Ex-Congressman wants to return

By TODD G. DICKSON

Steve Pearce, who gave up his Second District seat in a failed bid for the U.S. Senate, announced Tuesday, July 21, that he wants to go back to July 21, that he wants to go back to the U.S. House of Representatives. Pearce, a Republican, said he is disturbed by Congressional spending and a vote for a "cap and trade" ener-gy bill by Harry Teague, a Democrat, who, like Pearce, is from Hobbs. Pearce announced his run in Hobbs and Las Cruces.

At Rawson Builders Supply, Pearce said he's been disappointed by Teague's lack of independence, especially on the "cap and trade" bill that Pearce said will be at the cost of many oil-related jobs in New Mexico. Pearce acknowledged Teague's position that he voted for the bill after getting a provision added that would protect small producers and refineries. That amendment will protect very few of the thousands of oil and gas industry jobs in New Mexico put at risk by the legislation passed in the House, Pearce said.

"I cannot believe he will do the right thing down the line," Pearce said of Teague, adding that his voting record so far shows Teague is more a follower than a leader.

Pearce, who represented the Second Congressional District for three terms, said he will fight for jobs and against spending. He said government stimulus money isn't stimulating the economy.

"If we want the economy to improve, all we have to do is cut spending and cut taxes," he said.

Martinez running for governor

DA promises to clean up state government

By TODD G. DICKSON
The Las Cruces Bulletin

The race for the next governor of New Mexico became much more interesting as Doña Ana County District Attorney Susana Martinez announced Friday, July 17, that she is in the running.

Although a governor hasn't come from southern New Mexico since Garrey Carruthers a little more than 20 years ago, having a Republican Hispanic woman district attorney running on a platform of ending corruption has caught the attention of political observers.

Her announcement came just after New Mexico National Guard Brig. Gen. Greg Zanetti announced he was ending his quest to win the Republican nomination. Zanetti was the only GOP candidate who had officially announced his intentions, but former state Republican Party Chairman Allen Weh is running his 'exploratory" effort like a real campaign.

Other republicans considering a run for governor are state Rep. Janice Arnold-Jones of Albuquerque, former U.S. Rep. Heather Wilson and public relations firm owner Doug Turner. On the democratic side, the only possible impediment to Lt. Gov. Diane Denish winning the nomination could be a bid by state Senate Majority Leader Michael Sanchez of Belen.

Assuming Denish and Martinez win their respective parties' nominations, the new governor in 2010 will be historic because New Mexicans have never elected a woman governor before.

"We have history in the making right here," said Mike Tellez during his introduction of Martinez inside Roberto's restaurant's packed dining room.

City responds to contractor award complaints

Local businesses object to new contractor award approach

By Todd G. Dickson

When the City of Las Cruces was looking to build a new city hall, an aquatics center and a convention center, it was during a time of high inflation for construction materials – in everything from cement, steel and copper to drywall and asphalt.

To ensure the projects came within budget, the city changed its contractor bid process. Instead of taking the lowest bids on projects, it would instead select a company that would use its expertise to bring projects in at a "guaranteed maximum price." The main contractor to take these jobs are called "construction manager at risk" – also called CMR or CMAR – and the city required the contractor to have experience in bringing in jobs at a guaranteed maximum price.

The Albuquerque Albuquerque-based Construction Corp. won the new city hall, then the aquatics center and now the con-

In response to local contractor and subcontractor complaints they weren't landing work in these major project, City Council held a work session Wednesday, July 22, to find ways to make the process more fair for local companies.

City Purchasing Manager Bob Telles presented a variety of steps that can be taken to ensure local contractors and subcontractors get preference.

When the city puts out its Requests For Proposals (RFPs), language could be added to require the companies to seek out local subcontractors and to demonstrate familiarity with the local work force, Telles said.

International opportunities available for NMSU students

Experience abroad helps to offset cultural isolation

Most college students spend their summer vacation trying to get as far away from school as possible. Morgan Nelson, a senior at New Mexico State University, wound up eight time zones away from New Mexico, but his trip was different – he did it with the help of NMSU and the university's Aggies Go Global program.
"I had never been abroad," said Nelson, who is majoring in economics as well as agricultural economics and agribusiness

Nelson is one of the first students to take part in Aggies Go Global, a partnership between NMSU's International Relations Institute, Study Abroad Programs, Career Services and the College of Agricultural, Consumer and Environmental Sciences. It promotes international opportunities for students as well as positive student experiences while traveling and studying abroad.

"This is an opportunity for students to see how connected we are to other nations," said Delano Lewis, a senior fellow at NMSU and the director of the International Relations Institute. "It's imperative to the completeness of one's education to see how other nations are structured, their religion, their culture and what we share in common.

"We live in a small world, and we wanted to enhance the international opportunities for students," said Gary Lowe, global mentoring coordinator for the program. "With cell phones and email, we are so connected. But unfortunately, we are often isolated in this country.

He said international travel is encouraged at universities across the U.S. as a way for students to gain broader perspectives on cultures and the way people interact.

Nelson spent two weeks traveling to London, Paris and other parts of Europe. Lowe and Richard Phillips, project coordinator for Aggies Go Global, helped him with travel arrangements, and assisted in establishing contacts in agriculture and agricultural policy – a field Nelson wanted to learn more about during his trip.

"Our students are very good academically, but this international experience takes them to the next level," Phillips said. "Our students weren't interested in the traditional study abroad classes. They wanted to do research and community outreach.'

During Nelson's trip, he kept a blog about his travels and his various meetings with European and agricultural officials as well as NMSU alums in Europe.

Additional students in the program are currently visiting the countries of Belize and Cambodia, while others are planning trips to Mexico, Kenya and Tokyo.

"We are looking for more involvement from across the university, especially in helping to advise students about suitability of programs for their academic objectives," said Paul Huntsberger, NMSU assistant dean for Study

New spaceport council works to inform public

Forum will provide regular updates on progress at Spaceport America

By Todd G. Dickson
The Las Cruces Bulletin

The first Spaceport Community Council meeting in Doña Ana County, held Tuesday, July 21, covered a broad range of issues, but the main message from the informational meeting was that planning will now help locals benefit from Spaceport America.

port America.

"The window of opportunity is now," said
Davin Lopez, president/CEO of the Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance.

Lopez said the spaceport and its users are going to need all sorts of supplies – from construction materials to electronics. As in the auto industry, commercial space operators will need quick access to materials and spare parts.

Some of that study has been done, said Wayne Savage who heads a spaceport task force for the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce that is sponsoring the quarterly council forums similar to a spaceport council formed in Sierra County to give the public regular updates of Spaceport America progress.

Savage said the local task force has begun identifying supply needs for the spaceport and where in the area they can be obtained. Though such things have been reviewed by spaceport officials in construction planning, the community is organizing itself to meet the spaceport operational needs and is only now being formed because construction is just now getting underway.

getting underway.

"We are starting construction on a spaceport next month," Savage said. "We've never been able to say that before."

New Mexico Spaceport Authority Executive Director Steve Landeene said people for decades have pushed the idea of building a spaceport in southern New Mexico because of the area's combined assets, such as its proximity to a variety of military installations, national labs and educational institutions.

Spaceport America will be built in the desert between Las Cruces and Truth or Consequences to take advantage of the area's sparse population, high elevation and the protected air space of White Sands Missile Range.

Landeene said the spaceport provides a variety of opportunities, but mainly in the areas of tourism, education and economic development. Even during construction, Landeene said, there will be tours of the spaceport site because there is an interest in the first purpose-built commercial spaceport in the world.

As for economic development, the spaceport will need local support for everything from janitorial supplies to machine shops and technical support, he said.

There is more interest in private spaceflight than just flying tourists into space.

ODD G. DICKSON I The Las Cruces Bulletin

Spaceport America Executive Director Steve Landeene answers questions at the first meeting Tuesday, July 21, of the Las Cruces Spaceport Council. Sitting on the panel with Landeene are, from left, state Rep. Andy Nuñez, County Commissioner Scott Krahling and Wayne Savage of DJMJ Construction, who heads a spaceport task force for the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce.

Savage said there is a real demand for low-cost access to space by the military, government and private industry, especially to launch small satellites into orbit.

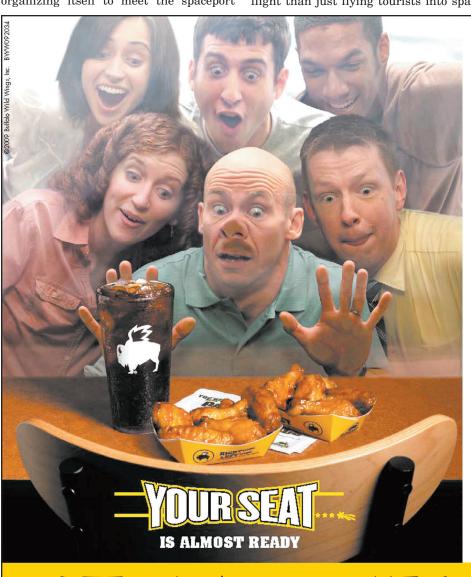

Steven Sanchez, associate superintendent for learning, teaching and research at Las Cruces Public Schools, said he and his counterparts in the surrounding school districts area are looking for ways to adapt science, math and engineering education to better prepare students to enter the aerospace work force.

"I see this as a significant opportunity to breathe into life science and math education," Sanchez said.

Education is critical, Landeene said, because companies wanting to use the spaceport won't come if there isn't an educated work force to tap. But Landeene said he is confident that the local businesses, educational institutions and communities will get ready to take advantage of all the spaceport's opportunities.

"I'm passionate about this because I truly do believe that this is the right time and the right place," Landeene said.

Construction projects need close scrutiny

Are out-of-town construction firms advantaged by 'construction manager at risk' contracts?

By David E. McCollum

Las Cruces has been blessed over the past several years with an array of new construction projects. As our Downtown skyline is changing with the new city hall and federal building, however, we find that more and more of the new construction projects, including the new convention center, are being awarded to non-local businesses.

Why is this happening? And does this trend tell us that our local general contractors are not able to handle the new construction opportunities that are being paid for by local taxes?

McCollum

nization, such as the county or city, would prepare plans and specifications for a new building, and then would share those specs with interested general contractors utilizing local trades. Subcontractors would calculate their cost and offer a sealed bid prior to an established deadline. Provided that all the specifications were met, the project would be awarded to the low bidder.

Under the old process, contractors were often taking great risks with their bid projections because of the rapidly rising costs of construction materials. Because the price of some material, such as concrete, asphalt and copper wire were spiraling upward at a rate of 50 percent or more per year, contractors could find themselves in financial difficulty if they had not planned for the increased costs. Obviously, this often resulted in significant increases above the original budgeted cost of the project and greatly influenced planning budgeted cost of the project and greatly influ gets for future projects.

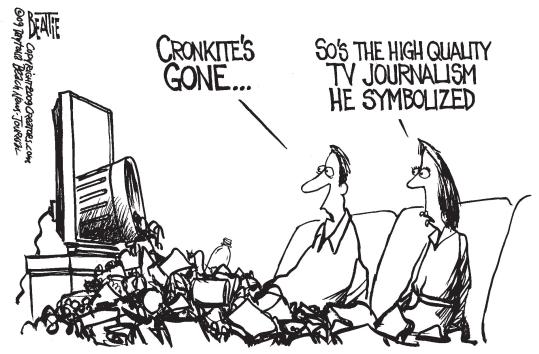

Recently, a new type of bid solicitation, the "construction manager at risk" concept – or CMR contract – has become the standard for major projects. This process is different in that the contractor has to make a guaranteed maximum price on a project that may not yet be finally designed, and the contractor must take the risk on any price increases that occur during the construction phase.

Additionally, there is no requirement for the entity requesting the proposal to accept the lowest bid. Instead, a more subjective evaluation is made, where the entity can select the "finalists" for the project, based on factors such as previous experience, size of company, etc. For many recent projects that have been bid in Las Cruces, our local contractors have been eliminated early from the competition and bids have been awarded to out-of-town contractors. Further, it appears that, more and more, the foreign contractors are choosing not to use local subcontractors, and, instead, are bringing their own subcontractors from

Ironically, our country's current economic situation has driven prices downward. It appears the CMR winners for major local projects may be receiving significant windfall profits because the cost of their materials has gone down and there are no provisions for the cost savings to be passed on to the entity that hired the contractor.

An example can be the new Las Cruces Convention Center, which originally was estimated to cost about $20 million for 80,000 square feet, or $250 per square foot. The final, accepted bid was $21.7 million for a reduced size of 55,000 square feet, or nearly $400 per square foot. If this information is correct, and material costs have gone down by 20 percent or so, the contractor is a happy camper, and we taxpayers have paid an excessive amount for a new building where most of the profits from the construction have exited our market and therefore not benefiting our residents.

City officials contend there are aspects about the convention center that make it more expensive than other buildings. Nevertheless, I think it is time to take another look at this process, and to find ways to keep this money at home.

Writer defends unions

So what's the point of your July 17 editorial, Mr. McCollum? That unions and their mandated-benefits to their members are an impediment to business growth?

Unions are often the only line of defense against exploitative management practices.

What protections were provided to the "light manufacturing and service providers" that eventually rescued Bethlehem, I wonder?

The hotel management was probably lying to you about negotiating with the local steel industry, though I doubt you pressed them too hard on that.

Heaven help Las Cruces if our own service providers – like so many others – decide to outsource to the Far East because they can find cheaper, unprotected labor "to plan the city's life after Bethlehem Steel," so to speak.

Martinez not to be taken lightly

Las Cruces base not necessarily a disadvantage candidate last Friday. Crusading District Attorney Susana Martinez announced her candidacy. There will be no exploratory committee. She's ready to go.

Martinez has been elected four times in Doña Ana County, which is becoming increasingly Democratic. But she has shown a capacity for attracting a large crossover

She will have to do the same thing statewide in order to win a general election. She could do just that in the heavily Democratic north, but first she has to win the Republican primary, which won't be easy.

Conservative Steve Pearce beat moderate Heather Wilson last year in the GOP senatorial primary. There are at least two Republicans already in the race, who are expected to be to the right of Martinez, a former Democrat.

Martinez doesn't have much name recognition outside her county, although she has tried some high-profile, changeof-venue cases in Albuquerque where she received media attention during the trials.

... there will be female Hispanic others who feel a will help broaden the party.

GOP leaders will remember Martinez from the days when then state party chairman John Dendahl was urging her to run for attorney general. That's when she came to my attention.

Martinez ducked Dendahl's encouragement back then, but now says she has wanted to run for a statewide office for some time. She is the first Republican from outside Albuquerque to express interest in the state's top job.

But running from Las Cruces isn't a big disadvantage. In my 60 years of political watching, three governors have won elections from Las Cruces.

In 1950, Doña Ana County District Attorney Ed Mechem broke 20 years of Democratic domination by winning the first of four two-year terms. He did it promising to clean up corruption in Santa Fe. That also appears to be Martinez' ticket to Santa Fe also. In 1974, Democrat state Sen. Jerry Apodaca became the first Hispanic to win the governor's office in 54 years. As a Senate leader, Apodaca had managed to gain some exposure and contacts statewide.

In 1986, former state GOP Chairman Garrey Carruthers won election despite having worked in Washington, in the Reagan administration, for several years. Now a dean at New Mexico State University, Carruthers said Martinez is better known at this point than were Carruthers or Republican Gov. Gary Johnson.

Carruthers said Martinez is held in extremely high regard in Las Cruces. She's a hard charging crime fighter at a time that is needed. But she also receives charges that some of her investigations are politically motivated.

She has detractors, too. I have received numerous contacts from the Las Cruces area claiming she ignores complaints of police brutality and always takes the side of law enforcement officers.

Despite the fact that no women has ever run for governor in New Mexico, Martinez is the second woman to get in the gubernatorial race. Democrat Lt. Gov. Diane Denish announced her intentions very soon after she was reelected in 2006.

In addition, two more Republican women are looking seriously at the race. State Rep. Janice Arnold-Jones, of Albuquerque, has formed an exploratory committee and former U.S. Rep. Heather Wilson is keeping Republicans on the edge of their seats waiting to see what she decides. When former U.S. Rep. Steve Pearce decided to take a shot at winning his former 2nd Congressional Wilson into the race.

Would the possibility of having three women in the race dissuade her? Not likely. Wilson will be the early favorite in the race if she does decide to run.

For Martinez to get on the ballot, she must receive at least 20 percent of the vote at the state GOP nominating convention next March. The Doña Ana County vote will get her quite a way. And there will be others who will feel a female Hispanic will help broaden the party.

"Dumbo," he said, "Dumbest horse I've ever rode. I got him from a forest ranger. She gave him to me as a gift. Apparently, the horse was the result of one of those unplanned pregnancies. Seems someone, late one night and without her knowledge, had left this shaggy little mustang stallion in her corral. As luck would have it he managed to get up next to the forest ranger's good mare and get her in the family way.

"But he is dumb, I mean, I'm ridin' two 3-year-olds ... right now. It took me less than 20 minutes to train 'em to open a gate. Sidepass from the right on one side. Through the gate, sidepass to the left and close it. Simple, but not for him.

"I spent two hours pushing, prodding, leaning,

"Yeah," said Dave. "For one, he was easy to catch. But then you had to ask yourself, 'What's the point?"

- Marine Lt. Col. Jeff Cooper.

While the legendary shooting instructor Jeff Cooper was talking about large-caliber pistols and his beloved Scout Rifle in the above quote, it is the same issue of safety for things that could distract you and others to death. Your safety is in your mind, not your hands.

No one can make you any safer than you wish to make yourself.

My favorite Jeff Cooper quote is, "One of the notable aspects of the democratic process is that one need not know anything about a subject in order to pass laws about it.

An example is municipalities that have banned holding cell phones while driving, with no regard to the research about how cell phones potentially make drivers unsafe.

According to the research, it is not physically holding a cell phone that is potentially dangerous as it is two factors: first the visual distraction, which is the same for navigation screens, computer screens and texting. The second factor is the effect of emotional conversation on eye refresh rate.

You can say, "Wassup?" to your posse without changing visual refresh rates; however, if your spouse asks loudly for a divorce while you are driving, you may drive into a tree you literally did not see.

Importantly, it does not matter if you are together in the car or on a cell phone (hands-free or not) - the effect of emotions on your visual refresh rate is the same. The politicians who advocate "Hands-free cell phone use" are missing this point.

Members of law-enforcement do drive "distractomobiles" full of computers, radar and radio communications. Still, most are safe since they think about how distracting all of these things are and take steps to monitor themselves.

... if your spouse asks loudly for a divorce while you are driving, you may drive into a tree ...

Texting while driving is by far the most dangerous. Partially it is not having enough cognitive ability to safely look down at the screen and back up at the changing dangers out the windshield. Some drivers may be better than others, but all will lose situational awareness. Especially if they ponder a new abbreviation like "YDIAWT" – your driving is awful while texting.

It could be dangerous if you look at the navigation screen and realize you just missed your freeway exit, and at that same moment, your spouse says you are an idiot for having an expensive toy and not listening to it just as you do not listen to her. Not that most spouses would say something like that out loud. Moreover, for those politicians who want to pass a law that will make us completely safe drivers by banning every distraction, what about crying kids, dropped cigarettes, spilled-in-the-lap hot coffee, talk radio, sneezing, attention-getting signs, scantily clad pedestrians, hiccups and funny bumper stickers? Perhaps we should test each person's distractibility. Beginner drivers can only have one other teen in the car. Should we have a distractibility standard?

"Sorry Puddin, we simply cannot talk about my buddies while I am driving, it is not allowed by law. It is not my law, it is the law.

Obamacare will damage small business

The Obama administration is desperately trying to ram through legislation before the August recess of Congress called "National Health Care Reform."

This proposed legislation now being crafted in the Congress is more than 1,000 pages, which none will read, as has been the case on other recent legislation. It will cost more than $1 trillion over a 10-year period, and will supposedly be paid by raising taxes on selected segments of our society – meaning the "rich."

The so-called reform bill will cut services for Medicare and Medicaid, limit payment to doctors and hospitals, and will result in insufficient care for the sick and needy. This monstrous takeover by the government will further damage small businesses that will not be able to sustain the additional tax burden, resulting in job losses

Socialized health care under government control has not succeeded anywhere it has been introduced.

Please note that this legislation will not affect members of Congress who will retain the present "Cadillac" health care they now enjoy – solid gold. Is this fair? Is another freedom being sacrificed to ambition and power?

Adequate water, power will be available at new location

By Todd G. Dickson

City officials are assuring that Downtown outdoor market vendors and customers will have adequate water and electricity as they work to resolve the concerns about a lack of shade when it moves to the southern end of the Downtown Mall.

The Downtown Farmers & Crafts Market will have to move to the new location when work begins to open the north end of Main Street, where it is currently held on Wednesday and Saturday mornings.

Vendors have raised not only concerns about the lack of shade on the southern end, but whether the location has ample electricity and water. City Assistant Manager Robert Garza said the city is providing power throughout the Downtown Mall and Main Street within the sections scheduled for construction.

There will be 220-volt power along Griggs and Las Cruces avenues, he said. Garza noted there is currently no 220-volt power available Downtown for use by market vendors.

Also, Garza said there will be standard 110-volt power available all along Main Street with outlets in every bollard and light fixture, which is much more power than what currently exists, he said.

On the water concern, Garza said the city will be providing water to the area where the future market will be held.

"There is currently one drinking fountain in the north end of the mall," he said. "We are replacing that fountain and adding one more. This will double the amount of water that is currently available.

That leaves shade the main area of real concern, Garza said.

He reminds vendors that there is still the possibility of adding shade elements to the final design of the new location. Meanwhile, he said shade structures like those found in the already re-opened portion of

Main Street are part of the project for re-opening the north end of Main

As for questions about why the city removed the southern metal awnings before the street work on the north end, Garza said the city originally intended to do all the street work at once and move the market into closed-off connecting roadways or Apodaca Park.
"The market vendors chose to stay

Downtown and also were allowed to decide that they wanted to move into the south end of the mall and not use the streets," he said. "This decision was made after we were already moving forward on the initial plan.

Also, state funding requirements for the Main Street north re-opening stipulate work begin soon as it is more costly to re-open than the south end.

"We have received more state funding than federal funding so we have aligned the financing of the north end with state funds and the south end with federal funds," he said.

Byford recognized

For his outstanding scientific contributions to the field of veterinary entomology, New Mexico State University faculty member Ronnie Byford was honored with the Livestock Insect Workers Conference (LIWC) Lifetime Achievement Award.

Byford, the director of NMSU's Center for Animal Health, Food Safety and Bio-Security, received the award during the 53th Annual LIWC, held in French Lick, Ind., in June.

"Being recognized with an award such as this justifies everything you try to do as a researcher. When you have a good research team at an institution like NMSU, it's easy to be successful," Byford said.

Byford's research has focused on several major ectoparasites, vector-borne diseases and the development of control strategies for ectoparasites of humans and animals. This research has had a significant impact on basic and applied information for parasites of veterinary importance.

Byford received his bachelor's, master's and doctoral degrees from Oklahoma State University. After teaching at Louisiana State University, he came to NMSU in 1988, where he has served in numerous capacities, including department head of Extension Plant Sciences and as faculty member in the department of entomology, plant pathology and weed science.

Burglaries can be prevented

Las Cruces police offer advice intended to help keep homes safe from intruders

An increased number of home and auto burglaries over the past few weeks have Las Cruces Police reminding residents that most of the thefts are easily prevented by being proactive in properly securing one's properties.

Since June 29, 104 cases of home or auto burglaries have been reported and police believe that many of those incidents may have been prevented had residents simply locked their doors or closed windows.

The Las Cruces Police Department suggests following these and other tips to help prevent being a victim of a home or auto

- Park vehicles in a garage, driveway or well-lighted area
- Close windows and lock doors
- Remove valuables from automobiles or, at least, keep them out of sight
- Remove garage door remote-opener from your vehicle

- Install and use an audible alarm system
- Keep residential doors and windows locked when away from home
- Utilize curtains, blinds or other window coverings to keep valuables - such as TVs, computers and other electronics - from being easily visible from outside
- Properly secure sheds and outbuildings
- Secure items that are sometimes left outdoors, such as garden tools, lawnmowers and trailers
- Be a good neighbor and report suspicious activities in your neighborhood

Not all home and auto burglaries are preventable. But following these tips and taking a proactive approach to securing property can make residents less likely to become a victim of a home or auto burglary.

tarnished by indictments stemming from a federal investiga-tion of "pay to play" politics in New Mexico, the governor's race could become a lot closer than it appears now.

And cleaning up government corruption in New Mexico was clearly a theme in Martinez's concise announcement.

"As the chief law enforcement officer of this county, I have fought corruption and crime. Public safety is my No. 1 priority," she said. "Without that, we cannot have good choices or fair play. And we will remove 'pay to play' from this state.

Martinez, who is married to Doña Ana County Undersheriff Chuck Franco, said she has seen the impact of crime on lives of everyday people and promised to remember them should she be elected as governor.

"I want to treat everyone the same, regardless of who you give money to or who you don't give money to," she said.

Fighting crime is the other centerpiece of her campaign, which isn't surprising since she has been the chief prosecutor of the Third Judicial District for the last 12 years. In her last election in November 2008, she was unopposed and became one of a small number of Republicans around the state re-elected to office.

as Cruces District attorney Susana Martinez speaks about her hopes and plans if she is elected governor of New Mexico.

Just as she has put together a good team in the District Attorney's Office, Martinez promised to assemble a quality staff in the governor's office. Martinez, 50, asked voters to look at her record of accomplishment as a sign that she could do more than just talk about making things better.

The staff Martinez said she would surround herself in Santa Fe would be people not interested in just bettering their own station in life. "I will develop a team of people who will work for New Mexicans," she said.

Besides fighting crime and corruption, Martinez said she'll work to make the state more business friendly with less "red tape" and fewer impediments to new industry wanting to move to New Mexico. The state's educational system needs to be brought 'to a higher level," rather than landing at the bottom in national rankings, she said.

Opening Martinez's announcement was 12-year-old Trevor Wax, the brother of 15-year-old Ashley Wax, who was killed by a teen boyfriend in February 2005.

The RFPs can also require that the CMR/CMAR follow a process that mirrors government procurement processes, Telles said, including using sealed bids that are opened and evaluated under the watch of city officials. A more open and transparent process will help ease local concerns about out-of-town companies getting too much of the work, he said.

"This is an attempt to level the playing field," Telles said.

Representatives for local companies attending the work session said they were pleased with the proposed changes.

Ken Wooten of Wooten Construction called the recommendations "spot on," but asked what this would mean to subcontractors for the convention center.

Steve Armstrong of Jaynes Construction Corp. said the company still has subcontracts to award on all its projects. Also, the city presentation noted that local subcontractors have been getting at least 63 percent of the awards or more on the three projects so far.

"Jaynes is committed to Las Cruces, Doña Ana County and all of southern New Mexico.'

Armstrong said.

He also disputed claims that Jaynes has been "bid shopping" - letting preferred companies know what others are bidding to get a lower price.

"Javnes has always been aboveboard in all our business dealings," Armstrong "That's how we run all of our projects.'

City Manager Terrence Moore said the proposed changes will be brought before the City Council at its Aug. 3 meeting for approval.

Also, in the near future, city officials will give the council details about why the convention center is coming in a much higher cost per square foot than the other buildings. Officials noted that the site at New Mexico State University required a lot of dirt work, that the building has a full kitchen and will need state-of-the-art audio-visual capabilities and will be a much more environmentally sensitive building than the other projects.

Mayor Ken Miyagishima assured the local companies that the city is continuing to grow and that there are a number of future projects, including possibly building a new dispatch center, new fire stations and an East Mesa police substation.

Pearce

Pearce also decried government corruption in New Mexico. He joked that people wanting to get rich in the state are more inclined to enter government than get a better education or job.

In an interview with the Las Cruces Bulletin, Pearce said he had weighed running for governor, but that would have been more like being a CEO of a company and he was more interested in debating larger issues of the economy and personal freedoms

"I missed the fight. I didn't miss Washington," Pearce said. "I like to debate these issues and debate is being shut off by the Speaker (Nancy

Pearce said he decided late last month to run for his old Congressional seat to get back into the debate over ideas especially economic issues. "I'm still committed to those values that I have seen work in my lifetime," he said.

In response to Pearce's announcement, state Democratic Party Chairman Brian S. Colón noted Pearce's loss to U.S. Sen. Tom Udall and described Pearce as "a man desperately looking for his next political job.

"Pearce's campaign is more about his desire to be a professional politician than what is best for southern New Mexico residents," Colón said.

At his Las Cruces rally, Pearce fielded questions and asked for those attending to help with volunteering and fundraising. Pearce claims that Democrats are poised to pour money into the re-election campaigns of Congressional freshmen like Teague.

"Let's not be fooled. This will not be an easy task," Pearce said. "It's going to be extremely hard."

Aggies pitch in to help Jardin de los Niños

Times have been tough for Jardin de los Niños, Las Cruces' shelter for homeless and near-homeless children and their

During troubled economic times, the facility is needed more than ever, but the slumping economy means fewer donations and less money coming in. The facility is getting some big helping hands, however, from the New Mexico State University men's basketball team and some local businesses.

On Saturday, July 18, a group of Aggie basketball players paid a visit to Jardin, helping store boxes of donated items and sprucing up the court-yard garden. Shirley Jaquez, executive director of the facility at 999 W. Amador Ave., gave the players a tour and explained some of the special problems homeless children must deal with.

"Usually we have between 15 and 18 parents in here," she told them as the players moved through the rooms.

In one room, she explained that getting some of the kids to eat normally is one of their most common problems.

'We have what we call family style eating to get the kids to focus on eating," she said, "When they are homeless, they don't

Jaquez told the group

After the tour, the players split up into groups, with Merker, sophomore point guard Hernst Laroche and a slimmed-down Hamidu Rahman tackling the courtyard. Other players, including forward Wendell McKines, Las Cruces' own Gordo Castillo and red-shirt freshman Tyrone Watson, were tasked with taking donated items out of a trailer and putting them in a storage unit purchased by the City of

The players also had a chance to meet Jardin supporter Joan Dormody, whose husband Tom is taking a 250-mile hike from Yosemite to Mount Whitney in California as a way of raising funds and building awareness for the homeless center.

 $The players will \, return \, to \, the \, facility \, on \,$ Saturday to help paint a mural designed by Jacqueline Johnson, a student at Amherst College in Massachusetts, who is doing her internship in Las Cruces. At the time of the Aggies' visit, volunteer Larry Muñoz was painting the mural

"I am from here and I wanted to come back and help out in my home town," Johnson said.

The players later helped load a trailer at the Business Products Center, 840 El Paseo Road, with a donation of more than 10 thousand Hallmark Greeting cards and a number of shelving units given by Business Products Center owner Susan Horton. Jaquez said Jardin de Los Niños will use the cards to raise funds during a yard sale from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 1, at Las Cruces Bingo, 522. E. Idaho Ave.

Jardin will also be having a "Christmas in July Sale" at La Tienda de Jardin Boutique, 335 La Colonia Ave. on Friday, July 31 and Saturday Aug. 1,

City has changed since Ciskowski was here

New Mexico State

Former assistant football coach now a scout

By Craig Massey

Driving up Interstate-10 from El Paso, Tom Ciskowski didn't see much that had changed in the past 22 years.

The billboards still advertise several wellknown car dealerships and hotels in Las Cruces. The dairies near Vado still welcome highway travelers with an unmistakable aroma. The vast pecan orchards carpeting the southern portion of the Mesilla Valley are still visible to the west.

But not long after the interstates split and Ciskowski took I-25 as he approached Las Cruces, something dotted the horizon that was unfamiliar. The Fulton Center on the southern end of Aggie Memorial Stadium didn't exist in the late 1980s when Ciskowski was an assistant football coach at New Mexico State University.

Actually, much has changed in Las Cruces since then, but it was the beautiful, towering addition to the stadium that caught Ciskowski's eye. "I flew to El Paso and was visiting UTEP about a year and a half ago, and had a delay, so I rented a car and drove up to Las Cruces," Ciskowski said. "They built that big part on the south end of the stadium which is very nice. When I was there, we had our offices at the Pan Am Center. It's shocking how much Las Cruces has grown. I really liked it there. It's one of the nicest places I've ever lived.'

Fun football facts

Aggie coaching staff has deep roots on the playing field

New Mexico State has one of its most experienced football staffs in the West. Here are some fun facts you might not know about head coach DeWayne Walker's bunch.

Walker had a career as a player in the pro ranks before settling into coaching. He played in both the Canadian and United States football leagues. His stint in the CFL was with the Edmonton Eskimos and he played two out of the three USFL seasons. Walker was a defensive back for the Oakland Invaders and Arizona Outlaws, and shares the same alma mater as his boss, McKinley Boston, as a twoyear starter at Minnesota.

The Aggies linebacker coach had eight years in the pros with the Cleveland Browns and is a member of the Kentucky Athletic Hall of Fame. Dale Lindsay also played in the Tangerine Bowl as a member of the Western Kentucky Hilltoppers squad. Running backs coach Ernest Wilson worked with a Super Bowl champ. He was an intern coach for the Indianapolis Colts in their preseason camp as well as a coach with Arena League

One of the Aggies secondary coaches played for a pair of rivals. Todd Littlejohn earned honorable mention all-American honors as a defensive back at West Texas State in 1987, picking up first team All-Missouri Valley Conference honors. He wasn't done with college sports, however. Littlejohn transferred to Fresno State where he played baseball on the 1988 PCAA Championship team that went to the College World Series.

Receiver's coach Keith Murphy was a Washington Husky and enjoyed two Pac-10 Championship teams. He was a part of five bowl games, including the 1998 Öahu Bowl, 1997 Aloha Bowl, 1996 Holiday Bowl, 1995 Sun Bowl and the 1993 Rose Bowl.

Offensive coordinator Timm Rosenbach also has earned a dollar as a player in the NFL and CFL. Drafted early out of Washington State, Rosenbach played for the Arizona Cardinals for four years before wearing the striped sleeve jerseys of the Hamilton Tiger Cats. After he started coaching, Rosenbach then put together the best offense Washington State has had, guiding Alex Brink to new school records in passing yards, completions and touchdowns.

Mike Rutenberg could moonlight as the manager of the university's hotel that is on the drawing board. He has a bachelor's degree from Cornell in hotel management. He cut his football teeth as a player personnel intern and assistant for the Washington Redskins maintaining the pro and college computer scouting systems.

Defensive line coach Jesse Williams can say his college team had one of the strangest nicknames, for a while. He played for Cal State Sonoma in northern California. At the time, the team was nicknamed. The Cossacks. Williams stormed many an offensive backfield with the same abandon his eastern block namesakes displayed during the Russian Revolution

The staff Walker has assembled is more savvy and experienced than any other New Mexico State staff in many moons.

Gutierrez provides boost to new Ag soccer program

Get some kicks at weekend fundraiser

The link ole Pete was telling you about between state Rep. Joni Gutierrez and the New Mexico State soccer program has just grown stronger – there is a fundraising get-together this weekend at Gutierrez's house in Mesilla. If you joined us late, let me give you a recap. Gutierrez was the trail boss on the drive to find funding for the soccer facility that is currently under construction east of Aggie Memorial Stadium. Some would figure that was enough of an assist and move on to the next program, but not Gutierrez. She has been working for the last three months with Aggie soccer coach Michael Needham on other ways to get the fledgling program off to a good start and came up with the idea for Saturday night's party.

Others in town have joined on the bandwagon, such as loyal booster Shari Jones and former mayor Ruben Smith. Not only is Smith, Gutierrez's cousin, but his daughter is a member of Needham's squad as well. Cristianna Smith is a transfer from UC Santa Barbara and should be a solid addition to the defenders on the Aggie team. The party runs from 6 to 9 p.m. Saturday, July 25, and the minimum donation is just $20.

You can give more if your heart is in it, but let me tell you, no one puts on a better spread of party fixings than Gutierrez. Needham and his staff will be on hand and you can also sign up for the Corner Kick booster club. The season starts in the middle of August with a couple of exhibition games and four WAC home dates as well.

Athletics Director Doc McKinley Boston made a good choice in adding soccer to the Aggies roster of sports. It took vision and courage to add sports when most schools are cutting them. There isn't a coach starting up a program from square one that is working harder the Needham. Pete has been impressed with his drive to get to know the community and the fact that he has been able to recruit the likes of these folks as backers shows you he has got a product people want to get involved with.

The summer is slipping away and the time is right to start thinking about the fall season and lining up for tickets for all sports. If you want to join Pete and some soccer-lovin' Aggie fans this Saturday night, come to 2350 Calle de Parian, in Mesilla, with a double saw buck and an appetite for fun.

I hope we kickoff soccer season this way every year.

NMSU receives flag

The New Mexico State Athletics Department was given an American Flag that flew over Iraq this summer in Operation Iraqi Freedom in a special ceremony at the Stan Fulton Center, Friday, July 17.

Anthony, N.M., native Jerry Gonzalez, with the Bravo Company in the Special Operations Aviation Regiment, presented the flag to Athletics Director Dr. McKinley Boston. Gonzalez is currently stationed at Fort Campbell in Clarksville, Tenn.

Gonzalez decided to fly the flag after his brother, Victor, emailed him about the Aggies partnership with the 2nd Engineer Battalion and its commitment to provide tickets to military personnel in the region.

"Since the University is supporting our men and women in uniform, I was honored to fly this flag," Gonzalez said. "We flew this on our helicopters during combat missions supporting the United States Armed Forces and we flew this flag with great pride."

We are really pleased to receive this," Boston said. "We are very involved with the military and making the military a part of our community.'

Reflections on getting the knack for playing golf

Wow! This is a lot harder than it looks on TV." That was a remark made by Dave, a rank-beginner golfer, who completed Performance Golf School last weekend. Now in his early 40s, and at a point in his life when his good friends are playing golf on Saturdays leaving him behind, Dave figured the time had come to take up golf.

"Heck, it's just something I have wanted to do, so no sense waiting until I'm 80," Dave told me, as he examined the hand-me-down set of clubs that he was about to try out. Having played a little baseball "back in the day," Dave seems to be in decent physical shape, and is certainly not overweight or impaired in any way. He's no star jock, but he is an expert dart-thrower, which I told him has some transfer benefits to golf. Over the > had about eight adult students who had never swung a golf club before in their lives; until Dave, they were all women. Here we had a man who wanted to take up the game, and wanted to learn right. Coach Herb Wimberly and I began working with Dave by getting him to make closer and closer approximations of what seemed to him a good golf swing. But even before the attempted swings, we provided Dave with a live image of a fundamentally correct mind and then try to duplicate. We asked him to imitate what he had just seen. No golf ball involved – just a nine iron and air.

To his credit, Dave had patience. He needed it. It took probably 15 swings before he was able to get the golf ball airborne. That's not unusual. It's one reason why young kids tend to go for soccer rather than golf. They never whiff a soccer ball – at least not when it's standing still. On the 15th swing, Dave launched a wonderful 130-yard shot straight down the middle of the practice range.

"How'd that feel," I asked. "Pretty darn good," Dave said, still in shock and awe at what had just occurred.

Muscle memory

That particularly good shot was the result of the approximations getting closer and a sense of feeling he was getting it right. But it didn't happen again for a while. Why? Simply because "muscle memory" had not taken place. When we learn something new, especially a sport-specific motor skill, we rely on the predictable, anticipated and nearly automatic response of our body to perform upon the brain's command - muscle memory. That takes practice.

Dave is a schoolteacher, which helped some, and he was receptive to instruction. So many folks who play golf think they know it all and avoid learning the fundamentals. On the golf course, Dave rode around with me as we cruised between groups of players. I advised him not to play, since the social pressure of onlookers and the frustration of topping the ball would be major negatives. He got the lay of the land on the golf course and watched how golfers behaved, spoke and generally went about their business. He didn't hit any shots, but did hit a few putts.

I mention this mostly because we believe way too many players wind up on the golf course with a bag full of clubs on their electric cart, with no idea what to do or how to act. They have never been taught that there is a sequence to learning golf: first the swing, then shotmaking, then strategy (the mental game) and then scoring

Although our Performance Golf School student Dave represents a "blank slate" in teaching the golf swing, we can learn some things from Dave's example as we try ourselves to acquire new golfing skills

If you want to learn a new shot or a new technique or even embark on a major alteration in how you swing the golf club - start by creating a mental image in your mind's eye of how you want it to look. For years golfers did this by studying stop-action photo sequences, and then "aping" the move they saw. Today especially struggle

with the feedback

aspect of golf,

since they seem to be in a rush to hit a lot of balls quickly.

DR. CHARLIE BLANCHARD

Golf Doctor

we have ample video to watch, making it much easier to mentally store the movement information.

Practice and evaluation

Let's say you want to develop a reliable high, short pitch with a lofted wedge for tight spots around the green – a flop shot. Study videos of Phil Mickelson and Tiger Woods. Watch how they execute the move, and then try your best to imitate it. Basically this is "observational learning," and it's how children learn most important things at an early age. It's not by being told; it's by what they see and hear. They imitate. And it applies to golf, too. If you want to be good, I mean really good, imitate what the pros do, from how you dress to how you address the ball and swing.

Next, practice your new skill until it becomes fairly comfortable, and the successes outnumber the misses. This is a matter of both practice and evaluation, not just hitting balls. Practice and evaluate. Practice and evaluate. Too many golfers hit a dozen shots, with some good and some bad, and never bother to study the pattern of their misses and mistakes. so they don't understand that the good shots may have been partly random. It's the evaluation that counts. and that means taking a little time for the sensory feedback of a practice shot to be processed. Young golfers especially struggle with the feedback aspect of golf, since they seem to be in a rush to hit a lot of balls quickly.

Coach Wimberly urges his students to learn better golf by practicing with a purpose. He advises us to put two clubs on the ground for lining up and take some time with each practice shot so you can evaluate what you're doing.

"Do that on the practice range," he said, "so the alignment and projections become flawless and routine on the golf course.

Learning takes coaching. It doesn't matter whether it's learning the guitar, learning a foreign language or learning golf. You need a coach who is your teacher. If you're new to the game and want to learn it right, like Dave, take lessons. If you're a golfer who lacks skill, solid technique and confidence, take lessons. Unfortunately a lot of folks who call themselves "golfers" would rather buy a new club or shank more buckets of balls on their own instead of taking golf lessons.

If you're an experienced player who wants to learn a new shot, learn a new swing variation, or who is trying to take your game of a new level, get a teacher and get professional feedback and tutoring. There really is no substitute.

Dave's big success ironically came on the putting green, where most novice golfers have no clue. On Sunday he put the two hours of putting lessons to work by sinking a 20 footer to give his team birdie, and a lead they wouldn't relinquish.

"It is like throwing darts," Dave reflected, adding "I guess I'm hooked now.

Coach

A lot has changed for Ciskowski since his days as an Aggie assistant on head coach Mike Knoll's staff in 1986-87. After leaving NMSU, he had coaching stints at Nevada and College of the Sequoias before an old friend called in 1992.

Jimmy Johnson, the head coach of the Dallas Cowboys at the time, knew Ciskowski from his early coaching days in Oklahoma and when Ciskowski was a member of Johnson's staff at the University of Miami. Johnson told then-Scouting Director Larry Lacewell that he wanted Ciskowski added to the Cowboys' scouting department.

"Jimmy told me to put my heart and soul (into scouting) for two years and if I didn't like it, he would help me find a coaching job," Ciskowski said.

He started as an "area scout" for the team, working the West for five years, then taking over the Southeast from 1998 to 2000. Ironically, two other members of the Dallas scouting staff also had Aggie roots – former head coach Jim Hess and former assistant Henry Sroka. Ciskowski was promoted to Assistant Director of College Scouting in 2000, then became the Cowboys' Director of College and Pro Scouting in 2008.

As the chief personnel man in the Cowboys organization, Ciskowski manages a team of eight scouts that works year-round watching games, studying video tapes, talking to college coaches and interviewing players. He works closely with team owner and general manager Jerry Jones and helps assemble the team's draft board each spring.

Ciskowski, who is credited with helping the Cowboys put together several strong drafts in recent years, said one of his most memorable finds was Larry Allen in 1994.

He lobbied hard for the Cowboys to select the talented offensive guard out of tiny Sonoma State. Allen, who helped pave the way for record-breaking running back Emmitt Smith, went on to an all-pro career. Current tight end standout Jason Witten is another player that Ciskowski scouted and pushed hard for the team to draft.

Making the adjustment from coaching to scouting took some time, Ciskowski said, but he has grown to enjoy a job that offers more job security.

Long careers are something that Aggie coaches haven't had in Las Cruces. Ciskowski said with improvements to the facilities and the school's most-recent hire, things could be looking up.

"The hardest part is recruiting," he said. "When we were playing Long Beach State and Cal State Fullerton and teams like that, there were millions of people within a 30-mile radius of their schools. All they had to do is drive a few miles to recruit. For us, we had to have money to get to El Paso, then money to fly to California or Texas, money to rent a car. I'm not sure they understood what it takes to compete. Sure, there are four or five kids in New Mexico that could help you, but you have to give coaches more to work with.

"The facilities have improved tremendously," he added. "They weren't very good when I was there. That was the hardest selling point for recruits. They're in a tougher conference now, but it can be done. Look what Bill Snyder did at Kansas State."

Ciskowski said he clearly remembers his first thought when he heard the news that NMSU had hired UCLA defensive coordinator DeWayne Walker as its new head coach last December.

"I said to myself, 'That's a good hire,'" he said. "Hopefully, they'll give DeWayne what he needs. He's a very knowledgeable guy with Xs and Os and a very personable guy. I think he'll do a fantastic job."

Jayhawks at Pan Am Center will highlight women's slate

New Mexico State University head women's basketball coach Darin Spence announced the 2009-10 schedule.

The Aggies are slated to play a programrecord 18 home games during their seventh season under Spence and will welcome Michigan and Kansas into the Pan American Center.

Also highlighting the non-conference portion of NMSU's 30-game schedule are the home-and-away series with rivals New Mexico and UTEP and the third-straight year of the Aggie Hotel Encanto Thanksgiving Classic. The Aggies only have one true road trip before conference play, which comes in the first weekend of the season.

The 18 scheduled regular season home games surpass the previous record of 17 that was set way back in 1979-80. NMSU played 16 regular season home games in 2007-08.

"I'm excited about our schedule and any time you can get 18 home games, that will be really good for us," Spence said. "We have some fun opponents coming in for the fans and the biggest thing with the 18 home games is that it will build a fan base.

"We have really good competition coming in with Kansas and Michigan and the North Dakota schools are good. Our nonconference schedule will definitely test us and get us ready for conference play."

After the 2008-09 season saw the Aggies

After the 2008-09 season saw the Aggies play in 16 regular season road games, the Aggies only have 12 this year, eight of those come during conference play. Last season NMSU went through a stretch where 9-of-11 games were on the road.

The Aggies kick off the season with that non-conference road trip to California. It starts Friday, Nov. 13, at Cal State Northridge and ends two days later at Cal Poly

Following the opening weekend, the Aggies have seven straight games at home. Two of those games come in the Thanksgiving Classic in which Michigan, Stephen F. Austin and Southern Illinois-Edwardsville play in Las Cruces. NMSU squares off against the Wolverines and SIE in the tournament.

After the Aggies host their tournament, NMSU welcomes in New Mexico (Dec. 2) in the first of two meetings in the month. The last game of the seven-game home stand is Dec. 15 against I-10 rival UTEP.

The third of four non-conference road contests comes Dec. 20, when the Aggies head up I-25 to play the Lobos for the second time

The Aggies then have three more games before the New Year. They host Alcorn State (Dec. 22) and New Mexico Highlands (Dec. 30) with the return game at UTEP (Dec. 28) sandwiched in between.

New Mexico State's final non-conference game of the year falls on Jan. 3 at home against Kansas. The Jayhawks return eight players and four starters from their 2008-09 team.

Conference play for the Aggies opens up Jan. 6 at Boise State, where the Aggies are still looking for their first win against the Broncos on their home court. Four of the remaining six games in the month of January come at home and the last is against Nevada, Jan. 30.

For the second straight season, the WAC Tournament is being held in Reno, Nev. at the Lawlor Events Center. After being knocked out in the first round last season, the Aggies are looking to get back into the finals where they appeared three straight years from 2006-08.

Parents are often the cause of jealousy between siblings

Even when the

within the family.

Find a healthy balance of work and play for children based on age

I'm concerned about sibling rivalry between my two daughters. What are the areas of potential conflict that should be handled with care?

There are three areas that are most delicate. First, children are extremely sensitive about the matter of physical attractiveness and body characteristics. It is highly inflammatory to commend one child at the expense of the other.

Suppose, for example, that Sharon is permitted to hear the casual remark about her sister: "Betty is sure going to be a gorgeous girl."

The very fact that Sharon was not mentioned will probably establish the two girls as rivals. If there is a significant difference in beauty between the two, you can be assured that Sharon has already concluded, "Yeah, I'm the ugly one." When her fears are then confirmed by her parents, resentment and jealousy are generated.

Beauty is the most significant factor in the self-esteem of Western children. Anything that a parent utters on this subject within hearing distance of their children should be screened carefully. It has the power to make brothers and sisters hate one another.

Second, the matter of intelligence is another sensitive nerve to be handled with care. It is not uncommon to hear parents say in front of their children, "I think the younger boy is actually brighter than his

Adults find it difficult to comprehend how powerful that kind of assessment can be in a child's mind. Even when the comments are unplanned and are spoken routinely, they convey how a child is seen within his family. We are all vulnerable to that bit of evidence.

Third, children, especially boys, are extremely competitive with regard to athletic abilities. Those who are slower, weaker and less coordinated than their siblings are rarely able to accept "second best" with grace and Consider, for example, the following note given to me by the mother of two boys. It was written by her 9-yearold son to his 8-year-old brother the evening after the younger child had beaten him in a race.

Dear Jim:

I am the greatest and your the badest. And I can beat everybody in a race and you can't beat anybody in a race. I'm the smartest and your the dumbest. I'm the best sport player and your the badest sport player. And your also a hog. I can beat anybody up. And that's the truth. And that's the end of this story.

Yours truly,

Richard

This note is humorous to me because Richard's motive was so poorly disguised. He had been badly stung by his humiliation on the field of honor, so he came home and raised the battle flags. He will probably spend the next eight weeks looking for opportunities to fire torpedoes into Jim's soft underbelly. Such is the nature of humankind.

Can you give us a guideline for how much work children should be given to do?

There should be a healthy balance between work and play.

Many farm children of the past had daily chores that made life pretty difficult. Early in the morning and again after school they would feed the pigs, gather the eggs, milk the cows and bring in the wood. Little time was left for fun, and childhood became a pretty drab experience. That was an extreme position, and I certainly don't favor its return.

Contrast that workday responsibility with some families today, requiring nothing of children – not even asking them to take out the trash, water the lawn or feed the cat.

Both extremes, as usual, are harmful to the child. The logical middle ground can be found by giving a boy or girl an exposure to responsibility and work, but preserving time for play and fun. The amount of time devoted to each activity should vary with the age of the child, gradually requiring more work as he or she grows older.

transplant recipient

A lesson in diabetes: Don't ignore the signs

Transplant recipient Jim Miyagishima uses second chance to spread his story

By Bethany Conway

Jim Miyagishima has a new lease on

Since receiving a kidney transplant on May 4, he is off dialysis for the first time in more than three years and ready to get the word out on diabetes, the disease that has wreaked havoc on his body since he was diagnosed in 2004.

His main advice: Don't ignore the symptoms.

T ignored (my diabetes) so much that look at all the things that have happened," he said. "I was probably in denial. In fact, I know I was. That's why now I have even made a video about diabetes.'

The video, which can be found on You-Tube along with several other websites, chronicles Miyagishima's struggle and offers advice to those who may be in the same situation.

"I don't want anyone to go through what I have gone through in the past five years," he explained.

When the disease was finally brought to his attention, doctor's told Miyagishima he had been a diabetic for 15 to 20 years.

"You can't let diabetes go that long without seeing a professional," he said.

The battle begins

Miyagishima first discovered that he was diabetic when he was diagnosed with diabetic retinopathy, the leading cause of blindness in adults. Doctors told him he had premature cataracts and was bleeding in both eyes.

Before removing the cataracts, Miyagishima went through four sessions of laser therapy to stop the bleeding, during which he endured close to 2,000

"They are basically trying to cauterize the wounds," he said. After sustaining the burns, his cataracts were removed, but later, his condition worsened.

"I'll never forget, it was Mother's Day of 2004 and I had a special meeting up in Alamogordo in Founder's Park. When I woke up that day, I had blood in my right eye. I couldn't see out of it," he said. "Sure enough I had to get operated on."

The next procedure he endured was a vitrectomy or the surgical removal of the vitreous, which is then replaced with either clear fluid that is compatible with the eye or with gas that completely fills

"I had four operations in two years. My last operation was in December 2005, and ever since then I have never had anymore bleeding," he said.

Though the surgeries restored a great deal of his sight, he is still visually impaired and currently unable to drive a car.

"It seems like there is a very small film of smoke. It's a hindrance," he said, describing his vision.

Shortly after the surgeries, his kidneys failed.

"They failed around January of 2006," he said
By February 2006, he was placed on dialysis, which he continued until May 2009.

His problems were unrelenting, and soon he had all the toes on his right foot amputated. At the same time, he was diagnosed with sepsis a serious medical condition characterized by a whole-body inflammatory state and the presence of a known or suspected infection. It is a major cause of death in intensive-care units worldwide, and Miyagishima was given a 50/50 chance of

"I ended up living. Why? I think because God wanted me to share my story with anyone who would listen," he said.

A second chance

When he learned his kidneys had failed, Miyagishima began an extensive physical and mental examination to determine if he could qualify for a kidney transplant.

"They want to make sure that when they put a healthy kidney in you, you are healthy enough to keep it," he said. "They do everything from top to bottom."

After finally being put on the list for a kidney transplant at Prosbutovian Heavital kidney transplant at Presbyterian Hospital in Albuquerque, he received a life-changing phone call on May 3. It was a member of the hospital's medical staff, who informed him that he had been chosen as a backup for a kidney transplant. Though they already had a primary recipient and told him chances were slim that he would actually receive the kidney, Miyagishima made his way to Albuquerque anyway.

Late that afternoon he received yet another surprise.

"The primary for some reason didn't pass," he said. "I immediately went to get admitted (to the hospital)."

Though he was admitted and went through an thorough examination, he said the reality of the situation didn't sink in until he was asked to put on a hospital gown.

After surgery, at 1:30 p.m. on May 4,

Miyagishima awoke forever changed.
"I was so excited. I couldn't believe that it happened. I didn't go to sleep till the following day," he said. "The second day I was walking. I just felt that good.'

Though he is on a strict drug regiment for the rest of his life, "compared to dialysis, taking those pills is nothing," he said. He also injects himself with insulin four times a day.

The donor

It is because of organ donor Frederico "Freddy" Marquez that Miyagishima is now healthier than he has been in many years and continues to see improvement in his vision.

"He had just celebrated his 31st birthday," Miyagishima said of Marquez, whose birthday was in March. "He was driving an ATV when he was in an accident. Apparently, the kidneys were donated, the valves of his heart were used and also his liver, so he was saving probably four to five lives."

Miyagishima was given the name of his donor in late July and met with his family shortly after. Marquez left behind his fiancé Jacqueline and two young daughters.

That just shows you how short life is.

One minute you're out and about and then you are no longer on Earth. The young man was only 31 years old. Here I am 56 and I am still getting to live," Miyagishima said. I consider this a gift not only from Freddy, but from God."

Now heavily involved with the Donate Life organization, he also wants to help others identify their diabetes.

"I am hoping to become a diabetic educator someday," said Miyagishima, who has his bachelor's degree in health care management. "I know there are a lot of people out there ignoring it right now."

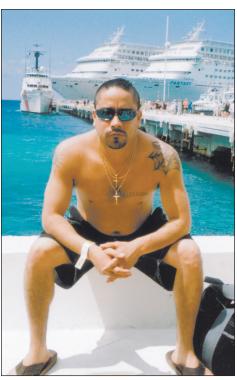

Because of Miyagishima's persistence, his brother Bob has since been diagnosed with diabetes.

"If you're Asian, Afro-American, American Indian or Latino, you have one factor. If you're over 45, there is another factor. If you're overweight, there is another factor,' he said. "If diabetes is in your family. That's another factor.

He also said to look out for blurred vision, neuropathy and frequent urination.

What he wants people to understand, more than anything else, is they shouldn't be afraid to seek medical attention.

We are so good at denial. There are a lot of people out there who don't want to admit that they could be sick," he said.

Frederico "Freddy" Marquez, the donor of Miyagishima's kidney, died in an ATV accident in late April.

Jim Miyagishima points to a picture of Freddy Marquez, the donor of his kidney, which he has displayed on his website.

Less invasive appendectomy

Laparoscopic procedure lets patients recover more quickly, go home earlier

By Paul Cooney, M.D,

Did you know that appendicitis affects 1-in-15 in their lifetime? The appendix is a finger-sized pouch along the large intestine, and may become swollen in response to infection in the body.

This inflammation is called appendicitis. Generally, it is most common in people ages 10 to 30. Though no one knows the exact purpose of the appendix, we do know we can function without it.

Along with infection, appendicitis may also be caused by blockage from stool, cancer or other foreign bodies. The most common symptoms of this condition are abdominal pain, nausea and vomiting. Some may also experience loss of appetite, fever, inability to pass gas and abdominal swelling. In some cases there may be painful urination, severe cramps, constipation or diarrhea.

Symptoms can often be misleading as other abdominal and pelvic conditions can mimic the signs of appendicitis. Your physician may perform an ultrasound or CT scan to identify a swollen or abscessed appendix and a blood test to check for an elevated white blood cell count, a sign that your body is fighting an infection. Once appendicitis is confirmed, the physician will determine if surgery is needed.

If the appendix shows signs of inflammation, it is surgically removed before it ruptures and spreads infection into the abdominal cavity, which can be fatal. Sometimes, even if the patient does not appear to have appendicitis but displays several symptoms, a physician may choose to remove the appendix to prevent problems in the future. The two procedures to remove the appendix are an appendectomy and a laparoscopic appendectomy.

In a laparoscopic appendectomy procedure, three or four small incisions are made in the abdomen. In one incision, the surgeon inserts a laparoscope, a thin-lighted tube attached to a video monitor outside of the body, to see the appendix. Surgical tools are used in the other incisions to remove the appendix. Once it has been removed, the incisions are closed with stitches. This method is much less invasive than a traditional open appendectomy and patients often go home the same day.

In some cases, complications prevent a laparoscopic procedure, so a physician may recommend an open appendectomy. In this procedure, the appendix is removed through a larger incision in the right lower abdomen. An open appendectomy often results in a longer hospital stay and recovery period than the laparoscopic procedure. Patients typically return to normal activities within two to three weeks.

Because a ruptured appendix can be fatal, it is critical that anyone experiencing the symptoms of appendicitis consult with a physician or report to the nearest emergency room.

Passing on the pink hat

Amy Elmore takes over PET/CT post from departing June Mumme

BY BETHANY CONWAY
The Las Cruces Bulletin

Just as the name Hal Mumme conjures up Friday night lights, the name June Mumme brings to mind the biggest Tough Enough to Wear Pink Campaign in the world.

A poster girl for the Aggies are Tough Enough to Wear Pink fundraiser and community development director for Las Cruces PET/CT Imaging for the last three years, June Mumme has been contributing to the fight against breast cancer and every type of cancer for that matter - since making her way to Las Cruces.

Handing over her PET/ CT hat, Mumme will soon move to Abilene, Texas, and give the reigns to new Executive Director Amy Elmore, who will continue to get the word out about the company's advanced imaging technology.

"Usually PET (positron emission tomography) imaging is a technology that is available in larger markets, but our company usually goes into to smaller mar-kets," Mumme said.

By injecting patients with a weight-based amount of fludeoxyglucose (FDG), a radiopharmaceutical, and sending them through the PET/CT scanner, the center is able to identify the stage and severity of all types of cancer, changing the way many doctors in southern New Mexico are treating their patients.

While Mumme brought with her the determination of a breast cancer survivor, Elmore brings her own personal experiences to the table as well.

"I think we both have passion," Mumme said. "Amy has a grandmother who lost her life to breast cancer and her father is a prostate cancer survivor, and we think we can make a difference.

A "southern" girl from Georgia, Elmore, who has her bachelor's and master's degree in education, has been in Las Cruces for six years and began working at Las Cruces PET/CT on June 16.

"I am really fortunate to follow behind June, because she has already made it more than just a job," Elmore said. Her duties as executive director will include recruiting patients and working with the community.

Though Mumme is sad to leave Las Cruces and has formed many bonds during her years in the community, when one door closes another has to open.

"I have identified an opportunity in Abilene to serve in the same capacity and my company is actually going to take over a fixed PET/CT site. So I will continue doing this in Abilene,' Mumme said.

In only a few short weeks, Elmore is already entrenched in the position and finds herself on the job day and night.

"It's more than just a job," she said. "You are with a group of people who have the ability to provide the latest technology, especially in the realm of cancer.

SFI to help state farms

NMSU institute will help maintain economic viability

Agriculture continues to play an important cultural, economic and environmental role in the survival of people in New Mexico, even as more of today's producers downsize to smaller acreage farms and ranches.

With many producers struggling to maintain economic viability, New Mexico State University is beginning to set into motion a program to help producers' livelihoods be the best they

The Small Farm Institute aims to build a corridor of expertise and experience for small farm and ranch producers in order to help them create sustainable agriculture systems and improve their profitability. "The New Mexico State University

Small Farm Institute is unique in that it was specifically created to serve the needs of small farms and ranches in New Mexico, which are a majority of the state's agricultural production," said Jeanine Chavez Castillo, coordinator of the institute.

The state is home to 17,000 small farms and ranches.

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, a small farm is defined as an operation with annual receipts less than $250,000.

About 90 percent of the state's farms are considered "small."

The institute combines research and education, as well as outreach, in order to provide resources and training to producers of small farms and ranches to help them maintain good crop production practices, no matter the size of the land.

Even though the number of farms in the state has risen over the past few years, the amount of the acreage has declined, said Mark Uchanski, assistant professor in the Department of Plant and Environmental Sciences. He attributed the shift to increased urbanization and the loss of portions of family farms to development

Jeff Graham, owner of Mysterious Horizons Farm, said funding has already been secured to help the startup process of the institute. Graham attended the 2007 session of the New Mexico Legislature and secured $64,000 for staffing the program, as well as $105,000 for capital outlay that will be used for such

Going into the family business

SBDC symposium explores generational hardships

By GABRIEL VASQUEZ
The Las Cruces Bulletin The spotlight was on family business during a Business Owners and Entrepreneurs Symposium, held Friday, July 17, in Las Cruces.

The daylong conference, sponsored by the Arrowhead Center,
New Mexico Family Business Alliance and Doña Ana Community College Small Business Development Center, was well received, with about 100 in attendance to listen to speakers present a variety of business topics.

"It was a great event this year," said Fred Owensby, SBDC director. "I had a lot of people come up to me and tell me the topic was exactly right for this year – that it was good to have a theme focused on local family-owned businesses." At the symposium to share their unique experiences on running a family-owned business were former state Sen. Lee Rawson of Rawson Builders Supply; Rick Jackson of American Document Services; Kevin Korzan of Korzan Oils; and Vince Vaccaro of Lorenzo's Restaurant. "Family business is risky business," Vaccaro said. "It's a double-edged sword any way you Vaccaro, who owns three Lorenzo's restaurants in town, started the business with cousin Lorenzo, but split with him after nine years, citing disagreements on how to best run the business.

"We're still friends and we still talk, but it's not as much fun as it used to be," he said.

Vaccaro said he still works with three of his family members, and some of the same challenges still exist, especially when it comes to treating family like "regular employees," he said.

"I have a nephew who is the next generation for us," he said. "He has the energy I used to have when I started in the restaurant business. As his uncle, I have to back up a little bit and let him go more than a regular employee."

Rawson also spoke of family woes during the course of running his building supply company, including the accidental death of his father Carl "Barney" Rawson and his exposure as a public

Ongoing litigation involving the owners of Motel 6 and the Fairfield Inn claiming lost business caused by its Northrise Business Park neighbor SiTEL is set to go back to court this fall.

A previous court appearance in which the hotel owners sought a temporary restraining order against against both SITEL and the City of Las Cruces was denied Dec. 8, 2008. Hotel owners claim that SiTEL employees walking on and around their property during the call center's shift changes has resulted in a loss of business.

Despite attempts to mitigate the situation by presenting hotel owners with various plans to circumvent the foot traffic – through construction of a nearby parking lot – the hotel owners are still planning to take legal action, said business park officials.

SiTEL employs more than 600 workers, paying more than $11 million in annual salaries.

"Our current unemployment rate is around 5 percent, which would increase to 6 percent if SiTEL went out of business," said Walt Skowronski, commercial broker at NAI 1st Valley. "We would lose more than $11 million in payroll, and that is money that's spent in Las Cruces.'

Although SiTEL officials declined to comment,

"We've had a lot of life changing events," Rawson said. "My father died, my wife's father died ... we had two grandbabies born since the November election and with the economy and everything, we're glad to have a break.'

Rawson, who works with his wife Moira and two of their three sons, said he got involved in politics to help preserve the family unit and to help small business

"Our heart is in families and small business," he said.

The former state senator attributed his success to a family business formula he labeled "LOVE," which stands for Love, Others, Vacations and Effort - an acronym he said has guided him through 36 successful years in business.

"First, you've got to love what you do," Rawson said, "But it's really easy to get too involved because you work so much. You have to remember who your first love

Rawson added that employees - to a certain degree - should also be treated as family and commended for their efforts, just as any family member would.

"You need to be able to trust them and make them part of your family," he said. Also critical to the continuity of a family-owned business is succession planning, Rawson said.

"I ask myself, 'What happens to our business if me and my wife go at the same time? Are my sons ready to take over?' We need to think about that because anything can happen," he said.

Kevin Korzan of Korzan Oils, who started his business from scratch by selling synthetic motor oil out of his truck, said he had reservations after his wife first asked him if she could quit her job and work for him.

"For a couple of years she begged me to quit her job and come work for the business," Korzan said, "but I had heard too many horror stories about husbands and wives working together, so I tried to avoid that.

Eventually conceding, Korzan said he found the partnership of marriage and business to be challenging, but ultimately rewarding and succesful.

"One of our biggest strengths is that we are so opposite, that it has helped balance out the business," he said. "I'm good with sales and she's very efficient with office work, so that really helps.

Korzan said he closes his shop on Saturdays to ensure he can spend quality time with his wife and son.

Business-wise, that really hurts us, but my wife and son have to come first," he said. "My dad's mentality was always that business came first. If we wanted to see him we had to go to his office, and nine times out of 10 he ended up putting me to work, so I never wanted to see him. I didn't want that to happen with my family.'

Other topics discussed at the symposium included a New Mexico business and economic forecast, presented by Chris Erickson, NMSU professor of economics; cultural issues within family business, presented by Dr. Marilyn Mason of Mason & Associates; SBA loans and funding information, presented by John Woosley of the U.S. Small Business Administration; a how-to on government contracting, presented by Joseph Conway, program manager for El Paso Community College's Contract Opportunities Center; and organizational behavior in family and small business, presented by Terry Adler, NMSU professor of business management.

Craig Fenske: Keeping Las Cruces beautiful, empowering kids

KLCB coordinator seeks to beautify local neighborhoods

By GABRIEL VASQUEZ
The Las Cruces Bulletin

Following the same storyline as many Las Cruces transplants, Craig Fenske, coordinator for Keep Las Cruces Beautiful, came to New Mexico to retire.

That didn't last long. Fenske soon found employment with the City of Las Cruces, with a desire to work again and beautify the neighborhoods within the city. "I found that Keep Las Cruces Beautiful offered a great opportunity for people to give back to their community, and do it in their own neighborhoods," Fenske said. "This way, they could really see the difference they

During his previous tenure working as a coordinator for a 4-H program in Iowa, Fenske learned the importance of civic contribution and the potential it had to get kids interested in community service.

"I was teaching these kids about citizenship, about not just taking from the world but about giving back," he said. "That's one of the responsibilities for a young person in a 4-H club. You just don't receive things – you give

Going on his third year as coordinator for Keep Las Cruces Beautiful, a division of Las Cruces' Police Codes Enforcement, Fenske has found the same concept of community karma can be taught to local youth, who often come to him as part of their community service requirement for the city's juvenile citation program.

"After they complete the program, some of these kids come back on their own and continue to help us," he said.

Local youth who are cited for graffiti violations, for example, are given the opportunity to design artistic murals to be painted in known problem areas in an effort to deter future vandalism, Fenske said.

"Once they paint the murals, the kids really identify with the art," he said. "We've done about a dozen of these murals in the past year. Once we put the murals up, people respect that it's somebody's art.'

The most recent example of such a mural is the one painted at 1600 La Fonda Drive, Fenske said.

In addition to working with the city's juvenile citation and teen court program, Keep Las Cruces Beautiful also coordinates two annual citywide cleanup events, the Great American Cleanup in the spring and Trek for Trash

"We've had tremendous response for these events from the whole community," Fenske said, who added that his organization coordinates and provides cleanup materials to all volunteers.

employees there said there are no traffic problems or pedestrian overloads during shift changes, which occur every 30 to 60 minutes from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Previously, SiTEL had an agreement with the city for its employees to park near the vacant Tee Time Driving Range on Telshor Boulevard to accommodate for the needed parking spaces. Employees also often parked along the curb of the business park cul-de-sac, but SiTEL administration said employees no longer park there, and make full use of the call center's on-site parking.

Skowronski said a hearing for the case will be held in August, with a future court date slated for

As of press time, hotel officials at the Fairfield Inn and Motel 6 had not returned calls to the Las Cruces Bulletin.

The attorney representing the hotel owners is Joseph Cervantes, who also is a state representative for Doña Ana County.

Editor's note: Look for continuing coverage of this topic in future issues of the Las Cruces Bulletin.

This year, the Great American Cleanup recruited 623 volunteers who contributed to collecting nearly 15 tons of litter and 14,952 hours of work to beautify the city.

Fenske said neighborhood associations, New Mexico State University and Doña Ana Community College have been especially helpful during citywide cleanups.

Also dear to Fenske's heart is the educational outreach program KLCB provides to area schools.

"Working with the schools has been a lot of fun and very rewarding," he said. "We have a yearlong project with six schools to talk with kids about preventing littler, reusing and recycling in an effort to reduce the amount of waste that comes from those schools."

When asked how he measures the success of the organization, Fenske said "success to me is the number of people that are volunteering; looking at the city's litter index; looking at the success of our various programs and seeing how many community groups participate."

KLCB has recently initiated an "adopt-aspot" program, similar to "adopt-a-median" and "adopt-a-highway" programs conducted throughout the city and state.

"We're getting groups of people to  $adopt \ spots \ around \ town-not \ just$ medians but other civic areas and rights-of-way," he said, adding that Wal-Mart, for example, is the adopt-a-spot sponsor for Burn

A KLCB waste reduction and recycling workshop will be held from 8 to 11:30 a.m. Wednesday, July 29, at Desert Hills Elementary School, 280 N. Roadrunner Parkway, taught by Sue Smith, national trainer for Keep America Beautiful.

State adds tax transparency to home buying process

New property tax disclosure law affects home sellers, buyers and brokers

Are you planning to sell a home or rental property anytime soon? If so, don't forget to disclose to the buyer how much they'll be paying in property taxes once the tax assessor reassesses the property at its new sale price. Why? Because effective Wednesday, July 1, you're required to do so by law.

Why the new requirement? The simple answer is to eliminate the "sticker shock" buyers experience when they eventually receive a property tax bill based on the price they paid for the property, rather than on the seller's assessed value at the time of closing. According to language in House Bill 261, the new law makes it mandatory that buyers receive the information before they purchase a property.

Here's a local example of how the law benefits homebuyers:

In 2003, a particular home in the High Range area sold for around $220,000. I'm using ballpark numbers and omitting the address because the property in question actually exists. In the year following the purchase, the new buyer's property tax bill totaled around $1,575. Since state law prohibits county assessors from raising the assessed value of a property more than 3 percent in any given year - unless the property has been sold – the assessed value of the property has risen slowly during the six years since the closing. According to current county records, the 2008 assessed value is more than $200,000, with the total property tax bill totaling just under $1,800.

Today, that same home is listed for sale for around $315,000. Prior to accepting any offers, the law requires the seller or the seller's broker to obtain the new levy information based on the asking price and pass it along to the prospective buyer.

The buyer can choose to waive the requirement, but must do so in writing prior to signing the purchase agreement. So, how can the seller determine what the property tax levy would be at the proposed $315,000 sales price?

According to Doña Ana County Assessor, Gary Perez, learning the answer to that question is as easy as submitting a request form. Perez also noted the law requires county assessors to furnish the information to anyone submitting a written request for it "by the close of the business day following the day the request is received." Since sellers won't know the ultimate sales price until the property is sold, they will have to obtain the amount of the estimated tax based on the asking price of the property.

So what would the 2009 property tax bill total if our subject home were to be purchased for $315,000? A little more than $2,800, if no homeowner's or veteran's exemptions were claimed, according to Doña Ana County's website, www.donaanacounty.org. That's a whopping $1,000 or 55 percent increase over and above the current $1,800 tax bill. Even with both exemptions in place, the 2009 tax bill would still total more than $2,700.

Thinking about purchasing a home and would like to know how much you'll have to pay in property taxes at a given purchase price? Just log on to the county's website and click on the "Research" link. Scroll down to the "2009 Tax Estimator," enter your purchase price and hit the "calculate" button. The software will instantly calculate. late the amount of the tax.

It is interesting to note that prior to enactment of the law, our homebuyer would be told that he or she would have to pay about $150 per month into their escrow account in order to cover the $1,800 yearly cost of the property taxes, but no one was required to disclose to them that in less than a year, their escrow expense would rise by an additional $83 per month, or about $1,000 annually. Now, thanks to the new law, buyers will know the approximate amount of their property taxes so they can work the numbers into their budget before they contract to purchase.

For additional information on the new law or to obtain a request form, contact any of the 500-or-so Las Cruces area Realtors or phone the Doña Ana County Assessor's Office at 647-7400.

See you at closing!

things as purchasing equipment, and constructing a

Specialists will be available to small farm and ranch producers to answer questions, organize programs and conduct research in an effort to help producers find and maintain their niche in the farming and ranching business, including focusing on specialty crops. In an effort to help producers get the most out of their crops, specialists will help them find high-value products to grow, such as horticulture crops and organic produce.

Kulbhushan Grover – who has recently joined NMSU as an assistant professor in the Department of Plant and Environmental Sciences – said the institute will be a good way to bring trainers to the people who need assistance. Grover will spend a portion of his time working with the institute, teaching agroecology.

The institute will complement and support the Small Farm Task Force in northern New Mexico, an extension program that provides resources to help sustain rural family life, as well as small farm research already under way at the Alcalde science center.

The institute will spread to all parts of the state in time. Plans are to coordinate summer camps and credited classes in sustainable agriculture in the future.

Graham said a long-term goal of the institute is to secure land at the Las Cruces campus to construct the Sustainable Agriculture Research-Education Center that could eventually be a place for students, working in conjunction with Doña Ana Community College, to earn a degree in sustainable agriculture. A student-run garden also will be a part of the center to give students hands-on experience in farm work.

The institute will serve as a hub of information to connect farmers and ranchers with the resources and scientific information they need to be successful," Chavez Castillo said.

Chavez Castillo said they are at a point now where she is linking resources with contacts and also is reaching out to producers of small farms and ranches to see what kinds of services they need or would like to see provided through the institute. For more information, call 202-8728 or email at rjeanine@nmsu.edu.

Economic Crises drive endeavors to support long-term sustainability Courtesy of the Community Foundation of Southern New Maries

For people in southern New Mexico, times may be getting tough, but there are many organizations willing to meet emergency and preventative needs. For those organizations, there is the Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico (CFSNM) and a strong desire to stay and support those close to home.

The CFSNM and its supporting organization, the Healthcare Foundation of Southern New Mexico

(HFSNM), are 501(c)(3) nonprofits dedicated to helping the southern New Mexico community. With a strong focus on compliance, the CFSNM has met rigorous standards in philanthropy, affirming a commitment to financial security, transparency and accountability to more than 12,700 donors who want to make a difference in the lives of southern New Mexicans by supporting the arts, cultivating gardens, providing health care services for women and children, curing illnesses, expanding literacy, feeding children and supporting countless other important causes.

With more than 38 local board members serving the foundations, the CFSNM and HFSNM are able to identify and meet needs by offering workshops for nonprofits, presenting key facts to nonprofit board members and offering competitive grant awards.

Everything the two foundations are engaged in supports long-term sustainability, particularly through endowments. Currently, the CFSNM and HFSNM manage more than 150 endowments, of which 33 are agency endowments within the community. An endowment is a fund created through gifts and bequests where principal remains intact in order to be invested as a source of income that could potentially last forever.

To increase nonprofit sustainability, the CFSNM kicked off the Nonprofit Economic Crises Campaign with a goal to raise $500,000 by Dec. 31. The campaign will benefit the 33 nonprofits that have endowments within the CFSNM. With each contribution, the CFSNM will designate 50 percent to an emergency fund for nonprofits that have endowments with the foundation and 50 percent will be designated to a matching fund created to build the nonprofit endowments.

The CFSNM will also continue educating families within southern New Mexico to create legacies, endowments and donoradvised funds, keeping money earned locally, helping locally. With community support, the CFSNM will be able to identify current and emerging issues, direct resources to address those issues and help southern New Mexico prepare for the future.

CD vs. annuity: Which is better?

Even modest gains are appealing during market downturn

The financial markets have behaved badly. When this happens, investors want products that offer stability and predictability. Investor interest in traditional fixed annuities appears to be surging.

Fixed annuities have been overlooked for the most part, and avoided in bull markets. But with their ability to protect principle while providing guaranteed income and modest but positive returns, they are now more appealing to the investing public. This is a result of the stock market heading south.

COMMUNITY

STANDARDS S

The returns fixed annuities provide are not spectacular in today's low-interestrate environment, but they are making believers out of investors who, prior to the recent financial crisis, scoffed at anything offering guaranteed returns as "low" as 4 to 5 percent. It is amazing how quickly a person's perspective can change after watching the value of his or her investments shrink like a chile pepper in the sun.

Last month, I had a conversation with an old client who has investments in the $300,000 range. This is someone who never wanted to talk about insurance products, someone who said he hates insurance companies. Well, he recently called me and wanted to talk about fixed annuities. I couldn't believe how his attitude had changed.

According to the Beacon Research

Fixed Annuity Premium Study for the second quarter of 2008, sales of traditional fixed income annuities hit $15.6 billion. This is almost twice the $7.9 billion sales figure for the same period in 2007. Lifted by the overall market turmoil and an increasingly favorable yield spread relative to CDs, overall sales increased 54 percent from the second quarter of 2007. Total fixed annuity sales for the first half of 2008 were up 47percent from the same period in 2007. Beacon's estimates are based on data provided by 50 insurance companies representing 87 percent of the U.S. fixed annuity market.

The lesson I learned from the recent market melt-down, at least as far as fixed annuities and fixed indexed annuities are concerned, is to be more adamant in talking to clients about their red and green. No. I'm not talking about chile, I'm talking about red money or green money (green money being what I refer to as "saved money"). This is money that accepts less risk and interest. The red money is our risk money. This is the money in which we have no control over loss, such as stocks and mutual funds.

A simple guideline to apportion the red and green is simple. Start with the number "100" and subtract your age. The result, expressed as a percentage, should be your red money. So, if you are 75 years old,

UMSTEAD Senior Finance

25 percent of your money should be red; 75 percent should be green.

The reasons for looking at annuities, rather than CDs and bonds, are the same now as they were before the crisis. The advantages include:

- Tax deferred growth of income - something a CD can't offer
- Protection of principle
- A guaranteed rate of return

The opportunity to annuitize Annuity income doesn't count toward calculations for Social Security benefits.

All of these features add up to a financial tool that bruised investors may find attractive. They are simple, clear and transparent with guarantees for the fixed segment of portfolios that can't be achieved in stocks or bonds. These are good products for the guarantees they provide, and they are easier for older clients to understand.

But as simple as the product is, investors must keep in mind who is offering the product. Some insurance companies have seen their ratings downgraded. Rates of return may be secondary to the ratings of the insurance company. Please check the ratings yourself or contact your

IN GOOD COMPANY: ARMORED VEHICLE CONCEPTS

Combating the border's lawlessness

Armored car distributor sets up shop

By Gabriel Vasquez

Because safety is no longer a guarantee for business persons, politicos or private citizens traveling to Mexico, Johnny Johnston, a retired Vietnam-era vet, is offering potential visitors a safer way to travel.

Using the latest in armor technology, Johnston offers his customers a variety of ways to shield their existing vehicles, or brand new pre-armored vehicles from a leading armored car manufacturer.

"I started this company because of the people across the border getting killed," Johnson said. "With my vehicles – if you have the money and a legitimate need – you can keep yourself from being killed, extorted, kidnapped or anything in between."

Johnston said the most practical option for those who often go south of the border is a fully armored B6 2009 Chevy Suburban 3/4 Ton SUV. The vehicle, built to factory specifications, has a myriad of safety features, including five side armoring of the passenger compartments, a blast protection shield, a ballistic steel interior frame that overlaps impact areas such as doors and windows and vehicle armoring constructed in such a way as to ensure that a projectile following a linear or angled path could not enter - basically, it's almost indestructible, he said.

"You are totally encapsulated in armor – I mean everywhere," he said.

In compliance with National Institute of Justice specifications, Johnston's custom Suburban offers protection against 7.62x51mm, M80 NATO Ball ammunition, and simultaneous detonation of two DM-51 hand grenades.

"There's no service like this for 500 miles," Johnston said. "The conditions in Juárez and other places in Mexico are hindering business between our two countries. People are terrified to go down there. I'm just trying to help."

Johnston said before an armored vehicle can cross the border, the owner must have approval from both the Mexican and United States federal governments, and be registered in a database to ensure maximum safety and accountability of the vehicle's owner and passengers.

Although the paperwork and permit requirements can be long and drawn-out, Johnston said it's worth it to have peace of mind when traveling across the border to conduct business or just to visit.

Johnston said he knows all too well about traveling unprepared, having served in Vietnam and Korea and "too often having to go into burning debris and pull people out.

"I've had all kinds of businesses,"

Johnny Johnston, war veteran and business owner, displays the photos and spec details of the armored B6 2009 Chevy Suburban, capable of withstanding attacks from AK-47 assault rifles and hand grenades.

"Including some in Juárez. But I got tired of being harassed when going across the border all the time."

In addition to offering protection from potential attackers, Johnston's vehicles include the option of adding counterof-fensive capabilities, such as gun ports and anti-riot devices.

"We basically have stuff that will make the bad guys run, and run quick," he said.

A fully-armored B6 Suburban will run customers around $115,000, while the price for custom-armored vehicles depends on the level of protection desired by the customer.

"A lot of people that cross the border every day are prime targets for kidnappers and extortionists," Johnston said. "They could probably use one of these cars.

New Mexico is an energy exporting state. This means that strong energy markets are good for our state. Higher energy prices mean more revenue for businesses and more revenue for state government. So, understanding energy markets is an important tool in understanding the New Mexico economy.

The problem is energy markets don't cooperate, refusing to be well behaved.

Take, for instance, the long-run relationship between the price of oil and the price of natural gas. The energy included in 1,000 cubic feet of natural gas is about one-sixth the energy contained in a bar-rel of oil. Thus, a reasonable guess might be that the price of a barrel of oil would be six times the price of 1,000 cubic feet of natural gas.

In fact, up until recently, this 6-to-1 relationship has held reasonably well, but since the start of the year, oil prices have increased 40 percent, while natural gas prices have fallen 40 percent. The consequence is that British Thermal Units derived from oil costs about three times the same BTU derived from natural gas.

The cause of the deviation from the reasonable and understandable 6-to-1 price relationship lies in the structure of energy markets. Oil is essentially a global market, with large super tankers crisscrossing the world's oceans in response to deviations in local prices from global norms. Natural gas, on the other hand, is transported primarily via pipelines, linking specific fields to specific markets. Prices might be higher in Europe, but New Mexico natural gas has to go to California because that is where the pipes lead. The limited shipping of natural gas that does occur is not sufficient to eliminate price deviations among markets.

Given the more local nature of natural gas markets, changes in local supply can affect local prices in the short run. That seems to be what is happening now. A number putting downward of large, new so-called "shale plays" are com-ing on line. These are relatively expensive wells drilled into shale, which are then allowed to fill gas prices will rise. with gas seeping from the surrounding matrix. Large new finds in Louisiana and British Columbia have increased supplies in North America, explaining falling natu-

Relatively high oil prices coupled with relatively low natural gas prices isn't sustainable. Eventually, the long run 6-to-1 relationship will be re-established. Either people will convert to natural gas, putting downward pressure on oil prices, or natural gas prices will rise. Already, NGVAmerica reports that 20 percent of new buses ordered are capable of using natural gas. T. Boone Pickens has famously campaigned for conversion of private cars to natural gas.

For New Mexico, higher natural gas prices couldn't be too soon. Based on 2007 production levels, a 10-cent rise in natural gas price per 1,000 cubic feet increases business revenues by $156 million and tax revenues by $3.8 million.

Oil prices are also important for our economy, but less so. A 10-cent rise in oil prices per 1,000 cubic feet energy equivalent increases business revenues by $36,000,000 - quite a bit less.

Economic theory says that in the long run, the price of a BTU should be the same from all energy sources. This means that either natural gas prices have to rise or oil prices fall. Even if most of the price adjustment comes from falling oil prices, market adjustments should work to New Mexico's advantage. But this is in the long run; meanwhile, the short run may take a long time.

White Sands National Monument offers plenty of fun on the dunes

From tours to seminars, this national park offers more to do than just sand surfing

Many New Mexicans may have noticed a familiar landmark in several movies this summer, including "Transformers: Revenge of the Fallen" and "Year One." White Sands National Monu-

White Sands National Monument has been featured on the big screen since the 1950s, and now is the perfect time for locals and visitors to became acquainted with the desert treasure.

President Herbert Hoover declared the sandy area a national monument in 1933 because it is 97 percent pure gypsum and 275

The visitor Center is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the winter and 8 a.m. to 7 p.m. in the summer. The park is closed for up to three hours during missile testing, so call prior to arrival.

square miles, making it the largest gypsum dune field in the world.

Since being classified as a national monument, visitors from around the world have come to see the one-of-a-kind sand.

Along with four different walking trails and an 8-mile scenic drive, White Sands hosts events and activities throughout the year. During the summer months, when the nights are longer, there is plenty for a family to choose from, such as the White Sands Institute, Full Moon Nights and various rangerguided tours.

"We are more than just a big sandbox," said Kathy Denton, an educational specialist for the park. "There is so much to see and do and experience."

This year being its first, the White Sands Institute consists of various field seminars taught by experts ranging from an ecologist and entomologist to a historian, photographer and artist.

"It's a chance to do something you wouldn't be able to do on your own," Denton said, explaining that universities and other experts conduct research at the park and these seminars work to bring that research to the public. "It's like a mini-college course."

Designed for adults and children in at least 10th grade, the last two institute seminars will take place in August. Each threeday seminar costs $175 and consists of some easy off-trail hiking. Class size is limited, so participants must register ahead

"By the Dune's Early Light:

Photographing White Sands" will take place Wednesday, Aug. 5 to Friday, Aug. 7. During this hands-on seminar, commercial photographer Jim Spencer will teach how to properly photograph the national monument, using both film and digital cameras. It will include morning, sunset and moonrise lessons.

moonrise lessons.

During "White Sands Water Colors," from Wednesday, Aug. 19 to Friday, Aug. 21, watercolorist Dan Stouffer will teach techniques for capturing the dune's shape, shadows and vegetation with paint.

Thanks to a successful first year, Denton said they hope to make the White Sands Institute an annual event and add more seminars.

A signature event of the White Sands National Monument is its Full Moon Nights, during which the monument stays open an hour later. Denton said the park started the Full Moon Nights as a way to give visitors the opportunity to see the park at night.

tunity to see the park at night.

"The moon lights up the dunes, it's beautiful," she said.
"It's so bright, you can walk around without a flashlight – but we still recommend that people bring one."

The park also hosts special events in the natural dune amphitheater during the Full Moon Nights including speakers, cowboy poets and even a concert. During the Wednesday, Aug. 5, Full Moon Night, western fiction author Michael McGarrity will speak about his work.

The last two Full Moon Nights will take place Friday, Sept. 5, with a 3-D photo slide show by the monument's resource staff, and Friday, Oct. 2, with presentation on Tularosa Basin legends.

To participate in Full Moon Nights, visitors must be inside the park before 10 p.m. and will remain inside until 11 p.m. Denton said visitors should bring something to sit on. White Sands National Mon-

White Sands National Monument also offers a variety of ranger-guided activities, including sunset walks taking place every night in the summer, when staff is available. The Sunset Stroll Nature

The Sunset Stroll Nature Walk is less than a mile long and takes visitors throughout the dunes to examine the geology, vegetation and animals that call the park home. The walks end at sunset – the perfect opportunity for photographs.

Another popular ranger-guided tour is the Lake Lucero tour, which is the source of the gypsum. During the three-hour tour, participants drive in their vehicle the 17-mile stretch of paved road from White Sands Missile Range to Lake Lucero trailhead. They then walk less than a mile to the lake.

Participants must register ahead of time and should bring a spare tire, drinking water, a snack, sunglasses, sunscreen and walking shoes. Also, cameras may not be used while passing through the missile range, but are allowed at the lake.

Denton said two other fun activities in September are the 10th annual White Sands Star Party, during which astronomers set up telescopes and the public is invited to view the night sky, and the White Sands Balloon Invitational, when 50 balloons are launched from the park.

With so many activities to choose from, it may be hard to believe the fee to the park is only $3 for adults and children over the age of 15.

"People can come out and enjoy their park and it's pretty inexpensive," Denton said.

Even if a person can't make it to the walks or seminars, she said they can still enjoy a picnic, go sledding or build a sandcastle.

I have full coverage. I'm covered, right?

Robert L. Lovett Attorney at Law

Wrong. As an auto accident attorney practicing for 15 years, I hear a lot of clients that say they're not worried because they have "full coverage." Full coverage is in no way full enough to cover you for personal injuries. This type of coverage means you have liability and collision coverage. Liability pays someone else if you cause an accident. It doesn't cover you. Collision coverage covers your car itself. This means if you're in an accident, collision coverage will pay to fix or replace your car. Full coverage does not cover your personal injury claim. So what kind of insurance should you have to make sure you really are fully covered?

Uninsured motorist. A recent study stated that 1 out of every 4 motorists in New Mexico get behind the wheel without insurance. New Mexico has the dubious distinction of leading the nation in the number of uninsured motorists. Uninsured motorist coverage provides protection for your medical bills, lost wages, and pain and suffering should a driver cause an accident and he's one of the four that doesn't have insurance. Uninsured motorist may also cover you even if the other driver has insurance, but doesn't have enough insurance to fully cover your losses.

It's scary enough to be in an auto accident. It's worse to be not covered for that accident. Please feel free to give me a call anytime to discuss your personal injury claim.

One of the most original and exciting voices to emerge on the music scene in recent years, singer/songwriter Namoli Brennet will bring her raw, gritty and achingly poignant stylings to the Rio Grande Theatre at 7:30 p.m. Friday, Aug. 21.

Rio Grande Theatre at 7:30 p.m. Friday, Aug. 21.

Currently receiving rave reviews for her seventh independent release, "Until From This Dream I Wake," Zocalo Magazine has called it "gorgeous and introspective" while the Windy City Times said it was "remarkable"

Times said it was "remarkable."

Brennet has been relentlessly touring the country in her battered Volvo wagon since the release of her 2002 CD, "Boy in a Dress." Based in Tucson, Ariz., the enigmatic and colorful Brennet has covered more than 30,000 miles and 43 states over the past seven years, playing cities from San Francisco to New York. In between producing, engineering and releasing seven CDs on her own label, Flaming Dame Records, she's shared stages with Melissa Ferrick, Jill Sobule, Michelle Shocked and many others.

Brennet's seventh self-released disc, "Until From This Dream I Wake," has her mining some deeper and more personal emotional territory than any of her previous releases. A deft storyteller, Brennet now turns her lens inward and the result is a CD filled with a beautiful, aching melancholy that documents the transition from despair to hope. As a songwriter who's known as a talented lyricist and storyteller, Brennet has a gift for creating vivid characters and situations. On this disc, she's used those talents to create an intimate self-portrait, with stunning and heartbreaking results.

Doors will open at 7 p.m. and the performance will begin at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $10 and can be purchased at www.riograndetheatre.com. For more information, visit Brennet's website at www.namolirennet.com.

Hikers and picnickers don't have far to go

A visit to the Dripping

Springs ruins is well worth the modest $3 fee.

By JIM HILLEY

I have lived in Las Cruces for many years, and while I had visited the picnic area at La Cueva in the Dripping Springs Natural Area, I had never made the hike to the Boyd Sanitarium and the Dripping Springs Resort, originally called the Van Patten Mountain Camp.

Silly me.

My excuse was that there were many great places to hike in the Organ Mountains without paying a fee, such as Achenbach Canyon further south, or at Little Grove near Organ. Now, however, I know that a visit to the Dripping Springs ruins is well worth the modest $3 fee per vehicle.

I had seen the iconic photographs of crumbling, stone walls nestled against the towering megaliths of the Organ Mountains. I knew something of the history, but, as with many special places, you just have to see it for yourself to appreciate it. The A.B. Cox Visitors Center has a nice garden and some interesting exhibits on the history of the area. There are displays on what animals might be seen, and a few hands-on exhibits for the kids.

Outside there is a water fountain with chilled way up the trail to the old resort, it rounds a rocky hill and turns east, entering a beautiful, grassy valley that is hidden to those who have never made the

On the south side of the trail, even near the visitor's center, evidence of the Several juniper trees along the trail provide a good chance to take a break.

The ruins make for great photographs.

A stone stairway is next to the sanitarium.

The Boyd Sanitarium had a large dining hall and many interesting features in it adjacent rock garden.

June 2008 fire that burned in the area abounds. Nature recovers quickly however, and much of the ground cover has returned and many of the trees survived. The fire actually benefited the area, by clearing out years of undergrowth.

The trail then heads east, into the heart of the Organs. The huge spires of the mountains tower overhead, and you may catch a glimpse of a raptor surfing the winds high above.

First, the trail reaches the old livery area, which was apparently often used during the years the land was a working cattle ranch owned by the Cox family.

Further up, the cañon narrows, and the mountains close in. Just when it seems that impenetrable cliffs bar the way, the trail begins a short loop, with one way leading to the sanitarium, and the other to the old stone resort.

The sanitarium was built by Dr. Nathan Boyd after he acquired the property from Van Patten in 1917. It was mostly built of wood, but has an extensive area of retaining walls, stone steps and walking paths. At one point there even seems to have been a water fountain and cement water basin - it must have been an uncommonly beautiful garden.

> Looking to ignite your imagination? Join us for a day filled with Embroidery T-n-T. Whether you are experienced

The other direction, the path leads to the original resort built by Col. Eugene Van Patten, with its photogenic stone walls. What most photos don't show however, is the nice shaded area adjacent to the old resort. There are now a few picnic tables at the site, and a restroom is nearby. The sanitarium and the resort are close to each other, so don't fail to visit both.

When you visit, think about either taking in a backpack with a picnic lunch or enjoy a meal down at the La Cueva picnic area. Spend some time just enjoy ing the place - I know I had to hike back down the trail far too soon.

Dripping Springs Natural Area is open from 8 a.m. to 7 p.m., April through September, and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. November through March. The visitor center is open 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. year-round, except for winter holidays. There is a $3 per vehicle per day use fee and a group picnic site can be reserved for $25. There are 12 picnic sites with shelters and grills in the lower part of the area, near La Cueva. No pets are allowed, and camping and campfires are prohibited.

Robert Boswell: Reaching the masses with help from Oprah

Latest book by NMSU professor receives national recognition

By BETH SITZLER
The Las Cruces Bulletin

Not many can boast that their work has received a seal of approval from Oprah Winfrey, but Las Cruces resident and author Robert Boswell can.

professor said with the help of Oprah, his book has already Boswell's book "The Heyday of the Insensitive Bastards" begun to reach a wider audience. was recently announced as one of the famed talk show host's summer reading picks, creating a national buzz and enticing more readers to pick up

"I'm glad she likes it because that means a lot more people will read it," Boswell said.

The veteran author and New Mexico State University English

Finding a voice

Even as a child, Boswell said he wanted to be a writer. He recalled that he and his childhood friend would play in chapters, ending their play sessions when they thought the chapter was over.

"I'm a writer. It's what I do," he said. "It's how I engage the

"I decided to give myself a

Boswell studied creative writing at the University of Arizona, where he taught as a teacher's assistant, realizing that he also enjoyed working with students.

After earning a master's degree in fine arts, Boswell began his career as a writer. His first novel "Dancing in the Movies," won the Iowa Prize for Short Fiction in 1985.

As his writing career continued, Boswell also began teaching, first at Northwestern University. "I enjoyed it," he said. "I worked hard to be a good

In 1989, around the time his third novel was being published, Boswell and his wife, author and professor Antonya Nelson, decided to head west to a university where they could both teach.

Although they received offers from several universities, they chose NMSU because of its faculty, which included famed author Kevin McIlvoy.

"The faculty wants to be there," he said. "(At some universities) they try to recruit you, but they don't want to be there themselves.

Since joining the NMSU faculty as a creative writing professor, Boswell said he has had the opportunity to work with many gifted undergraduate and graduate students.

"It's a great way to spend one's life, working with young writers," he said. "I get to work with talented writers. It reminds you why you wanted to write in the first place."

During his time at NMSU, the Kentucky native has continued to write short stories and novels, saying he is constantly working toward "the next story."

The heyday of a NMSU professor

With 11 published books under his belt, Boswell has seen his fair share of popularity and fame. His 1996 novel "Mystery Ride" spent three weeks on the best seller list and was made into the movie "12 Mile Road."

He said while some of his other books have also received critical acclaim, not all have found a wide audience.

'Writing is a great life. It's publishing that is complicated,"

After Oprah announced his book made her list, Boswell said he has received a great deal of response from newspapers, magazines and bookstores, which have been selling out of his book.

"Creation is the most important part, but it's very lonely work," he said. "When you're through ... you hope it's worth while and will find an audience."

The Heyday of the Insensitive Bastards" is a collection of short, medium and long stories, assembled over the past decade. He said the stories are different, but share a common theme.

"(It's about) people who are trying to be decent in this com-plicated world," he said. "How to engage in the world and still be a decent human being is the

she is a literary influence. 'She's an interesting, serious reader," he said. "I think she does a good job."

While he has yet to be

The next story

Boswell is currently working on two new novels, one of which is another collection of stories. The other is a traditional novel about counselors and clients in a residential mental health

While Boswell prepares to write another draft this summer, he also is building onto his cabin in Colorado. He said he and his wife bought a large amount of land in a mountain ghost town and are working with his brother to turn the former post office into a relaxing getaway.

This school year, Boswell said he will continue to split his time between NMSU, where he is a member of the MFA program, and the University of Houston, where he and Nelson are on the

Their two children, Jade and Noah, will be attending the NMSU honors college in the fall.

Boswell said he hopes people will read "The Heyday of the Insensitive Bastards."

"People are sometimes reluctant to check out story collections. They're more interested in novels," he said. "Some of the very best literature written in this country is in the form of story collections.

Fast food the Santa Fe Grill way

Locally owned favorite known for its burritos

Hours vary depending on location

Catering and Smokin' Gun Barbecue

By BETH SITZLER

Nothing hits the spot like a warm burrito filled with your favorite ingredients. At Santa Fe Grill, patrons can have their favorites prepared in front of them in only a matter of minutes.

Santa Fe Grill originally began as a sit-down restaurant operated by Juan Morales and Scott Bannister. Twelve years ago, however, Pic Quik owner Oscar Andrade approached the duo with the idea of putting Santa Fe Grill in the gas station's convenient stores.

Since transitioning into the fast-food field, this local favorite, known for quality breakfast, lunch and dinner dishes served throughout the day, has expanded into 10 Pic Quik locations in Las Cruces and one in Hatch, N.M.

"We have a very unique operation," Morales said. "Pic Quik is the Cadillac of all convenient stores."

Morales said some might be surprised to find such a wide selection of dishes at Santa Fe Grill, such as Mexican shrimp cocktails and grilled sub sandwiches, including brisket and Philly cheese steak. The most popular item, however, is the burrito.

Boasting more than 110 varieties,
Morales said the specialty burritos have all been named after former Santa Fe Grill customers. Kid Dynamite, which consists of chorizo, relleno, green chile, pico, beans and cheese, was named for professional boxer Danny Romero, while the Medic, which has chicken, green chile, pico, cheese and barbecue sauce, was named in honor of the local paramedics.

Morales said of all the burritos, the most popular is The Medicine Man.

"Not only do you get an oversized burrito, you get steak, chicken, bacon, potato, green chile and our special milanesa sauces and cheddar cheese," he said. "Cheddar always makes it better."

The second most popular burrito, Morales said, is the Breakfast Dream. This savory delight has steak, chorizo, bacon, potato, eggs, beans and cheese.

Along with quick burritos and other fast dishes, Santa Fe Grill also offers a catering service, specializing in Southwest cuisine. Morales said they can cater for events as small as 20 people or as large as 1,000.

With a variety of dishes, including pasta, steak and lobster, there is something for any occasion. Santa Fe Grill has catered many events around town, including those for DirecTV, Mesilla Valley Hospice, as well as the opening of the new Magistrate Court.

"Our motto is 'Where quality is job No. 1," he said.

BETH SITZLER I The Las Cruces Bulletin

Juan Morales stands in front of one of the 10 Santa Fe Grills located in Pic Quik Stores throughout Las

This dedication to quality and customer satisfaction has lead to many expansions within the company. Beginning Saturday, July 25, Santa Fe Grill will operate chile roasters outside select stores. Along with buying freshly roasted chiles, customers can also bring in their own chile to be roasted cial for free.

Another service offered at select locations and for catering is the Smokin' Gun Barbecue, which offers brisket, pulled pork and sausage among other dishes cooked in a gun-shaped smoker.

"We grill on-site and specialize in tail gate parties," Morales said.

With about 58 employees and a growing popularity, Morales said he will open another location in Las Cruces this year.

Even though Bannister relinquished the "golden spatula" to Morales four years ago, making him president of Santa Fe Grill, Morales said the best part of his job is getting behind the grill.

Pancake Alley Diner

A combination of homemade, delicious food along with an atmosphere that takes to you the days of Betty Boop, Marilyn Monroe and Elvis is what you will find when you visit the Pancake Alley Diner. You will also enjoy seeing large, stuffed Mickey and Minnie Mouse figures, pictures, vintage artifacts and listen to old-time music as part of the ever-changing décor while you sip on an old-fashioned, hand-dipped ice cream shake. Ms. Wood, who has owned the diner and Royal Host Motel for 10 years, used to enjoy visiting old diners when she lived in Colorado. From her visits, she enjoyed the step-back-in-time feeling from the diners. This inspired her in designing the diner when she remodeled four years ago. The servers wear various uniforms. It might be the bright red uniform, the "Blast from the Past" T-shirt, Betty Boop or maybe even Mickey and Minnie Mouse. "We make excellent Mexican food, which is muy bueno, and salsa that will knock your socks off," Wood said. "Breakfast is served all day with some great choices, and our homemade specials will become your favorites. "The diner also has homemade pies and other desserts. One of the philosophies of the Pancake Alley Diner, Wood says, is there's always room for dessert. Whether it's a handmade shake, James Brown sundae, chocolate surprise pie or ice cream sundae, you will want to taste a delicious dessert or take one home for later. So come on in to enjoy delicious homemade food, sing, reminisce or just have fun! We serve "food so good your tongue will slap your forehead!

Children shine in 'Robinson Crusoe'

Hiccups and missed cues only add to charm of musical comedy

By JONATHAN BUTZ

With the help of the Missoula Children's Theater, almost 50 local children performed Saturday, July 18, at the Rio Grande Theatre in a production of "The Amazing Adventures of Robinson Crusoe," a musical comedy loosely based on the classic Daniel Defoe novel.

The children had only a week of auditions and rehearsal to pull off the production, complete with a full set and costumes, provided by MCT. Las Cruces children ages 5 to 18 were invited to audition early Monday, July 13 and were cast into the production, bringing the audience such characters as Oscar the Octopi, Myrtle the Turtle and The Very Hairy Frowny-Face Tribe. By the end of the week the children contributed to a performance that worked surprisingly well, considering the small amount of time MCT had to wrangle in its bright-eyed cast.

Told from the viewpoint of Friday (David Smith) and his family, the play introduces us to Robinson Crusoe (Chris Hornung) years after he became stranded, and has since established a tourist attraction that showcases the many wacky characters inhabiting the island. Robinson and his only companion Wilson the Goat (Kayli Chambers), attempt to unite the island inhabitants despite their diversity; however, they meet a few obstacles when faced with the always frightening, but ultimately misunderstood Leonard the Leopard (Kalan Hubbard) and The Very Hairy Frowny-Face Tribe.

MCT's "Robinson Crusoe" brings all the nautical familiarity of the original tale and couples it with the brightly colored zaniness of children's television. Writer Jim Caron and composer Greg Boris created lively characters and memorable songs, but the true joy comes in watching how excited all the children are to be on stage delivering lines and singing songs in front of a live audience.

The story seems intentionally sweet and simple, providing more room for the child actors to grow into their performances. This was one of those cases more common to children's theater in which all the minor acting hiccups and missed cues only add to the overall charm of the production, evoking memories of school plays set to shaky piano music.

It's been almost 40 years since MCT founders Jim Caron and Don Collins first embarked on their mission to teach and enrich the lives of children through musical theater. Since 1970, MCT has been touring the world, casting children and producing performances similar to Saturday's.

Now with 47 teams of tour actors and directors, MCT continues as a nonprofit organization, touring the globe in almost 1,300 communities, and 16 countries.

MCT tour directors Addie Barnhart and David Smith said they were happy to come to Las Cruces and enjoyed working with the local children. Although MCT will not be visiting Las Cruces again any time soon, there are tour dates scheduled in Carlsbad, N.M., Deming, N.M., and Albuquerque, among other cities.

'Pirates' come to the Black Box Theatre Aug. 1 and 2

Enchanting production features cast of 33

For its 40th Anniversary, The Gilbert and Sullivan Company of El Paso proudly presents Gilbert and Sullivan's swashbuckling comic operetta "The Pirates of Penzance," taking place at 8 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 1, and 3 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 2, at the Black Box Theatre, 430 N. Downtown Mall.

A raucous tale of pirates, policemen, romance and the demands of duty, this enchanting production features a cast 33-strong under the artistic direction of Joan Quarm. The company has brought their productions to the Black Box Theatre since 2004, starting with "Trial by Jury."

After the success of their one-act operetta "Trial By Jury" in 1875, Gilbert and Sullivan, and their producer Richard D'Oyly Carte, decided to produce a longer work. D'Oyly Carte was very interested in developing an English form of light opera to displace the French works that had dominated the London theater scene.

Whereas the French operettas often had stereotypical and cartoonish characters, Gilbert and Sullivan wrote operettas that avoided overt sexual references and situations found in French operettas, developing characters who were much more identifiable.

Gilbert and Sullivan wrote for ensemble casts rather than individual stars. Gilbert directed and oversaw set and costume design, while Sullivan oversaw the musical preparation. The body of their collaborative work, with their wittiness, crispness and polish, redefined popular musical theatre on both sides of the Atlantic.

The swash-buckling story of "The Pirates of Penzance" is set in Cornwall, where Queen Victoria reigns supreme. The infamous yet tender-hearted Pirates of Penzance are throwing a birthday party for their young apprentice, Frederic. The discovery that he was born on February 29 on a leap year puts all his plans for the future into disarray – it seems that he won't reach 21 and come of age until he is 84.

Drama examines the secret life of a tailor

Michael Keaton shows off acting and directing chops in this dark comedy REVIEW BY JEFF BERG This begins an unusual courtship, not one of rescue This begins an unusual courtship, not one of rescue

I don't think I've ever watched a movie twice in one sitting, but that was the case with "The Merry Gentleman," a very detailed and nuanced drama directed by and starring Michael Keaton, whose career cannot be stereotyped. He's been Batman, Jack Frost, Mr. Mom and Beetlejuice, and now he tries his turn as an empty soul, who might be a candidate for redemption.

The subtle, numerous analogies and quiet views of symbolism help make this picture one that is very unique and can offer much discussion.

Keaton plays the part of Frank Logan, a man with two distinct yet different careers - that of a tailor and then

Famous legend at CineMatinee

'Geronimo' has everything a good Western should

The CineMatinee film at the Fountain Theatre for Saturday, July 25, is "Geronimo: An American Legend" (1993, 115 minutes, rated PG-13).

Walter Hill's revisionist take on the American cavalry's campaign to capture Chiricahua Apache warrior, the New Mexico born Goyathlay, known as Geronimo in Mexico (played by Was Studi, a resident of Sorte Ex in Mexico (played by Wes Studi, a resident of Santa Fe) is a tale that both celebrates and critiques myths of the American West – like Clint Eastwood's "Unforgiven."

Hill's film about the famous Apache moves with a stately self-assurance, a confidence that seems eerie and unfamiliar. The movie's serenity feels strange only because it has been so long since anyone has dared to make a Western in the ample, leisurely, classical style of John Ford. The screenplay, by John Milius and Larry Gross, is unambiguously sympathetic to the suffering of the Indians, but it doesn't oversell the case by presenting the Apaches as an idyllic community of spiritually superior innocents and the Army as an aggregation of bloodthirsty racists.

The carefully developed narrative, detailing the intricate dance of suspicion and misunderstanding between the Army and Geronimo's band of warriors, is studded with breathtakingly edited action sequences. The cinematography by Lloyd Ahern is ravishing and Studi gives a terrific performance in the title role.

Despite its title, "Geronimo" is really about the American cavalry officers who undertake the responsibility of recapturing the warrior, in particular the young narrator Lt. Charles Gatewood (played by Jason Potrie) who respects the great Caronime and brokens. Patric), who respects the great Geronimo and brokers a treaty with the Chiricahua, only to see it collapse when treaty with the Chiricanua, only to see it collapse when the Army kills the tribal medicine man.

New Mexico resident Gene Hackman plays Gen.
George Crook, the proud but sympathetic officer charged with bringing in the renegades who take to hills after the killing. Matt Damon co-stars as a young lieutenant, who finds himself battling his assumptions of the Anache people of the Apache people.

More complex and complicated than most Westerns, this film is lean, ironic and beautiful to look at – it was shot on location against the astounding landscape of southeastern Utah – and driven by a wonderful Ry Cooder soundtrack. Unless otherwise noted, screening time is at 1:30 p.m., and admission is $4 for everyone except film society members who are admitted for $1. The theater is located one-half block south of the Mesilla Plaza. For more information, call 524-8287.

Now, before you turn the page thinking this is just another shoot-em-up, allow yourself the extra minutes you will need to read this review of this rather unique film.

Indeed, we do get to accompany Frank on several jobs in the movie. The body count is small, and it is never made clear as to why Frank has this "second" job, and who the dead men are, but we are sure that he hates himself for it.

By an interesting turn of events, he meets Kate (a great job by Kelly Macdonald), an equally lonely soul. They don't actually meet at first, but he does spy her through a rifle scope while sighting in his next intended victim, as she demonstrates to a friend the posture of a statue of Jesus that she has seen in a nearby church.

Kate is on the run from an abusive cop husband, and has taken shelter in Chicago, where Frank performs both of his trades.

The film takes place during the Christmas season, and Kate, who is fending off other potential unsuitable suitors is comically (there are several fine moments of darkish comedy) rescued by Frank from under her newly purchased Christ-and remedy but one that might best be described by Emily Dickinson's line, "I felt it shelter to speak to you.

There is no lame movie romance here, but rather a very slow coming together of two wounded and lonely souls. The suicidal Frank and healing Kate never physically touch, never really smile, but the message imparted from their meetings becomes just a smidge clearer each time they are on screen, often with little dialogue, and never beyond the mundane.

Another of Kate's unlikely suitors is a city detective who is investigating the death of one of Frank's victims, thus forming a somewhat emotional ménage a trois, that helps develop the film even further.

And then ...

Keaton became the director of this film quite by accident when the first one became ill, and he stepped in. It is his first effort at the craft, and he certainly shows his potential and skill in many

Through the lack of close-up shots, I felt he was trying to convey the distance between his character and Kate, and that of Kate and others (who flees an office party after accidentally barging in on a couple in the throes of passion in a storeroom). Utilizing many long shots, and short takes, tempered by an almost perfect musical score (except for the chirpy Christmas carol in the beginning) and very appropriate lighting, Keaton has crafted a unique and satisfying film.

I don't often recommend seeing a film twice, but truth be told, this one was much better understood and revealing on a second viewing ... but once will do if you pay strict attention.

Merry? Not hardly. Gentleman? Maybe. jeffberg@lascrucesbulletin.com

Harry Potter VI: A fantasy unlike any other

Fans in for a wild, bumpy ride to the end

REVIEW BY JENNA FROSCH The Las Cruces Bulletin

Harry Potter, Round 6.

Pulling out all the stops on the powerful series that captured the attention of kids and adults alike, director David Yates has stopped at nothing to make the latest installment in the story of the boy wizard as entertaining and vivid as possible, most notably through the use of superb special effects.

The story begins with a continuation of the fear audiences saw in the last film, "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix," – a fear of the return of He-Who-Should-Not-Be-Named (Voldemort) and the disappearance and deaths of people from the wizarding world.

Right off the bat, Hogwart's Headmaster Albus Dumbledore shows up to surprise the older Harry Potter (Daniel Radcliffe) in a subway, and take him to a dark village where he encounters a key player in the film – a man by the name of Horace Slughorn (Jim Broadbent).

Dumbledore wastes no time asking Slughorn to return to Hogwart's to teach the potions class, but Dumbledore really has a plan to use Slughorn to figure out the mystery of a former student, Tom Riddle (who later becomes Voldemort).

The story continues with the similar antics of the last six years – studying in the Hogwart's School of Witchcraft and Wizardry, following the friendship of Hermione Granger (Emma Watson), Ron Weasley (Rupert Grint) and Harry, but with the added characters of Ginny Weasley (Bonnie Wright), Harry's love interest.

Harry enrolls in Advanced Potions Class, taught by Slughorn, and is assigned a book previously owned by the Half-Blood Prince. Soon, his discovery of notes in the margins of the book catapult him to the head of the class and cause harm in ways Harry never imagined. Voldemort gives Draco Malfoy (Tom Voldemort gives Draco Malfoy (Tom Felton) a task to be carried out at Hogwart's, so he spends the movie preparing for that, using a "vanishing closet" to bring an army of Death Eaters into the protected confines of Hogwart's. Meanwhile, Harry is working with Dumbledore to recover a memory of Slughorn's about Riddle.

The movie follows along well with the sixth book of the series, just one book away from completion (the last book will be split into two full-length feature films, one to come out in late 2010 and the other in 2011).

Rubert Grint, Emma Watson and Daniel Radcliffe are back in "Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince."

Intertwined with building the war against Voldemort is the drama of teen angst that we've seen building with each of the original characters. Unrequited love is the theme of the Hogwart's story line, and it's plaguing Harry for Ginny and Hermione for Ron. Surprisingly, Yates is able to tell the simultaneous stories without making the teen romances seem "petty." They are a big part of the plot line, and show a more human side amidst the tragedy that surrounds them.

The best thing about the movie is seeing the audience members react to various scenes. The Harry Potter franchise has been growing for years, and many fans have grown up reading the books, attending midnight release parties and midnight showings of the films, so looking around, there are an overwhelming number of teens who began reading along years ago.

The film itself is well done — utilizing the spectacular special effects that audiences have come to expect from this series. One thing I've found is the amazing ability of the director and screenwriter to capture the descriptions found in each and every one of J.K. Rowling's literary masterpieces. Not once have I sat there and thought, "Wow. That's not at all how I pictured it from the book."

The characters are growing up ... and so is the drama.

The performances to watch are that of Bellatrix Lestrange (Helena Bonham Carter), who is wacky, dark and scary all rolled into one. It is her character that really can give you the creeps – perhaps far more than Voldemort's head on the back of Professor Quirell or even Voldemort himself. Broadbent's adaptation of Slughorn's "nutty professor" character is spot on, along with his ability to make you feel sorry for the errors in his ways.

The rest of the cast never disappoints – right up to the end – a sobering conversation between Hermione and Harry, which is a set up for the first part of the conclusion

With scenes that will make you laugh out loud, scream with fear and cry – all within the same time frame – "Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince" will leave audiences with a sense of satisfaction and unease – and desperate to see the conclusion of this spectacular series.

Attention to detail around every corner

All the luxuries without the excess square footage

By BETHANY CONWAY

When experienced interior designers go shopping for a home, odds are they know exactly what they want. Such was the case of Dede Couey, who stumbled upon 5158 Picuris Court after 35 years in the interior design business.

"It had touches that most people just don't bother to put in a home," she said. "People always say, 'I really don't want a big home. I want a small home that has the best of everything.' That's what they did here."

Located on a cul-de-sac in the ever-growing Pueblos at Alameda Ranch community, the home was built in a "Santa Barbara-Spanish Revival" style by Byron and Elena Robinson of Robinson Homes.

"Once you get in the front door, from the very minute you walk in, you can sense there is real quality there," said Elaine Johnson, owner and broker of RE/MAX Classic Realty. "He built it like he was going to live in it himself and show it off to get other people interested."

An entry in the 2007 Spring Showcase of Homes, which was the last year homes were actually judged on their design, the threebedroom residence attracted its share of attention and won the award for best kitchen.

"They just didn't cut corners," Couey said.

From the wrought iron on the front door and chimney tops to the mural on the kitchen's south wall, every room has some kind of detail, many of which make each living space unique.

"They stacked stone in the kitchen, in the living room, in the master suite," Couey said, adding that, along with cultured stone, the home is full of granite from the countertops in the kitchen and laundry room to the tile mosaics in the floors and bathrooms.

Walking into the home past the foyer's tranquil water feature and into the main living spaces, the home's most predominant feature, and Couey's favorite aspect, are the numerous French doors. Found in both the communal living spaces and the bedrooms, when the doors are open the outdoor and indoor spaces merge.

"You can bring the outside in," said Dede's husband, Bob Couey.

With the main living spaces built in a "C"-shaped floor plan, the home has more than small the corner offers a more elegant space to dine. A quatrefoil in the ceiling is mirrored by a tile mosaic in the floor below, which Dede said is another example of the Robinson's attention detail.

The master suite and extra bedrooms are found on the east side of the home's floor plan, each of which is complete with its own private patios.

With no steps and large hallways and doorways, one could say the home is barrier free.

"It's smart to look into the future because that could be a great home for retirees who like to stay at home and entertain,' Johnson said.

From a family to a retired couple, all will find joy in the home's large backyard with a putting green and salt-water pool.

Built just west of an arroyo, the owners will enjoy privacy for years to come.

"A lot of times when people buy a house, they move into it and there is nothing behind it, but it doesn't stay that way," Johnson said. "Since this is a dedicated drainage easement, you don't have to worry about somebody being right in your backyard."

Described by Bob Couey as "a Lexus loaded," Johnson said the home will attract someone looking for the total package, but on a smaller scale than many of Las Cruces' upscale homes.

"I think it's a buyer who actually could afford to spend more, but when they see (the home) and they realized it has everything they are looking for, why spend the extra money? Johnson said. "It's comparable in every way to many other higher priced homes.

Pinch of salt and pepper

1 cup julienne pea pods

1 cup julienne carrots 1 cup julienne shitaki mushrooms

1/2 cup julienne leeks 1/2 cup julienne yellow squash

1 tablespoon cilantro (minced) 1 tablespoon sesame seed oil 1/2 cup rice vinegar

Zest and juice from one lime 1 tablespoon sesame seeds

To prepare the mahi mahi, season the fish with salt and pepper. Combine the olive oil with 1 tablespoon each of ginger and garlic and rub evenly over the mahi mahi. Place the fish on a preheated and cleaned grill. The grill should be very hot to keep the fish from sticking.

To prepare the julienne vegetables, heat a large sauté pan over a medium flame and add the sesame oil. Once the oil is hot, add the ginger and garlic and sauté for 15 seconds, add all the julienne vegetables and sauté for two minutes stirring often. Once the vegetables begin to soften add the lime juice and zest, the rice vinegar, honey and the fresh cilantro.

Cook the fish on the grill for approximately two to three minutes per side or to an internal temperature of 145 degrees. Place the mahi mahi on a serving plate and spoon the julienne vegetables on top making sure to include some of the fantastic cooking juices. Serves 4. In the hands of a creative chef, this slicer can be a great garnishing tool

Ever wondered what someone meant when they said to julienne the vegetables? I know I did.

After joining the wonderful world of waiting tables, I had to give the explanation to many patrons as the restaurant in which I worked had plenty of items on the menu in need of clarification.

A julienne, which is also called a "matchstick," is a type of cut that makes a long, thin strip. According to several sources, the first known use of the term in print was in François Massialot's "Le Cuisier Royal" in 1722.

It's a good technique to use for vegetables and other ingredients to heighten presentation. Common items to be julienned are carrots and celery.

Usually performed with a sharp knife, the technique involves slicing raw vegetables on all four sides to create a thick rectangular stick, like a French fry. Sometimes, depending on the goal of the presentation, the sticks are then cut lengthwise into approximately 1/4-inch slices.

Julienne usually refers to vegetables that are so prepared, but it can also be applied to the preparation of meat or fish, especially when it comes to stir fry

The only problem with using a knife is that it takes time and can be a bit dangerous. Today, the process is easier than ever with the julienne slicer.

What is it?

This handy device, which looks a lot like a peeler or mandolin, will have every homeowner making julienne cuts like a pro. Though it comes in several variations, the main component of the gadget is a stainless steel blade, which allows one to make thicker cuts than with a traditional peeler. Some of the slicers also come with several different blades and garnishing components, which allow you to grate, peel, shave and shred.

How does it work?

To use the julienne slicer, first clean your cutting board so you have a nice space on which to work. Peel the skin from the vegetables if necessary (organic produce usually only needs to be washed). Trim away any roots or stems. For large carrots or potatoes, you might want to cut them in half.

Once you've prepped the veggies, either slide the slicer down the side of the vegetable, slide the vegetables down the slicer like a grater or feed them through the slicer. The operation of the device depends on the design.

Where can it be found?

Carried at major department stores such Bed Bath & Beyond and local kitchen gadget stores such as Las Cosas de Mesilla, this slicer is fairly easy to

How much does it cost?

Depending on how snazzy the model is, this gadget can cost anywhere from $7 to $25.

Helpful Hints:

The ideal julienne cut is about 2-inches long – any longer and it's hard to get into your mouth. Also, if you end up cutting up a bit too much, save any scraps for vegetable stock or for use in other recipes.

Chef of the Buckhorn Tavern gets surprise visit

NMSU chile specialist judges a 'Throwdown with Bobby Flay' on Food Network show

Bobby Olguin, owner of the Buckhorn Tavern in San Antonio, N.M., was not the only person surprised when Food Network star Bobby Flay showed up at his restaurant on May 14 - New Mexico State University chile specialist Stephanie Walker was, too.

Chef Bobby Flay's show "Throwdown with Bobby Flay" pits the star against different regional chefs. In each episode, the cook thinks Food Network is shooting their profile for a show. What they don't know is that Flay is going to drop in for a surprise visit and challenge them to an unexpected cook-off.

Producers of the cable show asked Walker to attend a green chile festival at Bosque del Apache to be interviewed as an expert regarding the vegetable being celebrated. When she arrived, she found herself in the role of judge for the burger cook-off between Flay and Olguin for the best green chile cheeseburger.

"Al Lucero, owner of Maria's Restaurant in Santa Fe and a recipient of the College of Agricultural Consumer and Environmental Sciences' Hotel, Tourist and Restaurant Management Award this year, and I were hidden away and told we'd be judges for the contest, Walker said of the unexpected challenge. It was a real surprise to be in this role on the national television program.'

The Owl Café, located a short distance from the Buckhorn Tavern, was the first to put San Antonio on the culinary map with what was to become world-famous green chile cheeseburger. The Buckhorn earned its own accolades in recent years, having become rated as the No. 7 burger in America by Gentlemen's Quarterly in 2005 and the No. 3 "Baddest Burger in the Land" on the www.marlboro.com Nightlife Flavor Roundup earlier this year.

While Walker can't tell us who won, New Mexicans can watch the contest at 10 p.m. on Thursday, July 23, and at 9 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 2, to see which burger Walker and Lucero crowned as the best.

Adding new life to your home

Ten tips on how to easily spruce up dull spaces

MAUREEN VILLMER Practical Design

Are you looking for a quick fix to bring new life to a room? Are you trying to put some color in your space? Or, are you just trying to inexpensively brighten an area? Here are 10 things you can do to add new life in your home.

add new life in your home.

1. Paint, paint, paint: Whether it's one wall, every wall or a faux finish, there are plenty of things to consider. When it comes to an entire room, don't forget that you have five walls to paint, not four – count your ceiling as a wall. If the walls are dark, paint the ceiling light, and vice versa. Consider the height of the ceiling and how you want the space to feel before you decide upon light or dark for the ceiling.

2. Put color on your floor: Add a colorful area rug. Rugs can be on top of wood, tile or carpet. A product called Rug Hug will help area rugs stay put so they don't "walk" or bunch up. If you need to add a pattern to the area, this is a great way to do it — on the floor.

3. Add new throw pillows: Use new pillows to add color or pattern to a sofa or sectional. It will change the look of the space completely with the right choice. Consider a small animal print; they go with anything.

4. Add to mother nature: Whether you have a green thumb or not, you can add green or flowering plants to any area. If you're "green thumb challenged," check with your local home garden center to see what plants require the least amount of care. If, however, you already know that you're going to end up killing the plants, then go artificial. I would always suggest real over artificial, if possible.

5. Add stone, brick or tile to a wall: Many stones look real and can be applied quickly and easily. It can completely change a space. I recently worked on a remodeling job for a doctor and by adding a stone wall we were able to change the feel of the entire room. You can do the same in your home.

6. Reflect color: Try placing a large mirror on a bare and boring wall. The mirror will reflect colors from the room and other rooms, as well as add light and space to the feel of the room. Let the frame of the mirror also "say something." Paint it in a bright color; add mosaic tile or a faux finish.

7. Paint the inside back of a bookshelf: A

7. Paint the inside back of a bookshelf: A lot of interest can be added by putting some color behind your shelves. Use either contrasting or complimentary colors. You could change from dark to light from the bottom to the top, or just use an accent color to make your books and collectibles "pop."

"pop."

8. Get artsy: Hang a colorful piece of art in the room or change the mat or frame of an existing piece to change the look.

9. Add or redo a lamp: Add a whimsical lamp to the room, change the lamp shade on an existing lamp or add trim or beads to an existing lampshade. Any of these can create a new color accent in the room.

10. Add a throw: Bring out a handmade quilt, a nubby woven throw or a colorful blanket. Toss it over the back or arm of a chair or sofa. Choose a new color that accents other pieces in the room. It can add color or excitement to a room (and it's also very practical on a cool evening).

The use of color to create moods and to make rooms comfortable is one of my "things." I'll be back in two weeks with more on color.

The 4 principles of green building

It's time to untangle the mystery behind today's hottest home trend

BOB POFAHL

Build green, build better

"Green" has definitely become a buzzword lately. You see it promoted on TV shows, on the news, in advertisements and even at the grocery store. All the hype over going "green" has caused much debate and fueled skepticism. This debate has brought some important questions to the forefront, such as: Is it practical? Is it affordable? Is it a fad? What does it mean? And finally, does going green really make a difference?

When it comes to building and maintaining your home, several easy principles can guide you through the maze of green, sustainable living. These guidelines can help you make commonsense decisions in selecting green features for your new or existing home.

The first step to demystifying green building is to start simple. One of the common myths about going green is that it is expensive and complicated. Solar technology, for example, has the potential to make a huge impact on the environment, but it's certainly not the only thing you can do. The answer is definitely not "do nothing" because you don't have the time, money or technology in your home to go solar.

The key is to spend a little time getting educated. Today, there are many websites and books that can give you easy, inexpensive tips on how to make your home green. Three to four years ago, I was very skeptical about the "green movement." But with all the research that is available today, I'm convinced that going green has cost benefits for every homeowner.

The second principle in building green is to find green alternatives that reduce your impact on the environment. Green Build technology lessens the need to burn fossil fuels and helps fight climate change, one of society's most pressing environmental issues. In your existing home, something as simple as switching to compact-fluorescent light bulbs or selecting Energy Star appliances can dramatically reduce your energy use.

As New Mexicans, we know that water is one of our most precious natural resources. Using xeriscape land-scaping and native plants is often less expensive and preserves water resources. As an added bonus, this type of landscaping reduces maintenance and adds long-term value to your home.

The third green building principle is to select green features that save you money. A green home costs less to operate because it uses less energy and water, requiring less maintenance. When building a green home, the extra cost of green design is minimal compared to the energy and tax savings you will receive over the life of your home. Also, high-performance green homes have a much higher resale value.

If you're building a new home, upgrading your insulation and selecting high-efficiency heating and cooling systems can cost a little more, but can save a significant amount of money in utility bills in the long run. Xeriscape landscaping saves you money as well by reducing maintenance and water use.

The fourth principle to follow while going green is to make changes that will improve your health. Did you know that green building technology can actually make your house a safer, healthier place to live?

For generations, volatile organic compounds (VOC) and other harmful substances have been used in the construction of our homes. Today, green technology provides healthy alternatives to these toxins.

Some green options for your new or existing home include: selecting VOC-free or low-VOC paint, using formaldehyde-free adhesives, installing a whole-house

Water is one of the most precious natural resources, especially in the Southwest. By selecting low-flow water fixtures for your new home or upgrading to low-flow on your existing home, you can significantly reduce the amount of water you use.

One of the common myths about going green is that it is expensive and

exhaust fan or air-filtration system, installing a water-filtration system and more.

Studies show green homes have better indoor-air quality because of reduced exposure to chemicals, mold and other harmful substances. Use Green Build techniques and breathe easier knowing you've made your home a healthier place to live.

Hopefully, these four simple principles will help you untangle the mystery that is green building and you and the environment can start reaping the benefits. LUCY SALMON, partner, Charlos Homes

By Kristine Sandrick

Builders Arlo Albers and Lucy Salmon have spent the past nine years making happy homeowners throughout Doña Ana County.

Partners in Charlos Homes, Albers and Salmon, along with the rest of their team, work very closely with every homebuyer to ensure a new home reflects the client's personal style and needs. They know they've succeeded when their clients are excited about the finished product.

"The most rewarding part of the job," Salmon and Albers said separately, "is the client's excitement over the finished

Customizing for clients

Charlos Homes are customized to meet clients' needs. The company offers five basic floor plans from which clients can choose and then customize as they see fit. With more than 200 homes designed and built in nine years, the company's products range in style and price from entry-level to higher-end custom homes.

Building and buying a new home is no small proposition for the first-time buyer or the experienced homeowner. Salmon said it's difficult to get the client to envision the finished product - a three-dimensional structure - just by looking at two-dimensional plans.

Albers said he tells clients it's easier to make changes on the floor plans before final plans are drawn, materials are ordered and a schedule is set.

"I tell them changes made on the plans are free - that's the time to make changes," he said.
"I show them our

Upgraded fixtures and good tile work are just two standard features in the bathrooms and kitchens model home," Salmon said, referring to Charlos Homes' model and office located at 4002 Bravia Dove in the new Dove Crossing complex on south Stern Road at Spotted Dove. "They come in and I show them the archway. I say to them, 'This is how it will look."

After creating a finished product that includes the client's own personal touches, it's time to hand over the key.

"A week ago, I was working with a customer and said we're ready to sell the house to her - she started crying,"

Albers agreed, saying he gets the most enjoyment out of turning over a home to a very pleased customer.

Building a longterm partnership

Before starting Charlos Homes, Albers co-owned a heating, cooling and plumbing business in Canutillo, Texas, from 1993 through 1999, and met several builders while working on homes in Santa Theresa and Las Cruces.

"I got to know homebuilders in Texas, El Paso and Las Cruces, and by 1999 had befriended some of the Las Cruces builders," he said.

He did a joint venture in building some affordable homes on north Roadrunner Parkway, and was hooked, he said. Albers met Salmon in 2000 through his former partner. "One (partner) left the company and they invited me to join," Salmon said.

"When I met Lucy, she was shy and struggling to master English. She didn't like answering the phone," Albers said of his partner, a native of Juárez. "But overtime, Susan, my wife, and I realized the potential Lucy had and have enjoyed helping her develop. We think of her as our company daughter," Albers said.

Salmon has a gift for working with customers, he said, particularly with the ladies on special features of the house, such as reviewing the house plans and selecting colors and finishes

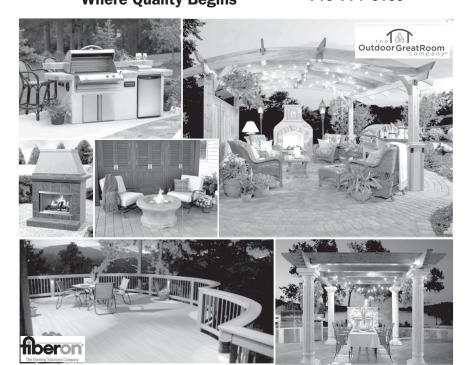

Since joining Charlos Homes in 2001, Salmon has earned her general contractor's license.

"Actually, Arlo pushed me to learn to be more involved with the company. When I first met him honestly was afraid of him, but he and his wife have become my best friends – he is like a father to me," she said. He taught her how to deal with business, with customers and "to face things – not to be afraid – don't let them pull you down because you are a woman," she said.

In addition to their "company daughter," Albers sister, Shirley, is the bookkeeper and receptionist, and their daughter, Debra, is the building supervisor.

"Our company is a team," Salmon said.

"Our company is a team," Salmon said.
"Everybody has their responsibilities, but we all work as a team."

Salmon sells the homes and Albers handles the financing and closing. Then she helps with the plans, details and finishes, working with the customer up until the final walk through. She also handles any callbacks for up to one year after a home is completed.

Pleasing their customers

Keeping costs in line to meet customers' needs and goals is the most challenging part of the job for any builder and so it goes with Charles Homes it goes with Charlos Homes.

"Today's market for building materials is steady but challenging, and the selling prices keep going down," Albers said.

"Our goal is to please the customers and to accommodate minor or major changes they might want to make to an existing plan, before it gets into building."

plan, before it gets into building."
For Salmon, the most challenging aspect of the job is dealing with a diverse clientele with different needs.

"A young couple might be really easy to work with because they don't know what they want and you have to help them, but when people have built two or three houses it's tough. But there are some really nice customers," she said.

Arlo Albers, Lucy Salmon and their entire team work to satisfy every customer.

The welcoming entryway in this Charlos Homes model showcases the builders' preference for wooden vegas, arches and nichos.

If you planted early in the spring, chances are you are already enjoying a bounty of homegrown tomatoes. This fruit (yes it's a fruit) is most easily put to use in creating one of the most popular condiments in the world – tomato sauce.

Though for most people tomato sauce screams spaghetti, it's a common misconception that the Italians invented it. In fact, the sauce was an ancient condiment of the Aztec diet and tomatoes originated in the Americas.

Making their way from South America, tomatoes eventually arrived in Mexico where they were named tomatl by the Nahuatl Indians. It was later discovered by Spanish explorers and taken back to Europe during the 16th century.

The first recipe for tomato sauce reportedly wasn't written until 1839 when Ippolito Cavalcanti, Duke of Buonvicino, offered a recipe for vermicelli con le pom-

In the United States, "tomato sauce" refers to a tomato purée with salt and small amounts of spices, which most often comes in a can. This product is considered incomplete and not normally used as is. Instead, it is used as a base for almost any food that needs a lot of tomato

In the present "green" era, nothing can go to waste, and, depending on how large of a garden you have, there may be too many tomatoes to eat. To make sure none

The Best Ever Tomato Sauce

Note: If you don't have super-fresh tomatoes then

1 medium celery stalk 1 medium carrot, peeled 1 small onion

1 clove garlic 1 pound fresh tomatoes, skin on, roughly chopped into large pieces 1 cup or large handful of flat-leaf parsley 1 cup or large handful of basil leaves 2 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil 2 tablespoons unsalted butter

Chop the celery, carrot, onion and garlic into tiny pieces, roughly all the same size.

Place the tomato pieces in a large casserole. Place the carrot, then the celery, the onion, garlic and finally the herbs on the top. Pour the olive oil over and cook for 1 hour, over medium heat, without stirring. Shake the pan to prevent it from sticking. Put the contents through a food mill (if you don't have one, use a food processor but do not over blend). The sauce should be thick and quite chunky and you should be able to see tiny bits of the vegetables within the thick sauce.

Add the butter and further reduce the sauce until it has thickened slightly, about 10 minutes. Leave of them spoil, one solution is to make numerous jars of homemade tomato sauce.

Freeze in small batches as the sauce is concentrated. Recipe adapted from http://britishfood.

Not all of the sauce has to be eaten. Put that extra red sauce to use in these surprising ways.

1. Clean the kitchen sink: Sure this paste makes for one of the biggest messes in the kitchen, but after cooking a scrumptious meal of pasta, tomato sauce can actually be used to clean up. After adding the sauce to a desired dish, add some to your stainless steel sink too. Rub with a scrubber and let it stand for about an hour. Then rinse with water. The sink will be bright and shiny as if it were just professionally polished.

2. Brighten up copper vessels: Along with cleaning stainless steel, tomato sauce can be used in the same way to shine tarnished copper vessels, including sinks, bowls or pieces of art.

Just apply a thin layer of sauce to the vessel, let it sit for about an hour and then rinse and dry.

3. Keep silver sparkling: Tomato sauce on jewelry? That's right, for those who own necklaces, earrings or bracelets that have lost their shine, tomato sauce is just the solution.

Make sure you have a clean toothbrush or cloth handy. To clean small rings or earrings, dip them into a bowl of tomato sauce, rub and then rinse. To clean larger silver items such as plates and bowls, apply the sauce and rinse at once. Your cleaning process must not last more than three to four minutes because the tomato sauce can affect

4. Chase away that skunk smell: Have a dog that got a little too frisky with a passing skunk? Though there are store-bought products that can work wonders on getting rid of that horrible skunk odor, one could also try soaking their pet in an age-old remedy – tomato sauce.

The acids in the tomato juice will dissolve and counteract with the oils in the skunk spray. There is no guarantee that it will work completely, but for those who want to try it, add a can (or two, or three) of tomato paste to the dog's bath, or your own.

New Mexican versus Mexican food

Though they have many ties, these two cooking styles have many tasty differences

It's common for travelers throughout New Mexico to see restaurant signs claiming, "Authentic Mexican food served here," while other restaurant banners tout "Specializing in New Mexican cuisine." Just what is the difference? The Mexican influence is strong in each. So let's start there.

"... traditional [Mexican] foods are so regionally diverse, and so varied within those regions themselves, that they defy a cohesive, all-embracing definition," said Diana Kennedy, author of "The Art of Mexican Cooking."

In the pre-Colombian period, Mexican victuals were based on corn, which was inventively turned into posole, tortillas and tamales. Corn was supplemented with vegetables such as sweet potato, beans, squash, jicama and chayote (a native Mexican vegetable pear) and wildlife including deer, rabbits, armadillos, raccoons, turkeys, pigeons, quail and even turtles, snakes and frogs.

After the Conquest and during colonization, the Mexican diet made a climactic change when the Spanish introduced new and exotic tastes such as rice, olives, wine, Indian spices, beef and a variety of fruit. Today's Mexican cuisine is a blend of the original Indian fare with Old World Spanish.

"[Foods] vary in levels of sophistication from those that are wild and gathered at random – often eaten raw – to dishes that call for a number of non-indigenous ingredients requiring more intricate methods of preparation," Kennedy said.

Mexican cuisine ranges from a snack of grilled grasshoppers to grilled tunas (prickly pears), to carne asada (grilled steak) to chicken slathered with mole sauce. Mole [MOH-lay], a rich, reddish-brown sauce, is usually served with poultry, especially chicken. Generally, mole is spiced with chile, garlic, onion and just a snippet of Mexican chocolate, which gives mole its unique and distinct flavor.

Legend tells us that it was a nun who invented the spicy-chocolate mole for monks and priests. Nuns were also responsible for such tasty pastries and desserts as buñeulo, a thin, deep-fried Mexican sweet scattered with cinnamon-sugar, and natillas, a baked egg custard.

Common specialties throughout Mexico include chilaquiles for breakfast – corn tortillas lavished in a spicy chicken sauce and pollo parilla – mes-quite grilled chicken. (Mesquite confers a slightly sweet, smoky flavor.) One finds ensalada de nopales – cactus salad – and filete tampiqueña – grilled steak with guacamole and fried beans in the northern regions.

A featured item "down south" is cochinita pibil – pig packed in banana leaves – a dish, I'm certain, would unlikely be found in the Land of Enchantment, even in restaurants claiming "authentic" Mexican fare.

Other favorites are tamales, squash flower and posole verde soup, menudo, sopa, huevos rancheros, refried beans, guacamole and salsa, from pit barbecue sauce to guajillo chile sauce to the favorite – salsa Mexicana prepared with chile serranos, onion, tomatoes and chopped cilantro. In some northern areas, salsa is referred to as pico de gallo.

Americans refer to tacos, tostadas, flautas and enchiladas as a Mexican meal, but in Mexico they are referred to as antojitos [ahn-toh-HEE-tohs] "little whims," or in America, appetizers. Antojitos are prepared with corn tortillas, a staple in Mexico. Corn tortillas range from the white blonditas to the colossal, wafer-thin tlayudas. Mexicans take pride in their tortillas a mano – handmade tortillas.

When looking for commercially prepared corn tortillas, Mexican chefs say blonditas are best, which contain less lime and offer a subtler flavor.

Flour tortillas, which Mexicans believe are "not of high quality," play an insignificant role in their cooking. "They just don't complement the taste of most Mexican food," they argue.

Quesadillas, a popular dish, in New Mexico, for example, is prepared with doubled-over flour tortillas stuffed with cheese. In Mexico, they're referred to as empanadas – corn masa filled with string cheese, peeled fresh chile poblano and one or two epazote leaves.

Many Mexican foods and spices have been adapted to New Mexican cuisine. Nancy Gerlach, a registered dietician who has co-authored numerous books on New Mexico cuisine describes New Mexican cuisine as a unique blend of three different cultures: Native American, Mexican and European.

"It's our nation's oldest culinary heritage with roots which can be traced back to the Anasazi, or 'ancient ones,' who were the ancestors of the Rio Grande Pueblo Indians," she said.

Gerlach said although the foods of New Mexico, Arizona and Texas are often lumped together as the same cuisine, "New Mexican food is distinctly different from the foods of (our bordering states)."

Prior to the arrival of the Spanish, the Anasazi and the Pueblo Indians introduced corn, beans, squash and chiles, which have become, said Gerlach, "the foundation of New Mexican cuisine."

Blue corn is a distinctive ingredient in many New Mexican dishes, including blue corn tortillas and bread. The Spanish later brought goat, cow, pig and sheep, which ultimately usurped the wild game (deer, elk and bison, etc.) that Native Americans had depended on.

A few of us would disagree with Gerlach when she refers to corn, squash and beans "as nutritious...[but] rather bland by themselves.

Enter the addictive chile pepper, which not only adds heat but also zip, zing and zest ... it is perhaps the most essential ingredient for many New Mexican recipes such as the red and green chile sauces that top dishes. Most Land of Enchanters now demand a daily 'chile fix' as a result," she said.

After the Spanish settled in New Mexico, "the cultivation of chiles exploded all over the state," Gerlach said. Poblanos, pasillas, serranos and jalapeños were popular but it was the long, green New Mexican chile pod that fancied chile lovers best, which is often used to prepare chile rellenos, a favorite for many New Mexicans.

Other popular dishes include sopaipillas stuffed with pinto beans and beef, Anazazi beans, green chile cornbread, chorizo burritos, tamales, enchiladas, nachos, huevos rancheros, green chile stew and blue corn tacos.

In recent years, New Mexican fare has taken on an engaging, savory twist. With the increased accessibility of foods from around the world, inventive chefs have added a Rolodex of rousing recipes based on traditional dishes. It's not uncommon to find dishes such as black bean enchiladas layered with goat cheese and topped with papaya salsa or pink salmon garnished with cilantro and served with a chipotle chile flavored tortilla.

New Mexican gourmands can now appreciate cuisine that is often infused with both exotic and native foods.

Give this spider a spittoon

Spitting spider shoots poison jets to capture prey

How rude! Didn't this spider learn it's not polite to spit?

But for spitting spiders, these are good table manners and they're not about to give up the habit. It's their meal ticket and the way they capture their prey.

"They're kind of neat and slow moving," David Richman, curator of the New Mexico State University Arthropod Museum and spider specialist, said recently. "If a fly lands near where they plan to be, they'll fire two jets of poison gum from their fangs, which poisons and holds the fly."

The spiders appear to take aim before spraying their victims. They can be seen swaying side to side to hit cover their prey in a zig-zag pattern with the poison goop. And spitting spiders can shoot their poison up to a distance of almost an inch after stopping to measure the distance and aim their poison. After capturing their prey, the spitting spider wraps it in silk webbing.

Related to the brown recluse spider and the violin spider, the Scytodidae – as it is formally known – isn't deadly to humans. It has six eyes instead of eight, Richman pointed out. There are about 150 species of spitting spiders throughout the world. As far as nesting behavior is concerned, the female doesn't make a special bed for her offspring. She carries eggs on her body in a web net. Found in the tropics and in buildings in northern climates, spitting spiders measure between 1/8 to 1/4 inches. Some live in webs and others are nocturnal.
