bulldawg, Joseph Ortiz, have been friends since pre-school but friendships, families and neighborhoods are torn asunder when the annual Mayfield versus Las Cruces football game divides the City of the Crosses each fall. This year's throw-down for bragging rights, District 3-5A supremacy and state-tournament seating will be at 7 p.m. Friday, Nov. 4, at Aggie Memorial Stadium.

Some dispute new school transfers

Balancing populations should be the primary driver, they say

By Todd G. Dickson

Seven members of Las Cruces Public Schools High School Redistricting Committee have issued a "statement of concern" about district officials opting for a liberal transfer policy to the

Those signing the statement include Dawn Starostka, Michael Hays, Susan Palmer, Janel Ortiz, Tracey Alexander, Lucy Rathgaber and Earl Nissen.

As voting members of the committee, "we are releasing this statement to express our concern over the outcome of the redistricting process, especially as it pertains to the ability to get Centennial High School off the ground and on equal footing with the other three major high schools in a timely fashion."

The school board recently accepted a proposed redistricting, but isn't expected to make final approval until its Nov. 15 meeting. The statement refers to comments made by board members

LCPS clears first audit

Superintendent predicts district will clear more detailed review

Bulletin Staff Report

The results from the first of two audits of the Las Cruces Public Schools (LCPS) Special Education Department have given the department the all clear, Superintendent Stan Rounds said.

When the second audit is completed in November, Rounds said he expects positive results again.

Rounds received a letter Oct. 20, from the New Mexico Public Education Department (NMPED) stating that the LCPS Special Education Department has been cleared of all issues of noncompliance raised by NMPED after an April 2011 audit. "The individual cases of non-compliance have been corrected in a timely manner," said Denise Koscielniak, director of the NMPED Special Education Bureau (SEB) in the letter. "The district has submitted all of the necessary documents demonstrating compliance in the areas of pre-school transition and evaluation." Koscielniak also noting LCPS' "prompt response and cooperation."

In that same letter, Koscielniak said NMPED is reviewing the results of an independent audit it ordered of the LCPS Special Education Department that was begun in July by Accounting and Consulting Group LLP to ensure

News of the week

Never a dull moment in and around Las Cruces and in the newspaper business in New Mexico

About half the Bulletin team played hooky from Las Cruces last weekend to attend the 103rd annual conference for the New Mexico Press Association, an organization of the state's newspapers. The three-day event was held at the luxurious Hyatt Regency Tamava Resort near Bernalillo, north of Albuquerque.

The convention concluded Saturday, Oct. 29, with a banquet and the announcement of the 2011 Better Newspaper Award winners. In the large weekly classification, the Las Cruces Bulletin scored big, garnering 11 individual and staff awards for writing, design and marketing. The Bulletin also earned the judges' highest honor, the coveted General Excellence Award for 2011. (See pages B1 and B2 in this week's Business section.)

As my granddad used to say, "Not bad for a bunch of country folks."

The wins were exciting for our team, and we took time to celebrate Saturday night. However, the nature of our never-ending deadline business of newspapering means there is not much time for us to savor our accomplishments. Early Monday morning, our staff was back at work in Las Cruces.

Not only were they building this week's Bulletin, they were also working on several special projects, including the program for the Nov. 18 March of Dimes High Heels for High Hopes fashion show, and our eighth annual Community Wish List, planned for Nov. 11, where we feature the needs of our local charitable organizations.

This year, Bulletin staffers are working on an additional major project – the Las Cruces centennial book, a large format, 272-page glossy coffee table book that will feature Las Cruces' involvement over the 100 years of New Mexico's statehood. This exciting, once-in-a-lifetime project is requiring lots of overtime and community volunteers to ensure the information and photos in the book are accurate and portray a broad scope of the people and businesses that have made Las Cruces what it is today.

Because we are in the newspaper business, and not the book publishing business, we were a little worried at first about our ability to produce and market a high-quality book. However, with more than 1,500 pre-orders already prepaid, our only worry now is whether our printer will be able to deliver the books by our Dec. 15 deadline.

Of course, while we continue work on these projects, there are several events and activities happening here in Las Cruces.

Early Friday evening is the monthly (first Friday of each month), Downtown Art Ramble on Main Street.

Friday night is another epic high school football game pitting crosstown rivals Las Cruces High School versus the reigning state champions, the Mayfield Trojans.

On Saturday, thousands of high school band enthusiasts will pack the Aggie Memorial Stadium on the New Mexico State University campus for the annual Tournament of Bands marching band competition. At least 34 bands from New Mexico, Texas and Arizona are expected to compete in the daylong competition.

On Saturday and Sunday, Doña Ana Arts Council's gigantic two-day Renaissance ArtsFaire will draw thousands of regional guests to Young Park. The ArtsFaire has something for everyone and can be described simply as "fall family fun at its finest."

Las Cruces is a terrific city, and a great place to publish a local newspaper. As long as readers keep reading, we will continue to do our best to meet reader expectations and to cover these and other events that make Las Cruces such a unique place.

Thanks, Las Cruces, for giving us the opportunity to do what we do - entertain and inform through the pages of our weekly newspaper.

Letters to the Editor

Border law is unneeded

Thanks to Nate Cote for calling attention to the dangers of HR1505, a bill in the U.S. House of Representatives. This bill, misleadingly named National Security and Federal Lands Protection Act, permits the Department of Homeland Security to waive 36 laws on federal, state-owned and private lands within 100 miles of U.S. borders and coastlines. Among the laws that can be waived are the Clean Air Act, Safe Drinking Water Act, Wilderness Act and the National Park Service Organic Act. A complete list of laws that can be waived and maps of areas that would be in the "zone" are on the Pew Charitable Trusts website. Neither of the secretaries of interior or agriculture would be able to prevent building of roads, fences or other structures within the 100-mile zones.

More alarming, as the Pew site points out, the law leaves Congress and the public without a voice even for sites such as Glacier National Park, the Great Lakes and the California coastline. All of Florida, Maine and Hawaii would be in the "zone."

The law is unnecessary. There is no restriction for Border Patrol to pursue anyone anywhere on federal lands, according to the Deputy Secretary of the Interior for law enforcement, security and emergency management.

Please oppose this law, which would allow an unelected DHS secretary and all persons under him or her to exercise unchecked power on large areas of the U.S.

America on the decline

I read with interest Bob Bigelow's (of Bigelow Aerospace) observations about China's plans for the future in space as compared to that of the U.S. In general, I agree with Bigelow. He observed that this concern "is not on the radar screen of any national leader."

There is no national leadership now in the public sector. The current president and Congress are jokes. They have reduced both offices to political rhetoric, finger pointing and gridlock. They do not have the will to make the hard decisions.

The last time a national goal was set was when President John Kennedy set the goal of landing men on the moon within the decade.

By many accounts, America is on a steady, steep decline across many fields. History is a great teacher, those who fail to learn from it run the risk of repeating it. Rome and Greece are great examples of this.

If you do not believe me, take a look at the New Mexico high school scores in mathematics and science for 2010. Compare these to countries like China, Korea and India. The scores will shock you. They did me.

Mansion or just a residence?

Proper terminology for governor's home depends on who you ask

Jay Miller Inside the Capitol

Actually residence isn't a bad idea. As mansions go, it is small potatoes. The only thing grand about New Mexico's residence is its parking lot.

Not being a mansion isn't particularly unusual. Most states don't get carried away with their governor's residences.

If Martinez were appointed by royalty, she would live in a mansion. New Mexico's governors for its first 250 years were appointed by a king and they lived in what was called a palace. Actually the Palace of the Governors wasn't very palatial but it was better than any other house in the village.

Our first U.S. territorial governors, appointed by the president, lived in the Palace of the Governors. After 1889, they were allowed to live in private residences but they used the Palace as their office.

In 1907, after 60 years of trying to become a state, the territorial legislature decided it would have to start looking more like the rest of the United States if it ever was going to be admitted to the Union.

So they built a capitol with a dome on it and a large Victorian governor's mansion. It worked. But once we were safely in the

we were safely in the Union, state buildings headed back toward pueblo and Spanish territorial styles. The dome came off the capitol and the mansion was torn down.

In 1951, a tract of land in the hills a mile north of the plaza was donated for a new residence and a modest Spanish territorial home was built for our governors.

The concept was that the home should fit in with the surrounding area and not be ostentatious. After all, the residence houses an elected official who should not be lording it over his or her constituents.

Former Gov. Bruce King, in his book

"Cowboy in the Roundhouse," told of visiting the governor's residence in the early 1960s and going home to his small farm house to tell his wife Alice that he wanted to be governor someday so they could live in such a nice house.

Ten years later, the Kings moved into that house. When King's four-year term ended and they moved back to the ranch at Stanley, the Kings built themselves a very nice home.

But some other governors haven't been as impressed with the residence. It was reported that Gov. Toney Anaya's family, who lived nearby, didn't want to move in because it wasn't nearly as nice as their own home. Anaya sought some major improvements to the residence but they were ridiculed as Toney's Taj Mahal.

The living quarters always have been cramped, especially for families with children. Although several expansions and improvements have been made to the public areas of the mansion over the years, governors never particularly wanted to ask lawmakers for improvements to the private family area.

But former Gov. Gary Johnson did future governors a favor. He said since he had no future political ambitions, he wouldn't mind doing a little begging. He got money for the private quarters. His wife Dee, who had run a very successful construction business, oversaw the project.

It is common throughout the country for governor's residences to be called mansions even if they aren't. Some states provide no residence for the governor. In others, the "mansion" is a tract home. New Mexico falls somewhere in the middle but is generally agreed to be the most representative of its state's architecture.

Martinez is not the first New Mexico governor to insist on using residence instead of mansion. Former Gov. Jerry Apodaca also felt strongly that residence was the proper term. By the end of their third term, the Kings often referred to the residence as "the house."

Gov. Bill Richardson preferred the term "mansion." But he also liked to call it "the people's house" meaning that it was open to the people much more than under previous governor Gary Johnson.

Richardson claimed to have hosted 170 events, involving over 7,000 guests during his first year in office.

Letters to the Editor

Pearce incites lawlessness

If a private citizen goes to the Lincoln National Forest with a chainsaw and cuts down a tree near a public campground, they will surely be fined. Likewise, if they use a bulldozer in Catron County to trespass across private property and U.S. Forest Service lands, they would expect to be arrested.

But from his position as New Mexico's 2nd Congressional District Representative, Steve Pearce is able to do these things, or sanction them, and even obtain exemptions to "make them legal," something a private citizen could not easily do. On Sept. 17, Pearce, personally led a 'Tree Party' event, also dubbed an emergency tree-cutting ceremony, at a public campground close to Cloudcroft, where he personally chain-sawed down a large coniferous tree. The full video of his speech and tree-felling are on YouTube. His stated purpose was twofold: to thin trees thereby protecting nearby residents from fire danger and to provide jobs for the logging industry.

On the surface, forest maintenance coupled with job creation seems an admirable pursuit.

But Pearce fails to disclose important facts. For example, the U.S. Forest Service does thin the very forests where the congressman cut his tree. The federal government has thinned three-times more acres in the Lincoln National Forest in the past 10 years than it did in the same forest during the previous 20 years.

In a separate incident in New Mexico, Pearce publicly stated that Catron County's illegal bulldozing of private property and the San Francisco River was a "miscommunication." Certainly, Catron County officials knew full well they were violating private property rights and federal law.

Pearce uses his bully pulpit to incite fear in rural communities. He professes to protect his constituents from an overreaching federal government while at the same time sanctioning local government officials to overstep their public authority. These recent events – cutting trees and bulldozing on public lands – are examples of this congressman's misrepresentation of information for the purpose of manipulating public opinion.

Most Americans, myself included, love their country and value the wonder and diversity of our public lands. Pearce's sanction of illegal activities on these lands is an affront to our American laws and values. It is hard to respect an elected official who incites lawlessness in our forests while disregarding facts.

What can we conclude when the very people we elect to uphold the laws so flagrantly disrespect and break them? How can our democracy continue to survive and thrive if we continue to be led by politicians like Pearce?

Shirley Armstrong

Best of Luck to Tiffany Chastine In the space of one hour, I had two near misses with clists. The first occurred as Lleft my driveway Llooked.

In the space of one hour, I had two near misses with cyclists. The first occurred as I left my driveway. I looked to my right, no one coming. I looked to my left, no one coming. I drove slowly down to the driveway when a cyclist, riding along the curb the wrong way, sped right in front of me. I jammed the brakes and missed him by a foot.

On my way home that same morning, I drove to an intersection. The traffic light was red. I looked for traffic. There was none to my left and none to my right, so I started my right turn when a cyclist came in front of me traveling on the sidewalk. I jammed the brakes and missed him, too.

The law is quite clear. Cyclists are to travel on the roadway, not the sidewalk, and they are to stay in the right lane.

A word to the wise cyclists, please obey the law, for your own sake.

Hey, you're not allowed to do that

We have become a country with too many laws and rules

We are a country of too many laws and rules. They foster dependability for citizens since they are written. The problem is there are just too many of them.

How did we get so many laws and rules? Lawmakers pass new laws each session on top of the thousands upon thousands of laws already on the books. Additionally, bureaucrats come up with new rules on top of the multitudes of rules already governing our every action. The number and complexity of these are multiplied by our court's interpretations.

Often these laws and rules are contradictory such that two Americans doing exactly the same thing are treated quite differently by our government. It was not always this way. In my little slice of heaven we had the Code of the West.

This code, while not written, was better understood then than we understand our Constitution now. It started with the notion that each person was to look out for themselves. You were expected to defend yourself and also those who are weak when attacked. We are instructed to be modest, loyal, courageous, never a quitter and absolutely true to our word. A handshake was sufficient for contracts.

With others, the first rule was to never pry into another person's past. Never touch another person's horse or hat and be considerate to everyone. This was the original "you will know it when you see it" as to being considerate or not. There were no examples, but none were really needed.

In the Old West we were to say "howdy" to those we meet on the trail, but not to talk too much. As a rule we knew that we could never make a threat without expecting a fight. As would be expected of these folks, you were to cuss only around other men and never ever to complain about the cooking.

When it came time for food, we knew to remove our hat and guns at the dinner table. And, at dinner time, anyone who wanders into camp is welcome to eat, even your enemies. They treated their enemies with respect.

There are more codes, not written but understood. Violate them and most Westerners, at the very least, would quit talking to you. The government of the day, what little there was, tried to not change the behavior of citizens except when it was unavoidable. Some citizens might go years without hardly any dealings with the government. Contrast that to a society that was overflowing with government rules. In Japan around the year 1600 A.D., Ieyasu Tokugawa became the Shogun. His family rule lasted 250 years without wars or incursions by foreign powers. During that time Japan became very prosperous. In fact, in 1850 there were around 31 million Japanese and only 23 million Americans. That was the good news for the Japanese citizens.

The bad news was over the years the rules controlling citizens were increased such that every aspect of a Japanese citizen's life was very regulated from what clothes could be worn, what jobs were available, what food each citizen could have depending on their status, etc. There were no real citizen rights and each person was bound to follow all of the orders given to them by the authorities. No dissent was tolerated at all.

While America in 2011 is not exactly Japan in 1850, our nation moves in that direction. We have rules covering almost everything we do. From the local codes officers, state inspectors to the federal departments of energy and education, etc., we Americans are increasingly subjected to an avalanche of new rules of our behavior. Some of the rules make sense, most do not.

The government sticks its nose in our lives at every point to the point that there is nothing free about our society. It has happened over a great many years a little at a time so that the incredible number and breadth of control is not normally a topic of discussion.

Liberty is the ability to do as you please as long as it does not impact someone else. Not much liberty remains in this land of a million laws and rules. Can we reverse this direction to always add more rules?

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

A run of bad luck

The Fort Worth Stock Show is a mecca for a lot of purebred breeders. Many, many thousands have made the trip over the years, often overcoming daunting obstacles. But Galen's journey from Illinois takes the cake.

He and his cow-partner Dave loaded their prize Hereford bull in Galen's gooseneck stock trailer (G1), being pulled with Dave's new Dodge V-10 diesel (D1). They had to rewire G1 to make the lights work. They were to be accompanied by Dave's brother Mort. Mort was driving Dave's old truck (D2) and trailer (D3) with a load of straw.

Swinging by the tire store in Quincy to fix the spare on D3, they noticed a bolt sticking in the right front tire on D2. Thank goodness they caught it before they left. In the meantime Dave maneuvered to gas up D1, ran over a curb and sliced the sidewall on G1. It cost them almost $600 to get out of town.

Somewhere in the Ozarks, D2 started knockin'. A check showed a dry dipstick. Taking a precaution, they bought a case of oil for good luck and hit the road. At the gas stop they noticed D1's dually had a flat on the inside. They gave it a blind eye and drove on.

All went well till twilight, when Dave turned on the headlights and the brakes locked up. It took two hours at the next truck stop to rewire G1. Completed, they headed into the dark.

At 2 a.m., they took a pit stop alongside the road. D2 was heating up. Dave took D1 and went on ahead. He picked up another case of oil and returned. They replenished the oil but D2 refused to start. The gauges looked good but they had run the battery down trying to jump it until Mort saw a toggle switch, flipped it and the dang thing started. It had two gas tanks.

Dave was pushing D1, runnin' 85 mph. Galen was Mort's co-pilot in D2. They were tryin' hard to keep up till there was a big explosion under the hood that filled the cab with smoke.

It was a miracle Mort stayed on the road. They limped into the next pullout, parked D2 and climbed in D1 with Dave and finally made Fort Worth.

The boys were pretty shaky but they managed to unload the bull at the tie-outs and headed for the motel.

Next morning things looked better in

"Yessir," said the optimistic Dave. "We had a few set-backs but I've got a feelin' our luck is gonna change. You two go and feed our blue-ribbon bull and I'll go check us in."

The positive attitude was contagious. "Let's go get our star," said Galen, patting Mort on the back. Twenty minutes later Dave returned. He had lost his jaunty demeanor. Unfortunately, he had forgotten to make their entries.

County launches online research tool

Doña Ana County has launched a new online research tool to help the public access individual resolutions and ordinances. To reach the database, visit http://ecode360.com/DO2860

Formally called The Code of Doña Ana County, the compiled and cross-referenced research tool will be updated regularly in both electronic format and hard-bound editions. Most county departments will have copies of the hard-bound editions for review by employees and the general public.

The database is accessible on the Doña Ana County website from a sub-tab under the 'Research' tab on the homepage.

The database allows users to search by key words, subject matter or resolution/ordinance numbers. It also features a table of contents, an alphabetical index and a new numbering system with chapter, article and section numbers to facilitate easy access.

Some pages are footnoted with cross references.

The only ordinances and resolutions omitted from the database are those that are purely administrative, such as bond ordinances, franchise ordinances or individual property zone changes.

Although the code has a different numbering system than that which has been used in the past in Doña Ana County, the old numbers are cross-referenced for ease of access.

The electronic database will be updated as often as necessary, depending on actions by the Doña Ana County Board of Commissioners, with the updates available electronically usually within seven working days of any change. The hardbound editions will be updated twice yearly.

The Code of Doña Ana County was compiled and edited by Assistant County Attorney Tom Figart of the Doña Ana County Legal Department.

A1 New Mexico Teachers tutoring program directed by Fred Stern uses Las Cruces teachers, substitutes, and retired teachers as tutors. Their small class sizes of one to three students. allow students to receive desperately needed individual attention from their tutors. Stern claims in many ways the self-esteem work their tutors do may be as important as the actual materials covered.

The program offers tutoring sessions at more than six public locations around Las Cruces, at times to accommodate family schedules. If the parents have difficulty with transportation, A1 New Mexico Teachers will come to the family home to tutor.

'Our role is to provide anything the family and student require to improve the student's educational performance," Stern said.

Stern said he refers to the results as "the miraculous student turn-arounds" that have occurred because of the program.

How do parents enroll their children in the free tutoring program? Flyers were sent home with children who are enrolled in the reduced lunch program at the end of October. If you have these flyers, just fill them out and return them to your child's school. If you do not have

Most burglaries can be prevented, police say

Police are reminding Las Cruces automobile and home owners that the majority of burglaries committed over the past several months might have been prevented had doors been locked or valuables secured out of sight.

The overwhelming majority of auto and home burglaries committed within the past several months were considered to be crimes of opportunity where the perpetrator gained access through an unsecured window or unlocked door, according to police.

Automobile owners should remove all items of value from view, and keep windows rolled-up and doors locked when the vehicle is not in use. Homeowners are encouraged to secure windows and lock all doors when your residence is left unoccupied.

- Other safety tips include: Park vehicles in a garage, driveway or welllighted area.
- Remove remote-control garage door openers from vehicles.
- Install and use an audible alarm system for vour vehicle and a motion-activated alarm for your home.
- Keep doors and windows locked.

Las Cruces Channel 98 host Mark Steffen and Las Cruces mayoral candidates Dolores Connor, incumbent Ken Miyagishima and Michael Huerta relax following the taping of "Face to Face," a pre-election forum. election is Tuesday, Nov. 8.

25 years ago and Huerta's claims that intersections with traffic light enforcement cameras have seen an increase in accidents,

Both challengers oppose the city's move to add new impact or property taxes.

On curbside recycling, Connor has said she voted against it it a few years ago when a $4 fee was proposed. The Friedman Recycling company has made curbside recycling more affordable at $2.59, according to Miyagishima, and that there isn't enough volume to make it less expensive. Huerta said he opposes government mandating a value rather than educating the public about the value of recycling.

Huerta and Connor oppose the proposed wilderness legislation in its current form for different reasons, while Miyagishima supports it.

District 1

There are two candidates for District 1: Incumbent Miguel G. Silva and challenger Natalie R. Chadborn.

In District 1, Chadborn has had to explain why she walked out of one candidates' forum for the daily paper. When Silva began speaking about her directly, it broke one of the main rules of the forum but the moderator didn't stop him, she said.

"I didn't leave the forum because I couldn't handle what (Silva) was saying," she said, "but because they weren't following their own rules."

Chadborn is running on a platform to improve police and fire protection and that the city needs fewer rules and regulations.

Silva is seeking a formal inquiry into the cost overruns of the new City Hall and he is a strong advocate for Downtown fees for major roads and drainage. Huerta said the proposed impact fees won't raise enough money to pave the needed roads, and Connor said the fees will make homes more expensive, which would make home-buying more difficult to those with modest incomes. Miyagishima has defended the new fees – they won't go into effect until the start of 2013 - as better than options, which would have increased the city's gross receipts taxes

With the slowdown in home construction, growth is not the issue it was four years ago. But with the city feeling the effects of the sluggish economy, crime and public safety have become a larger issue. Connor and Huerta are calling for more resources put into public safety while Miyagishima defends progress made with the city's new fire and police chiefs.

neighborhoods, such as the Mesquite Street neighborhood.

Since taking office, Silva said there has been more public participation in city decision-making and the city is conducting its business with greater transparency.

But the city isn't business-friendly, according to Chadborn, because regulations are stifling business growth. She is opposed to the city's attempt to strengthen its regulations on controlling

"It's silly," she said. "We live in the desert; dust blows."

District 2

With her run for mayor, Connor is giving up her District 2 seat on the council so there is no incumbent on the ballot. The three candidates looking to fill the opening are Fred Espinosa, Charles Scholz and Greg Smith.

Like Chadborn, Espinosa said the city needs to unravel its red tape and be more business-friendly.

Scholz has said the city should have a buy-local-first policy when it comes to services and goods for city government.

"I don't think we have to hire architects and engineers from Albuquerque to design our roads and buildings," he said.

Smith, who has been active in the Downtown Las Cruces Partnership, is running on wanting to protect the city's quality of life and sense of place.

With District 2 surrounding New Mexico State University, Scholz said there is a lack of rental housing. The city also needs to improve east-west cross-town traffic.

Espinosa said his priorities are economic development, public safety and improving parks and recreation.

Smith said his priority would also be economic development and improving the city's infrastructure and support services.

District 4

City Council District 4 incumbent Nathan Small is being challenged by Aaron Diaz.

Diaz's campaign recently suffered some bad press for failing to meet the city's deadline for reporting campaign contributions. He turned in his report a day late and paid a $50

Small is running on progress made in his district on longlingering issues, such as Burn Lake, the El Molino drainage project and revitalization of Picacho Avenue and El Paseo Road.

Diaz said public safety must be the city's top budget priority. He said the city used to be business-friendly place, but the council has lost sight of that with members who have an agenda to keep new business from being created.

"We need to do a better job of making Las Cruces a lucrative place to do business," Diaz said.

Small said there have been efforts to attract new business that are paying off, such as the new tractor supply company that opened on Picacho. Small defended the council's action for more impact fees because there has been many problems with infrastructure, roads and flood control when the city was growing at a faster rate. He said impact fees are the fairest way to support paying for these needs.

Presiding Municipal Court Judge

Incumbent Presiding Municipal Court Judge Melissa Miller-Byrnes is being challenged by Frank Chavez.

Miller-Byrnes has cited her training improving court processes. Chavez said there is still a lot more that can be approved and that people want court decisions to be more sensible.

Parsons' ties to occult group raised eyebrows among colleagues

By Michael Shinabery

Editor's note: This is part two of a two-part story.

"As a disciple of (Aleister) Crowley, (Jack) Parsons was one of southern California's more notorious occultists – or, some say, Satanists," M.G. Lord wrote in "Astro Turf." "He served as leader of the Agape Lodge of the Church of Thelema, a chapter of Crowley's Ordo Templi Orientis (OTO)."

Parsons, along with Ed Forman and Frank Malina, helped found Aerojet Engineering Corp. to manufacture military Jet-Assisted Take-Off (JATO) devices during World War II. They had developed JATOs at the Guggenheim Aeronautical Laboratory at the California Institute of Technology which, in 1944, became the Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

Parsons adhered to Crowley's dictate, "Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the Law." Lord said that included 'Christian blasphemy," hedonistic acts, and decadent rituals to "incarnate ... the Scarlet Woman in the Book of Revelation." Parsons' "investigations into rocket propulsion were guided by 'Magick'" as well.

Črowley, born in 1875, first sought "magical enlightenment in The Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn," which brought together "alchemy, tarot, astrology, divination, numerology .. and ritual magic," said the website popsubculture.com. "Dracula" author Bram Stoker may have been a member. Crowley, who "adopted 666 as his personal moniker," and called himself The Beast (from Revelation), joined the OTO in 1910. He toured the United States and Canada, and detailed his heroin and cocaine addictions in "Diary of a Drug Fiend." The church's website, oto-usa.org, said Crowley "assumed worldwide leadership" in 1922. He is "the author of the 20th century's most influential textbooks on occultism, and as the first Englishman to found a religion - Thelema - which is today a recognized faith around the world."

Parsons attended his first OTO "mass" in Hollywood in January 1939, George Pendle wrote in "Strange Angel.

"Since his childhood attempts to conjure up the devil, Parsons had always been attracted to tales of the hidden, magical mysteries that lurked behind the 'real' world." He wrote gloomy verse: "The hours darken and the years, Grow black with evil things, And mad machines spawn monstrous fears, That follow sleep with somber wings.

On Feb. 14, 1941, oto-usa.org said Parsons and his first wife joined Thelema's Agape Lodge. The next year, at Parsons' urging, the OTO left Hollywood for communal living in a 54-year-old Pasadena mansion. Not long after, Pendle said, an anonymous letter to police stated the residence was home to a "'black magic' cult," "'Crowleyism," and "perversion;" it caused the first of many police investigations. The FBI opened "a file on Parsons, detailing his link to a 'love cult.' By the end of his life, the file would stretch to nearly two hundred pages."

During the 1942 autumn equinox, Pendle said the housemates "invited friends and colleagues from Caltech and Aerojet to mingle with OTO members in the lavish setting of their new home. It was to be a secular party, with no preaching.' But Parsons, fearing knowledge of his lifestyle might affect his security clearance, hid church literature. The party was "a success, ending in a drunken dance" and debauched cavorting around a fountain.

Soon, according to Pendle, rumors abounded of Parsons' " 'mythic love cult' ... linked to women of 'loose morals,' " and the mansion as a " 'gathering place of perverts.' " Writer L. Ron Hubbard, who would found the Church of Scientology, took up residence.

"As the late nights ... caught up with (Parsons') early morning starts" at work, Pendle said Parsons' "increasingly disheveled appearance led to much sniggering behind his back at the JPL. ... His colleagues were also starting to grow weary of his increasing openness about his private interests." At rocket test launches, "Aerojet workers could clearly hear him chanting ... Crowley's pagan 'Hymn to Pan.'" Lord said Cal Tech Professor Theodore von Kármán simply described "Parsons as a 'delightful screwball' who 'loved to recite pagan poetry to the

As the war escalated, responsibilities at Aerojet intensified. "The Navy was now demanding 20,000 JATOs a month," Pendle said. "The company began seeking outside investors." Parsons was "a loose cannon"; and when "in December 1944, General Tire bought 51 percent of Aerojet's shares" Parsons and Forman - the latter who participated in rituals - were not "included" in the staff welcomed to stay.

"Parsons the innovator and explorer was no longer needed," said Pendle, who estimated Parsons was paid $11,000 on his initial $250 investment. A decade-and-a-half later the stock "would have been worth over $12 million."

Parsons, however, wouldn't have been around to enjoy the money. On June 17, 1952, chemicals he was mixing at his residence exploded. In spite of his "horrific injuries," Pendle said Parsons stayed conscious. When he died at the hospital, his mother swallowed a bottle of sedatives and took her life.

Toward the end of his own life, Parsons resigned from Thelema and set about crafting his own religion, Pendle said. He called the organization the Witchcraft, and his second wife, Candy, "'the witch.'" He "priced a basic course of instruction at $10." By then, Hubbard had founded Scientology's Dianetics and charged "$600 for a 10-day program.

Of the other two original members of the triumvirate, Malina now lived in Paris. The U.S. had "indicted (him) in absentia for failure to disclose his former Community Party membership on a security form," Pendle said. He painted, worked for UNESCO, and he was rich; he'd never sold his Aerojet stock.

Forman died in 1971. He and Parsons had "tinker(ed) with magic spells as they had with their rockets," Pendle said. After one nighttime ritual, Forman "heard a piercing scream coming from outside his (bedroom) window and ... saw a number of horrible entities floating outside his window, what he recognized as banshees." No one else in the house could hear them.

Later in Forman's life, "his wife recalled how every now and then he would look anxiously around him and ask whether she could hear a long, persistent wailing sound. She never could."

Governor upgrades 'sunshine' website

Exempt employee salaries listed

In an address to the New Mexico Press Association Saturday, Oct. 29, Gov. Susana Martinez announced upcoming changes to the official transparency website for state government, the New Mexico Sunshine Portal.

The portal will list additional information not previously found, including the names, titles and salary rate of all state employees regardless of their classification.

Currently, the Sunshine Portal only lists the names, titles and salary rates of "exempt" employees – those who serve at the pleasure of the governor. The portal will now include this information for classified employees, who work under the rules of the state's version of a civil service system. These changes are intended to increase transparency throughout state government, and to demonstrate to the public exactly where tax dollars are spent.

"I have promised since day one that state government will be more transparent, more accessible and more accountable to all New Mexicans," Martinez said. "The Sunshine Portal has been an important tool that promotes open and honest government. These changes will ensure that taxpayers have an even greater idea of how their money is being spent."

New Mexico's Sunshine Portal is a website that displays wide-ranging data for state agency budgets, expenditures, employees, revenue and purchases, along with a number of informational reports including state investment reports and annual fiscal summaries. This summer, the official version of the Sunshine Portal was unveiled after a sixmonth beta mode trial, to include additional functions as developed by constituent feedback.

The new changes are scheduled to take place in the coming weeks and will be fully displayed on the website by early December.

Earlier this year, Martinez partnered with the New Mexico Press Association to link electronically, via the Sunshine Portal and new-mexico.gov, to all public notice postings that appear in newspapers throughout the state. Newmexico. gov is the state's new online portal, which was re-designed and launched at the direction of Martinez to improve access to information about state government.

Also available on newmexico. gov, and on the governor's website, are videos of legislative committee meetings and floor sessions, as well as meetings of boards and commissions such as the State Investment Council. Martinez began the first-ever live webcasting and archiving of these meetings in order to better engage people throughout New Mexico in the process in Santa Fe.

that LCPS is "correctly implementing the specific regulatory requirement(s) under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA)."

"I am confident this additional audit will also result in our Special Education Department receiving a clean bill of health with regard to compliance with IDEA," Rounds said.

As a result of its April 19-21 audit, SEB had said LCPS was not in compliance with the federal Individuals with IDEA with regard to the individual education programs (IEPS), preschool evaluations and/or related service provider logs and schedules regarding 60 special education students.

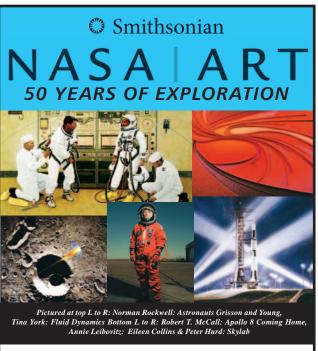

"When LCPS received notice from NMPED that we were not in compliance with IDEA, we conducted our own extensive internal review of the same student records audited by the state," Rounds said. "We discovered that NMPED was, in April 2011, auditing student records from December 2010. However, LCPS was not informed that the SEB was auditing December 2010 data. As a result, we provided the SEB with more current student data. Their findings of non-compliance had been corrected in the updated records.

"As I stated in a May 2011 news conference, there were never discrepancies in our student records. We never reported any data to NMPED unless we were certain it was accurate. NMPED raised issues of non-compliance because it was reviewing old data that was updated and corrected before it was submitted

"I'm gratified that NMPED has cleared us in this matter, and has acknowledged that LCPS was not 'gaming the system' or reporting an inflated special education student population to secure more state or federal funding, as the governor charged last May.

"LCPS continues to refine its validation process in reporting clean and accurate data to the state. And, we continue to work very hard to make sure that every one of our students receives all the services to which he or she is entitled. I am very proud of the work that LCPS Special Education Department Director Glenda Rodriguez and her entire staff do on behalf of our students."

The audit was started when LCPS' request for more special education funding took a huge leap. Rounds said the increase was a result of the district's computer system not communicating well with the state's computer system.

and Superintendent Stan Rounds that no student will be forced to attend Centennial if they don't want to.

"Four comprehensive high schools were promised to citizens and to taxpaying voters in the 2008 bond election; the school board is not delivering on that promise," said the statement of concern.

The committee members assert that the transfer policy will result in Centennial not being fully populated for at least seven years.

The concerned committee members said they followed a demographically driven decision-making process to draw the new attendance boundaries.

The originally proposed redistricting map, according to the statement, would not only balance the four school populations, but do so based on socio-economic status and ethnicity.

"With schools balanced in that way, all 7,000 high school students should have access to same number of teachers, offering roughly the same number of academic classes across the spectrum and have roughly the same number of students from which to draw for athletics, music, drama and other extra-curricular and academic clubs," the statement reads. "It would also be possible to remove all of the portables from the existing high schools, a desire expressed by the superintendent."

School Board Secretary Bonnie Votaw said the final decision rests with the board because the committee only had advisory powers. It was also limited in its work to draw the attendance boundaries and nothing else, she said.

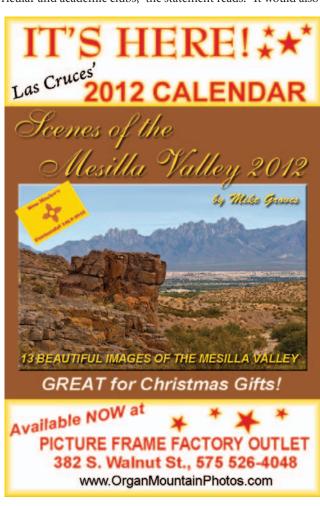

Votaw said she is concerned the complaining committee members are making it more difficult for the board to make a decision, which it needs to do before the Thanksgiving holiday.

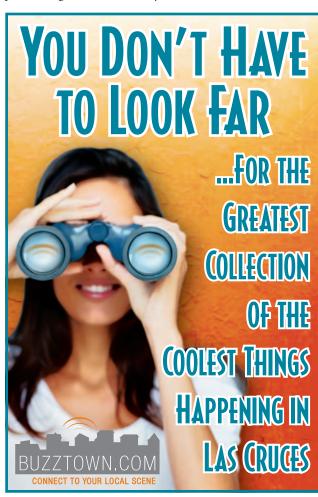

"We haven't made a final decision," Votaw said. "Everybody needs to stay calm."

The committee member's statement does acknowledge that the transfer policy is not part of the work this committee was tasked to do.

"However, we contend that the new policy completely undermines the work we did," the statement said. "Furthermore, outside of our role as committee members, many of us are parents of LCPS students and all are taxpayers who voted in the bond election promising us four comprehensive high schools. On those bases, we feel justified in expressing our concern over the future of Centennial High School. The last-minute decision, caving to pressure from a small but vocal group, changed all of our work and the outlook for this school in the next seven years."

Votaw said the board members will discuss the redistricting plan during its retreat Monday, Nov. 7.

Aggies can beat any WAC team

In the first half of the Oct. 29 game against Nevada, New Mexico State University quarterback Matt Christian passed for 315 yards.

You read that right.

There was no way the first-place and defending WAC champions were going to let him roll up 630 passing yards. In the second half, the Wolf Pack abandoned its man-to-man defensive strategy and went with deep zone coverage. Christian still finished the game with a career-high 432 passing yards and three TD passes, but Nevada won the shootout, 48-34.

It was an exciting game to watch. The Aggies led 27-20 at the half and remained tied with the Wolf Pack 27-27 for most of the third quarter.

Even though the loss was disappointing to Aggie coaches, players and fans, it is amazing to consider NMSU lost to this team 52-6 a year ago.

And yet there's a difference in being outgunned by a superior team and losing a game you think you could've and should've won. Those losses are harder to take: the ones where you think you beat yourself.

There was no doubt that coach DeWayne Walker and his team felt the sting of the loss. At the post-game conference, he and his players were visibly disappointed.

"We just did not execute," Christian said. "I threw three interceptions in one half and that is just not acceptable."

Wide receiver and kick returner Taveon Rogers said he couldn't think of a positive thing he could take away from the experience.

Nevada is a very good football team, coach Walker emphasized. Against a team as good as Nevada, the margin for error is slight, he said.

"You are not going to win (like this)," he said.

It was a "frustrating loss."

The post-game disappointment was a result of the frustration of knowing the Aggies had a real chance to beat the top team in the Western Athletic Conference – but fell short.

"We're more competitive and we're learning how to win," Walker said a few days later. "We just need to keep the fire in the gut. It's not just about football.

"These are life lessons. You can't expect success all the time ... but if you keep doing the right thing, you will experience successes."

"You have to keep going."

It was a great game. Frustrating, but more importantly: it showed the Aggies have the potential to beat any team in the WAC. Any team.

You read that right.

Two sides of one coin

Las Cruces and Mayfield teams similar in style

By Craig Massey
Las Cruces Bulletin

They are arch rivals. Bulldawgs versus Trojans. North side and south side. Us against them. A documentary film on their rivalry was titled "Cruces Divided."

But perhaps the Mayfield and Las Cruces High School football programs aren't so different from one another after all. Maybe they have more in common than many people think – or want to believe.

"You know, sometimes it's like looking in a mirror," LCHS coach Jim Miller said. "You have two teams that play very well and use good technique. We both like to run the ball. The offenses are a little different, but they pretty much run the same defense as us. Two good football teams year in, and year out."

"I would agree with that," Mayfield coach Michael Bradley said. "The programs are very similar. I'm sure you coach how you were coached, and Coach Miller played for my dad (Jim Bradley) and I'm sure he learned a lot from him. It's the same with me."

The teams meet at 7 p.m. Friday, Nov. 4, in the traditional rivalry game to end the regular season. Aggie Memorial Stadium is the venue and more than 20,000 fans are expected. Las

The District 3-5A championship and seeding in the New Mexico high school football tournament will be on the line when Las Cruces and Mayfield high schools meet at Aggie Memorial Stadium at 7 p.m. Friday, Nov. 4.

Cruces is the home team and will be on the west side of the stadium, while Mayfield will be on the east side.

Once again, the district championship is at stake, along with bragging rights. The Bull-dawgs enter the game with an 8-1 record and are ranked No. 2 in the state behind Cleveland High. Mayfield is 7-2 and ranked No. 4. Both teams went 3-0 in district and are headed to the playoffs.

Success is a common bond for Mayfield and LCHS. When one program isn't winning a state championship, the other one usually is. The two teams have won 11 out of the past 16 state championships in Class 5A. Mayfield won it all in 1995, 1996, 1998, 2005, 2006, 2007 and 2010. Las Cruces has titles in 1999, 2000, 2002 and 2008.

Aggies will play to win against No. 18 Bulldogs

By Jeff Barnet

Las Cruces Bulletin

You might be tempted to chalk up the Georgia-New Mexico State University football game.

After all, Georgia is ranked No. 18 in the nation by the AP poll (No. 20 by the coaches' poll), has won six straight games and is 5-1 in the Southeastern Conference, which NMSU cornerback Jonte Green considers the best in college football.

NMSU coach DeWayne Walker said Georgia is a "baby NFL" team.

"I think their running back is 240 pounds," he said with a rueful laugh. "Their offensive line is bigger than most NFL offensive lines."

The game will be at historic Sanford Stadium in Athens, Ga., Saturday, Nov. 5. The game begins at 10:30 a.m. Mountain Time.

Yet the Aggies (3-5, 1-3 Western Athletic Conference) are going into the David-versus-Goliath contest with the intent of taking down the SEC powerhouse.

"Every game is winnable," said NMSU senior quarterback Matt Christian. "College football is college football, and you can beat anybody, any game."

Georgia coach Mark Richt actually said the same thing, and his players say they are not taking the Aggies lightly.

"They are a very athletic team," said Georgia's 220-pound safety Shawn Williams. "They have a playmaker at every position it seems like. The quarterback has a strong arm and knows how to get the ball to his receivers. I think they have a whole bunch of must that could play in the SEC."

whole bunch of guys that could play in the SEC."
Georgia (6-2, 5-1 SEC) lost its first two games of the year to No. 5 Boise State and
No. 12 South Carolina. They are coming off a big 24-20 road win against Florida. Quarterback Aaron Murray passed for two touchdowns and 169 yards on 15-of-34 passing in the win. Isaiah Crowell led all Georgia running backs with 81 yards.

Speaking of numbers, the big number associated with this game is 925,000. That's the amount of dollars NMSU will take home for the money game. As unpopular as money games seem to be with fans, it's important to note, as Christian did at the press conference Nov. 1, that the Aggies won their last money game at Minnesota earlier this year.

Other numbers of interest:

- 432 Christian's career-high passing yards against Nevada, shattering his previous career-high of 296 yards against UNM.
- 24 Senior safety Donyae Coleman's career-high tackles against Nevada. He also forced a fumble.
- 203 Taveon Rogers' career-high receiving

Menzies expects this season's team to be better defensively

By Jeff Barnet

Marvin Menzies said his philosophy is simple: Run a fast-paced game with a lot of pressure on both offense and defense. Go to the glass four or five times, play full-court defense. It's a style of play that combines "depth with pace," said Menzies, who enters his fifth season as coach of the New Mexico State University men's basketball team.

NMSU put that philosophy into action in an exhibition game Wednesday, Nov. 2, defeating Eastern New Mexico University 115-64 at the Pan Am Center.

A coaches' poll picked the Aggies to finish second in the Western Athletic Conference this year. Defense and rebounding will be key for the Aggies this season, Menzies said. With top rebounder and senior forward Wendell McKines back in the lineup, he said the Aggies will be more defensive-minded and able to run their speed-game.

"His energy is contagious," Menzies said of McKines, who missed last year due to injury.

Other players are feeding off of his energy and the entire team is putting forth a great effort in practice, he said.

Last year's injury-plagued 16-17 team did not have the depth to play with the kind of speed and pressure Menzies likes to see, he said. With 6-11 senior center Hamidu Rahman back to full health, Menzies said this year's Aggies are "the best defensive team and rebounding team since I've been here."

Sophomore Tshilidzi Nephawe will share time with Rahman, he said. Asked if the team has some height this year, Menzies responded, "We've always had height, but now we've got height and some girth."

Senior Hernst Laroche will be at the No. 1 guard position, but Menzies is still looking at several players for the No. 2 shooting guard position.

There is no one player who has emerged at this point as the go-to man for three pointers, though many players are shooting well from the perimeter, he said.

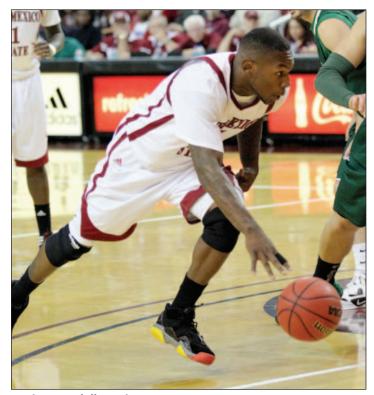

"We will not have one knockdown shooter."

Having three experienced seniors on the team will be a great asset for the Aggies, Menzies said. In the past, he said he always hated to go up against WAC teams loaded with seniors. The years of experience make those teams dangerous, he said.

This year, however, the Aggies will be one of those teams, he said. NMSU opens the season on the road against Northern Colgotten so big the past 15 years," Bradley said. Just the overall success and all the state championships both teams have won. It's a huge game to begin with, but both programs have thrived and it's made it even bigger.'

Bradley's Trojans lost last year's game to LCHS, 14-9, but bounced back to win the state championship over Manzano. A controversial call on the final play of the Bulldawgs' semifinal loss to Manzano is the only thing that kept LCHS and Mayfield from meeting again in the title game.

The Bulldawgs have won the last four meetings between the two teams and Bradley points to the running game as the main reason.

'It's hard to play good defense against them and it's so hard to run on them," Bradley said. You have to run the ball and stop the run, and we have had a hard time doing that against them."

An injury to last year's Bulldawg starting quarterback Jeremy Buurma landed thenjunior Devin Perez in the starting lineup against the Trojans. He responded well in a huge game and returns this year, along with powerful Bulldawg running back Xavier Hall.

"I'm amazed they have so many young starters," Bradley said of the Bulldawgs. "They have the stud running back and quarterback back, but they have 10 or 12 starters who are iuniors.

"They're an extremely dominant team on both sides of the ball. They're huge up front ... a powerful football team and obviously very physical.'

The LCHS offensive line consists of Troy Honeycutt at center, Daedalus Laroche and Jacob Banegas at guard and Lane Cummings and Rudy Guerra at tackle. The tight end is Kamryn Dixon and the receivers are Michael Calzada, Michael Holguin and David Ferralez.

On defense, the Bulldawgs will have Oscar Guzman at nose guard, Banegas and Taylor Tisby at the tackle spots, and Dixon and David Ramirez at defensive end. The linebackers are Justin Polanco and Paul Aguirre, and the secand David Baca and safeties Austin Cervantes and Holguin.

Bradley said his team has "grown up" as the season has progressed. The Trojans lost two of their first three games.

"We had a young team coming in and we played a tough schedule," Bradley said. "We like playing the tough schedule because it helps us get ready for the Cruces game and helps us in the playoffs. We're a much-improved team, but we're still trying to find ourselves.

The Trojans are led by senior quarterback Axten Franzoy, who, like Perez, also started his first LCHS-Mayfield game last year. He is joined in the backfield by a pair of highly productive backs in Ricky Milks and Chris Trujillo. The fullback is Mundo Gonzalez, and Taylor Gibbs and Casey Groen are the receivers. Juan Carlos Badillo and Aaron Renteria will share time at tight end.

The MHS offensive line consists of center Keith Davis, guards Miguel Martinez, Alejandro Guzman and Angel Zapien (who will share time), and tackles Cayman Greene and Eric Sanchez.

On defense, Steve Benavidez anchors from the nose guard position, and he is flanked by tackles Devonte Weeks, Greene and Jesus Olivas. The defensive ends are Badillo, Narciso Gonzalez and Eric Peterson and the linebackers are Joah Franzoy and Santiago Miranda. The Trojans' secondary consists of safeties Joshua Ceniceros and Brandon Thelan and cornerbacks Lucas Jimenez and Marcus Inglemon.

"It's the same old thing with them every year," Miller said of the Trojans. "They have some big people up front and they have good athletes. They're not as big on the offensive line as they are on the defensive line, but they do a good job of staying on their blocks. They're well-coached."

The Trojans lead the all-time series 25-20-1, but the Bulldawgs have gained ground in recent years. The goal for both teams is to win another state championship, but Friday's game will affect the playoff seeding, and is huge for pride and bragging rights.

"It's always a hard-fought game," Miller said. "Turnovers are always a big thing and in this game, momentum is huge when you have 20,000-plus fans yelling."

Women's basketball rebuilds under Trakh

By Jeff Barnet

Forgive the pun, but first-year New Mexico State University women's basketball coach Mark Trakh (pronounced "track") has a track record of turning around programs.

In 2004, he took over a University of Southern California team that hadn't been to the NCAA Tournament in seven years and brought the Women of Troy to the Big Dance in 2005 and

Before he coached at USC, he spent 11 years at Pepperdine, where he took the Waves to the NCAA and WNIT tourneys three times each.

Trakh inherits an NMŚU team that has lost three of its top four scorers from last season's 14-18 team. Senior forward Tabytha Wampler, who averaged 12.7 points per game last year (third best for the Aggies), is one of two returning starters for the Aggies. The other is sophomore guard Jasmine Rutledge, who was named to the 2011 All-WAC second team.

Redshirt senior forward Kelsie Rozendaal returns after missing last season due to injury.

"A lot of our players didn't play that many minutes last year," he said. "They're not used to having the ball in their hands. We need to build

In an Oct. 31 exhibition game against New Mexico Highlands, the Aggies rallied from a ninepoint deficit in the fourth quarter to tie the game. NMSU went on to win in overtime, 81-75

Trakh said it was a good experience for the team to "find a way to win" though trailing late in the game.

He also said the team is new in a lot of areas and would be taking "baby steps."

The Aggies have eight newcomers this year, including two players from Australia and one from Israel. Trakh said assistant coaches Tamara Inoue and Jamie Shadian are well-connected in Australia and Israel, respectively.

"I'm smart enough to know that I'm not that smart," he said. "I have to have good people around me."

Freshman Hannah Womack is likely to have an immediate impact on the team, he said. The 5-7 guard from Millville, Calif., scored 19 points in the Highlands game. He also said freshman guard Simone Ruedin, also 5-7, from Australia, is a likely starter.

Trakh said he was concerned by NMSU's 23 turnovers in the exhibition game, which he said led to 25 points for the opponent. He said the Aggies have to be able to handle pressure defense.

Trakh said he was happy with the patience and good pass selection shown by his floor generals, including senior guard Kaitlyn Soto.

Soto said that the Aggies are a team on the upswing.

"No one is going to outwork, out-hustle or out-together us," she said.

Later this month, Trakh will announce his new recruits. He said at the moment one of his assistant coaches is in Florida looking at junior college players.

NMSU opens the 2011-12 season on the road against the University of Houston 6 p.m. Friday, Nov. 11.

Senior night for Aggie Volleyball

Jordan: Team needs to raise level of play before tourney

By Jeff Barnet

Las Cruces Bulletin

After a disappointing road trip in which the New Mexico State University volleyball team lost two straight matches, coach Mike Jordan said his message to his team is to choose to be competitors, not just volleyball players.

"The players need to know the difference between being good and being great," he said.

The Aggies return to the Pan Am Center for their final two home games Thursday, Nov. 3, against Fresno State and Saturday, Nov. 5, against Nevada. Both matches start at 7 p.m.

The Aggies (18-7, 7-3 Western Athletic Conference) lost on the road Oct. 27 and 29. Utah State beat them in five sets – the Aggies had three chances to win in the fifth set but fell short, 18-16 – and then lost to Idaho in four sets, dropping the last two sets by the same wide margin, 25-14.

The Aggies hitting average against Idaho was .105, and in the fifth set against Utah State the Aggies hit .027 with nine errors.

Jordan said he had enough of the mistakes and started yanking players in the middle of the Idaho match as if he was former Reds and Tigers manager Sparky Anderson.

"I had a quick trigger," he said. "We were making mistakes in bunches. We were giving them too many points."

He also said in some cases he felt players were not giving their best effort.

"If a ball is going to land 10 feet away, it's time to crash and burn, you need to get to it," he said. "That wasn't happening."

Jordan said he felt it was important to "send a message" that the team could not continue to do the same thing over and over and expect to win.

When mistakes happen consistently, Jordan said it's usually an issue of confidence and sometimes inexperience in the case of younger players.

He said it's something best addressed in training. The action during a game is so intense no one has time to think, he said.

Jordan said practice has been going well this week. The Aggies are becoming better defensively and are rising to the level of play they will need to win the WAC Tournament.

"We don't talk about Hawai'i until it's time to play Hawai'i,"

"We don't talk about Hawai'i until it's time to play Hawai'i," he said. "But we talk about being at a level of play where we can beat Hawai'i. They are a benchmark for us."

The Aggies close the regular season on the road against Hawai'i. The last time the Aggies beat the Rainbow Wahine in Honolulu was 2008.

The Aggies are currently in second place in the WAC, a half game ahead of 7-4 Idaho. Hawaiʻi is in first at 12-0. Jordan said it matters less whether NMSU finishes second or third – either finish puts them in the bracket opposite Hawaiʻi in the WAC Tourney – and more that they ramp up the level of play.

The Saturday, Nov. 5, Nevada match will also be Senior Night. The Aggies will honor seniors Kelsey Brennan, Jennah DeVries, Michelle Kuester, Kelsi Phillips and Brynja Rodgers.

"I love them all," Jordan said. "They are all great players and wonderful human beings."

Rodgers follows an unusual path

NMSU senior will pursue coaching career after graduation

By Kyle Doperalski

New Mexico State University volleyball plays its final home games of the season this weekend and that means Saturday is senior night.

There is no one who has earned the recognition that comes along with it more than Brynja Rodgers. The senior setter has seen a lot of volleyball in her collegiate career that has spanned from the Western Athletic Conference to the Southeastern Conference and back to go along with three NCAA tournaments.

"I guarantee I'll be crying this Saturday night," she said. "There will definitely be tears coming out of these eyes. It makes me sad and represents my college career is coming to an end. It has been the best five years with the wonderful young women I've met at NMSU."

That is all you need to know about Rodgers. Volleyball is important to her and has been a big part of her life for a long time. Rodgers has built up those emotions along an unusual path.

While at Iowa City High School in Iowa, Rodgers knew she wanted to attend a college in the southern half of the country, where the weather is warmer. As a freshman she ended up setting the Aggies to a 26-6 record and an NCAA Tournament appearance while running the 6-2 offense which is a two setter system.

"Before I decided to come here the biggest thing I had competed for was the high school state finals in Iowa," said the Iowa City native. "I wasn't even thinking about the NCAA Tournament and it was shocking to me to be competing for so much as a freshman" helped the Aggies to the second round of the NCAA Tournament and another stellar record of 26-9. After her sophomore year is when the twist comes in. She transferred to the University of Florida because the Gators were looking for some help at the setter position and guaranteed her a starting spot. UF went 25-6 and reached the Sweet 16 in 2009, but Rodgers wasn't happy, so she gave NMSU head coach Mike Jordan a call.

In 2008 as a sophomore, Rodgers

"One of the things she shared with me is her vision of what she wanted out of a volleyball program and the relationships that are involved," Jordan said. "She has a good volleyball IQ and has played for a long time. Teams with players like that on the floor tend to do well."

The relationships she has formed at NMSU as a freshman and sophomore led to a rare double transfer, coming back to NMSU after just one semester in Gainesville.

"I wanted to be with the girls at NMSU," Rodgers said. "I'm glad I went to Florida and had that experience of being a part of a great program playing against other great teams. It just wasn't the right fit for me. Florida wasn't the environment that I thrive in."

Rodgers credits Jordan for allowing her back into the program, allowing her to develop as a player, person, and friend.

"Mike was a huge part of the decision to come back," she said. "At times he can be a really mean coach," she said. "At other times I go to his office and talk to him as a friend any time I want."

Jordan communicates and deals with his players in a way that leads to lifelong relationships, which he will have with Rodgers.

"We have a special relationship that I haven't had with any friend, player, coach or parent," she said. "He has showed me that I can work harder and I can do more. Other coaches become satisfied with the player you are sometimes, but not him."

Rodgers graduates in December and will pursue a career in coaching at the Division I level, something else that Jordan will be influential in. The experiences she's had along the way will bode her well as a coach.

Charlie Blanchard Golf Doctor

During my 55 years of playing and coaching golf, I have come to realize that golf not only serves as a metaphor for life, but it's useful for leadership lessons, as well.

As a certified executive coach, I enjoy occasionally taking my clients out for a day of golf with the purpose of enhancing their selfconsciousness and people skills through golf.

Those of us who have played golf seriously know that the big difference between our success and failure at any given time is almost always mental, not physical.

When athletes of similar talent compete, in any sport, mental toughness is what separates the winners from the others.

Comp

So it is also with senior executives, whose success or failure largely depends on mental toughness. That simply means the ability to exercise the necessary discipline over our behavior; having continual control of our emotions; having and maintaining utmost confidence in our abilities; and possessing the presence of mind to size up the circumstances correctly.

Just as golfers need to learn shot making, positioning, recovery plays and other critical skills, leaders in any field need to master certain competencies that are required for performance that is consistent with winning. As golfers we need to master swing fundamentals, course management, touch, feel (e.g. putting) and nerves.

As leaders we need to master business fundamentals, people management, situational feel – oh, and nerves. In both golf and leadership, we have to be constantly aware of changing conditions and adjust accordingly. In golf and in leadership, we are supposed to know and understand the rules of the game. As golfers and leaders, we should always carry ourselves with class and behave with professionalism and honor. In both venues, golf and leadership, what counts the most is what we do when no one is watching.

Playing winning golf, or even just joyful golf, is all about performing well under pressure. Mental toughness is how soldiers, police officers, firefighters and others perform unbelievable feats of heroism under fire. It's how senior executives and those in high office make hard decisions in tough times to save companies and jobs. These exceptional mentally tough leaders and heroes tend to be high in what is now called "emotional intelligence" or EQ.

To perform brilliantly when it counts the most, whether you're an athlete or an executive, there are three essential aptitudes we can learn from golf – and all are components of high EQ.

The most basic is getting to know ourselves as deeply as possible. High self-awareness – understanding our strengths, our tendencies, our limitations, our attitudes, our peculiar habits and those areas where we need to grow – is absolutely essential for us to manage others effectively.

PGA golfer Keegan Bradley won the PGA Championship (a major) in August because of his focused tenacity, ultimate faith in his own game, and deep knowledge of his strengths and his limitations. Despite being a rookie this year on tour, Bradley had won before (the Byron Nelson) and he might just be the calmest ever under pressure. A true high-EQ performer.

Secondly, high-performing leaders need to have a savvy grasp of the situation at all times. They need to see the big picture and they need to be keenly focused on what is happening in the moment.

When Frenchman Jean Van De Velde had his famous meltdown on the 72nd hole of the 1999 British Open, he was leading by three (yes, three!) shots, standing on the tee of the 72nd hole of the tournament. He failed to completely grasp the situation, and proceeded to make poor choices, which combined with poor swings, bad luck and changing conditions, added up to an eventual loss.

As with Van De Velde, sometimes circumstances conspire with bad decisions to sabotage politicians, top executives, generals, sportsmen and investors, to name a few. Sometimes they sabotage themselves. Hank Williams Jr. (of "Are you ready for some football" fame) submarined his own career by failing to grasp the offending words that came out of his mouth. We need to know the situation, while behaving thoughtfully, at all times.

Perhaps most important, we need to control our emotions, which is the earmark of high EQ people. Golfers like Jay Haas, Jack Nicklaus, Retief Goosen, Nancy Lopez, Steve Stricker, Ernie Els and Annika Sorenstam stand above the others as classic performers who are always under control and don't lose their cool. Loss of command of our emotions can hijack our brains.

Have you ever noticed how hard it is to think clearly and rationally when you're angry or really down? If you're a speaker, saying the right thing in public depends on a grasp on our emotions. A symphony musician must have total control to let the composer's music come out with virtuosity. We can learn these things from golf, especially if we pay attention, and become students of the game, and look more closely at ourselves. For a great read on this, check out "Golf and the Spirit" by the late M. Scott Peck.

Perhaps the deepest lesson that golf has taught me is how to recover from bad breaks and adversity. Sometimes the difficulty and misfortune is of our own making, and sometimes it is just, as we say in golf, "the rub of the green." Sometimes golf itself briefly becomes an exercise in frustration.

Often senior managers and public servants are faced with torment of a similar nature. I have observed that the strongest ones – those with more emotional deftness and inner flexibility – tend to overcome these trials and tribulations. Responding effectively to the challenges, the setbacks and the disappointments, separates the winners in leadership and in golf.

Aggie soccer makes an impact on WAC

Let us now "Hail the Mighty

This is not a call for a singalong of Manfred Mann's 1971 hit; it is an acclamation of the work done by the Aggies' first-year head soccer coach Blair Quinn. The Aggies beat Hawai'i 1-0, Oct. 28, to enter the WAC Tournament.

Not every team makes it in and the conference season was the type that causes coaches to bite their fingernails and go prematurely gray. Four overtime games that were an eyelash away from a victory for the Crimson and White culminated in a win over the hottest team in the league and a chance to play a little bit longer. Quinn's teaching a style that always seeks to advance the play was a good fit for his team.

The year began with a trip to Lubbock, Texas, to face a program that was going to be stronger than most in the WAC - Texas Tech. The Aggies battled the Red Raiders before falling 1-0, in just the second outing of the year. The Aggies improved week to week from that. In addition to making the postseason tournament, Quinn has a pair of players who the national collegiate world is

Yolanda McMillion and Katie

Smith were touted by Topdrawersoccer.com as players to watch in the future.

McMillion was ranked eighth in the WAC and Smith 19th. Not surprisingly, they are the team's leading scorers. McMillion has tallied 14 points on five goals and four assists. Smith has 11 points with five goals and an assist as

The pair has a lot of soccer left to play after this season is over. McMillion is a junior and Smith a freshman. Both are part of the Aggies fluid offense that kept opponents scrambling all year long.

It isn't all offense in the Aggies

Megan Hendler was named Verizon Wireless WAC Defensive Player of the Week Sept. 5, the first of the season for the NM State program.

She was a big reason for backto-back shutouts that week and was responsible for defending the opposition's best players in each match. The Aggies defense allowed just six shots on goal in two games and was on a run of three straight shutouts at the

The team continued to draw a loyal group of fans that have put the Aggies near the top of attendance in each of the first three years of the program. Obviously, the Mighty Quinn wants more than this, and his players do as well. Let's take a moment and recognize a job well done by some hard working Aggies.

NCAA changes coming

New initiatives put added emphasis on academics

Dr. McKinley Boston Athletics Director

The intercollegiate landscape seems in a perpetual state of flux.

From conference realignment and the BCS Bowl debate to current NCAA initiatives that will toughen academic standards and increase economic support to student athletes, it seems change is becoming our new normal.

Last week, the NCAA Division I Board of Directors, as a result of NCAA President Mark Emmert's August retreat, passed several sweeping initiatives that will have a dramatic impact on college athletics.

The bulk of the legislation is aimed at bolstering the academic performance of both teams and individual student athletes. There will be new legislation that will raise the academic standards for incoming freshmen and a re-introduction of the partial qualifiers rule in which you can earn financial aid, practice and not play as a freshman.

The new legislation will severely impact junior college transfers and likely create a redshirt adjustment year. They can be recruited and sit a year before their competitive clock begins, in which they have three years to play two years, which gives them a better chance to adjust to the new educational environment and thus a greater chance to graduate.

One of the most dramatic initiatives will be implemented August 2012, when the NCAA begins the two-year phase in of a plan that mandates minimum academic performances by teams to participate in postseason competition, including the NCAA Tournament and bowl games. The ability to compete in postseason events will be based on a team's Academic Progress Rate (APR). Programs that fall beneath the new baseline will be ineligible to compete. We are in good shape today and will continue to monitor the new landscape.

As I mentioned earlier, the board also strengthened eligibility requirement for incoming freshman. Academic requirements will now expect high school prospects to maintain at least a 2.3 grade point average in the 16 core courses, and have corresponding ACT or SAT scores on a sliding scale to be able to compete as a freshman.

Probably the most controversial piece of legislation adopted by the board allows institutions to increase grants to student athletes who received full scholarships by $2,000 per year or the full cost of attendance, whichever is less, in order to help address the miscellaneous cost of attending college.

It is a proposal I am opposed to for many reasons, and the question for me is how much more next year and the year after? We still do not know the impact of the decision on Title IX law which guarantees equity between men and women in sport participation.

Overall, I believe these proposals, and ones in basketball recruiting I did not mention, are steps in the right direction, especially the academic reform measures. Having served on the NCAA Certification Committee, Men's Basketball and now the NCAA Leadership Council, I know how hard it is to build consensus required to pass these types of controversial pieces of legislation. I am pleased with the overall effort of my colleagues and the presidential leadership including President Barbara Couture needed to make this happen.

No system is perfect, but improving standards that will give our student athletes a better chance to graduate is important. The six-year graduation rate for student athletes at New Mexico State is 67 percent compared to 45 percent for nonstudent-athletes.

Despite resource challenges, we will work hard to ensure that NM State is 100 percent compliant as we go forward. Braun Cartwright, the NM State NCAA compliance director, will help guide our coaches and administrators through this period of transition over the next four years.

Aggie junior earns Athlete of the Year Award at conference championships

The New Mexico State University cross country team claimed second place for the men's and women's teams at the Western Athletic Conference Championships in Honolulu on Saturday, Oct. 29, with junior Courtney Schultz winning first place overall for the women's race.

Schultz was honored as WAC Athlete of the Year for 2011 due to her performance in the WAC Championships and the regular season. In addition, Schultz also earned a spot on the first team All-Conference alongside her twin sister Camille Schultz.

Courtney Schultz finished first overall for the thirdstraight season with a time of 17:36.5 in the 5K. Camille Schultz finished third overall with a time of 18:19.7. Last season, Camille Schultz finished second overall as the two sisters crossed the finish line together.

Freshman Tamara Lementino finished her standout season by placing 13th overall with a time of 19:11.8, finishing third overall among freshman. Junior Chelsa McDonnell finished close behind for 15th overall with a time of 19:15.8. Sophomore Rylie Hightower cracked into the top 20 by placing 20th and fifth for NMSU with a time of 19:24.4. Lementino also received conference honors as a freshman by being named to the second team All-Conference.

NMSU earns tourney bid

Aggie and Hawai'i teams square off on soccer field for second time in six days

By Jeff Barnet

For the New Mexico State University soccer team, it's time to either win or go home.

"And we don't want to go home," said junior forward Yolanda McMillion.

For the second time in three years, the NMSU soccer team has made it to the Western Athletic Conference tournament. The Aggies beat Hawai'i 1-0 at Aggie Memorial Stadium Oct. 28 to gain the No. 6 seed in the tourney, which will be held in Fresno, Calif. Nov. 3-6.

The Aggies (9-7-3, 2-3-2 WAC) have drawn No. 3 seed Hawai'i (5-11-1, 4-2-1 WAC) in a first-round rematch. The game started at 2:30 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 3. The winner plays either No. 1 seed Utah State or No. 2 seed Fresno State Nov. 4. The championship game will be 1 p.m. Sunday, Nov. 6.

'They're going to be fired up because they'll be out for vengeance," said sophomore goalkeeper Jessica Schutter, who came off the bench to gain the shutout against Hawai'i. "We need to keep up our aggressiveness.'

First-year coach Blair Quinn said the Aggies were aggressive both on offense and defense against Hawai'i. Defensively, it was the team's best game of the year, he said. A strong defensive effort by the midfielders allowed the backline to provide more cover, he said. In addition, the Aggies were more aggressive in tak-

'Aggressiveness is a mentality," he said. "Take the shot even if it's not the best shot, don't be afraid to be the one who misses.

Although tournament games are "do or die," he said, at the same time NMSU will prepare for the rematch with Hawai'i as if it is just another game.

'The most important thing we have to do is manage our emotions," he said.

Because the two teams are so similar and just saw each other up close, Quinn said he was expecting Thursday's game against Hawai'i to be something of a "chess match."

"We have to win the first one, then take it one game at a time," he said.

Quinn said the tourney is wide open as there is a high level of parity among the top six WAC teams. Only eight points separated sixth place NMSU from top seed Utah State in the regular season standings, he said.

Freshman midfielder Bree Luhrsen, who scored the game-winning goal against the Rainbow Wahine on Oct. 28, said she is very excited to be playing in the tournament her first year

"It comes down to heart, and I know that we got this," she said.

Equestrians outpoint Lady Gamecocks

The New Mexico State University equestrian team won its third straight team competition Saturday, Oct. 29, at the NMSU Equestrian Center over South Carolina. The two teams finished the competition tied in overall points, 10-10, but the Aggies took the win by the raw score, as NMSU won 1,402.5 to 1361.

The Aggies are now 4-3 on the season.

The overall team performance was really good," coach Audrey Buck said. "The riders that earned the points really did a great job. However, the riders that didn't earn points really rode great, losing by very small margins across the board. We now get a good break before our last competition of the semester but I feel as if this will help our momentum going forward."

The Hunter Seat team won 6-4, 3-2 in both Equitation on the Flat and Equitation over Fences. The Western team fell 6-4 to the Lady Gamecocks, winning Reining 3-2 and losing in Horsemanship, 4-1.

The Aggies will be back in action on Saturday, Nov. 19, when they travel to Brookings, S.D., to take on South Dakota State.

The psychology of flight explored

NMSU research will help FAA set guidelines for drones

A New Mexico State University psychology professor is studying drones and the pilots who operate them in order to create guidelines for the Federal Aviation Administration and other agencies.

These guidelines will establish methods so unmanned aircraft systems can be used safely in personal, commercial and academic situations.

"You don't have the lives of other humans involved in shipping cargo," said Igor Dolgov, an assistant professor of psychology at NMSU. "Computers can fly airplanes fairly well already, so UAS designers are thinking of automating these crafts and making them unmanned, which would save a lot of money and avoid potential delays due to human error and misrouting."

To discover safety issues involved in flying over rural, desert and metropolitan areas at night, Dolgov and his team will launch unmanned aircraft at night, as part of a NASA grant. He hopes to determine the kinds of lighting and sensing technology needed to prevent accidents.

"Visual cues are typically absent at night, particularly depth, which is absolutely essential in daytime depth perception," Dolgov said. "Relative disparity, which is missing at night, is typically considered necessary to perceive the location and relative safety of the aircraft."

Potential accidents include colliding with other aircraft or crash landing in populated areas.

NMSU has the only FAA Authorized Unmanned Aircraft System Flight Test

DOLGO!

Center in the United States, and companies frequently bring their aircraft to be tested by the Physical Science Laboratory.

A typical four-member UAS operation team is made up of a pilot, two observers and a payload operator. He said the pilots are normally PSL trained pilots or pilots provided by the agencies with whom they are cooperating.

One of the goals is to study both expert and novice pilots and observers in order to better understand the impact of training and the potential continuum of performance. Dolgov hopes his findings will be included in future training procedures for UAS operational teams.

Pilots of small UAS typically use small handheld devices that are similar to many handheld video game systems to operate the craft. During a flight, Dolgov studies the psychological aspects of the effectiveness of the controls on the device in relation to the pilot and the aircraft.

"The human side of engineering psychology really entails the efficiency and experience of using various control devices," Dolgov said. "We all have various backgrounds and previously gained knowledge and therefore, also have certain biases and expectations about using machines, computers and other interactive devices."

During the process, Dolgov tries to discover whether the aircraft's behavior actually matches the intentions and actions of the pilot.

He looks at both the user and the usability of the handheld displays and controls.

"Visibility, the order of operations and the organization of the information on the screen is clearly very important, because the screen space is limited," Dolgov said.

In the course of his research, the most interesting thing he discovered was that assistive technologies, like night-vision and infrared goggles, did not necessarily improve observers' ability to track an aircraft at night. This is due to the impact of the aperture problem, which is the experience of seeing a larger field of view through a small window. The aperture problem makes the use of such technologies beneficial for the best-trained observers.

According to Dolgov, if a solution for flying safely at night is discovered, the FAA could remove the ban on night flying and the market for commercial, academic and personal uses would open up.

He believes there are economical implications for commercial cargo shipping companies who could convert their operations to unmanned aircraft.

"It could potentially create a lot of new jobs making sure the system works and that it works safely," Dolgov said. "It does take the traditional pilot out of the equation, but it brings in a lot of other individuals who are involved in the process of operating UAS that perform functions resembling monitoring more so than flying"

In the future, Dolgov plans to look at the different lighting configurations, different weather conditions and the light variations of dusk, dawn and night on the safety and efficacy of UAS operations.

NMSU has online college cost tool

Calculator is on website ahead of U.S. deadline

How much is it going to cost you to attend college? Wouldn't it be nice to have an estimate before you show up for your first class ever as a freshman?

By Oct. 29, universities around the U.S. had to implement a net price calculator on their websites that can tell prospective and current students just that. New Mexico State University has had its NPC in place for a year now as an extra resource for students as they plan financially for their future.

"Choosing where to go to college is an important financial decision for students and their families," said Janie Merchant, interim co-director of the Office of Financial Aid and Scholarship Services.

"The net price calculator is a tool that allows students and their families to easily get an early estimate of the 'net price' of the cost of attendance – minus grants and scholarships – to help them make informed decisions."

The requirement for the net price calculator is in accordance with the Higher Education Opportunity Act of 2008, which states postsecondary institutions that participate in Title IV federal student aid programs and enroll full-time, first-time degree or certificate-seeking undergraduate students must have this resource available on their websites.

When students access the NPC, they answer a variety of questions about their dependency status, their estimated cost of attendance and their expected family contribution. This individual data is combined with information from the institution on the price of attendance and the median amount of grants and scholarships accepted by prospective students and the NPC then calculates the estimated net price.

Merchant said there are resources provided by the U.S. Department of Education that help students and their families determine their aid eligibility. However, these resources do not provide the individualized cost of attendance for schools to offer an estimated net price.

"The reception from students so far has been very positive," Merchant said. "We had already received hundreds of inquiries and anticipate even more as it becomes known across the states."

The link to access the net price calculator is on NMSU's financial aid webpage at http://fa.nmsu.edu. Students can access the calculator by clicking on "Net Price Calculator."

For more information on the net price calculator, call Financial Aid and Scholarship Services at 646-4105.

Honoring those who passed on Día de los Muertos

Ernestina, Alice and Sapina Quintero were a trio of gothic specters for the annual Día de los Muertos celebration on the Mesilla Plaza Sunday, Oct. 30. Though it has some macabre aesthetics, the day based on Mexican folklore is about remembering and honoring loved ones who have died, similar to Ancestors' Day in Japan. It also is a day, however, to accept the fact that all living things are mortal.

DOLORES' SOLUTIONS TO A BETTER LAS CRUCES:

- ✓ I have solutions for our community's growing problems, like providing adequate fire and police coverage for our city. Public safety is one of my top priorities.
- ✓ I have a solution for bringing our 9-1-1 emergency call center up to national response standards. It is the responsibility of city government to keep our citizens safe, and it can be done by cutting wasteful city spending and bringing more Gross Receipts Tax revenue into the budget by attracting new jobs and business to Las Cruces.
- ✓ A prospering, growing city is the key to providing a better standard of living for all Las Cruces residents. It's time for our city to cut the red tape and over-regulation that make it difficult for business to establish and expand here. I will continue to work to attract new business and foster development of our region's growing commercial space resources and unmanned aircraft facilities. In addition, I will work with the private sector to bring film production facilities to Las Cruces, building on Southern New Mexico's film industry. These new businesses will bring new jobs and a better standard of living for all Las Crucens.

Samantha Roberts Business Editor

This week, baby No. 7 billion was born. Not only is the number itself shocking, but so is the short amount of time the world has reached such a large amount. In 1800, the population of the world reached 1 billion.

It took 130 years to reach 2 billion, just 30 years to reach 3 billion, 14 years to reach 4 billion ... do you get the picture? Should we be happy or scared to reach such a feat?

The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) said a lot of challenges are in the world's future that come from dealing with a population so large, such as ensuring adequate food and clean water, to guaranteeing equal access to security and justice.

"How we respond now will determine whether we have a healthy, sustainable and prosperous future or one that is marked by inequalities, environmental decline and economic setbacks," The State of World Population 2011 report stated.

Approximately five babies are born every second, and two people die every second. This means people are living longer, however, societies are also becoming more disconnected in terms of wealth and well being. Occupy Wall Street protestors are making this very clear.

But 7 billion is a hard number to grasp unless you are one of the 140 people in the world worth at least $7 billion or you have counted to 7 billion, which would be impossible because it would take at least 200 years. If you have 28 years to spare, you would be lucky to make it to 1 billion.

Feeding 7 billion people is one of the biggest challenges.

The average farmer feeds 155 people. If our population continues to grow at its current rate, farmers will have to grow more in the next 50 years than they have since farming began, said Traci Williams, director of the New Mexico Farm & Livestock Bureau Agriculture in the Classroom.

Don't forget, farmers and ranchers make up 2 percent of the population.

United Nations officials have a lot on their plate, I just hope it's enough to feed all 7 billion of us.

You may be one in 7 billion to the world, but your comments are worth one in 7 billion to me. . Email me at samantha@lascrucesbulletin.com.

7 billion A recession-proof industry?

Highlights and haircuts have weathered the economic storm

By Samantha Roberts

The recession has hit some industries worse than others, but a few are thriving during the down economy.

Bankruptcy lawyers and auto repair services are prospering and so are hair salons and barbershops. Economists have even called them recession proof."

According to Christine Logan, economic development administrator with the City of Las Cruces, as of February 2010, 197 businesses were registered under the "beauty" category.

There have been 16 new (registered businesses) so far this year, which is consistent with numbers opened in 2009 and 2010," Logan said. 'For some reason, 2008 was much higher."

On Sept. 1, Jenna Emerick said she followed her lifelong dream and opened her first salon – Salon de Mesilla.

"It has always been a dream of mine," Emerick said. "I was hesitant at first because of the economy and thought I might question my sanity after doing it, but it felt like the right thing to do."

A strong clientele base and family backing encouraged Emerick, she said. And her return on her investment has been great.
"I wanted to see if I could withhold through the recession," she said. "So far, so good.

"People still want to be pampered, and even more so when things are stressful. People need a place to go and relax, to take a load off."

Emerick said these factors have made her salon especially busy. Salon De Mesilla specializes in haircuts, colorings and facial waxing. The salon is located at 1730 Tierra de Mesilla.

MD Designs owner Tracie Evans, along with staff members Irene Stull, Mary Schroeder and salon manager Kim King, opened a salon in the Ramada Palms de Las Cruces. Evans said the salon is in a high-traffic area and her business has been up despite the economy.

For more information on Salon de Mesilla, call beauty industry. 932-8886 or visit its Facebook page.

Tracie Evans, owner of MD Designs in the Ramada Palms de Las Cruces hotel, said she has also seen an influx in clients in the Awards by the dozen

Staff, individuals recognized at NMPA awards banquet Oct. 29

Bulletin Staff Report

Staff members of the Las Cruces Bulletin traveled north on Saturday, Oct. 29, to the Santa Ana Pueblo for the New Mexico Press Association Awards Banquet. The team received 12 awards, including "General Excellence," an award selected by the judges to recognize a newspaper for its excellence.

"It was exciting for everyone," said David McCollum, publisher of the newspaper. "I was thrilled that so many team members were recognized for their professional excellence. It is always nice to be judged by peers.

"The General Excellence Award was truly a team effort." The Bulletin competed in the Weekly Class I division for weekly newspapers with a circulation of 10,000 and above.

Staff awards included first place for headline writing, sec-ond place in the supplements and special sections category for the annual Community Guide publication, first place in the design and typography category for overall design of the paper and general excellence.

"Our newspaper received a dozen awards including our first ever General Excellence recognition," McCollum said. "This award is significant. We thank the judges, who were from Rhode Island, for recognizing our efforts and what we are trying to do with

In the category of Information Graphic, Theresa Montoya-Basaldua and Samantha Roberts received first place. The judges said the By the Numbers Page, which runs weekly in the Bulletin's business section, was a "nice mix of local and national tidbits. Readable and fun."

In advertising, Ray Gonzalez took home first place in black and white advertising and first place in color advertising. Basaldua helped the Bulletin sweep with category with a secondplace award in color advertising.

Natisha Hales won first place in the column category for her entry titled "A healthy self im-The judges said the column was "personal and pertinent with clear writing and a strong conclusion."

Copy editor Jim Hilley and general manager Richard Coltharp brought home first and second place respectively for their sports columns.

The judges said Hilley's column "examines the sports of questionable calls vexing local sports fans and uses some straight talk to poke holes in the arguments of conspiracy theories in this tightly readable and witty column."

Sports writer Craig Massey was recognized for his story "Young: chasing a new generation," receiving second place in sports writing.

The judges said the piece was "a clear and detailed recounting."

"We work hard each week to provide an entertaining and informative newspaper to people and businesses of Las Cruces," McCollum said. 'This recognition reinforces that we are on the right track. Winning is nice, but we don't set out to win plaques, our goal is to win the hearts and minds of our readers each week."

Las Cruces Bulletin graphic designer Ray Gonzalez won first place in two advertising categories – black-and-white advertising and color advertising. The judges said his blackand-white ad had the perfect graphic, and his color ad was direct and to the point. Gonzalez has been with the Bulletin since 2008 and is a graduate of New Mexico State University.

Fostering community at the

Samantha Roberts

> Instead of bringing guest speakers to the podium, the group of White House administration officials sat with members of the community to get to the heart of local problems. Similar summits have been held in New York, Florida, Colorado and Nevada.

Stephanie Valencia, deputy director of the White House Office of Public Engagement, spoke to community members during the White House Hispanic Community Action Summit Thursday, Oct. 27, at the Las Cruces Convention Center. Valencia asked participants to talk with her about immigration problems.

president/CEO of Spirit Mission, Inc.; Gerardo A. Hernandez, director of technology of Spirit Mission Inc.; and Eloisa Robledo pulled from previous discussions with Spirit Mission members to fill out an issue-form. The forms were placed on the wall and assigned a White House administrator to lead a roundtable discussion.

You don't have to be wealthy

Courtesy of the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico

Many people want to give a gift to an organization or a cause that has made a difference, but at times, charitable giving is postponed or even disregarded because of a lack of wealth.

Fortunately, not being wealthy does not mean charitable giving is impossible.

Life insurance is one way to meet personal and charitable objectives.

"Using life insurance as a charitable gift is becoming more and more common, said Gregg Martin with the Gregg Martin Agency. "Life insurance is good for someone that doesn't have a great estate but wants to make a substantial charitable gift."

Just as one would set up a life insurance policy for family, one with charitable aspirations could set up a policy for an organization such as the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico (CFSNM).

Insurance agents such as Martin can help with the process and can cover the benefits that come from charitable giving with a policy, including the feeling of accomplishment and good that comes from giving and aiding a cause that changes society on a positive note as well as tax benefits.

"U.S. tax laws are designed to encourage these types of gifts," Martin said.

There are options when donating a policy. An existing policy can be donated – an option that works well when one has more life insurance than is needed. The donor can continue paying the premiums, with each premium payment being a gift to the charity or the charity may make premium payments in expectation of the eventual death benefit.

Policies can also become a gift that is selfcompleting. Life insurance can provide for a self-completing gift in the event of death or disability and the charity may use the growth of the policy's cash value while the donor is alive, and receive the policy's death benefit at the end of life.

Donors can leave a bequest at death. If the estate is the beneficiary of the policy, the will can direct use of some or all of the proceeds of the life insurance to make a gift to charity, free of any federal estate tax. Donors can also designate their favorite organizations as beneficiaries on an existing policy.

Starting a policy for charitable reasons is as simple as starting one for personal reasons. Donors can set up a policy for as little as $10,000 to as much as $1 million and beyond. Requirements are the same as setting up a personal life insurance policy, meaning the donor has to be insurable.

"Creating a policy is going to meet the donor's needs," Martin said. "We can create a policy based on what they want to give. This is a way for donors to leave a legacy without costing the family their assets.'

The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico is dedicated to helping the southern New Mexico community now, and in the future. Founded in 2000, the Community Foundation offers opportunities for local people who want to give back locally. The beauty of the foundation is that you need not be wealthy to make a positive difference in the lives of people throughout our area. Through the establishment of permanent funds you can sustain local charitable organizations, provide scholarships to area students and fulfill wishes that are close to your heart. Through our planned giving programs, you can honor loved ones or leave a legacy that benefits the people of southern New Mexico for generations to come. The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico can advise you on how best to maximize contributions, no matter what size. Law enacted to protect renters

Tenants in foreclosure properties have rights

Gary Sandler's Real Estate Connection

Do you rent or lease a home or apartment? If so, do you know if the owner of the property is paying the mortgage on time? Better yet, do you know whether or not the property is in some stage of foreclosure?

The answers can drastically change the lives of those who rent or lease residential property. How? Consider the following:

How? Consider the following:
Renters currently occupy about 32 percent of all single-family homes in the U.S., according to the folks at the U.S. Census Bureau. According to Doña Ana County Assessor Andy Segovia, there are currently 33,522 single-family homes in our immediate area. Segovia said that number does not include the area's numerous town homes, condominiums and apartments. If the census numbers are applicable to our area, chances are that about 10,727 Las Crucens are currently renting single-family homes — not counting tenants residing in the other properties.

So how do the thousands of area renters who could be affected by this problem learn about their properties' foreclosure status? Often, it's when the lender comes-a-knocking.

Because lenders have no formal relationship with tenants and seldom know who, if anyone, might be occupying a property, the first time most renters learn their "home" is in foreclosure is when the lender's representative knocks at the door. It was the interaction between lenders and the tenants that caught the attention of Congress.

In the past, lenders' representatives would inform the tenant the property was in foreclosure or had been foreclosed upon, and that the tenant had to be out in a very short period of time. In some documented cases, tenants were forced to move with as little as three days notice. It was this type of heavy-handed behavior that motivated Congress to pass the "Helping Families Save Their Homes Act of 2009."

Under the law, which went into effect May 20, 2009, tenants must receive 90-days' notice prior to being evicted. In addition, tenants must be allowed to stay in the property through the end of their lease, with two exceptions:

If the new owner wants to occupy the property as a personal residence. The other applies when there is no lease (month-to-month tenancy), or there is a lease, but state law allows it to be terminated at any time upon notice (which is not the case in New Mexico).

Even with the exceptions in place, the new law requires that tenants receive a 90-day notice before they can be evicted. Notice must be given by the "immediate successor in interest," which may be the bank or the new owner who acquired the property. There is a catch, however.

The protections of this law apply only to "bona fide" tenants – who have a written contract, the lease was the result of an arms-length transaction and the rent is not substantially less than the fair market rent for the property.

Here's what that mumbo jumbo means in the real world.

Let's say you have an iron clad one-year lease on a home or apartment and are current on your rent. Under the new law, the bank or new owner must honor the lease. On the other hand, if your lease is expired and has reverted to a month-to-month tenancy (which leases do when they're not renewed), or if you had a written month-to-month agreement from the get-go, the maximum time you'll be allowed to stay in the property is 90 days. You can leave any time prior to that if you choose to do so.

Keep in mind lenders have no right to toss you out of a home they don't own. Until the foreclosure is complete and the lender or buyer at the foreclosure sale assumes ownership, the owner of the property is still your landlord. You're still required to make your payments on time, however. If you don't, or if you violate any other terms of your lease or rental agreement, you can be evicted.

Don't know where to send your payments? Simply stash them away in a savings account somewhere until you verify who is legally authorized to collect the funds. If you don't have the money on hand and can't make up the back rent, you won't be considered "current" and the protections afforded by law won't apply.

In addition, most mortgages contain an "Assignment of Rents" clause, which authorize the lender to collect rent prior to the actual foreclosure if the owner is not making payments. Lenders will notify tenants of this provision and provide instructions regarding how and where to send the rent.

When it comes to your security deposit, the law affords little protection. Since the property owner usually holds your rental deposit, your chances of getting it back are slim-to-none, unless the owner finds compassion for your situation.

I'd like to pass along a valuable tip: Be on alert for a "Cash for Keys" opportunity. Lenders are not in the rental business and would like nothing more than to take possession of the property. To expedite the process and encourage you to vacate sooner rather than later, they may offer you a cash "bonus." Depending on the circumstances, lenders have been known to offer as little as $500 and as much as $2,000 to inspire a tenant to hit the bricks.

If you decide to use the cash to buy a house, it won't be long until I ...
See you at closing!

A population milestone brings out the doomsayers

Chris Erickson State of the Economy

Unless you are living under a rock, you will have heard the estimated global population reached 7 billion people.

Accompanying this milestone were stories warning of population disaster. De rigueur is to interview scientists who intone dire predictions of environmental disaster. We live unsustainable lives.

Reference is made to economists paraded in support of the idea the human population is unsustainable. Prominent among these is Thomas Malthus, who is long dead, and Paul Ehrlich of Population Boom fame, who turns out is still alive. We face a future of wars, pestilence and famine these economists claim.

Meanwhile, in the Wall Street Journal, physicist Robert Muller, global warming skeptic, wrote an editorial summarizing several recent studies by the Berkeley Earth Surface Temperature Group, which Muller chairs. The Berkeley Group found incontrovertible evidence of global warming, having reviewed 1.6 billion temperature readings. The Earth's surface temperature appears to have increased by about half a degree.

Add to this increasing evidence that global oil supplies may have peaked. On the supply side, OPEC production is stagnant and non-OPEC production has not made up the difference. Couple this with increasing demand from India and China and a trend of rising energy prices is a safe prediction.

Global overpopulation, global warming and peak oil: the human race is going extinct. Well of course not.

In fact, despite the problems outlined above, we are on the edge of a golden era as much superior for our grandchildren as the life lived by ourselves compared to our grandparents.

The promise of technology is greater now than any time in our history. Bioengineering promises to extend lives. Robotics will continue to increase productivity. Despite temporary setbacks experienced in the U.S. and Europe, rapid income growth in India and China make it clear that living standard for the human race as a whole continues to improve.

Population growth will take care of itself. Just as it has happened in every society, the current poor, who are also the fasting, growing populations, will have fewer children as their incomes increase. The reason is simple. Children are very time consuming and well-paid people can't afford to have children. As technology raises incomes, family size will fall.

Global warming is also not a threat to our long-term survival. Humans live from the poles to the equator. Half a degree of warming is irrelevant. Even two degrees, which is the high-end estimate put forward by global alarmists, is not consequential.

Energy is also much less of an issue than some make out. At $200 per barrel, which corresponds to $4 per gallon of gasoline, any of a number of alternative energy sources becomes feasible. We already have the technology. It is just a matter of economics.

And with essentially unlimited, but expensive, energy, all the promises of technology outlined above become possible.

So the future is a utopia. All our problems will disappear and let's vote Polly Anna for president – well of course not.

The problem is not that humans won't continue to prosper – but that the rest of the planet's inhabitants that aren't human – will suffer. It is precisely because we are better able to divert the planet's resources from use by other species to our own use. That is why we will prosper and the rest of nature is on the brink of destruction.

Recognizing the problem is critical to the solution. We don't need to solve over population and global warming for our benefit, but to protect the rest of the planet. This is a harder sell. The temptation is to use the big lie – do this to avoid the extinction of humankind – when the truth is that we need to curve population and stop global warming not for our own wellbeing but for the wellbeing of those with whom we share the planet.

Beasley, Mitchell & Co. named 'Top Five Fastest-Growing'

Beasley, Mitchell & Co., a Las Cruces-owned and operated public accounting firm, has been named one of the "Top Five Fastest-Growing" firms in the United States by INSIDE Public Accounting (IPA), a national newsletter and reporting firm for accounting firms. The recognition was announced in the October issue of the IPA newsletter.

As an "IPA All-Star" firm, Beasley, Mitchell & Co. was selected on its performance in specific areas of revenue growth when compared with more than 400 firms nationwide that participated in the 2011 IPA Survey and Analysis of Firms.

Beth Fant, managing partner, and partner Don Beasley are both gratified to be recognized by the IPA.

We have grown our firm over the years steadily and successfully, and much of that is due to the outstanding work of our employees," Fant said. "We strive to cover the complete range of accounting services, for both businesses and individuals.'

"We may be one of the fastest-growing firms in the nation, but I think we're also one of the most knowledgeable and professional," Beasley said.

Chris Erickson, associate professor of economics at New Mexico State University, spoke Tuesday, Nov. 1, at the monthly meeting of the Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance Business on the Border Forum. Recessions rooted in a financial crisis, such as the current one, Erickson said, last longer and historically endure a longer recovery time.

By Richard Coltharp

While Las Cruces survived the early part of the recession better than the United States or New Mexico as a whole, even seeing modest economic growth, that trend has stalled.

"The reason we have not seen new economic growth is because New Mexico State University's budget has been cut," said Chris Erickson, associate professor of economics at NMSU.

Erickson spoke Tuesday, Nov. 1, during a luncheon at Hotel Encanto de Las Cruces to attendees of the Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance Business on the Border Forum

NMSU's budget was cut by 17 percent in the 2011 state legislature, Erickson said.

That hurts Las Cruces, Erickson said, because "NMSU is the largest single employer in Doña Ana County."

"I predict no extra funding for NMSU this year," he said. "I hope I'm wrong."

The current national recession is now in its 20th month, making it the longest recession in post-World War II America, Erickson said.

Two prior recessions lasted 16 months each, one that began in November 1973 and another that began in July 1981.

The length of the recession, as well as the longer recovery period, is historically consistent with recessions tied to a financial crisis, such as this one, Erickson said.

A couple of things may bode well for New Mexico in the future.

Currently, the ratio of the cost of oil to natural gas is 26-to-1. Erickson said, historically, the ratio is closer to 9-to-1.

That price differential is making natural gas more attractive, which helps New Mexico as a natural gas-producing state.

A second possible bright spot: "Mexico is gaining manufacturing jobs from China," Erickson said.

American businesses are finding the reduced shipping times from Mexico can be a big benefit. The saying, "slow boat to China," as it turns out, is rooted in reality, Erickson said. Gaining jobs in Mexico can benefit this region, Erickson said.

One potentially negative outcome, post-recession, is inflation, which could reach 5 percent by the end of the Most banks currently have excess cash reserves. There are two reasons for that, Erickson said. Banks are being very cautious about loans, and many consumers and businesses are hesitant to take out loans in an uncertain economy.

Erickson predicts that when the reserves finally are let out, there will be a period of inflation. That might not bode well if interest rates are still low.

"If you're a banker, 5 percent inflation, with 4 percent interest rates, doesn't sound good," he said.

Prior to Erickson's talk, MVEDA President and CEO Davin Lopez gave an update on the organization. During fiscal year 2012, which began in July, MVEDA reported the addition of 279 jobs. Most came from the addition of two companies, Vangent and L&M Radiator. Lopez also reported that Fred Shepherd, MVEDA's business development manager, is leaving the organization to take another post.

Don't just throw your money into the wind

Five good reasons to create an investment strategy

Some people buy investments here and there, now and then. Others open an Individual Retirement Account (IRA), put some money in it, and then forget about it. But this type of haphazard investment behavior can lead to haphazard results.

On the other hand, you've got five good reasons for creating and following a comprehensive, long-term investment strategy.

Reason No. 1: You want to enjoy a comfortable retirement lifestyle. For most people, building resources for retirement is the most powerful reason to invest. As a key part of your investment strategy, you'll want to consider investments that have growth potential. The proportion of your portfolio devoted to these growth investments should be based on your individual risk tolerance and time horizon. And, as you move much closer to your actual retirement date, you may decide to shift some – but certainly not all – of your portfolio from growth-oriented vehicles to those investments that can provide a reliable income stream and incur less volatility.

Reason No. 2: You need to stay ahead of inflation. Over the past few years, we've experienced relatively low inflation, but over time, even a low inflation rate can dramatically erode the value of your savings and investments. That's why you may want to consider investments that provide the potential for rising income.

Reason No. 3: You need to help manage the unexpected. You can't predict what life will have in store for you. To cope with unexpected costs, such as a major car repair or a new furnace, you'll need to create an emergency fund containing six to 12 months' worth of living expenses so you won't be forced to dip into your long-term investments. And to deal with other major uncertainties of life, you'll need adequate life and disability insurance.

Reason No. 4: You need resources for major life events. Your retirement may eventually require the bulk of your financial resources – but it's not the only milestone for which you'll need to save and invest. You may need a down payment on a house, or you may someday even want to purchase a vacation home. And if you have children or grandchildren, you may want to help them pay for college.

Reason No. 5: You'll want to keep in mind investment-related taxes. Taxes, like inflation, can eat into your investment returns. You'll need to evaluate whether you can benefit from tax-advantaged investments and retirement accounts, such as traditional or Roth IRAs.

So there you have it; five good reasons to adhere to a unified investment strategy that's tailored to your situation. This type of "blueprint" may not sound glamorous, and it's certainly not a "get rich quick" formula, but it will help you stay on track toward your important financial goals.

CVB names new chair and member

Belia Alvarez, general manager of the Hampton Inn & Suites in Las Cruces, was named the Las Cruces Convention & Visitors Bureau Advisory Board chair, replacing former board chair Janet Green. Green, who is the director of the School of Hotel, Restaurant and Tourism Management at New Mexico State University, stepped down in September.

Her position on the board was filled by Dawn Starostka, owner of Helping Hands Event Planning.

"It is wonderful to have someone who brings meeting and event planning expertise to the board," said CVB Interim Executive Director Jennifer Bales. "The bureau has worked with Dawn and her staff for many years on various events; her input will be a great addition to our board."

For the past seven years, Starostka and her team of planners have plan events throughout Las Cruces and New Mexico. In addition to overseeing the planning of all events, she serves as the lead on most of the large, public events and festivals.

"I am honored to have been selected to serve on the CVB Advisory Board," Starostka said. "I look forward to the challenges and opportunities associated with being directly involved in promoting tourism in our amazing community."

"The economy hit other businesses, but I actually saw the skin care business clientele go up. It boosted tenfold," she said. "People may not have the money to spend on an expensive vacation, but they want to look good, and when they look good, they feel better."

Evans said she opened the salon after three years of clients asking her to refer a stylist.

"It was my mission to open a salon that created a positive environment," Evans said. "I never thought that I would be involved in this aspect of the industry, but business has been great."

Evans said her clients have not cut back on their services.

"They still want it all," she said.

"We are busier than I expected," said salon manager Kim King, adding that building positive relationships with clients helps create steady business. "I have helped open salons before, and it usually takes a few months to get things going, but we are doing really great – ahead of schedule."

King and Simply Devine Salon owner Jennifer Walraven contribute their early success to the same thing: location.

"I love where we are located, there is always something going on," King said.

"I wanted to be visible," said Walraven, who owns a salon on Telshor Boulevard off Spruce Avenue. "I have the highest traffic count in the city, and I installed an LED light so people could see it from across the freeway."

Walraven's success mimics other salons in the Las Cruces area, but she said the market is already saturated.

With an influx in salons, Walraven said the market will weed itself out.

"It is a hard industry, and you are constantly selling yourself," said Walraven, who has been in the profession for more than 20 years. "Advertising is a huge thing and I do a lot of it."

As for the recession, Walraven said she still feels it to a degree, but her business has also been consistent.

Las Cruces Bulletin

Growing up on a wheat, blue corn and alfalfa farm in northeastern New Mexico, gives Traci Williams, director of New Mexico Farm & Livestock Bureau Agriculture in the Classroom, a personal connection to her daily work.

Williams was an educator for 11 years, teaching first through third grade. She said she taught in schools of every size, from large schools in Albuquerque to small schools in Estancia and Quemado, N.M.

"I had classrooms with 26 kids in them and classrooms with eight kids," Williams said. "I am an educator first, and I think that allows me to relate to teachers. I know how much work they already do before I ask them to incorporate agriculture into their lesson plans."

In January, Williams began her current position and has made it her personal mission to teach children about agriculture, which includes foods, fibers and shelter.

"I want to provide resources that are easy and useful so teachers can take what I give them and run with it," said Williams, adding that she also gives presentations to classrooms if a teacher has the

Since teachers have busy schedules, Williams said she works to tie her curriculum in with benchmarks.

"I know (teachers) are already cutting lesson plans because they just don't have the time, so I try to build my stuff into benchmarks," Williams said.

As an example, she said she encourages teachers to ask their students if they know where their snack comes from during a break or talk about a farmer who may appear in a book.

"These little moments only take a few seconds," she said.

With more people living in urban areas then every before, children are not as plugged into the agricultural community.

"I have kids who think cotton grows on sheep because they have made cute and fluffy sheep with cotton in a crafts project," she said. "They don't know the difference between wool and cotton. Or what grows on trees. Or where peanuts come from."

Williams said kids don't realize they have eaten a wheat stalk until they are told it's ground into breads, cookies and cakes.

Shocking agriculture statistics have also increased the importance for kids to be involved in the classroom.

"I tell teachers that healthy kids make healthy choices with foods and usually do better in school," she said. "We have to get these kids interested beyond that. Farmers and ranchers make up 2 percent of the population, and they are feeding everyone." Williams said if the population continues to grow at its current rate, farmers will have to grow more in the next 50 years than they have since farming began.

"This is why my job is so important. Kids need to be interested and know the average farmer does not wear overalls and carry a pitchfork anymore," she said. "Farmers are scientists and mathematicians."

Williams said teaching agriculture is even incorporated into her spare time.

"I was at the bookstore and saw a Dr. Seuss book. As soon as I started skimming through it, I was thinking of ways to incorporate it into a lesson," Williams said. "I realize that I have to get into the heart of teachers. Once they care, they will find ways to be creative and incorporate agriculture."

To tug at people's hearts, Williams said she likes to introduce people to her family. Her dad was a blue corn farmer who mastered the crop through a significant amount of trial and error.

"His farm in Curry County was sold in 1997 and is empty today," Williams said. "In the 1940s, the average farmer fed approximately 19 people. Today, the average farmer feeds 155 people, an 800 percent increase. Fewer farmers are feeding more people."

But Williams said there are ways to support her program.

"Support local farmers," she said. "We have to keep things going. As I look around, everything on my desk was made in China or somewhere overseas. But open your refrigerator; everything is from the U.S.

"I get excited just thinking about this passion and I am willing to talk to anyone that will listen, even if I do annoy the person sitting next to me on an airplane."

ArtsCouncil celebrates 40 years of the Faire

By Amanda Green

Hear ye, hear ye! Let it be known that 40 years have passed since the tiny parking lot of Holy Cross Catholic Church first filled with a local arts and crafts fair. Who knew what a beloved monster it would become.

'It was growing too quickly for the space Holy Cross had," said Heather Pollard, a Doña Ana Arts Council board member. "When it became more popular we needed more help just putting it together."

In 1980, the Faire was "gifted" by the original organizers to the Arts Council and transformed into the most popular cultural event of southern New Mexico. From humble roots, the ArtsFaire has grown substantially over the years.

The Renaissance ArtsFaire is the Arts Council's largest fundraiser and is being held this year from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 5, and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday, Nov. 6, at Young Park, 1905 E. Nevada Ave. The event, which has become a community favorite, celebrates the talents of regional artists, performers and musicians.

Many of the vendors have been returning to the faire for years, which provides a juried art show, as well as food, games and a royal procession of costumed

"The wonderful thing about the Faire has been its consistency," said Ceci Vasconcellos, executive director of the Arts Council. "The focus has always been on the art and the artists, they are the backbone of the event."

The Faire has become a stage for artists all over the country to showcase their work and for guests to practice their Old English while dressed in the traditional garb of the 16th century.

This year, nearly 150 artists are expected to peddle their wears, which include, handcrafted jewelry, leather goods, ceramics and much more.

'The Faire is really a Renaissance-themed art show," Vasconcellos said. "Vendors are dressed in the costumes of the times and guests are encouraged to join in."

Guests can wander around the different kingdoms created within Young Park to appeal to every interest. In the Middle Eastern Village, visitors can join the exotically beautiful belly dancers and shake their stuff to the beat of the New World Drummers. The crowd-pleasing Greyhounds of Fairhaven will also be in attendance, performing hunting demonstrations with these noble hounds.

Faire-goers can even catch a glimpse of the Royal Court's procession. Once a day, Queen Sherry and King Vincent the Good lead a parade through the many lands of the Faire. Feel free to gawk at the elaborate, historically accurate costumes, or join in and march with them toward the Merry Court.

"I love the costumes," said Teresa Ross, Faire enthusiast. "It's great just to be able to immerse yourself in the atmosphere."

Ross hasn't missed a Faire since moving to Las Cruces three years ago to attend New Mexico State University and says the Faire is the event in town she looks forward to most.

Guests can expect an entertainment schedule full of familiar favorites as well as a few new groups who will get their chance to strut their stuff on the Rio Grande Main Stage. Performers include the Gila Highlanders who play traditional Irish music; C.W. Ayon, a one-man blues band; and Faire veterans La Cella Bella, a local cello quartet.

Some of the anniversary highlights include the creation of a children's music stage as well as the addition of a pirate ship to entertain the littlest buccaneers.

The folks of HawkQuest are returning with their magnificent osprey and Robert the Ratcatcher will be armed with his rata-pult, tossing pumpkins and plague infested rodents far from the festivities.

Whether you spend your time feasting upon giant turkey legs or are brave enough to take a canoe ride with some Boy Scouts out on the lake to face the dragon Magellan, there's something for everyone.

Each of the vendors at the Faire are affiliated with a nonprofit organization such as Friends of the Mesilla Valley Bosque State Park, the Boy Scouts, the Children's Miracle Network and Youth at Risk for La Casa.

"The volunteers really get into it, dressing up their booths and themselves," Vasconcellos said. "To make the event a success, the Faire takes an incredible amount of work from over 200 volunteers. We couldn't do it without them."

Admission is $6 for adults, all children 12 and under are free. All proceeds from the Faire are designated to the Arts Council, which uses the funds to sponsor art programs, career workshops and other cultural activities in the community throughout the year. For health and safety reasons, Faire-goers are advised that no pets, except service animals, will be admitted.

To avoid parking congestion, attendees are encouraged to ride the free bus shuttles at the Mesilla Valley Mall to and from the park. The shuttle will run every 10–15 minutes beginning at 9

For more information or to volunteer at the faire, call the Arts Council at 523-6403.

Once upon a time, at the Renaissance ArtsFaire

"Surely, thou doth jest!" sayeth Luis Areu at the 2010 Doña Ana Arts Council's Renaissance ArtsFaire.

Sir Robert the Rusty, aka Robert the Ratcatcher, aka Bob Diven, adds comedy to the proceedings.

Queen Sherry de la Décolletage and her entourage lead the procession of the Merry Court.

Sword vendor Jordan Kerr is one of the more than 150 artists exhibiting his wares at the Faire.

Rachel Kim and Pauline Milnor represent other regions of the world that also flourished during the Renaissance.

Hear ye, hear ye

See who's who around the Faire

By Amanda Green

The 40th anniversary of the Las Cruces Renaissance ArtsFaire has brought talented artists, musicians and performers from all corners of the country to the Mesilla Valley.

Here are a few not to miss this year: La Cella Bella is a local cello quartet whose delightfully classic twist on modern music has made them a Faire favorite. With dramatic and innovative arrangements, La Cella Bella has constructed a beautiful patchwork of sounds that explore the deep range of the cello.

Alison Reynolds, who has been playing the cello for more than 40 years, formed the group in 2004.

"We started to play just to play, to see what we could do," Reynolds said. "There was no music for four cellos, so we started arranging our own."

This year they are returning to the Rio Grande Main Stage at the Renaissance ArtsFaire for the third time and are delighted to have been invited to perform again.

"We love playing there, the people are wonderful, it's great to be a part of anything the Arts Council does," Reynolds said. "The Faire has such a great atmosphere."

La Cella Bella specializes in wedding music and personalized arrangements that are meaningful for the bride and groom.

Rokoko is the brainchild of local husband and wife artists, Mitch and A.me Alamag.

They began working together in 1984 to create elaborate pieces of furniture, wall art and household appliances. The bright colors and intricate patterns have become a faire staple and crowds flock to the Rokoko booth each year.

"The Renaissance Faire in Las Cruces was the first show we ever did," A.me Alamag said. "It gave us hope that there was a community that was excited and willing to celebrate art."

Due to their success and local support for their art style, the Alamag's have been able to open a gallery for their work, located at 1785 Avenida de Mercado in Mesilla.

"We've been to events all over the country, but this is the one we've connected to the most," A.me Alamag said.

Tortolita Creations explores the Tortolita Creations explores the wonders of color and texture through the medium of fused glass, creating plates, platters and other fine ware.

Husband and wife team Pauline and Brian Vaughn pack up their creations and travel all the way from Marana, Ariz., to attend the Faire. 2011 will be their fourth year at the show in Las Cruces.

"It's so much fun, especially the goofy outfits I get to wear," said Brian Vaughn, who transitioned from a full-time contracting business to pursue art with his wife.

"Pauline took a class in pressed glass at a local college about ten years ago, next thing I knew we had our own kiln."

Each piece takes an average of 30 hours just in kiln time, but the work, according to the duo is absolutely worth it.

They travel each year to Las Cruces to attend the Renaissance Faire because "the community really supports us there. Everyone is smiling, having a good time and you know that they truly enjoy the artwork," said Brian Vaughn.

Musicians of all ages and skill are welcome to join

By Amanda Green

Ladies and gentlemen, strike up the band!

The Las Cruces chapter of New Horizons, an international organization that kindles interest and passion in playing music, has been a long-standing voice in the community. It was started more than 15 years ago by William Clark, then department head of the Music Department at New Mexico State University, and Roy Ernst, a graduate of the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N.Y., to provide "retired folks with the gift of music," Ernst said.

"New Horizons Band is a group, mostly senior citizens who may never have had a chance to play a musical instrument before, or who played one during their school years, and were unable to continue playing as they raised families or had careers," said Cheryl Fallstead, creative director of New Horizon's band. "It's an opportunity to bring music back into their lives."

The New Horizon Band is complied of community members, some who joined without any musical knowledge or background, and some who have been playing for decades. There is no age or talent limit, and the group welcomes every musician who is lookestablished in 1992, is a program of educational opportunities of a scholarly nature for learners 50 years or older. ing for a place to play

This year, the New Horizons band kicks off its 2011-12 season with a performance at 3 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 6, in the Atkinson Recital Hall, 1075 N. Horseshoe, on the NMSU campus. The concert offers eight pieces and three conductors, principal conductor John Schutz, associate conductor Judy Bethmann and guest conductor David Moore.

Schutz will direct "Just a Closer Walk with Thee" by Fred Allen, "Americans We" by Henry Fillmore and arranged by Robert Foster, "Themes Like Old Times IV" by John Edmundson and "Communion" by Carl Strommen. Compositions directed by Bethmann will be "Adagio for Winds" by Larry Daehn and "Artifacts" by Matthew Schoendorff. Moore will present "Centre Island" by Lennie Niehaus.

"The concert is free," said New Horizons Band member, Heather Pfeiffer, who plays the bassoon in the band and in the Mesilla Valley Concert Band. "All we want is a full house for people to hear and appreciate the music as much as we do."

Each year in February, the New Horizons Band holds a youth concert at Oñate High School that is put on for students getting ready to enter area middle schools. This project targets students who are unaware of band as an elective, seeking to familiarize the students with some of the instrument choices that might suit them.

"Our hope is to inspire the students, to get them interested," Fallstead said. "It's such a great opportunity for us to show them how wonderful music is."

For more information on the concert or joining the New Horizons Band, call Director John Schutz at 523-1652.

Mariachi conference comes to NMSU

More than 700 students to learn the art

By Marvin Tessneer

Las Cruces Rulletin

Las Cruces will be a mariachi cultural center again when it hosts the 18th annual Las Cruces International Mariachi Conference (LCIMC) Wednesday through Sunday, Nov. 9-13, featuring Grammy award-winning singer Vikki Carr with Mariachi Sol de Mexico de Jose Hernandez.

The conference also will feature more than 700 mariachi workshop students who are learning to preserve mariachi music and culture and Mariachi Cobre.

They will perform in the Spectacular Concert at 7:30 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 12, at New Mexico State University's Pan American Center. Tickets are available at www.ticketmaster.com and at the Pan American Center Ticket Office.

"Vikki Carr is not only a talented performer but also a supporter of educational and cultural arts programs such as the Mariachi Conference," said Phyllis Franzoy, conference director. "We appreciate her support of our youth Mariachi Music and Folkloric Dance Program."

During her five decades of singing, Vikki Carr has released 60 recordings, won three Grammy Awards and performed for five U.S. presidents and soldiers in Vietnam. She also won the National Hispanic Media Coalition Impact Lifetime Achievement Award, the Latino Spirit Award and was inducted into the Latino Hall of Fame.

She supports many charities, including the American Lung Association, Cancer Therapy and Research Center, Muscular Dystrophy Association and St. Jude's Hospital. She also established the Vikki Carr Foundation that provides college scholarships.

"My voice is a gift, and a gift is nothing unless you can share it, and the foundation is one of the ways that I can share it," Carr said. "The foundation seeks to help Mexican-American students to achieve their goals through a college education, something that I myself was never able to do."

Mariachi Cobre has worked as instructors at mariachi conferences throughout the Southwest. The group has accompanied vocalists such as Lola Beltran, Linda Ronstadt, Pepe Aguilar, Pedro Fernandez and Ana Gabriel.

Mariachi Sol de Mexico de Jose Hernandez is known for incorporating new sounds, ideas and original rhythms to mariachi music.

Coordinators have scheduled four sessions at the NMSU Corbett Center Student Union and Activity Centers for youth workshops – 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. and 1 to 4 p.m. Thursday and Friday, Nov. 10 and 11.

The students will demonstrate what they have learned at the Student Showcase Concert at 7:30 p.m. Friday, Nov. 11, at the Pan American Center.

Jesus Espinoza, who plays the trumpet, has attended four workshops the

"I really like the workshops," Espinoza said. "The instructors work with you very well. During the years, I've attended the mariachi workshops, I've always learned something new."

Espinoza plays with Mariachi Alma and is employed by the Las Cruces Public Schools in maintenance.

Jacqueline Cardoza is a senior at Las Cruces High School and plays the vihuela, a small guitar, and sings with Mariachi Alma. She has auditioned for the Student Showcase as a vocalist.

"Because I love singing," she said. "I've applied for a scholarship, and I feel in the long term I can fulfill my dream of becoming a professional mariachi singer."

"Mariachi music is lively and fast moving," said Mack Ruiz, a violin player in Mariachi Cobre who coordinated the workshops and is an instructor as well. "The trumpets give it the drive, and the vihuelas, violins and bass carry the rhythm."

The mariachi conferences brought out talent in Las Cruces.

In September 1998, a group of musicians organized the Mariachi Espuelas de Plata, the first community youth mariachi group.

The first mariachi group was organized in 1994, Mariachi Real de Las Cruces, following the First Annual Las Cruces International Mariachi Conference. Soon, LCHS formed Mariachi Diamante, and Oñate High School started Mariachi Oñate, according to a Las Cruces Convention & Visitors Bureau release.

As a result of the LCIMC, mariachi music created a vibration that still is felt in Las Cruces with groups such as Mariachi Aguilas, Rayos del Sol, Mariachi El Dorado, Mariachi Los Viajeros and Mariachi Alma.

Mariachi Cobre members will lend their expertise to workshops at the Las Cruces International Mariachi Conference Nov. 9-13 at NMSU.

A look at Ireland's finest

Review by Jeff Berg

In this slightly offbeat and cleverly shot comedy-drama, English actor Brendan Gleeson plays Irish cop, Sgt. Gerry Boyle.

The word "garda" on his uniform is Gaelic for policeman, so don't think he is just a security guard of some sort. He is teamed up with African-American FBI agent, Wendell Everett, played by a very well-cast Don Cheadle.

Boyle is a bit of a rogue, doing things his own way sometimes, but he is quite insightful and knows the minds of criminals, large and small, without having to devote much time to what they will be up to next. He is also not above drinking a bit on the job, or searching the still warm corpse of a moron killed in a traffic wreck for a bit of illegal substance that he can market himself.

He is also very devoted to his mom, who may be spending her last days in a nursing home, but still has a sly word and deed for those last moments.

He's not afraid to take on smart alecky kids, who may have information that he needs.

Everett is, of course, all business. Sent to Ireland to work on capturing some drug smugglers whose cargo is, as we are reminded several times, worth a half billion dollars,

Don Cheadle and Brendan Gleeson star in "The Guard," now playing at the Fountain

Everett and Boyle first meet at a briefing, where Boyle unleashes several disparaging questions about Everett's African-American background.

Everett's character could have been a bit better developed, but this is Gleeson's movie

Boyle also has a new, young partner transferred from the city, who he really wants nothing to do with, but he doesn't have to worry about that for long.

Boyle and Everett begin to work together to capture the not very smarmy drug smugglers, a trio of semi-nincompoops who seem rather bored with their "job" and the accompanying results. Rather than being the stereotypical drug slugs whose lifestyles are all Friday, Nov. 4. Ninety-six minutes of good filmmaking is in store for you, but not the young ones as the film is rated R GRADE for the usual reasons about buxom woman, big guns and fast cars, they just seem to be making a living, but not paying much attention to what that "living" does to the lives of others.

John Michael McDonagh is the director of this lively and interesting film. He does a great job of taking the possible stereotypes and reshaping them into something fresh and clever.

So, you think this is a buddy copy film? Well, not really as Cheadle and Gleeson do work together and become friends, but not in the way you would think. Or if you think that the plot is ho-hum, another drug deal about to go bad story, do think again. Gleeson's methods and the attitudes of the bad guvs blended with the unique cinematography, make "The Guard" much more interesting

Add an exciting and ambiguous ending and "The Guard" becomes a new look at some old standbys.

Goodman's showy flick

'Matinee' explores antics behind filmmaking

John Goodman stars as promoter

Lawrence Woolsey in "Matinee."

"Matinee" is a 1993 film that invites audiences to step back into a time of outrageous movie-theater gimmicks and larger-than-life B-screen stars in this charming homage to the great sci-fi and horror flicks of the 1950s and 60s.

John Goodman is at his uproarious best as the William Castle-inspired movie promoter Lawrence Woolsey, who brings his unique brand of flashy showmanship to the unsuspecting residents of Key West, Fla.

It's 1962, and 15-year-old fan Gene Loomis can't wait for the arrival of Woolsey, who is in town to promote his latest offering of atomic power gone berserk, "MANT!" But the absurd vision of Woolsey's tale takes on a sudden urgency as the Cuban Missile Crisis places the real threat of atomic horror just 90 miles off the coast.

With the help of Gene and Woolsey's leading lady, Ruth (Cathy Moriarty), the master showman gives Key West a premiere they'll never forget. Anything can happen in the movies, and everything does in this hilarious tribute to a more innocent (and outrageous) time in American cinema. Rated PG.

CineMatinee is a unique blend of movies presented by the Mesilla Valley Film Society that showcases unique films, past and present, often with an emphasis on life in the West, which could mean the New West, the Old West, or anything in between and movies that missed us, films that are notable but never had a lot of publicity.

The series is designed to show area residents that film is a form of art and education as well as entertainment. At least one film a month for this series has a New Mexico connection, drawing from the vast pool of movies made in the state (nearly 500) or perhaps featuring a star/story from New Mexico talent. It features film festival quality

Local winery opens pizzeria

Luna Rossa has hits and misses

By Amanda Green

The award-winning winery based in Deming, N.M., Luna Rossa has begun a new life in Las Cruces and created new culinary flavors to compliment its extensive wine

Located at 1321 Avenida de Mesilla, the Luna Rossa Winery & Pizzeria was built on a stretch of road known for wine and delicious Italian food. Live music provided on the patio and the ambiance of the newly opened kitchen helps ease some of the rocky starts. The staff is new, visibly so, the kitchen seemed cluttered but capable and the wood-fire pizza oven burned hot all through the night.

The wine list caters to people looking for their favorite dry red or sweet white, for purchase by the glass for $5 or by the bottle for $17. The server had suggestions for each meal choice and helped to pair the entrée with the right variety.

I stumbled through the menu, and what little Italian I know came in handy deciphering pasta from pizza. The waiter seemed more than happy to help me figure out what it was I was looking guests to experience the creation of their pizzas, rolled, stretched and hand placed into the red-hot coals of the oven where the cooking process is quick and leaves the crust thin and crispy.

I opted for the margherita pizza and found the flavors were incredibly light, which meant more food and less of that heavy feeling pasta usually leaves me with. I admit, I ate the whole thing and had the chance to try my date's pasta.

The new restaurant is just getting its ground, and developing its unique style, and it shows. With a little more work, and some more talent in the kitchen, Luna Rossa promises to be an extraordinary pizzeria. The wines are top notch, and a featured favorite every year at the Harvest Wine Festival.

Expect to spend between $10 to $14 for an entrée dish, and $6 to $7

I ordered a piece of carrot cake, only to find a slice larger than my head, set in front of me. The cake was incredibly airy, fluffy and almost refreshing. The same could be said for the cream cheese frosting that was more delicate than rich, and absolutely delicious. Though I was sure I'd over indulged, I left feeling energized instead of heavy.

'Wait Until Dark' is a delightfully dark production

By Michael Mandel

For the Las Cruces Bulletin

Don't wait to see "Wait Until Dark" at the Black Box Theatre, go now.

This engrossing mystery play is necessarily complicated and intriguing because of its twists and turns. In this case, I was particularly glad director Karen Caroe had experience as a mother of eight children, which prepared her to handle the intricacies of both the plot and the supposed plot within the plot. I was befuddled by the end of act I and felt my lights nearly go out.

It is indeed a sinister device to pit a blind woman and an 8-year-old girl against two excons and a mastermind villain molded out of pure evil.

For those playgoers who tend to be squea-mish, no blood ever spurts out on stage and no shots are fired. This play deserves its classic status because of its well-crafted balance of bizarre elements and lively plot twists.

Taking on a classic of theater and film poses a problem of casting characters that are in themselves unique yet true to purpose. Particularly enjoyable in this production was Valina Hamilton's turn as the blind wife, Susie Hendrix. Her ability to negotiate sightlessly proved as believable as her emotional turns dealing with the domesticity of a life invaded by inexplicable evil as well as dealing with her impishly cute 8-year-old neighbor Gloria. The night I saw the play, Carly Hamilton played Gloria, but because of the demands of the role on a child, on alternate nights, Lydia Caroe fills the roll.

Before discussing how mean the villains are in the play, I'd prefer to get into how archly conceived Gloria is as an 8-year-old. I'm still amazed at how she meanly thwarts the blind Susie with a captivating charm. Some of her lines are delivered with an endearing freshness while others are lost in a childish rush of impatience.

There were some precious lines she delivered which showed a great natural instinct for acting. At times, I felt she was more evil than the actual villains.

And a good variety of villains they are. The dapper Mike Talman, played by Bobby Senecal, is the amiable conman who easily charms everyone. If Susie weren't blind, she'd see how much he looked like a Hollywood leading man. His smooth voice and assured demeanor win her confidence.

Danny Wade, with closely cropped hair for this show, plays the tough Sgt. Carlino. Appropriately menacing, Wade throws his intimidating character around the set like a wrecking ball. He and Senecal have a good interaction of familiarity and hostility that forms a nice unison and necessary conflict

Odd man out, Harry Roat, played by Armando Sarabia, is the truly evil mastermind, using the con men and orchestrating the elaborate plot to recover a fortune in hidden drugs. Although Sarabia has the icy, detached delivery of a truly cruel criminal, he'd lapse into an aloof, unfocused discussion at times.

Credit goes to Larry Chandler, Peter Herman, Ken Eastlack and Doug Roby for a nicely compact and useable set. I'm not sure why the entrance door was elevated, but it added an interesting dimension to the floor space.

Just 'In Time' for the Occupy crowd

Review by Amanda Green

"Time is money." It's an old saying that reminds us how we have come to place value on hours, minutes and seconds.

Some of us are paid per the hours we've worked; others believe their time is more valuable than their neighbors.

The amount of money you have, as some who have dealt with the poor state of health services, often determines your quality of life, or the time you have to live at all. Time and money have become an integral part of our society, and writer/director Andrew Niccol brings these issues to light in his film "In Time."

"In Time" follows the story of

Will Salas(Justin Timberlake) is a poor man who works long hours in the ghetto just to make time. Time is the currency, and it provides for more than jut material needs, it is literally the time you have left to live. The gene for aging has been eradicated, and each person stops aging at 25.

Will's mother, Rachel (Olivia Wilde) appears to be roughly the same age as her son and struggles to pay the bills while still keeping enough time for herself. A clock is engraved on each person's arm, which continuously counts down the time until the person expires. The wealthy are able to afford more time and live forever, while the poor die young.

Salas is in the habit of waking up with fewer hours on his clock than there are in the day. In a turn of events, Salas saves a wealthy man, Henry Hamilton (Matt Bomer) who has gone slumming in the ghetto, from a notorious street thug named Fortis (Alex Pettyfer). Once rescued, Hamilton reveals that there is enough time for everyone to live a full life and the rich are hogging it to live forever. Hamilton commits suicide by letting his clock run out, after transferring over a century worth of time to a sleeping Salas. Time is transferred by scanner or by grabbing another person's wrist in a modified handshake.

Rachel times out when inflation drives up the price of her bus ride, and she is unable to reach her son, who has the time to spare.

> With nothing to lose, Salas takes an expensive trip into the center of New York, rightfully called "New Greenwich," and surrounds himself with the luxuries of his new fortune. He hits up a local casino, where he plays a hand of poker with the time mogul Phillipe Weis (Vincent Kartheiser), and gains an invitation to attend a party where he gets a chance to get closer to Weis' daughter, Sylvia (Amanda Seyfried).

A kidnapping ensues when Timekeeper Raymond Leon (Killian Murphy) comes to arrest Salas for the murder and time theft of Hamilton. Salas forces Sylvia to join him in a high-speed chase, culminating in a crash and the robbery of their remaining time thanks to Fortis and his thugs.

When Weis refuses to pay the ransom for his daughter's return, Sylvia decides that enough is enough and helps Salas steal from her father's banks. In the spirit of Robin Hood, Salas distributes the time into the ghetto and the prior form of social control is suddenly obsolete. There is suddenly more time for more people, and the rabble rises up.

Will Salas (Justin Timberlake) is a poor man from the ghettos of New York who comes into an unexpected inheritance of life's most precious commodity, time in "In Time."

'In Time" is an action-packed thriller that is slow to start, but once it gets going, is entertaining in the least. Timberlake plays the high-voiced hero who provides enough wit to keep the storyline moving along, and the predictable romance with Seyfried is believable (even if Seyfried's poorly cut wig isn't). At one point, the film makes a pathetic attempt at special effects and a crashing car looks more like a child's toy tossed through a sand box.

The acting is solid, with a surprisingly wicked performance by villain Pettyfer, who nailed the role of a narcissistic gangster. Kartheiser, who was reliving his "Mad Men" role, delivers the same creepy, upper-class snobbery that we've come to expect from the young actor.

Seyfried and Timberlake have chemistry, and complement each other throughout the film, adding an almost "Bonnie and Clyde" like feel to the scenes.

But there's a thin line between stealing from the rich to give to the poor, and being a gun-toting criminal. In the end, I wasn't sure which side the duo was leaning towards. The focus of the film was on the redistribution of wealth (aka time) and all the things that are wrong with the huge gap in class divisions. There was nothing subtle about the message. A literal barriers between the boarders of rich and poor, inflation rates that leave working people unable to live.

Timberlake proved himself a capable actor and action-hero even if his voice was a little whiney. Not everybody can be as manly as Sylvester Stallone.

CULTURAL CORNERSTONES:

LAS CRUCES Museums

Fond farewells and bright hellos

New board members will swell the ranks at museums

Cheryl Fallstead Foundation for Las Cruces Museums

I'm not sure it's appropriate to say the current board of the Foundation for Las Cruces Museums (FLCM) is going out "with a bang" when our departure coincides with the opening of "NASA | ART: 50 Years of Exploration" at the Las Cruces Museum of Art, but we are leaving on a high note.

There have certainly been a lot of loud bangs involved in NASA's first 50 years and some of them are depicted in over 70 pieces of original art by many world-renowned artists who are now on exhibit.

Has Las Cruces ever had one exhibit with original works by artists, such as Norman Rockwell, Andy Warhol, James Wyeth, Annie Leibevitz, William Wegman and Peter Hurd? If you love art, science or space, this exhibit will appeal to you. It fills the walls of the Museum of Art with pieces commissioned by NASA and curated by the Smithsonian. It will be quite a treat and vou'll have the chance to visit time and again before it leaves town in January 2012.

Appropriately enough, the exhibit is brought to us by the Museum of Art and the Museum of Natural History, which will be moving Downtown next to the art museum in precisely one year with a new name: Museum of Nature and Across the courtyard at the Branigan Cultural Center, you'll find some out-of-this-world photography with the same stellar theme in the exhibition "From Earth to the Solar System." Both exhibits open Friday, Nov. 4, during the Downtown Ramble. Bring cash or your checkbook to buy tickets for the raffle sponsored by FLCM for some outstanding prizes.

I mentioned that the current board is going out with a bang. After serving as the president of FLCM for five years, my term is up, as are the terms of several other long-time board members: Secretary Carol Vennes, Communications Chair Ellen Castello and Treasurer Bud Russo. Two other long-time board members, Ann Carlson and Dick Drabek, will remain on the board as museum representatives and two new members, Special Events Chair Karen Feder and Branigan Representative Peggy Miller, will continue their roles. In addition, 10 new board members will swell the ranks.

We are proud that with our departure we can point to a number of successes, not the least of which is turning the entire project over to a full board of exemplary individuals who will not only pick up where we left off, but move forward with new projects and ideas to support our city's four museums.

In our time on the board, we have increased visibility of the foundation and the museums, created a Friends organization, operated gift shops, established a presence at the Renaissance ArtsFaire as an annual fundraiser, increased our funds through a variety of projects, worked with a publisher to create and print a book about the history of Las Cruces and the Mesilla Valley and supported a number of projects for the museums, such as bringing a caboose to the Railroad Museum. I believe that we can retire knowing we've done our part to support the museums.

The new board members will have been officially elected and appointed by press time, but I will let them be introduced by the new president in next month's column. I can tell you that we're leaving the foundation in good hands.

In addition, I want to express my sincere thanks to everyone who has been a board member, museum volunteer or museum staff during my time with the foundation. It has been a pleasure working with you and I appreciate all you've done. Kudos to Museums Director Will Ticknor for his leadership and vision for our museums, helping to bring us exhibits such as "NASA | ART."

You, too, can support the museums by volunteering, dropping some cash in the donation box, becoming a member of the Friends, or simply visiting. We hope to see you there.

Avoid holiday weight gain

By Julie Ketelsen

College of Health and Social Services

As the average American gains between 7 and 11 pounds during the holiday season, many look forward to this time of year with a combination of happiness and dread.

So what's the cause of the weight gain? Baggy sweaters? Cold weather? Food? Whatever the reason, most people don't want to gain weight any time of the Doña Ana County Extension Home Economist Karim Martinez provided an array of tips to avoid gaining those unwanted extra pounds during the holiday season.

Julie Ketelsen: Why do people gain weight during the holiday season?

Karim Martinez: Several reasons, but most of all stress. The holiday season actually starts with Halloween, followed by Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year's and continues all the way until Easter. Stress causes more eating, along with people taking a holiday from exercise and all other healthy habits. There are also emotional ties to food, which tend to be the center of most family celebrations.

Ketelsen: How can people avoid weight gain during the holiday season?

Martinez: Pre-planning is key to realizing we need to watch what we eat regardless of the season. Getting plenty of sleep, watching stress levels and continuing exercise regimens also help in not gaining weight.

Focus less on the material part of the holidays by focusing more on relationships will help decrease stress, keep life in balance and decrease chances of overeating.

You can eat your favorite holiday foods, but be sure to watch the serving size and don't go overboard. Many unhealthy foods are only offered at this time of year, but that isn't necessarily a bad thing. There are a variety of tips depending on the situation. Here are some tips to remember through the holidays to help avoid stretching your waistline:

- If you get tired, nap instead of snack.
- Plan some modest treats to avoid creating feelings of food deprivation.
- Avoid eating alone.
- Maintain a positive attitude.

Homecoming Buddy Walk a success

Down syndrome support group creates awareness

By Rachel Christiansen

Las Cruces Bulletin

Few in this world can truthfully say they wake up each morning with a big smile on their face, excited for what the day has to bring.

Maybe everyone could learn a little something from 7-year-old Mateo Query who, every day, reminds his parents that life should not be so serious.

Query was diagnosed at birth with Down syndrome, a genetic anomaly affecting more than 400,000 Americans.

"He was a gift from God, and he's taught me more than I could ever teach him," Mateo's father, Tim Query, said.

According to the U.S. National Library of Medicine, Down syndrome is the single most common birth defect. It is a genetic condition in which an individual is born with 47 chromosomes, instead of the usual 46, and can cause delayed mental and physical development. It is also associated with a range of other health problems.

At birth, Mateo fought a heart defect known as an Atrioventricular canal, which causes the heart to overwork, creating extra blood circulating around the lungs.

"We weren't even thinking about the Down syndrome during that time," Tim Query said. "We just wanted our son to live."

ing in a hospital for the first three months of his life, Mateo was finally able to go home with his parents, and his father said raising him has been his "purpose" in life.

It has not been an easy road for the Querys, however, and it would be false to report that people with Down syndrome are always happy.

people with Down syndrome are always happy.
"They have thoughts and feelings just like you and me, and (Mateo) does get frustrated and mad sometimes," Tim Query said.

Integrating Mateo into the public school system has been one of the biggest hurdles the Querys have had to face, which was part of Tim Query's motivation to create the organization known as the Southern New Mexico Down Syndrome Families (SNMDSF).

The Querys, along with several other local families, formed the organization as an outlet for parents to meet and overcome the challenges parents with Down syndrome children face.

Based on being a network of support, the group meets to address things such as school integration and parenting issues, and holds annual events such as the Buddy Walk, a national program designed to create awareness within the community.

This year's Buddy Walk in Las Cruces was held Saturday, Oct. 29, and families and volunteers were paired with a "buddy" to walk in the New Mexico State University Homecoming parade.

"It was a huge success; the kids are always so excited to be a part of it," Tim Query said.

The group is currently trying to work with local hospitals to work with new parents of Down syndrome children to educate and inform about the local resources and support groups available to them.

This year's Buddy Walk was the second time Al and Cathy Spencer attended with their 5-year-old son, George, and their two daughters Alana, 9, and Isabella, 7.

Dinner tips:

- Don't go to the dinner table ravenous.
- Don't drink alcoholic beverages after a meal as alcohol increases your appetite.
- Use a small plate, rather than a larger one.
- Make mental notes of what's on the buffet table. Save your calories for new and interesting foods that are worth the calories.

Party tips:

- Eat a small meal at home or work before a party to avoid overeating.
- Emphasize people and socializing, not food
- Taste rather than fill up on high-calorie foods and snacks
- Set limits, for example, alternate diet drinks and alcoholic beverages; no more than one drink per hour.

Tips for the holiday cook:

- Review the ingredients in recipes of traditional holiday favorites, try to modify and include a low-calorie choice on your menu, such as a tossed salad or fruit platter.
- Baste your turkey with a mixture of herbs and chicken broth instead of butter.
- Use evaporated skim milk, not whole milk in your pumpkin pie.
- De-fat your gravy by placing the drippings from the turkey in the freezer for 10 minutes; then skim off the congealed fat.
- Remember, don't bake alone.

turnout for the Buddy Walk. It's time Las Cruces has the awareness about Down syndrome that other cities do," Al Spencer said.

Like Mateo, George was diagnosed with Down syndrome at birth, and has been the "comedian of the family" ever since.

Like many new parents of a child diagnosed with Down syndrome, Al and Cathy Spencer were nervous and anxious about the challenges in the road ahead.

Now, Al Spencer says, that has all changed, and he knows that George was "a blessing from God."

"The beauty of a human life is precious regardless. His flaw has nothing to do with the love and kindness he shows," Al Spencer said.

Spencer said even though George may not learn as fast as other 5-year-olds, he learns a tremendous amount from his two older sisters and the special-needs program he is enrolled in at Highland Elementary.

"It's almost more rewarding with George to see in his eyes when he learns something new," Al Spencer said.

Fortunately for the Spencers, George has not had any other major health problems associated with his Down syndrome, but is still struggling with his verbal communication.

Al Spencer said he would tell new parents of Down syndrome children not to grieve or be anxious, because there are the resources and support in the community that can help.

According to Tim Query, several companies in Las Cruces, such as Tresco Tots and MECA, offer early intervention programs that provide services such as physical therapy and speech therapy for Down syndrome children before they enter kindergarten.

"They do learn, just at a slower pace than what is normal for their age group, and you just have to be patient," Al Spencer said.

If you would like more information on the SNMDSF or would like to join the group, call Tim Query at 636-3643, or visit www.snmdsf.org. For Spanish, call 636-3644.

Modern Solutions

Modern hearing solutions are not the old hearing aids you remember your grandparents complaining about. They are comfortable, practically invisible, and highly effective. They can change your life.

Research by the National Council on Aging on more than 2,000 people with hearing loss (as well as their significant others) demonstrated that treatment of hearing loss, including hearing aids, was clearly associated with impressive improvements in social, emotional, psychological, and physical well-being. This was true for people across all categories of hearing loss, from mild to severe. Specifically, hearing loss treatment was shown to improve:

- · Earning power
- · Communication in relationships
- Intimacy and warmth in family relationships
- · Ease in communication
- · Emotional stability
- Sense of control over life events
- · Perception of mental functioning
- · Physical health

Our Doctors of Audiology want to hear your story so we can help improve your life. To find out how easy a solution can be, call our Doctors of Audiology. We know you have questions: Is it hearing loss? Will it get worse? What can be done? We want to help you answer them.

Communication is key

Enter the workforce with confidence

Currently, most people are getting their information and basing life-changing decisions on sound bite information. This can come from the TV, the Internet or smart phones.

The danger is, although the communication is instant, the information is often misleading, wrong or dangerous. Most successful people base life decisions on all the facts and information at their disposal.

This is the result of following a simple communication model and not the local rumor mill or "follow the crowd" fad. The key components of the model are sender, receiver, barrier and message.

An understanding of these four parts of communication can greatly benefit a person whom is seeking employment or any other life goal. The first part to be discussed in detail is the sender.

The sender is the person with the idea, discussion topic or subject of conversation.

The sender communicates the message either verbally, nonverbally or symbolically. You are the receiver of the communication or message.

The more detailed the message, the better you can understand the information in order to make a decision. This means you will be able to understand the message and take action and make a decision.

Unfortunately, not every communication or message is what we want to hear. Therefore, we have barriers to the message.

This can cause misunderstandings and reduce our ability to effectively accomplish our life goals. These barriers can be distortions, lack of trust, language barriers, personality clashes and experience levels.

These barriers affect personal communication, business communication and organization or government communication. In today's world, the tremendous amount of information available has an impact on barriers. If a person does their research, the truth, or lack of truth, is easy to determine.

Since the focus of the communication is the message, it is imperative that the sender ensures that all three parts of the message is explained accurately and timely.

People have the resources to "fact check" the message. This means that the message – verbal, nonverbal and symbolic – must be accurate.

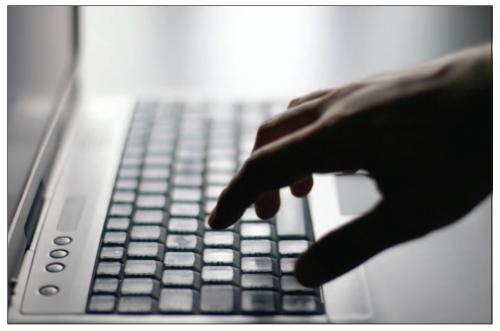

The sender also needs to ensure that the verbal message is correct and appropriate words and sounds are used.

If the message is nonverbal, the sender needs to ensure that their body language, gestures and posture are projecting the desired effect.

If the message is symbolic, the sender needs to ensure whatever is the topic of the symbolism is correctly associated with the people observing the presentation.

Here is an example of proper communication that can be used for securing employment:

To prepare for a job interview, you must conduct an extensive research review of the organization.

Computers are an essential part of clear communication.

You should ensure the organization has a recruiter or informational website that details the organization's mission or business goals.

If the organization and your individual skill set – knowledge, skills and abilities – are compatible then you should prepare your resume to match the job opening.

At the interview you should dress appropriately and be prepared to answer all legally relevant questions pertaining to the job.

Do not misrepresent your position, as the interviewer will do research in an effort to hire the best possible employee.

Do not let an interviewer intimidate or confuse you during the interview process. This is where your research can give you the information to answer the difficult questions.

Lastly, some good preparation tools are reading books or websites that focus on the job interview process. If possible, meet with a counselor who specializes in the job interview process or is knowledgeable about your local employment situation.

By Beth Sitzler

During one of Hilde and Allen Lee's routine trips from California back to their home in Virginia, they decided to try a different way and headed down Interstate 10.

Cutting through the Southwest, the retired couple ended up in Las Cruces after a snowstorm, which had left the Organ Mountains dusted with a fine white powder, enhancing its scenic majesty even more.

"If I could have that view for the rest of my life, I would die happy," Allen Lee said to

They decided to look into moving to the City of the Crosses and began an extensive search to find that perfect lot that captured that view every day.

Scouring the city, they found just the view Allen Lee had desired at 8176 Constitution Road, a 1.67-acre lot in the gated Coronado Ridge subdivision.

the layout of the home. Having designed three houses previously, they said they knew exactly how they wanted things to flow.

"It's efficient," Allen Lee said. "You don't have to wander through to get into the room you want."

"It's one story and is easy to get around in," said Hilde Lee, adding that the home is also effortless to care for and doesn't require a lot of maintenance or upkeep. "We have space and we're not bumping into each other."

When it came to style, the couple chose a Mediterranean approach, which they felt would complement the Southwest landscape.

"In Virginia, everything was strictly colonial, brick and two stories," Hilde Lee said.

Ceramic tile lines the floor to give the home a more Southwest feel, Hilde Lee said, as columns with granite tile bases break up the spaces.

"We wanted columns to divide the living room from the dining room and the dining room from the hall," she said. "It gives the space a more formal feeling."

Featuring a 14-foot ceiling, the entry looks out to the formal living room, which has sliding glass doors that frame the Organ

"My favorite thing is the privacy of the view," Allen Lee said. "You come in and the rest of the world doesn't exist."

The living room also includes a two-way fireplace and a tray ceiling with spot lighting to highlight the artwork that graces the walls. Having traveled from the West Coast to the East Coast and all around the world, the couple's collectibles can be seen around the house.

The dining room, which includes a sloped variation of a tray ceiling, is located next to the entrance. Outside of the area is a butler's pantry. A small hall consisting of granite countertops and maple cabinets as well as a dishwasher, icemaker and wine cooler, Hilde Lee said the area allows her to clear away dishes when entertaining without the need of going into the kitchen.

A food writer for a newspaper back East, Hilde Lee said she wanted a kitchen that gave her the space she needed to work. With several work areas, including two islands, she said the 11 feet of countertop space is great for hosting buffets or conducting craft projects.

The room also includes a warming tray, separate cold drawer for vegetables and two oven, which aren't stacked.

"They're more convenient for me," she said.

The kitchen is opened up to a breakfast nook and family room, which features a gas fireplace covered in stone as well as a built-in entertainment center.

"We made this all one big room," she said. "My husband can sit in here and watch TV while I'm cooking."

The other side of the home includes the private spaces. A library, which Hilde Lee said can be transformed to fit the owner's needs, features the other side of the two-way fireplace. The area also features cherry cabinets and one of the many unique chandeliers found

The master suite is also oversized and has a seating area nestled against a curved wall of windows as well as access to the covered patio. Hilde Lee said the couple knew exactly what they wanted when it came to their bedroom, especially the closets. Rather than including a walkin closet, the couple opted for eight smaller closets with sliding mirrored doors.

The bathroom of the master suite includes double sinks draped in granite as well as access to the pool area. The jewel of the room, however,

showerheads, the shower is the ultimate relaxation space.

Out back, the home features a covered patio covered in tile with ornate medallions laid throughout. The large patio is divided into four different seating and entertainment areas, including an outdoor kitchen, which features a barbecue grill and sink.

The patio looks out to the lagoon-shaped pool. Showcasing a beach entry, which gradually becomes deeper, the pool also includes an attached Jacuzzi and a flagstone waterfall. The stone feature is a nice addition to the rock and native landscaping that covers the backyard.

Because the property sits on a hill, the view from the

By Beth Sitzler

Although it's a year away, the Building Industry Association of Southern New Mexico has already begun the planning process of its newest big event - the Fall Renovate and Deco-

With its spring Home & Garden Show becoming a huge success over the last few years, BIA-SNM President Farrell Thurston said the organization wanted to provide the community with another opportunity to improve their homes.

"In an economic slowdown, people put more money into renovating and decorating their existing homes versus buying a new home," Thurston said.

According to information provided by the National Association of Home Builders, Thurston said the first quarter of 2011 marked a four-year high for remodeling, while new homes sales were up 5.7 percent in September from August.

"All of these people need things like paint and flooring," he said.

With fall and spring home industry shows held in big cities around the country, Thurston said members of the BIA-SNM thought now was the time to bring this idea to the City of the Crosses.

"The spring and fall are the two times of the year people look at their house and say they need to change this or need to change that," he said. "The Fall Renovate and Decorate Show is a good opportunity to put all of those things together. It's really good to have these two shows during a time when people think about their homes the most."

Teaming up with Helping Hands Event

Planning, Thurston said the show will be held at the Las Cruces Convention Center Sept. 22-23, the same weekend of The Whole Enchilada

'September is a busy month," Thurston said in regards to community events and festivals. "The Whole Enchilada Fiesta brings a lot of people to town and we thought the Fall Renovate and Decorate Show would give them a different thing to do that weekend. We think it will be a complement to The Whole Enchilada Fiesta. People can come to Las Cruces and have a whole weekend full of activities."

With space available for 60 booths, Thurston said the fall show will feature fewer outdoor home care vendors.

"The (2012) Home & Garden Show is focusing more on outdoor and in garden activities, where the decorate show will focus more on the interior home," said Kathryn Blessington of Helping Hands. "Whether it's a new addition or change of the interior, the event is geared toward those sort of things.

Not just focusing on construction, Thurston said the show will include decorative items, such as paint and furniture, as well as items for do-it-yourselfers.

As with the Home & Garden Show, Thurston said the fall show will features classes and forums conducted. He added that they are looking into bringing regional and national celebrities in the home industry to speak.

"We hope the Fall Renovate and Decorate Show will one day be as big as the Home & Garden Show," Thurston said. "I think our show will be just outstanding. We're going to bring in people specific to this area. People are going to see more local businesses highlighted.

Those interested in participating, volunteering or sponsoring the 2012 Fall Renovate and Decorate Show can call the BIA-SNM office at 526-6126 or Helping Hands at 522-1232. Thurston said they are currently working on a website for the event and those looking for more information can visit www.biasnm.org.

Impress your guests with Holiday Etiquette 101

Meet the new BIA-SNM director

Steve Chavira brings a new business perspective to organization

By Beth Sitzler

Although he doesn't have any direct experience in the construction world, Steve Chavira has brought a love of community and an understanding of success to the managing director position for the Building Industry Association of Southern New Mexico.

Moving to Las Cruces as a small child to be closer to his grandmother, Chavira was the youngest of eight children.

"My family has influenced everything I've done," he said. "My family, my brothers, my sisters, they've helped me be who I am today. The standards I was held to as the youngest in the family were high."

Chavira said he was the first in his family to attend college and graduated from New Mexico State University with a bachelor's degree in journalism and mass communications, focusing on public relations and advertising.

"I liked to write and I've always enjoyed the public relations aspect of business," he said.

"Since then, I've had other family members go to college and get their degree and go on to advanced degrees. I guess I showed that we all could do it."

Moving around and selling various items – from cell phones and pagers to advertising for a weekly newspaper – Chavira said he worked in a direct business-to-business environment.

"That's where my love of small businesses fostered," he said.

While his love of business grew, so did his family. Having two children – daughter Abigail, now 15, and son Elijah, now 10 – Chavira decided to move back to his hometown of the City of the Crosses.

"I moved away for a bit, but I always knew when it came time to have my children, I would have them here," he said. "I grew up here and knew the quality of life."

While most of Chavira's career has been sales related, he said in the last 10 years he has shifted more to the public relations side by being on the front lines and representing his company.

Chavira got the opportunity to work even closer with small businesses when he began Success Incorporated, a coaching practice.

"The idea behind it is you've got to incorporate success in your life in order to build success," he said, adding that he helps his clients with improving speech, listening and negotiating skills among others. "They have to incorporate success into strategies. It's not just going to happen."

Chavira said he will bring these skills to his position with the BIA-SNM, which began full time Oct. 24.

"The BIA(-SNM) has kind of been, over the last few years, under some scrutiny," he said.

Although it touched the lives of everyone in the community, Chavira said the building industry sometimes has a bad reputation in the public's eye, with many of its members viewed as "just out to get money."

"My job is to create a bridge between the general public and the building industry, and show how we can work together," he said. "We want to work together with the community to enhance how things go. I want to be a catalyst for synergy.

"I want to work with the members so they understand, first of all, that I'm an advocate for them. Builders understand that the economy is going to turn around and I want them to be ready to ride that wave."

Part of this includes having the right people in office that will continue to make Las Cruces a building-business friendly city, he said.

"As an industry, we see things that need to be done," he said. "An example of that are impact fees.

"Impact fees don't just affect us as an industry, but you as a city. It affects all of us."

Although they may seem like "small fees," Chavira said, they add up for everyone involved in new home construction, including the buyer. He added that he will use the skills he acquired throughout his career to advocate for the needs of BIA-SNM members.

"I enjoy speaking in front of crowds and giving speeches and presentations," he said. "I haven't always been that way."

Chavira said he remembered performing a trumpet solo during a jazz band recital in high school after which his classmates teased him for being so nervous his leg was visibly shaking.

Practicing speaking in public and becoming more comfortable in front of large crowds, possibly Chavira's most well-known gig is being the master of ceremonies for the March of Dimes High Heels for High Hopes fashion show fundraiser held every November.

Having emceed the past four out of five events, he became involved with the fashion show after a friend recommended his services to March of Dimes Director Becky Horner.

"What I enjoy most is, although I'm the MC, this event is not about me, it's all about the babies and March of Dimes," he said.

Now a member of the board of directors, Chavira said he has a personal connection to the March of Dimes because he was born premature.

"I was a premature, low-birth-weight baby," he said, adding that he was born four weeks early and weighed only 4 pounds. "I'm a living, breathing testament that a low-birth-weight baby born premature can grow up to be a fat MC."

Explaining that a lot goes into a healthy pregnancy, Chavira said March of Dimes is working to prevent premature births and birth defects through education and other services. The High Heels for High Hopes fashion show, held Nov. 19 this year, is an opportunity for community members to do their part.

"I'd encourage anyone with questions on the March of Dimes to contact me," he said. "We still have limited tickets to the show and I can get them involved, and there are always sponsorship opportunities."

Constantly staying busy, the father of two also devotes a portion of his time to giving back to the community through various organizations he belongs to, including the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce and the Hispano Chamber of Commerce de Las Cruces.

To help serve the community, Chavira is a co-founder of Master Minds, a business-networking group that began in January to help small business owners grow and succeed in their fields. Currently serving 45 members, he said the organization is looking into creating a second chapter.

With everything going on, including still working with select Success Incorporated clients, Chavira said he is eager to jump into his new role.

How to turn your first home into a decorator's showcase

Whether you've signed a lease agreement or purchased a house, moving into your first home is an exciting time. For many people, it's their first opportunity to express their personal style by decorating their own space.

Whatever your taste – contemporary or classic, modern or rustic – you want your first home's interior décor to look polished and put-together. And you'd probably rather not spend a bundle achieving that look.

Do-it-yourself home décor is popular for exactly those reasons. By doing the design and implementation yourself, you can save a lot of money. Plus, many people find that doing it themselves makes decorating their homes an even more personal and rewarding experience.

So where do you start if you want to turn your first home into a decorator's showcase? Focusing on a few key areas can yield high-impact results.

Start with the walls; they're the largest design element in any room, and repainting them is an easy, high-payoff way to begin redecorating. Choose colors that not only speak to you, but that also make sense with key furniture pieces you already have. For example, if you have a great sofa that you love, consider choosing a color or two from the pattern and using that on the walls.

Another smart paint strategy is to do three walls in a restful, neutral color and then spice things up with a more vibrant hue on a fourth "accent" wall. Whatever color you choose, remember to buy the best quality paint you can afford. It will last longer and look great.

Another option for dressing up your walls is to use removable murals. Wall murals are a favorite design trick of interior decorators. Repositionable murals make it easy to decorate with a mural – minus the commitment or expense of having one professionally painted. The moisture-resistant murals can be placed and then repositioned anywhere in the house, even the bathroom or kitchen (where Mediterranean wall murals are hugely popular).

Once you've gussied up your walls, it's time to look down and think about the floor. Flooring is the second largest design element in a room and it forms the foundation for your other design decisions.

If you've got the budget and the gumption, you can remove and replace old carpet, re-stain worn wood and retile dated floors. If your means and your DIY skills are more modest, you can always cover up unappealing carpet with throw rugs that speak to your tastes. Carpet tiles are also a great way to get the look and feel of new carpet without the expense and installation challenges of wall-to-wall. And bathrooms and kitchens can both benefit from a new flooring of easy-to-install vinyl tiles.

Finally, accessories are the icing on the cake when it comes to your interior décor. Even if your furniture is mature, you can make it look young again with new accent pillows and slipcovers. It's possible to find reasonably priced artwork to fit nearly every design theme these days, whether you look online or hit one of the big box home design stores.

Window treatments are another accessory that will give you more bang for the buck. You can get a designer look for less when you dress up cheap, store-bought panels with some personal touches.

Turning your first home into a decorator's showcase doesn't have to cost a lot. A sense of adventure, some creativity and the willingness to do the work yourself can have your home looking like something from a TV interior design show in no time.

Taking off kernels

Corn zipper removes pieces with ease

By Beth Sitzler

Few vegetables conjure images of fall better than pumpkins, squash and corn.

Perhaps grown more today for its potential fuel benefits and high fructose syrup, corn has been a staple of the American diet since civilization came to the area. While it can be dried and mashed into a powder, used in soups and salads and served as a side dish, the first task that must be accomplished is removing it from its cob.

Sure, eating corn on the cob is tasty, but the stringy silk can get stuck in your teeth. Plus, there are more recipe options when it is removed. The problem is removing it.

The most common way to do this is by grabbing a big knife and cutting away. While seemingly simple, this can lead to uneven kernels or, even worse, injuries to your digits.

Get help removing the kernels for all of your fall dishes with the help of the corn zipper.

What is it?

While it has a funny name, the corn zipper isn't the latest fashion accessory – it's a kitchen tool designed to easily separate corn kernels

Generally measuring the length of a hand, the stainless-steel contraption usually resembles a thin grater. At the bottom end of the corn zipper is a serrated blade, which actually does the cutting and separating work. It is easier and safer to use than a knife because the blade is contained in the gadget's body, keeping it away from exposed skin.

By simply running the tool along the ear of the corn, the kernels come off as if you're operating a zipper - hence the name - and drop onto your work surface.

Not just for corn, the zipper gadget can also be used on grain.

How does it work?

Simple in design, the corn zipper is as easy to use as an actual zipper.

Hold the corn zipper in your dominant hand and grip the ear of corn with the other. Make sure the silk of the corn has been peeled away and the kernels are exposed. Place a bowl or plate underneath your hands to catch the falling pieces of corn.

Position the blade of the zipper so it is at the top of the ear. Make sure that it is at the base of the kernels. Slide the zipper down the ear of corn. Cut the kernels away from your body.

The kernels will be removed and will fall into your container. Slowly rotate the ear until all of the kernels have been separated.

How much does it cost?

The corn zipper costs between $10 and $15, depending on the manufacturer.

Preparing for winter

Weatherization can cut bills

By Beth Sitzler

Las Cruces Bulletin

As Las Crucens rejoice for the change in temperatures, leading to many air conditioning units to be shut off for the year, there is still work to be done before winter sets in.

Weatherization is the practice of protecting a building and its interior from outdoor elements, such as sunlight, precipitation and wind. While this is usually associated with the winter months, weatherization is important yearround. Not only will it keep outside conditions outdoors, it will keep indoor comforts inside.

Think about it, the more cold air in the summer and hot air in the winter that escapes your residence, the harder and longer your air conditioning and heating units will have to work to compensate. This leads to more energy being used, costing the homeowner more money on utilities.

Many homeowners are becoming more aware of the effects an energy-efficient home has on their comfort of living as well as their pocketbooks. While practices such as using more insulation and low-e windows are becoming more common, there are other tasks that must take place to make a residence both efficient and weatherized.

The biggest task is sealing all cracks and crevices that open to the outside and allow air to pass through. This includes using weather striping or caulking around doors, windows and pipes that penetrate the attic ceiling.

There are several different types of caulk available. Made from various substances, each has its own ability to tackle numerous repair jobs throughout the home. For example, acrylic and vinyl caulk can both be used for interior and exterior applications, but the acrylic variety shouldn't be used in wet place or areas that have a lot of moisture, while the vinyl kind does well in these spaces, such as around a bathtub or shower.

Weather stripping should be used at the threshold of every exterior door or those in an un-insulated room, including attics. It can also be used on other movable joints, such as windows. The substance comes in a variety of materials – felt, reinforced foam and metal, to name a few – and varying depths and widths.

Another area to examine when weatherizing a home is the roof. Cracks can let air escape and water leak in. Problem areas should be repaired as soon as possible.

One aspect of weatherization that takes place in the colder months only is protecting your pipes. Thanks to the freeze that took place this February, many Las Crucens were made aware of how a drop in temperature can wreak havoc on their home. The best way to prevent future freezing is to wrap the home's pipes in insulation, which will keep them protected from the elements.

Those who are unable to weatherize their own home due to financial constraints do have options. The Community Action Agency of Southern New Mexico offers weatherization and home rehabilitation programs to qualified residents. For more information, visit www. caasnm.org.

Scott Svenheim ACE Pest Detective

They're one of the most despised pests that make most of us cringe – rats. With the arrival of the cooler months, these rodents start looking for warm and cozy spots inside your home or workplace. They thrive while living indoors and can destroy homes and businesses and spread disease.

Experts estimate that there is one rat for every person in the United States. They also say that at least 20 percent of the world's food is eaten or contaminated by rats each year. These pests carry diseases and can be extremely destructive, chewing through material such as cinder block, aluminum and furniture, and can enter a building through a crack as small as a half an inch big.

Rats in general invade homes searching for grease and fat, which are parts of any rodent's winter diet. They're always on the hunt for food, shelter and water.

Some common rats found in our homes and businesses include:

- The Norway rat, also known as the house rat, is the most widely found rat in the United States, and it's seen every year during this time in New Mexico. It spreads disease through droppings and urine, and is a strong, aggressive and large breed. An adult Norway rat can weigh between 12 and 16 ounces. These rats prefer meats and proteins, and have adapted to cooler climates better than any other rats.
- The white throated wood rat, also known as the pack rat, is a desert dweller, living in the Southwestern United States.
 They build nests in rocky crevices and underground chambers and feed on cactus and leafy plants.
- The roof rat, also known as the black rat, is similar to its cousin the Norway rat in that it spreads disease through droppings and urine. They live in tropical and semi-tropical climates, including coastal areas and are very common at Southern seaports. They're smaller than their cousins, and adults can weigh between 5 and 9 ounces. They're known as vegetarians since they prefer seeds, fruits and vegetables.

Fortunately, there are simple steps you can take to prevent rodent infestation. The number one rule is to seal all food tightly and never allow food to be left out in open containers. Use traps around your home during the winter months and clean regularly. Also try these tips:

- Check for torn screens and loose attic vents.
- Make sure garbage lids fit securely.
- Don't allow piles of wood to accumulate and eliminate overgrown leafy areas, which provide attractive shelter for rodents.

It's much easier to keep rodents out than it is to get rid of them after they are in. Keep in mind: It doesn't take much for rodents to make themselves at home in your house.

Lotions and potions and cold cream, oh my Body products can do more than soften dry skin

By Beth SitzlerLas Cruces Bulletin

For centuries, humans have searched for magical concoctions that cure dry skin, smooth out wrinkles and add overall softness to their lives.

Lotions and creams come in a variety of styles and formulas, each with their own individual promise to do whatever task is required. Whether a fragrant body lotion or a makeup removing cold cream, these beauty products do have an expiration date

In general, anti-aging and acne treatment products expire within three months to a year. The best way to know when to toss is if the product has changed colors. Body lotions are good for about two to three years. Because cold creams can be made from numerous products – bees wax, mineral oil, essential oils – its shelf life varies.

No matter the concoction, be sure to get all of the use out of your creams and lotions before they expire. This can be done in some unusual ways.

- 1. Remove temporary tattoos: After Halloween, your little pirate might have a fake tattoo or two that refuses to wash off. Quickly remove it with a dollop of cold cream. Rub the cream over the area and wipe it away with a washcloth. The ink will be loosened, making it easier to erase.
- 2. Get rid of bumper stickers: Old bumper stickers with sayings such as "Vote Hillary for President" or "Keep on Truckin" can make your vehicle look cluttered, run down or just plain trashy. Remove them without damaging your paint job with cold cream. Slather on a thick layer of the stuff and let it sit for a few minutes. After it has soaked in, you should be able to peel it off without having to scrape away leftover pieces of paper or sticker residue.
- 3. Make your own face paint: It's never too early to plan for next Halloween, and instead of spending your money on storebought face paints, create your own with cold cream. Simply mix 1 teaspoon of cornstarch, 1/2 teaspoon of water, 1/2 teaspoon of cold cream and two drops of food coloring, your choice of color. Apply it with a small paintbrush or a makeup sponge. At the end of the night, the paint can be washed off with soap and water.
- 4. Combat hair frizz: Have pesky fly-aways ruined your morning 'do? Get those baby hairs under control with a bit of lotion. Simply squeeze a drop onto your hand, rub it in a bit and then run your finger through your hair. The trick is to apply enough of the stuff to weigh the hairs down, but not too much that it becomes greasy.

5. Use as a lubricant: No matter if it's a pair of pliers stuck together or a bolt that refuses to budge, get things moving with lotion. Just squirt some onto the problem area and rub it around. The item will be greased and ready to use.

6. Polish your shoes: The next time you're in a hurry to go to that special event, quickly shine your shoes with lotion. Use a soft, cotton cloth to apply a dab of the lotion, working it into the leather using a circular motion. Be sure to do a small test spot first to check if it will damage the material.

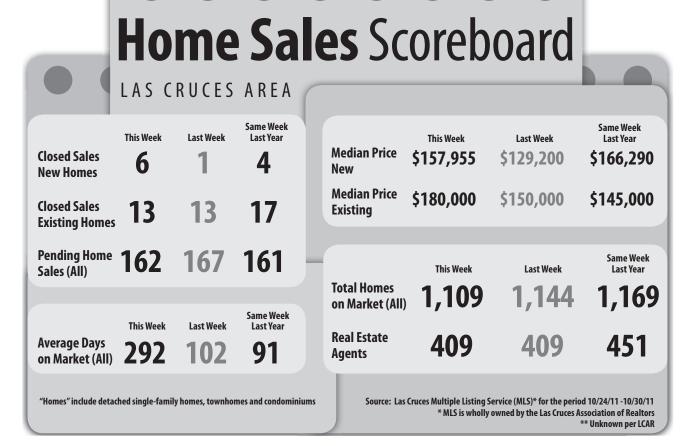

7. Banish static cling: If that flowy skirt is sticking to your legs like there is no tomorrow, get rid of the static electricity with some lotion. Rub the moisturizer onto your hands and then rub your hands on your skirt, blouse or other clingy clothing item. The charge will be interrupted, allowing the fabric to hang as normal. This trick will also work on those annoying pairs of staticky panty hose.

8. De-static pet fur: When it comes to your pet's fur littering your furniture, carpet and clothing, stop it at its source. Cover your hands in a fair amount of lotion and rub your palms up and down your pet's back and head. The lotion will attract the loose pet hair and your pet will love the special attention.

9. Shave your legs: Running out of shaving cream doesn't have to disrupt your daily routine when you have lotion around. Simply use the skin-care product as a substitute. The lotion will make your legs feel smooth and moisturized.

10. Create an exfoliant: With winter coming and cold weather soon to set in, you may notice your skin becoming dry and flaky. Keep it well exfoliated without spending a lot of money by creating your own mild scrub. Mix a small amount of lotion with a teaspoon of sugar. Gently scrub your skin with the concoction and rinse it off. Do this a few times a week for soft skin.

Veteran's Day feast

In 1919, President Woodrow Wilson proclaimed Nov. 11 as Armistice Day to commemorate the end of World War I, which took place at the 11th hour, of the 11th day, of the 11th month. Congress changed the name to Veteran's Day in 1954.

Now that Halloween is behind us, it's time to gear up and get ready to commemorate a very special occasion: Veteran's Day, Friday, Nov. 11. Las Cruces will host the annual parade on that day beginning at 9 a.m. at Loretto Town Centre on the corner of South Main Street and East Lohman Avene.

Bring the entire family to this fun and lively event that will include bands, baton twirlers and a showcase of colorful floats. To learn more, visit http://lascrucesvetday.org.

Then at 11 a.m., the town of Mesilla pays an hour-long tribute to the lives and careers of veterans from both Mesilla and the U.S. Festivities will be held at the Parque de los Veteranos on the corner of Avenida de Mesilla and Calle del Norte.

Master of ceremonies will be Sgt. 1st Class (retired) Carl Christman. Retired U.S. Marine Bob Gaines will deliver the keynote address. Other participants include the New Mexico State University Color Guard and the Zia Middle School choir. And don't miss the playing of the taps. For more information, call Ashley Echavarria 524-3262, ext. 116.

Continue the day's celebration with a Veteran's Day dinner. Launch the meal with a beer spread or hot wings followed by Merchant Marine Soup or an All-American Baked Spam Potato Soup. Wrap it up with a Victory Cake generously smothered with chocolate frosting? Salute our troops.

Too much moisture leads to problems in colder months

Gary Guzman Gardening Guru

Now that the temperatures are getting cooler, it is time to reduce our watering.

There is no reason to be on the same irrigation schedule as the summer months. In fact, if you water too much during this time of year, you may be putting some of your plants at risk for winter damage. This goes for your entire garden – from your lawn, trees and shrubs to even potted plants.

Although fall is here, we will have some very mild days ahead of us. Even though the urge to water more often may tempt you, stand your ground (no pun intended). Be assured that your plants more than likely have enough moisture in the root zone to sustain it. This is assuming that your vegetation has been planted for at least one year or more.

Newly planted items will still need to be watered more often, but, again, not as much as summer watering. Keep in mind that recently planted vegetation will give you a "clue" that it needs watering by wilting.

If you wait until the plant is just beginning to show signs of wilting, then you will get a good feel for how often to water. When you do water make sure the entire root ball gets wet, as most of the growing activity will be under ground at this time of year.

Some signs to look for if you think you are watering too much are yellowing leaves, or foliage. Brown "burnt" looking edges on leaves. Foliage that should be vivid green may appear washed out. Plants may fail to produce new growth or have a stunted appearance. Trees such as Chinese pistache or red oak may fail to produce their wonderful fall colors. Mushrooms may sprout in lawns or near the base of certain trees.

On the other side of the spectrum, make sure you don't stop watering, just reduce. Even plants and lawns that go dormant during the coldest time of the year need some winter moisture. This is particularly true when we get little or no precipitation during these cold, dry months. As a rule, dormant lawns, trees and shrubs should get by once or twice per month. Cool season grasses such as fescue or rye should get by on once every seven to 10 days. Well-established evergreens should get by every 10 to 15 days or less depending upon maturity.

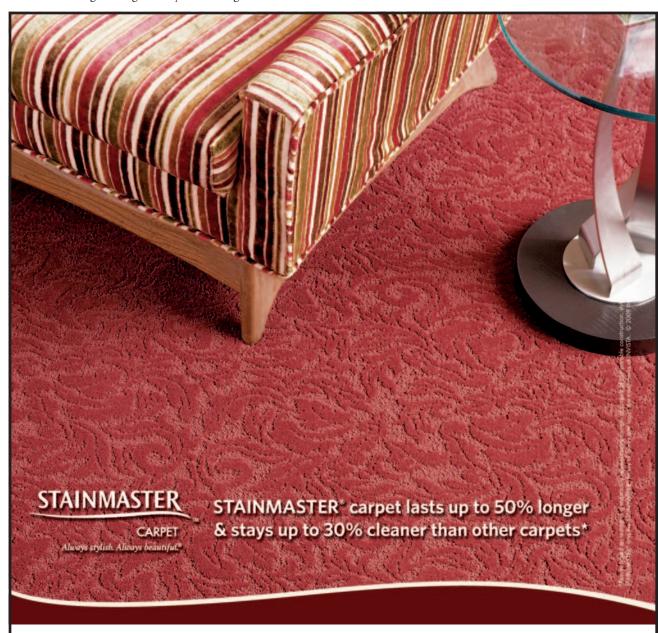

The above watering schedules should be used as a guideline only. There are other variables to consider when irrigating during the "off" season, such as temperature, humidity, wind, cloud cover, amount of shade and soil type, to name a few.

Please keep all this in mind when you re-program your timers, or when you are out manually watering. We live in the desert and should do all we can to use our most precious resource wisely.

In the winter, be sure to water less. Although some days may seem mild, well-established plants will not need the extra moisture.
