Inmate crews worry locals Supervision, location

concerns reviewed

By TODD G. DICKSON

Las Cruces residents packing City Council Chambers told officials they didn't mind inmate crews working along major roadways, but are concerned about their presence in neighborhoods and near schools.

The issue leading to the public hearing Tuesday, Feb. 9, began when an inmate crew last July worked on removing some wood barriers along the disputed section of Fairbanks Drive. When the same five-man crew returned the second day, residents observed one inmate going out of sight of the supervising guard for a couple of minutes. Penny Bagwell, the resident who Penny Bagwell, the resident who watched and photographed the incident, said witnessing the behavior raised questions about what would happen if the inmate escaped. She questioned the level of supervision – one guard for five inmates, as well as a risk of the inmates gaining contraband – weapons, drugs or cell phones – by being allowed to work the same location two days in a row.

Navor Chavez said he didn't mind the work crews along the highways or major roads, but didn't like them in neighborhoods.

Dana Jorgensen said she was shocked to see inmate crews near her children's school.

Bagwell said the work crew agreement was designed to have the crews work only on main roadways and not residential streets. City officials responded that was part of the City Council's action in October 1997, but See Inmate crews on PAGE A3

Local governments and lawmakers are supporting El Paso Electric Company's efforts to kill a state Public Regulation Commission (PRC) order that would force the utility to refund millions of dollars to customers.

That's because the PRC is questioning the legality of agreements that El Paso Electric has with Doña Ana and Otero counties to charge franchise fees, which it also does for similar right-of-way agreements with municipalities such as Las Cruces, Mesilla, Hatch and Sunland Park.

During a conference call Wednesday, Feb. 10, with representatives from the county, Mesilla and Sunland Park, El Paso Electric's Vice President for New Mexico Affairs Clay Doyle briefed them on an emergency bill in the Legislature (HB 269) that would call for all existing agreements to be legally binding.

to be legally binding. Doyle said the bill, sponsored by state Rep. Joni Gutierrez, D-Mesilla, was passed by the House Building and Industry Committee. A companion bill in the Senate is being carried by Sen. Steve Fischmann, D-Doña Ana and Sierra counties. If passed and signed by the governor, the Cameras issuing citations for traffic violations at four major intersections in Las Cruces have seen a decline in violations over time, showing that the system is influencing driver behavior, officials told the City Council at a work session Monday, Feb. 8.

In the first month that citations were issued last May, 837 red light citations and 174 speeding tickets were issued through the camera system, excluding the Telshor Boulevard-Lohman Avenue intersection that came on line later. By January, the numbers had dropped to 343 red light violations and 73 speeding tickets. Also, citywide – excluding figures from Mayor Pro Tem Sharon Thomas said the figures back up what she's experienced by getting less complaints about people running red lights and speeding.

"I think it is making a dramatic difference citywide, not just at these intersections," Thomas said.

Besides the Telshor Boulevard-Lohman Avenue intersection, traffic cameras have been installed at three intersections – Lohman Avenue at Walnut Street, Main Street at Solano Drive and Valley Drive at Avenida de Mesilla. Some residents have complained they wasn't part of the actual agreement. Mike Johnson, city public works director, said the city uses four pris-on work crews – two for street work and two for parks. The city covers the guard pay, and inmates earn $1 an hour. Johnson said the work done by the crews saves his department an estimated $500,000.

"If these inmates did not do these jobs, they would not get done," Johnson said

Mike Heredia, warden of the Southern New Mexico Correctional Facility, said inmates on the crews are only those who don't have a history of escape. He emphasized that an inmate with any history of a sex crime is not allowed on the crews.

These crews are so well-screened, he said, they are allowed to clean the offices and yards of the local State Police station, Heredia said.

"I've heard a lot of concerns, and they are legitimate concerns," he said. "This is also our city."

Heredia said the inmates on the work crews are strip-searched upon their return to the prison at the end of the day.

Johnson proposed a number of new rules for the crews, including making sure they aren't sent to the same location two days in a row.

and external affairs, said the franchise fees are essentially passed on to local governments in return for right-of-ways and other infrastructure support.

The loss of those funds to the local governments would be difficult. Jess Williams, Doña Ana County director of public information and special projects, said the hit to the county's budget would be $1.2 million annually.

"If we lost that, it would immediately impact services throughout the county," Williams said, "and we would have to revisit the entire budget process." Mesilla Mayor Michael Cadena said the hit to his town's budget would be $30,000. He said that money is already included in the town's budget, which is having to make cuts to stay in balance because of the economy and reduced tourism.

Sunland Park City Manager Jaime Aguilera said his budget would lose about $130,000 a year if it loses the franchise agreement payments.

Though the PRC order only mentioned the franchise fees paid for Doña Ana and Otero Counties, Doyle said the order made references to "home rule" governments, which put the other franchise agreements at risk, as well.

The Doña Ana County Commission passed a resolution Tuesday, Feb. 9, supporting the legislation. If El Paso Electric is forced to eliminate the fees, customers would see their electric bill drop by between $2 and $3.

Red lights

Speeding through the intersections are detected by a ground sensor system that determines the speed by how quickly the vehicle goes from one side of the intersection to the other, said RedFlex Traffic Systems representative Bob Warner.

Cameras are activated if a vehicle is going through the intersection at 10 mph over the speed limit.

Though the cameras generated $353,000 the first few months, money generated from the cameras is decreasing as less citations are issued. The city gets its share of the money after RedFlex costs are covered, and it has to split the proceeds with state government. Since the cameras began issuing citations last May, the city's share has been more than $234,000.

Mayor Ken Miyagishima said the intent of the city is not to make money, but to change driving behaviors in the city. He said the citation numbers show that it has worked. Warner said his company's contract with the city calls for two more cameras to be installed, along with a mobile unit that will detect speeding by radar.

Imagine: Legal notices on TV and the radio?

New Mexico Broadcasters Association wants to change longstanding public notice laws By DAVID MCCOLLUM

One of the more interesting developments in the Roundhouse this year, at least for us newspaper folks, is a memo-rial put forward by Sen. David Ulibarri, D-Cibola, Socorro, Valencia, in support of a study of "the feasibility and desirability of permitting the dissemination of legal notices to the public through radio and television broadcasts." When I first heard about this initiative, my first impression was, surely this is a joke. How could anyone expect that a person would take time to listen to a lengthy legal ad on the radio? Talk about a reason to switch stations very quickly. And for those people who make their living following legal notices, I cannot imagine anyone spending all day scanning the radio dial to try to locate and listen to a particular legal notice. However, as I was waiting for the punch line of this "joke," a co-worker handed me a copy of a white paper prepared by the New Mexico Broadcast-ers Association, titled "Legal Notices: providing for alternative publication of legal notices." Included in this document was a copy of the proposed Senate memorial. I quickly realized this was no joke. The broadcast industry is seri-ous about challenging the public notice system that has been in place and has worked quite well in America since 1789 when the First Session of the First Congress required the Secretary of State to publish "all bills, orders, resolutions and congressional votes" in newspapers.

The broadcasters' memorial is rife with misconceptions and inaccuracies. Here are some of their key points:

1. In New Mexico, there are "approximately 50 newspapers and more than 200 radio and television stations.

"The reach of traditional print media sources has diminished in the past decade.'

3. "The dissemination of legal notices in sparsely populated areas and rural communities may be hampered by the diminished circulation and frequency of traditional print media sources."

. radio and television broadcasting have steadily increased their reach advantage into communities across New Mexico.

My point-by-point rebuttal is as follows:

1. The fact that there are fewer newspapers in New Mexico compared to broadcast outlets has no relevance to effectiveness. If number of outlets were the key, then the thousands of outdoor billboards in New Mexico would certainly be the most dominant medium.

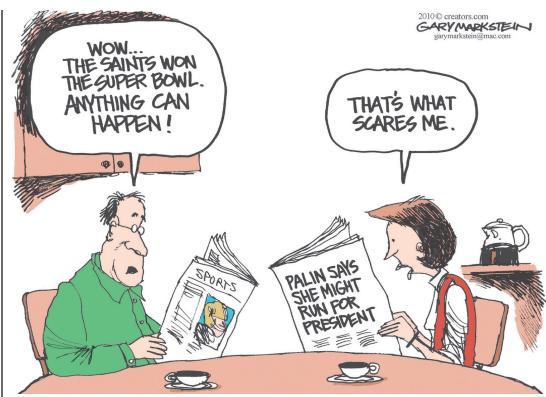

2. According to New Mexico Press Association Executive Director Dana Bowley, the top 50 newspapers in New Mexico (excluding the Albuquerque Journal and now-defunct Albuquerque Tribune) have defied national newspaper trends and have actually increased circulation since 1999.

3. Bowley points out that there is no evidence that the availability of legal notices has been hampered anywhere in New Mexico. Additionally, the NMPA already places most published legal ads on a single website, available to all interested New Mexcans, at www.publicnoticeads.com/NM. 4. "Reach advantage" is an undefined term. Also, most studies I have reviewed show that local radio and television "reach" is increasingly more fragmented, and local radio continues to lose audience to satellite radio.

Perhaps the most important fact to consider is that if radio and television are permitted to begin to "publish" legal notices, no longer will citizens know where to go to find the information that has been consistently available in America for more than the past two centuries. Substituting the printed word that can be read, re-read, copied and saved for later review with a fleeting oral message heard by a tiny fraction of our population would most certainly disregard the intent of the concept of public notice.

Hopefully, our New Mexico legislators will be wise enough to set this memorial aside and spend their time dealing with the challenges of balancing our state's budget.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Reforms supported

Where do we go from here? The past two plus years have been a time of great hardship, fear and travail touching each of us, ordinary Americans. Way too many have seen their jobs disappear, the financial markets near collapse, lifetime saving evaporate, yelling and shout-ing between the political parties and general discord in most conversations about what to do and where to go from here. I listened carefully to the president speak to Congress and the nation, and I support his plans to create incentives for small businesses to add needed jobs and increase wages. I support investments to renew and build our crumbling infrastructure and in looking to the future needs and security of our country through green jobs growth and clean energy. I support reforms that carefully regulate the financial industry so as to protect my investments, 50 years of my savings, from the brazenly imprudent and greedy practices over the last few years that put my future and that of others in jeopardy. And lastly, I support reforms to the health care system that, if the status quo prevails, will drown our families and this country in intolerable debt while still leaving millions of our citizens without coverage and leading to unnecessary suffering and deaths.

This is not the time to be timid. Bold action is required to get us back on track. Congress passed the "pay as you go" rule, so let's go. JEANETTE WALKER

Coercion is not free speech

The Supreme Court ruling removing restrictions on corporate and union political advertising under the guise of free speech flies in the face of every democratic principle I hold dear

The Court says money you invest in corporate securities or union dues can now be used to support any political cause that the management of that organization chooses - no matter how strongly you disagree. Since your savings are probably largely invested in pension and diversified funds, you don't even have control over which corporations divert your money to their political message. This amounts to coercing you into supporting political views you do not hold. Corporations that do not have the right to vote and may be majority controlled by foreign investors will now have increased power to dominate public political debate at the expense of the individual citizens our government was formed to protect. Each of us deserves maximum control of how our money will be spent for political causes. That is the essence of free speech and democracy. To achieve this, we must re-establish clear distinctions between political and commercial organizations. Political action com-mittees that take contributions from individuals are the appropriate voluntary vehicle for combining money for political ends. Backdoor coercion through public corporations, unions and other business associations has no place in our democracy.

Senate slices the pork Will chops fly in House of Representatives?

Our current system of allocating capital

outlay funds argues

term limits.

To the surprise of many, state senators voted overwhelmingly last Satur-day to ax $130 million of pork projects that were approved in previous years but weren't going anywhere.

It is a sign of how seriously senators are taking the budget balancing process. This column has opined on several occasions that lawmakers must share the budget-deficit pain with taxpayers, public employees, schools and state agencies.

We suggested cutting legislative per diem and travel, but cutting their pork will be much more painful because lawmakers believe that pork is what gets them re-elected.

Pork money is for community projects, but lawmakers think of it as theirs because they can take credit for bringing it home. And if the money is for a building, they might even get their name on it.

People who are closely tied to those local projects won't be happy with their senators who didn't go to the mat to save the projects. But senators don't have to run this year. It may be more difficult, however, for House members to vote for the cuts.

We may see a much closer vote on the pork withdrawal in the House because representatives all have to defend their seats this year.

But what do New Mexicans really want? Do they want those local projects more than they want a balanced state budget? Since the law requires a balanced budget, that means either more taxes or fewer government services. Last year, a coalition of education groups commissioned a survey that found New Mexicans would prefer a tax increase to cuts in public schools. If that is what House members are hearing from their constituents now, they may pass the pork cuts easily also.

The elimination of pork projects consti-tutes less than 10 perfor setting legislative cent of the $1.4 billion of the stalled projects around the state. The

this cut are those that

sits there waiting for more to be added eral years to fully fund a project.

What a way to run a railroad. The states that have their act together have created agencies to analyze capital outlay needs statewide, prioritize them and then fund them beginning at the top of the list.

Such a logical procedure is not likely to ever happen in New Mexico.

Alan Hall, an Albuquerque attorney, has suggested an alternate procedure in which lawmakers could bank their pork money. Lawmakers could then borrow and lend from their accounts in a more orderly fashion.

Our current system of allocating capital outlay funds argues for setting legislative term limits. If pork money is so important to re-election, we should limit the number of times legislators can be re-elected. In that way, legislators could focus more on what is good for the state rather than on taking home as much pork as possible.

In recent good economic times, more than $1 billion of pork per year has been split up among each of the 112 legislators and the governor. That is money we certainly could use now to balance the state budget deficit of at least $600 million.

The vote in the Senate was 36-4 to take back $130 million of the $150 million originally in the take-back bill. The other $20 million was for projects that communities were able to produce sufficient documentation to indicate a contract already has been executed.

Four senators voiced objections to the cuts, contending that rural and Navajo areas of the state received more than their share of cuts.

The current scarcity of building funds also presents an opportunity for the state to examine its tendency to overbuild.

On the economy

The condition of our economy is in a very fragile state – let's do something about it. I am a Democrat as we are all Republicans, independents and Democrats. We are also all patriots. We love this country.

We have to tackle the most pressing issues health care and jobs – now.
 Unfortunately, the big bailout didn't help much. At least it was a well-intended undertaking. However, these individuals, who cried the most and also benefited the most, didn't thank the taxpayer with any support.

Now let's try to channel some money to small banks, with the hope to lend money to those who need it, namely businesses and individuals with promising outlook and cre-ativity to create jobs and eventually paying back the start-up help by paying more taxes in the future.

Let us fix health care. A person who spends all his or her disposable money on health care has no money to create jobs by buying other goods or services.

Make everybody pay into a giant pot and finance health care out of that pool of money – young and old. It does not have to be only the government presiding over the pot.

And if there are people, especially when they are young, that think, "Why should I pay for others," make them sign a release that if they need help later they will not obtain help, period, similar to Medicare Part D or pay a substantial higher premium. Or they can continue paying out of their own pocket.

I hear the outcries from the so-called conservatives. No takeover by the government, we will pay higher taxes and the list goes on and on. And these people are the first ones going to the county hospitals for free. I know people who did this.

Ranching is not a sport. It pits men against all that nature can throw at them year after year.

It takes a hard-headed person to keep pushing back. That's how frontiers were conquered and the West was won.

Today's ranchers possess the same qualities exemplified by the 18thand 19th-century pioneers. The origin of the word pioneer comes from the native Indian language pi, as in "pie in the sky," and near, meaning "it's just over the next hill, mother!

One kind of equal protection Repel attackers at school or at home not guarantee my safety but provides By MICHAEL SWICKARD

When a truth is out of favor, it is still a truth. One such truth is that protecting your family is only possible with a force at least equal to an attacker's force. Years ago, in the middle of the night, my house was quiet, as was the neighborhood.

Something woke me. My wife was asleep, but I could see the eyes of our dog Shadow who slept in the corner. She sensed something was amiss. I stepped into the hallway. Our 7-year-old daughter was asleep in her bedroom. In that hallway, I was brought face to face with the practical issues of my need to protect these loved ones.

As a martial arts instructor, I understood that battling an armed intruder in the hallway would end quickly and badly for me despite my training and experience. I was not armed nor did I have a pistol in the house. The realization of my vulnerability was one of my worst moments ever.

Shadow growled as we walked down the hallway. Through a window I saw the outside gate open. I dialed 911 and told the dispatcher I had an intruder. The police are on the way, I was told. Should I retreat back down the hallway or take on the intruder? In an instant I realized it was my job to sell my life to protect my loved ones so I turned on the lights and signaled Shadow to bark, which she did with gusto. The kitchen window was partially pried open, but the person had fled the noise and lights.

Twenty minutes later, an officer arrived. A report was taken. Sleep would not come that night because I knew an armed intruder would have easily killed me and my loved ones and gotten away.

My role as the primary defender of my loved ones was defective and of no benefit if the intruder had been anything but a petty thief. I woke up in a cold sweat a number of times after that. Then I added another layer of defense, which I have had ever since. This additional layer does enough force in an emergency.

I thought of that night long ago recently. I was at a school in New Mexico when the school went into lock down. In the computer lab we turned off the lights, closed the door and stood in the corner in the dark, hoping an armed intruder would not come in and kill all of us.

It turned out to be a test, so after a while, the all-clear announcement came and we went back to what we were doing.

That night, I woke in the wee hours remembering the incident years earlier and how helpless I felt to protect my loved ones

The truth is, to repel an armed attacker school personnel must be armed because the police will never arrive in time. Even though having a firearm in a school is out of favor, it is still the truth about how to protect schools.

It made news in Albuquerque when the school district would not allow armed police officers on any school campus. That is the fervor of the antifirearm lobby. Cooler heads finally prevailed, and the ban on armed police officers was canceled. But protecting schools with firearms is still out of favor regardless of the truth of it as the only real defense.

Åttackers know school personnel are not armed, which emboldens them. I am not saying that everyone at schools should be armed; rather, potential attackers must know that some people who are not easy to spot at every school are armed and will shoot back. It is important that a potential attacker not know who has this ability to shoot back.

Perhaps it might be a janitor and a couple of teachers who conceal carry Many school personnel have had military training. Further, there should be school programs where defenders are trained. Can we admit the truth even if it is out of favor?

During that trip, Damron told the Las Cruces Bulletin that New Mexicans are upset about corruption and the lack of ethics in state government.

Lt. Gov. Diane Denish, who is running for governor, has not been responsive to these concerns, he said. Besides filling in for the governor when he is out of state and presiding over the Senate, the lieutenant governor's job also is to be an ombudsman for citizens, he said. If elected, Damron promised he would take this role seriously and bring more transparency to state government.

Other area GOP candidates who filed for state office include Doña Ana County District Attorney Susanna Martinez for governor, state Sen. Dianna Duran of Tularosa for secretary of state and former Doña Ana County Treasurer Jim Schoonover for state treasurer.

Though Damron didn't state a preference for which Republican he would like to share the ticket with, he did say Martinez is a strong candidate who has a proven record in being tough on government corruption. He said he is optimistic about Republican opportunities for regaining state office in the upcoming election.

Damron said mismanagement and a lack of leadership has caused the state budget crisis. He said he brings three qualities that voters should look for in candidates: character, commitment and credibility.

Las Cruces State of the City Address – Tuesday, February 9, 2010 Mayor Ken Miyagishima: 'The state of the city is strong'

When I last spoke to you about the state of our city, the economic crisis that has gripped our nation was still building, and it was unclear what effect it would have on Las Cruces. In the midst of that great uncer-tainty, I pledged that we would monitor the situation carefully and that we would work diligently to maintain both our solvency and high level of service.

I am pleased to report to you today, one year later, that we have fulfilled that promise.

Despite the greatest economic recession to grip our country in almost 80 years, the city's budgetary reserves are over twice the level the state requires and our level of service in all areas remains high.

We owe a debt of gratitude to the fiscal discipline of this and previous councils and to our staff – especially Financial Services Director Mark Sutter and Budget Director Dick Gephardt - for their skill in helping us negotiate these difficult times. While it is unclear what will happen in the economy as a whole, we have been able to cope well up to this point. According to a report released in December 2009 by the Brookings Mountain West initiative, Las Cruces has been the best-performing small city over the last year in the entire inter-mountain region. Clearly, we have been fortunate in the makeup of our local economy, with a large number of employees in the government, education and agricultural work sectors, as well as the large number of retirees who have chosen our city as their home. This has provided great stability for the local economy and tax base and has protected us to a degree from the boom and bust cycle that has caused so much havoc in other Southwestern cities.

Economic downturns like the one we have been experienc-ing cause much hardship, but they also provide opportunities to think more carefully about the decisions that we make and bring to light important factors that may have been obscured in more fast-paced times. One thing is clear: We want to preserve and expand the parts of our economy that are most sustainable over the long term and that give us the stability to weather good times and bad. This means vigorous support of our governmental, educational and agricultural sectors and further development in these areas whenever possible.

Welcome partners

I'm pleased to report that we are in negotiations with the Department of Homeland Security to bring a $20 million campus facility to the West Mesa Industrial Park, which would include at least 130 well-paying jobs, in addition to employment generated by construction of the facility itself. A second Homeland Security project being considered would bring an addi-tional 175 jobs to the city with a payroll of more than $12 million. We are grateful to MVEDA, the Mesilla Valley Economic Devel-opment Alliance, for their pursuit of these important projects.

While the governmental sec-tor has been – and will continue to be – important to us, clearly we need to nurture broader economic opportunities for the people of our city and region.

We continue to believe that the new energy economy will provide opportunities for local residents, especially with the technical expertise and training capabilities of New Mexico State University and Doña Ana Community College, and the abundant sun, wind, biodiesel and geothermal capabilities that surround our city. We applaud Sapphire Energy in their decision to relocate to Las Cruces to bring state-of-theart technology in extracting fuel from algae. These industries will not only help cut our nation's dependence on foreign oil, they will become important parts of our own solid portfolio of strong local businesses, with jobs that can't easily be outsourced or sent overseas.

We will continue to work vig-orously to attract new business and jobs to our region. Clearly, our hope is that these will be quality firms eager to partner with us in building a good community, with opportunities for well-paying careers for local residents.

In the pursuit of these quality businesses, we have to under-stand what will make that job easier - a stable economic climate, a well-trained work force, necessary infrastructure, and a quality of life that will be attrac-tive to the managers, executives and workers who will make Las Cruces their home. All of this will contribute to the stable and sustainable economic base that has proven so important to us in the past two years.

I want to mention one other important area of endeavor for MVEDA and other economic development initiatives, and that is re-investment in our existing local economy, as we grow opportunities for the hundreds of local businesses already commit-ted to our community. We need a renewed effort to develop economic and small business opportunities in our Downtown, and I'm hopeful that our business community will partner with the city in developing a vibrant commercial zone in the Downtown area. Working together, we can rebuild a city center that is once again vital to our business and community life. Along these lines, I would like to mention two different projects that have emerged in recent weeks and the model they provide for the kind of partner-ships that will make our city stronger.

One is the El Paseo Corridor initiative, which has grown out of a federal grant secured by the hard work of Mayor Pro Tem Sharon Thomas and Sustainability Officer Tom Schuster. One of only four planning projects chosen in a nationwide competition, this initiative will involve a wide variety of federal agencies helping us to envision El Paseo Road as a beautiful and vibrant corridor connecting New Mexico State University and the new Convention Center with our Downtown.

One purpose of the grant is the development of a model for citizen and neighborhood involvement in planning the project, a model that will serve as a public participation tem-plate not just for our own community, but for communities across the nation. This revitalization, at the very heart of our traditional community center, represents a real commitment to the Las Cruces city core and our excitement about its future

Another recent project, this one in a brand new part of the city, involves the paving of Sonoma Ranch Boulevard North to the new elementary and middle schools on the East Mesa.

This project provided a real dilemma for the city, in that it was not part of our capital improvement plan and repre sented an allocation of scare city resources to this project.

At the same time, the school district has two schools under construction and scheduled to open this fall, with limited access for parents, students and teachers trying to reach them.

Obviously, one way to avoid these problems is for the school district to participate more actively in our city and county planning efforts, so that school siting becomes part of our overall shared vision for where new roads and growth should occur.

We urge our friends in the Las Cruces Public Schools to join us in this larger planning effort, supplementing efforts already under way to increase our joint utilization of public facilities. But right now, in 2010, the problem of getting Sonoma Ranch Boulevard North extended to the new schools is a pressing concern.

In this case, the developer who has land adjacent to the new school sites, and whose properties and eventual residents will benefit from the new road and infrastructure, stepped forward with a plan to raise money through privately secured bonds issued on behalf of a special assessment district, whereby the project can be financed by proceeds from future property taxes on the developer's own land. The city, by creation of this district, would be able to facili-tate the building of this road, but without apparent risk and without utilizing its own bonding capacity.

The schools would have their road and the city would be able to maintain its capital outlay plan in accordance with fiscal responsibility and its overall vision for future Las Cruces growth.

This is the plan under consideration, which still requires a full understanding on the part of the city in terms of contingent liabilities and any other unwanted consequences from this kind of district.

At the same time, these two projects, one in an older part of town and one in a newer part, represent not just our commitment to all of Las Cruces, old and new, but also indicate our interest in finding creative ways of addressing the challenges that face us – from raising the funds necessary for essential projects to planning boldly for the re-envisioning of our city core. We want to partner with our development and investment communities, with our local businesses, and with governmental and nonprofit agencies to make Las Cruces the best place possible to live.

These are good models for cooperation in any case, and in times of economic necessity are absolutely essential to moving forward toward the kind of future we want to have.

Strategic planning

Another major step forward for our city is underway right now, and involves a process by which we as a City Council lay out exactly what we hope to accomplish over the next two years.

years. With myself, a relatively new mayor, and so many new councilors, it became clear that we, as the citizens' elected representatives, needed to take responsibility for prioritizing the projects and initiatives that will make up our city agenda over the next two years.

Working closely with city staff, we have made good progress, and I'm happy to report that the process has been positive, with broad agreement among both council and staff over key areas of engagement for the city.

We intend to share this strategic leadership plan in detail once we have finalized our prioritization, and when staff has its budgetary analysis and work plans in place. In the meantime, I would like to mention a few of the new proposals under consideration at this time.

Some of the initiatives are new capital projects, such as the construction of a much-needed emergency-response facility (MVRDA), and the completion of site selection and design for new police and fire substations in the East Mesa. Given the economic situation and its effect on all levels of government, we will be as creative and responsible as possible in finding ways to get these important projects done. One such suggestion includes allowing the private sector to partner with the city to build many needed facilities without tax increases nor any bonding commitments.

Other goals reflect our interest in long-term planning, from passage of the Vision 2040 regional and comprehensive plan to a complete, updated inventory of city infrastructure needs, so that we know where we are and what needs to be done. There are a wide range of possible enhancements to our city code to support quality development, with incentives to benefit residents and builders alike.

An underlying theme in all these efforts is our desire to provide as much choice as possible for the people of our city and for those who provide for our needs.

One project we are certain to continue is the work of our new sustainability officer, whose attention to energy efficiency is expected to save the city tens of thousands of dollars a year.

Incidentally, I'm pleased to note that we now have, as of a few weeks ago – thanks to Patrick Peck and the South Central Solid Waste Facility – singlestream recycling, which allows residents to take a wide variety of unseparated materials, including plastics, to collection sites all over Las Cruces. This arrangement with an El Pasobased recycling firm represents the kind of public-private partnership that will be so important to the future of our city.

Thanks as well to our city and county staffs and to the many, many local residents who have continued to work hard to make local recycling a reality.

One other issue that has emerged from this goal-setting process is the need for a thorough and objective study of the present organizational structure of city staff.

This was suggested by the consultant and represents an understanding that our city has undergone extremely rapid growth in recent years and that perhaps our current organizational structure isn't as effective and efficient as it could be. We hope to address this issue in coming months as well.

One aspect of re-organization that we should support is the designation of a community relations position, who will be responsible for responding to citizen complaints and concerns and for developing an integrated response to recurrent problems.

So, I stand before you for the third time as your mayor, at the beginning of another year, to report that the state of the city is strong.

Looking ahead

Up to this point, we have weathered a difficult economic period admirably, and we will use the lessons learned from this downturn as we move into the future. I hope everyone can feel the excitement that attends our work in the city, and the individual strengths that our councillors, both new and continuing, bring to the council We all know the leadership and vision Mayor Pro Tem Thomas provides for our community and the high standards for achievement she's set for us all. We count on Councillor Dolores Connor's experience and concern for our city and appreciate the broad areas of agreement that we share. Councillor Nathan Small has provided important leadership in energy issues, among them the creation of the sustainability officer. Councillor Miguel Silva has been a strong advocate for our Downtown area and oversight of our city's police department.

Our newest councillors, Councillor Olga Pedroza and Councillor Gil Sorg, have already distinguished themselves by their fairness in deliberation and careful attention to their duties. Councillor Pedroza has taken leadership in community gardening projects in cooperation with the public schools, and Councillor Sorg in addressing the complex infrastructure needs that challenge so much of his district. Both have been strong advocates – as have all of our councillors – for the people who live in their districts.

These have been challenging, exciting times, and we are fortunate to be here today, working together to make Las Cruces a dynamic city.

Our thoughts and prayers are, as always, with our sons and daughters who are far away in service to our country. As well as the courageous men and women of the Las Cruces police and fire departments as they keep our city safe every day.

All of us, council and staff, ask for your patience and support as we work daily to make our city a good place to live, to work and to raise our families.

Roundhouse Round Up

Garcia seeks change to oil and gas funds

Senate Majority Whip Mary Jane Garcia, D-Doña Ana, is sponsoring Senate Bill 208 – Oil & Gas Tax Changes for Emergency Fund. The measure was heard Wednesday, Feb. 10, in the Senate Corporations and Transportation Committee.

SB208 proposes temporary changes to how oil and gas taxes are assessed in order to increase distributions to the Public School Fund, thereby preventing salary cuts for New Mexico's teachers. The bill does not change the total amount of taxes paid by the oil and gas industry.

The measure temporarily decreases, by 1 percent, tax rates under the Oil and Gas Severance Tax Act. In the recent past, it has been common practice to use Oil and Gas Severance Tax revenues for "pork" projects, according to Garcia. The bill temporarily increases, also by 1 percent, tax rates under the Oil and Gas Emergency School Tax Act, which will then be distributed to the Public School Fund and used to maintain teachers' salaries. The bill contains a sunset clause to ensure that this temporary measure will terminate in 2013.

"I want to do everything possible to avoid cutting our teachers' salaries or raising taxes on our citizens," Garcia said. "This bill provides an alternative. Unfortunately, in this budget crisis we have to make a public policy decision. What do we value more, construction projects or educators and by extension their households and communities? It comes down to this – buildings or people?"

Bill would raise pension contribution

A measure by Senate Minority Leader Stuart Ingle, R-Portales, would increase the amount public employees pay into their pensions by 2.64 percent. Senate Bill 246 would also have the state decrease its contributions by the same amount, saving the state $72 million.

The shift would be only for the 2011 fiscal year and would apply to the Educational Retirement Board and various plans in the Public Employees Retirement Association.

Under the measure, employees who earn $55,000 a year would pay $1,000 more into their PERA plan for the 2011 fiscal year.

Senate overrides SIC veto

Legislation seeks investment transparency

By STEVE TERRELL The New Mexican

The state Senate has voted overwhelmingly to override a veto by Gov. Bill Richardson of a bill passed last year.

The Senate voted 34-4 Tuesday, Feb. 9, to override Richardson's veto of Senate Bill 460 from last year's session. The bill, sponsored by Sen. Steve Neville, R-Farmington, would change the membership makeup of the scandal-plagued State Investment Council (SIC), giving the Legislature more influence and the governor less.

"The message is that we want some transparency (on the SIC)," Neville told reporters after the vote.

He said the state needs to instill more confidence in the SIC, which manages more than $12 billion of state money and has been at the center of a federal investigation in recent months.

Support for the override spanned the political spectrum. Voting in favor of the override were all Senate Republicans as well as a wide majority of Senate Democrats, including some of the most liberal and the most conservative.

But this override, as well as Monday's override of Richardson's veto of SB 531, a bill requiring agencies to provide a legislative committee with confidential material related to governmental programs, is expected to have a much harder time in the House. That chamber is controlled by Richardson's most faithful ally, House Speaker Ben Lujan, D-Nambé. In the past, House Democrats have been reluctant to buck the powerful speaker. Lujan said he didn't know whether the Lujan said he didn't know whether the House would vote on the override.

"We'll send it to committees, and we'll talk about it in (Democratic) caucus," he said.

Sen. John Arthur Smith, D-Deming, who voted for both veto overrides this week, said he thinks the Senate actions might put pressure on House members. Richardson spokesman Gilbert Gallegos issued a statement after the vote: "The governor has worked in good faith with the Senate. If some senators want to play political games, that's their prerogative. Hopefully, the House will see through the political gamesmanship and continue to focus, like the governor, on a solution to the budget deficit and a sensible restructuring of the State Investment Council." of the State Investment Council." Although he vetoed SB 460 by not signing it, Richardson has since agreed to consider signing such a bill and sent a message to allow it to be considered during a 30-day "budget session."

Neville and Sens. Tim Keller and Cisco McSorley, both Democrats from Albuquerque, introduced similar bills this session, all of which have been combined onto a committee substitute, SB 18. The Senate Finance Committee on Tuesday gave a do-pass recommendation to SB 18, which next goes to the Senate floor. But Neville said there's no guarantee

But Neville said there's no guarantee that the new bill will make it through the House. Plus, he said, it's not certain that Richardson would sign the new bill.

Neville and Keller agree that the new bill is stronger than SB 460. Keller said overriding the veto of last year's bill was the Senate's "back-up plan" to help assure some reform of the SIC passed this year. Earlier this year, a team of Chicago

Earlier this year, a team of Chicago consultants hired by the state to look at the state's handling of investments, recommended that the SIC needs to decrease the influence of the Governor's Office.

Federal investigators are looking at the role of third-party marketers in public investments. Santa Fe broker Marc Correra shared in nearly $22 million in fees for helping companies win investments with the SIC and a state educational pension fund, according to state records. Both the measure Richardson vetoed

Both the measure Richardson vetoed and the new bill give the governor fewer appointments to the SIC and give more appointments to the Legislature.

Crime Stoppers: Bowling alley murders

Detectives are continuing to investigate the February 1990 shootings at a Las Cruces bowling alley that claimed four lives and left three others injured.

Shortly after 8 a.m. on Saturday, Feb. 10, 1990, police were dispatched to what was then known as Las Cruces Bowl, 1201 E. Amador Ave., when 12-yearold Melissia Repass called 911 to report that she and six other people had just been shot execution-style.

Inside the bowling alley, officers found three victims already dead: 26-year-old Steven Teran,

6-year-old his daughter Paula Holguin and 13-year-old Amv Houser. Police found Teran's 2-yeardaughter, old Valerie Teran, clinging to life. Valerie was rushed to a local hospital but died a short time after arrival. Wounded during the shooting were Repass, her mother Stephanie Senac, 34, and 33-year-old Ida Holguin (no relation to Paula). They were transported to area hospitals and survived the shooting.

Teran was employed at the bowling alley and, at around 8 a.m. that day, arrived for work along with his two young daughters who were scheduled to stay at the day care facility located inside the bowling alley. The teenage girls, Repass and Houser, were scheduled to supervise children in the day care that day while Senac worked at the bowling alley, which was owned by her father. Ida Holguin was employed there as a cook.

Detectives believe that when Teran walked into the building, he was immediately confronted by one of the suspects who took him and his daughters to the bowling alley's office where the other four victims were being held.

After the bowling alley's safe was opened and an estimated $5,000 in cash was removed, the two suspects shot all seven victims and intentionally set fire to the office in what was believed to be an attempt to destroy evidence. After the suspects fled, Repass was able to call 911.

Within about a minute, Las Cruces police officers arrived and found all seven victims in the bowling alley's office. "We still think there is someone who has some additional clue, some bit of information that could help us solve this case," said Las Cruces Police Detective Mark Myers, the lead investigator on the case. "Someone out there knows of a family member or a friend or an acquaintance or someone who may have started acting differently after this crime was com-mitted. Maybe they know of someone who left town or suddenly had an unexplained amount of money, in the days or weeks following this crime. "Whatever that clue is, no matter how insignificant that bit of information may appear to be, we would like to hear about it," Myers said. "That one bit of information may be described the two suspects as possibly being black, though further interviews lead investigators to believe they are Hispanic with dark complexions. Both suspects were said to speak clear English.

In 1990, the older suspect was said to be in his late 30s or early 40s, 5 feet 5 inches tall with a medium build and weighing between 160 and 180 pounds. The younger suspect was believed to be in his late 20s, between 5 feet 6 and 5 feet 8 inches tall with a medium build and w e i g h i n g around 190 pounds. Today, the older suspect would be in his late 50s or early 60s. The younger suspect would be in his late 40s or in his early 50s.

The Las Cruces Police Department urges anyone with information that may help solve this crime to call detectives at 528-4222. Anyone who wants to provide information, but wishes to remain anonymous, can call Las Cruces Crime Stoppers at 526-8000 or from outside the Las Cruces area at 800-897-2746.

A documentary about the crime, called "Nightmare in Las Cruces," is currently showing at the Cineport 10 in the Mesilla Valley Mall.

Winning is par for the course

I found Scott Lieberwirth on the golf course Monday, coaching the Aggie men's team. Allegedly.

'I've just about got them screwed up," he said. "Give me a little more time, and I'll have them completely ruined.'

He was joking, of course. Under Lieberwirth's command, New Mexico State won the Sun Belt Conference championship in 2004, the Western Athletic Conference in 2006, '08 and '09 and Scott was voted Coach of the Year each time. He likes his team this spring. It's young but talented.

"And our roster is thin," he said. "We only have nine guys on the team.

In last Saturday's Collegiate Cup, played on the Sierra Del Rio course in Truth or Consequences, N.M., four Aggie freshmen shot good scores.

Will Holdridge, one of them, tied senior Ryan Word for the championship, both firing 3-under-par 141. Justin Shin tied for third at 2-under-par 142, and Derek Baade and Justin Knauber had 8-over-par 152s.

Sophomore Gaston De La Torre had a bad first round, shooting 2-over-par 74, but came back to fire a 2-under on the back nine to tie for eighth at 144.

Ross Prachar tied for 15th with a 4-over 148.

Tim Madigan, NMSU's No. 1 player, sat out with a bad back. He will return when New Mexico State opens the regular season March 5-6, at the Border Olympics in Laredo, Texas.

Lieberwirth predicts a good spring for his team.

"The older guys like Madigan don't listen to me," Scott said. "They tune me out so I know they'll play well.

"The younger guys listen to everything I say. That worries me."

Lieberwirth will build his squad on Madigan, Shin, Word and De La Torre

"It's important that we get a good start this season," Lieberwirth said. "Get some momentum.

"I'll say one thing about this team. It's the hardest working bunch of guys I've coached here. They're out there every day practicing." On paper, he said, Nevada and Fresno State are the teams to beat in the WAC this season.

"They have more guys returning," he said. "Veteran squads, but that's only on paper. I kind of think as the spring goes along, we'll be in there somewhere.

The Aggies usually are.

Wherever he's needed

Aggies' Mike Sodders is versatile infielder

By JOHN KEITH

When the Aggies open the 2010 baseball season Saturday, Feb. 20, against Washington in the Tucson, Ariz., Tournament, Mike Sodders will probably play second base. Or third. Or first.

"Wherever we need him," said coach Rocky Ward.

"He's got a 90-mph arm and he can field. "He is a plus-plus hitter, too."

Last year, Sodders, a transfer from North-eastern, Okla., A&M, hit .422, including 13 home runs, 68 RBI and had a slugging average of .754.

His statistics did not go unnoticed. Sod-ders was picked on the pre-season Louisville Slugger all-America team by Collegiate Baseball. He made Ping Baseball's second All-America team.

There's more to come, probably.

One wonders what he might have done playing on two good legs last season. Shortly before New Mexico State opened its WAC schedule, Sodders injured his left knee. "I had a torn TCL," he said. "I wore a brace on it – very uncomfortable. It's completely healed now. I'm 100 percent well." The lanky, 6-foot-2 senior bats with power, according to Ward.

"He hits majestic, high fly balls," the Aggie coach said. "Sometimes you think they're going to be caught, but they sail out of the park instead.

"I think his knee inhibited his power. It cut down on his swing. It'll be interesting to see what he does this season with two good legs." Sodders feasts on fastballs.

They're my favorite pitch to hit," he said. "Hard and fast. Right down the middle.

"I have a harder time hitting those soft, junk pitches. Off-speed stuff. They give me fits.

Sodders, a polite, "yes, sir," and "no, sir" guy, is well liked by his teammates. "He's the nicest kid you'll ever meet," Ward said. "He probably would rather I didn't mention it, but we call him Mikey. He's almost too nice."

Mando Marshall is among the young players whose improved play has helped the Las Cruces Bulldawgs.

Sodders grew up in a baseball family. "I guess you'd have to say I have baseball blood," he said. His dad, Mike Sodders Sr., was an all-American at Arizona State University in the early 1980s. He's enshrined in the school's Hall of Fame and played for three major league teams before an injury forced him out of the game. Of course the older Sodders helped coach his son. "He worked with me a lot,"

Sodders said.

"He was hard on me, but for a good reason. He used to tell me, 'son, remember to go all out and give 100 percent. Then when your career is over, you won't tell yourself you could have worked harder.""

The Aggies finished 44-17 last year and reached the finals of the Western Athletic Conference championship where they lost to Fresno State. It was the best record in school history.

Sodders believes this year's team might be better.

In pre-season polls, Fresno State picked to win the WAC with was Mexico State finishing a close New second.

"We have good pitching," Sod-ders said. "A good bullpen. "Some real good hitters.

'I'm excited. NMSU will play the Alumni at Presley Askew Field at 2 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 13, before traveling to the Tucson, Ariz., Tournament where they'll open against Washington Feb. 19, play Gonzaga and Missouri Feb. 20 and Washington again on Feb. 21.

Young Bulldawgs on late surge LCHS to face powerful Trojans Friday

By CRAIG MASSEY

Don't look now, but here come the Las Cruces High School Bulldawgs

The LCHS boys basketball team, which might have the youngest starting lineup in the state, carries a three-game winning streak into its game at district-leading Mayfield at 7 p.m. Friday, Feb. 12. In a district race that usually is very competitive, the young Bulldawgs have made it even more interesting with their late surge. Coach William Benjamin's team, now 9-15 overall and 3-3 in District 3-5A, has a starting lineup that consists of three freshmen, a sophomore and a senior. The sophomore, Mando Marshall, and one of the freshmen, Trevor Noel, each scored 19 points Tuesday night in Las Cruces' 58-48 win over Oñate. Benjamin also credited the play of freshman point guard Joseph Garza with his defense on Oñate guard Tim Jacobs.

"Our bigs played big," Benjamin said of Marshall and Noel, each of whom are close to 6-5. "And we did a good job on Tim

Las Cruces started the season with senior-dominated starting lineup that lacked varsity experience. As the season has progressed, the freshmen began to get more playing time. Benjamin said the transition has worked because of the unselfishness of the older players, and stressed that the seniors still have valuable roles. "We're playing our best players," he said. "They just happen to be young. It's really a credit to our seniors that they have accepted their roles."

While the future is bright at Las Cruces High, the future is now at Mayfield. The Trojans are 5-0 in district and 18-4 overall heading into Friday night's clash with the Bulldawgs. Mayfield notched a huge win Tuesday night, rallying to beat Gadsden in a road game, 60-49.

"It was a great win for us," said Mayfield coach Tommy Morrow. "We were down 21-8 in a packed house that was very rowdy, and we had to fight back. Our guys See Bulldawgs on PAGE A18

did a tremendous job

The Trojans are led by senior posts Jeremiah Willis (6-5) and Josh Trujillo (6-8). The duo had 18 and 15 points, respectively, Tuesday night at Gadsden. Benjamin calls Mayfield one of the top five teams in the state. "They have the two big kids and a point guard that doesn't turn the ball over,' Benjamin said. "We played great the last time we played them. As long as we compete, anything can happen."

They played us tough last time," Morrow said of the Bulldawgs. "They were ahead most of the first half. They're a very talented team.

With the loss to LCHS on Tuesday, Oñate fell to 11-12 overall and 2-4 in the district race. With three straight losses, first-year head coach Saul Perez said his Knights are facing more of a mental battle right now.

"Our biggest challenge is to keep being positive and keep believing," he said. "We had two close losses last week to Gadsden and Mayfield. We played well, but came up short. That was hard to swallow."

The teams in the district are fairly even, and that gives hope to Perez and the other coaches who are trailing Mayfield heading into the final weeks of the season.

'On any given night, any of these teams can beat the other one," said Perez. There's not one super team. Mayfield is very good, but they're not dominant." The Trojans are finding ways to win the close games and that has set them apart.

"Some might think it's easy, but it's never easy in this district," said Morrow, after the exhausting come-from-behind win over Gadsden. "Every game is a new puzzle you have to figure out.

WAC honors Jahmar Young Junior selected as Player of the Week

State to a 94-82 win over

San Jose State Feb. 6. He scored a team-high 25 points on 8-of-13 shooting from the field, including a 4-of-6 mark from 3-point range. Young also connected on 5-of-5 shots from the free throw line. Additionally, he dished out five assists, pulled down three rebounds and recorded a blocked shot. "I'm very happy for Jahmar," head coach Marvin Menzies said. "He has been a steady force for us all season long, and it's nice when a player gets acknowledged for his accomplishments.

Coach and players look for better life

By Aleksa Costa

It's not a surprise that the Aggies' tennis team is built with a wide array of international players. This spring season, the team has three new Latin components, all from the same background, here for the same purpose: a better future and a chance to grow.

Ginet Pinero, Luis Fernando Ramirez and Orlando Superlano, all from Caracas, Venezuela, have come to Las Cruces on full tennis scholarships. They have taken this opportunity to leave Venezuela as the country experiences a long period of instability

"Venezuela is a disaster right now," Ramirez said. "The government is destroying our country, it's not a safe place to be." Political reform in Venezuela began in 1998, when President Hugo Chavez, a leftwing populist, led Venezuela into what he calls "21st century socialism." He con-solidated state control over the economy and nationalized telephone and electricity companies. The media has also experienced strict censorship and, overall, the oil-driven economy has suffered tremendously with increasing violent crime in cities, inflation and economic unrest. Carlos Vargas, the men's tennis coach, also from Venezuela, said very few people there have benefited from the political changes in the country.

Sometimes, electricity goes off for days, food can be scarce, public transportation goes on strike and everyone suffers," he said.

Violent crime has also intensified over the past decade and kidnapping rates in Venezuela have soared past those of Colombia and Mexico.

Las Cruces is now the new home for the Venezuelan family of tennis talents. All three have known each other for many years and appreciate the importance of having close friends in town.

"It's really cool to have people from your own country here," Pinero said. "I feel really good here because I feel the team is my family."

None of them can foresee if there is a possibility they will ever return to their country.

"I don't know if I want to go back when I graduate," Superlano, said. "It all depends on the situation and if things are still ugly, I would rather stay here."

Vargas, who, until very recently, had not returned to Venezuela for 14 years, said he Coach Carlos Vargas, Ginet Pinero, Orlando Superlano and Luis Fernando Ramirez are hoping to make a difference in the New Mexico State University tennis program.

does not think he will ever go back even though his family is still there. "It just wouldn't make any sense," he said

But here things are different and tennis season is on. All of them are ready to achieve great results on the court. Vargas, who personally recruited Superlano and Ramirez, said this spring the men's team's atmosphere is filled with excitement and intensity he has never seen before.

"There is a sense of pride and more team bonding. Maybe it has to do with the new blood on the team," Vargas said.

The new blood might even help bring a never before conquered Western Athletic Conference title this April at Fresno State. Last year, the men's team lost in the semifinals to Boise State.

"We are better this year," Vargas said. "I see us doing good things this season.

After being washed out Saturday, Feb. 6, the New Mexico State men's tennis match against Southern Miss the next day ended in a 6-1 triumph for the Aggies.

In doubles play, New Mexico State battled in all three spots. The Aggies dropped the first match, 8-3, but seniors Eduardo Salas and Gustave Diep came back at No. 2 with an 8-5 victory. The Aggies clinched the doubles point in the third position as Arthur Surreaux and Matej Stakne picked up a 8-6 victory over Southern Miss.

With the doubles point secure, the Aggies continued to dominate in the singles match ups. Leading off, Surreaux topped Patricio Alvarado, 6-3, 6-4 and New Mexico State continued to prevail in the next five positions.

NMSU faced two tie-breaking sets against the Golden Eagles. Stakne took his match to a tie breaker at position four before beating Jan Burmeister 6-1, 3-6 (10-1). At No. 6, Ramirez took his match to a tie breaker as well before falling 6-4, 6-7 (10-6).

The Aggies head to Tucson, Ariz., to face Arizona and Cal Poly, Friday and Saturday, Feb. 12 and 13.

ANDREA HANSON.

NMSU equestrian coach

The New Mexico State equestri-an team will open its spring season Saturday, Feb. 13, in Bishop, Ga., as they take on the No. 1 ranked Georgia Bulldogs at noon at the Georgia Equestrian Complex. The Aggies are 4-2 on the year, while the Bulldogs are 6-1 on the season.

Coach Andrea Hanson said that the Aggies have a tough schedule during the month of February starting with the Bulldogs.

"We are really excited about competing this weekend and excited about this semester in general," Hanson said. "We have a really tough line up coming up in the month of February. We start with No. 1 ranked Georgia, followed by No. 2 ranked Auburn, Fresno State at home and then No. 3 ranked Texas A&M.

"I know our studentathletes are excited for the challenge. I feel very confident in the way we have been riding."

The Aggies faced Georgia last season in Fresno, Calif. New Mexico State fell to the Bulldogs in a close contest, 9-7. The Western team tied the Bulldogs, but lost the tiebreaker as the Hunter

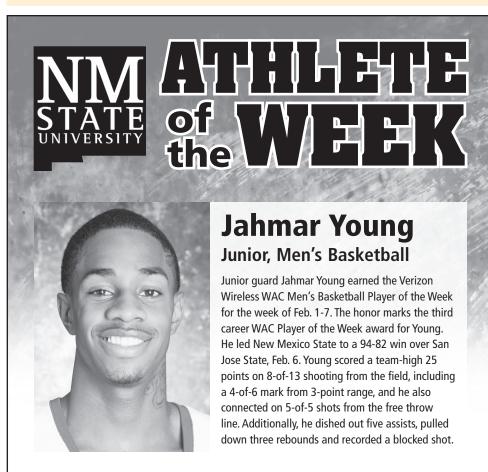

Seat team fell 6-2 to Georgia. "I think our team is very competitive and we have the potential to take these three ranked teams in both the Western and the Hunter Seat disciplines," Hanson said. "Our student-athletes know the history of these teams and their rankings, but they also know that they can compete with these teams."

On the Hunter Seat side, the Aggies will travel Marisa Bernal, Amy Lang, Laura Bostwick, Brianna Raab, Chelsae Keyes, Jennifer Friend, Samantha Stephens and Krystal Doganay.

Representing the Western team will be Rachael Krause, Codi Binkerd, Breanne Bertrand, Kyra Cruse, Rebecca McReynolds, Pam Evans and Megan Gould. Friend will also compete for the Western team as well as the Hunter Seat team. The last time the

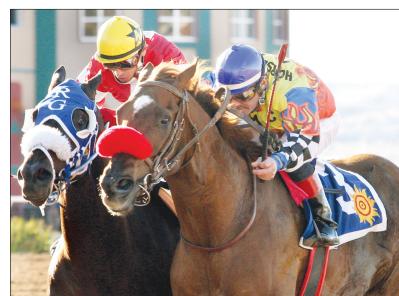

Aggie equestrian team was in action was in November 2009. The Aggies defeated Baylor, 10-5, for their fourth straight team victory. New Mexico State then wrapped up its fall season against South Carolina. The Lady Gamecocks edged out the Aggies, 8-7.

Famous Japanese Pro shares wisdom Addressing golf's most pressing problems

During the last week of January, I made my annual pilgrimage to Orlando, Fla., where I attended the PGA Merchandise Show for the 12th consecutive year.

While there, I did manage to catch up with our esteemed Famous Japanese Pro, who was here looking over the David Ledbetter Golf Academy, at Orlando's Champions Gate Golf Club, where so many Asian girls are being taught the LPGA game. He agreed to sit down with me for an hour in the media room of the Orange County Convention Center.

Golf Doc: In the middle of the night on Nov. 27, 2009 our world of golf icons was changed forever. Tiger Woods, arguably the greatest golfer of all time, crashed his SUV into a tree and a hydrant outside his Windermere mansion

Within hours allegations surfaced about multiple affairs with women in various parts of the country. Countless tabloid articles and pictures dragged Woods from his perch as the world's most famous sports figure. He became the butt of tasteless jokes heard and watched by millions on late-night TV shows. The count of women Tiger has reportedly had rela-tionships with is now in the dozens. He is believed to be sequestered in a remote and secluded sex-addiction treatment center. Not long after the news broke, he announced his "indefinite" hiatus from the PGA Tour, prompting genuine angst among tour officials and players.

Sir, you have been an observer of golf behavior for a long time; what do you make of all this? FJP: So sad.

Golf Doc: Speculations are running rampant as to when Tiger Woods will return to the professional golf tour. Three of the majors this year, Augusta, Pebble and St. Andrews, it seems, were tailor made for Tiger to launch an all-out offensive on Jack Nicklaus' record of 18 majors.

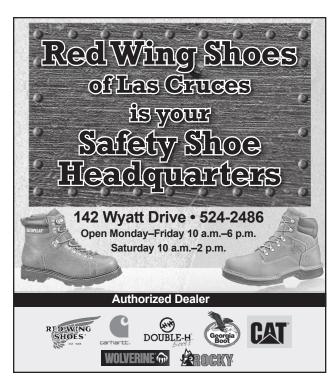

There has even been talk of revamping Scioto Country Club in Columbus, Ohio, where Jack learned the game, to host a major tournament where Tiger could conceivably win his 19th major. Now no one knows when Tiger will return to golf seriously, and most of all, if he will return with the kind of game that we've all been used to seeing and admiring.

Do you think Tiger will return to form?

FJP: Wounded, caged Tiger most dangerous.

Golf Doc: If anyone's been reading anything about golf they know that the rules regarding grooves on irons basically 7 iron and higher – have been changed to elimi-nate "square" grooves. Unlike "V" shaped grooves, the square grooves tend to grab the ball and create incredible spin, especially with wedges, even out of the rough. The late Karsten Solheim, founder of Ping golf, introduced square grooves on his Ping irons back in 1982, whereupon the USGA and the tour banned them. Solheim sued golf and won, in 1990.

But, with the now-commonplace "bomb-and-gouge" game so prevalent on the men's tours, certain golf "experts" - read golf zealots - pontificated that the grooves were damaging the game.

I don't know about you, but I can't back up a ball from 80 yards out of heavy rough with a sand wedge. Golf analyst Peter Kostis commented recently that, even though the plan was to level the distance discrepancy on tour by provoking players to use softer, spinnier balls that they could keep in the fairways, the new groove rule would have just the opposite effect.

Any thoughts on the great groove debate? FJP: It's the ball, stupid.

Golf Doc: Oh. Well, one player clearly thinks the grooves mean everything. Phil Mickelson went back to some ancient Ping-Eye 2 wedges, that were "grandfathered" in under the new groove rules, because they were manufactured prior to the date the new rules stipulated. Duh. Why didn't the USGA and the tour ban all clubs with non-conforming grooves, regardless of dates and names?

The tour already has rules about lots of things that fly in the face of the more liberal USGA policies, like the tour requirement of playing the exact same type of ball for the entire round and only coins to mark the ball on the green. So, what kept them from anticipating, and ruling on, the obvious issue with the grooves? Who knows.

Still, there's Mickelson, out there playing with non-conforming, but technically legal, clubs and incurring the ire of not only his playing peers, but the golfing public. When I see Phil using the illegal grooves on a technically legal clubhead I think of what the New York Attorney General recently said about the Bank of America top executives and how their behavior was "motivated by self-interest, greed, hubris and a palpable sense that the normal rules of fair play don't apply to them."

Your thoughts? FJP: Mr: Nice Guy image damaged.

Golf Doc: Tour veteran Scott McCarron recently came out publicly and criticized Mickelson for bending the rules, even using the word "cheating." Most folks I talk to view Mickelson as suspect. It's one thing to stretch the rules of IRS tax deductions, but another thing completely to bend the rules of golf, especially when serving as a role model atop the highest levels of the game.

FJP: You mean McCarron of ridiculously long putter?

Golf Doc: During our interview, you hinted that you're working on a book – a long-awaited book, I might add. Word is it's about mental focus, or putting or even some aspect of martial arts applied to golf. You're heritage is closely connected to the

DR. CHARLIE BLANCHARD

Samurai.

What's the book about - can you give my readers anything to wet their appetites? FJP: Avoiding trouble.

Golf Doc: I see. As you know, the LPGA has been plagued by a downturn in its fortunes even before the economy went into the can. Tournament sponsorships have dried up, American TV viewers aren't flocking in droves to watch Koreans dominate and there has been considerable dissension among players. Recently, the LPGA chose a new commissioner, Michael Whan, a veteran of private business and consumer products. How do you think the LPGA will fare in the near future

FJP: Better than WNBA.

Golf Doc: It has been reported that the Golf Channel has let go "Golf Central" anchor Inga Hammond, "Big Break" host Vince Cellini and longtime reporter Adam Barr. One would speculate more shakeups in golf oncamera announcing are imminent for other networks that cover golf. FJP: Golf tough game.

Golf Doc: Now to your country. Automaker Toyota announced a recall of some 8 million cars and trucks because of faulty, sticky gas pedals and brake problems. And there is controversy since Toyota is telling lawmakers one thing and telling the public another thing. Having just traveled here from your native Japan, I would hope you could shed some light on the Toyota troubles. FJP: So sad.

Walker's recruiting is a road map to success Class in upper tier of WAC

The smoke has cleared around the corral after the National Letter of Intent hootenanny, now it's time to take a look at the next step that football coach DeWayne Walker is taking in building a solid program.

At the fans party in the Ful-ton Center, Walker outlined his blueprint as it relates to his ideal squad makeup. He showed fans a chart with the number of players needed at each position. This is a professional approach to building a team. Walker and his staff have NFL experience and are on the same page in terms of talent acquisition. His having a quota for the quarterbacks, ends and linebackers is a surefire way to build the one thing that has been absent for a long time from the football locker room - depth.

Walker also is leaning heavily on freshmen to become the building blocks for a brighter tomorrow. The coach said he wants the middle of his defense to be tough. If opponents have trouble going right at you, it takes a lot of plays out of the playbook. Walker signed Tommy Stuart and Bryan Mahoney to fill in the defensive line. NM State went through defensive tackles rapidly at the end of the year so Stuart and Mahoney will be welcome faces.

Middle linebacker Frank Padilla will have to fill in the hole left by Ross Connor's departure. Padilla started at Fresno State, and Walker liked the idea of picking up a regular who could come in with experience with the WAC. The final piece of the puzzle in strengthening up the middle is safety Shamar Gaines, a New Jersey native also coming in from College of the Sequoias.

Several BCS schools were watching all of these players, but fate seemed to be with the Aggies. Some of the big schools had coaching changes, were poor hosts or just weren't the right fit in some cases.

The sales job that the NM State coaches did brought in the fourth-best recruiting class in the WAC. The proof has to be shown on the field, but the pedigrees of these recruits indicate that they will be the best ever for NM State. Whether this class is the one that puts the Aggies in a bowl game with a winning record or it comes with the next class, it is clear from the man-ner that talent is evaluated and recruited, it is a question of when not if.

The entire coaching staff has a vote on the recruits after a roundtable discussion on viewing the highlights and the onsite evaluation. It makes old Pete real happy inside to know that the football program is in the hands of men who know the road map to success.

Ag all-decade team

Some great players have suited up for the Aggies in the past 10 years

The first decade of the century is history so let's pick the all-decade team for NM State men's basketball. The 10 years saw the transition from the Sun Belt to the WAC and a trio of coaches pilot the Aggies' fortunes

Two players from the first couple of years are natural choices. Eric Channing, the leading scorer in Aggie history, and James Moore. Channing was plucked from Wheaton, Ill., by head coach Lou Henson in 1999. The 3-point line was a favorite locale for Channing, who wound up with the best 3-point percentage for a career and the most 3-pointers made. He also hit buzzer shots in key Sun Belt games at Denver and in the Pan Am.

On talent alone, Moore could be on the school's all-time team. "J-Mo" was a marvelous athlete who could glide to the hoop for a thrilling slam dunk and hit the 15-footer on a regular basis. He also broke Slab Jones' record for shots blocked during a career with the fourth-best career field-goal percentage and ranking fifth for career scoring. After that, the choices are a little tougher.

At point guard you have Elijah Ingram, Fred Peete and Mike Mitchell. Mitchell is not as heralded as the first two, but played hard and had excellent seasons on teams that were the weakest of the decade. Ingram had flourishes but couldn't stay healthy for long stretches of time. Peete had a bad back, but it didn't keep him from playing every night. He was a combo guard that had his most productive year at NM State at the point as a senior, so my choice, Peete. The center position had Chris Jackson as the best pivot from the early part of the decade, Hatila Passos from the latter. Both came in from junior colleges. Jackson was a raw talent that could dominate on the boards, and Passos holds the seasonal record for field goal percent-age. Passos had the two best years making 64 percent of his shots his senior year. Passos made more of his ability and working a little harder to improve his skills during his two years, so he goes on my all-decade team.

At power forward, the choic-es would be Justin Hawkins or Tyrone Nelson. Nelson was one of the greatest basketball talents to wear Crimson and White, but his legacy is damaged. Hawkins was a first team all-conference choice and MVP of the conference tournament in 2007.

I also think a case could be made that this year's team is the best team of the decade. The starting lineup scoring power from Jonathan Gibson, Jahmar Young, tough rebound-ers in Hamidu Rahman and Wendell McKines, a dead-eye passer in Hernst Laroche and bench help from Gordo Castillo and Troy Gillenwater. It's all food for thought as we head to the next decade.

One extraordinary man is a lesson to others God chooses to use individuals in unique ways

Last time you talked about why some kids with every advantage and opportunity seem to turn out bad, while others raised in terrible homes become pillars in the community. You cited the life of David Hernandez as an example of the latter. What happened to him?

Given this beginning, how can we explain the man that David Hernandez became? He graduated near the top of his class in high school and was granted a scholarship to college. Again, he earned high marks and four years later entered Loma Linda University School of Medicine. Once more, he scored in the top 10 percent of his class and continued in a residency in obstetrics and gynecology. Eventually, he served as a professor of OB-GYN at both Loma Linda University and the University of Southern California medical schools. Then, at the peak of his career, his life began to unravel.

I'll never forget the day he called me on the telephone. He had just been released from the hospital following a battery of laboratory tests. The diagnosis? Sclerosing cholangitis, a liver disorder that was invariably fatal at that time. We lost this fine husband, father and friend six years later at the age of 43. I loved him like a brother, and I still miss him today.

Again, I ask, how could such discipline and genius come from these infertile circumstances? Who would have thought that this deprived Mexican boy sitting out there in the dirt would someday become one of the most loved and respected surgeons of his era? Where did the motivation originate? From what bubbling spring did his ambition and thirst for knowledge flow? He had no books, took no educational trips, knew no scholars. Yet he reached for the sky. Why did it happen to Hernandez and not the youngster with every advantage and opportunity?

Why have so many children of prominent and loving parents grown up in ideal circumstances only to reject it all for the streets of Atlanta, San Francisco or New York?

Good answers are simply not available. It apparently comes down to this: God chooses to use individuals in unique ways. Beyond that mysterious relationship, we must simply conclude that some kids seem born to make it and others are determined to fail. Someone reminded me recently that the same boiling water that softens the carrot also hardens the egg. Likewise, some individuals react positively to certain circumstances and others negatively. We don't know why. Two things are clear to me from this understanding.

Two things are clear to me from this understanding. First, parents have been far too quick to take the credit or blame for the way their children turn out. Those with bright young superstars stick out their chests and say,

"Look what we accomplished." Those with twisted and irresponsible kids wonder, "Where did we go wrong?" Well, neither is entirely accurate. No one would deny that parents play an important role in the development and training of their children. But they are only part of the formula from which a young adult is assembled.

Second, behavioral scientists have been far too simplistic in their explanation of human behavior. We are more than the aggregate of our experiences. We are more than the quality of our nutrition. We are more than our genetic heritage. We are more than our biochemistry. And certainly, we are more than our parents' influence. God has created us as unique individuals, capable of independent and rational thought that is not attributable to any source. That is what makes the task of parenting so challenging and rewarding. Just when you think you have your kids figured out, you had better brace yourself. Something new is coming your way.

Free Valentine's Day weddings

Unity Church offers a spiritual ceremony to community members

BY BETH SITZLER The Las Cruces Bulletin

With Valentine's Day just around the corner, one local church is preparing to celebrate the love holiday by holding free weddings for community members.

Weddings for community members. Unity Church of Mesilla Valley, 125 Wyatt Drive, will hold the free Valentine's Day weddings starting at noon Sunday, Feb. 14.

"We just think it's a nice community service to do," said Rev. Terry Lund, who officiates the ceremonies along with her husband Jerry. "It's our way of giving L back to the community."

Terry Lund said they got the idea for the free weddings from a fellow classmate.

"I thought it was a good idea," she said. Beginning in 2007, the church has married an average of six couples each year. The Lunds said they have performed some memorable weddings. Last year, they united a Marine in full dress uniform with his sweetheart.

"It was a beautiful wedding," Terry Lund said.

Terry Lund said there are several reasons for a couple to participate in the free weddings, including a spur of the moment decision and wanting to avoid the stress of planning a large wedding. "Some don't have a regular church

"Some don't have a regular church they go to, but the don't want to go to the Justice of the Peace," Jerry Lund said. "They want a spiritual ceremony without restrictions."

"I try to keep it as non-denominational as possible," Terry Lund said. "I try to make it spiritual, not religious."

Terry Lund said she enjoys performing weddings and everything that comes with it.

Successful parenting The key is laying a basic foundation

BY CYNTHIA BOSTICK

Are you ready to be a parent? If you are, you should be able to answer "yes" to the following questions. Are you in a stable, healthy, long-term relationship? Are you financially and emotionally stable? Have you and your partner agreed on having children and discussed parenting? Are you prepared to make a child a priority in your life? Are you prepared for a rollercoaster life that includes lack of sleep, unpredictable detours, listening with rapture to stories of how a butterfly flits from flower to flower or singing with enthusiasm the 100th round of "Apples and Oranges"? This is only the first few years.

Future years will bring new challenges and new learning. But the road will be easier if you use basic foundational skills for success.

When parents see me about their child, the discussion usually is focused on the child's behaviors and misdeeds. After the parents vent, I tell them they must first look at their own behavior, attitude, rolemodeling, manner of talking and ability to listen and compromise before blaming their child. Children often reflect what they see, hear and learn from their parents. So if you don't like what your child is doing, inventory your own behavior.

Child discipline is important and must begin early. Many parents are unwilling to discipline. Even though disciplining requires commitment, consistency, patience and willingness to see your children's weaknesses, it's one of the most loving gifts you will give your child because it develops self-esteem, self-control, respect and responsibility.

What is discipline? Discipline involves loving your child and teaching him or her to cope with life in a realistic and successful manner. It begins with bonding from the time you know you are pregnant. Talk to your child, prepare a routine and let your child know how much he or she is loved and wanted. Without proper bonding, you cannot discipline.

NM secretary of health to provide statewide update Health care a hot topic at luncheon

Health & Well Being

By NATISHA HALES The Las Cruces Bulletin

The Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce is looking to provide its membership with a valuable update on health care during its first Medical Update Luncheon from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 25, at the Rama-da Palms de Las Cruces, 201 E. University Ave.

"Health care is such a pressing issue in the state and nation right now," said chamber spokes-man Joel Courtney. The luncheon will feature a panel of speakers headed by

New Mexico Secretary of Health Dr. Alfredo Vigil. Other speakers include Mesilla Valley Hospice Executive Director Donna V Brown, Memorial Medical CEO Paul Herzog and MountainView Regional Medical Center CEO Denten Park.

Administrators will update the audience on how the changes in national health care reform and the state budget are going to affect them, as well as other pressing issues that are affecting their respective facilities and why health care is important to the local economy.

"I don't think a lot of people understand how important an economic driver health care is to Las Cruces," Courtney said.

Vigil, appointed to his position by Gov. Bill Richardson in 2007, will address key health issues affecting New Mexico as well as some of the looming issues of health care reform and its impact on the state. As the largest state agency, the New Mexico Department of Health works with New Mexicans to prevent disease, prepare for health emergencies, promote sound health policy, protect vulner-able New Mexicans and provide support and advocacy to those with disabilities.

Vigil has 30 years of clinical and management experience, specializing in family medicine, geriatrics, emergency medicine and reproductive health issues. He has worked in private practice, community health centers, hospitals and other nonprofit organizations. Prior to his appointment, he was CEO of El Centro Family Health, a nonprofit primary care organization in Española, N.M. The chamber's Medical Update Luncheon is part of a new series of update luncheons to be hosted by the chamber this year.

Get ready for the 2010 Senior Games

Doña Ana County resident Philipp Djang has broken world records in swimming for his age group. Djang is just one of several hundred county residents who will compete during the Doña Ana County Games beginning March 13.

Registration begins with a party on Saturday, Feb. 27

By NATISHA HALES

Registration for the Doña Ana County Senior Games begins with a kick-off registration party from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 27, at the Trails West Senior Community Clubhouse, 1450 Avenida de Mesilla.

This is a qualifying year, meaning athletes who place first, second or third in their respective competitions are eligible to compete in the National Games in 2011. In order to compete in the state games, participants must qualify in the county games, so this year's county games are in a closed state format. Events are only open to residents of the county and residents of other New Mexico counties that don't offer a specific competition.

This also is a good year for residents who have not yet gotten involved in the Senior Games to participate, said Doña Ana County Senior Olympics Board President Jack Welch.

Reducing the risks of lung cancer Early prevention could lead to lifesaving results

By Dr. DARVY FULLER

With little more than a 15 percent five-year survival rate, lung cancer is easily New Mexico's most deadly cancer. According to the American Cancer Society, this year alone, an estimated 970 New Mexicans will be diagnosed with lung cancer and 710 people will die from the disease. At Southern New Mexico Cancer Center, we treat patients with many different cancer types, including those with the nation's deadliest, lung cancer. In many cases I see, it's clear that reducing the risk early on can lead to lifesaving results.

Risk-reducing steps

The most important thing you can do to prevent lung cancer is stop smoking, or distance yourself from those who do. Smoking-related deaths represent 87 percent of lung cancer mortalities, and half of lifetime smokers will die from some tobacco-related disease. Your lung cancer risk increases with each cigarette you smoke and each year you continue to smoke. Cessation programs, family support and personal motivation form the backbone of resources available to those who wish to quit. For example, the American Cancer Society offers detailed information and tips on quitting. Smokers who take advantage of all of these can begin the process of liv-ing a healthier and longer life, while greatly decreasing their risk for lung cancer. If, despite your best efforts to quit, you continue to smoke, you should consult your physician about prescription drugs which may be useful in these circumstances.

SOUTHERN NEW MEXICO CANCER CENTER An Affiliate of Texas Oncology

Exposure to second-hand smoke remains another preventable key risk factor. The air you breathe is paramount to respiratory health, and avoiding carcinogens such as cigarette smoke, asbestos and air pollution can decrease lung cancer risk.

sure, a family history of lung cancer is associated with an increased risk, even for nonsmokers. People who are more genetically prone to the disease should be extra cautious and reduce exposure to carcinogens as much as possible.

Early detection

Spotting warning signs early on can make a difference in the treatment options available. Some common symptoms include constant chest pain, coughing up blood or a cough that won't go away, shortness of breath, severe shoulder pain, frequent lung infections and unexplained weight loss. These symptoms do vary from patient to patient, but if any of these occur, you should contact your physician immediately. Annual computerized tomography, or CT scans, for high risk patients increase detection of cancer at a curable stage. Unfortunately, findings may be non-specific and lead to unnecessary procedures. The true value of routine CT surveillance has yet to be proven.

Reducing your risk remains the best strategy to avoid developing lung cancer. Since lung cancer is the most fatal cancer in New Mexico, why not make the crucial decision to begin the process toward better respiratory health? Dr. Darvy Fuller is a medical oncologist at Southern New Mexico Cancer Center.

or as business owners, but our overall community and beyond," said chamber President and CEO Jim Berry in a press release.

In addition to health care, the series will focus on topics such as education, Spaceport America, city, county and state government and the military. "We plan to add more as we can, but we decided to start with these six because we thought these were the most important," Courtney said. The Medical Update Luncheon is sponsored by Comcast and Memorial Medical Center. Tickets are $20 for chamber members and $40 for non-members. To reserve a seat, call the chamber office at 524-1968, email relo@lascruces.org or visit www.lascruces.org.

Parenting

Discipline is not criticizing, embarrassing, disgracing, slapping, smacking, slamming, whipping or hitting. Discipline shows respect for the child

Lay out expected behaviors that are appropriate for an age, help your child learn appropriate behaviors through role-modeling and teaching, and let him or her know what the consequences are for poor behavior. Expected behavior must not go beyond what the child is capable of achieving nor should you place a child in a situation that is inappropriate for his/her level of maturity or abilities. Do not expect a 2-year-old to sit through a movie without making noise, crying, wiggling or moving around, or wanting to go to the bathroom. Instead, select age-appropriate activities and patiently teach your child appropriate behaviors.

One of the challenges parents discuss is the inability to get their child to listen to them. To get your child to listen to you, respect you and behave properly, actively listen to your child without inter-rupting and behave respectfully – not just with your child, but in dealings with others. Remember that your child is always watching and learning. Admit when you are wrong, apologize and correct your behavior, take a sincere interest in your child's interests and be involved in your child's life.

Once you establish rules and consequences, be consistent. If your expectations change weekly, or worse, daily, this unpredictability will be displayed in your child's behavior because that is what he or she is learning. Decide what is or is not negotiable because this will help you avoid challenging behav-

Parenting is a daily and life-long commitment, but the good news is that the results of good parenting are priceless. You will help shape the future and leave your indelible mark on a life, a heart, and within society.

Not all press is good press

It's been an epic breakdown. A public relations nightmare. And since Toyota first announced its massive recall, the world's largest automaker is still struggling to come up for air. Toyota has recalled more than 8 million of its cars worldwide in recent months after complaints about uncontrolled acceleration in several of its vehicles. A problem Toyota originally blamed on gas pedals that "stuck" and flimsy floor mats that engaged the gas pedal. The automaker refused to lend credibility to reports that the problem could be in its vehicles' electronic throttle control.

Days later, a brake software problem on its Prius hybrid emerged. Toyota's leadership finally broke down and made a public statement. But it only got worse. Hundreds of angry Toyota dealers across the country reported hearing about the company's massive recall plan on the six o'clock news. They were not notified first. On Monday, Feb. 8, Toyota announced it was recalling 437,000 more vehicles, including 130,000 Prius models and 14,500 Lexus models in the U.S.

When it seemed like it couldn't get any worse, U.S. Transportation Department Secretary Ray LaHood urged Toyota owners to "stop driving" their cars until the mechanical problems could be corrected. Later, LaHood retracted his remarks, saying they were taken out of context. But the damage was done. The reversal of Toyota's fortunes has significantly damaged its reputation. Once the sparkling-clean image of affordability, quality and efficiency in the automotive industry, Toyota's reputation is now tainted.

But what interests me more than Toyota's suspected cost-cutting over the years, in which Toyota supposedly reduced the cost of its vehicles by reducing the quality of its products, is the inability of its PR department to put out the fire. Reports Tuesday, Feb. 9, indicate that in an effort to "punish" ABC News for "too much coverage" of Toyota's safety problems, Toyota dealers in five Southeastern states have See Toyota on PAGE B3

Banks: We're still lending Business owners look for cash to survive, grow

By GABRIEL VASQUEZ

More than two dozen Las Crucens interested in starting or expanding businesses received reassurance from local and regional bank representatives: "We are still lending," bank reps said Thurs-day, Feb. 4, at a lenders' forum held in Las Cruces.

After the market meltdown in the mortgage industry more than a year ago, banks began to heavily scrutinize all lending activity. The decisions made by top bank executives that helped plunge Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac into the subprime markets without proper supervision created a culture of risky investments that just now is starting to stabilize as other businesses recover from the economic downturn, said Jesse Roderick, a small business loan specialist from Bank of America.

"There's a lot of talk out there in the economy about what Bank of America is doing," he said. "And I under-stand those concerns. But the fact is that banks don't make money unless they're putting loans out. The issue now is finding businesses that can fit in the (risk) box that we're looking for. It's a lot tougher to find them now than it was two years ago." Roderick said he has talked to many business own-ers in the past year who didn't "buckle down" during the recession and have lost or are in danger of losing their investments.

"These are really tough decisions for any small business, but they had to be made," he said. "Banks that see this will feel more confident in lending them money and knowing they will come out of this on the right end.

In short, Roderick said risk is being heavily examined. Not just at Bank of America, but at all lending institutions, he said, creating the public concern that "banks aren't lending anymore.

Rosie Landin, lending specialist at FirstLight Federal Credit Union, agreed. "The biggest thing that has changed over the past two years is the way we look at risk," she said. "At the end of the day, we just want you to be around to pay the loan back."

PTAP comes to Las Cruces

Advisor helps biz owners snag federal and state contracts By GABRIEL VASQUEZ

Meet the middleman. William Hett-Dobricky, a procurement advisor and government-contracting specialist, has recently relocated to Las Cruces and is offering small businesses a chance to connect with the region's government agencies.

Hett-Dobricky, who moved to Las Cruces from Chicago in November 2009, is the new advisor who heads the local Procurement Technical Assistance Program (PTAP), located inside the Small Business Development Center, 2345 E. Nevada Ave. He's already working with local business owners and hopes to increase his exposure within the business community in the coming year.

made to too many people," she said. "The borrowers suffered and so have the lend-ers. No one wants to be the bad lender now."

Chuck Widger, vice president for First New Mexico Bank, said those looking for funding a new or existing business should be prepared, because banks now ask for more detailed documentation, including a "strong" business plan, market research, financial projections (including fictional "stress tests"), marketing plans, proof of liquidity, proof of management continuity, personal financial statements, the past three years' tax returns and a documented list of acceptable collateral.

Whether you have an ongoing or new business, you have to make the assumption that the loan officer knows what he's doing," he said. "We're looking for proof that shows how you arrived at the dollars that you're asking for and that requires more paperwork."

Borrowers should ask themselves ques-tions such as, "If sales drop 25 percent and my labor costs increase, where does that leave me?" "How will we reach and retain potential customers?" "Is the trend in my industry going up or down, and why?" and "What is going to be my equity investment going into this?" before applying for a loan, he said.

Once a loan is made, it's vital to maintain the lender-borrower relationship, said Kendall Wallin, business banking manager at Wells Fargo. "We're in it for helping you succeed financially and not just doing a loan," he said. "Credit worthiness is the biggest thing we look at, but in the end, we want to become your financial partner - to help you with deposits, processing and payroll. You have to keep in contact." Wallin said although Wells Fargo finances loans for equipment, commercial property and working capital, because of the housing downturn, "we're not enter-taining residential development loans. Anywhere.'

Ed Cadena, deputy director for the U.S. Small Business Administration, reminded audience members not to be unnerved when entering the world of entrepreneurship, or in seeking loans for their existing business.

"Here in Las Cruces, we have a lot of great resource partners to help you," he said. "Take advantage of them. You're not by yourself."

Those resources include SCORE, the Doña Ana Community College Small Busi-ness Development Center, WESST Corp. and the Arrowhead Center, Cadena said.

Until the end of February, the SBA is guaranteeing small business loans up to percent with no added fees, he said.

"We are sharing the risk with the bank-ers," he said. "Small business owners tend to feel like they're by themselves, but they make up 70 percent of the economy.

Through the SBA's various lending programs, borrowers increase their chances of snagging a loan with the help of federal backing

"SBĂ doesn't lend anybody a nickel," he said. "Our distribution network, our banks and some of our partners make the loans. We just guarantee they will be paid back.

SBA looks at the same criteria as banks, Cadena added.

"How much money do you need? What are you using it for? And how are you going to pay it back?" he asked. In attendance at Thursday's forum was Hiram Davis, owner of Kaya's Cottons and Things for the Desert, a retailer of casual menswear in Mesilla. He said he attended the forum to explore "all of the possible funding opportunities" for his business.

"Inventories have to be replenished," he said. "And after December, sales in apparel are very slow." Davis said he's had to take a close look at his operational expenses as a result of the recession.

'We're looking very carefully at our bottom line and our inventory," he said. So we're right on target with that. We're also looking at our advertising dol-lars and seeing if we're really getting a response from customers. We're weighing our options very carefully." Lynn Cashton and Paula Leighton attended the forum to seek funding opportunities to start a nonprofit.

"We want to start a summer science program for young women," Cashton said. "We want to support our community and let our young women succeed. Our kids have to have the support, and so do we.' have to have the support, and so do we." Don Panagrossi, loan officer for Enchantment Land Certified Develop-ment Co., said the "myth" that banks weren't lending should be dispelled. "Banks are lending. Money is getting out," he said. "But the unfortunate news is that businesses much del "a end "D" end is that businesses graded 'F' and 'D' are not going to get money. Not even in their wildest lending circumstances.'

New initiative focuses on economic development

Courtesy of Creating Opportunities for New Mexicans

An alliance of industry leaders announced during a news conference at the New Mexico State Capitol Rotunda this week the launch of a statewide initiative to enhance New Mexico's business climate to create private sector opportunities for the state's current workforce and future generations.

'The economic downturn has negatively impacted the business sector," said Gene Baca, senior vice president of Bueno Foods. "New Mexico residents are out of work. The only thing that will pull us through is a strong private sector. Right now, the private sector needs help and not hindrances from various policies and regulations. We need to keep economic development incentives and supports for small business."

In November 2009, New Mexico's unemployment ranking was at a 21-year high, making it the 22nd highest in the country of states reporting declining year-over-year employment. According to the New Mexico Department of Work-

new program in New Mexico," said Hett-Dobricky, who added that there would eventually be seven PTAP offices in New Mexico. "This is an excellent service for the community and the businesses here. Given the proximity of the military bases here, and certainly with the money government is spending now, this provides an excellent opportunity for small businesses.

Hett-Dobricky has more than 25 years of government contracting experience, both as a buyer of goods and services force Solutions, only four of the state's 13 industries posted any job growth since last year, while nine others reported employment declines. The largest gains continue to come from educational and health services, which were up 4,300 jobs on the year. Government also posted a year-over-year gain, adding 2,200 jobs.

"Our state has developed some very strong economic incentives to attract businesses like Hewlett Packard and Fidelity," said Chris Dunkeson of the Arizona/New Mexico Cable Association. "While we need to protect those tax incentives, we also need to be cognizant of our momentum and not do anything to inadvertently impact the incentives that brings business to our state. Currently, our neighbors to the west in Arizona are exploring a new business incentive packages for job creation, some of which propose lowering its corporate tax rate.

While the public sector has seen job growth over the past year, the private sector has felt the economy's sting. Industry by industry has seen significant reductions in force: More than 2,000 jobs in mining; 4,000 manufacturing jobs; and as a company representative seek-ing government contracts. He worked at a procurement center in Chicago for six years before coming to Las Cruces.

He said although regional military bases may be the biggest purchasers of goods and services, contracting opportunities also exist at the city, county and state level.

"Many small businesses are overwhelmed by what they perceive to be doing business with the government," he said. "But there are certain steps you have to take, and once those are accomplished, it's much like the commercial sector.

For now, Hett-Dobricky is visiting with business owners in closed meetings,

2,900 jobs in transportation, warehousing and utilities industry; 6,700 jobs in the business sector, all during the last 12 months. Driving the point home, the Department of Workforce Solutions also reports that since July 2009, more than 138,000 New Mexicans have applied for unemployment compensation assistance.

"As we deal with a struggling economy nationally and within New Mexico, we need to make sure that short-term legislative fixes don't deter long-term business development opportunities," said Tony Trujillo, New Mexico Mining Association board member. "As we discuss the need to balance the state budget, it is crucial that opinions are balanced with facts and realities.

New Mexico also needs to create stronger links between the private sector employers and education based on mutual accountability. New Mexico aver-ages more than 1,177 students leaving the state before attending college and about 22 percent of New Mexico high school graduates who go to college attend college out of state. There is an urgent need for creation of more private sector opportunities for children and future generations to have a reason to want to live and raise their families to prosper here in New Mexico.

free of charge, but will develop a sched-ule of public seminars in the spring, he said

"My efforts will be geared toward outreach, going out and marketing this program," he said. As the only PTAP advisor in Las Cruces, Hett-Dobricky said he wants to reach out to all businesses, no matter their industry or trade, to consider contracting with the government if their goods or services are in demand.

"The government buys everything that you and I buy, and in some cases a lot more," he said. "A lot of government money is spent on supporting the needs of a military base. That includes food, retail and entertainment – your basic cooperation between public and private agencies," said Lea Harrison, director of marketing and communications for the New Mexico Economic Development Partnership. "New Mexico companies such as Emcore Corp., Unirac Corp., SCHOTT Solar, PreCheck and Ultramain Systems, have played a great deal in the success of the work we do at the New Mexico Partnership."

New Mexico's policies need to be competitive with other states to attract and grow business here. Creating Opportunities for New Mexicans will focus on accomplishing these tasks together and no longer creating a division between the private and public sector. Strong businesses create jobs, opportunities and financial security for current and future generations of New Mexicans. The initiative is designed to provide accurate information and focus on the need to be realistic about the tax burden impact on business, industry and individuals.

Creating Opportunities for New Mexicans is an initiative designed to create a broader based statewide constituency for pro-economic development and pro-business issues. Creating opportunities for New Mexicans is a voice for thoughtful long-term public policy discussion that includes the need for a healthy private sec-tor climate. commercial products and services."

Hett-Dobricky will guide business owners, step-by-step, to become eligible to apply for a government contract, which from inquiry to contract finalization can take about a year, he said. The process can be complicated because it involves a substantial amount of research, includ-ing combing through supply schedules, requests for services and other hoops to jump through before finding the right opportunity.

When the government procures something, they do it to a very high standard," he said. "So you have to be prepared."

pulled their advertising from local stations. What's the message here? Where's the corporate unity? Do we like the media or do we hate it? Do we cooperate or should we fight? Do we accept or deny? Getting all the dealers on the same page is almost imposible.

It seems Toyota is still fumbling to answer many of those questions. Either way, it now faces a massive marketing challenge, perhaps one of the greatest in history.

After a week of satellite appearances on national networks by top executives, Toyota has begun a TV ad campaign aimed at restoring consumer confidence in its vehicles. In one of the commercials, Toyota metaphorically says, "I'm sorry, it won't happen again," with a 1960s era-photograph of what is now Toyota of Hollywood. "Remember the good old days?" the TV commercial seems to beg.

It's also been reported that the company is undertaking a massive Internet marketing blitz, including buying banner ads on some of the most heavily trafficked websites and even allowing top executives to participate in interviews with bloggers and non-traditional news outlets such as digg.com. But still, when you type in "Toyota" in Google search, the second suggestion you'll get is "Toyota Recall." I'm guessing it will stay that way for some time to come. And that was probably not the case when Toyota outsold all major manufacturers during last year's Cash for Clunkers program. Good luck Toyota. This is one for the textbooks.

Prior to beginning their home search, prospective buyers Mark and Julie Lambert had been exposed to scores of TV, print, radio and Internet ads stressing the importance of their credit scores.

The interest rate on the mortgage they take out and the amount of their annual homeowner's insurance premium would be based largely on their credit scores and the accuracy of the data posted to their credit file. So, before they began their home search in earnest, they decided to take a gander at their credit reports to make sure that all of the information contained within was correct.

The Lamberts' first order of business was to figure out who compiles and stores their credit information. A quick search of the Web showed that three national consumer credit reporting companies – Equifax (www.equifax.com), Experian (www. experian.com) and Trans Union (www. transunion.com) – each maintained separate files on them. Most creditors (i.e., banks, retailers, etc.) report consumer credit information to all three repositories, but some report to just one or two of the services.

What type of information will Mark and Julie find in their credit files? According to the Federal Trade Commission (www.ftc.gov), the files will reveal where they live, how they pay their bills and whether they've been sued, arrested or have filed for bankruptcy.

The files will also contain a record of everyone who accessed their records in the recent past and received copies of their reports. The beauty of accessing credit files is that consumers can identify and correct any inaccuracies that may be contained in their files.

How much will Mark and Julie have to pay to access their files and obtain their reports? If they play their cards right, zero. The Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) requires that each of the three reporting companies provide consumers with a free copy of their credit report, at their request, once every 12 months. The only official site designated for this purpose by the government is www.annualcreditreport.com. Some folks like to order all three reports at the same time, while others prefer to order one report about every four months. The Lamberts would also be entitled to a free credit report if a company took adverse action against them, such as denying their application for credit, insurance or employment, and they ask for their report within 60 days of receiving notice of the action.

Are there other sources for "free" credit reports? Here's where things get interesting.

One of the most heavily advertised freebie websites, www.freecreditreport. com, is actually owned by Experian – one of the companies that must provide a free report under FCRA rules. Don't be fooled by the word "free." You cannot obtain a free report from Free Credit Report without signing up for a $14.95 per month credit-monitoring service. The FTC has found the advertising to be deceiving and has twice sanctioned the company for its deceptive practices. Consumers are up in arms over the "free" claim as well, lodging more than 11,000 complaints with the Better Business Bureau. In addition, an irate consumer recently filed a classaction suit against the company, alleging that consumers were duped out of millions of dollars as a result of having to pay for their "free" credit reports.

GARY SANDLER'S Real Estate Connection

Credit reporting agencies are not the only repositories that compile and store information about you. Specialty consumer reporting agencies also collect personal data and sell it to businesses operating in specific industries, such as insurance, medical, rental and others.

Not sure what's in your medical or employment files? Order a copy of your report from the specialty provider that compiles the information. Just as with your credit file, incorrect personal information in a file can make it more difficult or expensive for you to obtain auto or homeowner's insurance and medical insurance. Erroneous entries can also cause employers and landlords to make hiring and renting decisions based on information that may not be correct.

There's one important fact to remember: Companies that compile personal information are not infallible and sometimes make mistakes that can negatively affect consumers. It's up to you to make sure that the information sold by the various reporting companies is as accurate as humanly possible. See you at closing!

Gary Sandler is the president of Gary Sandler Inc., Realtors in Las Cruces and the host of Gary Sandler's Real Estate Connection, broadcast each Monday from 4 to 6 p.m. on KSNM-AM 570. Whistleblower Protection Act easily passes house Bill heads to Senate for consideration

A bill sponsored by Rep. Joseph Cervantes, D-Las Cruces, that would protect public employees from retaliatory discharges, passed the House of Representatives Wednesday, Feb. 10, with a vote of 67-1.

House Bill 165cs-Whistleblower Protection Act would allow government employees to sue their employer if they are retaliated against for reporting government corruption, testifying before a public body or refusing to participate in unlawful activity.

"The overwhelming support for the Whistleblower Protection Act reflects our commitment to protect public employees who come forward and disclose unlawful conduct in state government, or who refuse to join that unlawful activity," Cervantes said. "These reforms prohibit retaliation against those who report government corruption, and protect those who see government service as a public trust."

Under the legislation, a public employer is prohibited from taking retaliatory action against a public employee who:

- Discloses or threatens to disclose activity, policy or practice of the public employer that is unlawful or improper, or that the public employee believes, in good faith, is unlawful or improper
- Provides information or testifies as part of an investigation, hearing or inquiry into an unlawful or improper act
- Objects or refuses to participate in an activity, policy or practice that is an unlawful or improper act The bill provides that a public employer
- is liable to the public employee for:
 Actual damages
- Actual damagesReinstatement with same seniority
- Two times the amount of back pay, with interest
- Special damages

• Litigation costs and attorney fees The bill allows a defendant to use the counterclaims of libel, slander or other claims as a defense against a person filing a false claim under the act.

The bill now heads to the Senate for consideration.

Four of the Young Philanthropists' newest members met with CFSNM Executive Director Luan Wagner Burn Thursday, Feb. 4, at St. Clair's Bistro to discuss the new initiative, including Ken Binkley of Wilson Binkley Advertising and Marketing, Mollie McGraw of The Pickett Law Firm, Leonard Jimenez of Studio 037 Salon and Charlotte Tallman of Elle Write Communications.

"As a business owner and community member, I am always trying to find ways to contribute to the community," Jimenez said. "This is an ideal opportunity to network, reach out and make an impact through the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico."

The Young Philanthropists group is designed to foster philanthropy by bringing together young people in the community to learn about philanthropy and to make annual grants to local nonprofits.

"In addition to philanthropy, participants will be able to build new friendships through three social events a year and work together for the common good of southern New Mexico," Burn said.

Young Philanthropists steering committee members will serve a one-year term and meet monthly to plan the future of the Young Philanthropists, including three social events meant to bring in new membership, create networking opportunities and increase the knowledge of philanthropy among young people. The steering committee will also identify and recruit 10 people to join the Young Philanthropists, create the identity of the Young Philanthropists, plan and implement the first two to three social events, name the permanent endowment fund and help set up the first Grant Committee.

Young Philanthropists members must be young (defined by the group as 21 to 40-ish, but the definition of young may vary according to one's own definition and how young one might feel), make a contribution of $125 per year, of which 75 percent of the donation will go into a permanent endowment fund and 25 percent will go into a grant-making fund to award to a deserving charity or cause each year and make a minimum contribution of time on committees and social events.

At the next meeting on Thursday, Feb. 18, the Young Philanthropists will create the final steering committee, focus on recruitment, select a logo (of which Wilson Binkley Advertising and Marketing is designing for the group) and plan for the three social events.

Hatch trustees save the pig Sparky's pink statue will greet tourists

Bulletin Staff Report

The Village of Hatch Trustees unanimously voted to "Save the Pig" Tuesday, Feb. 9, at the Hatch Village Clerk's Office, 133 Franklin St.

Requests from concerned citizens of Hatch were aired after a statue of a giant pink pig was erected, aimed at directing tourists and customers to Sparky's Burgers, BBQ & Espresso, a popular eatery in the town.

Citizens and business owners said the pig and other similar statues that Sparky's uses to advertise did not "fit in" with the image Hatch was trying to convey. Tuesday, however, trustees Kathie Franzoy, Robert Torres and Lloyd Burns voted in favor of keeping the pig, granting the business owners a variance.

More than 50 community members attended the meeting wearing pink "Save the Pig" T-shirts in support of Sparky's and the fiberglass statue.

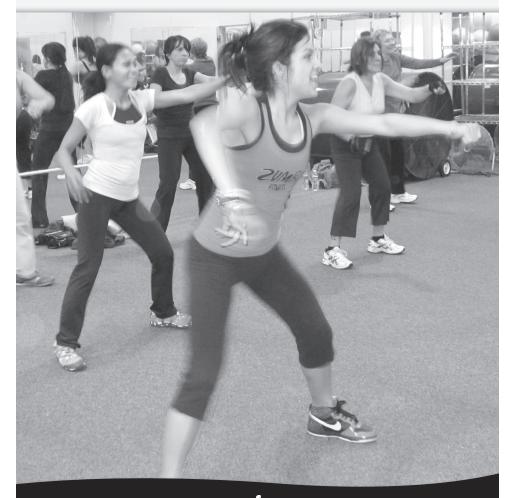

Trustee Andy Nuñez attended the meeting via phone, but did not vote.

Balancing the budget is tough on elected officials

taxes can damage

and destroy jobs.

Perhaps economic principles can help

The New Mexico Senate and House seem locked in a struggle for the state budget.

The house-approved budget makes up a $300 million shortfall by raising taxes, including adding one-half percent to the gross receipts tax and an income tax surcharge on high-wage earners. Meanwhile, Senate lawmakers vow to cut more and tax less from the budget, with Deming's own John Arthur "Dr. No" Smith leading the charge.

The executive branch also seems to be uncertain on how to proceed. Lt. Gov. Diane Denish opposes gross receipts tax increases while Gov. Bill Richardson is not very fond of higher-income taxes, which, after all, reverse the cuts he engineered during his first term.

And remember all this bickering is among the Democrats.

So given the controversy, perhaps economics can give some insights into which taxes to increase. In fact, coming up with optimal taxes is a favorite activity for economists, starting with Adam Smith, who argued in the "Wealth of Nations" in the "Wealth of Nations" that people should pay in proportion to their income – that is, he seems to support a flat tax. Even today, if you run into an economist at a party and want to get him talking, just ask how to best overhaul the state tax system. You won't be able to get him to stop talking. (I might mention that if you are talking to economists at parties, besides taxes, you need also to think hard about your social calendar.)

Taxes are a powerful thing. Poorly designed taxes can damage economic activity and destroy jobs. So, one principle is to design taxes to do the least harm to the private sector, yet still raise adequate capital. This means taxing as broad a base as possible to charge as low a rate as possible. Here, New Mexico does pretty well as our gross receipts tax, unlike a typical sales tax, is imposed on not just goods, but services as well.

Avoiding damage to the private sector also means taxing items relatively insensitive to taxation. This is one reason why taxes on items like cigarettes are popular; you can tax the be-jeevers out of them without discouraging use too much.

But what about income taxes? Some argue that heavy taxes on the rich will discourage the rich from residing in New Mexico, ironically lowering tax revenue. This is the argument against imposing higher-income taxes on high-income taxpayers. While good in theory,

While good in theory, there is little evidence that the rich relocate to avoid income taxes. Think about it. Would a wealthy couple move to another state because of a 1- or 2-percent surcharge on their income of more than $250,000? Probably not, as the issue in deciding on where to live is not the income tax rate, but rather the total tax burden relative to benefits of the state. After all, taxes do finance things that people want.

This brings up another point. As important as the tax you are charged is what you get for that tax. If you are taxed to pay for waste, that is bad. If you are taxed to pay for a needed government service, that is good. Unfortunately, deciding what is a needed service here is hard.

Bill aims to put unemployed veterans back to work

Congressman Harry Teague's office on Feb. 5 unveiled new legislation aimed at improving employment oppor-tunities for veterans. The Energy Jobs for Veterans Act seeks to establish programs to provide on-the-job training, apprenticeship, real experience, and long-term employment in the energy fields to veterans. Funded by competitive grants, the program would provide an energy employer up to 50 percent, or up to $20,000, of a veteran's salary for a year of apprenticeship and on-theiob training.

The program would be available to employers across multiple energy fields, including energy efficient building, construction and retrofits, renewable electric power, biofuel production, energy efficiency assessment, oil and gas, and nuclear power. The latest survey of veterans unemployment by the Department of Labor shows the number of unemployed Iraq and Afghanistan veterans is now almost the same as the number of service members currently deployed in support of those two wars, according to Teague's office.

> cover the topic, "Is a home-based business right for you?" The basics of starting a home business will be covered. Getting help from professional organizations will be addressed along with the tax variables and equipment needed. A lecture will be presented by Bob Worthington, a retired New Mexico State University instructor who specializes in management and advertising. —— IN GOOD COMPANY: VETERANS OFFICE SOLUTIONS INC.

Company hopes to bank on Foamiture, veterans

VOS hopes to sell 'wow' office and home products

By GABRIEL VASQUEZ The Las Cruces Bulletin

"This is going to be big. Real big," said Veterans Office Solutions (VOS) Presi-dent and Owner Tim Chelpaty.

Chelpaty, a Las Cruces lawyer and entrepreneur, will waste no time pitching his company's products and mission statement. He believes firmly in the future success of his local furniture business owner, VOS Inc.

"Once we get our position solidified in

this area, we will become the hub for remanufactured furniture in the U.S.," he said. "And we will do it while training and employing our U.S. veterans.

Chelpaty, who formerly owned Southwest Santa Fe Furniture, has been brainstorming the idea behind VOS for more than five years, he said. Now, he's got a permanent location, mini show-room and the backing of industry partners and government agencies that will turn the concept into reality, he said.

"(Unemployed veterans) are a problem that we recognized from the start," he said. "And others have too. We have received support from a lot of groups, and now we have the corporate support to keep this going. We're forming an extensive network to put our veterans to work everywhere.

In short, Chelpaty's company offers remanufactured furniture and sells a line of new Foamiture, a type of furniture made of 100-percent recyclable, mold and mildew-resistant and hypoallergenic foam.

The Foamiture is our 'wow' factor," said Chelpaty while picking up a Foamiture love seat on display at his company showroom. "See how easy it is to pick up? This is unbelievable. You can make anything out of this stuff, and it will last and never collect mold. It's great for people who suffer from allergies, too."

VOS Sales Manager Chuck Poe, a vet-eran and retired law enforcement officer, said the company's Foamiture products are one-third lighter than traditional "light" furniture, can be shipped in "modem-sized" boxes for little cost and offer innovative space solutions for those living in cramped quarters, such as students and soldiers.

"It really cuts down the weight and space to ship it in, you can't hurt anyone with it and it's easy to assemble," Poe said. "This could be a real boon to our military."

Through its exclusive partnerships with the Indiana Chair Frame Co., Leggett & Platt, Office Solutions and Veada Industries Inc. - all furniture makers - the company offers a variety of office and home furniture, remanufactured and new, Chelpaty said. VOS' claim is that it can save customers between 25 and 45 percent on the purchase of remanufactured furniture. In addition, See how easy a savings of up to 50 percent can be realized it is to pick using the company's remanufactured panels. this up? This is The company's products have a lifetime guaranunbelievable. tee, and Chelpaty said VOS' ability to recycle 95 You can make percent of worn-out furniture "makes us one of the greenest companies anything ... around."

'We can make this stuff look and feel like brand new Herman Miller furniture for half the price," he said. "And you can't tell the difference.

On the outside, it's identical. But it's also just as good in quality. When we get these things, we sandblast it down to the bare metal, put new end caps on it and give it a new fabric."

The company offers ceiling panels, divider panels, conference tables and seating, desks, dormitory furniture, medical mattresses and furniture, file cabinets and executive and task chairs. The company can also remanufacture or design special items at a customer's request.

Chelpaty added that, so far, the company only has a few clients, but is positioning itself for grand success. He anticipates being the remanufactured furniture hub for the entire U.S.-Mexico border and creating a large remanufacturing facility in Las Cruces to distribute the products, he said.

"A big plus is that our ability to get things done will be very rapid," he said.

GABRIEL VASQUEZ I The Las Cruces Bulletin Veterans Office Solutions President Tim Chelpaty, Vice President Ana Laura Chelpaty, Sales Manager Chuck Poe and Executive Secretary Marcie Poe sit in the VOS showroom at the company's location, 121 Wyatt Drive, Suite 2.

"And for deliveries to other parts of the country, we will have other remanufacturing bases to cut down on shipping time and costs."

Just as important as selling low is paying high, Chelpaty said. He plans on employing only veterans to make up his company's workforce, and he wants to pay them more than just a "liveable wage." "We saw that veterans had a real problem," he said. "They train low, get paid low and that's if there are any jobs available.

"So a veterans group asked us to come up with a potential solution. We did. We will have the ability to train high, pay high, and the jobs that we will offer can transfer just about anywhere.'

Veterans will be trained in the remanufacturing process of furniture, including factory supervision and management, woodworking, welding, upholstering, purchasing, shipping, receiving and billing, Chelpaty said. Through its partnership with Indiana Chair Frame, veterans who contact VOS will be sent to the company's regional training points. From there, they will receive a certifi-cate of training and be considered for employment in one of Indiana Chair's 200 facilities nationwide.

"They have pledged that once we certify our vets are trained, they will offer them an interview and a job anywhere in their extensive corporate network,' Chelpaty said.

In addition, Office Solutions, one of the largest independent distributors and dealers of office products, and Leggett & Platt, a Fortune 500 company, also have agreed to give preference to hiring trained veterans, Chelpaty said.

'With our veterans out there, we will have the ability to regionally manufacture anywhere in the United States," said Chelpaty, adding that he will hire veterans at the Las Cruces VOS manufacturing facility once it's operational.

Through the company's uncompromising commitment to veterans and to its customers, Chelpaty hopes to put Las Cruces on the map as the regional hub for remanufactured furniture in the Southwest, and he hopes the community will be supportive.

"Theory is a nice thing, but you have to go beyond theory and make it a fact," Chelpaty said. "To do that, we're going to need the support from the local community. I think the business climate here is good, but only time will tell.

Why did you decide to become an entrepreneur?

It was all about job creation. The biggest problem on the border is lack of training and low wages, which prevents many companies from coming here. My idea is to create jobs and to create wealth.

What do you look for in an employee?

The have to be a veteran. But also, loyalty and good work ethic.

What are your most popular products?

The Foamiture. It's what we call the "wow factor."

What is your business philosophy?

Hire veterans, train high and pay high, and in the process, provide a good product and service to our customers.

What's one thing about your business you wish people knew? That we offer the total package. We do everything, and we have more capability than any manufacturer in the U.S. When you compare all the objective data, no one compares to us.

What is your opinion of the Las Cruces business climate? It has been very receptive.

What business would you like to see in Las Cruces? Another mall. We need more retail here and more things for people to do.

Linda Gonzalez, president of the Southern New Mexico Workers' Compensation Association, speaks to members of the American Society of Safety Engineers (ASSE) Zia Section, during its monthly meeting Tuesday, Feb. 9, at the Game Sports Bar & Grill, 2605 S. Espina St. The group meets at that location at 5:30 p.m. the second Tuesday of each month. Zia Section Chairman Manny Campos said the group is open to anybody interested in safety or workers' compensation issues. Currently, the group has members from White Sands Missile Range, White Sands Test Facility, Holloman Air Force Base, New Mexico State University, Las Cruces Public Schools and the City of Las Cruces as well as representatives from vendors and contractors, Campos said. For more information, contact Campos at 640-5166.

USDA deputy secretary will speak at farming conference Focus of presentation is organic farming

United States Department of Agricul-ture Deputy Secretary Kathleen Merrigan will be the keynote speaker at the New Mexico Organic Farming Conference, Saturday, Feb. 20, at the Marriott Albuquerque Pyramid North Hotel, 5151 San Francisco Road NE.

Merrigan, who helped author the Organic Food Protection Act of 1990, which established standards and regulations for organic farming, is an advocate for the sustainable food movement. Merrigan also supports returning to traditional farming U.S. Department of Agriculture Deputy Secretary Kathleen Merrigan will be the methods. She and othkeynote speaker at the New Mexico Organic ers in the organic Farming Conference. farming move ment have said they want to reduce the harmful effects of the industrial food system on the environment. That means redesigning the industrial food system to limit harmful pollutants released from large farming operations and restricting the use of fossil fuels burned when transporting food across the country or around the world. In May 2009, she helped start a program that now offers conventional farmers grant money to switch to organic farming methods.

As the Southwest's premier conference for organic and sustainable agriculture, the two-day New Mexico Organic Farming Conference provides more than 30 production and marketing work-shops, a locally grown organic food luncheon on Saturday, and a large exhibitor hall for producers to learn about organic farming.

The event is organized by the New Mexico State University Cooperative Extension Service, the New Mexico Department of Agriculture, the New Mexico Organic Commodity Commission and Farm to Table.

The registration fee is $100, or $65 for one day. Registration begins at 7:30 a.m. each day. For more information, call Le Adams at 505-473-1004, ext. 10, or Joanie Quinn at 505-841-9067.

Peggy Smith: A local champion of Southern hospitality Smith's 30-year career built on valuable relationships this industry, you lose a lot of sleep wor-

By GABRIEL VASQUEZ

Hospitality industry veteran Peggy Smith has a message for students, young adults and others working in the restaurant industry: If you love your job and you are dedicated, you can turn it into a career.

Smith, who started her career in the hospitality industry working as a server at Nopalito Restaurant, has climbed to the top of the corporate hotel ranks, twice receiving General Manager of the Year awards from top hotel chains.

"The people you report to are watching you all the time," Smith said. "If you strive to do the best job you can, you will get noticed. Companies are always looking for employees who want to be leaders.

Smith, born in Hunstville, Ala., moved to Las Cruces with her family in 1972. Her father, a retired aerospace worker who helped develop NASA's Apollo program, decided to move the family to Las Cruces to be closer to his hometown of El Paso.

Smith worked at Nopalito while in high school, and after graduating, went to work for what was then Holiday Inn - now the Ramada Palms de Las Cruces as a banquet waitress. During her time there, she began to develop professional relationships with the local business community and soon found herself as the food and beverage director of the Las Cruces Best Western - what is now the Days Inn & Suites on Avenida de Mesilla

"That's when my career really took off," she said. "I found that I really loved this industry. I was going to college while working at the hotels, but my career took off so fast that I dropped school.

At Best Western, Smith was in charge of operations at a 300-plus seating banquet room and the hotel bar, Fat Eddie's. She quickly moved up the ranks to general manager of the property, in the process working through several management changes - from local, regional, corporate and back to local - she said.

"I went from working for a small company to a very large hotel company and then back to an individual owner," she said. "I was very fortunate to be able to work with a lot of great people from a lot of great companies. Even though I stayed in one place, I learned a lot.'

Smith worked at the Best Western for 17 years, from 1980 to 1997, she said.

"I can't say that I had a preference for any specific management style, but I learned that the success of a business depends so much on the ownership," she said. "And if their goals and philosophies match yours, that's even better."

She also learned that careers are not only built on talent and dedication, but on relationship building. "The biggest thing I learned there, and this is probably true for every city, is that success depends on relationships," she said. "Relationships with the people you work with, with the community and with others in the business. I think it's really helped me along my career."

Also a lesson to be valued, Smith said working in the hospitality industry gave her insight to the "natural business cycle" that occurs in Las Cruces.

'The city has a tendency to go in cycles," she said. "For a while, we won't have a lot of construction, not much new development, and then all of a sudden we will get a lot. Working in rying about how new (businesses) are going to affect you. Are you still going to be competitive?

"The thing is to always be looking for better ways to do things or to continue to do business with the people you're working with. If you can ride out the wave, then you'll always be in better shape. After leaving Best Western, Smith became an independent consultant. She then gravitated back toward her first love catering.

"It's always been my passion," she said. "Catering, banquets, putting on functions for people. I've always loved that part."

Now, Smith has partnered with Lorenzo's de Mesilla, owned by Lorenzo Vaccaro, to manage the operations of the restaurant's new banquet facility and catering services. "I really like Lorenzo's vision," Smith said. "He's got a quality product. This was a chance for me to get back to doing what I love. I'm excited about the new things going on here, and I've only been here three weeks.

Lorenzo's de Mesilla now has a banquet facility - decorated by artist Alex Rosa – that seats more than 130, in a building right behind the existing restaurant.

"When customers walk in and see this room, they are amazed," said Smith, pointing out the Italian decor and murals created by Rosa.

"I think all the brides will want their pictures taken here.²

The facility will offer its services for a multitude of events, including weddings, quinceañeras, Christmas parties, corporate meetings, reunions and retirement and engagement parties, Smith said.

We have screens, projectors and the ability to host any kind of function," she said.

Some finishing touches still remain for the hall, such as chandeliers and other minor adjustments to the decor, Smith said.

'We've already started hosting parties here, and everyone has loved it, she said. "It's very unique, and we also have a courtyard for other types of functions.'

Smith said she plans to stay with Lorenzo's for some time to come, calling the position a "long-term" investment.

And staying is something Smith is also good at. She said over the years, she came across many opportunities to work for corporate hotel chains that would have required her to relocate, but was always steadfast in her answer, "I love Las Cruces too much.'

"The people are great here, the climate is great," she said. "This is where I plan to stay.

'You make me feel like dancing' Ballroom dancing is not just for grandpa anymore

Ballroom dancing is in vogue in Las Cruces. Lessons, dance floors and partners of all ages are ready and waiting for you to put on your dancin' shoes and join the fun.

Whether you're a 20-something guy lacking the confidence to ask a young lady to dance, or you've been part of a Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers duo at your family's weddings for years, there are a number of local organizations that can help you cut a rug. A good place to start is with Eric Fierro.

At age 23, Fierro is sort of a dancing machine. By day, the New Mexico State University graduate is a computer engineer at the General Dynamics office in the NMSU Arrowhead Center Research Park. By night, on weekends and probably every spare moment, he's director of the NMSU DanceSport team.

"DanceSport team students sign up for dance classes and receive credit for some of the effort. They're in class for six hours a week," he said, adding that each student probably puts in another 10 to 15 hours of practice each week, on top of their normal school work.

Students audition to be in the Dance-Sport company, then over the course of a year, they are paired with community partners for programs such as the upcom-ing "Look Who's Dancing" fundraiser and the DanceSport Society, a local booster club for the student team. The university offers three entry-level social dance classes, which cover Latin, merengue, salsa and Bachata, which Fierro said is one of the newest forms of Latin dancing.

"The classes are open for anyone that wants to register and pay for a class through the university," Fierro said. A class costs about $150 a semester.

Everyone from university students and professors to business professionals and retirees has taken Fierro's classes

No, the other right foot

Lessons are available - free or otherwise, with or without a partner - and there are plenty of places to fox trot, two-step and tango. Whatever your age, whatever your status, Las Cruces dancers would love to have you join the fun. Rather than waltz blindly through the phone book for a dance coach, try a class at the university or attend the Big Band Dance Club Thursday night dances at the Las Cruces Country Club on North Main Street.

"They're just typical people who want to get out there and kick up their heels," said dance club member Jan Clements who dances with her husband and partner Dave

"We see a variety of age groups visiting the Big Band Dance Club.

She said roughly 65 percent of the club's members are single and want to interact with others with similar interests in a safe and friendly environment. Anyone 21 or older and at any skill level is welcome to attend. Cost is $7 for club members and $9 otherwise.

"A recent visitor was impressed with the kind of dancing the club offers," Clements said. "She felt that everyone needed to learn how to do ballroom because they're not going to be doing hip-hop when they're older.'

The DanceSport Society sponsors Tea/ Sunday Afternoon Social dances, which are often listed on Page C4 of this section. Fierro is the booster club's president.

"We just had a tea dance (in January) and plan another in April," he said. "It gets students and society members together, with proceeds going to the team to help cover the cost of competitions.'

Change partners and dance with me

In addition to the Big Band Dance Club, the Swinging Dancers of Munson Center dance every Saturday night for those age 50 and older, for $6 each. The DanceSport Society offers free lessons at its tea dances, and Graham Central Station on South Main Street has free country western and Latin lessons from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. on Wednesdays.

"We have taken ballroom, swing and Latin style dances from Eric Fierro of Dance Universe and Marjorie Sidman of Dance Enchantment," Clements said. "Both are excellent, and Las Cruces is fortunate to have instructors of their caliber.

She added that the Argentine Tango group meets at the Mesilla Community Center on Tuesday nights.

Both Clements and Fierro offered several reasons why people take up ballroom dancing.

"Dancing is good social interaction, it is healthful, fun and sometimes romantic," Clements said. "Some people may have a special event coming up where they will want to dance, such as a wedding or quinceañera."

Fierro said it is a good form of exercise, for socializing and meeting new people.

"For me it serves as a stress release when I get out on the dance floor everything seems to go away for awhile," he said

Both groups, along with Bob Burns and the Mike Caranda Orchestra, are gearing up for "Look Who's Dancing," scheduled for Sunday, March 7, at the Pan Am Center on the NMSU campus. After the competition, the dance floor will be open for event goers to join in the dance.

Fierro said this year's program is in full swing with competitors – including City Councillor Dolores Connor, Doña Ana Community College President Margie Huerta and Bright Star Dental's Dr. Brian Gilbert – practicing their choreography.

"Rumor has it some of the contestants

NMSU students set to perform 'iDance'

Life-inspired art dance to be performed

The New Mexico State University Dance Program presents "iDance," a student choreography showcase, at 7 p.m. Friday and Saturday, Feb. 19 and 20, at Oñate High School Performing Arts Center, 5700 Mesa Grande Drive. "iDance" is produced by senior dancers Marty Dorado, Melissa Hernandez, Laura Herrera, Angel Favela and Daniel Maese.

Many dance styles will be presented, ranging from Bollywood and contemporary to ballroom and jazz.

porary to ballroom and jazz. Dorado's "Scene 23" adds a jazzy-theatrical number to the show. It's suggestive of filming a night out on the town. Black Machine's "Jazz Machine" will provide the groove to which the dancers will move.

Inspired by his life, Dorado also will present "Gemini," a recollection of personal experiences to the music of Ludwig Von Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata." His "Luck of Life" is a contemporary piece that tells different stories of life experiences after high school. His final choreography, "Disrupt," is another contemporary work portraying the disruption of a peaceful life. Herrera shakes things up with a Bollywood piece inspired by the movie, "Slumdog Millionaire." This piece features dancers from the NMSU Dance Program as well as guest dancers from the El Paso area.

Hernandez debuts with "Symphonic." This work offers a new perspective on dance by experimenting with sharp and fluid movements.

Inspired by a combination of the unsolved murders in Mexico with the story of Jack the Ripper, Favela presents "Ripper." This piece is presented in four sections to allow the audience a deeper view into the choreographers view on murder.

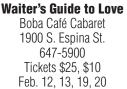

Maese ponders the thought of what possibly happens immediately after death with his piece, "Ascension," which he dedicates to the memory of four loved ones. Maese depicts another end in the form of relationships with "Breaking Ties."

Tickets will be available at the door or at the NMSU Dance Office for $10 per adult, $8 per student/senior citizen. For more information, call 646-2070.

'Love Letters' trace an ill-fated romance

Black Box Theatre hosts 10th annual Valentine's show

No Strings Theatre Company presents its 10th annual production of A.R. Gurney's 1988 smash hit "Love Letters," with performances at 5 and 8 p.m. on Valentine's Day, Sunday, Feb. 14, at the Black Box Theatre, 430 N. Main St.

Black Box Theatre, 430 N. Main St. Toni Marie and Peter Herman star in this two-character play, which chronicles the life long relationship between a man and a woman solely through their correspondence. Marie has been seen in "Six Dance Lessons in Six Weeks," "The Belle of Amherst" and "Three Viewings" at the Black Box Theatre. Herman is No Strings Theatre Company's resident designer and technical director and was in the 2005 production of "Love Letters" with his wife Ceil.

"Love Letters" tells the story of Andrew Makepeace Ladd and Melissa Gardner, whose poignantly funny friendship and ill-fated romance takes them from second grade through adolescence, maturity and middle age. "Love Letters" has gained a unique reputation all over the United States and overseas owing to the celebrity casts who performed it throughout the 1990s. It is a unique and imaginative piece, which, in the words of playwright Gurney, "needs no theater, no lengthy rehearsal, no special set, no memorization of lines and no commitment from its two actors beyond the night of performance." The letters, as the actors read them

The letters, as the actors read them aloud, create an evocative, touching, frequently funny, but always telling pair of character studies. The Wall Street Journal called it "the love affair of a lifetime" and "an exhilarating, funny, moving event." Time Magazine lauded it as "one of the best American plays of the decade" and the New York Times praised it as "wittily, irresistibly moving."

Romance's awkward moments served with a side of fun Three veteran Las Cruces performers

Three veteran Las Cruces performers present their take on love, dating and relationships in "The Waiter's Guide to Love" at the Boba Cabaret Friday and Saturday, Feb. 12 and 13, and Feb. 19 and 20.

David Edwards, Gail Wheeler and Bob Diven perform this collection of sketches presenting some of the hazards of trying to find that special person and some of the pitfalls of the dating game. The sketches are connected by Diven's offbeat, quirky songs about men, women, pharmaceuticals and canine companionship.

"Most people who are looking for love, whether through the singles ads and now through Internet dating services, know what a mess it can be," Edwards said. "There are those awkward moments when you first meet, and if you happen to actually like the other person's appearance you always run the risk of and blowing it."

"Nine times out of 10, you say something and wish immediately that you could take it back," Wheeler said. "You have to be brave to even attempt venturing into the dating world and there are so many ways it can go wrong."

Diven, who recently performed a oneman show at Boba, is an actor, writer, artist, singer and songwriter with a slightly skewed and highly entertaining view of life in general. He turns his musical talents to examining the battles between the sexes.

Edwards has been an actor and director in Las Cruces theater for almost 40 years and has appeared in a wide variety of com-

Artist puts faces on endangered, threatened animals

By KRISTINE SANDRICK

Walk into the Blue Gate Gallery at 311 N. Main St. and you'll be surrounded by at least 26 pairs of eyes. Many of the 26 faces are soft and kind. Others look fairly stern as if to say, "Don't even think about it."

If only Miller's oil depictions of these endangered, threatened and vulnerable animals could have spoken over the centuries. Maybe people, who have been charged with caring for the planet, would have left these magnificent beings alone.

Miller's "Endangered Wildlife" exhibit is on display through March. She hopes to add 14 more paintings to the collection sometime.

"I have always had a love of animals," she said. "Two years ago, a local gallery owner wanted me to do a one-woman show of just eyes, which startled me because it was a concept I never considered.'

Then she thought of animal eyes - lions, tigers, wolves and zebras. It's a concept that caused her to reach, which is something she said she likes to do.

"I discovered everything that I was painting was on the endangered species list and that really upset me," Miller said.

That emotional connection to her subjects caused Miller to paint as many endangered, threatened or vulnerable animals as she could create for this show.

Miller's animal faces are painted in oil on gallery-wrapped canvases. She said for this particular exhibit, she decided to go without frames so the viewer's eye would see only straight-shot portraits of animals' faces.

They're hanging on a thick black band, which runs all the way around the gallery, "to signify the armband when one is in grief," she said. She made all the portraits the same size, 16-by-20 inches, to add to the effect. Each painting is created from a photograph - many Miller has taken, some were shot by her daughter, one came from local photographer Mike Groves and the photographs of the lion and tiger were from National Geographic photographer, Ted Schiffman.

"I loved his photos of animals and he liked my work," she said.

'Go for it'

She said her painting career has been hit or miss. "I had an interest in art in high school and won a national award for high school students with

Dick's Café loves Las Cruces

A recent flame adds even more fame

By JEFF BARNET For the Las Cruces Bulle

Ace Perez, the third-generation owner of Dick's Café, looks over his shoulder at a group of customers, older men in boots and blue jeans.

"These guys are here all the time," he said with a smile. "People feel at home here. The customers all have stories. That is the part of the busi-ness I like best: sitting down and listening to their stories

The story is that Dick's Café is nationally known for its salsa and green chile cheeseburgers, thanks to generations of New Mexico State University students who have since moved all over the United States. NMSU alumni, especially those on the East Coast, buy Dick's Café salsa online. Perez said that people on airplanes, upon learning he is from Las Cruces, ask if he has heard of Dick's Café

"It's amazing how many people have heard of this place," he said.

Perez's grandfather, Dick Perez, founded the restaurant, which had several locations before settling on Valley Drive in the '70s. The café traces its origins to a service counter at a gas station Dick ran east of Tortugas, N.M. in 1959. After serving in the Marines, Dick honed his cooking skills at La Posta and at restaurants all over the West.

"He traveled on the railroad like a hobo," Perez said, "stopping to work at restaurants along the way from the Grand Canyon to California."

After his romance with the rails, Dick endeared himself to his student customers by feeding them and say-variety of egg plates, omelettes and burritos. Huevos rancheros are the most popular item. Lunch ranges from $6 to $8, he said, with American and Mexican food items such as tacos, enchiladas and steaks, including chicken-fried steaks. Hamburgers and green chile cheeseburgers are the most popular items, he said, in addition to the homemade French fries.

Dick's Café also serves beer and wine.

"Everything's made to order with fresh green chile from the Valley," Perez said.

Dick's Café was closed for 10 months after a fire in the kitchen, which has been memorialized in a painting of flames around the kitchen window.

JEFF BARNET I The Las Cruces Bulletin

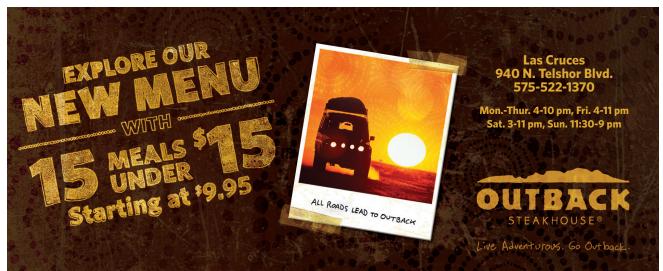

Perez used the occasion to remodel and modernize the interior of the café, which now features 27 tables and booths. The café continued operating at nearby Smokey Dick's, the barbecue place run by Perez's wife, Michelle. The Perez family, including former Dick's Café owners Bobby Perez and Jimmy Rodriguez (Ace Perez's father and uncle, respectively), owns seven restaurants in Las Cruces.

"Dick's Cafe has been good to my family," he said, "There's no place like it. You grow to love it."

Perez said he is working on increasing Dick's Café name recognition and brand awareness through the online salsa sales. But in other ways, he said, "Dick's Café will be the way it's always been.'

The influence of his grandfather, he said, would always be felt at the café.

"He was a humble man," Perez said. "I think he would be proud of all of us."

Coming of age film finds Chan taking the long road back ohm

allows him a brief tryout.

REVIEW BY JEFF BERG

"The Drummer" stars Jaycee Chan, Jackie's son, but has little to do with martial arts, thank you very much. Nor does it have cornball comedy, in the style that Jackie has been reduced to in most of his movies

Instead, it tells the standard coming of age tale, placing young Sid (Chan), at a crossroads in his life, but in a refreshing way that connects with viewers.

Involved with the wrong people at the wrong times and places, Sid is on the run after one such incident. It seems that he was cozying up with the wife of a local crime big wig. To complicate matters, Sid's father runs a rival gang, and though an uneasy truce seems to exist between the two factions, Sid's pa owes

Ma (the name of the rival gang leader ... how could I resist?) a favor, and that favor is going to involve Sid. However, Sid's father sends him away under the protective custody of a trusted deputy, one who has become uneasy about his own lifestyle with the mob.

The two men are safely ensconced in a hideaway deep in the forested mountains, when the young, restless and bored Sid decides to go for a hike one day. He happens upon a community of Zen drummers who practice their chosen lifestyle in seclusion, incorporating their drumming skills with Tai Chi and non-lethal martial arts. the Zen groups Fascinated, the spoiled and nervy Sid insinuates himself into the group by claiming he too has drumming skills, which indeed is something he does have, since he was a drummer for a rock band. Skeptical but balanced,

accepted, to the chagrin of some the other drumming group members.

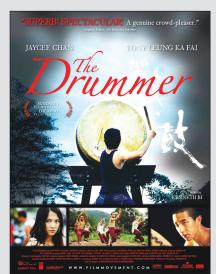

Although this is somewhat of a standard coming-of-age-through-change lifestyle story, director Kenneth Bi handles it very well. Bi injects light comedy into the film via scenes of Sid's attempt to become a full-fledged member of the troupe and he also allows the picture to follow several small stories with ease through his clever editing.

It sparkles with great music from the drumming by the real life drum group, U Theater, and the rest of the score, which incorporates stringed instruments as well. Scenes flow well and Bi does well by allowing the more experienced actors a lot of screen time. He sticks mostly to the story of Sid's transformation rather than making it a good guy/bad guy chase movie.

As the film moves along, the story manages to easily incorporate the essential parts - the chase, the transformation, the budding romance that fizzles and some gentle wisdom - into a pleasing and interesting little film.

Romance and music combine in 'Once'

The Cinematinee for Saturday, Feb. 13, is "Once" (2006, 85 minutes, rated R, filmed in the streets of Dublin, directed by John Carney).

The lead character – played by Glen Hansard, front man for the indie rock back The Flames - is a street musician in Dublin who plays his own songs at night and those that people like to hear during the day. To earn money, he works in his father's vacuum cleaner repair shop. The old man believes that one day his son will get a recording contract.

The romantic young man has used the breakup with his girlfriend as material for his latest songs. When a pretty Czech immigrant hears him on the street, she is impressed and strikes up a conversation. Learning that he repairs vacuum cleaners, she just happens to have her broken vacuum with her the next time they meet. She takes him to a music store, and she plays one of his songs on the piano, singing along as well. He is totally floored by her love of his songs and her talent. She invites him to her place where she lives with her young daughter and mother. Her husband is in Czechoslovakia and may be coming soon to Dublin.

Irish writer and director John Carney calls his film an "art house musical," and it really succeeds in drawing us into the orb of these two unassuming individuals who share a magical moment of making beautiful music together in a recording studio with several other musicians. The folk-rock music really works wonders, and the performances by the two leads are filled with charm and vulnerability as they struggle with moving from friendship to a love relationship. He is the romantic one and his yearning for her is palpable. The energy and ease of "Once" focuses on people whose lives are enriched by their passion for music.

Unless otherwise noted, screening time is 1:30 p.m. and admission is $4 for everyone except film society members who are admitted for $1. The theater is located one-half block south of the Mesilla Plaza, For information, call 524-8287, and leave a message.

Travolta reprises happy hit man role But his 'roid' warrior acting can't carry 'From Paris with Love'

By JEFF BARNET

"From Paris With Love" may sound like a great Valentine's Day movie, but unless your date likes scorched-earth, high body-count shootouts and car chases, this may not be your best option.

Nevertheless, if you are in the mood for some fun, mindless action entertain-ment, "From Paris with Love" delivers.

James Reece (Jonathan Rhys Meyers) is Charlie's hapless sidekick, a chessplaying lovesick, low-level state depart-

FROM PARIS WITH LOVE

Director: Pierre Morel Starring: John Travolta, Jonathan Rhys Meyers Running time: 95 minutes

Not until Wax reveals that all the shootings, bombings and killings are leading the pair to a terrorist cell does Reece begin to understand the method behind Wax's madness.

"From Paris With Love" is not as bloody as one may guess. Though there are two or three moments where the camera lingers on some carnage, for the most part the villains - Jihadists with lots of C4 and no good lines – go down easily, like targets in a video game. Wax, by his count, kills 26 bad guys in less than 24 hours. He is a Royale-with-Cheese killing machine.

After shooting their way through many scenic parts of Paris, Wax and Reece stumble onto the fact that the terrorist cell intends to kill the visiting U.S. Secretary of State and her entourage. Wax is sent on a wild goose chase against a decoy, while Reece realizes the real danger is, of all people, his beauti-ful girlfriend (the Polish actress Kasia Smutniak), who turns out to be a terrorist. (Don't you hate it when that happens?) A hopeless romantic, Reece still loves this bomb-making bombshell. Wax is less forgiving, but he's a guy and he understands. It's a dilemma. (I think this was the "with love" part.)

There is a wonderful scene where Travolta answers his cell phone while aiming his bazooka at another car during a high-speed chase. One cannot help think that the City of Las Cruces police would issue him a citation for that. There's also a very arty shootout at a mannequin shop, which makes you wonder why action movies don't have more mannequin shop shootout scenes.

I spent about five minutes trying to figure out what deeper meanings and possible allegorical parallels might be behind "From Paris With Love," but I think it is supposed to be a fun, shoot 'em up buddy film.

The trouble is Meyers doesn't rise to the occasion as Travolta's sidekick. Granted, that is not easy: Travolta lights up the screen with his larger-than-life persona. And Wax is not one-dimensional: Travolta imbues his character with many human, sentimental and quirky traits. But while Travolta is good, he can't carry the movie by himself. Wax deserves a cast of characters as colorful and crazy as he is.

Perhaps "From Paris With Love" needs a sequel: one with a more complex plot and a world of interesting people for Wax to bounce off of and dispense with in his "roid" warrior manner. We can only hope that another Wax movie "Psycho in Moscow," perhaps? - might achieve that potential.

The best GL Green design elements Building team spared no elegant detail

when building Via Sombra Court home

seating area, echoes the interior's luxury and comfort.

BY BETH SITZLER The Las Cruces Bulletin

When GL Green and Associates designed the home at 2405 Via Sombra Court, located in the Estancias del Valle subdivision in Mesilla, the building team included the most desirable aspects of its previous homes to create an awe-inspiring estate.

Surrounded by a mature pecan orchard, the subdivision, comprised of eight 1-acre lots, features an idyllic rural atmosphere only minutes away from New Mexico State University and Mesilla Plaza.

"There aren't too many 1-acre parcels surrounded by mature pecan trees that are out of town, but still close to NMSU," said Anthony Linus, GL Green and Associates' vice president of marketing and business development. "We search Las Cruces for the most ideal lots."

Greg Green, owner and chief executive officer of the building company, said one challenge he faced when constructing the home was removing select pecan trees.

An even bigger challenge, however, was determining what ideal spaces and special amenities should be included in the home.

"We took the very best elements from many of our most recent homes and custom-designed an absolutely stunning floor plan," said Green, adding that these elements include open spaces, a home theater, a luxurious master retreat and seamless outdoor and indoor living spaces. "The estate is different, however, insofar as this particular floor plan has never been built before."

Working collaboratively, the entire GL Green and Associates team had input in the home's design and features, creating a lavish residence incorporating the company's award-winning signature Tuscan style.

The home's one-of-a-kind elegance begins with the forecourt, which features hand-stacked elements, decorative stone work, a stained and stamped concrete pathway and double doors to a bedroom.

"We tried to maintain the integrity of the natural landscape," Linus said, adding that the grounds are low-maintenance.

Once inside the foyer, guests are enveloped in an idyllic Tuscan style, which includes natural stonework, wood timber features, brick and iron accents, elegant lighting and plumbing fixtures and unique interior wall finishing. The open space draws attention to the area's double barrel vault ceiling.

"A lot of drama and a lot of 'wow' factor," Linus said. "People don't want to come home to a box." Designed with a split floor plan, the guest side of the

Designed with a split floor plan, the guest side of the home is comprised of two of the home's three bedrooms and a half bath. "They're not bland, flat rooms with low ceilings," Linus said.

Built to be versatile, the bedrooms can fill whatever role the owners need, including a home office or study.

The heart of the home is the great room, kitchen and dining area, which Green said has earned praise from visitors. The chef-friendly kitchen features copious amounts of countertop space, a prep island, stainless-steel appliances, knotty alder cabinets, brick detailing and a wood fire-inspired stove top with space below for a cookbook collection.

"It's built for entertaining and for family gatherings," Linus said of the kitchen-dining room area.

Also designed for entertaining is the great room, which includes a wood timber diamond grid ceiling design for drama. The room also has a fireplace and multiple windows that showcase the outdoor living area.

Old World doors set to the left and the right of the fireplace enclose the home theater and master suite.

"Our in-house architectural designer (Matt Adams) is very passionate about symmetry and proportion," Green said. "He spends countless hours on all of our custom floor plans, and this home was no exception."

The home theater features raised seating as well as space for a 100-inch high definition projection TV.

The master suite, designed to be a spalike retreat, features a recessed tray ceiling and cedar corbels, common elements found in GL Green and Associates homes. Several large windows fill the room with natural light and the view of the pecan orchard.

At the center of the master bathroom is the large jetted bathtub, enclosed in honed travertine tile. The bathroom also features two granite sinks, bronze finished faucets and a walk-in snail shower. Adjacent to the master suite for convenience is the laundry room.

The home's elegance transitions to the outdoor living area. "What makes this home so spectacular is the way in which the various indoor and outdoor living spaces are seamlessly integrated into one another," Green said.

The open-air courtyard features a covered kitchen area as well as a semi-enclosed living area, complete with two TVs, a fireplace and water features.

Linus said a large amount of detail was paid to the home, which will be featured in the Spring Showcase of Homes. From the skylight decorations and wood trim to the multiple ceiling treatments, no decorative stone was left unturned.

"It's comprehensive," Linus said. "You can't replicate what we do."

The home is open to the community from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturdays. Also, GL Green and Associates is planning a public event at the home, which will feature refreshments and live music.

It's tea time Use bags around the house By Beth Sitzler

While drinking tea first began under the Chinese Emperor Shen-Nung in 2737 B.C., the brew has become one of the most popular beverages around.

Tea has several health benefits. Along with containing age-fighting antioxidants, it also can reduce heart attacks and strokes, protect bones, boost the immune system and increase metabolism. Many prefer tea over coffee because it contains less caffeine and is calorie free.

There are six varieties of tea – white, yellow, green, oolong, black and pu-erh. There are also several ways to brew tea, from infusers to tea balls. The most popular method, however, is the tea bag. Created in 1908 by New York merchant John Sullivan, the first tea bags were made from silk muslin sachets. Now, tea bags are made from gauze.

One way to dispose of your used tea bags is to throw them into your compost heap. The tea will add valuable nutrients to your soil.

If you don't have a compost pile, use those tea bags around the house.

1. Pamper your feet: Use chamomile or peppermint tea to give your tootsies a soothing soak. Place a few tea bags into 1 quart of hot water for 10 minutes. Add cold water if the brew is too warm for your skin. Soak your feet for 20 to 30 minutes. Do this several times a week. Not only will the tea be relaxing, it will also deodorize your feet.

2. Relieve a sunburn: If you've spent too much time out in the sun, ease the pain of a sunburn with the help of tea bags. Place a few tea bags on your skin to relieve the sting and cool it off. If they won't stay in place, secure them with gauze. This also works on other minor burns. For full-body relief, brew a few bags in your bathtub and soak in it.

3. Freshen your carpet: Breathe new life into your carpet with tea bags, preferably spice or vanilla flavored. Open up several tea bags and sprinkle the dried tea leaves onto your carpet. Let the tea sit for at least 15 minutes before you vacuum up the bits. The carpet will have a delightful tea scent.

4. Revitalize your potted plants: Give your houseplants a boost by placing a few used tea bags on top of the drainage material in the bottom of the planter. Cover them with soil and plant as usual. The tea bags will retain their moisture and will slowly release nutrients into the soil.

5. Spoil your rose bush: Roses thrive on tannic acid, which is found in tea. Open several tea bags and spread their contents under your rose bushes. This is especially great for enhancing your roses in mid-summer, when the plants are semi-dormant.

6. Perk up your peepers: After a long, sleepless night, your eyes will not only feel tired, but will also look it. Create a compress for swollen, puffy eyes from wet tea bags. Soak the bags in cool or lukewarm water and place them on your eyes. Sit back and relax for 15 minutes before removing the bags.

7. Stop bleeding gums: After losing a tooth, whether by nature or having one pulled at the dentist's office, you're gums will most likely bleed. Stop the bleeding by pressing a cold, wet tea bag against your gum. The tea bag will soak up the blood and leave a pleasant taste.

8. Fix a broken fingernail: It may come as a surprise, but you can use a tea bag to repair a broken fingernail. Cut a piece of the tea bag paper to fit the nail and coat it with clear nail polish. Press it to the broken nail and after it dries, cover it with your favorite colored nail polish

9. Vanquish a wart: While roses love the tannic acid in teas, especially black tea, warts hate it. Eliminate a growth without dry ice by placing a warm, wet tea bag directly on the area for 10 to 15 minutes. Do this two to three times a day and the wart will shrink significantly in no time

10. Clean messy pots and pans: After hosting a fabulous dinner party, you'll most likely have two things left over: The memories of good times with friends and a sink full of dirty, caked on pots and pans. Don't fret - grab some tea bags. Let your pots and pans soak over night with a few tea bags. In the morning, the crud will have loosened, allowing them to be easily cleaned.

11. Add a scent: Instead of infusing your dresser in potpourri, use tea bags. Select a fragrant tea and empty several of the containers into a muslin bag. Store the bag in your dresser drawers, or under your car seat to freshen vour wheels.

Berry Good Chai Pie
pre-baked pie crust (plain, whole wheat, or graham cracker), cooled to room temperature quart fresh whole strawberries cup fresh or frozen strawberries, crus	h

- ed 1/ 1/2 cup Chai liquid concentrate
- 2 sweetener

2 teaspoons cornstarch

Cut the whole strawberries into thin slices and arrange the slices in the pie crust. Combine the crushed strawberries and Chai concentrate in a small saucepan. Bring the mixture to a boil, then reduce heat to medium and cook for two or three minutes, stirring constantly. Remove from heat.

In a small mixing bowl combine the sweetener and cornstarch and mix well. Strain the Chai mix-ture through a fine sieve into the bowl and blend thoroughly (a wire whisk works very well). Return this blend to the saucepan and cook over medium heat until it is clear and thickened, stirring constantly to prevent burning and sticking. Remove from heat and cool for five to 10 minutes

Use a pastry brush to lightly coat the edges of the crust with glaze, then spoon the rest of the glaze evenly over the strawberries. Serve immediately, or chill briefly. Serve it within a few hours of preparation. (Recipe adapted from www.catteacorner.com.)

Roll your way to happy, healthy soil Get easy compost with this gadget

By BETH SITZLER The Las Cruces Bulletin

The first step to creating a healthy garden is to make nutritious compost.

According to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, compost is an organic material – created from the natural decaying process – that is used to correct soil so plants may grow. Compost is a great way to reuse and recycle yard trimmings and food and wood waste, keeping them out of landfills.

Compost, which is full of microorganisms, has several benefits. Along with suppressing plant diseases and pests, it also reduces the need for chemical fertilizers and promotes higher yields of plant production. Compost also allows plants to retain their moisture and decreases erosion and runoff.

Usually, to create compost at home, you would have to designate an area of your backyard where you would dump the items. The pile would then have to be turned once a week with a shovel or rake.

For those of you, however, who don't have the time or space to maintain an open pile of compost, you can use the round wheel composter to do the dirty work.

What is it?

The round wheel composter, also known as a tumble composter, is a compact device that is perfect for yard waste and kitchen scraps and can be used all year.

Most round wheel composters will come with a base to collect the liquid fertilizer, or compost tea, which drips from the drum. The compost tea can be used to fertilize the soil of indoor and outdoor plants. Be sure to dilute the liquid with water – about 10 parts water to one part compost tea.

How does it work?

To use the round wheel composter, simply toss in your organic material and turn the container. Depending on the model, the composter will either be turned by a crank or rollers. Spin the composter a few times each week to mix and aerate its contents.

Keep the drum contents moist, but not wet. To do this, spray it with your hose about once a week. How much water is needed depends on how much green and brown material you have in your drum.

Green materials are high in nitrogen, such as grass clippings, weeds, vegetable scraps and eggshells, while brown materials are high in carbon, such as dried leaves, pine needles, twigs hedge trimming and paper. More brown material is needed to successfully make compost.

The round wheel composter can be found at home and garden stores around town, including Home Depot and Lowe's.

How much does it cost?

Depending on the round wheel composter's model and brand, it can cost as little as $50 or as much as $180.

Helpful hints:

In the winter, continue to add waste to your composter, but do not turn it. Freezing breaks down the fibers in organic material and will accelerate decomposition in the spring.

Never compost diseased or pesticidetreated plants because they can infect the compost pile and influence the finished product. Also, never compost invasive weeds since their spores and seeds can survive the composting process and spread to your garden or yard.

Do your spring veggie garden homework now

Some plants can be prepared now, others should wait

We still have cold freezing nights in February, so don't be tempted by the warm days to plant items that are not frost tolerant. This includes, but is not limited to, tomato plants, peppers, squash and melons.

If you still insist on planting the fore mentioned now, you can use a product called "Wall O Water" season extenders. These are clear plastic columns that, when filled with water, will provide frost protection and will allow fruit development and harvest up to 30 to 40 days sooner.

Vegetables that are safe to plant now are broccoli, peas, lettuce, collards, radish, mustard, spinach, onions, kale, kohlrabi, turnips, celery, Chinese cabbage and Brussels sprouts. These plants will take our typical cold February temperatures without damage. Just make sure the plants you use are "hardened off," meaning that they are acclimated to cold temperatures before they are planted in the ground. In other words, they are not just out of "greenhouse" conditions.

After the likelihood of frost is over, which is typically late March and early April – but don't quote me on this – you should be able to plant tender veggies.

One of the best indicators that we have had our last frost is when the local native mesquite shrubs begin to leaf out. Keep in mind that nature can break its own rules, so use this as a guideline only. You should be prepared to cover new seedlings just in case Mother Nature changes her mind.

That said, tomatoes, cucumber, melons, squash, corn, okra and sweet potato are some vegetables that also should be safe to plant after the leaves on the native mesquites have emerged. Peppers and eggplant are usually better off when the soil warms up and the night time temperatures are consistently above 50, so you may want to hold off on these until mid to late April or after.

Before planting a vegetable garden it is most important to apply generous amounts of organic material. You can use compost, manure, peat moss and or any combination of the above. Do not use fresh manure, the salt content in the manure could burn tender seedling roots and may have weed seed to boot. If you use fresh manure, it is suggested to apply it in the fall months so that it has time to break down.

Our soil, if you can call it that, has very few nutrients in it. In most cases, you will have to supplement the ground with fertilizer. There are many forms of fertilizer application. There are water soluble, granular, dry organic, liquid organic and vegetarian organic forms available. Choose whichever works best for you.

Some granular or powder forms typically last longer in the soil, but may bother allergy sufferers when applied during breezy days. Water soluble fertilizer can help avoid this problem, but will have to be applied more often. Organic fertilizers come in dry and liquid forms as well. Some organics may be in all-vegetarian form as well. Some of the drawbacks of organic fertilizers are that they may take a longer time to work, and are generally more expensive to use. Whichever fertilizer you choose, please read and follow the recommendation on the label.

Knowing how much water to use is always a challenge. We live in a very dry climate so some soils can dry out very quickly. As a rule it is best to keep the soil evenly moist but not soggy. Sandy soils need frequent light watering, while heavy clay soils benefit from slow irrigation.

The use of mulch is recommended for any soil. This can be anything from plastic film, landscape cloth, shredded bark or compost, to name a few. The use of mulch will help maintain soil moisture and will also help reduce or even prevent weeds. Using organic mulch, in my opinion, is best, because as this breaks down, it helps build up the soil.

So, if you do your homework on vegetable gardening, the warm days and freezing nights can't fool you.

Building an environmentally conscious home Tad Davis provides Las Cruces with energy efficiency and comfort

BY BETH SITZLER The Las Cruces Bulletin

Since entering the building world about 10 years ago, Tad Davis has worked to provide the community with environmentally conscious homes.

"I was building green homes before it was a catch phrase," he said.

Although Davis was born in Las Cruces, he spent his childhood elsewhere. He later returned to the City of the Crosses during high school and has lived here since.

"I watched the town change dramatically, especially in the last 10 years," he said.

He attended New Mexico State University, where he tried his hand at several majors before earning his bachelor's degree in marketing.

"At one time or another I majored in engineering, biology, art," he laughed.

He said his real passion was in art, and at one point he was involved in the jewelry making business.

Before entering the building industry, Davis said he dabbled in several fields, from home appraisals to managing a tire store and operating a one-hour photo lab.

For 13 years, he worked for a manufactured-home moving company that specialized in transporting and setting up the prefabricated dwellings.

"I just really didn't like that industry," he said. "I was uncomfortable with what people were getting for their money."

A green change

Wanting to be involved with more Earth-friendly homes, Davis began taking workshops on building straw bale houses – "the original green movement," he said.

During the workshops for the green dwellings, which are made of stacks of straw bails covered in plaster, Davis met a builder who introduced him to insulated concrete forms (ICF), an energy-efficient building material created from recycled Styrofoam and concrete.

Along with building with the green material, which is sound and fire proof, Davis said he sells and installs ICFs around the region.

"It's my specialty," he said. "They're growing in popularity. In the long term, a house with ICF walls will outlast a frame house."

He added that since there isn't any wood or biodegradable material in ICF, homeowners don't have to worry about mold, mildew or bugs. "These walls will be up hundreds of years," he said. "There's nothing in them that will disintegrate."

Davis said he became more and more involved with building and remodeling green structures.

"I was doing a lot of projects for friends and I built my own home," he said.

He was then approached by his college friend Craig Remington to start a building company together – Remington-Davis General Contractors.

Davis said Remington, who had been in the building industry for 25 years, specializes in commercial, industrial and institutional construction, while he focuses on residential building and commercial remodeling.

"I'm building in a real niche. Not everyone sees the value in building green homes," he said. "I care about the environment. It's the responsible thing to do. I wouldn't feel good if I just built frame houses as many and as fast as possible. I feel good about my finished product."

A place to call home

Since forming the company, Davis said he has been able to build ICF homes and express his artistic side.

In college, he said an art teacher encouraged him to go to architecture school. While he wasn't able to leave the state to do so, he said building has allowed him to creatively express himself.

"I get to be involved in designing homes by being a builder," he said. "It's my way of getting into the architecture process through the back door."

Davis said he finds enjoyment in the entire construction process, from the blueprints to the finished product.

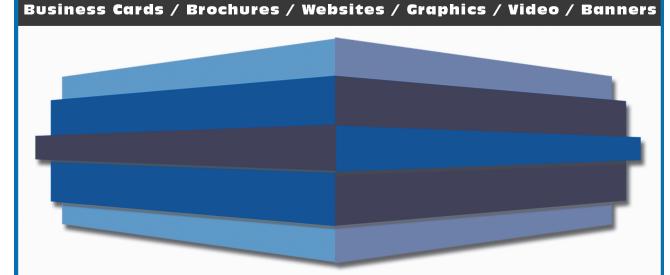

"I like going from a concept to a physical structure," he said. "It's satisfying to see something you built that is functional but also beautiful."

Davis said he works to give his clients the best product for their money and a place for them to hang their hat.

"After people live in these homes for a while and pass the initial drama of building a house, they are usually very satisfied," he said. "It's nice to know that they enjoy it and are comfortable.

"My approach is: No. 1, I want my homes to be energy efficient and affordable to live in. No. 2, I want them to be comfortable to live in. I'm not trying to get rich, I'm trying to give people affordable, comfortable homes that are good on the environment."

He said the biggest challenge he faces as a builder is Continued on following page

"getting people to realize ahead of time how comfortable a green house is." Many people, he said, focus on the price per square feet and don't consider other factors, such as cost of living, maintenance and comfort.

"It's hard to convey how comfortable these homes are to live in," he said. "It just feels different."

Along with being comfortable, Davis said the cost of living in an energy-efficient home is less in the long run than that of a traditionally built home.

Davis said he isn't a high-volume builder and has constructed about 15 homes in his career.

"I focus all of my attention into what I'm building," he said. "I take on enough to keep me occupied."

In addition to building green homes, conducting renovations and selling ICFs, Davis also specializes in creating concrete countertops.

Concrete expression

"Creativity is important to me," Davis said. "Making concrete countertops is a creative endeavor."

An alternative to granite, a concrete countertop is a green material that requires a great deal of craftsmanship, he said. In addition to costing the same as granite, the concrete is manufactured and polished to look like the natural rock.

"It's more flexible in design and color," he said, adding that unlike granite, which is straight and flat, concrete can be molded to fit any shape.

He said he was first introduced to the product five years ago after he read an article about concrete countertop expert Fu-Tung Cheng. "I was curious," he said. "Each time I do one, I learn something new. It's a learning process, and no two pieces are alike. Each are individual.

Along with fabricating countertops, he also makes concrete fireplaces, islands, backsplashes and vertical walls.

Over the years, Davis said he has learned from his experiences and will continue to do so in the future. He said he wants to continue to create concrete countertops as well as green homes and is even looking into being a part of the Building Industry Association of Southern New Mexico's Green Street.

"Anything that promotes (green building) is a great idea," he said. "I'm excited to maybe be involved with that."

He said he is also interested in designing and building affordable homes.

Tad Davis remodeled his home at 2144 Calle de Principal, which was originally two separate dwellings.

Class teaches the correct way to nurture your garden

By Beth Sitzler

With winter still lingering, now is the time to ready your soil for the approaching spring. To help Las Crucens create the best environment for their plants, Enchanted Gardens held an organic garden soil preparation class

Saturday, Feb. 6. "Sadly in New Mexico, what we really have is sand, not soil," said Jackye Meinecke, owner of Enchanted Gardens.

She said that while native plants have adapted to our sand and clay surroundings, which lack an abundance of organic material, non-native plants are in need of outside help to thrive. The first thing Meinecke said gardeners need to do to prepare a new garden is conduct a soil test. To do this,

Bloodmeal	Nitrogen for green leaves;

Bonemeal	Phosphorus for fruit/flower
Cattle manure, dried	Soil condition
Coffee grounds, dried Cottonseed meal

Green sand	Loosens clay; adds trace mineral

Colloidal (soft) phosphate
Gypsum

community members should take a sample of their soil to the Doña Ana County Extension Office, which will then send the sample to the Soil, Water and Agricultural Testing Laboratory at New Mexico State University.

Once the test is back, Meinecke said the gardener will have a better idea of what they are working with. While in the past many professionals recommended fertilizers, Meinecke said they should only be used as a booster along with other garden products, such as home-made compost, which adds a balance of nutrition, micronutrients and microbes.

"Keep putting on the compost to build good soil," she said. "Good soil doesn't happen overnight." There are several products available that will enhance local gardens. Since New Mexico has alkaline soil, it needs to be balanced with acidified substances.

"Don't put ash into our soil here," Meinecke warned. The three things plants need to flourish are nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium, she said. "Plants use nitrogen and phosphorous, that's why we have to constantly replenish them," Meinecke said. Nitrogen helps the plant and leaves grow green and vibrant, while phosphorus encourages fruit and blossom growth. Meinecke said potassium is part of the essential balance all plants need.

"If you have too much nitrogen, you will have lots of growth with low flower and fruit production," she said, adding that too much nitrogen will also burn the plant's roots, killing it. "Nitrogen is really good for evergreens, grass, things with heavy leaves.

Meinecke discussed 12 locally found organic materials that can be mixed and matched for the best results (see box). Most of these products are slow releasing and will feed the plants as they breakdown over a couple months. They should be replenished in the spring and fall.

'Every gardener has their own formula they swear by," she said.

Other nutrients that need to be added include calcium, such as gypsum, which also loosens soil and is great for tomatoes; magnesium, which is found in Epsom salt and especially helps roses; sulfur, which adds acidity; trace minerals, which have a wide variety of benefits; and iron. Meinecke said one indication that the created soil is well-balanced and nutritious is when the garden has earthworms.

"You know all of this is working when you have earthworms," she said. "When your soil is rich, they will move in.

While these products will help improve our local soil, Meinecke said they will not change it.

"We can play soil scientists, but if you have sand, it will remain sand," she said. "What you really need for a successful garden is to just pay attention to it."

New Mexico schools go green

Sustainability and energy-efficiency standards put in place by task force

By Beth Sitzler

While it is becoming more and more common to see green and energy-efficient houses, other sustainable buildings are also becoming popular. In 2006, Gov. Bill Richardson's first executive order of the year was to instill sustainable construction standards for all new state buildings, making them green and energy efficient. In response to the order, the High Performance (HiP) Schools Task Force was established.

'The idea is to start building buildings, school facilities that is, that were what is called sustainable, meaning they are easy to maintain, last longer and are better constructed," said Gene Gant, a member of the HiP Task Force. "The buildings will last a long time and will reduce the cost of operations.

Gant, who is now on the Public Education Commission, said he joined the task force when he was on the Las Cruces School Board because he felt schools in Las Cruces needed to be represented.

'I was at a conference in Albuquerque when the order came out, and I decided to volunteer for the task force," he said.

Gant said the task force reviews architectural plans for state schools to make sure they follow Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) standards.

Better building

Currently, the sustainable and energyefficient standards are being used to construct Las Cruces' new elementary, middle and high schools.

"The standards deal with the design of the building, the construction materials used and how they're constructed," Gant said. "There are so many improved materials, they provide a better facility and save the tax payers in the long run. The upfront cost is more, but the payback is much faster."

One element that has improved in the schools is the lighting, which Gant said is much easier on the eyes, therefore making it easier for the students to learn.

We're going back to more windows and natural light," he said. "The eyes are designed for sunlight, not this fluorescent light.'

He added that in classrooms that have an abundance of natural light, the overhead lights will automatically dim, saving electricity.

The heating and cooling system, which is more energy efficient than previous systems, also will automatically adjust in rooms infrequently used, such as janitor closets and restrooms, thanks to motion sensors

Gant said the middle school will use a geothermal heating and cooling system, which will use the soil as a heating and cooling exchanger, allowing the building's temperature to remain constant.

He added that they are unable to use a geother-mal heating and cooling system at the new high school because it is located on a geothermal pool.

"The ground stays too hot to do a proper heating and cooling exchange," he said.

In addition to natural light and a more efficient heating and cooling system, acoustics also are important in the new buildings.

"It's better," Gant said.

One improvement that deviates from a common Southwest architectural design characteristic is the roof, which will be either pitched or slanted - not flat.

"We're going away from flat roofs because they wear out sooner," Gant said, adding that the roofs will be made of steel to last longer.

There also are several health benefits to the new buildings, Gant said, including carpet and flooring that contain less allergens and walls without asbestos.

In addition to the design elements, using more durable products and creating less waste are also important in following LEED standards.

"Part of the LEED program standards is how you recycle material," Gant said. "There is a lot of waste when you build. You have to have a good recycling program and cut back on waste."

LCAR director leaves post

Realtors association begins search to fill executive position

By Beth Sitzler

Las Cruces Association of Realtors Executive Director Lynn Gould has announced that she will resign from the association. Isaac Chavez, LCAR governmental and public relations director, said Gould, who has been with organization for more than eight years, will resign at the end of the month on Feb. 26.

LCAR President Sharon DeBraal said a search committee was formed Friday, Feb. 5, to begin the process of finding a new executive director.

"This is a big deal for us," Chavez said. "We haven't gone through this process for a while.

The committee will be accepting résu-més for anyone interested in the position, including those from outside of the Las Cruces area.

"There's no timeline, this can take a month or a year," Chavez said. "You just never know how the process will go. "Whenever an executive officer leaves an association, there is always a transition period. Whether it's a smooth or difficult transition depends on how well the board of directors and current staff as well as the membership come together and manage the transition.²

To cut back on waste, he said they only purchase what they need and don't buy extra material that might end up at the landfill.

Gant said through the task force, the new Las Cruces middle and high schools have received $300,000 to go toward green construction expenses.

Benefits for all

In addition to setting sustainable standards, the HiP Task Force also accesses how well the newly constructed schools are performing. Sustainable and energyefficient schools have been built around the state, including in Rio Rancho, Artesia, Chaparral and Alamogordo.

"Some schools are showing success," Gant said.

Gant said the new school building stan-dards have several benefits for the entire community, which often uses the school facilities for events, meetings and other activities.

"First, when you're talking about educa-tion, a better facility for these kids means a better learning environment," he said. "Also, the staff and faculty have a better place to work. Lastly, it gives the taxpayers more for their money. These buildings will last 40 to 50 years.

Because schools receive a lot of wear and tear from continuous use, Gant said building sustainable and energy-efficient facilities will cost less to maintain.

"In the long run, they're cheaper and they save money for the taxpayers," he said. "You'll spend more money if the building isn't built well upfront. We're building the new ones right and it will cost less to run and operate these buildings than what we are currently using."

ATVs help with DIY projects

You've been dreaming about digging in your garden, tweaking your landscaping or improving your house all winter long. Now that the weather is nicer and your yard is clear and dry, it's time for you to get your hands dirty and start working. Having an off-road vehicle, also called all terrain vehicles, or ATVs, handy can help you save time and money – handling the heavy work that could require additional workers. Here are some ways having an off-road vehicle can help you with the home project you have planned:

- Hauling rocks or mulch around your yard is exhausting. Your offroad vehicle allows you and your helper to move and distribute these materials in different garden beds or around all your trees without tearing up your grass when the machine is set in turf mode. Remove dead branches and tow
- out bushes and trees easily using an off-road vehicle. Just hook up a winch around the bush to the vehicle's bumper and slowly apply
- pressure as you drive forward. Smooth out fresh dirt with a plow. Raking by hand is messy, and takes a lot of time. Instead, hook up a plow to your ATV and gently smooth out the dirt with the plow lowered to the level you want. If the dirt is already level, attach a pull-behind rake to your vehicle to make the dirt perfect for planting or seeding.
- Cart lumber from the driveway to the back patio for easier access to the house project you're working on. This will allow you to take fewer trips and saves your muscles from a few aches and pains, and also splinters. You also can reduce the number of helpers you need for the project – just make sure you have another person handy to help you load up the ATV.

Las Cruces' own green and sustainable neighborhoods

Development certification programs make more than homes sustainable, green

The Building Industry Association of Southern New Mexico (BIA-SNM) announced last week that the Fall Parade of Homes has been modified for 2010 and will now feature energy-efficient and sustainably built homes in a Green Street single-site setting.

The homes constructed will be special since each will be required to meet rigorous silver level certifications through either the Build Green New Mexico/NAHB Green or U.S. Green Built Council - LEED for Homes programs. Homes built within the development will also be Energy Star certified and will be required to have active solar energy generation capabilities.

Additionally, the developers of the entire, yet to be named, 33-lot subdivision, Green Street showcase site (located at the intersection of Brown and Compress roads) have committed to providing a certified green and sustainable designation for the entire development.

So what does it mean for a development or neighborhood to be certified as "green" and or "sustainable?" It depends on who you ask.

The same national organizations that provide the guidelines, standards and third-party certification for homes have developed comprehensive programs identifying and rewarding what they feel to be the best practices in sustainable and green subdivisions and neighborhoods.

USGBC's pilot LEED - Neighborhood Development certification system will be ready to be rolled out to residential developers nationwide later this year and it describes its Green Neighborhood projects as, "Exemplary projects that perform well in terms of smart growth, new urbanism and green building."

The National Association of Home Builders (NAHB) completed development of their ANSI-approved National Green Land Development Certification system in 2009. According to the NAHB website, "Green building expands beyond the walls of the structure to include site and community development considerations. The benefits of a home's green development practices such as xeriscaping, permeable pavement, low-impact development, storm water management and environmental preservation efforts are more fully realized when done on a larger community or subdivision scale."

The Home Builders Association of Central New Mexico created the BGNM program in 2006 as a way to certify and differentiate exemplary homes and developments in our state. BGNM has certified sustainable subdivisions using its own modified NAHB guidelines up until the first of this year.

Doña Ana County's own BGNM Certified Sustainable development – Picacho Mountain – is a great example of one type of green subdivision. Bob and Karen Pofahl and crew have embraced sustainability through efforts in environmental preservation, storm water management, low-impact pad preparation, a focus on renewable energy and access to open spaces.

ment such as Picacho Mountain, what you do not see is scraped, bladed and eroded home sites. What you do see is native vegetation, lot and street layouts that preserve natural water flows without causing soil loss and water pollution, great views, lots of native critters and good walking access to see it all.

If you talk to the Pofahls for more than a minute, they will explain that what you see so far is just the beginning and that their development is well on the way to being a true mixed-use neighborhood with homes, services, open spaces and recreation available for people at a range of income levels.

By contrast, the infill location of the new Green Street neighborhood can satisfy a significantly different set of green and sustainable development objectives. The existing homes and neighborhood surrounding the Green Street area are 20 to 50 years old. At this more urban location the new development will take advantage of an existing infrastructure of utilities, transportation and services.

Residents of the Green Street development will have ready access to the city core for jobs, schools, shopping, dining, government and transportation services (you may even be able to avoid the dreaded Telshor/ Lohman interchange altogether). All of these accessible service providers will gain economic benefit through an increased customer and tax base within an otherwise mature and limited growth area of our town.

Water quality and conservation are important everywhere in our part of New Mexico and measures will be included in the Green Street neighborhood to ensure plants, landscapes and hardscapes are water smart and appropriate for this area. Preliminary planning is in place to provide urban wildlife habitats within the neighborhood to encourage populations of native species, including beneficial insects, bats, reptiles and birds.

The great thing about these green and sustainable neighborhood development certification programs is their flexibility and the opportunity provided to implement key strategies and concepts in different types of developments. Hopefully, homeowners, builders, developers and city/county planners can use lessons learned about best practices demonstrated in diverse projects such as Green Street and Picacho Mountain to provide sustainable strategies for a range of neighborhood and multi-use development situations in the Las Cruces area.

Chile Lore, Tales & Tidbits.... Celebrate Mardi Gras Cajun style

Okra adds to gumbo, a popular Creole specialty

Mardi Gras, also known as Shrove Tuesday or Fat Tuesday, is always celebrated 46 days before Easter and the day before Lent, Ash Wednesday.

It's the grand finale of a weeklong colorful and glittery New Orleans parade featuring costume- and mask-clad par-tiers. This year, Mardi Gras falls on Feb. 16. To commemorate the occasion, I plan to prepare a Creole specialty – gumbo soup, a mainstay of New Orleans cuisine. Gumbo is a thick, stew-like dish, chockfull with a sundry of ingredients, including meat or seafood and a plethora of veggies, most notably okra, which serves as a thickening agent.

Fresh okra can be substituted for canned or frozen in gumbo recipes but should be fried first. This hot and spicy dish "hits the spot," especially on chilly nights.

takes some time, depending on how high the heat on your stove is. The slower, the better, but be ready to remove skillet from the heat and stir more rapidly if the roux appears to be burning. When done, immediately remove from heat and set aside.

Add the shrimp, oysters, garlic and bell pepper, and simmer for 2 minutes. Add tomatoes, parsley, bay leaf, Creole Sea-soning, water or fish stock, green onion, okra, prepared roux and crabmeat. Salt and pepper to taste. Let gumbo simmer for approximately 30 minutes. Serve over a bed of hot rice. Makes 6 servings. (Adapted from www.whatscookingamerica.com.)

Creole Seasoning Recipe

- 2 tablespoons onion powder 2 tablespoons garlic powder 2 tablespoons dried oregano leaves
 - 2 tablespoons dried sweet basil
 - 1 tablespoon salt (optional
 - or to taste)
 - tablespoon dried thyme leaves
 - tablespoon black pepper tablespoon white pepper
 - tablespoon cayenne pepper
 - 1 tablespoon celery seed
 - 5 tablespoons sweet paprika

Combine in food processor and pulse until well-blended, or mix thoroughly in a large bowl. The recipe doubles or triples well.

Mardi Gras Gumbo

2 medium onions, sliced

- 1 medium green pepper,
- cut into thin strips
- 2 cloves garlic, crushed
- 1/4 cup butter or margarine 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
- 3 cups water
- tablespoon instant dry 1
- beef bouillon
- teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon pepper
- 1 teaspoon hot red pepper sauce
- 1 bay leaf
- 1 can (16-ounces) okra, drained,

- or 1 package (10-ounces) frozen cut okra, thawed
- 1 can (16-ounces) whole

- tomatoes, undrained
- 1 can (6-ounces) tomato paste 1 pound frozen shrimp, thawed, peeled and deveined
- 3 cups hot cooked rice

1/4 cup snipped parsley

Cook and stir onions, green pepper and garlic in margarine in Dutch oven over low heat until onions are tender. Stir in flour. Cook over low heat, stirring constantly, until bubbly; remove from heat. Stir in remaining ingredients except shrimp, rice and parsley; break up tomatoes with fork. Heat to boiling; reduce heat. Simmer uncovered, stirring occasionally, about 45 minutes.

Stir shrimp into tomato mixture. Cover and simmer until shrimp are pink, about 5 minutes. Remove bay leaf. Serve gumbo over rice; sprinkle with parsley. Makes 6 servings. (Recipe adapted from "Betty Crocker's Cookbook," 1986.)

Classic Chicken Gumbo

- 3 1/2 pounds chicken
- 2 tablespoons bacon fat
- 1 garlic sausage, cut into chunks
- 2 medium sliced ham, diced
- 2 small bunches celery, or 1 large, chopped
- 2 white onions, chopped
- 1 green pepper, stemmed, seeded and diced
- 1 pound fresh okra, sliced
- 2 bay leaves
- Grated rind of 1 lemon
- 1/4 cup parsley
- Several cracked peppercorns
- Two or three dashes of hot
- sauce and cayenne pepper
- 2 1/2 quarts chicken stock

Cut chicken into serving pieces and brown them in bacon fat. Add garlic sausage and diced. Add enough additional fat to cover the bottom of the soup kettle and add celery, onions, green pepper and the sliced fresh okra. Cook, stirring until all the ingredients are nicely browned. Add bay leaves and the grated rind of lemon.

Cover the kettle and simmer the gumbo slowly for 30 minutes. Do not let it boil. Add chopped parsley, several cracked peppercorns and dashes of hot sauce and cayenne. The gumbo should be very highly seasoned. Add chicken stock, cover the pan and simmer the gumbo for 1-1/2 hours. Remove the bay leave, adjust the seasoning and serve with rice.

Move to extinguish fire ants

The fire ant has a terrible reputation - and even people who haven't felt their sting know to give them a wide berth.

The pain they inflict is actually a combination of bite and sting. Fire ants first bite to get a hold of their victim, then sting from their abdomen, pumping venom into the site. It's a fire-like sensation - hence the ants' name - and can cause serious problems for people who are sensitive.

Their searing sting is only a small part of the havoc these small insects can wreak.

The fire ant, which immigrated to the United States in the 1930s, causes millions of dollars in damage annually. They nest in soil at the base of trees, shrubs, grass or in homes, and are extremely aggressive, swarming and killing livestock, short-circuiting electrical equipment and burrowing under rural roads. Single queen mounds can number 30 to 100 per acre with up to 250,000 ants each. Don't wait for fire ants to take up residence in your

and destroy your property. Be proactive with these pests. Following are tips to keep them out – and get rid of them once inside:

Inspect the outside of your house. Cut away any plants that touch the structure. Ants will use plants as a bridge to get into your house.

When ants are inside your home, make sure to seal all food in containers. Ants are attracted to water, so make sure to drain your sink after washing the dishes and dry all counter tops.

Granular bait formulas applied outside the house are the most effective treatment for controlling indoor ant infestations. But this bait is only available to pest-control professionals.

There are versions homeowners can buy, but they're not as effective.

If you decide to spray, try to limit it to spot treatments where ants are entering the house, such as door thresholds.
