Demand growing for local produce

By TODD G. DICKSON The Las Cruces Bulletin

For 19 years, Ray and Felicia Hale's garden farm has been selling fresh fruits and vegetables from their front yard off North Valley Drive not far from East Picacho Elementary School.

They always had a good customer base, but the demand recently for their fresh produce has sprouted like the fabled magical beanstalk.

"Last year, it just exploded," said Felica Hale as she rang up purchases Wednesday morning for a 30-foot-long line of customers that nearly reached the tents covering boxes of chile, tomatoes, green beans, corn, okra, watermelon and cantaloupe. "We always had a steady stream of people who came," she said. "But last year, we started seeing people we've never seen before.

Those new customers are much like Joel and Nancy Cano, who heard about the Hale garden farm from friends and wanted to buy local produce.

"We wanted to get some while it was still available," said Joel Cano holding a cantaloupe. "And we want to support local producers.

Not only does he expect the cantaloupe to taste better, Cano said he also believes he is getting a bargain because he is buying the fruit fresh from the grower. No shipper or grocer as middlemen. "That way it keeps the money we spend on food local," he said. Nancy Cano said she also finds reassurance that the produce she is buying will be safe. Many of the problems of food poisonings and contaminations happen

Market's Sept. 5 move stays on track Downtown vendors to line Main Street and south mall

By TODD G. DICKSON

Las Cruces Farmers & Crafts Market vendors will be taking up new posts along the re-opened Main Street and south Downtown Mall next week as originally planned.

City councillors said Monday, Aug. 24, they couldn't justify the expense of erecting large tents for the market on a cityowned parking lot next to the El Paso Electric building on Water Street. Even if the city only rented two 80-by-100-foot tents for six months, it would have cost nearly $70,000 and councillors said they couldn't spend that kind of money in light of other demands, such as needed improvements to ball fields, pools and community centers.

"A plan was put into place – let's try it," City Councillor Dolores Connor said. "It's going into the cooler months and we'll see what works.

Also problematic to the parking lot pro-posal was the condition of the lot, which will be re-surfaced anyway now that the city is more aware of its condition, said Assistant City Manager Robert Garza.

An informal polling of the 200 vendors at last Saturday's market showed most of them favoring staying on Main Street for the Sept. 5 move. The vendors will be located along the re-opened Main Street south of Las Cruces Avenue and along the Downtown Mall south of Griggs Avenue, as well as some vendors in La Placita and in a blocked-off portion of Griggs. The vendors of the popular twice-week-ly street market have to move so the city can begin construction on the north end of the Downtown Mall to re-open Main Street with the expectation that the vendors will return there when the $1.9 million project funded by the state is completed in about 18 months.

The city also has $1.65 million in federal money for re-opening the south end of Main Street. That work also is expected to take about 18 months.

Mayor Ken Miyagishima asked why the vendors needed about twice as much space as they had before. Christine Logan, economic develop-ment administrator, said the vendors need more space to put up individual 10-by-10-foot tents to provide some shade.

Part of the initial attraction of putting the market on the city lot was to allow simultaneous work to reopen Main Street on both the north and south ends of the mall, cutting the three-year completion estimate in half.

"We can put up with the incon-venience until the north end is fin-ished," said vendor Sharon Grasse.

Another vendor, Debbie Bond, said sticking to the original plan was better. "I don't want to look like a circus act in a parking lot," she said. Besides the pot-holed park-ing lot lacked the access to utilities and restrooms, said vendor Cheryl Christianson.

The move out from under the large shade of the metal awnings does present some challenges.

Vendor Sandra Lance said items such as soap and turquoise can't be left out in direct, hot sunlight for too long without being damaged. She also said vendors are concerned that customers won't venture to the southern end of the Downtown Mall, which looks desolate. "We'll have to play it by ear," the mayor said.

Regardless of the temporary move, Councillor Nathan Small said there needs to be shade provided on the north end of Main Street after it is re-opened and vendors return.

In a celebration of locally grown produce, Mountain View Market's Sunday Growers Market held its "Peak of the Season Fiesta" Sunday, Aug. 23. Heather Rische, who coordinates community outreach efforts such as the growers market, said interest in locally grown produce is strong as the Sunday market enters its second year. Though many of the regulars go for the market growers' assurance that their fruits and vegetables are free of pesticides, Rische said she is their part to lessen their carbon footprint. And while they're at it, they could well be buying the best carrot they've ever eaten. That's the bigger draw for return customers, Rische said. Locally grown food tastes a lot better, she said. Much of the usual store produce is developed for its disease resistance and long shelf life, but not necessarily flavor, she said.

'Are YOU tough enough to wear pink?'

Breast cancer awareness, research events set to begin

By KRISTINE SANDRICK

Las Cruces is beginning to get "that pink glow" as the entire New Mexico State University Aggie community gets set to launch its annual breast cancer awareness and fundraising program, NMSU Aggies are Tough Enough to Wear Pink.

Now in its third year, Pink campaign co-chairs Pat Sisbarro, Magellia Boston and Laura Conniff – breast cancer survivors who brought the Tough Enough To Wear Pink rodeo event to NCAA football – invited NMSU football coach DeWayne Walker to join their team. Like so many people, Walker's family has been touched by cancer.

Are You Tough Enough to Wear Pink is a breast cancer awareness and fundraising campaign first launched during the 2004 Wrangler National Final Rodeo in Las Vegas, Nev.

Awareness is key

While NMSU Aggies Are Tough Enough to Wear Pink is a volunteer fundraising group, the campaign committee also includes leaders from the Las Cruces health and medical professions who work to raise awareness of the importance of early detection. Sisbarro said during last year's campaign that the committee wants to raise awareness. "We want women to know they have to get their mammograms.

Pat Sisbarro, Magellia Boston, Laura Conniff and DeWayne Walker co-chair the NMSU Aggies are Tough Enough to Wear Pink campaign.

I wouldn't be here without early diagnosis. That is the key to saving your life," she said.

A free education seminar is planned from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., Friday, Sept. 18. "The Value of Humor When Facing Breast Cancer" seminar, sponsored by Doña Ana County Community College, will be held at 2825 N. Main at the Building Industry Association office.

No. 1 fundraiser

During its first two years, the program generated more than $1 million in cash and contributions. In 2008, along with Cowboys for Cancer Research, a Doña Ana-based 501(c)(3) organization, "Pink" generated more than $800,000 in cash and contributions, earning the title of the number one Tough Enough to Wear Pink event in the world.

Pink football game

From now through the end of October, National Breast Cancer Awareness Month, Las Crucens will have opportunities to show their support for this important program beginning with a ladies luncheon Wednesday, Sept. 9 featuring keynote speaker New Mexico Lt. Gov. Diane Denish. A fun run and walk is scheduled to begin at 7 a.m. Saturday, Sept. 12, starting at Hadley Hall on the NMSU campus.

The main event so far for September is the third annual "NMSU Aggies are Tough Enough to Wear Pink" football game Saturday, Sept. 12. Pink tailgate parties will take place at NMSU prior to the game kickoff at 6 p.m. The Aggies will take on Prairie View A&M.

Unfortunately, U.S. district judge disagrees that anonymous nonprofit groups who mail political propaganda should register as PACs

By DAVID E. MCCOLLUM

Last fall during the heat of the 2008 political campaigns, many New Mexicans were inundated with a barrage of slick advertising mailers that attacked several state legislators who were running for re-election. These full color postcards and fliers did not show support for any particular candidate. However, their messages were consistent, as they used every public relations trick in the dirty politics handbook – half truths, innuendoes, out-ofcontext quotes and unflattering photos to attempt to oust certain incumbent legislators.

McCOLLUM

These "informational" pieces were mailed to targeted districts including some in Doña Ana County. The mailings were from unrecognized out-of-town nonprofit organizations such as New Mexico Youth Organized. This obviously well-funded group, based in Albuquerque, was successful at unseating two Republicans and three Democrats in the 2008 election. Similar mailings were also used successfully in our local city elections in 2007. New Mexico Secretary of State Mary Herrera, with the support of Attorney General Gary King, ordered New Mexico Youth Organized and similar organizations such as the Center for Public Policy and the Southwest Organizing Project to register as political action committees. As PACs, the organizations would be required, under New Mexico law, to disclose all financial contributions and their sources, as well as all campaign expenditures. King felt the direct mail campaigns were clearly attempting to influence the election and were obviously politically based.

However, the organizations filed a federal action against the state to avoid having to release the identity of their backers and their expenditures. Albuquerque District Court Judge Judith C. Herrera ruled against King by saying that the direct mail pieces were "the type of political expression that is constitutionally protected." She added, "Even though the ads could be seen as attacking the targeted legislators, where the First Amendment is implicated, the tie goes to the speaker, not the censor.'

As a newspaper publisher who emphatically supports our nation's First Amendment, I must humbly - but strongly - disagree with Judge Herrera. These printed pieces contained, in my opinion, distorted and misleading information that unquestionably affected the outcome of at least five politi-cal races in 2008. For these slick marketing pieces to be delivered into our community from an anonymous source through our public federal mail service is manipulation of our system.

Growing up and playing sports in Oklahoma, my teammates and I were taught that "Cheaters never win, and winners never cheat." In my opinion the "cheaters" who have ignored the intent of our law have "won," and we, as the general public, have lost.

I agree with King and applaud him for announcing that he will appeal the judge's ruling. We pray that his opinion will prevail and the cowardly, anonymous finger-pointers will be exposed in the sunshine of public scrutinv.

Unsubstantiated concerns

I am writing in response to Jay Miller's 'Thoughts on Health Care," which appeared in the Aug. 14 Bulletin.

Miller raises unsubstantiated concerns about the ongoing health care debate. For example, he writes, "There have been some extremely scary claims made about what is going to happen to old people under the proosed plan.

There simply is nothing in any of the four proposed plans in Congress that even suggests "death squads" or abandonment of senior citizens rather than treating them for a terminal illness as Miller implies.

The termination of one's life will remain his/ her option -a decision to be made in instances of terminal illness.

Miller cites the unfortunate personal case of his parents' long suffering from acute dementia and Alzheimer's. A more famous case was that of Terri Shiavo, who lay in a hospital bed for years with no hope for recovery while family members engaged in rancorous debate over "pulling the plug" or not. This situation escalated into a national debate involving members Congress, the media and the federal courts.

To avoid such difficult situations, we should all make clear to family, guardians or whomever, what should be done in case of a terminal illness. This wish should be in writing.

Other aspects of the health care debate include concern that Congress and the presi-dent are rushing to enact and sign a bill. Clearly, the current proposals are being debated publicly at hearings, on the Internet and by the media. Hopefully Miller and other such sources will be more careful in airing concerns based on fact rather than political innuendo.

Some Americans, a growing number in both the lower and middle class, need to have the right to quality health care if they can't afford to pay for it. Yes, Miller, this is a patriotic stand, i.e. love of country and all of our less fortunate citizens.

System still broke

Sometimes it seems like yesterday when that timely issue of Moxie maga-zine appeared with the headline: "It's Your Choice – Or is it?"

As first of a three-part series on health care reform, the article read: "Coast to coast, the verdict is the same; our country's health care system is 'broke.' Throughout last year, Congress wrestled with the problem and once again resorted to gridlock."

At the same time, Moxie underscored, "Across the nation, millions are haunted by the threat of layoffs, permanent job loss or unexpected early retirement, that may slash medical coverage or even cancellation of health plans by employers.

The same feature highlighted "Hard Choices," a slim, electrifying book by three Philadelphia Inquirer reporters. Minutely detailing the scope of services and costs of health care in Canada, Germany and the United States, they noted while the U.S. system "can offer the most sophisticated medicine ... it can also leave patients, families and doctors confused, exasperated and angry." The Moxie series also highlighted "Bit-ter Medicine," authored by New York inter-nist Dr. Jeanne Kassler. Chastising the American health care system for its greed and chaos, she put it bluntly: "Fragmenting the patient pool has allowed the twin issues of high costs and limited access to flourish. Rather than putting everyone together, thereby spreading the risk over the whole population and making us see these as issues facing everyone, we have carved Americans into multiple insurances niches.'

Sound familiar? Sound like right now? Not quite. That Moxie series actually appeared in late 1994 and early 1995.

But not to despair! As Newt Gingrich just reminded a recent C-SPAN audience, in the end, "Society is more important than government."

MARGARET MARKHAM

Cartoon appreciated

Thanks for finally publishing a progres-sive political cartoon – Beattie, Friday, Aug. 21.

A myth has been spread that the United States has the best medical coverage in the world. No facts anywhere support this.

What the U.S. government does do as well as any other nation is medical research. The National Institutes of Health, supported by our tax dollars, has excelled for several decades at advances in the discovery and treatment of disease.

As a procurer and administrator of grants supporting these programs conducted and mentored by Nobel Prize winners for 35 years, I know firsthand how reliable and cost-efficient they are.

I think most of the public is aware that drug research by "big pharma" in its competitive lack of collaboration and ubiquitous costly advertising is mostly responsible for making adequate care out of reach to so many people in this country.

PAT HOLGUIN

The whole load

Regarding the health care proposal in the federal government, I have a dog in this hunt. I am 77 years old and have had eye surgery twice in the last seven months. I expect that care would have been vetoed under the proposal.

My first wife, Jo, died due to Lou Geh-rig's disease in 1992. She was 58, but we had good care through the nine years before her death. Since there is no cure, I expect that care would have been vetoed under the proposal.

As a former member of the New Mexico interim legislative health and human resources committee, I can report that some six to eight members of that committee, dominated by Democrats, always lobbied for some form of universal health care, but they could never agree or bring themselves together enough to make anything happen – and they were the majority. Their only solution for every problem was to paint everyone with the same brush, throw out the baby with the bath water, etc. (See their solutions for teenage pregnancy, safe sex, gun control, taxation, ad nauseam.) Seventy-eight percent of New Mexicans have health care, leaving 22 percent that do not. They simply ridiculed my suggestion - as did the local Progressive Voters Alliance - of forgetting about the 78 percent that worked and fix the 22 percent that didn't, which is what I would have done had someone presented me with a problem having identical numbers.

There's an old story about an itinerant preacher who came out for a revival and only one old cowboy showed up. The preacher started and harangued that cowboy for an hour and a half. Upon finishing, he asked for the cowboy's thought. The cowboy said, "When I go out to feed the cattle and only one steer shows up, I don't give him the whole load."

As has been said, this boondoggle is the biggest threat to individual liberty and responsibility in the history of the United States.

ED BOYKIN

Cutting off your noses Steve Marino and his wife are among the many Americans that suffer from a disease called "Constitutionitis."

They firmly believe that they are entitled to their rants, no matter how ridiculous or out-of-touch, while they want to deny others the opportunity to express their thoughts.

Now, why do they want to deny themselves the pleasure, according to them, of reading the Las Cruces Bulletin? Since they already suffer from selective hearing, speaking and seeing, they might as well practice selective reading too.

Go ahead and keep reading the Bulletin. Nobody is holding a gun to your heads and ordering you to read Swickard's comments, now are they?

Stop cutting your noses off to spite yourselves. That's just plain dumb.

EVELYN HANCOCK

Apache Homeland Casino proposal still on the table Gov. Richardson opposes plan

Geronimo's children are still knock-ing at our door. On July 21, the National Indian Gaming Commission issued an order telling the tribe to stop gaming at its Akela casino halfway between Las Cruces and Deming on I-10.

But on July 30, the Fort Sill Apache Tribe of Oklahoma filed a motion in federal court asking that the order be overturned. The tribe also appealed the order by the NIGC, asking to be heard by the full panel of three judges.

So the game is far from over. Fort Sill tribal Chairman Jeff Houser vows to use "every means at our disposal" to keep the casino open. And there is no reason to believe the Fort Sill Apaches will be any less tenacious than their fellow Apaches at

Mescalero. The Mescalero Apaches, led by tribal chairman Wendell at Akela, in the area that once was its homeland. The U.S. government put the property in trust for the tribe a few years later. That act gave the tribe freer use of its land than if it were merely a purchased piece of property.

Under some circumstances, it would a casino on the property. But a quirk in the law, which I hadn't heard before, what that interpretation could possibly mean when the Apaches were held prisoner for 27 years. The only relationship during those years, in the interpretation of Chairman Jeff Houser, was a government-to-prisoner relationship.

Maybe government lawyers can finesse the meaning of those words but it certainly seems the intent is clear to find a way of preventing the Fort Sill tribe from opening a casino in its homeland. In fact, the casino is called the Apache Homeland Casino. Gov. Bill Richardson's office is pleased with the federal government's decision to order the casino closed. When the tribe first opened the casino at Akela, in February 2008, Richardson dispatched State Police to block access to the property. In April 2008, the casino reopened on a limited basis. Since then the state has stayed out of the matter saying it is a federal issue.

Richardson has said he doesn't want to expand gambling any more than it already is in New Mexico. Through renegotiated agreements with gaming tribes, a limit of six racinos in the state has been placed on horse tracks and a limit of three casinos each has been placed on tribes and pueblos

The number of casinos and racinos in the state has mushroomed since Gov. Gary Johnson approved the first one days after taking office in 1995. They have proliferated to all corners of the state except the southwest corner. An Akela casino would be the closest to that corner.

So far, New Mexico has been able to keep pueblos from putting casinos on property purchased outside their tribal land. The Taos Pueblo investigated buying the Kachina Lodge in downtown Taos for a casino. The Jemez Pueblo tried to buy land near Anthony for a casino. Neither materialized.

But it could happen. In neighboring Arizona, several tribes have bought land near Phoenix and built casinos. The latest is a tribe that has bought next door to Glendale's new NFL stadium.

Dropout rate casts dark cloud over state Literacy problems a major reason kids leave school

BY MICHAEL SWICKARD For the Las Cruces Bulletin

There is a dark cloud over New Mexico Public Education because almost half of the public school students do not graduate from their free K-12 education. This problem has existed for years but only now are we finding out. The public education budget is almost $3 billion, half of the entire New Mexico budget, so the barrier to student completion is not money or access; rather, something far more fundamental.

I will explain shortly and suggest what needs to be done.

First: does anyone think students drop out because they are having too much fun or school is too interest-ing? No. Yet, something happens and each dropout at some point decides not to graduate. Why?

There is an Old West saying, "Only the cattle know why they stampede, and they ain't talking." This is not so with people who fail in our education system. But we can only hear these people if we listen. Often society is not listening. Many say they dropped out because school was of no use, which is true if we look at it from their perspective.

People were unhappy when I recently wrote, "... drop-ping out may be the most rational thing they do ..." One person wrote angrily, "You have done a great disservice by supporting students dropping out." No, I wrote it may be the most rational thing they do. Experts cannot imagine not graduating since they come from a "success to success" world where they always prosper. They cannot identify with students who experience such a world of failure that getting away from that world is the most logical thing they can do. The reason students have, do and will drop out from a free public education is that they become seriously alienated from that system.

While alienation is caused by a number of factors, the most pernicious is lack of appropriate literacy. If students cannot read at grade level, they will not keep up with peers. When other students read effectively and they do not, these students feel stupid and often are treated as such. It hurts and alienates them. These students learn less and less in every subject until they flee the system.

The vast majority of prisoners in our justice system are poor readers so this academic handicap rules their lives. They live lesser lives because they did not get the appropriate literacy skills while in school.

To change the dropout numbers, educational leaders must see the world from the eyes of those who do not read well. The National Reading Panel of 2002 states that students must be prevented from or restored from five major reading problems. These problems include: phonemic awareness, rules of phonics, vocabulary, comprehension and fluency. Trouble with any will result in students unable to read well who then become dropouts.

The most important literacy skill is silent reading. Almost every test in public school is first a test of silent reading ability and then a test of the subject matter.

New Mexico can change the dropout numbers if it discards some notions that have not worked in the past and will not work now. Namely, taking every bit of fun out of going to school does not improve outcomes; it alienates students. Also, if a child does not learn to read, holding that student back and making him repeat a grade has no chance if the youth gets the same curriculum that did not work the first time.

When it is obvious students lack literacy skills they must have intervention that works immediately. How do I know this? I work in literacy development both from prevention to intervention. The published research shows what school districts must do to stop dropouts because of academic alienation. These interventions work if educational leaders listen. Some do, let us cel-ebrate them; some do not. We must get their attention before more students are lost.

T.E.A. Party bus in Las Cruces Sept. 1

The Las Cruces T.E.A. Party (Taxed Enough Already) will welcome a TEA Party Express Bus to Las Cruces at 5:30 p.m., Tuesday, Sept. 1, at Young Park, 1905 E. Nevada Ave. The bus is en route to Washington, D.C., to participate in a national T.E.A. Party protest march scheduled for Saturday, Sept. 12.

A flyer promoting the bus tour lists its national sponsor as Freedom Works, a 501(c)(8) organization chaired by former U.S. House of Representatives Majority Leader Dick Armey. Co-sponsors are listed as: The Club for Growth, National Taxpayers Union, Americans for Tax Reform, Young Americans for Lib-erty, Leadership Institute, Grassfire Alliance, Resist-net.com and Free Republic. For more information, email lcteaparty@gmail.com.

The event will be covered by Las Cruces Channel 98 (LCC98), the fledging local station on Comcast Chan-

"We were impressed at how easy and inexpensive they make the process of getting on TV," said Susan Maas, spokeswoman for Las Cruces T.E.A. Party. "Our organization has found a good friend in broadcasting with LCC98."

"In the future, our station will be providing live coverage of these kind of events," said Chris Soular, president of the Las Cruces Channel.

Skip Swickard, enjoy the Bulletin

Steve Marino writes (The Las Cruces Bulletin Aug. 21) that you "continue to publish the extreme right-wing views of Michael Swickard." As a result, he states that he and his wife, who otherwise enjoy it, "will no longer be reading The Bulletin."

That's sort of like smashing your television because you don't like a particular program.

Wouldn't it make more sense for them to just skip Swickard's column and continue to enjoy the rest? LARRY YTUARTE

Regurgitating talking points Ultra-right-wing conservatives, including many Repub-licans elected to Congress, keep spouting off about death councils in the health care reform legislation, a council that will decide whether or not an old person has enough value to receive medical care or should be left to die.

Now Michael Swickard's Aug. 21 column spouts the same thing, although he pussyfoots around the issue. It's apparent he has not read the legislation in question but is simply regurgitating the talking points pressed on neocons by the health insurance industry and others opposed to health care reform.

So, Swickard, let's get it straight. Right here. Right now. The bills (all three of the House bills and the Senate bill) offer people the opportunity to meet with their doctor to discuss how they would like to be treated medically if and when they become incapacitated to make medical decisions for themselves. This is called an Advanced Health Care Directive and the bill would allow doctors to be reimbursed for their medical advice.

I recently spent $600 to have a lawyer draw up a will, including an Advanced Health Care Directive that tells my brothers and relatives what I want them to do on my behalf. It doesn't mean I've given over to any doctor or any hospital – and certainly not to any government bureaucrat or politician – the right to make these vital medical decisions for me.

That's what the legislation proposes. That's all it proposes.

God bless every man and woman who enjoys a long life. Productivity has no place in the discussion. People have value just because they are alive and here.

I can think of no greater productive value than a grandma who showers her love on her grandchildren, even if she's captive in a wheelchair or bed

It would be refreshing, once, to read a column by Swickard in which he gets his facts straight.

Are teachers qualified?

With another school year started and the blame game going full circle, here is a question parents, students, school boards and superintendents need to ask

Is the teacher in your child's class the most qualified at the subject they are teaching? In the state of New Mexico to get endorsed to teach a core subject you only need to have 21-24 credit hours in that subject. That makes you qualified to teach that subject. To be highly qualified you need a masters degree in anything.

This endorsement is extremely misleading and here is why. Let's say you went to college to be trained in teaching music. You receive your license in that subject and your endorsement. But, you will also get endorsed in any other subject, that you may have minored in as long as you have the 21 credits, making you qualified to teach it.

There is a big stretch from the methods used in teaching music compared to math.

Here's a scenario for you. A person has been teaching music for 15-20 years. You are then thrust into a math class without any explanation or desire to teach that subject. You have not taken a math class in 15 to 20 years. Add to that the person that is now teaching music has never taught that subject before. You are also given two options: take it or leave it. Both are qualified by New Mexico standards, which covers the administrator's and district's butts. Yet, are the most qualified people teaching these subjects?

Who actually benefits and wins from these types of decisions? The district doesn't win; they have to deal with any repercussions from these decisions. All they have done is cover themselves because both teachers are endorsed. The teacher only benefits because they have a job.

The students are the true losers. They now have a teacher that does not know the subject and has no desire to teach it. The only person that may consider themselves a winner in these cases are the principals. They have caused a valued, stable, experienced veteran teacher to quit, retire, look for another job or request a transfer. Which is what many of these decisions are all about in the first place.

These are the types of decisions that are made on a regular basis behind the scenes. Teachers don't talk about them in public because of a fear of retribution. This could be another reason why schools are not making AYP and people are either leaving the teaching profession or not joining it at all.

Tokers kill thousands

National Rifle Association haters and those that despise gun owners along with the few enlightened that know the Founding Fathers were not speaking of private gun ownership in the Second Amendment, try hard to think. Many serial killers made infamous in history never used a gun to commit their horrors

Eric Robert Rudolph injured 150 and killed two. Ted Kaczynski injured 23 and killed three. Timothy McVeigh murdered 168.

Like these and the Tylenol Killer, Albert DeSalvo only needed his hands to sink into the history of depravity as the Boston Strangler. The list goes on. Sick minds do not need guns to injure and kill.

If you insist on hating and despising, then choose Americans that light up a marijuana cigarette. They bought the gun, bullet and pulled the trigger that has killed thousands of innocent people on both sides of the border.

Instead of stoning my glass house, feel the pain and anguish of the New Mexico family whose loved ones were gunned down in Juárez just a week past. Beyond this madness, those that insist it is a harmless non-addictive pastime are destroying my country from within and that does deserve contempt.

Support clean energy

As I grew up in Las Cruces I took for granted the blue skies, incredible vistas and clean air. I moved away for 21 years, and in that time learned what a treasure we have here, while choking on smog, soot and coal dust in other parts of the United States and the world.

This year, we have a great opportunity to preserve this air for our children and grandchildren by supporting clean energy legislation. Using solar power alone, New Mexicans can provide all the power we need three times over. Wind power can provide us another three times our energy needs.

Both renewable resources, abundant in New Mexico, can employ thousands of New Mexicans as soon as the next two years, while preserving our clean air for our children and grandchildren.

Please contact both Sen. Jeff Bingamon and Sen. Tom Udall and tell them you support clean energy legislation.

Too much sugar

I was once very skeptical about the food my children were consuming in the school cafeteria and how it was being prepared. After careful investigation, I was sur-prised to discover that most meals met the required guidelines.

But who is monitoring sugar intake? It is not uncommon for breakfasts that are served to be extremely high in sugar. Some common breakfast items include peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, cherry turnovers, French toast and maple syrup, donuts, and fruit juices. These items should be of major concern because of the high sugar content usually in the form of high fructose corn syrup (HFCS). Despite the newly released commercials about HFCS being okay in moderation, there is plenty of evidence showing that HFCS is a major player when it comes to obesity. The problem is that HFCS is in everything. It is in the cherry turnovers, peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, most of the bread products, and even in the fruit juices. Many of the fruits being served are in their own syrup (added sugar) or as a cocktail (again, added sugar). It is difficult to monitor "moderation" when the first meal of the day is mainly sugar.

All things salsa come Downtown on Saturday, Aug. 29

CINDI FARGO Executive Director of Downtown Las Cruces Partnership

Welcome to the MainStreet SalsaFest 2009

Downtown's first MainStreet SalsaFest kicks off Saturday, Aug. 29 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. We can't wait to see you there! Q.What is a "SalsaFest"?

- A. A place to taste great salsa and vote for your favorite salsa chef
- B. A chance to hear spicy hot salsa
- music and do some dancing C. Food, fun and something for
- everyone
- D. An exciting new tradition underway in Downtown Las Cruces If you answered any or all of the above – you are absolutely right!

Chris Menoch, Greg Gendall and The Big Idea

How did the MainStreet SalsaFest get started? Chris and Amanda Menoch of Ocotillo Roasters had the idea first. They talked to Greg Gendall, chair of the Downtown Las Cruces Partnership Marketing and Promotions Committee and the Big Idea took hold. Gendall had heard about the Albuquerque Salsa Festival and thought it would be a great idea for Downtown Las Cruces.

"We talk about creating traditions in Las Cruces as we are planning street life in Downtown", said Gendall, "and what could be better than to celebrate salsa truly one of our tabletop culinary traditions in Las Cruces." Gendall brought the idea to DLCP's marketing and promotions committee, who, along with staff and vol-unteers, took off running.

Passion for Salsa

The committee quickly discovered the "passion" that exists about salsa.

Salsa Festivals – such as those in Oxnard, Calif., and Albuquerque have been successful for many years, and bring thou-sands of people together to celebrate each competitor's salsa recipe. How can a simple but elegant combination of chile, onion, tomatillo, tomato, cilantro and, possibly, garlic create such a stir?

We all know why. A great salsa is something you don't forget. We measure our favorite restaurants by their salsa, we have our favorite brands of prepared salsa and we have salsa we don't like at all. We have grandma's salsa, our tía's salsa and salsa made by a friend that comes as a cherished Christmas gift every year.

We wait for the chile harvest so we can make our favorite recipes, and we have our own preferred ways of roasting and preparing the ingredients. Salsa can top an egg, slide onto a warm tortilla or grace the most complex dish. Salsa is on nearly every tabletop in the Southwest. Great salsa is a badge of honor and a mark of our identity in the kitchen.

Children's SalsaArt

"Salsa" paintings by 25 young artists sharing their vision of the fun and spice of chile peppers are on exhibit at the Rio Grande Theatre galleries courtesy of the Doña Ana Arts Council.

Gerie Muchnikoff, a talented professional artist, helped the children produce the work as part of her summer arts program at the Meerscheidt Recreation Center.

Muchnikoff teaches young children with "a little bit of technique," she said. "I direct and they do the rest. I'm very proud of my work with kids.

With the SalsaFest in mind, Andrea Camunez, whose 5-year-old daughter participated in the summer arts program, suggested the chile pepper theme. Camunez, who is coordinator of the children's exhibit and board member of the Downtown Las Cruces Partnership, knew Muchnikoff's skills and saw the potential for something special. "Gerie's ability to bring out the artistic creativity in a young child is amazing," Camunez said. "These paintings celebrate the energy of our local culture, which is the purpose of the SalsaFest."

The paintings, created by children between the ages of 5 and 13, are a delight to the eye and a perfect introduction to the flavors of the first Las Cruces "MainStreet SalsaFest." The exhibit is free and everyone is welcome.

Salsa Music and Dance

Ritmo Caluroso, an eight-piece Salsa Dance Band, will set the pace for dancing at SalsaFest. The group performs from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. on the SalsaFest Main Stage on Main Street between Las Cruces and Griggs.

The music event is sponsored by Ruben Smith and the Central Loan Company and by Carmona's Day Spa. "We really wanted to be a part of the kick-off SalsaFest event," said Smith, former Las Cruces Mayor. "The event has grounding in our community's heritage, but it is also a new tradition for Las Cruces and we are proud to sponsor the salsa music and dancing.'

Smith loves music and plays bassoon with the Las Cruces Symphony, and saxophone with both the Mike Caranda Band and Jazz Unlimited. Smith and his dance partner Naomi McKenna kicked up their heels at the spring 2009 "Look Who's Danc-ing" event at the Pan Am Center.

Sandra Mount and Marco Carmona have music and dance in their blood. Their mother, Hortensia Carmona involved them in church choirs where they sang and played the piano. "Music is something I absolutely love," said Sandra. "SalsaFest is great idea with a special cultural focus and we are glad to see things like this happening in downtown", said Sandra." Marco Carmona has a special passion for choreography and both Sandra and Marco have choreographed dance routines for pageants, weddings and quinceañeras. The pair coached Zia Middle School and LCHS squads in past years. "Music is an art that brings out the best in people. Dance is a really healthy way to express yourself, said Sandra "and even people who don't like to dance enjoy watching dancers." Sandra and Marco say SalsaFest sponsorship was a perfect step for Carmona's. "We are so glad to be part of the kick-off SalsaFest it will draw people to our community and give us all another way to be connected and have a little more fun"

The Doña Ana Arts Council is sponsoring the Pan American Dance Institute at the Rio Grande stage in front of the theater with performances at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m.

TODD DICKSON I The Las Cruces Bulletin

Gov. Bill Richardson and state Veterans' Services Secretary John Garcia observe the posting of the colors Thursday, Aug. 20, in front of the Ed and Harold Foreman Engineering Complex on the New Mexico State University main campus.

Richardson visits Las Cruces

Gov. Bill Richardson visited Las Cruces Thursday, Aug. 20, to support the creation of an early college high school at New Mexico State University, to recognize NMSU's ranking as one of the nation's most veteran-friendly universities and to give a speech to the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce.

G.I. Jobs, a national publication, ranked NMSU in the top 15 percent of veteranfriendly universities in the country for its dedication, support and assistance to veterans who want to go to college. "With its increased amount of payment and coverage, the new Post-9/11 GI Bill could transform an entire generation of veterans," Richardson said. "Together with New Mexico State and other universities and colleges in the state, I urge our new generation of veterans to use this well-deserved benefit to pursue a post-high school education. It could be the key to achieving a greater post-military career."

Interim NMSU President Manuel T. Pacheco said veterans and active-duty military are important members of the university's community. The Post-9/11 GI Bill pays full tuition and fees for four years at state universities or community colleges. Eligible veterans can also receive a monthly housing stipend and up to $1,000 annually for books.

Members of the National Guard and Reserve who have spent three months or more activated for war service are now also eligible for the new GI Bill.

The College of Engineering is preparing a support program to meet the particular needs of veteran students, including mentoring programs and tutoring.

Kenneth R. White, interim dean of the College of Engineering, said veterans are often the most focused and determined students.

Another key feature of the new Post-9/11 GI Bill allows the transfer of a veteran's earned educational benefit to a spouse and children. This is not allowed under the existing "Montgomery" GI Bill, which has been in place with minimal changes since President Franklin Roosevelt signed it into law shortly after World War II to help returning soldiers go to college and transition into a post-war society.

Richardson also touted Las Cruces Pub-lic Schools project with NMSU and Doña Ana Community College to start an early college high school. The school's 500 students will take classes on the NMSU main campus and graduate with at least a twoyear associate's degree already achieved.

Richardson also announced an effort to get dropouts to return to school.

Proposed apartment complex pulled

The owners of five acres on Holman Road who wanted to build an apartment complex withdrew their zone variance application Monday, Aug. 24.

The project has faced strong opposition by residents living in the area who say they moved there because everything is zoned for single family homes. Also, the 60-unit two-story apartment complex with a day care center would have been located across from Sunrise Elementary School, which is adjacent to César Chávez Elementary School and both are at capacity with about 600 students each.

Following public meetings that had large numbers of opposing residents, an email from Greg Byres of Summit Engineering notified city planners Monday that the property's owners - Johnny D. and Mary Helen B. Tapia - were withdrawing their zoning variance request.

We request that the case be withdrawn for consideration in its entirety," Byres wrote. "We will be re-applying at a later date with a Planned Unit Development.

Commonly called a PUD, this kind of development creates its own zoning and codes. It is often used in housing developments, which residents opposed to the apartment complex say is acceptable to them.

Public hearing set for new demolition rules

The City of Las Cruces will hold a public input meeting on the proposed Demolition Delay, Reuse and Adaptive Reuse Ordinance for Historic Structures. The meeting will be held from 6 to 7 p.m. Tuesday, Sept. 1, in City Hall's Council Chambers, 200 N. Church St. The ordinance would require the property owner/permittee to honor a 60-day waiting period prior to the demolition of structures that are registered historic buildings on the state and federal historic registers. The grace period gives interested people an opportunity to contact the property owner and propose alternatives to demolition such as encouraging its reuse or perhaps selling the property to someone interested in preserving the structure. These alternatives are purely voluntary on behalf of the property owner.

The proposed ordinance can be viewed at www.las-cruces.org/cd.

Local riders qualify for state gymkhana Silver City rodeo arena to host Sept. 5 championship

By MARVIN TESSNEER

More than 20 Las Cruces Horseman's Association riders, 18 and under, have qualified for the Gymkhana Championships that will be held on Saturday, Sept. 5 in the Silver City Wild West Rodeo Arena, association president Bob Romer said. Gymkhana is an Hindi-Urdu word meaning horseback-riding sport contests that the English had developed during their colonial days in India.

Jordan Morris, 10-12 Division, continued showing her gymkhana skills by winning high-point hon-ors in the August LCHA gymkhana with four firsts and one fifth for 26 points

She won Barrels in 18.12 seconds; Poles in 21.94; Flags in 8.89; and Goat-Tying in 14.85. Her fifth-place time in the Scudda-

Ho monthly fun event was 14.85.

Morris and Kaysha Nakamae, competing in the 13-17 Division, are demonstrating why the younger LCHA riders have qualified for the Silver City Gymkhana qualified LCHA Championships.

In an earlier gymkhana, Nakamae had won four firsts to earn 29 points. Her winning times were, Barrels, 17.73 seconds; Poles, 21.96; Flags, 7.31; and Goat Tying, 9.75.

In the other August age division gymkhana action:

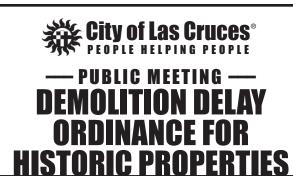

Nancy Alexander won one first and two seconds for 24 points to lead the 40-and-Older division. Her best times were, Barrels, 18.80 seconds; Poles, 22.71; and Flags, 9.04.

Scoring was close in the 18-39 Division between Angela Ledesma, 24 points, and Kourtnie Middagh, 23. Ledesma took a first in Poles, 25.54 seconds, and Middagh placed first in Flags, 8.76, and first in Goat-Tying, 14.34.

Shawna Middagh rode the patterns well in the 13-17 Division and added 23 points to her tally with two first places, Flags, 8.55 seconds and Goat-Tying, 13.49. In the Seven-Nine Division, Shelby Alexander was the high-point winner with 24 points by clocking three first places, Poles, 29.66 seconds; Flags, 9.04; and Scudda-Ho, 24.49.

The City of Las Cruces will hold a public meeting on the proposed Demolition Delay, Reuse and Adaptive Reuse Ordinance for Historic Structures.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 1 6:00-7:30 pm City Hall Council Chambers 200 N. Church St.

The ordinance would require a 60-day waiting period before a structure listed on the state or federal historic register could be demolished. The ordinance would also provide substantial flexibility in the use of registered properties to provide options in lieu of demolition. The proposed ordinance is available at www.las-cruces.org/cd/.

Las Cruces Crime Stoppers is offering a $1,000 reward for information that helps find a 21-year-old woman who has been missing since 2004.

Crystal Gomez was last seen five years ago, in August 2004, when she was only 16. Gomez had a history of being a runaway and, on more than one occasion, left her home on the 400 block of Augustus Road in Las Cruces.

On one of those occasions prior to August 2004, Gomez was found on the streets in Orange County, Calif., and was returned to Las Calif., and was returned to Las Cruces. On another occasion, Gomez ran away to live with friends in El Paso, Texas. Her family believes Gomez may have returned to California or possibly is in Albuquerque, N.M.

Gomez, at the age of 16, was 5-feet-8-inches tall and weighed approximately 150 pounds. She has brown hair and brown eyes.

If you have any information regarding the where-

SWEC shows film to honor Leopold anniversary

The Southwest Environmental Center (SWEC) will celebrate the legacy of Aldo Leopold, the visionary conservationist who arrived in the Southwest a century ago, by hosting "Leopold and Lobos" at 7 p.m. Friday Aug. 28, at the Rio Grande Theatre.

The event features a screening of the new 60-minute film, "Lords of Nature," which takes a fresh look at the role of predators such as the Mexican Wolf, or Lobo, in nature, followed by a panel discussion. Doors open at 6:30 p.m., and admission is free.

"Lords of Nature," created by Green Fire Productions and narrated by Peter Coyote, journeys to the heart of predator country: the Yellowstone plateau, the canyons of Zion, the farm country of northern Minnesota and the rugged open range of central Idaho – all places now resettled by the great predators society once banished. Here scientists discover these top carnivores are revitalizing forces of nature, a "keystone" species whose presence in sufficient numbers can dramatically reverse the slow decay of America's wild places, especially in the West. The film will be followed by a panel discussion looking at Leopold, Lobos and other topics from a broad range of perspectives. The discussion will be moderated by Kevin Bixby, executive director of SWEC. Panel participants will include Silver City-based author, Sharman Apt Russell, whose books include "Kill the Cowboy" and "Standing in the Light"; Gary Roemer, conservation biologist in the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Conservation Ecology at New Mexico State University; Dave Parsons, carnivore conservation biologist with the Albuquerque-based Rewilding Institute and former head of the Mexican Wolf Recovery Program for the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service with nearly two decades of involvement in the restoration of Mexican wolves in the Southwest; and Oscar Simpson, campaign coordinator for the New Mexico Wildlife Federation and a former New Mexico game commissioner. This year marks the 100th

This year marks the 100th anniversary of Aldo Leopold's arrival in the Southwest. It was in the national forests of New Mexico and Arizona where the young Leopold experienced an epiphany in his anti-predator views and came to realize the ecological importance of wolves and other predators, as famously described in his "Thinking Like A Mountain" essay ("fierce green fire") published in Sand County Almanac. What Leopold warned of 70 years ago, scientists from around the world now confirm: That a land lacking its top predators is a land subject to decay, and vice versa, a land with the great beasts in sufficient numbers is a land far more diverse and resilient.

Early voting is under way in county election

Sales tax at issue in poll

Early voting began at 8 a.m. Tuesday, Aug. 25, at the Doña Ana County Government Center, in advance of the Sept. 22 election, which will determine whether a one-quarter percent sales tax will continue to be collected to support operational costs for Doña Ana County's 16 volunteer fire districts.

Early voting will continue through Saturday, Sept. 19, during normal business hours, excluding weekends and holidays. The only exception will be Saturday, Sept. 19, when the Doña Ana County Government Center polling location will be open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

The deadline to register to vote in the election was Tuesday, Aug. 25. The deadline to request an absentee ballot was 5 p.m. Friday, Aug. 21.

Residents of the City of Las Cruces, the Village of Hatch, the Town of Mesilla and the City of Sunland Park are not eligible to vote in this election. Only voters whose registered addresses are in unincorporated areas of Doña Ana County will be allowed to cast votes.

Election Day will be Tuesday, Sept. 22, with consolidated polling places open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

For a list of polling places, visit the Doña Ana County website at www. donaanacounty.org/elections.

NASA's next generation of manned spacecraft arrived at Holloman Air Force Base on Wednesday, Aug. 19, via a C-17 Globemaster III and left aboard a tractor-trailer on Friday, Aug. 21, for White Sands Missile Range where final checkouts with the launch abort rocket will be conducted.

Holloman was a vital stop in the Orion Program's Pad Abort One Crew Module's trip to White Sands because of the base's close proximity to WSMR and its ability to receive aircraft with heavy cargo.

"It would have been pretty much impossible to get this capsule out here if we were unable to land at Holloman," said Jeff Doughty, Pad Abort One Flight Test Vehicle crew chief.

The base's reliable support also helped in the decision to bring the module through the area.

"We've received excellent support from (Holloman)," said David McAllister, Dryden Flight Research Center lead of operations for the abort flight test. "We feel like we're at home when we're here." Holloman was just one leg in the spacecraft's journey to White Sands. It was built at NASA's Langley, Va., facility, and flown to Dryden Flight Research Center at Edwards AFB in California, to have the avionics and instrumentation installed. When that was completed, it made its way to Holloman for its final destination at a launch site on WSMR for testing.

Doughty said the module is going to White Sands to demonstrate that it can be taken away from the launch pad, ensuring astronauts can get away from the pad in the event of an emergency. Billed as the shuttle

Billed as the shuttle replacement program for NASA, the Orion Program is designed to take the next generation of astronauts to space. It is part of the effort to go to Mars, including everything from its stop here until the capsule splashes down in the ocean after it returns from Mars.

NASA is expecting the Orion to blast into orbit toward the end of 2014 or early 2015.

Battle flag presented to submarine commander

The crew of the Virginia-Class submarine PCU New Mexico (SSN 779) received a special gift on Friday, June 5, as part of a dying wish – the battle flag from the battleship USS New Mexico.

Robert Erland Sr., who served as a Quartermaster 2nd Class Petty Officer aboard the battleship during World War II, had the battle flag in his possession, according to his son.

"When my father found out the Navy was naming a submarine New Mexico, he wanted them to have the battle flag. It was his dying wish," said Robert Erland Jr. of Maryland.

The elder Erland, from Port Jefferson, N.Y., died in May, 2005, at the age of 90, six months after the Secretary of the Navy announced that the sixth Virginiaclass submarine would bear the name New Mexico. It took Erland Jr. about 18

Cmdr. Mark Prokopius, commanding officer of PCU New Mexico, and other crew members drove about 175 miles from Newport News, Va., to Washington, D.C., for the presentation.

"It is truly an honor to accept the battle flag flown onboard USS New Mexico during the Battle of Linguyan Gulf on behalf of PCU New Mexico," said Prokopius. "This is a gracious donation, and we will display it proudly onboard. I also appreciate the opportunity to help Mr. Erland fulfill his father's request."

PCU New Mexico is the second Navy vessel to be named after the state with the nickname the Land of Enchantment. The original battleship was in service from 1917 to 1946 and received six battle stars for action in World War II.

A case of mistaken identity

I am pretty sure I was talking to Ross Conner on the telephone. In person, there might have been a question.

"People are always getting me mixed up with my brother, Jason," Ross said. "He's bigger than me so they assume when they see us together that Jason is the football player and I'm the baseball player for the Aggies. I guess we sort of look alike."

Jason Conner was a pitcher for New Mexico State from 2004-08. Ross is the senior middle linebacker on the Aggies' football team. The one who calls the defensive signals. The go-to guy for on-the-field decisions.

And the one you talk to for good quotes

"On the field," he said, "we're all business. In the locker room we horse around a lot.

I asked if he would elaborate. "No," he said, laughing. "I don't think that would be very smart."

Conner, 5-foot-10, 213 pounds, is a shining example of NMSU's 2009 defense – small, quick and fast. "Our defense," he said, "is all about speed. We'll match you step for

The Aggies' two-a-day practices are mercifully over. The team has settled into their new schedule of classes in the morning, meetings after lunch, then practice, usually from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday. "We had a good camp (two-a-days), this year," Conner said. "We came out of camp with a lot of confidence.

We're going to have a good team this year. I can feel it. Our offensive line has really picked it up. I know. We go head to head with those guys in practice," he said. "We have good running backs.

Watch out for Oñate this season

Knights to field high-caliber talent By CRAIG MASSEY By CRAIG MASSEY

While the Mayfield Trojans and the Las Cruces Bulldawgs were taking turns winning state championships the last couple of years, the Oñate Knights were building.

An outstanding group of sophomores provided plenty of hope for the OHS football team two years ago and now that they're seniors, expectations may be reaching Trojan-Bulldawg levels.

The Knights, who finished with a 5-5 record last year, open the season at 7 p.m. Friday, Aug. 28, versus El Paso Bel Air at the Field of Dreams.

Oñate coach Kelly McKee said this year's Knight team is "the same caliber" as the 2002 squad that won the Class 4A state title and the 2005 team that was a state title contender in Class 5A. Oñate has several college prospects on the roster. "We're hopeful for a good season," said McKee. "We want to get into the playoffs and stay in there as long as we can.'

The Knights, under McKee, ran a power option offense for many years until 2007 and 2008 when they decided to change things up and go with a wide-open passing attack. This season, Oñate will attempt to combine the two, and McKee has a quarterback for each style.

Senior Brandon Roybal, a 6-2 passer, will be the quarterback at times, and he'll into their running attack. When Roybal is the quarterback, Sandoval, a third-year starter at receiver, will move into a slot position.

"Brandon throws the ball very well and Aaron is cat-quick, very fast and very elusive," said McKee. "We'll try to mix it up. We ran the ball a lot in our scrimmage (against Artesia last week). We've been throwing the ball for the past two years, so we needed more practice running it. We hope to be about 50-50 (run and pass) once the season starts.

Aaron Sandoval and his twin brother, Jason, will be slot backs and other receiving targets include Josh Collins, Cody Rogers, Ty Muldrew, tight end Zach Daugherty and Jason Hayes, who will play receiver and tight end.

The main man in the offense should be fullback Zach Hernandez, a 5-11, 215-pound returning starter.

"The fullback is the key if you run the option," McKee said. "He may be the best fullback we've ever had. He's big, strong and fast."

The Knights' offensive line consists of Christian Trevino (6-0, 210, Sr.), Art Guz-man (5-9, 240, Sr.), Angelo Pacheco (6-0, 240, Jr.), John Cachora (6-2, 260, Sr.) and Jeff Stewart (6-1, 210, Jr.). Trevino, Guzman and Pacheco are returning starters.

Cachora, who is receiving interest from several universities. is known mostly for his work on the defensive line. He is starting for the first time on the offensive line, but is a threeyear starter on defense. "He's big, physical, plays

MVCS coach knows what to expect SonBlazers impressive against Carrizozo

By CRAIG MASSEY

When the Mesilla Valley Christian School football team took the field for the first time last week in a scrimmage against Carrizozo, no one knew what to expect.

Not even head coach Charles Gleghorn.

When the players warm up before practice, there is usually lots of chatter, Gleghorn said. In the warm-ups before the scrimmage, however, there was complete silence.

"I thought, 'oh man," Gleghorn said, laughing. "There were some nerves because they didn't know what to expect. But this was their first scrimmage in school history and many of these kids have never played football before, and you wouldn't have known it by the way they played.

"Carrizozo's first play was an 18-yard run," he added. "Then, they got shorter and shorter. They never scored on us.

Defense is the biggest concern for the SonBlazers as they embark on their inaugural season. The team plays its first game at 11 a.m. Saturday, Aug. 29, at Zia Middle School against Marfa, Texas. Mesilla Valley will compete as an independent this year, with eight games currently on the 2009 schedule.

"The kids really don't have a lot of experience tackling," said Gleghorn, the former head coach at Hatch Valley, where he led the Bears to three state championships. "But they did a great job of tackling in the scrimmage. We forced four fumbles and recovered all of them.

The secret's out Ags preparing for Idaho game By JOHN KEITH

Maybe his players didn't know, but they have been practicing on the game plan for the Sept. 5 football opener against Idaho for more than a week now.

"We didn't tell them," said DeWayne Walker, New Mexico State's coach. "But some of them might have known anyway. They do know now.'

Walker, pleased with last Saturday's intra-squad scrimmage, expects Idaho to toss a variety of offensive packages at the Aggies' defense. "We've been working hard on learning how to handle a multitude of packages," he said.

NMSU is focusing on special teams in practice – kicking, kick returns and stopping punt and kickoff runbacks. "That's where this game could be won or lost,' Walker emphasized. "Mistakes can kill you.

"Idaho's coach (Robb Akey) is a defensive guy. I expect them to be good defensively.'

After watching tapes of last Saturday's scrimmage, the Aggies' coach said his defense "is better than I thought it would be at this stage.

"Our offense made some plays. The quarterbacks are passing better.

JC transfer Jeff Fleming threw two touchdown passes, a 50-yarder to Marcus Anderson and a 20-yarder to Todd Lee. "I think," said Walker, "that we'll be a big play offense." He is concerned that running backs Tonny Glynn and Marquell Colston are susceptible to nagging injuries.

"I'm worried about them staying healthy enough to consistently help us," Walker said.

"I was really impressed with James Hall (freshman running back from Las Cruces High School). He's still a puppy but he looks like he can really help us down the line. I'd like to see him put on about 15 pounds and get up to somewhere around 180.

Walker said he plans to redshirt Hall but "we're going to talk about it in meetings this week.

Coach DeWayne Walker watches last Saturday's scrimmage.

Tonny (Glynn) and Marquell (Colston) are good. Our quarterbacks (Jeff Fleming, Trevor Walls and Tanner Rust) are coming along. The thing I like about them is their athleticism. They can run and throw. Last year, Chase (Holbrook) could throw but he wasn't as fast," he said.

Conner, a local athlete who played at Mayfield High School, graduated from NMSU last spring with a degree in business management. He wants to be a dentist.

"I'm taking my pre-dental courses here now," he said. "I'll go to dental school later, probably at the University of Colorado. They don't have dental schools in New Mexico.

Conner is privileged to observe Dr. Michael Pinholster, a Las Cruces dentist, in action at Pinholster's office.

"I'm learning a lot from him," $\operatorname{Ross}\,\operatorname{said}.$

Conner has called for a dentist's help himself during his football career.

"Once I chipped a tooth," he said. "Another time I bit through my lower lip and had to go to an oral surgeon to get that fixed. "But, hey, that's football isn't it?"

Aggie Athletics Fund NM STATE

The New Mexico State University A-Club is an organization for all individuals who participated in athletic competition regardless of sport. The organization is for our former athletes, cheerleaders, and coaches. All are A-Club members by virtue of participation.

The A-Club helps provides scholarships to athletes who have completed their NCAA eligibility but still are working toward degrees. These scholarships are often referred to as "Fifth Year Scholarships". This support is extremely important given the current NCAA requirements pertaining to graduation rates.

The organization also supports the A-Club emergency fund, established to help athletes in the time of need when emergencies occur in their family where travel and other expenses exceed their personal resources. This support is only given when it is within NCAA guidelines.

AGGE INSDER

Volleyball, soccer attendance at NMSU headed for top 15 Football tickets selling big

New Mexico State University is on its way to be in the top 15 nationally for attendance for two of its fall sports.

Volleyball has been there for a while but the turnout so far for soccer head coach Michael Needham's fledgling squad has been higher than a 1,000 for each game. The Aggies had more than 1,300 fans on hand for the season opener and Pete was happy to see the younguns taking to the program in a big way. Fan support for the NCAA sport has been sporadic nationally, but with the way fans are backing their Aggies, it could make another \bar{NM} State squad a national attendance leader.

Needham, like his football counterpart DeWayne Walker, has made a point to meet the local soccer community, showing them that they are needed as the base of support for his program. Ask for a helping hand in Aggieland and you'll always find a trail hand ready to watch your back. The next time the soccer team plays at home is a ways off. Texas- Permian Basin plays at Aggie Memorial, Sept. 16. This is your next chance to keep the Aggies at the top of the national attendance numbers.

Speaking of season tickets, the number of new football season tickets continues to climb. Those of you chomping at the bit to get a seat for the UTEP game, think again about waiting. The math lesson Pete gave you a week or so back regarding a single game versus season tickets or a three pack is still in play. You won't be able to buy a single game seat until the week of the contest and may not have much of a selection for seats if any remain at that point.

If you are looking for a fun way to spend a Friday night, head to The Game Sports Bar & Grill on Espina Street around 6 p.m. for a fundraising fashion show on Aug. 28, with the men's basketball team and its coaches. Not sure if Marvin Menzies will be decked out in a lavender tuxedo or if assistant Mick Durham will be sartorially resplendent in a lemon colored double breasted sport coat, but Jardin de los Niños, our local shelter for the children of the homeless, will benefit. The styling and profiling will go on until about 9 p.m., so there will be plenty of fun to go around.

Season ticket talk, athletes helping others in our town - it's a sure sign the season is about to begin in a big way here in the Mesilla Valley.

How the others rate

Broncos still the team to beat

in WAC race

With a week to go before the New Mexico State football season starts, I will share with you my thoughts on how I see the rest of the WAC this year.

I think Louisiana Tech will be the squad to challenge Boise State. Derek Dooley didn't have a lot of repair to do. He just had to revitalize a program that had become a little stagnant.

With the only WAC bowl victory from last year and enough experienced players to stave off the normal amount of injuries, La Tech has the stuff it takes to play at the top level. Dooley has a quarterback in Ross Jenkins who emerged at the end of last season and has continued to impress the Bulldog coaches. Like NM State head coach DeWayne Walker, Dooley is a defensive guy and tackle D'Anthony Smith should be a first team selection in December.

The next three teams in terms of preseason strength are Fresno State, Nevada and San Jose State in alphabetical order. If you put a premium on coaching you put San Jose State first in that triad. If you like tradition, it's Fresno State. Nevada has its prized pistol offense and probably the best all-around quarterback in Colin Kaepernick but I question the Wolf Pack's ability to be consistent. They expected to walk over NM State last year and lost. Going back another year, they were shut out by New Mexico in the New Mexico Bowl. Head coach Chris Ault does have a bevy of running backs to put behind Kaepernick but stopping people is the thing Nevada has to improve on.

Dick Tomey has earned his street credibility as the guy who gets more out of what he has than most others. The Ihenacho brothers are both back as stoppers. Aggie fans remember the dominant role they played last year at Aggie Memorial. Fresno State is a program that has so much support and so many resources that you can never count them out. Replacing its quarterback will be the main job on the offense, but head coach Pat Hill has two solid running backs returning if the selected quarterback is slow to develop.

Boise State is the favorite again. The Broncos have a machine when it comes to football and a smart coach in Chris Petersen. That leaves Hawai'i, Utah State and Idaho. I see Hawai'i unable to find enough replacements on defense and just not having the talent they have had at skilled positions.

Utah State is going with a new coach and has a dangerous quarterback in Diondre Borel and Idaho is hoping the work Robb Akey has been doing will pan out in his third year in Moscow.

Until they kick off it's all the voice of the turtle. See me in December.

Q. How many fans attended the Aggie soccer team's home opener against Idaho State on Aug. 23?

A. An impressive crowd of 1,343 experienced the official beginning of NM State soccer.

NtheGreen PGA faces fallout from Bridgestone controversy

The episode serves as a teachable moment for all golfers

Back on Aug. 9, at the WGC Bridgestone Invitational at Firestone Golf Course, Tiger Woods and Padraig Harrington stood on the 16th tee locked in a fierce battle for an important championship. Harrington had a one shot lead.

Two days earlier Harrington had closed his round out by making birdie on three of the last five holes to take the lead, so it did not seem very likely that he was about to fold. No matter that Tiger and his massive and boisterous gallery were right there breathing down Harrington's neck. Remember he's the guy who won two of the four majors last year; and also stood on that 16th as the defending PGA Champion.

But a remarkable thing happened on that 16th tee. The two players, who at this point were basically play-ing a "match," since one of them would be the likely winner, were "put on the clock." The group - Woods and Harrington were the last group - was 18 minutes behind the established schedule, and a full hole behind the group in front of them.

Tour official John Paramor, an experienced European Tour chief referee, made no apologies for putting the two leaders on the clock. He had even conferred with PGA rules chief Slugger White before making the decision.

White later told Golfweek magazine: "He (Paramor) asked what I thought and I said 'I don't think we have a choice

Both Woods and Harrington proceeded to hit indif-ferent and troublesome tee shots off the 16th, a monster 600-plus-yard five par, with Harrington in the more difficult spot deep in the rough. He played out but again into the rough, and then hit his third over the green into deeper rough.

Meanwhile, Woods had laid well back to some 182 yards from the pin, which was in a red-light (no-go) spot just over the big pond that guards the green. The world's number one player seized the moment and, being the one-man-highlight-reel that we're used to seeing, hit a towering 8 iron to 8 inches. Not a typo – an 8 iron! If you didn't see it you will eventually, as it may be re-shown as often as the halting chip-in on 16 at Augusta. Shaken or not, Harrington bladed his fourth into the pond and made a triple-bogey eight. Game, set, match. Tournament over.

Things happen

A more telling statement from the PGA Tour's White was this: "If you don't do something when a fast player is being dragged down by a slow player in the group, he'll ask why they weren't put on the clock."

Harrington is a notoriously slow player, so the clock decision probably rattled him more. But he didn't whine. It was Woods, the player who is normally "apolitical and picks his battles carefully" noted Golfweek, who said the ruling "got in the way of a great battle." But this space isn't about debating Paramor's decision, or even about slow play on Tour. The episode serves as a teachable moment for all golfers.

During a competitive round of golf things happen. Often the things that happen are out of our control, or simply chalked up to bad luck or the "rub of the green." We don't know when or what, but we can look back and count dozens, possibly hundreds, of times when we were shaken by something that went wrong, and never recovered.

It might be a lost ball; it might be a 15th club in the bag; it might be a bee sting (or a snake bite); it might be a surprise rules decision. Golf is a game that has infinite variables, and we'll never be able to account for them all. But here are some coaching suggestions for preparing and dealing with the eventuality of you being put on the clock.

The first thing I teach young players I coach is to shorten their pre-shot routine to 25 seconds. That's from the time it is your turn to play and you have first stepped in to address the ball. I favor carefully and thoughtfully sizing up the shot (yardage, hole location, breeze, lie of the ball and so on) before selecting the play. Carefully, yes, but not obsessively and in an ago-nizingly arduous or time-consuming manner. Once the club is selected, or the line of the putt is chosen, pull the trigger and let it go.

If you're riding in a cart, take a couple of extra clubs with you as you go to your ball. Do what's called "bracketing" the shot by estimating the long, the short and the middle distances. One of those clubs will be the right one.

so that you're not stuck hitting what one of my golfing friends calls the "anyway" shot. "I knew I had the wrong club but I hit it anyway," he sometimes laments.

We all can do a more efficient job of estimating what we have to do for our next shot from the time we have hit our first one. When the ball is airborne - that's when the next shot begins. Let's not wait until we're right up to the ball. With rangefinders and GPS units we can do this much more quickly than in the past. Put your cell phone away and start thinking right away about the kind of shot and challenge you're probably dealing with.

An age-old rhythm

Sadly, most adults don't walk anymore, because walking gave us the right amount of time to contemplate what was coming up next. Maybe that's one reason, along with caddies, that the tour players are so consistent. They play a game that has an age-old rhythm.

Another strategy that you need is a back-up pre-shot routine, including on the putting green. If you're out practicing alone, try stepping up to the ball with the club you instinctively feel is the right one and just hitting it without any waggling or anything. Just hit it. Just putt it. You'll be surprised how many good shots you can hit just from instinct. Finally, it's best not to wallow in some perceived injustice when a ruling or some bad break or irregular event takes place. I know what you're thinking right now: easier said than done, and you're right. Still, we can practice that mind set by learning from wretched things that happen and not make the same mistake twice. Like one of my old coaches used to say, "If it don't kill ya' it'll make ya' tougher."

It's good to remember the wisdom of coaching legend John Wooden when he says, "Be quick but don't hurry." We all can play faster, but we don't need to abandon our basics. Sometimes we just need to take a lesson from the good young golfers who play on the junior circuit. They set their bag down, take the club out, step up to the ball and hit it. They don't worry.

"He's a big kid, very aggressive, very heady and a good tackler. He's a good inside-out player. He plays inside, but can go from sideline to sideline.

Hernandez, the fullback, is another outstanding linebacker, along with Tony Covarrubia and Ryan Holguin. Johnson said Holguin is a smart player who has been a consistent player in the program for four years.

The defensive secondary consists of safeties David Vargas and Hayes, and the cornerbacks are Bernie Hernandez, E.J. Wilson and Jason Sandoval.

The quarterback in Gleghorn's wide-open passing offense is senior Cody Correa, a 6-1 point guard for the basketball team.

"He's smart, a good athlete, and he is used to running the show," said Gleghorn. "He's a great communicator and he needs to be. We run a no-huddle offense, so everything is off signals. He relays the signals to everyone else. He's been excellent.³

Correa will be throwing to a deep group of receivers, led by 6-1 senior Marcus Krohn and junior speedster Mitchel McMillan. Running back Greg Patti another basketball standout, is the starting running back and he had a 35-yard touchdown run in the scrimmage.

Anchoring the offensive line will be center Conner Wagner and guards Caleb Hall and Chris Chavez.

Aggies face challenging '09-'10 basketball schedule

Wednesday, Feb. 24, 2010, when WAC foe Idaho travels to Las Cruces. "I'm happy with the schedule," coach Marvin Menzies said. "With the guys that we're lacing them up with, we put ourselves in a good situation to be successful. I think we have a competitive schedule that will allow us to bring the new play-ers along, but, at the same time, give the returning guys a quality experience with challenging games.

In this season's home opener, the Aggies host in-state rival University of New Mexico on Tuesday, Nov. 17.

"To kick the season off on a strong note with a strong competitor and a big-time rival will, hopefully, give us the push that we need at the beginning of the season to show the young guys and returners how much the community supports us,' Menzies said.

'The kids are excited about the UCLA game and having that opportunity to play a traditional powerhouse," he said. "Going to California to play Saint Mary's will be another tough test for us on the road. Winning in the non-conference is tough as it is, but to play solid teams like that makes it even more challenging.

"I feel with all the returning players we have, obviously, we're going to be in a position to compete and win some games that we weren't expected to win.

The Aggies open WAC play with two home games for the first time since the 2006-07 season with Utah State on Saturday, Jan. 2, and Nevada on Monday, Jan. 4.

"The conference overall is going to be very good," Menzies said. "We're going

Historic Hill church gets a new addition

St. Mary's at Hill Anglican Church adds a parish hall

By Beth Sitzler

One of the oldest churches in the area will get a new addition in September.

St. Mary's at Hill Anglican Church, 7975 Doña Ana Road, has recently purchased a manufactured parish hall to reside on a half acre given to the church by the Hill family.

The congregation, formerly known as St. Barnabas, moved into the historic building four years ago, after meeting in the home of for a year Rev. Melvin Pickering.

Pickering said the building was constructed in 1920 as an Episcopal church. It was one of 22 missions in the Mesilla Valley established by Preacher Hunter Lewis. The Episcopal church sold the building almost 20 years ago, which has since been home to various organizations.

'It was empty and not used for a year or two," Pickering said of the building. "Small groups used it off and on before that.

Once St. Mary's purchased the church, the congregation refurbished the interior with new paint, windows and a central heating and cooling system. They also restored the church's façade, which was made from Rio Grande rocks brought to the site by the original congregation members

While the church building was repaired and ready to serve the community, Pickering said there was just one thing missing.

The building doesn't have a bathroom, he said. "If we want to be an active church and not just a historic building, we need the other space for social gatherings.

The new 2,300-square foot parish hall will be the church's center for education, which will include Sunday school and catechism as well as community outreach.

Pickering said by upgrading their facilities. they will be able to serve the community's religious and social needs.

We think it offers a good source for community people who want to be involved in a liturgical catholic church," he said.

Along with holding mass twice on Sundays and various sacred services throughout the year, the congregation also participates in two mission projects - raising funds to support the work of Father Ebenezer Manugwu in southeast Nigeria, and collecting donations for the Gospel Rescue Mission.

By reaching out to the community, Pickering said he hopes the people will reach back and help them in various ways.

In addition to financial donations, Pickering said they are looking for any items that are connected to the church's history, especially caps knitted by Preacher Lewis.

"Preacher Lewis was known for two things. He carried a purse for the poor and he carried a knitting bag. He knitted a baptismal cap for every child he baptized,' he said.

More importantly, Pickering said he would like to reach out to the church's neighbors to help prevent vandalism. On several occasions, he said, church windows have been broken.

"If the neighbors can help watch the building and help keep the vandals away, it would be greatly appreciated," he said.

Children's behavior may be accidental, not intentional

Teach children 'please,' 'thank you' around the house

I need more help understanding how to interpret childish behavior. My problem is that I don't know how to react when my son, Chris, annoys me. I'm sure there are many minor infractions that a parent should just ignore or overlook. At other times, immediate discipline is necessary. But I'm not sure I'll react in the right way on the spur of the moment.

Obviously, the first thing you have to do is determine Chris' intent, his feelings and his thoughts. Is there evidence that Chris is challenging your authority? The more blatant his defiance, the more critical it is to respond with decisiveness. But if he has simply behaved immaturely, or perhaps he's forgotten or made a mistake, you will want to be much more tolerant.

It is a very important distinction. In the first instance, the child knows he was wrong and is waiting to see what his parent will do about it; in the second, he has simply blundered into a situation he didn't plan.

Let me be specific. Suppose Chris is acting silly in the living room and falls into a table, breaking some expensive china cups and other trinkets. Or maybe he loses his books on the way home from school. These are acts of childish irresponsibility and should be handled as such Perhaps you will want to ignore what he did, or maybe you'll require him to work to pay for whatever he lost – depending on his age and level of maturity. However, these accidents and miscalculations do not represent direct challenges to authority. Since they aren't motivated by haughty defiance, they shouldn't result in serious reprimands or punishment.

On the other hand, when a child screams obscenities at his mother or stamps his foot and tells her to shut up, something very different is going on. He has moved into the realm of willful defiance. As the words imply, it is a deliberate act of disobedience that occurs when the child knows what his parents want but he clenches his fists, digs in his heels and prepares for battle.

It is a refusal to accept parental leadership, such as running when called, or disobeying and then perhaps lying about it. When this kind of nose-to-nose confrontation occurs between generations, parental leadership is on the line. It is not time for quiet discussions about the virtues of obedience. It is not the occasion for bribes or bargaining or promises. Nor is it wise to wait until dad comes home from work to handle the misbehavior.

You have drawn a line in the dirt, and Chris has placed his cute little toe across it. Who is going to win? Who has the most courage? Who is in charge here? Those are the questions he is asking, and it is vital that you answer them for him.

If you equivocate at that moment, he will precipitate other battles designed to ask them again and again. That's just the way a strong-willed child thinks. It is the ultimate paradox of childhood that youngsters want to be led but insist that their parents earn the right to lead them.

In summary, when misbehavior occurs, your obligation is to look first at the issue of intent, and second, at the issue of respect. From your interpretation of these two attitudes, you should know instantly how to respond.

Do you think a child should be required to say "thank you" and "please" around the house?

I sure do. Requiring these phrases is one method of reminding the child that his is not a "gimme-gimme" world. Even though his parents are cooking for him and buying for him and giving to him, he must assume a few attitudinal responsibilities in return. Appreciation must be taught, and this instructional process begins with fundamental politeness at home.

Free Wheelchair Mission continues to change lives Sponsors needed to get wheelchairs to Mexico

By JONATHAN BUTZ The Las Cruces Bulletin

For a little more than a year, Las Cruces has been collaborating with the Free Wheelchair Mission, a nonprofit organization that distributes free wheelchairs to the disabled in need throughout developing nations. After much success, FWM is asking for the continued help of the community to get a shipment of wheelchairs distributed in Mexico.

FWM President and Founder Don Schoendorfer visited Las Cruces, Friday, Aug. 21, for a luncheon at the New Mexico Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum, where he thanked local supporters and urged that efforts continue in making mobility a reality for the underprivileged in Mexico.

The program already has had enormous local success, which allowed for the purchase of a container 550 chairs ready to be shipped from China. After raising more than $50,000 in the last 18 months, Las Cruces has been established as a qualified distribution partner of FWM, with a goal of delivering 1,100 wheelchairs to recipients in Mexico over the next two years.

Local FWM advocates Dennis Prickett and Erlinda Portillo said they were confident that bringing the chairs to Las Cruces is an obtainable goal.

"Our proximity to Mexico is an opportunity to step up and help those in need," Prickett said.

Developing an idea

Schoendorfer's famous chair was first conceived when he witnessed a disabled woman in Morocco crawling through the streets because she didn't have a wheelchair. With a degree from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Schoendorfer combined his compassion, knowledge and natural engineering talent to design and construct a chair that was affordable and durable.

Made from a resin lawn chair. a custom steel frame and mountain bike tires, Schoendorfer's chair has changed the lives of almost 400,000 immobile people in 70 countries.

Two factories in Shanghai, China, produce the chair parts. Once the parts are packed and ready for shipment, a freight ship hauls them to their destination. This is where FWM needs the help of the local community, Schoendorfer and Prickett said.

The organization has pur-chased a container of 550 chairs ready to be shipped to Las Cruces in October, but FWM needs the help of local sponsors to cover the customs and inland shipping expenses. Once the chairs make it to Las Cruces, they will be prepared for distribution throughout Mexico. On behalf of the Las Cruces effort, Sierra Vista Community Church was the nonprofit distribution partner applicant to FWM and is the consignee of the shipment.

We have people who are willing to participate, it's really just the challenge of raising awareness and getting the word out to the community," Prickett said.

Developing the plan

Assembling the chairs, Prick-ett said, will be the easiest part of the process. He said with the help of youth, student and adult organizations, churches and businesses, FWM will be able to set up specific dates on which volunteers can gather and assemble the chairs.

Earlier in the year, local Cub Scouts, Pack 179, contributed to the cause by assembling chairs and in 2008 Las Crucens were first introduced to FWM through its Mobility in Motion tour, where they were able to build chairs at Young Park.

The biggest challenges the organization faces are covering the shipping costs and making connections in Mexico, Prickett said.

To help its cause, FWM already has two local fund-raising events scheduled in 2010. On Saturday, Feb 13, FWM will host Dancing with Heart to Help Lift Lives, a Valentine's dance, which will help raise the needed funds to get the chairs into Mexico. FWM will host its second annual Fajita Fiesta in the Mesilla Plaza, which is tentatively scheduled for June 12.

Portillo said FWM needs volunteers to help with project coordination, event planning, event activities, wheelchair assembly days, establishing Mexican contacts, in addition to distribution in Mexico.

Become a sponsor

A number of sponsorship opportunities are available, including a Signature Sponsor-ship of $5,129, a Fajita Fiesta Sponsorship of $1,500, a Catering Sponsorship of $500 or a General Sponsorship of $500, $300 or $150. Based on sponsorship type, businesses and organizations will have an option of many different amenities, one of which will allow for logos to be printed on the backs of FWM's sample chairs.

Prickett said organizing local help holds great benefits to the community as a whole.

"I think it offers a continued opportunity for the community, not to mention the impact we have on other people's lives," Prickett said.

Schoendorfer said he was thrilled to be able to meet with members of the community and encouraged them in their efforts. He said organizing on a smallscale level is most effective.

"This is the way to do it – through grass roots and local efforts. It's amazing how much people can do," Schoendorfer said.

A new design

Despite FWM's immense success, Schoendorfer has not stopped improving his signature wheelchair. He said a new chair design is in the works, which will come in three different adjustable sizes and can be fitted to the recipient's specific needs. He said he wanted to make a chair that was easier for children to use. He plans to launch the new chair design in October in Peru, where he hopes to test and fine-tune the new chair's abilities.

Schoendorfer said he has a strong belief in helping others and is inspired every time he sees how drastically a person's life can change when introduced to the chair. He also said FWM's goals are not only a beneficial experience for chair recipients, but for the people contributing their time and service as well.

"It's as important for Americans to realize that there are people like this out there in need,' Schoendorfer said. "We should realize the blessings we have here in America and use those blessings to help our brothers and sisters around the world."

Those interested in volunteering may call Prickett at 525-2450, while anyone interested in event sponsorship may contact Portillo at 647-3441.

Campaign fights senior malnutrition

Research shows family caregivers often overwhelmed

By JONATHAN BUTZ The Las Cruces Bulletin

Most children grow up constantly depending on their parents for love, shelter and nutrition, but as many of those children grow into adults, their parents also grow older, which can make for a trying and extremely emotional experience for everyone involved. At some point, seniors reach a stage where they need additional support with their everyday lives and their adult children are often the people to step in and below to step in and help. To help ease the stress on family caregivers, Home Instead Senior Care has launched a campaign called "Cooking Under Pressure," which offers information and resources to family caregivers who cook for their senior loved ones.

In a study conducted by Home Instead, in conjunction with The Boomer Project, 1,279 U.S. adult caregivers, ages 35-62, were interviewed online to find out how providing care for senior loved ones affects their lives. The research found that almost 83 percent of family caregivers in the U.S. help with their senior's groceries or other errands, while 65 percent assist with meal preparation. Additionally, 67 percent of people surveyed said the additional need for care and meal preparation has made their lives "extremely stressful."

Jan Wimsatt, franchise owner of the Las Cruces Home Instead office, 2801 Missouri Ave., Suite 35, said senior nutrition is "one of the first things to fall through the cracks," while caring for seniors. Because of medication, illnesses, memory problems and physical constraints, Wimsatt said proper senior nutrition is especially tough to maintain. Additionally, if a senior lives alone, or has recently lost a spouse, friend or loved one, depression can also be a deterrent to proper senior nutrition Missouri Ave., Suite 7 (Bonita Plaza) 575-521-8500 Home Instead partnered with the University of Maryland and Duke Diet and Fitness Center to create the campaign, a partnership that Wimsatt said aims to change mealtime for seniors into a healthy experience. Dr. Nadine Sahyoun, associate professor of Nutrition and Food Science at the University of Maryland and Elisabetta Politi, RD, MPH, CDE, nutrition director at Duke Diet and Fitness Center contributed their expertise to the program.

Family caregivers will be able to find useful information through the program's website, www.foodsforseniors.com, including advice on preparing meals for seniors, senior shopping tips and recipes designed specifically for seniors. Wimsatt said it's sometimes difficult to determine whether a senior's diet is in need of a change, mainly because of the transitional dynamics between adult children and their parents. "In most cases, when an adult child

"In most cases, when an adult child calls their parent to check up on them, the answer is always 'I'm fine,' but sometimes it's not fine," Wimsatt said.

Children usually grow up under the care of their parents, but when the roles of parent and child are reversed, Wimsatt said, it can make for a challenging transition. Wimsatt said it is important to sit down and "have the talk" with senior loved ones as soon as the need for additional support becomes evident and before a crisis occurs. She said effective communication with a senior loved one is one of the best ways to ease the transition process.

"Give assistance that leaves the parent with the dignity and respect they deserve," Wimsatt said.

Due to busy schedules and a senior's reluctance to ask for help, it may be easy to miss the signs of poor nutrition. What are the most common warning signs seniors may not be eating properly? Cooking Under Pressure offers the following symptoms of malnutrition:

Loss of appetite – If your senior has always been a hearty eater but no longer eats as he or she used to, it's time to find out why. Underlying illness could be the root cause.

Little to no interest in eating out – If your loved one has always loved eating out at a favorite restaurant but no longer shows interest, dig deeper to determine the problem.

Depression – Change in appetite is a classic sign of depression. Be sure to follow up with a physician if you suspect depression may be a problem.

Sudden weight fluctuation – A weight change – losing or gaining 10 pounds in six months – is another sign that something could be amiss.

Expired or spoiled food – Check the refrigerator for expired or spoiled food. Seniors could be saving food until it's no longer safe. Make sure that all food is labeled, with the date, in large letters and numbers.

the date, in large letters and numbers. Skin tone – Observe your senior's skin tone. If she is eating properly, her skin should look healthy and wellhydrated.

Lethargy - If your loved one has regularly been active and Cognitive problems – Seniors who live alone might forget to eat. Dementia and cognitive problems can lead to nutritional deficiencies. Quick intervention is vital.

More than three medications – Medication can influence both appetite and weight. Check with your senior's doctor to find out if his medications could be the culprit.

A recent illness – Illness or a hospital stay could make a senior stop eating. Keep tabs on your loved one's recovery, making sure she has reliable help at home.

In addition to resources available through "Cooking Under Pressure," Wimsatt said Home Instead Senior Care is available for seniors in need of additional assistance, including companionship, meal preparation, light housekeeping, medication reminders, shopping, errands, Alzheimer's care and more.

"Our mission is to help seniors stay as independent as possible with dignity and safety," Wimsatt said.

Local nutritionist works to give back Aqua Reef to provide meals for needy

By JONATHAN BUTZ

Healthy, gourmet food at a fancy restaurant might seem out of reach to a struggling family, especially when times are tough and the economy is slow. But Aqua Reef owner Tatsuya Miyazaki believes high-scale dining is something everybody should be able to experience, even if finances don't allow.

In efforts to help families in need and to beat hunger in Las Cruces, Miyazaki has established the "We Care Program," which will provide a free meal from Aqua Reef, 900 S. Telshor Blvd., Suite B, for an entire family in need every week.

"When I created Aqua Reef in 2008, I wanted my customers to feel swept away to an exotic place to enjoy their favorite dishes from around the world," Miyazaki said. "This is also important for people in need to experience these wonderful, healthy meals.

Miyazaki has called Las Cruces home for more than 25 years and said he loves the people and culture. As a leading culinary figure in the community, Miyazaki also works as the director of Food and Nutrition Services at MountainView Regional Medical Center and said giving back to the community is one of his biggest priorities.

Additionally, he was a chef instructor at the prestigious Le Cordon Bleu Col-lege of Culinary Arts in Las Vegas, Nev., then served as director of product development for six restaurants around the world, including Brazil, Germany, Taiwan and three in Japan.

"Las Cruces has been supportive and good to me for over 25 years and I am proud to give something back in a time of need. Food has been my passion in life and I enjoy sharing my creations," Miyazaki said

The passion Miyazaki has is immediately evident on first entrance to Aqua Reef. The restaurant, which specializes in Euro-Asian cuisine, features an elegant, worldly setting, complete with a floating, self-serve sushi bar and an extensive menu that ranges from dim sum and sushi, to tapas.

Already the restaurant has won numerous readers choice awards including Best Asian Food, Best Restaurant Service and Most Romantic, among others.

Miyazaki said he is excited to share his restaurant and food with people who, otherwise, might not be able to have such a dining experience. He said the recent economic slump was one of the main reasons he decided to start the program.

"During the days when the economy was worst, I asked myself how I could help those in need and this was the way I felt I could most effectively share my blessings,' Miyazaki said.

The program works on a nomination basis and Miyazaki said he plans to sponsor the program's first family on Sept. 1. Anyone in the community can nominate a family living in one household and Aqua Reef will choose a nominated family based on need. Miyazaki said he hopes to help those who are struggling due to a job loss, health reasons or family circumstances. In addition to the free meal, Miyazaki encourages the community to donate canned and dry goods to give to participating families. "Each week, our executive committee will meet to review the nominations. We will then contact the chosen family and they can pick up their meal, or we will take the food to them," Miyazaki said.

Since the program is new, Miyazaki said he is still trying to get the word out. He said others can help by word of mouth and by nominating families. He thinks there is a huge need for such programs in Las Cruces. He said it may even be a possibility in the future to collaborate with other local restau-rants and provide for even more families. For now, Miyazaki said he wants to do the best he can, helping one family at a time.

"We will offer the families a variety of food from around the world, the same food we offer at Aqua Reef. It will be a healthy and flavorful, balanced meal," Miyazaki said. "I will work with my chefs to create something special each week.

Anyone interested in nominating a family may download a nomination sheet at www.aqua-reef.com, or call any of the restaurant managers at 522-7333.

First MammoSite performed at MMC Ikard cancer center

The current standard for treating patients following a lumpectomy is whole-breast radiation treatment. MammoSite is a partial-breast irradiation procedure that treats only the tissue directly around the removed cancer, eliminating much of the healthy tissue being exposed to radiation. MammoSite is a highdose radiation treatment that requires two treatments a day for only five days, much shorter than the one treatment a day for six weeks that is standard for whole-breast radiation treatment.

'MammoSite gives women another option in breast-conserving treatment,' said Dr. Cherie Hayostek, Chief Radia-tion Oncologist at Ikard. "In the past, women who live farther away might have declined treatment, or gotten a mastectomy, because traveling everyday for six weeks was too difficult for them.

During the lumpectomy, the surgeon will insert a fluid-filled balloon where the lump is removed. The balloon is connected to a catheter, or hollow tube. A small portion of the catheter remains outside the breast, secured to a cushioned gauze pad to prevent movement. During treatment, this catheter is connected to a High-Dose Rate Brachy Therapy Machine that inserts a radioactive seed into the balloon for five minutes. The seed will give radia-tion therapy to about one centimeter of tissue around the lumpectomy site. The entire process takes about half an hour.

Radiation treatment is required after a lumpectomy to destroy any microscopic cancer that may be left in the breast tissue surrounding the lump. With radiation therapy, the rate of recurrence in the breast drops from 30 to 40 percent chance, to less than a 5 percent chance.

Both the surgeon and the oncologist must go through MammoSite training. The staff of Ikard also participated in online training courses.

Only selected patients are eligible for the MammoSite procedure, based on age, tumor size and other indicators. Ikard follows the criteria set forth by the American Society for Therapeutic Radiology and Oncology (ASTRO).

Gov promises bright future for Las Cruces

South no longer state's 'backwater'

By TODD G. DICKSON

There was a time when southern New Mexico was considered to be the state's "backwater," Gov. Bill Richardson said at the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce Quarterly Luncheon Thursday, Aug. 20.

But that notion is dissipating, he said, as Las Cruces continues to be recognized nationally as a great place to retire and as New Mexico State University keeps getting high rankings as a good educational value, as a top engineering school and as one of the most veteran-friendly campuses in the United States.

NMSU's new aerospace engineering program complements the space orgineering being built 45 miles north of Las Cruces and once Spaceport America is fully operational and attracts more users, the region will be at the forefront of a new industry, Richardson said.

"Commercial space is here to stay," he said. "You laugh a little bit, but this is the future."

Richardson said the state wisely invested in building the $198 million spaceport when state coffers were flush from high oil and gas revenues. That investment will pay off in hundreds – if not thousands – of jobs in southern New Mexico, he said.

Richardson acknowledged that skepticism remains in Doña Ana County as evidenced by the slim margin of voter approval for a gross receipts tax increase to support constructing the spaceport. It may take 10 years for the area to see the jobs, he said, but they will come as the private aerospace industry presents new opportunities for job creation. To make this really happen, quality education needs to reach down from the university and community college systems to the schools, Richardson said. While the state is facing a shortfall, the governor promised to do everything he could to spare education cuts and praised the region's resourcefulness in its efforts such as the new joint effort with NMSU, Las Cruces Public Schools and Doña Ana Community College, which is creating the state's first comprehensive early college high school to be located at the Arrowhead Center.

Imports dominate clunker sales

Domestics are top 10 among junked cars

By GABRIEL VASQUEZ The Las Cruces Bulletin

The Cash for Clunkers program undoubtedly increased traffic at dealer showrooms, manufacturer web sites and local car lots. But did it substantially help Americans and American automakers?

According to the latest numbers releasedby the U.S Transportation Department, eight of the top-10 cars sold as part of the clunkers program were imports. Toyota Motor Corp. topped overall sales, account-ing for 19.2 percent of cars sold. Fifty-nine percent of vehicles bought with clunkers cash were foreign.

The top-two sellers were the Toyota Corolla and Honda Civic, both imports. Ford Motor Co.'s Focus and Escape were the only American cars in the running.

"The Cash for Clunkers program disproportionately helped foreign brand cars," said Chris Erickson, professor of econom-ics at New Mexico State University. "But it did also help U.S. auto employees, regardless of who they work for."

As of 7 a.m. Friday, Aug. 21, dealers had submitted 489,269 vouchers for reimbursement to the tune of $2.04 billion. The Cars Allowance Rebate System (Cash for Clunkers) ended Monday, Aug. 24. Karl Brauer of Edmunds.com, famous for its "True Market Value" pricing tools, said the reason for higher import sales was simple - the program favored "green" cars, a segment of the market in which American car companies have yet to compete. "Historically, foreign cars have been more reliable and their fleets have been more fuel efficient," said Ken Martin, NMSU economics professor. "Detroit has been late to get on the fuel-efficient bandwagon, primarily because trucks and SUVs earn more money."

Martin said Detroit, and particularly Ford Motor Co., is getting better at both quality and fuel efficiency. He added that foreign carmakers control the majority of the U.S. market because motorists in America have long recognized the value and quality of foreign brand automobiles, a notion that's hard to shake, even as American cars become more reliable and fuel-efficient.

Chile harvest yields promising

Dry weather halted diseases

By MARVIN TESSNEER

The Mesilla Valley chile crop is promising good yields, but the persistent hot weather could be changing the harvest schedule, according to Stephanie Walker, New Mexico State University Extension vegetable specialist.

The hot, dry weather is causing the green chile pods to mature faster than normal, she explained.

"If people want to put up green chile, they should buy the chile early before the pods turn red and lose that green chile quality," she said. "We also haven't had heavy rains this summer, so we don't have serious problems with chile wilt."

Biad Chili Products producers started harvesting green chile pods a couple of weeks ago, and Chris Biad reported good yields and a low disease-incident rate. The company is selling roasted and frozen green pods at its plant south of Mesilla Park.

"The yields look pretty good," Biad said. "We don't have the exact tonnage yet, but it looks like we should have the highest yield that we've had the last few years."

His producers are harvesting more than 200 combined acres of the improved Big Jim Heritage and 6-4 Heritage chile varieties for before the current recession, higher quality and fuel efficiency became even more important," Martin said. "I think American car companies now 'get it' with respect to fuel efficiency, but it's been a painful process for them."

The only Detroit-made vehicles in the Transportation Department's top-10 most sold with clunker cash list are the Ford Focus and the Ford Escape, which came in at No.3 and

No. 8, respectively. To increase competition, Detroit must build cars that show up with a lot of "green dots" on consumer reports ratings, Martin said.

"(American manufacturers) should build quality cars that are fuel efficient at an affordable price," he added.

Gerson Goldberg, an NMSU professor of finance who owned and operated two General Motors dealerships in Connecticut for 17 years, said he's not sure how effective the program has been and how it will affect American auto manufacturers.

'Certainly, there are people who held off normally scheduled purchases until the promotion was in effect, and certainly there are people who purchased earlier than they would have because of the program," he said. "Both distort the large sales numbers being reported. I don't think it will change the long-term sales rate."

Local appeal

Lou Sisbarro, owner of several local dealerships, said he sold more Volkswagens than any other brand under the clunker program. "One of the biggest problems was that we didn't have enough different models," he said. "We ran out. Both GM and Chrysler were going through bankruptcy and during that period of time all the factories were turned down. We had no new cars – we had our old inventory, and that was it." Sisbarro said his team sold 51 cars as part of the pro-gram, and that "some people whose cars didn't qualify as clunkers ended up buying one anyway." He said he spent about $200,000 out-of-pocket for the

The latest data shows an average 15.8 mpg fuel economy on trade-ins and 25 mpg on the new, replacement vehicles – an increase of 9.2 mpg. So far, 84 percent of trade-ins under the program are trucks and 59 percent of vehicle purchases are cars.

Toyota vehicles accounted for 19.2 percent of the 489,269 sales recorded through Friday, Aug. 21, while General Motors had the second spot at 17.7 percent. Imports accounted for more than half of all new car sales.

Goldberg said foreign manufacturers who assemble cars in the U.S. do just that, import parts so they can be considered foreign, and in turn have lower manufacturing costs, which results in lower prices at the dealer.

"In spite of substantial improvement in quality of American cars, they still are faced with higher manufacturing costs," he continued. "This is one of the reasons GM and Chrysler needed a taxpayer bailout. They can build all the trucks and SUVs Americans want, but in order to do that, they must build overly-expensive small cars at a loss.

clunker sales, but expects the government to "wake up and get their act in line" and repay him soon.

"They probably should have let another company handle it rather than the federal government," he said "I don't know when we will get paid, but I'm sure we will.'

Overall, Sisbarro said he was satisfied with the initiative.

"It really was a wonderful pro-gram," he said. "It provided some stimulus for the market, a stimulus I hope continues. Sales wise, the month of August is going to be the best month we've had in about a year."

Small cars, big problems

"One big reason that cars built by foreign manufacturers have enjoyed success over time and especially under the (clunkers) program is the extended effect of Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE) stan-dards," Goldberg said. CAFE standards, first enacted by Congress in 1975, are federal regulations intended to improve the average fuel economy of cars and light trucks sold in the United States.

The most recent version of CAFE passed in 2007 no longer grants exemptions to light trucks classified as SUVs or passenger vans unless they meet certain weight requirements. "There are different requirements for cars built here and those built overseas," Goldberg said. "Even if the car is assembled here, as many of the foreign manufacturers do, if it has 26 percent or more in foreign made parts, it's considered part of the foreign fleet."

the first year as a commercial crop. The two heritage varieties were improved by NMSU chile breeder Paul Bosland, who has brought them back to their original quality and yields. The Biad plant also is processing medium-pungent Joe Parker green pods. Doña Ana County Extension horticulturist Jeffrey Anderson also had a positive report, good yields and low plant disease incident rate with alfalfa mosaic wilt, tomato spotted wilt virus that is spread by aphids from alfalfa and desert weeds and some chile wilt fungus.

"If farmers have heavy, dense soil and they irrigate too much, that can bring on the fungus,"

Anderson said. While checking chile fields, Anderson toured the Ronnie Franzoy jalapeño field near Hatch, which he described as "beautiful."

"They were trying out a new Israeli green chile harvester, which is very important here," Anderson said. "Not only does it replace hand labor, which is very expensive, but green chile pods are very tender, and we need a green chile harvester that can pick chile pods without bruising them. Harvesting red chile is easier because the pods are dry and don't bruise so easily." Gene Baca, New Mexico Chile Association presi-dent, the early harvest indicates an increase in the state chile production.

"Acreage increased last year for the first time in 15 years," he said. "We don't have any numbers for this year yet, but the crop looks very good.'

His latest state chile figures are:

2008 - 12,300 acres planted; 11,100 harvested

2007 - 12,000 acres planted; 10,000 harvested "We are testing three types of harvesting machines for harvesting green chile this year," Baca also said. "And the initial results are looking good."

He added that consumers can make the difference in chile retailing. "The NMCA is trying to bring awareness to the decline of New Mexcio chile and is asking consumers to ask for New Mexico chile from grocers, processors and restaurants," Baca said.

Baca also is a vice president with Bueno Foods.

A solution to the insurance quandary

Follow my advice and all will be well

The world is full of problems, and I have ideas to fix many of them, if only people would listen. Among the issues for which I have a solution is health insurance.

Estimates vary, but a good guess as to the number of uninsured is about 46 million, or 16 percent of the U.S. population. Some of these are people who for one reason or another don't qualify for insurance. Some are people who can't afford insurance - too rich to qualify for Medicaid and too poor to afford premiums. But also, some of the uninsured are people who just don't want to buy insurance. Often, these are the so-called "invisibles," usually in their 20s and 30s, who don't think they need medical insurance. After all, they are young and healthy. We elderly, on the other hand, want these invisibles included in our health insurance pool since spreading costs over more healthy people reduces the average cost to the pool as a whole. Of course, at some future date, today's invisibles will be elderly and will benefit from forcing their children into the pool. Thus, a single insurance pool funded by taxes or mandated premiums provides affordable insurance for all.

A single insurance pool also solves another problem. As medical science advances, people will have increasing knowledge about their health risks. The good news is this knowledge will allow for improved medical care, with the promise of longer, healthier lives. The bad news is that pre-existing conditions will become an increasingly difficult problem.

It is just not possible in a voluntary market for pre-existing conditions to be insured. In a phe-nomenon called adverse selection, people with pre-existing conditions will systematically buy insurance, increasing the average cost of providing insurance.

Insurance companies will have to increase premiums, thereby pricing healthy people out of the pool. In the extreme, the insurance market can breakdown completely. But if everyone is forced into a single insurance pool, pre-existing conditions aren't an issue, as the healthy and sick are forced into the pool without regard to pre-existing conditions, so adverse selection is not an issue.

So, the single national insurance pool is the solution, right? Well, not so fast. This is America, and forcing people to purchase insurance they don't want strikes me as un-American. National insurance impinges on personal liberty too much.

I propose a compromise. All children 18 and younger should be covered by insurance, regardless of their parents' income. Second, lower the age of eligibility for Medicare to, say, 55 years old. As people age, pre-existing conditions become more relevant and lowering the age of Medicare eligibility will cover many who would otherwise have difficulty qualifying for insurance. Allow those in the middle – the "invisibles" – to purchase or not purchase medical insurance as they desire.

My proposal is not the lowest cost proposal, but one that balances freedom of choice with the need to cover an increasingly well-diagnosed population. Now, just do what I say and the health insurance problem is solved.

State of the Economy

Home sales increase nationwi

Data shows local prices stabilizing

Recently, the National Association of Realtors (NAR) reported that for the first time in five years, existing-home sales across the country have increased for four months in a row.

According to the Aug. 21 report, July sales of existing single-family homes, townhomes and condominiums rose 7.2 percent over the number of sales reported in June, and 5 percent over the sales pace reported in July 2008. Prices? Well, that's another matter.

Prices? Well, that's another matter. Nationwide, the median existing-home price for all of the single-family homes, townhomes and condominiums sold in July was $178,400, which is 15.1 percent lower than in July 2008. NAR attributes the continuing decline in home prices to the sale of distressed properties, which typically sell for 15 to 20 percent less than traditional homes.

Locally, existing-home sales production numbers were mixed in July, according to an Aug. 21 printout culled from the Multiple Listing and Information Service (MLIS) arm of the Las Cruces Association of Realtors (LCAR). MLIS reported sales of existing homes, townhomes and condominiums booked during the seventh month of this year outpaced June sales by 9.7 percent but were down 10.6 percent from a year ago. The 94 sales booked in July represented the highest number of existing-home sales reported during the previous 12 months, however, exceeded only by the 104 sales reported in July of last year.

When it comes to local prices, MLIS reports that the median price of $162,500 posted for all of the Las Cruces area existing-homes, townhomes and condominiums sold in July represented a $10,000, or .006 percent, decline from June's median price of $172,500. July's median price was also about $12,500, or 6.7 percent, below July 2008's median price of $185,000.

National new-home sales statistics for July, which are supplied by the Census Bureau, had not been released by press time, but data from our local MLIS indicated that Las Cruces area new-home July sales production fell 37.5 percent below June's sales numbers and 47.9 percent below July 2008's production level.

Bucking the declining-price trend, the $160,492 median price of the Las Cruces area new-homes sold in July represented a $4,442 or 2.9 percent increase over the $156,050 median price posted in June. At the same time, July's median new-home sales price was $34,258, or 17.6 percent, lower than the $194,750 median price posted one year ago.

On the bright side, statistics indicate that local prices are beginning to stabilize. One positive indicator of the change is the decline in the size of our local home inventory – especially on the new-home side. As of Aug. 21, MLIS reported that there were a total of 232 Las Cruces area new-homes offered for sale. That's a 49-unit, or 17.4 percent, decline from the 281 units "on the shelf" in June and a 269-unit, or 53.6 percent, decline from the 501 units in inventory as of July

JENNA FROSCH I The Las Cruces Bulletin

2008. Our local existing-home inventory declined as well, but not as drastically as the new-home numbers.

Typically, as the inventory of available homes becomes smaller, demand begins to rise. That rise in demand often translates into higher sales prices, which may be one of the reasons new-home prices rose in July. Another important indicator of change is the list-price-to-sales-price ratio achieved by sellers of new and existing Las Cruces area homes.

According to MLIS, new-home sellers achieved 97.5 percent of asking prices in July, which exceeded by 1.1 percent the 96.2 percent reported in June was 1.7 percent over 95.8 percent reported in July 2008. The 1.7 percent increase puts around $2,700 additional dollars in the average sellers' pockets.

Will our local market follow the national trend and continue to improve? I'll have the answer for you in upcoming columns. In the meantime, I hope it won't be long until I ...

SBA increases contracting opportunities for minori

Federal officials to participate in more than 200 procurement events in the U.S.

The Obama Administration said Aug. 18 it was reaffirming its commitment to ensuring that minority-owned and small businesses, including women- and veteran-owned businesses, have greater access to federal government contracting opportunities.

Commerce Secretary Gary Locke and Small Business Administrator Karen Mills announced a government-wide plan that includes federal agency procurement officials holding or participating in more than 200 events over the next 90 days to share information on government contracting opportunities, including those available under the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act.

"Small and minority-owned businesses must play a significant role in our efforts to restore economic growth," said President Barack Obama in a press release. "Small businesses employ half of the nation's private sector workforce, create a large share of the nation's new jobs and introduce many groundbreaking ideas into the marketplace. It is essential that we provide our nation's small businesses with maximum practicable opportunity to participate in federal government contracting.

Obama further said that in order to better meet or exceed the goal of 23 percent of prime contracts going to small businesses, he has consulted with Vice President Joe Biden, Mills and Locke to lead a government-wide initiative to increase outreach.

"In these tough economic times, the Recovery Act is providing billions of dollars in opportunity and incentives to help businesses grow – and the president and I are committed to ensuring that small and minority-owned businesses are part of our economic recovery every step of the way," said Vice President Joe Biden in an SBA report. "By taking advantage of the expertise of an array of companies, we are going to be able to build a stronger, more secure foundation for long-term economic growth.'

As part of the Commerce-SBA initiative, over the next 90 days:

Federal agency procurement officials will hold or participate in more than 200 events to share information on contracting opportunities, including those available under the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act.

- SBA and Commerce will expand their outreach to fellow contracting officials across the federal government, passing along best practices for outreach and education to every agency to ensure they have the tools they need to meet their annual contracting goals. Locke and Mills will promote small - business contracting opportunities in remarks, events and discussions with small business groups across the country, including minority, women and veteran groups. Locke said, "Over the past 40 years, minority-owned businesses have grown from 300,000 to nearly 4 million today. Their success and the success of small American businesses are vital to our economic recovery." Beyond the next 90 days, Commerce and SBA will support, monitor and track the impact of these efforts going forward to help ensure the administration is maximizing opportunities for small businesses

Cultural awareness is key to international success Overlooking differences could be costly

By JERRY PACHECO Executive director of the International Business Accelerator

Courtesy of Finance New Mexico

New Mexicans are familiar with the stereotype about Mexican Americans and Hispanics - that people who have lived here for generations have the same tastes and preferences as recent arrivals from Mexico. But many of us are just as guilty of viewing Central and Latin American cultures as a homogeneous "Hispanic" mass, thus negating the rich diversity found in the customs and traditions of South and Central America

Such generalizations are lethal to those of us who do business across national borders. The culturally insensitive businessperson risks offending the very people he wants to please and overlooks opportunities to market to various subgroups.

One size doesn't fit all

The simple tortilla illustrates how different traditions can be within a larger cultural group.

On my first visit to Mexico, I was surprised to be served a small corn tortilla rather than a large flour tortilla like those found in northern New Mexico. My hosts stared when I tore the tortilla in half and put the remainder back in the tortilla container. When a member of this family later visited me in northern New Mexico, it was my turn to be surprised when he grabbed a whole tortilla and put it on his plate.

This experience revealed sharp cultural differences in tortillas - and tortilla protocol. In Mexico, people don't break tortillas in half and put the rest back in the container. Where I come from, the tortillas are larger and most people take only part of the disc.

I have returned to this early lesson in my travels throughout Mexico, Latin America and the U.S. Categorizing people by ethnicity, nationality, gender and age is useful when planning a marketing strategy, but the astute businessperson recognizes the limits of this perspective and works hard to understand and appeal to different target markets.

Know your world

A company planning to do business in another country should research not only the market but also the people and customs of that country or region - especially the customs associated with the product or service being marketed and the people whom the company wants to reach. That said, salespeople or representatives should graciously overlook gaffes committed by business associates from other countries or cultures, as there's a good chance your foreign associates are doing the same for you.

The International Business Accelerator can help New Mexican businesses and individuals with some of the challenges associated with taking their product or service into the global market. We can teach businesses about the export-import trade and offer access to our database of international trade leads and joint venture opportunities. Richardson said it's that kind of collaborative effort that marks recent progress in southern New Mexico, such as the construction of a convention center that is another NMSU collaboration – this one with the City of Las Cruces.

Southern New Mexico is fortunate to also have White Sands Missile Range and the NASA test facility north of Organ, which Richardson said residents who live don't always appreciate.

"I'm struck that somehow you don't value the great things you have here," he said. Richardson urged the business community to continue that spirit of collaboration to help educators fight problems like the state's high dropout rate.

Looming over Richardson's visit is the economic recession and its effect on the state government's money. A budgetary shortfall will force a special session in October and the governor insisted it's being caused by sluggish personal and corporate income tax – not government overspending or from the tax cuts he successfully championed at the start of his first term.

During his tenure, Richardson said he's been able to cut the state income tax and capital gains burdens in half, while attracting new business to the state through incentives, such as tax breaks for movie production companies.

Richardson promised to stand firm on not taking those tax cuts back. Nor will he let lawmakers kill off the tax incentives that have attracted new business opportunities to New Mexico, he said.

Richardson vowed to keep the proposed special session short and focused only on shoring up the budget. Based on a recent meeting with legislative leaders, Richardson said he is confident a bipartisan solution to the state budget can be reached because it is not an election year.

Though more than half of the state's budget goes to the schools and higher education, Richardson said he is urging lawmakers and state officials to look elsewhere for budget reductions. Cutting education funding would be "counterproductive," he said.

Meanwhile, southern New Mexico's agriculture continues to be the area's economic foundation and the area has thankfully been spared the violence along the U.S.-Mexico border, he said.

Before Richardson's speech, chamber board President John Hummer – who is also a state transportation commissioner – noted that work is beginning on a $36 million project to add another lane in both directions along I-10 between Las Cruces and El Paso.

During his speech, Richardson noted that the state is looking at creating a Rail Runner line between Las Cruces and El Paso.

Also, Hummer joined with Doña Ana Community College President Margie Huerta to recognize Patsy Duran for her work on The Bridge that evolved from the chamber's effort to help improve local education. After being active in the community for 30 years, Duran will be moving to Florida to be closer to family.

CFSNM says goodbye to one leader, welcomes another

Patsy Duran has dedicated 30 years to philanthropy and the community

NATIONAL

STANDARDS[®]

The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico has made significant strides in sustainability and fundraising in the past year thanks to a dedicated board of directors, community giving and leadership.

This year's annual gifts have more than doubled compared to the same time last year, deferred gifts have exceeded $4.5 million and the community foundation has established eight new endow ments

"This is a giving community. Even dur-ing a recession, people in the community are still giving," said Patsy Duran, the foundation's gift planning officer. "The community keeps proving they are eager to meet the needs and the community foundation is here to help with that." While the foundation's COMMUNITY knowledgeable board of directors will continue the mission of sustainability, they will say goodbye to Duran, who will be retiring to Florida with her husband Juan.

Duran has been instrumental in getting the foundation where it is now, starting as the founding executive director in 2000. Through the years, she worked to incorporate a large level of giving in the community among the foundation and its supporting organization the Healthcare Foundation of Southern New Mexico, by focusing on endowments, deferred gifts and estate planning.

Duran has dedicated 30 years of her life to philanthropy, starting at the New Mexico State University Foundation then moving on to the Memorial Medical Center Foundation, where she stayed for 12 years.

A year ago, the Board of directors asked Duran to position the foundation in two areas.

When I returned a year ago, the Board of directors gave me a clear direction to structure a campaign that would help nonprofits with short term emergencies and long-term sustainability through endowments," Duran said. "Another specific direction was to structure a Planned Giving Program, and because of community gifts, that program has been successful in 2009.

In April, the foundation kicked off the Nonprofit Economic Crises Campaign and a goal to raise $500,000 by Dec. 31 to benefit the 33 nonprofits with endowments. With each contribution, the CFSNM will designate 50 percent to an emergency fund for nonprofits with endowments and 50 percent will be desig-nated to a matching fund created to build the nonprofit endowments and their sustainability. The CFSNM also will continue educating families within southern New Mexico to create legacies, endowments FOUNDATION and donor advised funds, keeping money earned locally, Of Southern New Mexico helping locally – now with the help of new Executive Direc-tor Luan Wagner Burn.

Duran has spent con-siderable time with Burn, passing on viable information pertinent to the foundation.

"Luan has considerable expertise and experience to take this foundation to the next level," Duran said.

Burn will benefit from the guidance of a strong organization built by the Board of directors and Duran.

"She's a wonderful mentor and her historical knowledge of the community and the foundation is so valuable," Burn said. "She is leaving a legacy because of her commitment and dedication to the community."

Burn wants to continue the focus and passion Duran had for the foundation and the community, thinking about increased sustainability, greater levels of giving and even moving younger generations toward philanthropy, something always important to Duran.

Workers were busy laying bricks on the city's Regional Recreation & Aquatics Center Monday, Aug. 24, at the corner of Hadley Avenue and North Solano Drive. The new center will feature a therapeutic pool, leisure pool for swimming instruction, a play area, a three-lane lap pool, water slide and a zero-entry pool. The estimated completion date is May 2010, according to builder Jaynes Corp. of Albuquerque. The first phase of the project is expected to cost $13 million.

Incoming CFSNM Executive Director Luan Wagner Burn, left, replaces former director Patsy Duran, who will be retiring to Florida with her husband Juan.

For Duran, leaving will be bittersweet, but she is confident the foundation will become bigger and better every day.

"Luan is a true asset to our donors and our community as a whole. I have enjoyed spending time with her and I regret I won't be here longer to work with her," Duran said, acknowledging the foundation is composed of a strong group of leaders. "As I leave the foundation and community, I know I am leaving an exceptional and dedicated Board of directors, committed to the community and southern New Mexico.³

The Community Foundation of Southern New Mexico is a charitable resource linking donors with community needs. Founded in 2000, the CFSNM uses knowledge to help connect people who care with causes that matter. Donors are encouraged to inquire about donating to the Nonprofit Economic Crises Campaign. Call the CFSNM at 521-4794 or visit www.cfsnm.org for information about making a charitable contribution to your community or to see the nonprofit endowments within the foundation.

Las Crucens look to nutrition center for healthy advice

By GABRIEL VASQUEZ

Who knew wild Mediterranean oregano could help treat the common cold? Or that colloidal silver boosts the immune system. And first-milking colostrum? It's key to establishing healthy growth and strengthening the body's antimicrobial capabilities.

If this all sounds foreign - it's no surprise. Most visitors to the Vita-Man Nutrition Center, 1213 S. El Paseo Road, in the Brazito Plaza, come seeking answers.

We've ran this store as a family for years," said coowner Gary Schlothauer, who purchased the store in 1976 with wife Janet. The Schlothauers were ranchers prior to purchasing the shop.

Janet Schlothauer sold vitamins and supplements door-to-door in the '50s to pay for college, her husband said – a time when any "vitamin expert" was more of a "health nut" than an educator.

Now with a staff of seven - Janet and Cliff Schlothauer, Joan Thomas, J.D. Sands, Joan Thomas, Jim Adkisson and Hannah Scyrkels - the store is outfitted with nutritional consultants who are knowledgeable and ready to help.

Vita-Man has the most extensive selection of vitamins, minerals, enzymes and nutritional supplements that you can find in town," said Sands, who is an educational nutritional consultant. "People come from all over – Silver City, El Paso, Alamogordo – for our products. We also carry natural skin and hair care products and other things.

As the lone tenant remaining on a dreary stretch of Brazito Plaza, Sands said the store has come a long way since its humble beginnings in the mid-

'70s, and continues to change with the times.

"Like all family-owned businesses, we are seeing the effects of the economy," Sands said. "But we see an optimistic future, because we offer such a personalized service and free educational consultation. We have a special place here.³

Sands said the store's most popular products are magnesium and magnesium derivatives.

"Magnesium, along with most minerals, are almost completely gone from our soils and farm crops these days," Sands said. "We are such a mineral-deficient population that it has contributed to a large amount of disease." The most common ailment for Vita-Man visitors?

Digestive problems, Sands said.

"People often come in with problems related to acid reflux, gas, bloating and constipation," she continued. "That's where I do a lot of educational nutritional consulting to assist them in picking the right supplements or enzymes to help them with better digestion." Sands said the store has the largest selection of both systemic and digestive enzymes, which are helpful in various ways.

"In some cases, they can help with inflammatory conditions in your bones, joints, vascular system or anywhere in your body," she said. "Enzymes are some of our biggest sellers.'

During flu season, many flock to Vita-Man to seek alternative ways to treat their illness, Sands said.

"People want a natural way to take care of their colds," she said. "The best advice – grandma's advice – that I give to people, is wash your hands. It's the best way to stop some of these viruses. But we also offer other products to help treat colds and flu."

Sands said the most challenging part of her job is assisting people in picking the proper supplements, and making sure they do not interfere with their prescribed medicine or pre-existing health conditions.

"A lot of illness falls into the nutritional area, which many parents are not aware of," she said. "I enjoy working with parents and kids who come in with problems such as ADD or ADHD. Many of these children are deficient in things like fatty acids and can be helped tremendously by nutrition."

Athletes and the elderly also cross paths at the Vita-Man, who come in for different products but end up staying for the education and good conversation, Sands said. "We work in conjunction with doctors to make sure

Talking business with educational nutritional consultant J.D. Sands

What inspired you to go into business? Our owner Janet Schlothaeur was really into vitamins back in the '70s, so she decided to buy this business.

What is your business philosophy?

Our business philosophy here is simple – to serve the customer. We are people-oriented and serve our customers with personal assistance and a very knowledgeable staff.

Where do you see your business in five years? Like all family-owned businesses, we are suffering from the economy, but we see an optimistic future, because we offer such a personalized service and free educational consultation. We have a special place here.

What's your opinion of the Las Cruces business climate?

It's always been about even. The business community grows with the population, and that's always been stable.

What business would you like to see in Las Cruces?

I would like to see a restaurant that serves glutenfree, dairy-free and wheat-free foods. Because there are so many people in town with intolerances to these products, it would be nice to have a restaurant that serves this kind of food.

PROFILE Shirley Jaquez: Children's advocate and a parent's best friend

Jardin director is in the business of helping the needy

By GABRIEL VASQUEZ The Las Cruces Bulletin

Shirley Jaquez' life revolves around children. At work, children's voices, laughter and footsteps sometimes stomps - seem to follow her. At home, Jaquez' only granddaughter is nothing less than a handful. As the executive director of the only nonprofit in Las Cruces dedicated to helping homeless and near-homeless children and their families, Jaquez said she wouldn't have it any other way.

'It takes a special person to do this kind of work," she said. "The staff and I are here because we love the children. We know we're making a difference in their lives."

Jaquez has been in the business of helping children and their families for most of her professional career. First, she went to work with the New Mexico State Government Human Services Department Income Support Division. From there, she worked for the Department of Public Health, where she focused on community nutrition. She eventually became program manager, overseeing more than 60 employees.

"A planner position turned into a nutritionist position, which then turned into a program manager's position," she said. "At that point we were covering eight counties and thousands of people."

Many people are unaware that there are homeless children here.

> SHIRLEY JAQUEZ Jardin de los Niños

Jaquez, born in Española, N.M., grew up on a farm with her parents and five siblings. The farm had about 500 fruit trees, luscious gardens and "pets" that eventually made their way to the dinner table, she said.

We were pretty self-sufficient at that time," she said. "My mother was a stay-at-home mom and my dad worked at Los Alamos National Laboratory. It was a very good childhood."

Before becoming a social worker and children's advocate, "I just wanted to be a ballerina," Jaquez said with a laugh. "That was my dream.'

She said it was the mentorship of a high school teacher who taught her the value of helping others and helped spark her interest in what was then home economics, now family and consumer sciences.

Jaquez attended New Mexico State University and received a bachelor's degree of science in home economics and a master's degree in the same field, with a focus on food and nutrition.

"At one point, I had three jobs and was carrying 18 credits," she said. "It was tough, but I made the dean's list that year. The only time I saw daylight was when I was walking to and from classes.

In 2006, Jaquez joined Jardin de los Niños, and since then has helped ensure the future of the nonprofit's success in the community. She's made many changes - both internal and external - has helped lead innovative fundraising campaigns and has managed to get Jardin out of the red during one of the nation's toughest economic times.

"We have had lean financial times every year since Jardin opened in 1995," Jaquez said. "Typically, the (drought) period begins in April and extends through August. Sometimes it hits the media because we get so close to (bankruptcy), that we ourselves wonder if we can keep the services going.

Jaquez explained that Jardin not only helps children, but their parents as well.

"The children open the doors and receive services, but the real work begins with the parents," she said. "Children are helpless when they are in a homeless situation. Parents have to make the changes to sustain themselves.³

Jaquez said Jardin has several programs designed to help parents overcome the cycle of homelessness that can often last generations. "That's what keeps me working toward the goal of serving these children and making a better life for their parents," she said.

She said the public should be made more aware of the homeless and impoverished children living in Las Cruces

"Many people are unaware that there are homeless children here," she said. "They think a homeless person is an adult. Many of them are, but not all. "When that happens to a child, there are irreversible long-term effects to their health, well-being and ability to learn. At Jardin, we have 4-year-olds that don't know how to wash their hands or brush their teeth. Some that are not potty trained. The delays are numerous. We nurture these children and keep them safe.'

Jaquez said the fundraising efforts will continue, and Jardin will seek out new state and federal funding to ensure the center's success, but that grant funding in the past year had dramatically declined.

The general public has really responded to our plea," she said. "People don't know that homeless shelters get readily available funding, but places like us, the funding is never guaranteed."

On Wednesday, Aug. 26, Jaquez received the Soroptimist International of Las Cruces Ruby Award. The award is given every year to a woman in the community who works to improve the lives of women and girls through their personal and professional activities.

Jaquez graciously accepted the award with tears in her eyes.

"This means a lot to me," she said. "I am very honored that you chose me.'

Alzheimer's affects the whole family

Consider a bracelet with a GPS system

In our community, attention has been recently brought to the topic of Alzheim-er's disease. A gentleman who had Alzheimer's was the subject of a massive search that ended tragically near Roadrunner Parkway. Sadly, this was followed by another search for an El Paso man with Alzheimer's whose body was found lying near the railroad tracks. These are verv unfortunate tragedies that should not happen in any community. Alzheimer's is most common in those age 85 and above. Statistics show the disease affects nearly half of people in that age group. Of ages 65 to 74, about 5 percent have the disease. It is the most common form of dementia and can have a serious effect on the ability to perform daily living functions. Those with Alzheimer's suffer a decline in memory and mental capacity due to the degeneration of healthy brain tissue.

There is no cure for Alzheimer's, but with treatment, quality of life can improve. The beginning stages may start with hardly-noticeable memory loss, but can lead to irreversible memory loss and confusion. The disease can erase a person's ability to learn, remember and reason. There may be repetition in speech and severe short-term memory loss.

Those suffering from the disease may eventually put household objects in places that no logic can explain. With time, this may progress to forgetting even the names of family members.

Within the past year or two, I have been alerted by my wife of our neighbor walking down the street heading toward the city. I knew our neighbor had Alzheimer's, and observed that she never cost of this disease left her home unless she was with family. One time, I jumped in my car and drove to find her and financial cost can bring her back home. Luckily, she agreed, and I brought her back home to be managed with her grandkids, who hadn't noticed she slipped away.

Others are lucky enough to receive the care they need by qualified personnel in their own home.

One of the ways to help pay for these costs is through the purchase of a Long Term Care policy that can eliminate a great majority of the cost or at least help to minimize the out-of-pocket expense.

Another neighbor of mine, a professor at New Mexico State University, purchased such a policy for his mother, who also suffers from Alzheimer's. She and her family are now receiving the benefits from this purchase and the extra care she

How a lawyer will ease your mind

Robert L. Lovett Attorney at Law

I have represented thousands of clients over the years and one of the concerns I hear more often than not is I didn't want to hire a lawyer because I didn't want to sue anybody.

Clients do not want their case to drag out over time and they think hiring a lawyer means automatically that the lawyer is going to sue somebody. Nothing could be further from the truth. A personal injury lawyer invariably works on a contingent fee basis. This means your lawyer doesn't get paid until this case is resolved. This means two things for you as a client: your lawyer is basically working for free until your case settles and, more importantly, he wants the case resolved as soon as possible just like you do. A lawyer should not resolve your case until he is sure all your medical bills are paid and you know exactly what you are going to receive from the settlement.

The contingency fee system assures that you and your lawyer are working together to get your claim resolved as fairly and as quickly as possible. If you have any questions about your personal injury claim, please feel free to give me a call anytime.

'America's favorite comedian' visits LC World-famous ventriloquist Jeff Dunham to perform Sept. 2

BY JENNA FROSCH The Las Cruces Bulletin

From a grassroots marketing campaign that sparked the interest of millions of people worldwide, comedian Jeff Dunham will bring his famed show to the New Mexico State University Pan American Center at 7 p.m. Wednesday, Sept. 2.

The world-famous ventriloquist, armed with a plethora of characters – Walter the Grumpy Retiree, Bubba J. Peanut, Jose Jalapeño and Achmed the Dead Terrorist – will grace the stage as part of his most recent tour. In 2008, Dunham broke world records while becoming the best-selling live comedy attraction in the United States.

Dunham credits the success of he and his posse of sidekicks to "that sneaky kid inside of me that enjoys getting away with stuff that I really shouldn't be getting away with – I'm the little kid walking by the tiger cage putting a stick in it," according to an interview with Slate magazine.

"(The puppets are) saying outlandish things, but there's an innocence to it," he explains.

In the same Slate magazine article, Dunham was named "The Hardest-Working Hand in Show Business," and was poised to become one of the biggest names in comedy. Through numerous media blitzes, Dunham has created three DVD specials, including "Arguing With Myself," "Spark of Insanity" and "A Very Special Christmas Special." "Spark of Insanity" reached the No. 1 spot for a comedy DVD on Amazon.com by customers in 2008.

Not only has he dominated the Internet and DVD markets, he will soon pen his own as-yet-untitled memoir, which will include commentary from his posse of characters that he carries around in a large trunk as well as partner with iTunes, where he will enjoy his own exclusive channels.

The characters Dunham uses also carry their own brand of comedic genius – Walter's grumpy demeanor and take on the world's problems will have audiences doubled over with laughter while hitting the nail on the head with just about any given situation. Achmed the Dead Terrorist will also appear with his signature phrase, "I keel you" (I kill you).

However, Dunham's ties with NMSU don't end at the Sept. 2 performance. In October, Dunham will honor industry legend and local hero Barbara Hubbard (affectionately named "Mother Hubbard" by Bob Hope) with the Harry A. Peebles Award for her more than 30 years as executive director of the American Collegiate Showcase (ACTS) at the International Entertainment Buyers Association conference. ACTS is a nonprofit organization that raises scholarships for students seeking a career in performing arts. Dunham has named Hubbard as one of his mentors in the industry.

Tickets to the one-time performance are $30, $40 and $50, plus any applicable service charges, and can be purchased at the Pan American Center Box Office, by calling 646-1420, all Ticketmaster outlets, online at www.ticketmaster.com or by phone at 800-745-3000.

NMSU's Center for the Arts receives $100,000 Jerry and Connie Hines patrons of the arts

Local business owner Connie Hines has dedicated many of her volunteer hours during the last 10 years to the arts at New Mexico State University, including, along with her husband, Jerry, donating $100,000 to the Center for the Arts project.

"Art is a huge part of everyone's life. It's one of life's greatest pleasures," said Hines, who started dedicating her time to the arts at NMSU by serving on the College of Arts and Sciences Dean's Council for the Excellence in Arts and continuing with the Center for the Arts Leadership Committee.

"I have a passion for the arts and I wanted to see something developed for future generations," Hines said.

Hines, who has a fine arts degree from NMSU, owns Connie Hines Interior Design. She and her husband are involved with several area real estate and construction developments. It was through one of those developments that they were able to donate this gift.

"It is important for all of us to do what we can," Hines said of her gift. "We want to put together as much as we can to support this important effort at NMSU." Jerry Hines agreed this is an important Jerry Hines agreed this is an important project for the university as well as all of southern New Mexico.

"I'm not an artistic person, but I value the arts. They are an important part of a person's life," he said. NMSU's Center for the Arts will gather the university's scattered arts programs private funding. In November 2008, voters approved the bond initiative to secure the first $19 million. In its 2009 session, the New Mexico Legislature allocated another $5.5 million from its capital outlay fund. Private gifts and pledges from a variety of sources bring the total raised close to $26 million.

Construction on Phase I of the project is scheduled to begin in 2010. Phase I includes a Dance and Theatre Arts Performance Hall, which will be located at the corner of University Avenue and Espina Street. In addition to the 500-seat auditorium, there will be classrooms and rehearsal space, state-of-the-art sound and lighting and fly storage space.

For more information on ways to support the Center for the Arts, contact Jill Grammer, director of development for the Center for the Arts, at jgrammer@nmsu. edu, 646-3587 or 800-342-6678. Gifts also can be made online at http://giving.nmsu. edu.

Diven sculpture graces Mesilla home

Artist Bob Diven created this "Bean Sprout" outdoor sculpture for the Mesilla home of State Rep. Joni Gutierrez and Lowell Catlett. The piece is handformed silicon bronze and stainless steel, measuring 6 feet from the tip of the sprout to the bottom of the bean. It rests on a 7-foot cast concrete columnar base. The piece is visible from the street near the couple's house.

Chamber Jazz Ensemble performs Aug. 30

St. Paul's United Methodist Church, along with the New Mexico State University Department of Music, will kick off the beginning of the 2009-10 edition of their concert series with a performance by the Chamber Jazz Ensemble of Las Cruces at 2 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 30, at 225 W. Griggs Ave.

W. Griggs Ave. The series, titled "St. Paul's Sunday Afternoons," features one concert per month through May 2010. The concert, "An Afternoon of Jazz," will be in the sanctuary at St. Paul's and will feature Curt Warren on guitar, Jim Shearer on tuba, Allan Kaplan on trombone and Eric Unsworth on bass. Admission is free to the public, although a love offering for the performers will be accepted.

The Chamber Jazz Ensemble of Las Cruces is made up of musicians from the El Paso and Las Cruces areas. All the members are accomplished jazz musicians as well as college professors.

Kaplan and Shearer are both faculty members at NMSU. Both hold terminal degrees in music performance from the Manhattan School of Music and the Eastman School of Music, respectively.

Warren teaches jazz guitar and jazz history at the University of Texas at El Paso. He is a former member of the Navy's Jazz Commodores and has performed with such jazz greats as Bill Watrous, Herb Ellis, Carl Fontana, Bud Shank and Eddie Harris.

Unsworth teaches string bass at UTEP and is a "first-call" player for numerous recording artists.

The members of the Chamber Jazz Ensemble have performed together in many different ensemble configurations over the past 17 years. This current quartet was put together for The Kennedy Center Jazz Ambassadors Program in 2001. All the members agree that it has been a very enjoyable challenge to "pare down" this music to the bare bones. There is no drummer, piano or big horn section.

As Shearer put it, "This is live music without a net. All four of us perform several different roles in the group."

Kaplan said, "Usually, when we play jazz jobs each player gets to take a break now and then, but with this group, as soon as your solo ends, it is time to comp for the next player." The members of the Chamber Jazz Ensemble are entertaining educators as well as consummate performers.

Director of the concert series at St. Paul's is Douglas Weeks, minister of music at St. Paul's.

DAAC Cultural Series to feature world-class entertainment in LC

Luca Ciarla first in the line-up

By JENNA FROSCH The Las Cruces Bulletin

Since its reopening in 2005, the Rio Grande Theatre has seen numerous performances by local artists and traveling acts - but never before has a series been created quite like the new, one-of-a-kind Cultural Series to kick off with a performance by Luca Ciarla on Friday, Oct. 9. The Doña Ana Arts Council announced their newest endeavor at a press conference Wednesday, Aug. 19, and said use of the Rio Grande Theatre has been growing throughout the last two years. "This is a remarkable testimony that after only four months in office, we are able to launch a cultural series of this caliber," said Larry Broxton, executive director of the DAAC, who took the position just four months ago.

The series will feature Italian violin virtuoso Luca Ciarla at 7:30 p.m. Friday, Oct. 9; Grammy-nominated Latin singer Perla Bertalla at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 21; critically-acclaimed concert pianist Frederick Moyer at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Jan. 19, 2010; internationally renowned con-cert pianist Teresa Walters at 7:30 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 20, 2010; the world-famous Glenn Miller Orchestra at 7 p.m. Monday, March 1, 2010; and the pre-eminent vocal ensemble, The Vienna Boys Choir at 6 and 8 p.m. Tuesday, March 23, 2010. There will also be several "wildcard" performances by other artists of the same caliber throughout the season that were added once the series had been launched.

"We're thrilled to be able to finally offer this service to our theater patrons," said DAAC Board President Kathleen Squires. "We've had people ask about something like it in the past and now it has become a reality. This series is a great way to kick off what is shaping up to be a marvelous season at the Rio Grande Theatre and we anticipate many more just like it to come."

The DAAC will sell subscriptions to the series for $150, which is a 15 percent discount off regular ticket prices. Subscription holders will have first shot at the "wildcard" performances, as well as exclusive invitations to receptions and concert after-parties and a listing in all programs as a series subscriber. All subscriptions are being handled through the Rio Grande Theatre's website at www.riograndetheatre.com, where subscribers can choose their seats for the entire season. "I really believe this is a series people can get behind – with so many world-class international performers," said David Salcido, manager of the Rio Grande Theatre. "This is the kind of thing a sophisticated audience looks for - and we have that right here in Las Cruces.

For more information about the series, call the DAAC office at 523-6403 or visit www.riograndetheatre. com.

Singer Perla Batalla will perform at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 21.

Frederick Moyer will perform at the Rio Grande Theatre at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Jan. 19, 2010.

The world-famous Vienna Boys Choir will make two appearances at 6 and 8 p.m. Tuesday, March 23, 2010.

MESILLA VALLEY FINE ARTS GALLERY

The Mesilla Valley Fine Arts Gallery's September featured artists are Phil Yost and Kurt Van Wagner.

Yost is not a student of art but has become completely captivated by watercolor medium. He retired from teaching high school science after 30 years, during which time he also coached wrestling and soccer. He was accepted into the New Mexico Watercolor Society as a Signature Member in 2005 and since has received numerous art awards.

Van Wagner has emerged as an accomplished self-taught digital artist. His artwork has gained international and local attention. During the past six years, 20 of his pieces have been featured in international magazines and book publications. He transforms his personal photographs into collectable works of art.

Digital photographer Steve Martin will join the gallery, as well. Martin has spent the last 25 years traveling and photographing the diversity and natural splendor of a uniquely blessed land by capturing the essence of a place at a particular point in time.

The gallery will host the annual ArtsHop celebration in conjunction with Doña Ana Arts Council from 4 to 8 p.m. Friday, Sept. 11. There will be refreshments provided by La Posta de Mesilla Restaurant in addition to local art that will be for sale.

Tickets may be purchased through the Gallery or from the Doña Ana Arts Council. Call 522-2933 for more information.

In addition, the 30 artists of the gallery offer art in many media, which include original paintings, encaustics, infused glass art jewelry, handmade cards, stained glass, photography, affordable prints and miniature paintings.

The gallery is located at 2470-A Calle de Guadalupe, across from the Fountain Theatre. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and noon to 5 p.m. Sunday. For details, call 522-2933 or visit http://ftp.zianet. com/mvartgallery/home.shtml.

NEW MEXICO FARM & RANCH HERITAGE MUSEUM

A controversial labor program that brought millions of Mexicans across the border to work in U.S. fields is the subject of a new exhibit at the New Mexico Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum, "Bracero Memories," which will open in the museum's Legacy Gallery on Friday, Aug. 28, and run through Jan. 18, 2010.

Mainly through historic photographs, the exhibit tells the story of the Bracero Program, a temporary guest worker program for millions of Mexican laborers between 1942 and 1964. The program marked a significant chapter in American and Mexican cultural history and relations. After the U.S. entered World War II, there was an immediate need for labor to fill the jobs left by Americans who went off to fight. The practices of that time are relevant to current debates about illegal immigration, farm labor issues and proposed guest worker programs.

The traveling exhibit was produced by the University of Texas at El Paso Institute of Oral History and the UTEP Centennial Museum. The Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum has supplemented the exhibit with historic photographs from New Mexico, as well as a replica of living quarters that includes several objects from the museum's collections.

A reception is scheduled from 6 to 8 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 10. Filmmaker Patrick Mullins will show his awardwinning 2008 documentary "Bracero Stories" at 7 p.m. The film draws on interviews and photographs collected by the Smithsonian Institution's and the University of Texas at El Paso Institute of Oral History's Bracero Oral History Project to recount first-hand experiences of workers and program administrators to see the workers behind the official policies and programs. Admission is a suggested donation of $2.

The museum is open 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday, and noon to 5 p.m. on Sunday. Regular admission is $5 for adults, $3 for senior citizens and $2 for children ages 5 to 17. Children 4 and under are admitted free.

@ MAIN STREET GALLERY

The work of Jim Turrentine is on display at the Main Street Gallery, 311 N. Downtown Mall, through August. The retrospective examines portraiture work he has completed over the last four decades.

The gallery is also showing works by some of Las Cruces' finest artists including the etchings and pastels of Winfrey Hearst, the impressionisms of Annetta Hoover, Judy Licht's brilliant dyes on silk, Daphne Wirthlin's whimsical fantasy scenes, Lois Wilson's fused and dichroic glasswork, Lynn Unangst's Spirit Minders, Margaret Berríer's detailed rock-art jewelry, Joanna Bradley's flamboyant gourd artworks, limited editions of Robert Highsmith's splendid watercolors, the skillfully and colorfully fired RAKU works of Rudy Lucero and the newly released limited editions of world class western pencil artist, Robert "Shoofly" Shufelt.

The gallery is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Friday. Call 647-0508 for more information.

@ TOMBAUGH GALLERY

The Tombaugh Gallery features fiber art by Cyndi Clark and Jan Harrison in "Finding a Voice through Fiber." The exhibit continues through Friday, Aug. 28. The Tombaugh Gallery of the Unitarian Universalist Church of Las Cruces is located at 2000 S. Solano Drive, with regular gallery hours from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Clark has worked in many media over the years. She focused on clay work for about 10 years before transitioning to fiber art. One of her featured pieces in the show is "Freedom's Price," an art quilt that has a piece of fabric representing every soldier who has died in Iraq and Afghanistan since Sept. 11.

Harrison has been involved in fiber arts as a knitter for more than 25 years and has gradually progressed to weaving on a floor loom and basketry. She has done extensive experimentation in achieving movement and using yarns of many sizes and textures. She also uses unexpected materials and colors. The same techniques go back and forth between her tapestries and basketry. For more information, call the church office at 522-7281.

② TERRACE GALLERY

The Terrace Gallery, on the second floor of the Thomas Branigan Memorial Library, features the Las Cruces Art Association art show, "Everything Goes" through Friday, Aug. 28.

Artists include Carol Groves, Olivia Solomon, Mary Lacy, Kurt Van Wagner and Judy Licht. Paintings of all media as well as photographs and a stained glass mirror are featured. Most artwork is for sale and can be purchased for $200 or less.

O BRANIGAN CULTURAL CENTER

The Branigan Cultural Center presents "Batteries Not Required," a display of historic cameras, and "Light Fantastic," a display of a historic craft of quilts in its newest form. The exhibits remain on display through Saturday, Aug. 29.

"Batteries Not Required" features more than 70 manual cameras from the collection of Don Brenner. Among the cameras to be displayed are an 1884 Blair with mahogany frame and cherry wood base, a 1909 Graflex with extensible front lens rack and a 1927 Ansco Memo featuring a vertical frame box body using a tubular view finder on top. Also included are early "spy" cameras, various Kodak models including the Brownie, Exaktas and much more. "Light Fantastic" is an exhibit from New Mexico Art

"Light Fantastic" is an exhibit from New Mexico Art Quilters. Art quilts echo the practical and decorative skills of quilt making from yesteryear, and take new life as an art form equal to watercolor, acrylic and oil paintings. This juried show features 31 quilts by 14 artists from across New Mexico.

The Branigan Cultural Center, 501 N. Main St., is located at the north end of the Downtown Mall. The exhibit and reception is free and open to the public. Galleries are open 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday and 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday. For more information about exhibits, contact the Branigan Cultural Center at 541-2154 or visit www.las-cruces.org/museums.

SUSAN EISEN FINE JEWELRY & WATCHES Native American jewelry has deep roots. Historic, religious and spiritual themes from ancient and modern cultures are visible in past and present designs handmade by Native American silversmiths and artists. An exhibit of vintage turquoise, coral and sterling jewelry along with contemporary designs created by current Native American artisans will be shown in the gallery at Susan Eisen Fine Jewelry & Watches, 5857 North Mesa Suite 19, El Paso. The show will run through Monday, Aug. 31.

② IN EFFECT GALLERY

Lulu Hedrick, a recent graduate and class valedictorian of Alma d'Arte High School, will present a one woman show of her various media explorations at In Effect Gallery, 514 W. Griggs Ave., through the month of August.

Hedrick has serious plans for her career in art, including working in screen writing, illustrations and painting. The artist has a truly unique perspective on the art world – one foot solidly in her rich Chinese art culture, the other in western approaches to art in various forms. This expanded view of the art world gives Hedrick a wide-open path for her talent to grow.

Her body of work is a unique mix of the two cultures, both in comparison and contrast, enabling the artist to appeal to many different tastes, while at the same time letting the viewer apply their own interpretations to the work.

For more information, contact the gallery at 526-1551, or email ineffectgallery@mac.com

② RIO GRANDE THEATRE

The works of more than a dozen ladies ranging in age from late 50s to early 90s from the Monday Studio Group is on display in the Rio Grande Theatre through the month of August. Working in watercolor, colored pencils, oils and pastels, the artists of the Monday Studio Group explore many styles of expression and have found they need all of their energy and enthusiasm as they tackle the difficulties involved in portrait and figure painting. The exhibit will run through Monday, Aug. 31. The theater is located at 211 N. Downtown Mall.

② MESILLA VALLEY FINE ARTS GALLERY

An untitled piece by Carol Lopez at the Mesilla Valley Fine Arts Gallery

The Mesilla Valley Fine Arts Gallery, 2470 Calle de Guadalupe, across from the Fountain Theatre, hosts two local ambassadors of the art world the month of August. Ray Baird offers "impressionistic expressionism" in his choice of rural structures and international landmarks. Baird paints with translucent, complimentary oils to give his special touch to architectural and natural subjects that have endured over time.

Hal Fore is primarily an oil painter whose design strategy transforms his subject matter into realistic caricature subjects. His road to art began with cartoons. He has an extensive art background and was a special education teacher in Las Cruces.

In addition, the 30 artists of the gallery offer art in many media, which include original paintings, encaustics, infused glass art jewelry, handmade cards, stained glass, photography, affordable prints and miniature paintings.

The gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and noon to 5 p.m. Sunday. For details, call 522-2933 or visit http://ftp.zianet.com/mvartgallery/ home.shtml.

THE LAS CRUCES BULLETIN

② NEW MEXICO FARM & RANCH HERITAGE MUSEUM

The New Mexico Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum, 4100 Dripping Springs Road, is exhibiting colorful images by artist Betty LaDuke that illustrate agriculture in its purest form.

"Dreaming Cows: The Artwork of Betty LaDuke" features 21 large giclee prints inspired by LaDuke's work with Heifer International. The exhibit is on display through Monday, Sept. 21.

La Duke toured Uganda and Rwanda in 2003, where she drew sketches of the native people in various agricultural settings. She converted the sketches to colorful paintings in her Oregon studio over the past several years. The paintings also include scenes and people from Poland, Albania, Vietnam, Cambodia, Kosovo, Ecuador and Peru.

Heifer International is a humanitarian organization dedicated to ending world hunger and protecting the earth by providing livestock, trees, training and other resources to help the poor around the world become self-reliant. Since 1944. Heifer has assisted 9.5 million families in more than 125 countries, helping to lift many up from poverty and hunger.

Museum visitors also are invited to view a segment from the film "Betty LaDuke: Art Reflecting Life," documenting her travels to Africa on behalf of Heifer International. The film is shown in the theater twice daily, immediately following screening of the museum's welcome video at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. (Sundays at 2 p.m. only).

The museum is open 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and noon to 5 p.m. on Sunday. Admission is $5 for adults, $3 for senior citizens and $2 for children 5 to 17. For more information, call 522-4100.

© PRESTON CONTEMPORARY ART CENTER

An explosion of color, texture and form highlight the 2009 Summer Exhibition at the Preston Contemporary Art Center, 1755 Avenida de Mercado. The exhibition features works by abstract painters Arturo Loya, Diane McGregor, John Ochs and Allison Renshaw and digital artist Myriam Lozada-Jarvis. The show, which celebrates the beginning of the gallery's second year, runs through Sunday, Sept. 27.

ONO GRINDZ

Kurt Van Wagner's digitally exotic display of the Hawaiian Islands is on exhibit at the restaurant Ono Grindz (Hawaiian restaurant), 300 N. Downtown Mall. Van Wagner's tropicalthemed show features his new Aloha creations depicting luscious swaying palms, magnificent coastlines and all the delights that make Hawaii such a wondrous place.

Van Wagner has traveled numerous times to the islands of Maui, Kauai and the Big Island of Hawaii to capture these vibrant and colorful scenes that make you want to pack your bags and get on that flight today. After Van Wagner discovers and photographs the magical tropical scene, the fun and creative work begin. He digitally hand-paints and textures over his photographs using computer and pen tablet. The results are works of art that are a blend of the realism of photography and the paintbrush of the painter. Van Wagner describes this new digital art as the best of two great art media. Ono Grindz owner Rachel Faulkner said she is excited to add another art venue to the Downtown area. Call 541-7492 for more information. Ono Grindz is open during lunch and dinner hours Monday through Friday and on Saturday for lunch.

◎ 'THE BURNING PLAIN' AT THE FOUNTAIN THEATRE

As part of the ongoing 20th anniversary, the Mesilla Valley Film Society will host a special advance screening of "The Burning Plain," which stars Academy Award-winning actresses Charlize Theron and Kim Basinger, at the Fountain Theatre at 8 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 12.

The film was partially shot in Las Cruces, and Academy Award-nominated director Guillermo Arriaga will appear at the screening as a special guest. His previous screenwriting work includes "Babel," "21 Grams" and "The Three Burials of Melquiades Estrada."

A reception will be held after the film from 10 p.m. to midnight, courtesy of Meson de Mesilla. Only ticket holders will be admitted to the screening and reception. Tickets are $20 for members of the film society and $25 for non-members.

There will be only 90 tickets available and tickets for non-members go on sale Saturday, Aug. 29. Call 522-8287, Ext. 2, for more information.

② LAS CRUCES MUSEUM OF ART CLASSES

The Las Cruces Museum of Art will host two classes in the coming months dedicated to teaching adults how to create their own works of art. Instructor Audra Noblet has been teaching art at the Las Cruces Museum of Art for four years and has shown work in Ohio, Las Cruces and Mesilla. She has worked as a classically trained oil painter for 12 years and operated her own gallery and studio in Findlay, Ohio, for three years. Noblet will teach Introduction to Pastels Noblet will teach Introduction to Pastels beginning on Tuesday, Sept. 8, and running through Oct. 20, with another session from Oct. 27 through Dec. 15. The class will run from 6 to 8:30 p.m.

In this class, students will explore different types of pastels and pastel techniques and learn how to make pastels at home from scratch, which saves lots of money. They will also explore paper preparation, color theory and application techniques. Subjects will be portrait, landscape and an introductory still life the first day.

Noblet will also teach Classical Oil Painting, using tricks and secrets by the "Old Masters" such as Leonardo, Michelangelo and Caravaggio. The class will begin Wednesday, Sept. 9, and run through Oct. 21, followed by another session from Oct. 27 through Dec. 15.

Students will learn recipes and a stepby-step technique that is not often taught in modern schools and will work toward realism creating beautifully luminous paintings.

Contact the Las Cruces Museum of Art at 541-2215 or visit www.museums.las-cruces. org for more information and to register for classes.

DIGITAL IMAGING WORKSHOP

The Mesilla Digital Imaging Workshops located in the Preston Contemporary Art Center announce its second season of digital photogra-phy weekend workshops. Nationally recognized photographic educators instruct workshops in September. Howard Wallach will open the season with The Photographic Narrative Thursday, Sept. 10, to Sunday, Sept. 13, during which participants will examine the history and varied form of the photographic narrative, as well as selected literary and musical works, then create photographic narratives of their own. The class offers a balance between imagining and doing, seriousness and fun

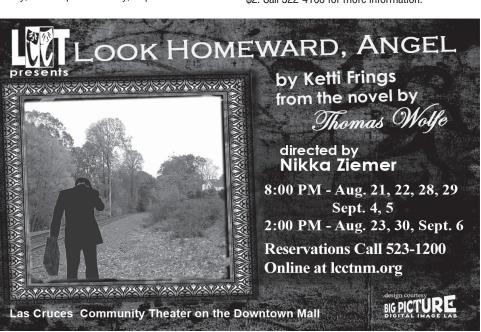

The Preston Contemporary Art Center is located at 1755 Avenida de Mercado in Mesilla. Call 523-8713 for information.

§ FILM SHOWING

The New Mexico Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum will screen the documentary film "Bracero Stories" at 7 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 10, by Filmmaker Patrick Mullins.

The Bracero Program, a temporary guest worker program for millions of Mexican laborers between 1942 and 1964, marked a significant chapter in American and Mexican cultural history and relations. The practices of that time are relevant to current debates about illegal immigration, farm labor issues and proposed guest worker programs.

Bracero Stories" draws on interviews and photographs collected by the Smithsonian Institution and the University of Texas at El Paso Institute of Oral History's Bracero Oral History Project to recount firsthand experiences of workers and program administrators to see the workers behind the official policies and programs. Admission is a suggested donation of $2. Call 522-4100 for more information.

Cactus' Chris Buethe: Cowboy poet who didn't know it

New children's book puts artist on the map

By JENNA FROSCH

One of the most famous and prolific cowboy poets of this age is Baxter Black, with his creative and popular prose on the ways of the men who ride the range and their views on the world. Black is also the inspiration behind "Cactus" Chris Buethe's venture into cowboy poetry, turning a hobby into a lifelong passion.

When his three sons were little, Cactus would sit at their bedside as they told him the characters they wanted in their bedtime stories. From there, Cactus would make up the tall tales that would have the boys giggling in their sheets – and fixated on the adventures that came from their father.

As the boys grew up, the stories faded, but Cactus still had an inkling to tell these tales and began dabbling in the world of cowboy poetry, inspired by the words of Black and other like-minded poets.

"I saw Baxter (Black) perform once and thought he looked like he was having an awful lot of fun," Cactus says.

The 80-year-old Village at Northrise resident came up with the name "Cactus" when he was searching on the Internet, discovering that it wasn't being used by any cowboy poets, and living in the desert, he says it was "just kind of fitting."

A captive audience

Cactus performs live for organizations interested in original cowboy poetry, including retirement groups, conferences and cruise ships, and he says part of his love of the performances comes from years of teaching. "Part of it is,

after 39 years,

I kind of missed having a captive audience," he says.

Cactus taught high school physics for 39 years in Nebraska, Colorado and California, as well as at the University of Nebraska, New Mexico State University and Indiana State University, where he was a professor emeritus. He also served as a guest professor at Miami University in Ohio and Central Washington University.

As a Fulbright Scholar, he was sent to Tangier for one year with the U.S. State Department.

Cactus says that with so much experience in the hard sciences, some of his writing skills were lacking.

"In our region where I grew up, we had poor language skills, so when I started college, I started taking English classes," he says. "After a few years, I was told that if I took two more classes, I would be qualified to teach English. I taught for a few years and I worked my butt off."

Cactus says the students had a profound effect on his writing and inspired him to write his silly poems.

A published author

In 1995, Cactus published his first collection of cowboy poetry in his book "Wanna Be A Cowboy," followed four years later by "Wanna Be A Cowboy 2" in 1999.

In the years since he began exploring the world of writing, he has had 25 poems published in magazines across the country and more than 130 published total.

> Illustrated by MICHAEL WYAT1

WHOSE CAT IS THAT?

Cactus also has been asked to perform at numerous functions across the U.S. in more than 120 live performances. "The best audiences are women from rural areas," he says. "The toughest are the big city high school boys. I like to have the audience laughing and enjoying the performance."

In 2008, Cactus published a children's book, "Whose Cat is That?," which was illustrated by local artist Michael Wyatt. The book is available at COAS Bookstores, Hastings and select shops in Mesilla.

"Whose Cat is That?" was inspired by a cat his wife brought home one day, that became "his." After eight years, the cat ran away, and after three months, Cactus figured it was gone for good, but it returned. He says he got so attached to the cat and didn't realize it and it was that attachment that spawned his newest publication.

Family influence

Some performances Cactus does are inspired by the struggles he and his famil have endured, including his wife's onset of Alzheimer's. Now in a special facility for Alzheimer's patients, Cactus visits her daily and says every day is a struggle – but through it all, it's the silly stories that help him cope.

cope. "Through family struggles, I've had these stories to fall back on and develop," Cactus says.

One of his sons has begun developing the disease at age 47, and has fought the effects of an accident and brain injury at the age of 18, so Cactus is aware of the need for the means to develop a cure.

When booking performances, Cactus offers groups the option of giving the money they were going to pay him to the Alzheimer's Association.

Artistic Endeavors

Cactus not only finds refuge in being a wordsmith, he also is skilled in painting with watercolors, and has a few on display in his apartment.

After being shown the "ropes" by his sister-in-law, Cactus signed up for a class at the community center in Mesilla Park to sharpen his skills.

"I took a class where I was the only man in the class and the only person studying watercolor as a medium. I've really had to learn how unforgiving watercolor can be," he says. "I try to create something wild, with bright colors."

Cactus has also dabbled in the world of performance art, taking lessons in jazz, which he says was "a lot harder than I thought it would be." Now, his concentration is Now, his concentration is on developing his painting skills and keeping up with the bookings he has received from groups around the Southwest for his cowboy poetry skills.

"A lot of silliness helps in this profession," he says.

"Cactus" Chris Buethe is a self-proclaimed cowboy humorist and artistic geezer and has published three books – two on cowboy poetry and one children's book.

Meson de Mesilla: Like no other

Boutique hotel, restaurant reopens to high acclaim

By JENNA FROSCH The Las Cruces Bulletin

Meson de Mesilla has seen a lot of changes in the last few years – new owners, a two-year renovation and a wealth of new entertainment for the venue. But, among all the changes, one thing remains the same – Meson de Mesilla is unlike anything Las Cruces has to offer.

Meson de Mesilla was built in 1983, and has seen a number of owners, most recently falling into the hands of Jim and Jodie York and Joseph and Courtney Muench. The business partners and friends were looking to create a place they could come and enjoy a great meal and a good glass of wine.

"My husband and I like good food and wine – and we felt Las Cruces was needing that," Jodie York says. "This place – it's a great atmosphere. It's romantic and peaceful, and we have a certain energy that makes people want to come back again and again."

The boutique hotel's restaurant offers world-class cuisine, carefully prepared under the watchful eye of Executive Chef Michel Mal, affectionately known as "Chef." He says the entire restaurant operation is teamwork oriented, and stresses freshness and quality.

freshness and quality. "Our menu is well-balanced, made with high-end food. We don't compromise on quality," Mal says. "This is a group effort and we pay attention to customer feedback that the staff hears about what people want." The restaurant serves lunch Monday through Friday each week, and offers many selections at $10 or less, an affordable option for those looking for a high-class business or casual lunch. Each day, the restaurant features a fresh fish entrée, which is created from the finest ingredients flown in from the Seattle coast. Dinner is served every day of the week, and a number of items are seafood, such as the popular parpadelle pasta with sautéed rock shrimp, made with roasted bell peppers, pancetta, garlic and fresh herbs, roasted tomato cream sauce and parmesan cheese. The restaurant also offers a number of beef entrées, such as the pan-seared filet of beef tenderloin, with porcini mushroom veal demiglaze. Each dish is carefully paired with a wine that complements the flavors of the dish, from the restaurant's impressive wine list.

"Our wine list has been created carefully. We took a great deal of time trying different wines to separate are $5, so they are affordable, too." Meson de Mesilla also has expanded their lounge area, serving appetizers and specialty cocktails every day of the week. Sundays and Mondays, the lounge area serves a limited number of dinner entrées, as well as $2 off martinis and two-for-one appetizers. Patrons can enjoy the view from the lounge's outdoor patio or venture atop the second floor of the property to witness the breathtaking view of the Mesilla Valley, a one-of-a-kind restaurant view.

Tuesdays offer another unique venture for the restaurant with Perfect Pairings at 5:30 p.m. Chef Mal creates three dishes to pair with three different wines each week – food specifically created to match the wine. The cost is $20, which includes tax and gratuity, and reservations are required.

"We want to be a place where people meet and tell us, "Thank you so much for opening a restaurant of this caliber," Jodie York says. "It's a great feeling to have – and goes right along with our saying, 'Life As It Should Be."

REVIEW BY JENNA FROSCH The Las Cruces Bulletin

When a mother's love becomes overwhelming, things can get a little complicated.

In the coming of age tale "Look Homeward, Angel," Eugene Gant is learning a little about life and love, and through Sept. 6, the Las Cruces Community Theatre

Look Homeward, Angel Las Cruces Community Theatre 313 N. Downtown Mall 523-1200 Tickets: $5 to $10 Through Sept. 6

Coming Soon

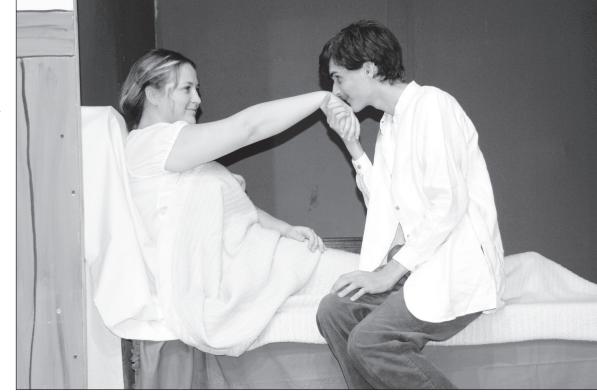

The Musical of Musicals Las Cruces Black Box Theatre 430 N. Downtown Mall 523-1223 Tickets: $10 Sept. 12 and 13 will host the performance, directed by Nikka Ziemer.

Eugene (played by Evan Hadfield) is 17 and on a path toward becoming a man. He lives in a house with his overbearing mother, alcoholic father, complaining sister and a number of questionable boarders – not to mention his brother, Ben, who seems to care for him far more than the others. The newest boarder, Laura James (played by Carrie Hakes) has captured the eye of Eugene, and as the play progresses, their love grows. So does the unrest within this family of Gants.

At the center of the unrest is Eliza Gant (Kathi-Jane), a woman who is known for making "deals" – in business and with people. She is a bit on the manipulative side and always looking for a quick buck. Kathi-Jane plays this role well – with as much passion and aggressiveness as the playwright intended.

Throughout the production, Eliza is bent on selling her husband's stone carving shop, much to his demise. Her "deal" would help keep the boarding house, Dixieland, afloat and could be used for sending Eugene to college. However, the shop has special meaning to W.O. Gant (played by Ken Eastlack) and he fights her every step of the way. It is only at the end of the production when the family is faced with impending doom that the two can truly get along, and address their problems.

Ketti Frings wrote this play in 1957 and it opened on Broadway to critical acclaim. A coming of age tale on the surface, the play and characters go far deeper

Ben (played by Dylan Sweet) plays his role as the bitter son well – constantly going to bat for his younger sibling against his mother, who loves her son but can't seem to show it. Her criticism of his seemingly platonic relationship with Marie "Fatty" Pert (played by Autumn Gieb) is at the heart of Eliza's arguments. Up until the end, when Ben grows ill, Eliza doesn't give up her thoughts on the issues at hand. Perhaps the most entertaining (and relatable) character is that of W.O. Gant. Eastlack has a knack for the theatrics, and he commands the stage in each and every scene – even the ones where he is not the main character. His role is very physical, and he plays it without a hitch. He certainly is one to watch in the Las Cruces theater scene.

An impressive display, the backdrop to the performance was fitting to the entire production - two bedrooms set up above the rest of the stage and seen only after a large door rolled back. The set design by larrychandler, Doug Roby, Ziemer and Eastlack is certainly impressive.

The gaggle of boarders, played by a number of local actors and actresses, certainly add a positive element to the play – however different and quirky they may be.

"Look Homeward, Angel" will run through Sept. 6, at the Las Cruces Community Theatre, 313 N. Downtown Mall.

Tickets are $5 to $10. Call 523-1200 for more information and for reservations.

'Treeless Mountains' hard to cut down Sisters learn life the hard way in CineMatinee film

REVIEW BY JEFF BERG For the Las Cruces Bulletin

"Big Aunt" is not someone you want to be stuck with if you are a kid.

Crass, unloving – except of the bottle – Big Aunt has been assigned a job she wants no part of – watching her two young nieces while her sister goes, presumably, to search for her long missing husband, who is also the girls' father.

Jin and Bin, the two young sisters, are not without resources. Still trusting of adults, they patiently await the return of their mother, who has left them a piggy bank, explaining to them in tones of dishonesty, that she will return when they fill the bank with coins.

The two girls have never known real parental nurturing, as witnessed in the "last supper" that they share with their foolish and uncaring mother, as she ignores Jin's attempt to have her acknowledge a school paper for which she received an "A."

By the time they get to Big Aunt's hovel, school is out, and the two girls – Jin, the oldest at seven – are left to their own devices. They spend their days either looking or longing for their errant mother to return or by having minor adventures. They also cook up an entrepreneurial pursuit, as they catch and grill grasshoppers, selling the crunchy delicacy to other children to help fill up the red bank.

There is not much dialogue in the film, which helps it quite a bit, keeping it away from the overused kids in peril genre, and distancing it from comparison to a somewhat similar film, Truffaut's 400 Blows.

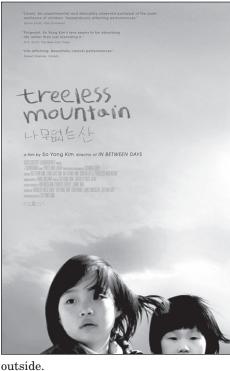

Instead, New York-based director So Yong Kim concentrates on movement and facial expression to get the point across for us. Both young actresses show an amazing ability in expressiveness – something that clearly caught me off guard. Both director and actresses also successfully show the emotional stress of children who are abandoned or in unfamiliar places. Bin has a bedwetting problem, which adds another touch of reality, albeit a slightly sad one to the story. When she conquers the problem herself, the adults in her life ignore her accomplishment, dwelling instead on past memory of her problem.

Soon, the girls start to give up hope that their mother will return, and Big Aunt gives up on them entirely, shipping them off to the countryside to live with their grandparents, both of whom seem much too old and frail to care for such young children.

Grandfather wants no part of it, and for the most part, ignores his kinfolk, while grandmamma, who might have a touch of dementia, starts to include them on her simple daily routine. The girls start to thrive as they learn many new things from the wise crone.

The girls find themselves offered something that all children need – a sense of stability and routine.

Peer into the dynamics of four generations Caine, Walken and Lucas add that extra 'something' to this 2004 film

The CineMatinee film for Saturday, Aug. 29, is "Around the Bend" (2004, 85 minutes, rated PG-13, made in New Mexico). Director Jordan Roberts' feature debut pulls off the dizzying high-wire act of being both a misty-eyed glimpse into four generations of the men in the Lair family and a steely meditation on manhood, parenting and the pitfalls thereof.

Michael Caine plays the elder Lair, Henry, who, as the film begins, is in the process of dying with all the crusty wit he can muster (which is plenty). He shares the family home with his grandson Jason (Josh Lucas) and his great-grandson Zach until a grimacing, wire-haired wraith appears at the front door one evening and turns everything around. That wraith is Jason's long-estranged

That wraith is Jason's long-estranged father, Turner (Christopher Walken), who walked out on his son and his father some 30 years before, following the death of his wife (and the maiming of his son) in an automobile accident. Jason is less than thrilled at this possibly malignant returner, a former heroin addict and professional sneak thief, but Henry is exultant, and he takes the lot of them to the local Kentucky Fried Chicken for a final meal and then pens a last will and testament that takes the surviving trio on a road trip across the country. The men head cross-country, stopping here and there at various KFCs to read another Post-It note instruction and a revelation or two. This sort of thing rarely works these days – it's just too difficult to steer the modern audience through the treacherous twin perils of brimstone and treacle without capsizing your craft amid gales of laughter – but somehow Roberts manages to make it work, against all odds.

Caine, of course, owns the screen every second he's on it, but after his character exits the scene, it's up to Lucas and Walken to battle it out, and battle they do. There's an exquisite "fine-tunedness" to the screenplay (thank you, Mr. Redford) that belies the occasional gush of sentimentality, and a final grace note that will, yes, mist the eyes of all but the most cynical in the audience. A fine, familial elixir to remedy despair and soften hardened hearts, "Around the Bend" is likely just the first of many feathers in Roberts' shiny, new directorial cap.

Unless otherwise noted, screening time is at 1:30 p.m., and admission is $4 for everyone except film society members who are admitted for $1. The theater is located one-half block south of the Mesilla Plaza. For more information, call 524-8287.

'Basterds' is an obscenely beautiful masterpiece

Tarantino's latest is fiendish, captivating REVIEW BY GABRIEL VASQUEZ

"Inglourious Basterds" is a bloody good war movie. It's grotesque, funny, radical – but most of all, infinitely entertaining.

Quentin Tarantino's latest, (a selfdescribed "WWII meets Spaghetti Western") is like the perfect Bloody Mary,

INGLOURIOUS BASTERDS

Rating: R for explicit content and language Running time: 153 minutes Written by: Quentin Tarantino Directed by: Quentin Tarantino Starring: Brad Pitt as Lt. Aldo Raine, Melanie Laurent as Shoshanna Dreyfus, Christoph Waltz as Col. Hans Landa, Eli Roth as Sgt. Donny Donowitz and Diane Kruger as Bridget von Hammersmark shaken (not stirred). Basterds is an ideal combination of humor, violence, drama and masterful acting and directing Set during the rise of the Third Reich, Tarantino's Nazi revenge flick stars Brad Pitt as Lt. Aldo Raine – a wise-cracking, thickly accented Tennessee hillbilly with an affinity for scalping Nazis – Eli Roth as Staff Sgt. Donny Donowitz aka "The Bear Jew," Melanie Laurent as Shoshanna Dreyfus – a young and vengeful French-Jewish girl on the run – and Christopher Waltz as Standartenführer Hans Landa aka "The Jew Hunter.'

Exercising his obsession with veneance and fascination for filmmaking, Tarantino creates a revenge-driven plot with three intertwining stories

The first is about Raine and his team of "Basterds," a motley crew of Jewish-American soldiers (a la "Dirty Dozen") whose orders are to collect 100 Nazi scalps a piece in what is then Nazi-occupied France.

Also in France is a young Shoshanna Dreyfus, the lone survivor of a Jewish family killed by Landa. The Basterds and Dreyfus remain unaware of each other but unknowingly cross paths by the film's end.

Bringing the stories together is Landa, a famed "Jew Hunter." He's the embodiment of pure evil. A derisively mocking, disdainful Nazi whose M.O. is to hunt Jews

In the film's opening sequence, Waltz delivers a scintillating performance. While interrogating a French dairy farmer suspected of hiding Jews, Landa manages to break down the farmer by using absurd but masterful dialogue and chilling mannerisms. Landa's men open fire on Dreyfus' family, but Dreyfus manages to escape.

Four years later, Dreyfus assumes the identity of "Emmanuelle Mimieux," proprietress of a French cinema. The cinema becomes the setting for the ultimate Nazi revenge party – and the film's ending.

A young Nazi war hero turned actor takes a liking to Dreyfus. The unlikeable war hero later convinces Joseph Goebbels (Sylvester Groth) to hold the premier of his new war film in Dreyfus' theater. Meanwhile, the Basterds continue their killing spree, bringing the film's most humorous and violent action.

Eventually, the three plots come together to deliver an ambitious but wellcrafted ending that rewrites history and the way movies are made.

This is easily Tarantino's most creative effort. With conversations winding nearly 20 minutes in length, characters playing into plot devices destined for explosive failure and self-serving dialogue, one could say this film is more about rewriting the the rules of cinema than it is about the film itself. But it works.

The movie ends with the line "This might just be my masterpiece." In the director's case, it just may be. Bravo, Tarantino.

MARY CLINE,

Homeowner

By BETH SITZLER

As with many out-of-state transplants, when retired teacher Mary Cline and retired Delta Airlines pilot Lawrence Aucin came to Las Cruces from Atlanta, Ga., they were looking for a home that showcased one of the area's most beloved features - the Organ Mountains.

nestled Loop in the Sonoma 🆕 Ranch Estates. really

"We loved New Mexico and came out to visit a variety of times," said Cline, whose custom home was designed and Desbuilt by ert Sage in May 2005. "We loved the mountain views and the weather. We built the house to take advantage of the views."

The quest for the perfect view began with the lot. Cline said they chose that particular location because they felt it offered the best views. Once the lot was selected, the building process began.

The biggest challenge with building the house, Cline said, was the distance, which required several trips from Georgia to New Mexico.

"I wouldn't recommend (building a house) long distance," she said.

When visitors enter the fourbedroom home they are greeted by an office on the left, a formal dining area on the right and a spacious living room ahead.

"It's a kind home and very serene," said Elaine Socolofsky Szalay of RE/MAX Classic create something Realty. Down the hall to the right is the couple's master bedroom, which is separate from place of beauty. the rest of the bedrooms, a feature that was important to the couple.

The circular seating area is Cline's favorite part of the home because it is the perfect spot for rest and relaxation. "It's a wonderful place to meditate," she said of the room, which includes a fireplace and a breathtaking view of the mountains.

The master bath features double sinks and a jet tub and leads to the walk-in closet with separate sides for him and her. The bathroom's main attraction, however, is the step-in caracol shower, so named for its shelllike, spiral shape.

"I really love having it," Cline said of the shower that doesn't require a shower curtain.

At the center of the home is the living room. With a built-in wet bar and bookcases, the spacious living room encompasses most of the home's entertaining area. The vaulted, 12-foot ceiling and tall windows add to the room's openness, an attribute Cline said she found appealing.

"It's beautiful all times of the year, and all times of the day, she said. "It's very soothing and relaxing.

The kitchen, which is next to the living room, continues the home's open theme. Graced with black Brazilian granite countertops and decorative appliances, Cline said the two-cook kitchen has a high-end feel without the high-end price tag. She added that while the oven is electric, it is plumbed for gas and can be converted.

Szalay said future owners will appreciate the attention to detail that went into making the kitchen more functional, including the custom cabinets with sliding shelves and the pot filler built into the top of the stove.

"It's rare but so handy," she said of the pot filler spout. "So many people forget it and regret it later.'

Cline worked with Kitchen Kraft to create the home's custom cabinetry.

"Stephanie (McDaniel) and I had a great time working together," she said.

On the other side of the kitchen are three bedrooms and bathrooms. Designed to be a pool suite, one guest room has its own bathroom and access to Continued on following page the backyard area, while a Jack and Jill bathroom connects the other two bedrooms.

"A lot of care went into the details, colors, light fixtures," Cline said. "We tried to create something that would be an oasis and a place of beauty."

The beauty continues outside to the covered patio and backyard. Along with a fireplace, the patio also has a built-in grill and mini-fridge, perfect for outdoor entertainment around the custom pool. Cline said the pool includes an attached spa and waterfall.

Another beautiful aspect of the home is its landscaping with an irrigation system.

"My husband loves the land-scape in the backyard," Cline said. "We wanted to use plants indigenous to New Mexico.' The colorful native plants include oleanders, lantanas and Mexican palms, all of which attract hummingbirds, she said

Along with the spectacular views, the home's lighting was an important feature for the couple. Throughout the residence, visitors can find accent lighting in the nichos to display art, lights in and under the cabinets, up and down lighting in the living room and skylights.

Described as "soft Southwest," the home features traditional Southwest features, such as corbels and hand carved columns, used sparingly to create a balanced look that would appeal to anyone.

With the couple's decision to move closer to family on the East Coast, Cline said she pictures just about anyone living in the residence, from retirees and families to those who love to entertain, want to be surrounded by beauty or be close to town.

"The craftsmanship was very well thought out," Szalay said. "I see something new every time I'm here."

This seating area can double as a formal dining room.

The open living room features built-in bookcases and a vaulted ceiling.

Erasers remove more than pencil marks

Use this schoolhouse staple to clean house, keep earring attached

School has officially started in Las Cruces and children all over the area are lugging around backpacks full of items to help them learn. One schoolhouse staple found in every student's arsenal is the pencil eraser.

British engineer Edward Nairne created the eraser, also known as a rubber, in 1770 from natural rubber. Prior to the eraser, tablets of wax were used to remove lead and charcoal marks from paper. Crustless, white bread was also used as an eraser.

Since Nairne's erasers were made from raw rubber, they were perishable and would go bad after time. Thanks to inventor Charles Goodyear's discovery of the vulcanization process in 1839, sticky, raw rubber was transformed into the durable material we know today.

Modern erasers can be found in several different colors, shapes and even types, but they are all designed to remove that which shouldn't be, including some unusual messes.

This school year, steal an eraser or two from the kids' backpacks and put them to use around the house.

1. Shine a shilling: For those who enjoy collecting coins, such as the new state quarters, an eraser can be used to keep your collection glossy and new. Simply rub the eraser over the coin to remove dirt and polish its surface. Be careful to never use an eraser on valuable coins, however, since part of their value is in the patina (finish) that has formed over the years.

2. Lost your earring back?: Ladies, how many times have you been late to work or a hot date because you can't find the back to your earring? Instead of spending precious time searching for the tiny backing, just remove the top of a pencil eraser. The eraser will hold the earring in place and no one will be the wiser – as long as you wear your hair down.

3. Keep suede spotless: Nothing ruins a pair of suede shoes faster than scuff marks. To keep your suede spotless, rub it with an eraser. The friction of using the eraser lifts the dirt and fluffs up the suede fibers, making it look new again. This technique can also be used on other suede objects, but be sure to test it on a spot that doesn't show in case the fabric is mixed with another material that can cause different results.

4. Hold your pins together: Use a larger eraser in your sewing box to hold straight pins and needles together. The pins won't embed themselves as deep in the rubber as they would a pincushion, making them easier to remove. They also won't fall out, creating a mess in your box.

5. Prevent wall damage: There is always a risk that the large picture you just hung on the wall might scratch the paint surface. To make sure this doesn't happen, cut off the erasers of two pencils and hot glue them to the bottom corners of the frame. They will gently rest against the wall and prevent the frame from causing any damage.

6. Perfect your vinyl: It usually takes more than a simple floor cleaner to remove those pesky scuffmarks from a vinyl floor. Instead of spending hours on your hands and knees, use an eraser to quickly remove stubborn marks. The eraser cleans the marks away with a little elbow grease.

7. Create squeaky-clean glass: Removing labels from glass can be a challenge. No matter how hard you try, it seems the sticky gray substance left from the label just refuses to go away. To get rid of any left over residue, rub it with an eraser. The eraser's friction dislodges the adhesive enough that the excess can be easily wiped away with a damp sponge.

8. Clean off crayon marks: Anyone who has children knows they will always prefer to draw on the surface of a blank wall to the surface of a blank piece. The magic trick to removing these works of wall art is using an eraser. Just erase the crayon marks like you would erase the marks on the paper to get the wall back to its pre-children cleanliness.

9. Take care of your baby grand: No matter if your piano is a traditional upright or a collapsible keyboard, removing those greasy finger marks and collections of dirt can be a pain. The best solution is to find an eraser that fits between the ivories and the black keys and simply rub away the marks by getting into those hard to reach places. This works on both real and plastic keys.

Got grubs? Got a problem Control these insects before its too late

You've watered religiously, you've fertilized regularly, you've checked for fungus, but you still have dying patches in your lawn.

Dig in about a shovel's length deep around those spots and you will probably find those creepy looking grub worms. There is no mistaking them, they are creamy white with a brown head and are about as big as your thumb or smaller.

These are larvae of the May and June beetles. They have quite an appetite for grass roots. They will really take a toll on cool season grasses such as fescue, rye and bluegrass, but can also take a toll on the heat tolerant Bermuda and Bermuda hybrids as well.

There are different methods of controlling these insects. You can use a liquid insecticide, or a dry season-long insecticide. Which ever one you use, make sure you read and follow directions exactly. The season-long grub control can be used on the lawn, trees, shrubs and ground covers listed.

There is also a liquid botanical insecticide called Grub Beater by Bonide. This product disrupts the grub's hormonal balance so it dies before it molts to the next life stage. It is available in a ready to use hose end sprayer.

With either treatment previously listed, it is best to core holes into your lawn prior to application in order to help these insecticides permeate into the areas where the grubs are located. The coring action will help with water and fertilizer absorption as well.

Realtors association celebrates 60 years LCAR anniversary means exciting things for community, homeowners

By Beth Sitzler

For 60 years, the Las Cruces Association of Realtors (LCAR) has served Doña Ana County and its various needs.

Beginning in May 1949 as the Las Cruces Board of Realtors, the association was established to represent its members in the public domain as well as provide them with educational opportunities, said Isaac Chavez, LCAR governmental affairs and public relations director.

At first, the association had nine active members and covered all of southern New Mexico, but as time passed and southern New Mexico's population grew, several counties began their own associations, allowing LCAR to focus on Doña Ana County.

Now with about 550 members, the association still provides important services to its Realtors and affiliate members, which are businesses that support the industry.

Serving the Realtors

Chuck Olson, LCAR president and regional owner of Exit Realty Horizons, said the association is different from other organizations because it is self-policing and enforces a high standard of rules.

"What separates the Realtor association from other industry associations is that we have a code of ethics we have to abide by," he said.

One way they do this is through a grievance committee, which the public and Realtors can use. If a Realtor has committed an infraction, he can be penalized in a variety of ways including suspension, a fine, a letter of reprimand or attending a class about the offense.

Chavez said as the third most-regulated industry in the United States - after the nuclear industry and nursing homes - Realtors must work to maintain their titles. To be called a Realtor - the registered trademark owned by the National Association of Realtors - an individual must be a member of the organization and must go through a background check. They also have to obtain 30 hours of continuing education every three years.

"All Realtors must maintain educational requirements," he said. "We're constantly being educated.'

Along with providing educational programs at its 150 E. Idaho Ave., facility, LCAR will host this year's Realtors Association of New Mexico (RANM) annual fall conference Wednesday, Sept. 9 through Friday, Sept. 11, at Hotel Encanto de Las Cruces.

The conference, which rotates locations each year, is designed to bring the state's Realtors together to discuss issues affecting the industry, such as state laws.

Olson said the association, both state and local, is very active in the community and has several committees that focus on various issues, including the legislature.

The legislative committee works to represent the association at city council meetings and other legislative functions to provide a voice for its members.

"Our Realtors are very active in the community," Olson said, adding that real estate is a very large part of the economy and should be well represented in every facet of the community.

Serving the community

For as much as they do for Realtors, Chavez said the association really represents the homeowners.

"We're the only organization in the world that represents homeowners," he said.

"If it's not good for our homeowners," Olson said, "it's not good for us."

Working as a "vigilant watchdog," Olson said LCAR acts as a "spokesman for the little guy" and works to see that the public's private property rights aren't infringed upon.

"We really are trying to preserve individual property rights," he said.

An example of this, he said, is the transfer tax in Santa Fe, which placed a tax on the transfers of all homes. The Santa Fe Association of Realtors reached out to the national association, which then polled the public on the tax. The association then worked to educate the public about the effects the tax had on affordable housing.

"I'm a big believer that the Realtor associations in the city and state are the only true advocates for private property own-

Realtor and the 2010 Realtor Association of New Mexico President.

Chavez said LCAR is currently watching local legislation on impact fees as well as participating in the town hall meeting on health care.

"The bill affects the Realtors since they don't have an employer," he said explain-

Providing the community with the best is important since purchasing a home is one of the biggest decisions a person can

To better accommodate their clients, Olson said LCAR uses the Multiple Listing and Information Services (MLIS), which organizes all Las Cruces listings on a computer system making it easier to find a home that fits specific wants and Las Cruces Association of Realtors Governmental Affairs Director Isaac Chavez, LCAR Executive Officer Lynn Gould, incoming President Elect for the Realtors Association of New Mexico Theresa Ramos, incoming President for RANM Connie Hettinga and LCAR President Chuck Olson show off the new LCAR logo, designed in honor of the association's 60th anniversary.

Growing to serve the future

This year, in honor of its 60th anniversary, Chavez said the association has created its first logo.

The blue and yellow logo was designed by local artist Michael Kelley, husband of Monique Kelley of Exit Realty Horizons, and features the Organ Mountains, desert and the Rio Grande - all elements that represent Las Cruces.

LCAR is also taking advantage of the latest technology by creating a website and Facebook page, which currently has 189 friends, more than any other association in town.

"We're on the cutting edge of technology," Chavez said. "We have to be.'

Growing with technology, Chavez and Olson said they see great things happening with the association in the future.

As only the third RANM president from Las Cruces and the first in 20 years, Hettinga said she will continue to work with legislators to provide the best for association members and the community.

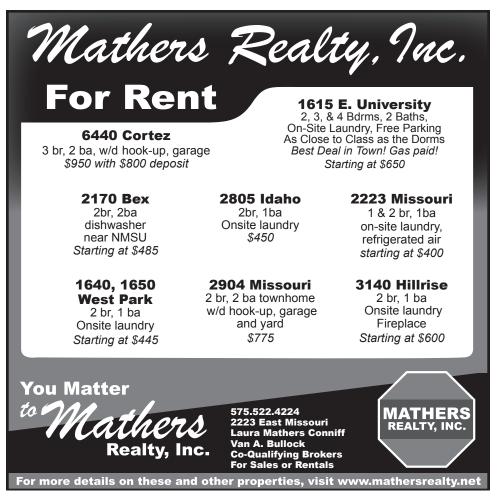

She said she also wants to increase the association's membership by interacting with community members state wide.

LCAR is reaching out to their members in several ways including a newsletter, various monthly events and a quarterly Realtor rally. The rally scheduled for October will update members about the Downtown revitalization project.

Volunteering to be on the LCAR board is a great way for association members to give back, Olson said.

"It's giving back to the association for what you've taken from your industry, said Olson, whose term as president will end in December.

With an interest in business and knowledge of construction, it was a natural progression for Las Cruces native Jennifer Sandoval to enter the world of real estate and offer potential homeowners an inside look at the building process.

"I grew up in the building industry," she said. "I grew up running through homes as they were being built.

Her fascination with the building industry continued to grow and 11 years ago, she and her husband, builder Robert Sandoval, began R. Hines Construction, specializing in "providing superior amenities and one-of-a-kind craftsmanship."

While she had explored other industries, she said she always wanted to become a Realtor and help local and own. Finally, seven years ago she took the plunge and found the career fulfillment she desired.

Creating a real estate home

Sandoval's journey into real estate began with a different kind of business venture – a fitness studio. Inner Balance Fitness allowed her to spread her entrepreneurial wings, but said the 12-hour workdays took too much time away from her sons Cameron, 7, and Tristan, 4.

After selling the studio, she decided to explore her interest in real estate by becoming a licensed Realtor.

"I really do love real estate and working with people during such an exciting time for them," she said.

the arts. We need that in our society," she said. "I hope to see the building get completed and be a success."

Her desire to provide for her family and her community is a driving force for Sandoval.

Finding the balance Becoming a Realtor has benefited

Becoming a Realtor has benefited Sandoval in several ways, such as being able to create her own work schedule.

"I work full time, 40-hour weeks, but I can still take my kids to the dentist," she said of the flexible hours, "and I like that."

Finding a balance between her family and her career was important for Sandoval and entering the world of real estate has allowed her to achieve just that.

"Balance is a huge issue. Balance in life is what creates so many successes," she said. "I strive for that on a daily basis."

Sandoval attributes her business successes to being able to "set goals for myself, know what I want to achieve and going for it." This ability has also helped Property Consultants during the recent economic downturn.

"The economy right now is the biggest challenge," she said. "It directly hit home sales and real estate."

With homes staying on the market longer, Sandoval said she has had to be more proactive on marketing a home.

"You have to be more aggressive in this market to sell a home now," she said, "because you're up against so many other properties."

Sandoval said she thinks the economy is slowly beginning to come back and foresees an exciting time in Las Cruces home sales.

"Las Cruces is a wonderful place to live," she said. "And our product is good. Our initial goal was to be the very best at what we do, start to finish, and we've been very true to ourselves. This is an exciting time."

Providing her customers with the best motivates Sandoval, Everhart and the other four Property Consultants employees to succeed.

"I represent myself as an agent and as an owner," she said. "I pay close attention to details with the client and the market to make the process go smoothly."

Sandoval said the thing she enjoys most about being a Realtor is helping families find a place to call home.

"I feel like people purchasing a home is the biggest decision they'll make in their lives," she said. "Seeing someone move their family into a home and the smiles on their faces is a big bonus."

She said as far as her career goes, she is delighted for all the accomplishments she has made over the years.

"I'm very proud of the fact that I'm a successful entrepreneur," she said. "I've run successful businesses not only in real estate, but other industries, too."

A new, energy-efficient garage door can save as much as 71 percent of energy that would be lost otherwise.

Put a stop to high energy bills

Tips to update your garage door and save money

A leaky, un-insulated garage door may not be an obvious culprit in rising monthly utility bills, but it's worth a second look if you have an attached garage.

Replacing an older garage door with a new, energyefficient model can reduce energy loss through the garage door by up to 71 percent, according to a comparison study conducted by Clopay engineers.

Since attached garages typically share one or two common walls with the house, any hot or cold that travels through a door will ultimately affect the adjacent living areas," said Mark Westerfield, director of product development for garage door manufacturer Clopay Building Products. "An insulated garage door can help stabilize temperatures in the garage to reduce heat losses or gains from common house walls.

Depending on the specifics of your home and attached garage construction, a well-insulated door can help keep your unheated garage 10 to 20 degrees warmer on a cold winter day.

'That can have a significant impact on the comfort of family rooms or bedrooms located above or next to the garage," said Westerfield.

Homeowners who purchase an energy-efficient garage door now through Dec. 31, 2010, will not only save on heating and cooling bills, but may qualify for up to $1,500 in federal tax credits, thanks to the new stimulus legislation. Certain criteria apply. Visit www.clopay.com or call 800-225-6729 for more information and a list of eligible models.

Tips for upgrading a garage door

More than 40 percent of the current housing stock was built prior to the era of energy efficiency, according to a report by the Joint Center for Housing Studies of Harvard University. If your garage door is a hold-over from the dark ages, here are some things to look for when making an upgrade:

- A 2-inch-thick, three-layer "sandwich" construction – This environmentally safe, construction includes chlorofluorocarbon-free insulation layered between two sheets of heavy-duty galvanized steel.
- R-value or U-factor These are measurements of the thermal efficiency of a door's insulation. The higher the R-value, or the lower the U-factor, the more energy-efficient the insulation.
- Energy Tax Credit eligible Available for garage doors with a minimum factor of 0.30 installed on a homeowner's primary residence.
- Insulation type There are two different types of insulation used in garage doors - expanded polystyrene and polyurethane. Doors constructed using either kind qualify for the Energy Tax credit, and both are strong and durable.
- Design Get the most out of your garage door upgrade. Choose a model that complements your home's architectural style.

Merging living and family spaces with the kitchen is not only familyfriendly, but is great for entertaining and selling your home.

KRISTINE SANDRICK The Las Cruces Bulletin

Make your open kitchen look great A chic open floor plan can also help sell your home

More homeowners are merging living and family spaces with the kitchen in an open floor plan.

This kind of floor plan is not only family-friendly and perfect for entertaining, it will actually sell better if you ever decide to put your home on the market.

An open floor plan makes your space seem bigger and more up to date. However, rooms with competing decor, such as a contemporary family room versus a traditionally styled kitchen, can make blending the space difficult.

The best way to make an open floor plan a success is to create a seamless transition from the kitchen to the other living spaces. Here are some useful tips on creating a harmonious open floor plan: Incorporate small contemporary touches that make a big impact,

- such as a stainless steel range hood and a glass mosaic tile backsplash. Just make sure that the colors and textures are compatible with each other and the adjoining room.
- Select a cabinet door in a rich brown finish that complements living and dining room furniture. A deep brown glaze over a Cognac finish settles into the corners and grooves, giving the cabinets a traditional, vintage look. Pairing this with modern hardware completes the transitional design.

Display contemporary decorative objects on open shelving in the kitchen island. Selecting objects that complement the decor of the adjoining room is a subtle way to make the kitchen flow nicely with the open space. Consider a farmhouse sink that has been redesigned with a contemporary finish, such as stainless steel. Stainless steel acts as a neutral, so it will not detract from more elaborate home decorations. To create that perfect open space, you'll want to work with a designer at your local home center to help the remodeling process run smoothly from product decision-making to installation. For additional design ideas and information, visit www. $woodmark\mbox{-}homedepot.com.$

No more excuses! Avocado knife is a safe alternative

By Beth Sitzler

The heat on your tongue, the sweat dripping off your brow, the pounding of your heart – you just ate a hot New Mexico green chile and you're looking for some relief. A quick and tasty solution is a heaping pile of guacamole made from avocados.

The avocado is a large, egg-shaped fruit - believe it or not originating in southern Mexico. Avocados now are grown in the Caribbean, South America, Central America and in states such as California, Florida and Hawaii.

High in the "good kind" of fat, also known as monounsaturated fat, avocados have been shown to lower cholesterol levels. Finding daily ways to add the fruit, affectionately nicknamed the butter pear, to your diet is a great way to maintain heart health.

There are some drawbacks to eating avocados daily – its tough skin and hard pit. Its skin makes it difficult to penetrate while the large pit, which con-tains a seed, can be dangerous to remove. Using a knife can potentially result in a hand wound, while using a spoon can smash the avocado or fling the pit across the room. The solution - the avocado knife. of course.

What is it?

This knife is specially designed to cut through the tough skin of an avocado and remove its stubborn pit. It comes in two forms serrated or smooth

Both measure about 8 inches in length and are furnished with a rubber-gripped handle, eliminating messes and preventing slips. Both knives get the job done, but the serrated blade, which also has pointy pit-removing spikes, can be dangerous, especially around children. The smooth blade offers a safer alternative.

How does it work?

After the avocado knife cuts the fruit in half, it can then be used to remove the pit. Simply, use the flat end of the knife to dig around the pit until it is loose and can be easily detached.

Once the pit is dislodged, use the curved, round end to slice and dice the avocado. Then use the flat blade like a spatula to easily separate the meat from the peel.

How much does it cost?

Easily slicing and dicing

Featured zadget: Avocado knife

avocados comes at a relatively low price. A top brand avocado knife can cost $20, while other knives cost around $9.

Where can it be found?

This specialty item may be hard to come by, but can be found at many kitchen specialty stores,

Guacamole

- 3 avocados, peeled, pitted and mashed
- 1 lime, juiced

- 1 teaspoon salt 1/2 cup onion, diced 3 tablespoons fresh
- cilantro, chopped 2 roma (plum)
- tomatoes, diced teaspoon garlic,
- minced pinch ground cayenne
- pepper, optional

In a medium bowl, mash together the avocados, lime juice and salt. Mix in the onion, cilantro, tomatoes and garlic. Stir in cayenne pepper. Refrigerate one hour for best flavor, or serve immediately.

Starting from scratch Going green from the ground up

During my more than 40vear career in the construction and real estate development business. I have witnessed a dramatic change in the standards and practices that guide how we do things. In no area have these changes been more profound than in green building and development.

In retrospect we used a lot of 'green" techniques back in the day. For the most part, we used those techniques because they made sense, not because they were green. There are a lot of other things we've all had to relearn when it comes to living green.

Here are a few of the lessons I've learned when it comes to green living:

Preservation

Today there are so many resources and tools to help us live a greener life. I've spent the last 10 years studying the topic and feel I have only scratched the surface. One thing I have learned is that living green starts from the ground up. Preserving natural landscape, for instance, protects the natural environment and saves resources. Natural landscape on a home site saves both upfront landscaping costs and conserves water for the long term. We now understand that there is a crypto-biotic crust, a living organism that covers the desert surface. This crust minimizes erosion, improves water absorption and retains natural plant seeds. Left undisturbed, the natural plant life and eco-balance will continue to be self-preserving. Once destroyed, it takes many years to be restored, if ever. This is where you see tumbleweeds and non-native plant-life take root as well as dust blowing off disturbed surfaces.

Another simple strategy we've learned is to build retaining walls and yard walls around a home before building construction begins. This allows for the delivery of rock, sand and concrete on the building pad area rather than destroying natural landscape around the perimeter of the pad.

Durability

without having to be replaced often, or their maintenance has a very low impact on the environment. Materials such as concrete, marble, tile, exterior stone facades, stainless steel sinks, etc., are things you only have to buy once and can last as long as the home. That makes them green.

Once I began to understand the basics for being green, I learned that much of the process is common sense. It is common sense that more durable materials last longer and therefore don't end up in a landfill. Durable products may not necessarily be "green" on their own, but can be a contributing factor to giving a home a green designation.

Renew-ability

Materials are considered renewable if they are replenished at a rate that is equal to or faster than its consumption by humans. Since bamboo grows so quickly, anything made from it can be considered green

Using energy sources such as the sun and wind are considered green as there is no danger of exhausting their avail-ability. The use of solar energy systems to power homes has become increasingly available and affordable.

Biodegradability

Materials that have the ability to break down safely into raw materials and disappear into the environment are considered biodegradable. Many plastics and other petroleum based products never breakdown in landfills. Make sure to check labels. Using biodegradable products in your home whenever possible is green.

Conservation

Doing more with less is definitely green. Conservation of our natural resources including water and energy is an integral part of building green. Use of efficient, reduced-water-use plumbing fixtures, reclaimed building materials, native landscaping and gray water systems are ways to conserve our natural resources for future generations. Energy Star appliances and high efficiency heating and cooling systems also are great products to conserve energy.

Education

There are labeling programs, design guides, books, websites and endless opinions for going green, but there's no universal law or definition of a "green" home. So where should you start?

Education is the key to becoming green and sustainable. I have learned many simple, practical ways to integrate green principles into my everyday living as well as my construction and development business

The National Association of Home Builders has a great website to begin or add to your "green" education. Build Green New Mexico, U.S. Build Green Council, El Paso Electric Company and countless other resources about green and sustainable living are available on the Internet.

A green home incorporates smart design, technology, construction and maintenance elements to significantly lessen the negative impact of the home on the environment, improve the health of the people who live inside and save the homeowner money.

Sunny takes the harvest heat and eats it!

A good news, bad news situation with delicious dishes

Hi Sunny: Was thinking of you [in Arizona] today. Las Cruces had a bumper crop year. We just completed packing up 75 pounds of freshly roasted green Jim Parker (medium / hot) chiles into about 76-gallon Ziploc freezer bags and putting them in our freezers. That should last us for a few months! – Jerry (and Cyrille) Kane Groan. Rub it in, Jerry. I think everyone knows by now how much I miss southern New Mexico's chile harvest. I've received several emails similar to his. including these:

Saturday I rode by a chile field and could smell the ripening pods - mmmm! - Don

Thought you were coming here in August for the harvest? We could have a Hot Luck. – Cristina

Unfortunately, I'm unable to make it to Las Cruces for this year's harvest. However, there's good news, bad news, but maybe good news. The good news is the email I received from my alma mater:

Come join the NMSU Phoenix Alumni Chapter for great food, fun and chile roast-ing! Saturday, Sept. 19, at 11:30 a.m.

The bad news: I already have plans. The good news: Maybe I can change them

The menu sinfully beckons and includes Shredded Green Chile Chicken, Pulled Red Chile Rubbed Pork Taco Toppings, Refried Beans and Calabacitas - Roasted Corn and Green Chile and Squash. Ah, my tummy grumbles in anticipa-tion. Stay tuned. If I attend, I'll file a complete report here. If not, I'll make plans to whip up a similar menu and serve the recipes below to fellow chile head friends.

Shredded Green Chile Chicken Enchiladas

12 corn tortillas 1/2 cup oil

12 ounces Monterey Jack cheese, shredded

3/4 cup white onion, chopped fine 1/4 cup real butter

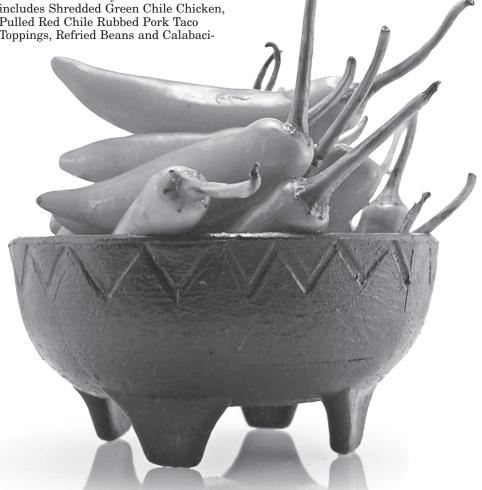

- 1/4 cup flour
- 2 cups chicken broth

1/2 cup favorite medium-hot green chiles, fresh roasted,

- stemmed, seeded and chopped 1 cup sour cream
- 3 chicken skinless breast halves, boiled and shredded Green onion and cilantro,
- garnish, chopped

Cook tortillas one at a time in hot oil until softened (5 seconds). Place some chicken, cheese and onion on each tortilla and roll up. Place seam side down in greased baking pan. Melt butter, add flour and stir well. Add broth and cook until thick. Stir in sour cream and chiles. Stir until heated. Pour over enchiladas.

Bake at 375 degrees for 20 minutes or until heated all the way through. Put remaining cheese on top and return to oven for 5 more minutes. Garnish with chopped green onions and cilantro, if desired. (Adapted from http://bellybytes.com)

Pulled Red Chile Pork Taco Toppings is on the menu for the upcoming chile roasting fiesta hosted by the New Mexico State University Phoenix Alumni Chapter.

Hot as a Pistol Grilled Pulled Pork

3 cups cider vinegar

- 2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce 3 tablespoons black pepper,
- finely ground 2 tablespoons liquid hot
- pepper sauce 3/4 teaspoon salt, or to taste

1 (3-pound) pork butt or shoulder roast

Combine vinegar, Worcestershire sauce, pepper, hot pepper sauce and salt, and mix well. Let baste stand at least 1 hour at room temperature before using. Never use this sauce as a marinade - it's too hot!

Meanwhile, prepare grill; it's best to use a covered smoker type. If none is available, you may use any charcoal-type grill, but be sure to cover the pork with a heavy foil to equalize the temperature.

Since the roast grills for a long time at a low temperature, prepare a large bed of coals. When coals are covered with white ash, spread them out to make a bed. Position the grill 5 inches above coals. Let grill heat about 2 minutes, scouring it with a metal brush, if necessary.

When grill is hot, set roast in place. Sear 2 to 5 minutes on each side or until uniformly browned, and then brush generously with baste. Close hood and cook 1 to 1 1/2 hours, or until meat is tender enough to fall from bone. Turn roast over and baste every 15 minutes

Transfer to a large cutting board. When slightly cooked, use two forks to pull meat into shreds. Serve in warm corn tortillas or prepared corn tortilla shells. Top with sour cream and chopped green onions, if desired.

A gas grill can also be used. Follow the manual's instructions. (Adapted from New Edition, "Hotter than Hell," by Jane Butel, Northland Publishing, 2005)

Calabacitas - Roasted Corn and Green Chile and Squash

Calabacitas is a traditional dish of the Southwest Pueblo Indians.

- 3 to 4 tablespoons olive oil
- 1 cup onion, finely chopped
- 2 to 4 cloves of garlic, minced
- 2 1/2 cups summer squash, diced 2 1/2 cups zucchini, diced
- 2 cups corn kernels, fresh or frozen
- 6 (about 3/4 cup) scallions, chopped
- 1/2 cup hot green chile, roasted, with skin removed (wear gloves
- when handling chiles), chopped 1/2 cup mild green chile, roasted, with skin removed, chopped
- 1 cup ripe Roma (plum)
- tomatoes, diced 1/2 cup fresh cilantro leaves, firmly packed and coarsely chopped 1/2 cup cream or grated Jack cheese 1/2 teaspoon salt

Heat 2 tablespoons of the oil in a large skillet and saute the onion for about 4 minutes over medium-high heat. Add the garlic and sauté 2 minutes longer. Add the squash and zucchini and sauté 5 minutes longer, until softened.

Add the remaining 1 to 2 tablespoons of oil with the corn, scallions and chiles and sauté another 3 minutes.

Stir in the tomatoes, cilantro and cream (if desired) and heat through, about 5 minutes.

Season with salt. Serve hot or warm. Yield 8 to 10 servings. (Adapted from Corn, Olwen Woodier, Storey Books, 2002)

Gardeners and poets tell different snail tales

The beauty of snails and slugs is most definitely in the eye of the beholder.

Children and poetry lovers see them as what little boys are made of - slugs and snails and puppy dogs tails. The snail's a cute little creature that carries its home on its back in a swirl of a shell, right?

But ask gardeners their view. Since this is a family column, I can't repeat the few apt descriptors they might use for this veggie-eating pest. Watch out, slugs and snails will be in the pumpkin patch nibbling at the very young, still soft growth of what you hoped to be your jack-o-lantern. They can be excised from the garden by cultivating, minimizing moist areas or picking them out, among other methods.

Most, but not all, whether land or marine varieties, are herbivores. They'll eat holes in all sorts of plants and lay eggs in the garden soil. The marine-based snails are viewed more kindly for eating algae and other nuisance greens

The snail is synonymous with slow in our culture and if you have the chance to watch one travel, you can clearly see why. The garden snail might move about 0.03 miles per hour. You may be most familiar with this creature for lending its name to Snail Mail - the oldfashioned, takes-a-while way to send a message. Both snail and slug – a snail that's evolved without a shell – produce a silvery slime that helps them move and protects them when they creep over glass or other sharp objects. They live most everywhere, and depending on species, their life span can be as short as a year, or occasionally, up to 30 years in captivity. They can be very tiny, but some sea types can grow as long as 30 inches and weigh 40 pounds. Land snails are hermaphrodites, producing both sperm and eggs. Some marine or freshwater varieties are separate sexes.

Predators are numerous - everyone loves a snail, birds, snakes and yes, people. The ooh-la-la escargot prepared as French cuisine comes to mind most often, although they are also used in dishes in Spain and Portugal among many other countries.

Now that I think about it, the only snails that aren't slow are escargot. Every time I've seen them, they're gone very quickly.

Habitat will break ground on Saturday Volunteer, community supports family in need

Times are tough and the construction of new homes has slowed across the country. Here in Las Cruces, however, a family has been selected by the Mesilla Valley Habitat of Humanity to partner on the construction of their new home.

A groundbreaking celebration will be held at 9 a.m. Saturday, Aug. 29, on the construction site at 7560 Monte Verde. This will be the future home of Jesse Atwell and Veronica Valenzuela and their family, Raymond, 9, Luiz, 7, Analise, 5, Christopher, 3, and a new baby who is on

"This is exciting not only because it is our first launching for this building season, but more importantly it is the start of a new home for this deserving family," said MVHFH Executive Director Ed Johnson of the home, which is one of four to be built this year.

The goal of MVHFH is to reduce poverty housing in our community and to make simple, decent housing affordable to individuals and families in need. For more information, call 525-0475. MVHFH would like to take this opportunity to publicly thank the community for their continued support.
