Waterfalls in the wings Another 558 acres of East Mesa approved for zoning changes

The Las Cruces City Council has approved zone changes that allow a development on another parcel of state land on the East Mesa.

Called the Waterfalls by local developer Ken Thurston, the project on nearly 559 acres would be a mix of businesses and homes in a mixed-use "new urbanism" approach similar to what's being proposed at the Vistas at Presidio, the large East Mesa development approved by city council last week.

Along the same lines, the developer – Thurston was representing Roger Cox Western Developers that has a business lease on the land – would be responsible for putting in all roads, including major arterials and utilities before beginning construction. In the case of the Waterfalls, most of the land is south of the Bataan Memorial Highway between Dunn Drive and Hanger Lake Road. Hanger Lake, Dunn and Cortez Drive are the major roads the developer will have to expand. Unlike the Vistas at Presidio, a major

Unlike the Vistas at Presidio, a major feature of the Waterfalls is a 140-acre ponding area below the state Department of Transportation yard to relieve the kind of flooding seen on the East Mesa during last summer's heavy rains. Although the land was already annexed, it was zoned for agricultural use, so zone changes were brought before the city council at its land use meeting Tuesday, May 29.

Residents along Dunn Drive – mostly from the Hacienda Acres development – told the councillors they are concerned

Ags hire WAC aide Macy to focus on the 'Aggie Vision'

BY JOHN KEITH The Las Cruces Bulletir

The Bulletin has learned that New Mexico State has hired Steve Macy as associate athletics director for marketing and promotions.

Macy, the current associate commissioner of marketing for the Western Athletic Conference in Denver, Colo., is expected to join the Aggie staff sometime in July. Reached by telephone on Wednesday, May 30, Macy said he is excited about the direction NMSU's athletic department is going. "I am looking forward to working with (Aggie Athletics Director) Dr. (McKinley) Boston and (NMSU President) Dr. (Michael) Martin," he said. "Their vision for athletics at New Mexico State is impressive. There's a lot of energy there. "When I interviewed, I liked the

Is new technology bad for open government? Mayor questions if text messages, emails, cell calls violate law

By TODD G. DICKSON

Laptops have become fixtures of government boards, as do the board members' cell phones and blackberries.

But if – during an open meeting – a board member gets a text message, email or call from a constituent or member of a special interest group, that could be a violation of open meeting law, says Las Cruces Mayor William "Bill" Mattiace.

Mattiace brought up the question at the start of the city council meeting Tuesday, May 29.

Ŭp until now, councillors could – and some city council observers say they believe it has been happening – receive emails, text messages or cell phone calls during the meeting about issues under debate.

Mattiace said a policy banning such practices would prevent rumors by the public that councillors are asking questions or taking directions from the outside.

There are seven members of the council – including the mayor – and they all need hear the same questions and deliberate on the same information.

"Let's put it this way," Mattiace said, "when somebody goes out on stage, they shouldn't be lip-synching."

And that can also be a violation of open meeting law, Mattiace said. "This council (meeting) is open record in my opinion," he said.

Some councillors balked.

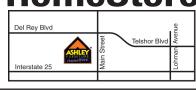

"I see no need to back to go the dark ages," said councillor Jose Frietze.

Frietze, who runs Family & Youth Inc., said he sometimes takes cell calls from work and leaves the dais to take the call in a conference room that has the meeting broadcasted on the television so he can monitor the proceedings. On occasion, Frietze will go out into the audience and talk with an individual. "What's the difference?" Sealu

Councillors Gil Jones. Steve Trowbridge and Ken Miyagishima said they use the Internet during meetings to do background research on things such as city zoning or the State Land Office.

Still, the question is worth an in-depth discussion after the city's legal department researches the issue, said Mattiace, who would like to see language added to the city's ethics code prohibiting the practice.

While the state's open meetings law doesn't address the new forms of communications, the purpose of holding an open meeting is to give the public "the greatest knowledge possible" about the topic being considered or debated, said Bob Johnson, executive director of the New Mexico Foundation for Open Government, a statewide watchdog organi-zation on issues of open meetings and open records.

We are in an age of enhanced communication.

MONTE SARVO

That is especially true if a regular fixture of the open meeting is to pro-vide public input for open discussion, Johnson said. The kinds of concerns raised by Mattiace are methods that avoid open discussion, he said.

"It's the purpose of holding an open meeting," Johnson meeting," said.

Johnson agreed that the council's code of ethics is a good place to address the concern. A councillor receiving such communications during an open meeting is acting unethically, he said.

'That's my whole point," said Mattiace after hearing Johnson's comments.

Johnson and his organization have taken the Las Cruces City Council to task in the past for conducting "rolling quorums," in which councillors polled each other about their votes before meetings took place.

Mattiace said some people misunderstood his comments to mean that constituents couldn't use emails, text messages or cell phones to communicate with public officials outside of the meeting. Mattiace said he was only talking about such communications during a meeting.

After Tuesday's meeting, Miyagishima sent out a mass email asking for people's opinion on the issue. Monte Sarvo, who is active in the Alameda Depot neighborhood, responded that he was against "adding such a control over our councillors," and that restricting the practice is impractical in a free society.

"We are in an age of enhanced communication," Sarvo wrote in his email response. "Each councillor has the option to shut off their cell phones and all other communication devices if they do not want to be disturbed. Each councillor should be trusted to have the integrity and common sense to not use such technology inappropriately. They may be waiting for much-needed information that is being provided by an outside source. They may have an emergency from home. There are many reasons a city councillor may need communication during meetings.

Stan's the man

LCPS Interim Superintendent Stan Rounds would be a terrific choice to lead our schools

BY DAVID E. McCOLLUM The Las Cruces Bulletin

You don't have to spend a lot of time with Stan Rounds to know that he has a passion for education and young people. Last week, he spoke to a record crowd at the Greater Las Cruces Chamber's quarterly luncheon where he outlined where our public schools need to be focused over the next five years. The plan was not developed in a closet by a self-serving administrator using Las Cruces as a stepping stone to another job. Instead, this outline is the result of many extra hours of strategic planning time invested by a broad base of people, including school executives, staff, teachers, parents, local business leaders and students.

McCOLLUM

If you have had the occasion to be in the south end of Loretto Town Center around 5:30 p.m. or later over the past few months, you likely would have seen (through the Las Cruces Public Schools board room's glass wall) a room full of people engaged in the business of planning the future of our public schools.

When Rounds was named to the interim position in February, he immediately began visiting with teachers, staff and the business community. He accepted the job knowing many things were broken, including the spirit of many LCPS employees. He knew the broken things needed to be fixed quickly. He also knew the economic future of Las Cruces is hinged on our ability to provide a quality education system.

The result of Rounds' early initiatives is a renewed excitement among staff and teachers. Additionally, respected community leaders including City Manager Terrence Moore, Mesilla Valley Economic Development Alliance President Steve Vierck, Chamber Education Committee Chair Patsy Duran, New Mexico State University President Mike Martin and Doña Ana Community College Campus Executive Officer Margie Huerta have each recognized and endorsed the positive actions underway at LCPS.

The LCPS plan is currently outlined for the next five years. The plan proposes several new schools including a fifth public high school scheduled to open in 2010. The plan addresses the district's woeful graduation rates and absenteeism. The plan also recommends intensive interaction with NMSU, DACC and the business community to ensure that our young people are being adequately prepared for future workforce opportunities.

Of course for any plan to work, it must be effectively implemented. A plan without action is just pieces of paper in a binder on a shelf. From experience I have found that the most successful plans are executed by those who did the planning. The participants have the intimate knowledge of what went into the plan, and they are likely to have the passion to ensure that the plan is fully executed.

Stan Rounds has the passion to lead our school district as it grows and develops over the next five years. He has the personality and people skills to be effective as the top administrator. He is a native New Mexican whose experience and talent give him the credentials to be the ideal candidate to be our permanent superintendent.

It is our recommendation that the school board immediately begin negotiations with Stan Rounds to remove the "interim" from his title and to allow him to lead the district over the next five years.

If you, too, have faith that "Stan's the man," we encourage you to contact members of the school board and advise them of your support for Stan Rounds. We strongly believe that this decision will benefit our schools and our community both today and into the future.

Coverage appreciated

The New Mexico Nurses Association, District 14, thanks The Las Cruces Bulletin for its coverage of National Nurses Week that was celebrated May 6-12. It was gratifying that you noted the unique and nurturing care that highly educated, knowledgeable and skilled nurses give to their patients. Nurses save lives every day in this community because they are uniquely qualified to give highly skilled nursing care. Nurses touch all our lives and they will speak for you when no one else can or will.

We hope you make it a regular feature in The Bulletin, and not just during National Nurses Week, to interview nurses in our community and thereby educate the public about the unique knowledge and skills that nurses possess. The public entrusts care of the community's most vulnerable populations, the sick, the injured, the newborn and the dying, to nurses. It only seems appropriate that the community know who these individuals are who provide that care.

LEIGH B. DeROOS, RN, BC president NMNA District 14

TVs turned off!

Across the nation, TV TurnOff Week is observed each April. In Las Cruces we had a great success with the collaboration of media activists and the Las Cruces Public Schools librarians to produce an event unlike any previous contests. Everyone who had the opportunity to view the display of student art and essays at the LCPS administrative offices commented on the creativity of our students as well as the powerful statement from young people about television watching. The Southern New Mexico Media Awareness Council would like to thank everyone who volunteered time and money to make TV Turn-Off Week in Las Cruces a success: The LCPS administration and librarians, our poster and essay judges, and the City of Las Cruces (for developing TV TurnOff family events at the recreation centers and museum). Prizes for the winners were made possible by generous donations from MountainView Regional Medical Center, Memorial Medical Center, Rotary Club, Optimist Club, Kiwanis Club and Albertson's grocery stores. Partnerships with community businesses and service clubs are vital to the success of extra programs in the schools.

Our hope is that TV TurnOff activities will inspire people to reduce the amount of television, movie and computer screen time they are spending, with a corresponding increase in physical activity, reading and personal interactions during the coming year. If so, then all of the above effort will have been worthwhile! SKY ARMIJO

Goodwill ambassadors pay visit to president

Anigos spread state's message to other areas The New Mexico Amigos, our state's official goodwill ambassadors, visited President George Bush recently for a quick photo op and gift presentation and ended up spending nearly an hour chatting informally with him. Sen. Pete Domenici arranged the visit, which was held in the Executive Office Building next to the White House in order to accommodate the 140 Amigos who attended.

The annual goodwill flight this year traveled to Williamsburg, Va.; Washington, D.C. and Boston. Locations to be visited are determined by the Amigos presidents. This year's president is Mike Pemberton, a Roswell businessman.

While in Washington, the group toured the Capitol Building, courtesy of Sen. Jeff Bingaman and the Pentagon.

In the Williamsburg area, the Amigos visited Norfolk Naval Air Station, where they split up and toured a sub-marine, destroyer and cruiser. Their luncheon speaker was Robert L. Dain, a native New Mexican, who will command the yet-to-be-commissioned USS New Mexico nuclear submarine.

The Amigos hosted receptions in all three cities. In Washington, all five members of New Mexico's congressional delegation were in attendance.

the past and has arranged for state governors to speak to them.

But this year, Richardson was otherwise occupied, so Lt. Gov. Diane Denish joined them. Denish's father, Jack Daniels, was a charter member of the Amigos and a former president.

The Amigos got their start in 1962 during the celebration of New Mexico's golden anniversary as a state. As part of the celebration, 85 of New Mexico's leading citizens chartered an aircraft at their own expense and visited Chicago, Detroit, Pittsburgh, New York and Washington, D.C. to draw attention to New Mexico's 50 years as a state

As a result of the trip, a permanent organization was formed, a charter as a private corporation obtained and the governor of New Mexico appointed the Amigos the official goodwill ambassadors for the state.

In all but one year since, the Amigos have chartered an aircraft and made trips to other states, Canada and Mexico to focus attention on New Mexico. The governor is invited as a guest of the organization on the goodwill flights.

Guest Column

In each city, arrangements are made for the Amigos to visit and exchange ideas with large groups of the city's prominent citizens. At luncheons and receptions, the governor addresses local groups and, in turn, that state's governor and other leaders address the Amigos.

While the annual goodwill flight attracts the most attention, the Amigos participate in many other activi-ties to promote the state of New Mexico. Frequently they act as hosts for important groups visiting the state. They support the programs of other organizations that are acting in the interest of New Mexico.

Amigo members are distinguished New Mexico civic, business, industrial and professional leaders who devote time and financial support to the organization.

Amigos must be leaders in their community, decision makers in their business, company or profession and meet rigid membership qualifications. The organization is limited to 260 active members and is governed by a board of directors headed by a president.

To remain active members, Amigos must participate in at least one goodwill flight every three years. The presidency rotates yearly. The list of its 45 presidents is a Who's Who of New Mexico, spread widely throughout the state. Last year's president was Santa Fe art gallery owner Nedra Matteucci.

The position of secretary/treasurer does not rotate. That post has been held by Santa Fe marketing and governmental relations consultant Gary Blakeley for the past 20 years. It's Gary who makes everything work once the decisions are made.

City officials did little to engage the public in annexation debate

By STEVE FISCHMANN

With crickets chirping in the early morning Tuesday May 22, Las Cruces' City Council voted 6-1 to approve annexation and zoning for developing 5,900 acres of mainly state trust land in the shadow of the Organ Mountains. Only one significant amendment that reserved lands for schools was made in response to a broad array of community concerns.

The city council applauded the work of city staff, the city staff applauded developer Philip Philippou, who created the master plan on behalf of the state land office, and the assistant city manager proudly declared he would use the exact same process all over again for future annexations.

All of this carried an air of defiance in the face of broad community complaints that citizens had been excluded from decision-making about the future of taxpayer owned lands. One councillor chided those who had concerns for not making appointments to talk with her

Airport support needed

I ask the readers to ask themselves: "Why doesn't Las Cruces have a better public airport, with at least one commercial airline, that at least a few times per week, offers flights at reasonable prices, to, say, Phoenix, Denver or Albuquerque, and Dallas?"

Maybe it is because there are massive neo-backwards. neo-primitive attitudes in Las Cruces humanity, and erty rights too. But even this suggestion was not open to discussion. City staff did little to encourage discussion or engage the public during a four-week legal delay in the approval process.

Regardless of the city's intent, the reaction of a large number of folks is clear. Citizens with perspectives to offer were not treated as contributors to, or as "customers" of their government. Instead, we felt like unwel-come interlopers in decision making about land we own. Frankly, we often felt like the enemy.

Leadership is not taking sides and shoving one point of view down everyone's throat. It is making decisions that respect the full range of concerns and values in the community. Imagine how much more effective government could be if decision-makers remembered this, instead of pursuing predetermined agendas.

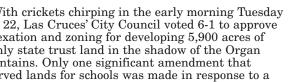

Steve Fischmann is the chair of the Quality Growth Alliance and chairman of the Southwest Energy Alliance.

massive "It isn't cool to go places unless from El Paso" attitudes. But sustainably charitable city government and private sector leaders could encourage and advertise for subordinate people in the area to travel more often, and be patriotic, so to speak, to our city county and state, by using our own airport, and such charitable leaders could also suggest that incentives be given, like free airport parking for cars. Again, who the leaders are in a mission, can make a big difference.

Man impersonates police detective

A woman on Central Road in Las Cruces avoided unimaginable consequences early Friday, May 25, when a man impersonating a police detective knocked on her door and asked to come inside, according to a Las Cruces Police Department press release.

The man was not a detective and not affiliated with the Las Cruces Police Department, and his identity is still unknown, the release said.

According to the release, at around 11:15 p.m. Thursday, May 24, a woman in the 5100 block of Central Road called 911 and asked police to investigate suspicious noises and possibly a prowler in her back yard. Police officers arrived, searched the area and found no evidence of a prowler, the release said.

A few hours later, at around 3:30 a.m., Friday, the woman reported that a man dressed in black knocked on her front door and said he was a detective from the Las Cruces Police Department, the release said, and when the woman asked the man for proper identification he became disorderly. According to the release, the woman quickly closed the door on him and again called 911. It is unclear what the man's motives were.

The man is described as Hispanic, 6feet tall and around 200 pounds, and he was wearing a black shirt, blue jeans and black dress shoes the release said.

The Las Cruces Police Department

reminds the public that it is well within their right to ask an officer or detective for proof of their identity – a badge and picture ID – before talking to them. It is also OK to ask that a marked police unit be present when dealing with police matters, and, when in doubt it is recommended that you call 911 to verify if an officer or detective has been dispatched to your location, the release said.

FFA Convention this week

FFA members from across the state will meet June 4-6 in Las Cruces for the 79th Annual State FFA Convention.

New Mexico State University will host the three-day event, during which FFA members will gather for contests, elections, workshops and awards. This year's theme is "Blue Jackets, Gold Standards," inspired by the organization's colors, national blue and corn gold.

"The State FFA Convention is really about leadership. It's the culmination of a year's work for the students who attend," said Les Purcella, state FFA supervisor.

Students will compete in a variety of contests, such as public speaking and marketing. The winners of the contests will receive their awards during the convention. Some students will also receive awards for projects completed during the year.

Current state officers will give their retiring addresses, and the new officer team will be introduced and installed.

High gas prices fuel demand for corn

Few people think of corn when they fill up their gas tanks, but rising gasoline prices are not just putting a strain on the nation's pocketbooks. An economist at New Mexico State University said they also are putting a strain on the nation's corn supply.

"As long as gas prices go up, corn prices will go up too," said Terry Crawford, an agricultural economics professor at NMSU. He said as the price of gasoline increases, so does the demand for alternative fuels such as ethanol, and its key ingredient, corn.

"Right now, the industry is rushing to build capacity to meet demand," he said.

For years, ethanol has been used as a gasoline additive in big cities in colder months. Ethanol helps gasoline burn cleaner and prevents air pollution. In recent years, the demand for ethanol has taken off with more need for its use as an additive and as more vehicles are being modified to run on E85, a fuel blend containing 85 percent ethanol. Government leaders have said they would like to see ethanol and other alternative fuels reduce the need for foreign oil.

"This past year the U.S. produced four to five billion gallons of ethanol," he said. "That took up 20 percent of the nation's corn crop. The industry would like to produce about seven times that amount ... so we're going to need more corn, or we need to come up with something else. In the short term, anywhere corn growers can grab land, they are taking it."

Crawford said corn growers intend to plant more than 90 million acres of corn for all purposes in 2007, up 15 percent from 2006.

As growers convert more land to corn, they are also affecting other crops as well. With less area available for other crops, there is a decrease in supply, translating to higher prices. Alfalfa and wheat growers are also earning more for their crops as demand increases from feed buyers finding it harder to purchase corn.

Suggestions from your rural veterinarian

The number of rural food animal veterinarians is diminishing rapidly nationwide. So if you still have one, it would be beneficial to know how to get the most from the one you have. Recently I read an article by a rural DVM entitled "Before you Call the Vet." In the interest of expanding on his suggestions, I will try to clear up and remove any confusion you might have.

Suggestion No. 1 – "If you have no intention of paying for your vet's services, do not call."

On the surface, this seems self-explanatory. But to be more specific it definitely includes the spotted owl that flew into your picture window, the neighbor's dog you hit with the truck trying to drive him off your sheep and the National Park buffalo that was wounded by a deer hunter in your backyard.

Suggestion No. 2 – "Do not call your veterinarian if what you want is illegal."

Say you have been quarantined by the State or Federal Livestock Department for Brucellosis, tuberculosis, B.S.E., scabies, having poor facilities or misplacing your last veterinary bill, you may be thinking of asking your vet to fudge the test results. A simple little thing, no one would know, you'd tip him 50 or 60 bucks, maybe promise to give him the hide off your next slipped calf. And, although the offer of the hide sounds tempting, don't bother. When veterinarians take their state boards, they have to promise to be honest. Suggestion No. 3 – "Always capture and identify the animal in question before calling the doctor."

C a p t u r e means in s o m e t h i n g smaller than 40 acres. "She's the one over by that scrub oak, Doc. The one just left of the red cow, or is that the mule?

Anyway, she's the solid black one, no, wait a minute ... Phil, which cow did you say had the lump on her jaw?"

Suggestion No. 4 – "Avoid blanket treatments – not all downer cows have milk fever, not all lame cows have footrot."

No amount of calcium/dextrose solution IV will cause a cow that has been hit by a feed truck, to stand and walk away! And no formaldehyde footbath or tetracycline injection will cure the steer that limps till you pull the nail out of his hoof.

The doctor's article included many more useful tips on how to better use your rural veterinarian, but it all boils down to this: Take care of your local cow vet. Treat him like visiting royalty. Pay him like you do your bookie. Remember his (or her) birthday, share your pheasant, quail, sweet corn, homemade cookies or 4-H pig sausage. And it's always nice to offer to co-sign his note for his house, his car or his bass boat. Because remember, he can always desert you for a comfortable cat and dog practice in someplace like Orlando or Cabo San Lucas!

about losing a more rural lifestyle. They noted that there are a number of people who own horses that they ride in the area.

With the addition of an esti-mated 1,200 dwelling units and a commercial sector planned for along Dunn Drive and the Bataan frontage road, the residents asked for more open space along the improved roadway so that people could still enjoy horse riding in the area. Resident Bridget Hayes added that she was concerned about the impact of development to the area's natural habitats for quail, rabbits, roadrunners and covotes

But councillor Steve Trow-bridge said the state trust lands are not the same as public lands. so they'll have to accept the loss of this open space to development. State Land Commissioner Pat Lyons is obligated to get the most money he can for the state lands released for development, he said.

In return for providing the large ponding area, the land commissioner is even more obligated to seek a good return on the other property being released for development, according to Trowbridge.

The ponding is expected to catch a lot of the water that last summer flooded East Mesa neighborhoods along the federal highway. "I put a high value to anything that supports the development of that pond," said councillor Gil Jones.

Under new proposed FEMA flood plain maps, the area will require homeowners to have flood insurance if the pond is not built, he said. The retention pond, he said, could take care of that concern.

With the commercial section likely to include stores, people won't have to drive into town "to get that gallon of milk," Jones added.

Steve Fishmann, who helped form the Quality Growth Alliance in reaction to the Vistas at Presidio development, cautioned that the mixed-use approach may not relieve as much of the traffic as city officials anticipate. "Some people are used to shopping in the big box stores and will drive into town anyway," he said. While the Waterfalls wasn't an annexation request, residents at the meeting brought up what they consider to be a short time frame for responding to notifications of the request for zoning changes the earliest mentioned was in March.

Mayor William "Bill" Mattiace said the city tries to notify residents as soon as possible, but the city's popularity is resulting in development proposals coming to council at a fast pace.

Scarlett Ayers, president of the Hacienda Acres Neighborhood Association, said she wasn't convinced that the ponding area would address all the flooding problems out there. When heavy rains hit, Dunn and Reynolds Drive will still resemble rivers, she said, "just not with so much mud.

Thurston said he would be willing to look at making adjust-ments to the commercial section along Dunn to lessen its penetration into the residential portion, but that will depend on retaining enough room for the businesses. Residents also were asking for a "buffer" or some kind of horse trail off to the side of the road, but Thurston said that will depend on city standards for streets and if the city can accommodate such a request.

In the end, the council unani-mously passed the changes. Councillor Ken Miyagishima, who had voted against the Vistas at Presidio that will be to the south of the Waterfalls development, said he approved this because of the retention pond and because of the project's development focus on affordable housing.

Thurston, who specializes in affordable housing developments, said he expects the cost of the affordable housing homes to range between $125,000 and $135,000. That is based on the city's average family annual income of $36,000 getting a mortgage at a 6.18 percent interest rate, he said.

In response to some residents asking for larger lot sizes on the western end so the new development will resemble the nearby existing homes, Mayor Pro Tem Dolores Connor said that would defeat the purpose of providing housing that a first-time homeowner can afford.

In terms of schools, the district isn't asking for any sites to be set aside for schools, Thurston said.

For the time being, Moongate Water is the supplier for the portion on the north side of the Bataan Memorial Highway and Jornada Water for the larger portion south of the highway. That could change, Thurston said, if the providers can deliver adequate water flow for fire protection.

The city will provide sewer service, which neighboring residents on septic tank systems may want to take advantage of, Jones said.

The Waterfalls development is expected to be built out over the next 10 years.

New Mexico Republicans mourn Mike Laurance

Mike Laurance, former chairman of the Doña Ana County Republican Party and former Southern Regional Political Director for the Republican Party of New Mexico, passed away in Las Cruces May 24.

As county chairman, he was instrumental in bringing about the indictment of Ruben Ceballos, a former Doña Ana County Clerk who was convicted of numerous counts of voter fraud. He routinely designed and printed the programs for the annual Doña Ana County Republican Party Lincoln Day Dinner at his own expense.

According to Republican Party of New Mexico First Vice Chairman Ceil Levatino, "Mike was a mentor to me and so many others. He remained committed to the Republican Party and involved in what we do until the very end. New Mexico lost one of its finest; we'll miss him very much."

Republican Party of New Mexico Chairman Allen Weh offered his condolences to Laurance's family, friends and Republican colleagues. "On behalf of Republicans throughout New Mexico, I salute Mike for his service to our party and his commitment to the principles on which we stand," he said. "His work was admirable, and he will be missed.'

City petitioned on country club development Neighboring residents ask officials

By TODD G. DICKSON

A group proposing to merge Las Cruces Country Club with Apodaca Park is petitioning city officials to make a deal to make the "premier park" happen.

to consider land swap or purchase

The country club, located adjacent to Apodaca Park, is being turned over to developer Philip Philippou, once he builds a tournament-class golf course in his Sierra Norte development on the northeast edge of the city.

Although the 18-hole golf course was carved out of what was once the desert outskirts of Las Cruces in 1928, it is now considered to be in the central core of the city – and a landmark of sorts with its three crosses facing the intersection of North Main Street and Solano Drive. Also, Apodaca Park's baseball stadium is often used by local teams.

But the country club in recent years has fallen on hard times, and its membership sees the future tournament course and new facilities as necessary steps to solvency.

The deal has Philippou acquiring the country club's 110 acres once he's built the new 200-acre golf course as Sierra Norte's centerpiece. Philippou has agreed to assume $1.1 million of the club's debt.

At the city council meeting on Tuesday, May 29, representatives for the Country Club Neighborhood Association presented a petition signed by almost 2,200 people calling for the city to offer a land swap – or even a land swap with money – for the city to acquire the property and merge it with Apodaca Park.

John Stevens, who presented the petition to the council, said his group recently met with Philippou, who has not yet drawn up plans for the country club development. While Philippou said he wasn't interested in donating the land to the city, he indicated he was open to the possibility of some kind of land swap, according to the neighborhood association representatives.

Such a deal would be of benefit to the city in its efforts to lure a minor league baseball team, said Connie Potter, also with the association.

Potter noted that she was recently browsing a copy of Money magazine, in which the city didn't make the list of desirable cities because, she conjectured, the magazine evaluated cities, in part, on the amount of "green space." Large inner-city parks are important to the attractiveness of a city, she said,

City Manager Terrence Moore cautioned that the land transfer to Philippou has yet to take place, so it still is owned by the country club. "There is still time to talk," Moore said.

The person to talk to, however, is Philippou, said golf enthusiast and New Mexico State University College of Busines Dean Garrey Carruthers, who brokered the deal with Philippou while on the country club's board of directors. The former governor said he now is acting as the club's liaison to Philippou.

Carruthers said the city should continue conversations on the question with Philippou.

As attractive as the "premier park" proposal is, Carruthers said the complicated deal will take a long time to close. In his role as liaison between the board of directors and the Philippou group, Carruthers said he would recommend to the board that it is more important to focus on completing negotiations with Philippou's group.

Once the transfer is completed, he said, the city could then negotiate with the developer, who could then arrange to give it to the city.

NMSU researchers build desalination prototype

Engineers say approach is low-cost, low-energy

A low-cost water desalination system developed by New Mexico State University engineers can convert saltwater to pure drinking water on a round-the-clock basis – and its energy needs are so low it could be powered by the waste heat of an air conditioning system.

A prototype built on the NMSU campus in Las Cruces can produce enough pure water continuously to supply a four-person household, said Nirmala Khandan, an environmental engineering professor in NMSU's Department of Civil Engineering.

New Mexico and other parts of the world have extensive brackish groundwater resources that could be tapped and purified to augment limited freshwater supplies, but traditional desalination processes such as reverse osmosis and electrodialysis consume significant amounts of energy.

This research project, funded by the NMSUbased New Mexico Water Resources Research Institute, explores the feasibility of using low-grade heat – such as solar energy or waste heat from a process such as refrigeration or air conditioning – to run a desalination process.

Khandan said the project builds on a process first developed by researchers in Florida that makes distillation of saline water possible at relatively low temperatures -45 to 50 degrees Celsius (113 to 122 degrees Fahrenheit) rather than the 60 to 100 C (140 to 212 F) required by #### most distillation processes.

The system utilizes the natural effects of gravity and atmospheric pressure to create a vacuum in which water can evaporate and condense at nearambient temperatures. Two 30-foot vertical tubes – one rising from a tank of saline water and the other from a tank of pure water – are connected by a horizontal tube. The barometric pressure of the tall water columns creates a vacuum in the headspace. At normal temperatures, Khandan said, evaporation from the pure-water side will travel to the saline side and condense as the system seeks equilibrium. "That's nature," he said. "We want it to go the other way."

Raising the temperature of the water in the headspace over the saline column slightly more than that of the freshwater column causes the flow to go in the other direction, so that pure, distilled water collects on one side and the brine concentrate is left behind in a separate container. A temperature increase of only 10 to 15 degrees is needed, Khandan said.

"That's the trick of this vacuum," he said. "We don't have to boil the water like normal distillation, so you can use low-grade heat like solar energy or waste heat from a diesel engine or some other source of waste heat."

Potentially a desalination system using this method could be coupled to a home's refrigerated air conditioning system, Khandan said.

"When you air condition a house, you are pumping the heat outside the house, and the heat is wasted into the atmosphere," he said. "We want to capture that heat and use it to power this desalination system."

The 30-foot-tall NMSU prototype is powered by a solar panel. Khandan and his research assistant, civil engineering doctoral student Veera Gnaneswar Gude, have modified the process originally developed by Florida researchers to incorporate a thermal energy storage device that allows the system to operate around-the-clock, using stored energy at night.

Reservoir Update

The mountain snow pack runoff still is peaking and last week the inflow added 15,834 acre-feet to the Elephant Butte Reservoir, according to the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation El Paso Division's reservoir advisory.

The Rio Grande flow at the San Marcial measuring station is 2,957 cubic-feet per second, or 92 percent of average for this time of year.

With the current flow volume, the bureau expects an increase of 8,000 acre-feet and a boost of half a foot for the Elephant Butte reservoir surface elevation before the river flow diminishes.

The increased inflow has boosted the Elephant Butte storage to 577,855 acre-feet, 30 percent of a full reservoir. The inflow also raised the reservoir level 1.14 feet to an elevation of 4,345 feet, 62 feet below the dam spillway, the bureau reported.

The Caballo Reservoir enjoyed an increase of 2,658 acre-feet to a total of 70,120 acre-feet or 31 percent of capacity.

New Mexico trails nation in recycling efforts

Las Cruces offers drop-off center

By MICHAEL SEARS For the Las Cruces Bulletin

According to an annual report, New Mexico severely trails the nation in recycling, although some officials maintain not all recycling activity is being recorded.

Three percent of trash statewide was recycled in 2005, compared to the national average of 32 percent, according to the 2006 New Mexico Solid Waste Annual Report.

New Mexico Environment Department Secretary Ron Curry said regardless of the low rate, his department continues to support recycling efforts across the state.

"Our goal is to ensure recycling becomes a way of life in New Mexico," Curry said.

New Mexicans produced 3,434,856 tons of waste in 2005 and recycled another 114,169 tons, or 3 percent of all disposed garbage, according to the report. In 2004, five percent of all disposed trash, or 157,986 tons, was recycled and diverted from the remaining 3,410,997 tons that was landfilled, according to the report.

E. Gifford Stack, outreach manager for the New Mexico Environment Department's Solid Waste Bureau, said there are several reasons why New Mexico's recycling rate is lower than the national average. He said one reason may be that there is considerably more recycling and diversion activity in New Mexico than is being reported or counted.

"Only the five largest recycling and three largest composting operations have been required to have solid waste permits and to report diversion tonnages to the Solid Waste Bureau," Stack said. "However, other sources indicate that more than 70 government units have recycling programs. There are 28 active composting operations, and there are numerous private sector recyclers."

New Mexico Recycling Coalition Executive Director English Bird said the report represents the best information available.

"Not every facility in the state reports great numbers," she said. "In our estimates, (the state's recycling rate) is somewhere between 5 and 10 percent."

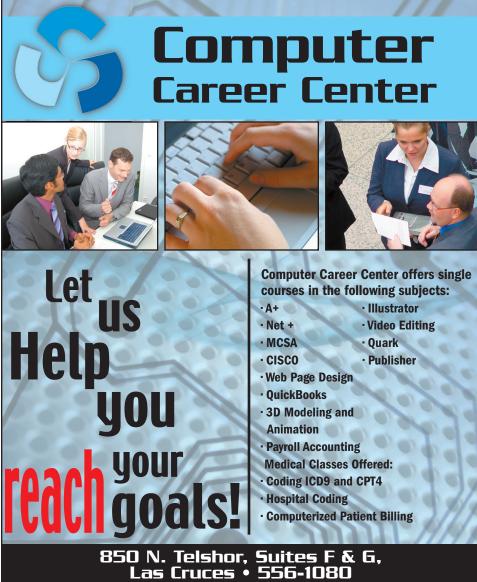

Stack said another reason recycling numbers in the state are low is because New Mexico is a net importer of waste from surrounding states as well as Mexico.

"While this waste is included in the total solid waste generated in New Mexico, there is little opportunity to recycle or divert these materials once it is in the state. Also, if recycling occurs prior to shipment into New Mexico, we do not count that volume in our state recycling rate," he said.

More than half of the 655,180 tons of garbage managed by Doña Ana County comes from other states, the largest amount of out-of-state waste disposal in New Mexico, according to the Environment Department's report. The report also shows that the county recycled 12,299 tons of refuse.

Stack said New Mexico's low population density makes recycling more challenging than in metropolitan areas with high population densities, adding New Mexico, like other Rocky Mountain States, does not have easy access to recycling markets.

"Recyclables must be consolidated in large quantities to create economies of scale, cover handling and long distance transportation costs, and improve marketability," he said. We've got to ship recyclables great distances and don't have easy access to overseas markets, unlike the high recycling rate states

www.computercareercenter.edu

along the east and west coasts."

Bird agreed long distances to markets and low population densities were largely to blame for the low recycling rate, but said there is also a lack of concern.

"People just don't see it as a priority," she said.

Stack said in many parts of the country, recycling is popular because it's an attractive alternative to high cost refuse disposal.

"In many areas of New Mexico, the cost per ton to landfill waste is less than the cost of diverting or recycling materials. The averaging tipping fee in New Mexico is $17 to $25 per ton, while other parts of the country average $100 or more per ton, said Stack.

Another hindering recycling efforts that both Bird and Stack pointed out was a lack of funding, either on the state or municipal level.

"As a whole, solid waste management systems and recycling efforts were and continue to be under-funded," Stack said.

According to the report, landfills statewide have an estimated 30 years of disposal capacity remaining. Despite this timeline and the low reported recycling rate, Stack said he doesn't think New Mexico will run out of refuse storage space any time soon.

"Solid waste management is not a growing problem in New Mexico in terms of available space to put the refuse," he said.

Recycling can and should play a role in waste management. Stack said.

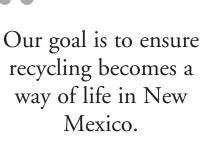

"The more recycling that takes place means that much less material going into the landfill, thereby extending the life of the landfill, thereby saving taxpayers' dollars,' he said

With new recycling efforts under way in Albuquerque and Santa Fe, Bird said she is hopeful New Mexicans will start recycling more

"Albuquerque wants to become a zero waste city, where recycling becomes a priority for citizens," she said. "It's going to take some time, probably just three to five years to get the word out on the street."

Bird said construction of a recycling processing plant called a material recovery facility, or MRF, was completed in February.

'They are not only collecting Santa Fe's recyclables, but they want to use a hub-andspoke model where lots of the small communities around Santa Fe will now have a place to take their recyclables," said Bird. "It can be like a jointly marketed event where we have more recyclables coming in."

RON CURRY, New Mexico Environment Department Secretary

Stack said recycling has been an on-going process in New Mexico for many years. He said in the 1960s, businesses started recycling cardboard for a number of reasons. "It kept it out of trash, thereby maintaining low disposal costs," he said. "Several recycling companies were getting into the business of recycling cardboard for markets in the United States and Mexico, thus creating competitive markets for cardboard."

Perhaps most importantly, he said, was the construction of a cardboard mill in Prewitt, near Grants.

"This mill, now owned by Durango-McKinley, is the only end-use facility for a recyclable material in the state. It offers a great market for cardboard," said Stack. While remains the most recycled item in New Mexico, Stack said paper is the single most common recyclable item that continues to be landfilled, representing 36 percent of material discarded. According to the report, if paper was recycled at a rate of 70 percent instead of the current 11 percent, the overall state recycling rate would increase to 30 percent.

Stack said there are plenty of alternatives to just throwing things away.

"Re-use is indeed an option rather than discarding an item," he said. "Some communities have communal bulletin boards or listings in the paper for items wanted and items for giveaway."

Another method Stack mentioned was "freecycle," or leaving items at a central location for someone who can put it to use.

Although Las Cruces does not have a recycling plant, the city recycling center provides basic drop-off services for newspapers, aluminum, corrugated cardboard, certain plastics, yard waste and household hazardous wastes. Bonnie Tafoya, recycling coordinator for the city recycling center, said many people don't know they also accept appliances, scrap metal and tires.

"One thing that concerns me is dumping waste in the desert, specifically old appli-ances," she said. "The only thing we take for a charge is tires, everything else at no charge."

The Las Cruces Recycling Center is open from 7 a.m. to 3:45 p.m. Monday through Friday and 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Saturdays. It is located at 2855 W. Amador Ave.

NMSU team lands $174,777 for nanoscience undergrads

Faculty members from New Mexico State University have been awarded a $174,777 grant intended to support development of a statewide network of faculty at research universities and community colleges that will work to integrate nanoscience into undergraduate biology and physics courses. The award is provided by the National Science Foundation through the Course, Curriculum and Laboratory Improvement Program.

Laboratory Improvement Program. A team of three New Mexico State University biology and physics professors and a biology professor from NMSU-Alamogordo is spearheading the project, the New Mexico Nanoscience Education Initiative (NMNEI).

They plan to collaborate with faculty at the New Mexico Institute of Mining and Technology, Northern New Mexico College, Dine College and the University of New Mexico in a series of workshops as the statewide network is formed. Participants will develop course materials that weave nanoscience into the curriculum and help students to integrate knowledge from different scientific fields, like biology and physics.

The NMSU team will lead the organization and coordination of the workshops and development and distribution of the course materials that are developed.

"Most importantly, this is to prepare our students for the 21st century," said team member Boris Kiefer, physics professor at NMSU. "Breaking down boundaries between traditionally different scientific units, in this particular case biology and physics, will help them to be more competitive in high-tech jobs."

Physics professor Jacob Urquidi, another member of the team, said while science often is compartmentalized into the different disciplines, one must step back to understand the overall processes at work when considering important questions in science. The project will be a good chance to develop ways to help undergraduates use such an approach.

Team member Vicente Lombraña, a biology professor at NMSU-Alamogordo, added that at community colleges, too, students usually think in terms of separate departments. Bridging the gap between departments can help lead students to more interdisciplinary opportunities.

The study of nanoscience is one way to create such a bridge between science departments.

"Nanoscience isn't included in many undergraduate textbooks," said Elba Serrano, professor of biology at NMSU and principal investigator for the project. But an understanding of nanoscience is critical for students who wish to be competitive for high-tech jobs after graduation, she said. The team plans to look at nanoscience education within three themes: health, water and energy. Serrano said the themes should help interest more students in the sciences.

Already, some of the professors are deciding how to incorporate the study of nanoscience into their curriculum.

"I am thinking about having modules that highlight certain developments in nanotechnology and nanobiotechnology," Kiefer said, "and how to relate concepts in biology, say, on a systems level as well as an atomic level, or a physical level and try to make the connections between these two ways of thinking more transparent to the students so they can more easily move in each field, as well as among different fields."

Serrano plans to offer an Honors College class (HON 115-01) for entering freshmen in the fall – The Art of Scientific Discovery. Within that will be a lab – Exploring the Invisible: Measurement at the Nanoscale – which will be developed as a module that other faculty can access online and use in their own classes.

Other ways of incorporating nanoscience will come from ideas developed by participants at workshops this summer. Serrano said the project will bring faculty from community colleges and four-year institutions across the state together in an equal partnership to discuss how they will educate students.

Šerrano said the project also is intended to motivate undergraduate students to pursue internship opportunities in nanoscience at government research facilities such as Los Alamos National Laboratory, Sandia National Laboratories, Oak Ridge National Laboratory and Argonne National Laboratory.

The first workshop will be held in July and will be hosted by the NMSU Honors College. More information about the New Mexico Nanoscience Education Initiative can be found at the project website: http://physics.nmsu. edu/~jurquidi/nmnei/nmnei.html.

Mesilla Valley Hospice, 299 Montana Ave., is nearing the goal of their "Continuing the Dream" capital campaign, which runs through the end of September.

MV Hospice nears $6 million capital campaign goal

More than 150 volunteers contributed to project

Mesilla Valley Hospice announced that as of May 30 it has reached 63 percent of its capital campaign goal, according to Terra Van Dyke, Mesilla Valley Hospice director of marketing.

Thanks to the efforts of the agency's campaign team of nearly 160 volunteers, $3,915,079 has already been raised for the agency's "Continuing the Dream" expansion project.

John and Amy Hummer, "Continuing the Dream" campaign co-chairs, said they are especially pleased with the widespread support Mesilla Valley Hospice has received for this campaign to date. One hundred percent of Mesilla Valley Hospice's employees, campaign steering committee members and board members have made personal financial contributions to the project. More than 50 percent of the individuals, businesses and organizations that have made gifts and pledges to "Continuing the Dream" had never before contributed to Mesilla Valley Hospice.

Amy Hummer, who was recently named Las Cruces Association of Realtors' Citizen of the Year, said, "I can really feel the momentum building as we head into the final months of this campaign. We now have just under $2.5 million remaining to be raised in 100 short days! If you have been considering a gift or pledge to 'Continuing the Dream,' now is the time to act. We need your help over the next 100 days to ensure that future generations of southern New Mexicans will receive compassionate care at the end of life and die with dignity."

According to Van Dyke, Mesilla Valley Hospice is working to raise a total of $4.7 million by June 30. She added the organization hopes to finish fund-raising the entire $6 million by the end of September.

A child's personality type does not determine the child's destiny Lack of motivation doesn't equal lack of ability

What can you tell us about the differences between Type I and Type II kids? I have one of each and want to understand them.

First, you should know that these characteristics are not highly correlated with intelligence. By that, I mean there are bright children who are at the flighty end of the scale, and there are slow-learning individuals who are highly motivated. The primary difference between them is a matter of temperament and maturity, although there are more smart kids in the Type I category.

Second, Type II children are not intrinsically inferior to Type I. Yes, it would be wonderful if every student used the talent he or she possessed to their best advantage. But each child is a unique individual. Kids don't fit the same mold - nor do they need to. Education is important today, and we want our boys and girls to go as far as they can academically. But let's keep our goals in proper perspective. It is possible that the low achiever will outperform the academic superstar in the long run. There are many examples of that occurring in the real world (Einstein, Edison, Eleanor Roosevelt, etc.). Don't write off that disorganized, apparently lazy kid as a lifelong loser. He may surprise you.

Third, you will never turn a Type II youngster into a Type I scholar by nagging, pushing, threatening and punishing. It isn't in him. If you try to squeeze him into something he's not, you will only produce aggravation for yourself and anger from the child. These attempts can fill a house with conflict. I have concluded that it is simply not worth the price it extracts.

I am certainly not recommending that children be allowed to float through life, avoiding responsibility and wasting their opportunities. My approach to the underachiever can be summarized in these suggestions:

1. He lacks the discipline to structure his life. Help him generate it. Systematize his study hours. Look over his homework to see that it is neat and complete, etc.

2. Maintain as close contact with the school as possible. The more you and your child's teacher communicate, the better. Only then can you provide the needed structure.

3. Avoid anger in the relationship. It does not help. Those parents who become most frustrated and irritated often believe their child's irresponsibility is a deliberate thing. Usually it is not. Consider the problem a matter of temperament rather than defiance.

4. Seek tutorial assistance if necessary to stay on track.

5. Having done what you can to help, accept what comes in return. Go with the flow and begin looking for other areas of success for your child.

Let me say it once more: Not every individual can be squeezed into the same mold. There is room in this world for the creative "souls" who long to breathe free. I'll bet some of you parents approached life from the same direction.

Should a college-educated woman feel that she has wasted her training if she chooses not to use it professionally? I mean, why should I bother to go through school to be a professional if I'm going to wind up raising kids and being a fulltime homemaker?

A person doesn't go to college just to prepare for a line of work -- or at least, that shouldn't be the reason for being there. The purpose for getting a college education is to broaden your world and enrich your intellectual life. Whether or not it leads to a career is not the point. Nothing invested in the cultivation of your own mind is ever really wasted. If you have the desire to learn and the opportunity to go to school, I think you should reach for it. Your career plans can be finalized later.

I love this game

What does a man gain for all his efforts he labors at under the sun? A generation goes and a generation comes, but the earth remains forever. — Ecclesiastes 1:3-4

My son's "15 and under" AAU baseketball team scrimmaged a "17 and under" team and were losing badly. Although it was painful to watch, I noticed two distinct styles of play that greatly affected the outcome.

Our team's guards repeatedly dribbled through obvious traps in the opponent's defense. Our coach switched players, changed the offense and diagramed simple plays to run, but often the player with the ball tried to dribble into oncoming pressure. Each player had different mechanical problems. One dribbled with his head down, and another wouldn't use both hands. Our coach spent all his time trying to correct mistakes.

On the other hand, I watched in awe as two skinny, sixfoot two-inch, barely 170-pound boys with a three -nch vertical leap doggedly worked for rebounding position, fought through picks and never stopped chasing even one loose ball. The older, better-skilled opponents outjumped and outran our younger, less-skilled team and were determined to work as hard as they could. It was a wouderful testimony of two players who refused to give up. Their coach did not particularly acknowledge or congratulate them for their hard work, but I wanted to give them a standing ovation.

How are the struggles in this game similar to the ones we face in life every day? In our battles with the enemy of our soul, I pray that we would act like those two boys who fought under the basket and played their hearts out. We must use our strengths in whatever measure God has given us to make an impact for Him on those around us.

1. Are you losing the spiritual battles in life because of a lack of effort?

2. How can you gain new strength for the battle? Read Isaiah 40:1-31.

3. Who do you know that will go to battle with you? Reach out to that person.

Being tan not ideal Fear of skin cancer drives increased use in sunscreen

Just in time for summer, new survey results show that the appeal of tanned skin may finally be waning - 53 percent of people surveyed believe they don't look better with a tan, and 63 percent say they are not more attracted to someone who is tan. Sixty-nine percent do not think a tan makes them look slimmer. The survey was conducted by GfK Roper Public Affairs and Media for iVillage in partnership with The Skin Cancer Foundation.

"These findings are encouraging," said Perry Robins, MD, president of The Skin Cancer Foundation. "Once people stop linking their self-esteem to tanned skin, we will really begin making headway in the fight against skin cancer. For now, there is still a lot of work to be done since an alarming number of people never use sunscreen.'

Forty percent of people revealed that they never use sunscreen and only 11 percent use an SPF 15 or higher daily. Forty-two percent of people are still getting sunburned at least once a year. A person's risk for melanoma (the most serious form of skin cancer) doubles if he or she has had five or more sunburns. The small percentage of people applying sunscreen daily is surprising, given that 58 percent of people say they are concerned about skin cancer. These findings demonstrate a lack of understanding that everyday incidental sun exposure, like intermittent, intense exposure (such as on beach vacations), seriously damages the skin over time. But, people are getting better about using sunscreen when outdoors - 59 percent of people use sunscreen at least occasionally - a 20 percent increase from a survey done in 2003.

Women still do a much better job than men when it comes to using sunscreen. Forty-seven percent of men say they never wear sunscreen, compared to 34 percent of women. "We have always made a point to communicate the dangers of overexposure to the sun, especially within our health and beauty channels," said Deborah Fine, president of iVillage. "While these new results show that women are typically more responsible about using sunscreen, there are still 34 percent not wearing any at all. We feel a sense of obligation to push the sun safety message to our millions of users.

The survey also revealed that 74 percent of those who wear sunscreen reapply at least every four to six hours or after swimming or sweating. While only 28 percent of people comply with the Foundation's recommendation to reapply sunscreen every two hours, at least people are reapplying once during the day.

A surprising 57 percent of women and 53 percent of men think they can spend more time in the sun if they use sunscreen, but The Skin Cancer Foundation advises against this. Sunscreen does not allow you to spend hours in the sun without risking damage since no sunscreen blocks 100 percent of UV rays, and most people do not apply it adequately or frequently enough.

There seems to be similar confusion about the prothere seems to be similar confusion about the pro-tective ability of clothing. Thirty-six percent of people think that clothing provides the same level of protection as sunscreen. A new academic review from Switzerland shows that clothing (hats, sunglasses and clothing made from certain fabrics) may be a more effective method of protection the time of elective actions of the time of elective action. protection. However, it depends on the type of clothing. An untreated white cotton T-shirt only provides the equiva-lent of an SPF 5 to 7. Darker, more densely woven fabrics provide a much higher SPF.

Fun in the sun The sun gives us all warmth and a sense of well being. In fact, the majority of people surveyed, 76 percent, say that being out in the sun makes them feel happy. As the leaders in sun safety education, The Skin Cancer Foundation encourages people to enjoy the outdoors, as long as they do so safely. Follow the Founda-tion's tips to reduce the risk of sunburn, skin damage and skin cancer:

- Seek the shade, especially between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Do not burn.
- Avoid tanning and UV tanning booths.
- Use a sunscreen with an SPF of 15 or higher every day.
- Apply 1 ounce (2 tbsp) total of sunscreen to all exposed areas, 30 minutes before going outside. Reapply every 2 hours or immediately after swimming or excessive sweating.
- Cover up with clothing, including a broad-brimmed hat and UV-blocking sunglasses
- Keep newborns out of the sun. Sunscreens should be used on babies over the age of 6 months.
- Examine your skin from head to toe every month.
- See your physician every year for a professional skin exam.

Health News Study links substance abuse, STDs Risky behavior magnifies

Risky behavior magnifies need for testing, says study

A grant from the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) is helping New Mexico State University educate students about alcohol and substance abuse as a factor in HIV/AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases. SAMHSA is a public health agency within the Department of Health and Human Services.

Lisa Dalton, an assistant professor in NMSU's School of Social Work, was awarded the $100,000 grant that can be renewed over three years. Grant money is used to pay for safe sex supplies and other educational materials, peer educator education and to sponsor special events.

People who drink heavily may be more likely to practice risky sex after drinking. High-risk sexual behaviors may include multiple sex partners, unprotected intercourse, sex with prostitutes or injection drug users, and the exchange of sex for money or drugs. Others may use alcohol to excuse socially unacceptable behavior or to reduce their conscious awareness of risk.

Drinking, risky sexual behavior and the "invincibility" mindset of many 18-to-25-year-olds on a college campus magnify the importance of HIV testing, said Dalton, who recommends different ways to reduce the stigma of HIV testing.

"You put it (HIV testing) in a context that normalizes it for them, like a classroom," she said. "Or you offer them extra credit to get tested. Just because they're getting tested doesn't mean they're promiscuous."

Sometimes a real-life example is the best way to get a point across. Dalton tells her classes that of 86 NMSU students who were recently tested for HIV/AIDS, one tested positive.

positive. "As we continue to gather these statistics, people will see that it is happening here," she said. "I also talk about the experiences at Camino de Vida Center for HIV Services. Their rate of transmission is growing among 18-to-25-yearolds, particularly the women, because men are having sex with men or prostitutes or IV-drug users and then going home and having sex with the women in their lives. And even though the man may be the only partner the woman has ever had, the woman is still turning up positive." Workers from Camino de Vida Center, 2805 Doral

Workers from Camino de Vida Center, 2805 Doral Court, come to campus to test students because legal considerations prevent peer educators from doing so. The peer educators' job is to visit classrooms, talk with students outside class and hand out literature on sexually transmitted diseases and substance abuse. Because peer educators tend to be closer in age than faculty members to their classmates, this is an effective way to get the message across, Dalton said.

The peer educators are graduate students who use the acronym "SHAG" for "Sexual Health Advocacy Group." Five graduate students – Shelly Oakes, the project manager; Janine Froehlich, the peer managers' trainer; Stacey Berry; Katy Eichenberg; and Javier Garcia – are SHAG members.

"We respect the fact that not everyone is having sex," Oakes said. "We're not there to shove the information down the students' throats. This is knowledge to use if you do decide to have sex. We respect the rights of the students, and if they don't want to ask certain questions in front of their classmates, they can come to the College of Health and Social Sciences on Fridays and ask the peer educators questions."

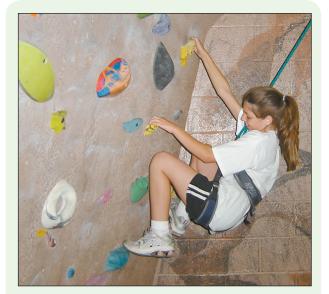

The work done by Dalton and the peer educators is "a great vehicle for building a university/community partnership," said Stephen Anderson, academic head of the NMSU School of Social Work.

Larry Olsen, associate dean for academics and research in the College of Health and Social Services, said NMSU has a responsibility to the population and that the university should be involved in stopping the spread of communicable diseases.

"It would be nice if we could say we don't have any communicable diseases on campus," Olsen said. Monthly HIV testing will continue in the College of

Lions Survivor Camp to be held at NMSU for children who are deaf or hard of hearing

The Lions Survivor Camp, a summer program aimed at providing physical activity to children who are deaf or hard of hearing and their hearing siblings, will be held June 4-8 at New Mexico State University.

The program is sponsored by grants from the Sunrise Lions Club and the New Mexico Commission for the Deaf and Hard of Hearing and donations from local businesses. It focuses on the development of physical motor skills and fitness by emphasizing balance, agility and cardiovascular endurance.

This is the fourth year the camp will be held and about 30 children are expected to participate.

"Our goal is to facilitate communication through play," said Jennifer Dahlgren, director of the Lions Survivor Camp. "Our program reaches not only campers, but impacts the whole family and the entire community."

The camp is named after the "Survivor" reality television series, which featured a deaf contestant during the first season. Following exercises that teach participants new physical skills, they will compete against one another to test their progress.

The children will participate in activities such as swimming, dancing, gymnastics, horseback riding and rock climbing, as well as outdoor and gymnasium games.

Participants can stay at NMSU from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. each day or stay overnight in the student dormitories. Overnight campers will participate in various evening activities including bowling, star gazing and feeding the ducks at the NMSU duck pond. Students also have constant access to adults and other children who can communicate with them, whatever their preferred communication mode.

"When our campers stay in the dorms here at NMSU, they start to ask questions about their futures," said Leah Geer, assistant director of the camp. "They see themselves going to college when they grow up."

All of the overnight campers and the majority of the day campers have received scholarships to attend the camp. The scholarships are provided by Lions Clubs throughout the state of New Mexico and private donors from the community. This program is part of NMSU's continuing out-

Contact lens solutions recalled

Acanthamoeba may cause eye infections

Advanced Medical Optics has voluntarily recalled its Complete  $^{\otimes}$  Moisture-Plus^{^{TM}} contact lens solutions over concerns that they may have contributed to serious eye infections.

In a news release The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), said that it completed interviews with 46 patients who had developed Acanthamoeba keratitis (AK) since January 2005. A total of 39 of these patients were soft contact lens wearers, 21 of whom reported using Complete® MoisturePlus<sup>TM</sup> products.

The CDC estimates a risk of at least seven times greater for those who used Complete® MoisturePLUS™ solution versus those who did not. While AMO continues to work with the CDC and the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) to further assess the data, it is acting with an abundance of caution to voluntarily recall Complete® MoisturePlus™ from the market according to the CDC.

There is no evidence to suggest that the recall is related to a product contamination issue, and this does not impact any of AMO's other contact lens care products, including hydrogen peroxide disinfecting solutions. As patient safety is paramount to AMO, the company is recalling the product from the marketplace, and encourages consumers to discontinue the use of AMO Complete® MoisturePlus™ until further information is available. Given the potential seriousness of the reported Acanthamoeba infections, AMO is working in close partnership with the CDC, the FDA and others to make sure consumers are aware of the need for proper contact lens disinfection and proper lens handling the release said.

Acanthamoeba is a microorganism commonly found in water, soil, sewage systems, cooling towers and heating/ventilation/air conditioning (HVAC) systems. Acanthamoeba keratitis (AK) is a rare but serious infection of the cornea. AK is usually found among people who improperly store, handle or disinfect their lenses (e.g., use tap water or homemade solutions for cleaning), swim or use hot tubs/shower while wearing lenses, come in contact with contaminated water, have minor damage to their corneas, or have previous corneal trauma.

Contact lens wearers should consult with their eye doctor if they have any of the following symptoms: eye pain, eye redness, blurred vision, sensitivity to light, sensation of something in the eye, and excessive tearing.

Consumers who believe they are in possession of the recalled product should discontinue use immediately and call 1-888-899-9183

Interim superintendent reviews public school system

By NATISHA HALES

Stressing the importance of a partnership between business and education, Las Cruces Public Schools Interim Superintendent Stan Rounds asked for help from members of the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce dur-ing its quarterly luncheon Thursday, May 24, which was attended by 137 members of the business community.

"Business and education need to work together to prepare graduates for the workforce or higher education," Rounds said. "We need you on the team. A dual approach to public schooling is mandatory, otherwise we fail." He asked the business community to assist with the dropout rate, policies and regulations and redesigning high schools, literally and figuratively. "We have to develop relationships with students, so the structure being included is relevant," he said. "Kids are better learners when they see a good learning environment. And we have to increase family involvement. That's easy to say, but it's hard to do." Specifically targeting the business community, Rounds suggested employers in Las Cruces who hire high school students should implement programs that encourage school attendance by rewarding those who attend 95 percent of class time. If students don't attend, they face the consequences.

"Let's have those talks," he said. "If these students don't attend class, they're not going to make it to work, either.'

To address the dropout rate, Rounds recommended strengthening the career cluster approach – calling for students to remain interested in school by deciding on a career path as early as eighth grade – and dual-enrollment programs, where high school students can attend Doña Ana Community College or New Mexico State University and earn college credit and high school credit for the same course.

He said too many students who have already fallen behind in attendance and passing courses, "give up and quit," and several programs need to be in place.

"We have to strengthen alternative programs such as credit recovery and other options," Rounds said. "We are going to need you as partners."

The business community can become partners by providing one-on-one mentoring relationships for students and working with the juvenile probation office, the district attorney's office, the courts and the New Mexico Legislature to solve truancy issues.

Rounds said he will do what he can by providing "transparent administration" and "being absolutely honest.

Rounds said the Board of Education will review school policies and regulations, beginning in January 2008. "The Legislature is going to have to help us," he said. Improving the local school system also calls for high school redesigning, both physically and in the curriculum, Rounds said. He said the site selection process has begun for a new high school, which will be open by August 2011 with construction beginning as early as next year.

"We must design buildings to meet our current and future workforce needs," he said. However, Rounds said no high school will have an "elite" status, and all high schools will be brought "up to speed," which includes meeting energy efficiency standards.

FRIDAY, JUNE 1, 2007

Stan Rounds, interim superintendent of Las Cruces Public Schools, stressed the importance of building a partnership between business and education at the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce quarterly luncheon May 24.

"We have to keep pace with the growth," he said. "We've passed the bond issue, and now we can begin to move forward. We need to maintain and repair existing schools. We need to hold hands and do it right.

Growers produce onions to fit consumer tastes

Researchers develop disease resistance

By MARVIN TESSNEER as Cruces Bulletin

Onion ring lovers will be pleased to learn that growers can custom-produce bulbs for processing into the tasty rings.

Chris Cramer, New Mexico State University onion special-ist, explained during Onion Field Day May 23 at the Fabian Garcia Research Center how growers can custom-grow onions to meet the demands of consumers and the market. "The commercial market determines the character of the onions," he told a group of visitors who were touring the fields. "They tell the growers, 'this is what we need that we can sell." And the growers say, 'this is the kind of onions the buyers want and that I need to grow so that I can sell them."

Before processors buy bulbs for onion rings, they want an assurance from the growers that 85 percent of the bulbs will have single centers that can be processed into onion rings, Cramer said.

Cramer and other onion breeders at the Research Center are incorporating other qualities that are requested by buyers, Cramer said:

- Red onions with darker, almost purple color and red-colored rings inside the bulbs.
- A tougher outer scale to prevent damage during grading. Round shapes on both the top and bottom of bulbs to make them more attractive to consumers.

Onion breeders can modify or combine qualities of onions to meet these buyers' demands.

The onion breeders also have developed varieties so that New Mexico growers can coordinate harvest with fresh onion market demands. New Mexico offers 26 different varieties of onions, many that were developed at NMSU, including the popular sweet onions.

Breeders also have developed several varieties that mature at different periods to supply buyers' orders throughout the summer, Cramer said.

New Mexico's onion harvest starts in late May and extends to early August. But harvesting requires close timing. Growers need a schedule to allow them to ship onions within 10 days of maturing, Cramer said.

Doña Ana is the leading onionproducing county in the state with an average of 4,000 acres, according to the latest New Mexico Agricultural Statistics booklet. In 2005, growers produced 2.2 million pounds of onions, received an average of $15.80 per hun-dredweight and had a crop value of $53.5 million.

One familiar observer at the field day was Joe Corgan, a retired NMSU horticulture professor, who had worked on onion breeding for 10 years.

"I always enjoy seeing what

NMSU assistant professor Manoj Shukla explains how the solar-powered field sensor measures and records soil salinity, moisture content and temperatures during Onion Field Day at the university.

varieties that Chris has developed and seeing people I've known for years," Corgan said between presentations.

The field program included a high-technology solar-powered field soil sensor.

In irrigated fields salt build-up can hamper plant development if the water does not drain down past the root zone. The sensor measures the salinity accumulation in the root zone, demonstrator Manoj Shukla said. Shukla is an assistant professor in Plant and Environmental Sciences.

The sensor also measures plant water stress and soil temperature.

"Temperature is the driving force in evaporation," Shukla said.

"It also influences root growth." The research center also is breeding onions for disease resistance. NMSU graduate student Ashish Saxena showed visitors onion bulbs in an experimental plot that is part of the research to develop varieties to resistant what growers know as fusarium basal rot.

The rot starts where the roots attach themselves to the bulb. Breeders are making progress to develop resistance to this disease, Saxena said.

PROFILE LeGretta Ross-Rawlins: Becoming a part of Las Cruces postal history Ross-Rawlins became first woman postmaster in nearly 70 years

By NATISHA HALES The Las Cruces Bulletin

LeGretta Ross-Rawlins has made history in Las Cruces.

The Las Cruces postmaster, who will be officially installed at 1 p.m. June 1 at City Hall, is the first female Las Cruces postmaster in 69 years and the first African-American to be named postmaster in Las Cruces.

"I really love the post office. I know it is one of the best companies to work for and be associated with," said Ross-Rawlins, who moved to Las Cruces in 2003. "It has one of the best diversity programs. That's exhibited in Las Cruces. We have a good mix."

Born and raised in Louisiana, Ross-Rawlins began her career with the U.S. Postal Service in 1994 as a city letter carrier in Lynnwood, Wash. From there, she was promoted to a confidential secretary position and started her first management position in Mercer Island, Wash., in 1998.

"My career has progressed fast since then," Ross-Rawlins said.

When she decided to further her career with the postal service outside of the Seattle area, she was manager of customer service.

"I knew it was time for me to leave," she said.

Because of her successful postal career, Ross-Rawlins had five interviews set up at different post offices around the country, including Las Cruces.

"The weather was beautiful, the employees were nice and the people were very open and friendly," she said of her first impression of Las Cruces. "I was thinking this wouldn't be such a bad place to work." The Las Cruces postal service had a oneyear opening for manager of customer service and Ross-Rawlins took the job before going to the remainder of her interviews. "Really and truly, I have not regretted my decision," she said.

After several temporary positions in Albuquerque and Denton, Texas, Ross-Rawlins returned to Las Cruces.

She became officer-in-charge in 2006, a rough time for the Las Cruces postal service, which includes 203 employees, 42 city routes, 36 rural routes and post offices at New Mexico State University, White Sands Missile Range and several locations throughout Las Cruces.

"We were getting daily complaints from customers and a lot of negative media attention," she said. "It was really disheartening to see because that's not what the post office represents." To redeem the local post office, Ross-

To redeem the local post office, Ross-Rawlins made several changes.

"I changed a lot of processes and perfected some that were in place but not fully utilized," she said.

That meant establishing good relationships with all local postal service unions, hiring new employees and establishing the Consumer Advocacy Council, which acts as a liaison for the community, the postal service and its customers.

"It opens the door for an open dialogue," she said.

As she's turned the local postal service around, Ross-Rawlins was recently named Las Cruces postmaster. Despite the history she's made, she said she's received nothing but positive feedback.

"I'm just happy for the opportunity to be postmaster for Las Cruces," she said. "I'm also happy because I'm a female. It's been a while since another has been in place. I've received a lot of positive responses from employees, and that's important. Employees put you in a position to be successful or not successful."

Part of that positive feedback is because of Ross-Rawlins' leadership style.

"I believe in leading by example," she said. "I try to do the right things as a human being. There are some obstacles, but I treat people the way I want to be treated."

She also tries to make herself visible to employees of all three post office shifts – day, evening and overnight.

"My door is always open," she said. "I don't want them to not follow protocol (when they have a complaint), but I am always here if they need to talk to me."

Ross-Rawlins' open-door policy is for the community as well. "If there's something a customer needs, and I can provide it, I'm here," she said. She's responding to the growth of the community by

"Rather than react to the growth, I want to be proactive," she said.

Becoming an integral part of the community outside of work also is important to Ross-Rawlins.

Though she's still becoming acquainted with the community and its organizations, Ross-Rawlins has joined the New Mexico Citizen Review Board, which meets on issues regarding child abuse and negligence. She has been a member for more than a year.

"I really like what they do," she said. "In a sense, it's a voice for the child. Their primary concern is the best interest of the child.

"My goal is to get more involved in charitable organizations. We're part of both chambers (the Greater Las Cruces Chamber of Commerce and the Hispano Chamber of Commerce de Las Cruces). I like anything dealing with children and anything to empower women." In addition to charitable organizations,

In addition to charitable organizations, Ross-Rawlins has had the chance to attend New Mexico State University basketball games, including the Western Athletic Conference tournament in March, and she's now interested in becoming a season ticket holder.

"It's such an advantage to have the university in town," she said. "Everything you need is pretty much right here."

As she becomes more involved in the community, Ross-Rawlins said there is no place she'd rather live.

"The cost of living is reasonable, and the people in general are friendly and courteous," she said. "My youngest can play down the street, and I'm not really worried.

"Las Cruces really grows on you."

Local, national home prices mixed in April

Sales rates drop 2.6 percent

According to reports from the National Association of Realtors (NAR), April new home sales across the United States were up 16.2 percent over the number of sales posted in March. That's the largest increase in 14 years. At about the same time, the NAR also announced that April sales of existing homes, townhomes and condominiums dropped 2.6 percent below the number of sales closed a month earlier.

Prices were also mixed across the United States with the $229,100 median price of a new home sold in April falling 11.1 percent or $28,605 from the March median of $257,705. That's the largest one-month decline ever recorded. Existing home prices increased by $3,300 or 1.5 percent in April, however, rising to $220,900 from March's $217,600 median sales price.

According to a May 28 report from the Las Cruces Association of Realtors, the 48 new home sales closed in April fell 20 units or 29.4 percent below the 68 units closed in March. The 188 existing home sales closed in April also represented a month-overmonth decline, falling 15 units or 11.3 percent below the 133 units closed in March.

The median sales price of new homes, townhomes and condominiums sold in the Las Cruces area during April rose to $234,175 from March's median sales price of $209,115. That's a $25,060, or 12 percent, increase in just one month. The $167,725 median sales price of an existing home sold in April dropped $7,275, or 4.2 percent, below the $175,000 median posted in March. The median price is where half the homes sold for more and half sold for less.

When it comes to the number of new and existing homes currently for sale, the numbers are again mixed. The 538,000 new homes, townhomes and condominiums currently offered for sale across the United States represent a 6.5-month supply at the current sales rate. In Las Cruces, our current inventory of 744 new homes pencils out to be a 12.8-month supply at our present sales rate.

The 4.2 million existing homes, townhomes and condominiums currently offered for sale across the United States represent an 8.4-month supply at our nation's current sales pace. The 808 existing homes that now make up our local Las Cruces existing home inventory represent a 7.7-month supply, according to the same pencil. What other indicators provide clues to

Domenici votes for non-defense funding Almost $120 billion to support NM programs

I'm pleased we've

finally got an accord

on raising the minimum wage...

SEN. PETE DOMENICI

U.S. Sen. Pete Domenici voted for final passage of a $119.9 billion emergency supplemental spending measure that is primarily intended to support U.S. military operations, but does include non-defense items that are of interest to New Mexico.

The U.S. Troop Readiness, Veterans' Care, Katrina Recovery, and Iraq Accountability Appropriations Act of 2007 (HR.2206), passed 80-14, now goes to President Bush. The bill provides about $17 billion in non-defense funding to address critical needs around the country. It also increases the federal minimum wage for the first time in 10 years - to $7.25 an hour over two years. "This is not a per-fect bill and a mixed bag in terms of the bag in terms of the nondefense items in the bill for New Mexico. But I am pleased that we are finally getting it done so that these resources will be available for critical needs in our state and around the nation," Domenici said. "I'm pleased we've finally got an accord on raising the minimum wage, and am pleased that funding has money to allow federal agencies to help New Mexico owns with water projects."

Domenici, a senior member of the Sen-ate Appropriations Committee, said the supplemental includes funding that will positively impact New Mexico, including $18 million in Bureau of Reclamation funding to address drought issues in the West, and another $7 million in Army Corps of Engineers funding to communities with temporary measures to restore drinking water. This Corps aid includes extending water intakes, hauling water, and the like.

As ranking member of the Senate appropriations subcommittee that funds the Bureau and Corps, Domenici worked to secure the added drought funding which has been used in New Mexico to assist small communities facing water crisis.

While the funding is not specifically designated for any particular project, Domenici noted that it could be used to ensure the completion of emergency water wells being drilled in New Mexico by the Bureau for small communities like Capitan, N.M. Another 11 water systems in New Mexico have identified a need for similar water well aid, including water user associations in Catron, Cibola, Grant, Luna, Otero, Rio Arriba, and Sandoval counties.

The bill also provides $465 million in emergency fire suppression funding – $370 million for the U.S. Forest Service and $95 million through the Bureau of Land Management.

"We have had a relatively wet spring in New Mexico, but the wildfire threat can change quickly in a matter of a few dry weeks. The existing pot of federal wildfire funding will be exhausted soon and we need to have this new funding in place,' Domenici said.

Despite efforts involving Domenici and Senator Jeff Bingaman to gain a five-year reauthorization for the Secure Rural Schools and Community Self-determination Act with a new distribution formula, the final bill includes just a simple one-year extension of the program. When the bill is signed into law, New Mexico counties will receive about $2.3 million in rural schools funding and about the same amount of Payment in Lieu of Taxes funding as they received last year. These payments will arrive between Sept. 30 and Dec. 31.

Related to the national laboratories in

New Mexico, the bill also provides $135 million in additional funding to support Department of Energy nonproliferation activities. Of interest for the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center at Artesia, the bill makes $3 million available to the FLETC system for training costs of new personnel.

As supported by Domenici during Senate debate, the final bill imposes a one-year implementation of a new regulation for the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid that would result in the reduction of millions of dollars in Medicaid payments to hospitals in New Mexico, including an estimated $15 million to $30 million annually for the Uni-versity of New Mexico Hospital.

While the bill does offer $3 billion in emergency agriculture aid including $16 million for dairy producers in disaster areas, Domenici said he is disappointed the final bill does not add any new funding for peanut storage and handling, a program used by peanut producers in eastern New Mexico. The lack of peanut storage and handling money in the supplemental will mean the lack of a funding baseline for supporting such a program in the upcoming 2007 Farm Bill reauthorization. Domenici said he will continue his work to address this situation.

Other Non-Defense Provisions of Interest to New Mexico:

MILC - One-month extension of MILC, a program Domenici opposes as being unfair to New Mexico dairy industry. Mexican Trucking – The agreement contains a provision requiring equal and simultaneous access for U.S. trucks in Mexico during the Department of Transportation's pilot project giving Mexican trucks greater access to U.S. roads. Forest Service Anti-Drug Effort $12 million for the implementation of a nationwide initiative to increase protection of national forest lands from drug-trafficking organizations, including funding for additional law enforcement personnel, training, equipment and cooperative agreements.

State Children's Health Insurance Program (SCHIP) - $650 million is to cover anticipated shortfalls in 14 states.

Minimum Wage Increase – The package increases the federal minimum wage to $7.25 an hour over 26 months.

Homeland Security Funding Highlights:

Aircraft Procurement - $75 million for Air and Marine Interdiction, Operations. Maintenance and Procurement. including funding for the procurement of additional fixed-wing aircraft, helicopters and unmanned aerial systems. Domenici is pushing for new Border Patrol helicoprs to serve New Mexico.

Federal Air Marshals - $5 million to address needs brought about by the threat level for the aviation sector, which has been at "orange" or "high" since August Air Marshals receive some training at FLETC-Artesia.

Emergency Management Perfor-mance Grants Program - $50 million to assist state and local governments in updating emergency plans. U.S. Citizenship & Immigration Services - $8 million to address a 170,000case backlog.

Since La Fiesta Bakery opened a little more than a year ago, owners Ray and Eugenia "Gina" Ortega have worked hard to make their business part of the community.

They started by offering products to satisfy every one of their customers. Ray Ortega is the main baker and bakes bolillos, hamburger buns, loaves of bread, cookies, pastries and sugar-free items. Once a week, Ray Ortega makes jalapeño-cheese bread and has a list of customers that special order it.

"We do a lot of everything. I love what I do," he said. "You have to love it in order to be successful."

Another baker comes in at 1 a.m. each morning to make yeast and cake donuts.

For most of his baking career, Ray Ortega worked in the bakery department of local supermarkets, but he said the actual "baking" wasn't being done any more. "There's no more good bakers," he said. "They just take it out of the box and heat it up. I make everything from scratch."

His love for baking came from his mother, who always baked biscochos, cookies and fudge during the holidays. His baking career, however, came as a surprise

In 1984, Ray Ortega began a job as a security officer for Save 'n' Gain - known today as the So:Lo grocery store that was demolished to make way for the new City Hall. He had gone to school with the bakery manager, who asked Ray if he was interested in working with him. He accepted the job and began his baking career.

With 23 years of baking experience behind them, the Ortegas opened La Fiesta Bakery at 455 N. Valley Drive, Suite 3.

"There was no bakery this side of town," Gina Ortega said. "This space was vacant for a long time."

Because the space only had framing - no floor and no walls - the Ortegas spent at least a year working with an architect and city regulations to open their commercial bakery.

"It was nice coming and starting with a clean place,' Ray Ortega said. "Other places weren't willing to do this with us.

Now that the business has been open, almost the entire family plays a part. The Ortegas' daughter, Vanessa, assists Gina with cake decorating, which is also done out of the business.

When ordered at least a day in advance, the two can create simple designs on sheet cakes for weddings, birthdays, quinceañeras and graduations.

Their youngest daughter Jessica, an elementary school student, also helps where she can, and Gina's father, Eugenio Ortega helps out by making all of the bakery's boxes.

Where many bakeries have sales for day-old items, the Ortegas use that as an opportunity to contribute to the community. They donate all of their day-old goods to the El Caldito Soup Kitchen and the Gospel Rescue Mission. The organization comes every morning at 7 a.m. to "pick it all up," Gina said. So far, the Ortegas say the company is growing successfully.

"We knew the business before we opened," Ray Ortega said. "I knew we'd be successful. We're still growing and will continue to grow.

As La Fiesta Bakery has grown, they have still kept competitive prices.

"We don't get prices on ingredients like the big stores do," Gina Ortega said. "I think we're way under for a smaller business. It's not a goal to just make money."

As for the future, the Ortegas hope to expand, but they face a bit of a challenge, they said. "The city is growing," Ray Ortega said. "We'd like to have two or three more outlets, but there are no more good bakers.<sup>2</sup>

Though they may not have all the help they need to expand, they'd still like everyone to come in and try their bakerv

"I wish everyone would try us," Gina Ortega said. "Try it, vou might like it. If you don't like it, I respect it. We come in and we do the best we can, and we all have different tastes."

How much life insurance do you need? Amount depends on individual circumstances

Here's a reliable rule of thumb when it comes to buying the right amount of life insurance: there is none. While it's easy for some so-called "experts" to say everybody needs life insurance protection equal to 10 or 20 times their income, the truth is everyone's situation is unique, and the amount you need can only be deter-mined by looking at your individual circumstances.

Having the wrong amount of life insurance can be devastating for your survivors and "one-size-fits-all" recommendations can leave you under protected. In fact, according to a 2004 report by the life insurance industry's research association LIMRA International, the average person is underinsured by more than $300,000. The study also found that 45 percent of widows (35 percent of widowers) say their spouse was inadequately insured. And one to two years after the death, half the widows and one third of the widowers are just getting by financially. As you try to decide how much life insurance you need to reach your personal and financial goals, there are many questions you need to ask yourself. Here are just a few:

- Is it important to ensure that your survivors whether they are parents, siblings, spouses, or children – can take care of their financial obligations after you're gone?
- Do you want to make sure those who depend on your income and support have the means to maintain their current standard of living?

- Is it important for you to make certain your children will have the money to pay for a quality education even if you are not around?
- How will your spouse cope with your death? Will he or she need to take time off to grieve after your death? Will he or she need assistance around your home? Will your spouse need counseling to recover?
- Will estate taxes be an issue? Add up the value of your home, cars, investments, pension, 401(k), life insurance proceeds and other assets. If the total exceeds the lifetime exclusion amount, your estate may be subject to estate taxes. Life insurance can help replace assets that may be lost to taxation.

Once you have determined your goals, there are many other factors that will have an impact on the amount of life insurance you need. Here are ten of them:

- Age and number of family members Blended families
- 2
- 3. Risk tolerance/investment objectives
- Existing planning, savings, life insurance, 4. investments, retirement programs or other assets
- Current and expected income
- Estate tax liability (current and expected)
- Current health
- Children with special needs 9.
- Expected inheritance 10. Budget

BENJAMIN A. LIECHTI Financial Representative

While this is not a complete list, it gives you an idea of the considerations that should be included in proper life insurance planning. The impact of these factors should also be measured in relation to each other.

Because there are so many considerations and everyone's situation is unique, answering the question of "how much do I need" is not always easy. Many people become overwhelmed and put-off buying any life insurance because they don't know how much or what kind they should have. Meeting with a trained financial professional who understands your individual needs and goals can help you determine the right amount that makes sense for you.

The bottom line is this: having or not having the right amount of life insurance when you die can have a dramatic impact on those who depend on you. It is a personal decision too important to rely on a "one-sizefits-all" recommendation. Don't make the mistake of having the right amount of life insurance ... for someone else's circumstances.

NMSU research chemist profiles food compounds for FDA

University lab first of seven to conduct tests

Each day as Omar Holguin reports to work at the Counter Terrorist Chemical Technology Laboratory at New Mexico State University, he is aware that he is helping to build a shield against bioterrorism.

As a research chemist, the Los Lunas High School graduate is involved in verifying toxic screening methods established by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

The FDA knows their methods work, they just want to know how well it works in different food scenarios," Holguin said. "There are many things that could compro-mise the food. These methods determine if the food has been contaminated with toxins.'

As the first lab in a chain of seven sites doing the testing, NMSU's chemists perform chromatography on food that they have spiked with toxins.

Chromatography is a technique used to separate the components of a chemical mixture by moving the mixture along a stationary material, such as gelatin. Different components of the mixture are caught by the material at different rates and form isolated bands that can then be analyzed.

"FDA has a list of toxins that they want to screen for," Holguin said. "We basically spike the food item, extract a sample, analyze it and report back to FDA if yes you can see them all, or no, you can't, there's a problem.'

Holguin says through this process he is creating a library of profiles of the components in the food. From the work Holguin is doing, FDA will have a database to compare unknown food compounds against.

"Food gives off a signature. As an example, we create profiles of different green chile from several regions or from different manufacturers to see if they always give off a certain signature," Holguin said. "Now when FDA encounters a food's component that might be an unknown, or they think might have chile in it, they can go to the profile and determine that it is or isn't chile." Holguin is the son of retired Valencia County Extension agent Frank and Rosa Holguin.

When Holguin graduated from Los Lunas High School in 1997 he did not expect to become a research chemist. He planned to go to NMSU and earn a degree in engineering. But those plans changed when he received a scholarship from NMSU's College of Agriculture and Home Economics and decided to pursue a degree in an agricultural field.

"I chose a degree that had the most overlap with engineering - environmental science. At the bachelor's degree level of that major you learn a little bit of everything - chemistry, biology and a little civil engineering," he said.

JANE MOORMAN I NMSU

Research chemist Omar Holguin profiles chemical compounds for U.S. Food and Drug Administration at New Mexico State University's Counter Terrorist Chemical Technology Laboratory.

'I chose to have my emphasis in environmental chemistry and my minor in chemistry.

As Holguin approached the next stage of his education graduate school - he didn't know he was on the verge of a major impact on his life and career.

In 2002, while trying to decide whether to do graduate work in engineering or environmental engineering, Holguin was approached by classmates about Professor Mary O'Connell's research group, which is working in plant chemistry and medicinal uses of plants.

"I thought the work they were doing was interesting, so I joined up with that group," he said. "It was a phenomenal while looking for anti-cancer properties of plants found While looking for anti-cancer properties of plants found in the Southwest, Holguin's research focused on datura, commonly called jimsonweed.

"We were working with a specific group of chemical classes called saponins. They are the ones responsible for foam in root beer or when you wash your hair with yucca root," he said. "We were interested in that group because literature says there might be anti-cancer qualities or have shown they have anti-cancer qualities. We knew they were a good medicinal plant because they have anti-fungal qualities

Holguin's work was to isolate and extract saponins from the plants.

"We developed from literature a specific way to isolate saponin. With further work, we discovered the chemical compound inhibits the growth of breast cancer cells in a petri dish," he said. The work was done with scientists at the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center in Seattle, Wash.

"Fred Hutchinson Center is where all of the anti-cancer studies are done for our group. All of the cell tissue work is done there because we don't have the facilities here. We ship samples up there and they test them. When we found out one sample had a lot of activity in it, our relationship became very close with one of their scientists," he said.

The scientists have decided that the anti-cancer compound isn't a sapinon, and are still working to determine the exact chemical structure.

"We will eventually crack it, but it's taken quite a bit of effort. But the outcome will be very promising," he said of the work he has continued while working at the Counter Terrorist Chemical Technology Lab.

Holguin made another discovery at O'Connell's molecular biology lab - the woman who would become his wife, Andrea Medina from Las Cruces.

"Andrea was working with medicinal plants of the Southwest," he said. "Her project was yerba mansa and its essential oils. Her research involved creating profiles of the oils to determine if it was always going to look the same or different depending on where it is found in the state.

One thing the yerba mansa research has verified, said Holguin, is that essential oils have a positive effect on cancer in female reproductive organs such as cervical and ovarian cancers.

The couple married on May 21, 2005, and they are now the proud parents of a daughter, Grace Elizabeth, who was born on Jan. 18 of this year.

Holguin has decided to continue his graduate work and plans to pursue his doctorate. He will begin working with Professor Champa Sengupta-Gopalan's group in May. Her program is working to improve the nutritional value of alfalfa.

"Because of the work and knowledge I gained with Dr. O'Connell's group it allowed me to land this job after my master's," he said of the FDA contract. "And while here, I've developed the knowledge and skills to work with this type of instrument, which takes a while to learn how to operate properly. Now I feel I can be an asset to Dr.

Gopalan during the research with alfalfa." What does the future hold for Holguin? He says he'd like to work in academia and teach while continuing to be a research chemist.

"I've worked with Dr. O'Connell's summer medicinal plant program and really enjoyed teaching," he said. "But I am really not sure what's in the future. Just as long as I keep learning, I'll be happy."

Butler selected to attend national leadership program

By Teri Hope

Start spreading the news award-winning Doña Ana County Commissioner Oscar Vásquez-Butler is going to New York, having been selected to participate in the Robert F. Wagner Graduate School of Public Service's 2007 County Leadership Institute (CLI) at New York University. It isn't surprising that Butler, who will represent New Mexico as one of only 30 county officials selected from a nationwide pool of applicants, was selected for this fourday program, beginning May 30. His efforts to build up the local area have made a strong impact not only on the Southwestern region but on an international level as well, only some of which have received recognition.

The CLI's program in New York this week focuses on helping elected officials address complex challenges. Serving as a member of the Southwestern Area Workforce Development Board (SAWDB), Butler has seen first hand and has worked to overcome the challenges that face the workforce in his jurisdiction. The CLI, a joint effort of the National Association of Counties and New York University, will build on Butler's capacity to identify and implement solutions that engage a broad network of interests, crossing boundaries that traditionally separate different sectors.

Butler, who also serves as president of the New Mexico Association of Counties, will expand on his already developed skills in effectively exercising leadership at the local, regional, state, and national levels. He will be collaborating on spe- $\operatorname{cific}$  work challenges with other participants, while attending presentations by NYU faculty. He will participate in peer-topeer learning sessions, where he will exchange ideas with his colleagues on the challenges of public leadership.

Meanwhile, one of the rare opportunities to recognize Butler for his efforts came on April 19.

when he received the 2007 Public Service Award from the Border Fair Housing Economic Justice

Center. The award recognized Butler as part of a two-day conference devoted to housing and economic justice issues along the border with Mexico for his efforts to promote "economic justice in his official and extra-official capacities (which) have made a great impact in promoting equality in our border communities," according to Anibal Olague, executive director of the Border Fair Housing Economic Justice Center. Butler said he was honored to receive the award, adding that he will continue to support the Border Fair Housing Economic Justice Center as it works on behalf of Doña Ana County's neediest residents.

Butler, however, is not in this business for the recognition, and obviously not for the money either. "Sometimes there's an event of such a magnitude that it moves one to take action." Butler said more than a year and a half ago. Touched by the events along the

"When you see the children and families who are destitute, who don't know where they are going, my heart just went out to them," Butler said. "We rarely experience things like this in America and it came upon all of us without warning.<sup>3</sup> Prompted by Lt. Governor Diane Denish's call on all New Mexicans to donate to the food bank's special hurricane relief fund in an effort to "save the living," Butler said he had wanted to do "whatever I can to alleviate their suffering." He noted that many people lost their homes, cars, loved ones, and "even their pets," adding that he had empathy for their situation.

New Mexico had its own disasters in 2006 with major flooding in Hatch, where recovery efforts continue. Noting that it is important to have emergency teams in place, Butler said he would like to think that the county has prepared for any and all types of disasters.

"What concerns me about the devastation along the Gulf Coast is the lack of immediate response or coordinated efforts from both the local and federal government," Butler said. "I still feel like I didn't give enough, but how much is enough?" And amid his ongoing sacrifice, Butler said "it was the least I could do.

New Mexico ranks 16th in national drivers test Study indicates 36 million licensed Americans may be unfit to drive Where are

Results from the 2007 GMAC Insurance National Drivers Test rank New Mexico drivers 16th in the nation for their driving knowledge. In 2006, the state ranked 43rd in the country.

The third annual survey by GMAC Insurance gauges driver knowledge of the rules of the road by testing licensed Americans on actual questions from state Department of Motor Vehicles license exams. Overall, results indicate that one in six drivers on the road, roughly 36 million licensed Americans, would not pass their written DMV exam if taken today. New Mexico drivers had an overall average score of 78.3 percent (70 percent or higher is required to pass the test); 16 percent of New Mexico respondents failed the test.

According to this year's results, New York drivers ousted Rhode Island by ranking last in all 50 states and the District of Columbia on driver knowledge. Idaho, on the other hand, topped the list and dethroned Oregon's tenure at first place as the most knowledgeable drivers in the United States. While the national average score was 77.1 percent, New Yorkers an average of 71 percent had and the highest failure rates (36 percent); Idaho had an average score of 81.7 percent. In general, geographical regions ranked similarly to previous years, with Arkansas, Minnesota, Kansas and Wisconsin ranking in the top five and New Jersey, Washington, D.C., Massachusetts and Rhode Island in the bottom five among all states.

"All Americans need a refresher course when it comes to basic driving rules," said Gary Kusumi, CEO and president of GMAC Insurance Personal Lines. "Being a safe driver is about conduct, judgment and knowledge. We're hoping this year's results encourage people to arm themselves with the knowledge they need to stay safe."

The test was administered by

TNS, a major market information resource and the world's largest provider of custom research and analysis. TNS is also a leader in social and political polling and a top supplier of consumer panel, media intelligence and Internet and TV and radio audience measurement services. A national sample of 5,175 total licensed respondents, aged 16-60+, balanced to the latest U.S. Census data were given a 20-question test simulating the experience of taking a standard written drivers test, with questions taken verbatim from DMV tests (but not state specific). For more information about TNS, please visit www.tnsglobal.com.

Doña Ana Arts Council Award Gala honors contributors to the local arts community

Seven winners speak about strength and importance of DAAC

By JOEL COURTNEY The Las Cruces Bulletin

Each year, the Doña Ana Arts Council (DAAC) honors those groups and individuals who have given so much to the Las Cruces arts community and have left a permanent mark on the fabric of the city.

The 2007 Awards Gala will be held from 6 p.m. to midnight Friday, June 1, at the Mesilla Valley Best Western Inn, 901 Avenida de Mesilla. The event, titled "Come Sail Away with DAAC," will be a more formal event than DAAC has hosted in previous years.

"This year, we wanted to make it more of a gala event, a full evening of dinner and dancing," said DAAC Executive Director Amy Johnson Bassford.

The awards include: the Papen Family Award, sponsored by Glenn Cutter Jewelers & Gallery and Jo-an Smith; the Newcomers Award, sponsored by EXIT Realty Horizons; the Arts in Education Award, sponsored by White's Music Box; the Community Arts Award, sponsored by Innovative Touch; and the Art in Public Places Award, sponsored by Ron Nims and Studio D Architects.

The Papen Family Award is recognition of a lifetime of service to the local art community, according to Bassford. The winner of this year's Papen Family Award is Rosemary McLoughlin, who has served with several organizations through her time in Las Cruces. "There's a real sense of support in this community," McLoughlin said.

When contemplating leaving the city in 1977 after graduating from New Mexico State University, she said, "This someday will be a fantastic art center, and I want to be here when it happens."

Through her storytelling, teaching and support of art programs, McLoughlin is partially responsible for exposing a whole generation of Las Crucens to the arts. The winner of the 2007 Newcomers Award, given to someone who has lived in Doña Ana County for less than five years, is painter and printmaker Ouida Touchon.

Touchon has served on the NMSU Art Gallery board and was a founding member of La Prensa/Southwest Printmakers. She has opened her own studio/storefront, Cruz Nopal Studio on Picacho Avenue.

"I've been here four years, and it has taken me this long to make headway in the community," Touchon said. "I'm optimistic about this town."

The 2007 Arts in Education Award was given to Laurie Norman. Norman has taught music education for the past 26 years, the last 16 of which were at Tombaugh > elementary. "Teaching kids helps keep me young. They make my life a joy," she said.

> Norman, who has been playing piano since the age of 3, said she found her calling to teach during high school when she joined the Future Teachers of America.

> Since then, she has become instrumental in the forming of the Doña Ana Youth Choir, as well as being the music teacher of three "Hey Mozart" – a child composition contest – winners.

> "If I have one child love music as much as me, I was successful,"

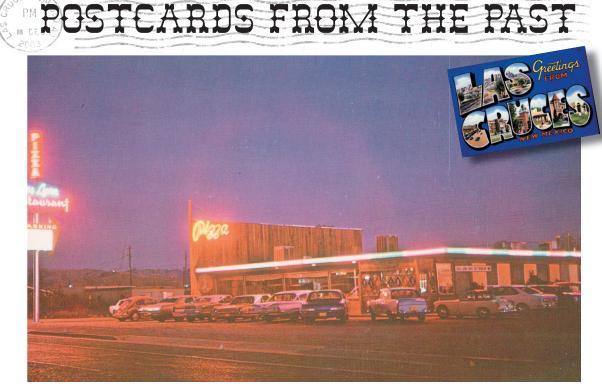

Norman said. The 2007 Community Arts Award winners are the founding members of the Las Cruces Friends of Chamber Music: John Pleasant, Barbara Toth and Joseph Sylvan.

The idea for the group was originally concocted by Pleasant and Sylvan, but it wasn't until Toth joined that things began in earnest.

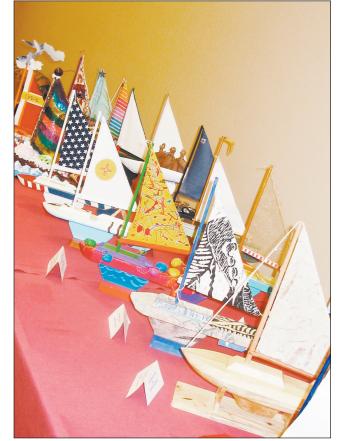

"The most fortunate thing we ever did was when we asked Barb to play in the first concert we did," said Pleasant.

"Barb is a complete organizational wizard," added Sylvan.

Through the Friends of Chamber Music, the trio has helped coordinate 44 musical performances over the last year.

Toth said that in addition to providing the opportunity for the community to hear international-caliber musicians through the Friends, the group also works to provide music at venues such as the Good Samaritan Village and for opening receptions of local art galleries.

"We love partnering with others. We want to not just spread music, but encourage all art," Pleasant said.

The winner of the newest honor, the Art in Public Places Award, is Jackie Clark.

Clark is not only a gifted painter, but also has worked in stained glass for the past 28 years, and she is currently making 31 stained glass windows for the new chapel of Mesilla Valley Hospice.

"It's a big thrill for me. This is my second life," said Jackie Clark. "I've been a wife and a mother; it's just a fluke that I ended up doing stained glass."

Although every winner has done their part for the art community, each of them echoed that none of their work would have been possible were it not for the Doña Ana Arts Council.

"The (Doña Ana) Arts Council is here to provide services and support the arts. We do the awards to bring awareness to the community," said Bassford.

"We (Las Cruces Friends of Chamber Music) couldn't exist without their support," said Sylvan.

"I think they're vital to this community," Touchon said. "Anything they can do to support the arts is just critical for our culture."

Ralph Nader is the subject of the documentary "An Unreasonable Man," which is screening at the Fountain Theatre.

Fighting for the unreasonable men

Mantel and Skrovan tell Nader's story up to 2000 election

GRADE

"An Unreasonable Man" opens Friday, June 1, at the Fountain Theatre. Two hours long, it is not rated, but has nothing too touchy openation too touchy, except maybe for political agendas.

By JEFF BERG For the Las Cruces Bulletin

A maxim by George Bernard Shaw opens the interesting and effective documentary, "An Unreasonable Man." Shaw says: "The reasonable man adapts himself to the world; the unreasonable man persists in trying to adapt the world to himself. Therefore all progress depends on the unreasonable man.'

It is a good analogy for Ralph Nader, the subject of this film, which is nicely co-directed by Henriette Mantel, a former employee of Nader, and Steve Skrovan, whose previous work was in stand-up comedy and comedy show writing.

It is not a tribute to Nader, but rather an informative piece of work that covers his pre-presidential candidate career in its first hour and uses the last hour to cover all of the bases of his Green Party candidacy in the 2000 election.

Nader, who of course first came into the public eye with his work against the auto industry in the mid-1960s, has a public record that remains spotless. His work has all been for the good of society, working through the system rather than against it. His list of credentials includes involvement in at least eight major federal consumer protection laws and also the births of agencies such as the Environmental Protection Aagency and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

Mantel and Skroven interview almost 50 different people in compiling the information for this documentary, including Nader and his two sisters, and less likely acquaintances such as Pat Buchanan and former television talk show host Phil Donahue.

Never one to steer away from adversity, Nader is the target in an eyebrow-cocking scene taking place shortly after Nader's accusations against General Motors are made public. It seems that GM was so desperate to find some "dirt" on Ralph, that they sent attractive women to follow him around, encountering him at such places as a grocery store and inviting him to partake in who knows what. The sight of the then president of GM apologizing for this ridiculous stunt during a hearing before the U.S.

Senate is truly a scene to behold. Nader's continued influence is shown, as Nader's Raiders are formed soon after, and through hard work and harder honesty, they continue to make life rough for big business and narrow-minded government alike.

Nader's political "career," such as it has been, actually started before 2000 when he was a casual presidential candidate for a couple of elections. But it was in 2000, when he headed the Green Party ticket, when people finally took notice.

Mantel and Skrovan use a lot of archival footage as they follow parts of Nader's campaign, including a huge event that took place at Madison Square Garden, which attracted such "progressive" perform-ers as Tim Robbins, Susan Sarandon and filmmaker Michael Moore. My emphasis on "progressive" is because these well-meaning folks embarrass themselves with their backpedaling and caustic remarks when Nader runs again in '04.

As most of us probably remember, after the election was over, Nader took a lot of grief, not to mention a pie in the face, as being the reason that Al Gore lost. Several of the interviewees rant on camera about what has happened since then and drop the blame directly on Nader's toes. To help balance that, we also get reminders that polls indicated that most of the people that voted for Nader wouldn't have voted for either Gore or Bush in 2000 – they came out to vote for Nader, period. Other data notes that both Arkansas and Tennessee, states that everyone thought Gore would win, were lost. Not to mention that Nader only spent three days cam-paigning in Florida during the whole election run.

The film could have used a few less of the sound-bitepe interviews that sometimes make it a bit difficult to follow. One talking head is quickly replaced by another, and the amount of heads introduced also makes it a bit confusing. It would also have been interesting to hear from Nader's running mate in the election, LaDonna Harris, the former chief of the Cherokee Nation.

All in all, this is a very well done and balanced film. No fawning, no pedestal hopping, and it gently draws the conclusion that in 2000, this "unreasonable man" was trying to introduce a true option into our current form of corrupt and hyperventilating government. "An Unreasonable Man" is screened nightly at 7:30 p.m., with a Sunday matinee at 2:30 p.m. only. The Fountain Theatre is located at 2469 Calle de Guadalupe in Mesilla

Film noir comes to the desert

'White Sands' brings mystery to southern N.M.

The CineMatinee film at the Fountain Theatre for Saturday, June 2, will be "White Sands" (1992, 101 minutes, Rated R).

The beautiful cinematography in "White Sands" could serve as a travel guide to various places around New Mexico, including Estancia, Taos, Santa Fe, Alamogordo and Las Cruces.

This somewhat "film noir" movie stars Willem Dafoe, Samuel L. Jackson, Mickey Rourke and Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio.

A suicide found in the desert with $500,000 cash stuffed in a briefcase makes Sheriff Ray Dolezal (Dafoe) curious. What was the dead man up to?

Sensing that if he follows the money, he'll find crime at the end of the trail, Dolezal assumes the dead man's identity. He soon discovers the deceased was a paid informant for an FBI agent who is trailing an arms dealer who works with an intermediary. Dolezal begins to suspect that he's being set up to take a big fall when the money is sto-len from him and the dead girlman's gets after friend killed she tells him that her beau had a partner in a scheme to steal the money from the FBI.

Will his enemies discover his real identity? Will the FBI agent turn on him? Is Rourke really with the CIA? Will he get back the money? Each and every Saturday afternoon, a quality, talking picture (with an occasional silent one) will be screened at the Fountain Theatre in Mesilla. The general theme of this ongoing series is life in the West, which could mean the "new" West, the Old West, the historical West or anything in between.

All screenings begin at 1:30 p.m., unless other-wise noted. Admission is $3 or free for Mesilla Valley Film Society members. The Fountain Theatre is located at 2469 Calle de Guadalupe, one block south of the plaza.

THE LAS CRUCES BULLETIN THEATER

Fern (Kelsey Bowman) shows off her flexability to brother-in-law Joey (Danny Manning) in "The Walkers," which is playing at the Black Box Theatre through June 10.

A split personality family 'The Walkers' has audiences looking inward

REVIEW BY JOEL COURTNEY The Las Cruces Bulletin

"The Walkers," by Barbara Lindsay and directed by Alice Little, opened Friday, May 25, at the Black Box Theatre, 430 N. Downtown Mall. The script was originally sent to No Strings Theatre Company's Artistic Director Ceil Herman and was read for possible production by NSTC and Sin Fronteras/Writers Without Borders.

Lindsay, who currently lives in Seattle, Wash., has written 45 plays, many of which have been produced.

According to the playwright's notes: "All of my plays ask, one way or another, 'What will it cost me to be true to myself?' That's the central question in my work because it is the cen. life." "The central question in my and Grace and their girls Laura and Fern, like many people, keep their true feelings hidden throughout the day. Unlike others, the family acts on their true feelings while they're sleepwalking.

Boyd (Bob Singer), the bitter father of the dysfunctional family, spends the day yelling at his wife, despite her continued efforts to treat him like a king. At night, Boyd lives out his life as a true romantic, dancing the night away with his wife. Grace (Susie Whelpley), who lives to please by day, is angry and violent by night.

Fern (Kelsey Bowman), the youngest member of the family, tries to act like a mature and sexual woman in front of people, but at night reverts to the scared little girl she is inside.

Laura (Cortney Newtson) is much like her father, angry by day and a hopeless romantic by night. She is recently separated from her husband Joey (Danny Manning), but her nighttime activities lead her to call Joey and tell him to not let her go.

The family seems content to go through their roles as usual until Joey arrives looking to win back Laura's heart. He alone seems aware that something is amiss in the household, with very strange behaviors occurring early in the morning that no one else seems to remember

The final piece that helps unravel the family comes from Evan (Mark Steffen), a friend of Boyd's that marries often due to the "disappearances" of his previous wives.

Chaos in the fam-ily ensues, but by the end, some have come to terms with their true selves, and others have buried it even deeper.

This production introduces a few new faces to NSTC, many of which are high school students who perform the complicated dialogue of the piece magnificently. Many scenes require two separate conversations to run concurrently with fine timing.

Singer and Whelpley, who display the chemistry a dysfunctional couple would pos-sess, play the love-hate relationship of Boyd and Grace expertly.

Bowman easily pulls off the young girl pretending to be an adult, switching from teasing her brother-in-law to clutching a pillow like a teddy bear.

The relationship of Newtson and Manning borders on abusive, with Newtson drawing Manning back before berating him away again. Manning shows the frustration of someone in love that is stuck in a no-win situation. As he screams and jumps up and down, the audience can't help but feel for him while growing frustrated with Newtson's character's refusal to allow anyone close to her.

Evan (Mark Steffen) prepares to smother

Grace (Susie Whelpley).

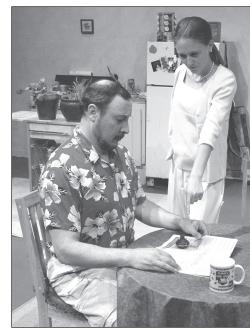

Another fine performance, the story contained in "The Walkers" forces everyone to take a look at how their actions reflect - or don't reflect – their true feelings. Although hardly anyone can say they always act in accordance with their heart, the story of "The Walkers" makes one wonder if they could do more to be themselves.

"The Walkers" contin-ues to play at the Black Box Theatre through June 10. Performances of "The Walkers" are Fridays and Saturdays at 8 p.m., Sundays, June 3 and 10, at 2:30 p.m. and Thursday, June 7, at 7 p.m.

'MURDER ON THE WHITE SANDS' SIGNING

Who murdered Col. Albert Jennings Fountain and his son in January of 1896 as they traveled home from Lincoln by wagon? A jury of the day came to no conclusion and no bodies were ever found. Fountain brought 8-year-old Henry with him when he went to Lincoln to testify before a grand jury. His testimony secured a number of indictments on cattle rustling charges against several prominent local "hard characters." Fountain understood that he was taking his life into his own hands by testifying even before he left his home in Mesilla. But, as his wife said, "No one would be so evil as to kill an eight-year-old child." So, Henry accompanied his father. During their stay in Lincoln, Fountain felt uneasy. On the final day of the court session, he received a crude death threat. But he was not a man who was easily intimidated. Father and son never made it home.

Corey Recko has some ideas about this legendary cold case from the Old West. Recko is the author of "Murder on the White Sands: the Disappearance of Albert and Henry Fountain" to be released on May 30 by the University of North Texas Press. You can hear Recko talk about his work, the first full book-length treatment of this crime, at Thomas Branigan Memorial Library, 200 E. Picacho, on Tuesday June 5, at 7 p.m. After the presentation, he will have copies of the book on hand for purchase and signing. #### La Posta de Mesilla Earliest records indicate the La Posta Compound was originally constructed in the 1840s. Sam Bean and his brother, Roy Bean, operated a freight and passenger service line to Pinos Altos from this building in the 1850s. After the Civil War, the La Posta Compound became an important stop on the Butterfield Stagecoach Line. During the 1870s and 1880s, the Corn Exchange Hotel, one of the finest lodges in the Southwest, operated from the building. John Davis, the proprietor of the hotel, died in the late 1870s. However, his wife, Augustina, continued to operate the hotel, a restaurant and other businesses in the building until the early 1900s. La Posta de Mesilla Restaurant originated in the northwest corner of the building in 1939 by Katy Griggs Camunez. The business has grown to become one of the most famous restaurants in the Southwest, occupying 10,000 square feet of the La Posta Compound, which now includes several shops. After Katy passed away, the prosperity and business was acquired by a great niece, Jerean Camunez Hutchinson and her husband Tom, a.k.a. "Hutch who continue to offer the same quality food and great service in the unique dining environment Katy created. The restaurant offers many fine traditional "New Mexico" Mexican dishes made from century-old recipes hand-ed down over the years from the Fountain, Chavez and Griggs families. One of their most famous dishes, the "Tostada Compuesta," originated at La Posta in 1939. This dish consists of a toasted corn tortilla cup filled with frijoles, red chile con carne, topped with chopped lettuce, dice tomatoes and grated Cheddar cheese. If you prefer green chile, the "locals" favorite is the sour cream enchilada. This dish consists of corn tortillas smothered with green chile sauce, topped with grated cheddar cheese or monterey jack cheese and sour cream, and includes refritos, rice and our very tasty Mexican slaw. Other La Posta favorites include their compuesta salad, red enchiladas, folded and rolled tacos, beef or chicken flautas, chile rellenos, as well as a wonderful selection of desserts including their very delicious homemade flan and empanadas. Perhaps one of their best kept secrets is their tasty succulent steaks, served with your choice of baked potato, red enchilada, or steak fries, and includes a side of their green chile (of course!)

The staff of La Posta welcomes you to Mesilía and hope you enjoy your visit!

A woman on the verge Ouida Touchon's prints keep an ancient art fresh

By JOEL COURTNEY The Las Cruces Bulletin

Ouida Touchon, a relative newcomer to the Las Cruces area, not only brought her printmaking skill to the City of the Crosses, but she also helped form the first print-making organization in the area. Touchon is a founding member of La

Prensa/Southwest Printmakers, an affiliation of independent artists committed to the art of printmaking. The eight professional artists of La Prensa work in virtually all print media, including intaglio, relief prints, screenprinting, monoprints and monotypes. In addition to producing limited editions of their work, La Prensa is also dedicated to promoting printmaking as an art form, providing hands-on workshops for young artists and developing a collector's base for prints.

Touchon works as a relief printmaker, the oldest form of printmaking. Touchon explained she carves an image into wood, which is then painted and printed onto paper.

"I like the press," she said. "You start with a preconceived idea, but when you finish it's beyond your imaginings. It adds an element of surprise.

Touchon is currently working on her "Great Bodies of Water" print series, which features rivers and oceans, as well as paintings from her recent three-week visit to Spain.

Touchon said she first became interested in printmaking while receiving her bachelor's of fine arts in painting from Kansas City Art Institute. She later earned her master's of fine arts from University of Missouri-Kansas City.

She said she has been interested in painting "since day one," and still paints at times

Touchon said she enjoys plein air, or painting outdoors, and she will compete in a "paint out" with the New Mexico Plein Air Painters, which will exhibit the work of the paint out on Aug. 3 at the Mark Zoeller Studios in Santa Fe.

Recently, Touchon moved her studio from her Mesilla home to the Cruz Nopal Studio on Picacho Avenue to allow room for her second press. She also sells her work out of her storefront/studio, although she said she would prefer to focus on creating her art and have another person deal with selling her work.

"I'm so passionate about my work. I'm driven," she said. "I'm a woman on the verge.

Touchon said she originally wanted to move to Mexico, but realized that she couldn't make a living there. She began couldn't make a living there. She began researching a city with good weather, a decent amount of light, proximity to Mexico, a Spanish-speaking community, and a strong art community. "When you put all that together, it spells Las Cruces," she said.

In addition to her studio work, Touchon sat on the board of the New Mexico State University gallery for several years. She spearheaded the group's work to take the gallery's retablo collection and make them into notecards, which were sold as a fund-raiser. The retablo notecards are still vailable for sale at the NMSU gallery.

When the NMSU gallery raffled two tickets to Chicago for their "Kick Up Your Heels in Chicago" fund-raiser, Touchon donated an original woodcut titled "Kick up your heels in Chicago" for 30 limited prints, event posters and postcards.

Touchon explained she had to leave the NMSU gallery board because she needed more time to create her work. Touchon was recently awarded the 2007 Newcomer Award by the Doña Ana Arts Council for her contributions to the Las Cruces art community.

To see more of Ouida Touchon's work, visit Cruz Nopal Studio, located at 1175 W. Picacho Ave. Her work can also be seen online at www. ouidatouchon.com.

RIO GRANDE THEATRE

The Rio Grande Theatre Galleries will

Painting by Alan Carrison at the Rio Grande Theatre Galleries feature Alan Carrison as their feature artist for June. Working primarily in oils, watercolors and acrylics, Alan Carrison has been creating landscapes for more than fifteen years. His inspiration comes from photographs he and his wife have taken on their travels throughout New Mexico, other parts of the United States and Mexico. Often using an impressionistic style, Carrison attempts to capture the essence and emotions, the mood and the splendors of the landscapes he loves to paint. Largely self-taught, he has taken numerous classes with local artist, Sally Quillin as well as a workshop with Russian artists and El Paso residents, Aleksander and Lubya Titovets. A nationally certified well driller and pump installer, Carrison turned to landscape painting as a means of expressing his love of nature. The Rio Grande Theatre galleries, located in the lobby of the historic Rio Grande Theatre at 211 N. Downtown Mall, are open Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., and 9 a.m. to noon on Saturdays. Gallery volunteers are needed; contact the Doña Ana Arts Council office at 523-6403 for

Our Lady of Guadalupe is one of the most popular symbols of the Americas, especially in Mexico where she is the best known and most loved of all saints. "Morena Moderna: La Virgen de Guadalupe," a photo essay by Diana Molina, opens at the Branigan Cultural Center with a reception from 5 to 7 p.m. on Friday, June 1. The exhibit is sponsored in part by the Frame & Art Center.

Like so many elements of Mexican culture, the image of Our Lady of Guadalupe is found throughout the Southwest. Finding the presence of La Virgen throughout her travels in Mexico and the United States, photographer Diana Molina began to document the modern-day phenomenon of "La Morena Moderna." Her depictions of the symbol reveal the occurrence and historical evolution of the image of Our Lady of Guadalupe within contemporary society, politics and media. Through photography, Molina shows portrayals of La Virgen in a variety of locations ranging from the Basilica in Mexico City to Washington, D.C., as well as close to home at Tortugas and in El Paso.

Photographer, filmmaker and writer Diana Molina is a native of El Paso and currently resides in New Mexico, on the Texas and Mexico border. She began photography while abroad in Europe, where she lived for 10 years. Focusing on cultural, political and environmental issues, Molina has published feature articles for numerous international magazines, including Elle, Esquire, GEO, GQ, Marie Claire, National Geographic Traveler and Vogue. Exhibits of her photography have been shown at venues including the Art Museum of the Americas in Washington, D.C., the Institute of Texan Cultures in San Antonio, and the Albuquerque Museum of Natural History and Science. Most recently her documentary photography was part of a three-artist exhibit, "North & South of the Border," at the Las Cruces Museum of Art.

FARM & RANCH HERITAGE MUSEUM

Three legendary saddle makers are featured in the New Mexico Farm & Ranch Heritage Museum's ongoing exhibit, "Legends in Leather: Saddle Makers of the Southwest." For the next year, the historic saddle makers section of the extensive exhibit features three men who played a big part in the booming saddle-making industry in Pueblo, Colo., during the late-1800s and early-1900s. The Museum is displaying the leather work of Samuel Caldwell Gallup, Robert Thompson Frazier and Tom Flynn. While several saddle makers operated shops in Pueblo during this time, Gallup, Frazier and Flynn are most associated and well-known with this community and the Pueblo Saddle. The three men were key figures in the origination and manufacture of the Pueblo Saddle style. All three saddleries made virtually identical saddles, differing only in the custom leather carving decoration and the reputation behind the name stamped on the cantle. All three companies reached their business peak in the 1910s and saw a decline in the 1920s. Ultimately, only Frazier's company survived the Great Depression. The Museum is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and from noon to 5 p.m. on Sunday. Admission is $5 for adults, $3 for senior citizens and $2 for children ages 5 to 17. ### Main Street Gallery gets new lease on life

New gallery owner brings mix of artists to newly remodeled building

By JOEL COURTNEY The Las Cruces Bulletin

After housing photographic artwork for nearly three years, the Main Street Gallery has headed in a new direction under its new owner Jim Turrentine.

"I felt it was time for some new stuff," Turrentine said. "The photography had just run its course."

To fill the gallery with new work, Turrentine said he asked some of his favorite artists that he had seen in other local venue.

Now the gallery features the work of Penny Duncklee, whose Southwest realist watercolor iststudies interplay color, light and composition; the colorful and capricious designs of Daphne Wirth-Daphne lin's desert dwellers: the non-objective, deeply tex-tured and colorful dreamscapes of Ruth Drayer; the soft and sublime southern New Mexico scenes of Mark Ploss; the fused glassworks and July and jewelry of Lois

Wilson; and the sculpted "spirit minders" of Lynn Unangst, adorned with natural materials, textiles and intricate beadwork.

"I wanted a nice blend of artists and artwork," Turrentine said.

To help keep the work in the Main Street Gallery fresh, Turrentine began a guest artist program, which begins Friday, June 1. Each guest artist will be featured for 60 days.

"Through the persistence of gallery owners and all the performing arts venues, Downtown has bloomed into the arts and cultural center of our city as evidenced by the success of the Main Street Downtown Ramble – the second most regularly attended event Downtown," he said.

According to Turrentine, the galleries of the Downtown area create a synergy where problems like competition are never an issue.

In addition to running the Main Street Gallery, Turrentine also purchased The Big Picture Studio Custom Digital Image Lab, which is run out of the same storefront, from Jack Welch in July 2006. The Big Picture creates large-format, colormatched digital reproductions for artists, photographers and businesses using state-of-theart technology.

art technology. He said he spent the first six months as owner training himself and promoting The Big Picture as a business, but now feels that it is time to switch his efforts over to the Main Street Gallery.

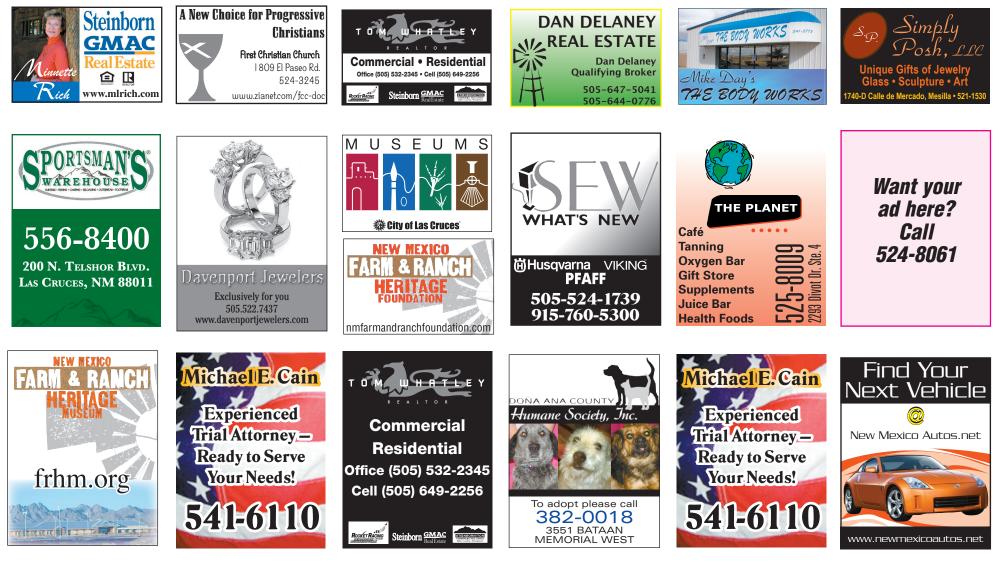

Turrentine said he recently recommitted to the next three years off his nine-year lease option, despite the fact that the reopening of Main Street may provide problems, especially for businesses such as his that have no "back door entrance" to Water Street.

"I am excited about being Downtown and look forward to the opening of Main Street and seeing other new businesses repopulate downtown. I remember when Main Street was alive and vital to the well being of Las Cruces," he said.

Swimming takes serious dedication

NIKI RHYNES I The Las Cruces Bulletin Las Cruces Aquatic Team member Rachel Dixon takes a breather Tuesday while practicing in the NMSU swimming pool.

LCAT coach says NM is behind nationally By CRAIG MASSEY The Las Cruces Bulletin

From the wide range of their ages, to the varied times of their practices, to the immense dedication that they share, members of the Las Cruces Aquatic Team often deal in extremes.

For the most part, competitive swimmers are different than "land dwellers," and LCAT coach Sean Muncie sees it every day.

"It takes a special breed of person to become a swimmer," said Muncie. "They wake up early every day to practice while their friends are socializing. I don't have one swimmer over 14 who is under a 3.0 grade-point average. Swimmers typically are very good students. There is no downtime. You have to get it done. They learn at a very young age how to manage their time properly.

Muncie is in his first year as head coach of the Las Cruces team. A former University of Alabama swimmer, he came to Las Cruces from North Carolina in September and has dedicated himself to the goal of inspiring the local swimmers to be competitive on a national level. He says New Mexico has some work to do.

"This was about what I expected," he said. "New Mexico is behind the other states and hasn't been competitive for a long, long time. That's something I would like to help change. The kids have bought into it and are excited about it.'

Muncie's job as head coach is a full-time position, and he works under the direction of a board of directors. He has four parttime assistant coaches on his staff. Las Cruces Aquatic Team is in its 42nd year and has over 100 swimmers, ranging in age from 4-year-old Sarah Gormley to 70-something-year-old Jordan Wolle.

There are two seasons for the local swimmers - the short-course season (25yards) during the school year and the long-course season (50-meters) during the summer. The athletes work out at two sites - the New Mexico State University pools and Frenger Pool. "We have different groups for different ages and different levels of ability," said Muncie. "Our doors are always open. Anyone can come in anytime and watch practice and see what it's about and see if they want to join." The LCAT's upper-level swimmers sometimes practice as much as eight times a week, often as early as 6 a.m. to get in a workout before school. "It's progressive," said Muncie. "The young kids may practice three days a week, then five, then six. As you get older,

Aggies go global in tennis Ball leans on foreign talent to build program

On the women's team there's Anne Fagegaltier and Estelle Guillaumond from France.

Croatia's Roman Stoisavljevic is listed on the men's roster. We're talking New Mexico State University tennis here. Heavy on foreign names hard to spell, let alone say.

Fortunately for coach Don Ball, unfortunately for journalists, Stoisavljević has two more years of eligibility.

And, no, he does not have a published nickname. We checked. All joking aside, Ball's foreign athletes are good students and good citizens with a good work ethic.

The Aggies' Gustave Diep from Paris, France, owns a 4.0 GPA and was recently voted Freshman Rookie of the Year in the Mountain Region.

Ball says that eight out of 10 players on the women's team are foreign born and bred. It's eight to one in favor of foreigners on the men's side.

Ball denies a media grudge. He says foreign players are rapidly becoming the norm in college tennis

"Teams like Stanford and Georgia stick pretty much to players from the U.S.," he said. "But they have great facilities and great traditions. Most of us can't compete for the best American players with schools like that.'

Ball says that most foreign players jump at the chance to play in the United States. European countries seldom offer athletic scholarships. "The focus is on academics,' Ball said. "Tennis players have to play on club teams. In the U.S. they get the chance for a college degree and play on a college team in the process.

"Foreign athletes in several sports are competing more and more in our country. Look at basketball. Baseball. And soccer.

"Tennis is such a universal sport, it's not unusual to have so many players from different countries.

I asked Ball if he spoke French. Or Spanish. Or whatever they speak in Croa-tia where he also recruits. "No," he said. "All of our players speak English. They pretty much have to before they can get accepted here."

Ball, like many in coaching, has developed solid connections outside U.S. borders. "We have good Mexican connections," he said. "We're working hard recruiting the Baltic area. Players in Croatia and Russia are looking for a way out."

Foreign players like southern New Mexico's predominately warm, dry weather. And the Aggies' new tennis facility is an alluring sight.

One that Ball calls, "best in the Southwest. It features 12 post-tension courts that won't crack or come apart with the heat," he said. "The courts are well lit. One-hundred-foot candles. Most tennis courts have 40-foot candles so you can see how strong our lighting is. We could televise our matches at night with no problem."

TV is not on the radar yet. Both the Aggie men's and women's teams finished fifth in the WAC tournament this year. "We were young," Ball said. "We'll be much better next season, I promise you."

The Aggies' coach is traveling through Europe as we speak, in search of future talent.

I asked while recruiting if he might consider the working press. Look for players with names we can spell without leaning on NMSU's press guide.

"That's why we print one," he said.

Aggie tennis coach Don Ball relies heavily on foreign players.

Three Aggies make All-WAC in baseball Harvey, Leghorn, Scaperotta named to second team

The Western Athletic Conference announced the 2007 All-WAC base-ball teams and awards, selected by the league's head coaches, and three New Mexico State players were named to the second team. Junior catcher Joe Leghorn

junior fielder

Diego,

NM (Victoria, B.C.), center-Joseph Scaperotta (San Diego, Calif.) and senior utility HARVEY player Adam Harvey (Celina, Texas) were all named to the All-WAC second team.

"Although we didn't do as well as we would have liked to, it's good that these players got these honors, because it shows that we do have talent on our team," head coach Rocky Ward said.

This was а first for all three players. Leghorn and Scaperotta will get a chance to come back to NMSU and do it again next season. Although Leghorn played 38 of the Aggies' 56 games because of a season ending injury, he was still able to put up numbers worthy of placing him on the second team. Leghorn was considered one of the most consistent hitters on the team. "Leghorn is the kind of player that when we found out we lost him for the season, we knew it would affect our team," Ward said. "We knew we could count on him day in and day out to perform well for us." Leghorn was also the first player in Aggie history to hit for the cycle as he achieved the feat in a 10-9 comeback win against Sacramento State on Sunday, March 18. Leghorn hit a single in the first inning, a home run in the fourth, a double in the sixth and a triple in the ninth to complete the cycle. Scaperotta, a transfer from San Diego State University, also got his first All-WAC honor this past season ,putting up the best numbers on the team. He won the Aggie triple-crown for the 2007 season, coming up with a .341 batting average, 10 home runs and 59 RBI. Scaperotta had 21 multiple hit games and 16 multiple RBI games.

Against Hawai'i on April 28, Harvey hit two bombs to lead the Aggies to an 8-6 victory. He was also placed on the Brooks Wallace Award watch list before the season started. The Brooks Wallace award goes to the top-player in the nation and is presented by the College Baseball Foundation.

"I'm very proud of Adam and what he's done for us here at NMSU," Ward said.

The Aggies finished 22-34 over-all and 6-18 in conference in 2007. They had the most RBI (21) and runs (23) in a game of any WAC team this season.

Tools of the trade

Some quick reviews of swing assist gear

Do golfers benefit from swing aids and training aids? Of course they do. Do they get better using these devices?

Some do. The prevailing sentiment among golf experts seems to be that better players are the ones who are most likely to use swing assist equipment, and that these players tend to improve. The opposite is probably true for poorer golfers. Tour pro Vijay Singh is a good example of "the good get better" idea. He is known on tour as a gadget guru for his willingness to try nearly anything that might help him improve. On the range he always has some sort of swing gadget. I'm a believer in training apparatus for the same reason a carpenter uses a ruler and draws a pencil line on the board before he cuts with the saw. We need a guide to perform best. Over the years I've seen literally thousands of swing and training devices. Recently a few have stood out as truly deserving of mention. The product reviews below are worthy of your consideration. Power Hitter – The Power Hitter is a weighted driver that you can actually hit balls with. Both the head and the shaft are weighted which makes you slow your swing down and make a more defined transition from backswing to downswing. The club is made by Momentus Golf (www.momentusgolf.com), the originators of weighted warm-up clubs. The idea is to load weight and make you stronger. When you're stronger you'll hit it farther. It's like using dumbbells on the range. One of my golf friends now swears by this trainer, and since he got one a few months ago I have never seen him on the range without it. I can attest that he hits his drives longer, too.

his drives longer, too. Breakmaster – Have you ever thought you read the break of a putt perfectly only to hit the putt and find that you were way off? Many tour pros and tour caddies have solved the problem of accurately identifying break of putts on sloped greens in practice rounds by using a small, amazing digital level called a Breakmaster (www.exelys. com). Of course, your putter is the biggest force propelling the ball toward the hole, but as your putt slows down, gravity takes over, and the putt breaks much more. To determine the degree of break, or degree of uphill or downhill slope, simply set the Breakmaster on the green surface and it will give a read out in degrees of angle of the break. While useful only for practicing, the Breakmaster is great for checking what the green is doing close to the hole. It cannot determine grass grain and it can't be used in tournament play. Heavy Putter – The Heavy Putter is exactly what it sounds like. Heavy. Both the head and the handle are weighted. The advantages, based on lab and field tests, are better results from off-center hits, and a more consistent stroke path as the head moves into the ball. This club is legal and dozens of players on all four tours are now using Heavy Putters (www.heavyputter.com). It's also useful as a putting trainer. After having played a few rounds with my Heavy Putter, I could instantly see how beneficial this club will be for someone struggling with a case of the yips. You have to move everything very slowly; the weight prevents jerking. I also noticed the benefit of the greater mass on slower greens. There are now a dozen models of Heavy Putter to choose from, and they come with three sets of interchangeable weights.

Ontrac – This is the all-in-one alignment and putting guide that wins the versatility and cleverness award. In fact, their slogan is: "one tool; every club; every shot; get your game ontrac." The device is a deceptively simple three-sided, two-foot long triangular tube, that can be used with full swings, chipping and with putting. The Ontrac pod (www.ontracgolf. com) sits on the ground either outside or inside your swing line, and can help with both takeaway and swing path. You can place it in a sand bunker, pile some sand on it, and voila, you have a perfect sand explosion trainer. This compact device even comes with its own folding putting mirror that you place on the ground for instant eye and shoulder alignment feedback. I found it to be an excellent guide to help keep my putter square to the line on shorter putts, inside of eight feet.

Most fully stocked golf retail stores carry swing aid and training products, as do catalog and online merchandisers like Golfsmith and The Golf Warehouse. Another good source for practice equipment is www.golfaroundtheworld.com. If you really want to overload on golf training gizmos and gimmicks simply watch the Golf Channel during the day, and snooze through the infomercials. The bottom line is that some of these tools are really great, and others are junk. We report, you decide.

Who's the best roundball team to come from NMSU? Pete makes picks for the tops in basketball

Ole Pete has put out the campfire for the summer and is sittin' in the shade of a Mexican elder tree these days, ponderin' about which Aggie basketball team could be called the most successful. Not just in terms of wins but lookin' at all of the variables that can mean success in the world of sports and the rest of life itself.

It would be easy to say the Final Four team from 1970 was the most successful with 27 wins and a trio of guys who eventually played in the NBA. Jimmy Collins also coached his Illinois-Chicago Flames into the NCAA postseason and Charley Cross is now a big shot with Turner Broadcasting. John Burgess and Chito Reyes have been strong leaders in various school situations and Roy Neal is a member of the police force back in New York.

A strong contender in Pete's mind is the Aggies' 1999 conference champion and NCAA entrant. There were five pros on that team, one minister, a couple of school teachers and a Donald Trump in the mak-ing that all suited up in the Crimson and White. To refresh your memories, Charles Gosa, Daveeno Hines, Billy Keyes, Eric Channing and Mikko Noopila all played or are still playin' pro ball eight years after that championship year. Noopila has retired from the play for pay routine and is working in the local banking industry while raising his daughter Maja alongside workload increases and they learn to deal with it step by step. By the time they reach high school, it's old hat."

Recently, 11 LCAT swimmers competed in a sectionals competition in Seattle, including teen-aged standouts such as Rachel Dixon, Jorgi Hobson, Sheila Salopek, Josh Thomson and two of Muncie's young assistant coaches – Alex Reed and Luke Egnaczak.

"It was a tough meet and few kids qualify for that," Muncie said. "It was a good experience for all of them.

Muncie said education is a key component to helping the LCAT improve on a state and regional level and New Mexico improve on a national level.

"People don't understand what goes into competitive swimming," he said. "Swimming is sort of pushed aside and then every four years, everyone tunes in to watch the Olympics. They forget that these athletes have been training every day for the past four years.'

Muncie says there's a sense of pride in being a swimmer in the U.S., whether you are a member of a local club team or the Olympic team.

"USA swimming is undefeated in the past 45 years," he said. "Nobody beats us in the medal count. We're all on the same team and it's the best team in the world. There are only a select few that represent us."

his bride Mari.

Channing, Keyes and Gosa were among the top 20 Aggies as determined by the fans vote. Add to that Aaron Brodt, Brad Bestor and Zach Norvell. Brodt did not have the deft offense shooting touch that was needed, but he is busy making his clients fortunes grow in his home of Scottsdale. Brodt was a top student even though he was dyslexia. Bestor had a major role in two of the team's most stirring wins – the '99 title game versus Boise State and a come from behind A strong contender victory at UTEP the following year. When Bestor got into a shooting groove draining three pointers school teacher and coach in Milwaukee and like Brodt, Keyes and Noopila, has married and is enjoying a calmer way of life. When the Aggies had

Billy Keyes, they had lots of victories. He continues to toil in Europe while his wife and children keep the home fires burning in the off season for the likeable Chicago native. Reverend Channing played a couple of years of pro hoops in Europe and now is saving souls rather than wearin' them out on the hardwoods. Daveeno remains a quiet man grabbing rebounds and a pro check overseas, and Norvell works with kids in the Chi-town school system. There is a lot more to making a living and that is making a life. This group of Aggies seems to be succeeding in a big way.

... all of the indicators

of enthusiasm for the

Aggies' product have never been higher ...

Fans get ready for "Aggie Country." It is a lot healthier than Marlboro Country but the athletics department hopes it is just as habit forming. "Aggie Country" is an attempt to galvanize the business community and fans on game day. Start-ing soon, the marketing department will be talking to businesses about the promotion, which involves hoisting an 'Aggie Country" logo flag on all game days. Having employees wear shirts that sport the brand and other logo type reminders that will reinforce the fact that game day is here and it is time for fans to head to the stadium, the arena, the field or wherever to support New Mexi-co State's teams. The idea was hatched in meetings led by interim marketing coordinator Bump Elliott and conceptually designed by alumni Aaron Vil-lalobos. After getting the design specifics approved by the powers that be, launch time is set for the summer months. After years of traveling to places like

Auburn, Ala., Gainesville, Fla., and Lawrence, Kan., and seeing those towns turned out in school colors and pride the idea resonated that, "We can do that here." The cost to business owners is the production of the flags, shirts and other items, and the hope is that there will be a greater sense of stewardship in the home team. This is something that Artesia has been doing for several years for its Bulldogs high school teams. If you visit the southeastern New Mexico town on a Friday, there isn't anything left to your imagination about what is going on.

Too often NMSU students and adult fans alike have remained unaware of when the games are being played despite heavy coverage in the local media and publicity on campus. The sight of the "Aggie Country" logo on the fore front when you are getting a sand-wich or a tube of tooth paste will act as a less than subliminal reminder of the existence of the Aggies being in action.

An old idea is about to be resurrected as well. The crimson light in the tower of Joe Skeen Hall was supposed to shine after every school victory but somewhere along the way it was never fully implemented by the school. Timing is every thing and all of the indicators of enthusiasm for the Aggies' product have never been higher across the board. It is another example of getting the pump primed to catch all of the new residents who have allegiances to teams where they came from but are willing to add NMSU to their rooting favorites since they have put roots in the Mesilla Vallev desert.

The new wave of leadership continues to massage the beaches of indifference of the laid back town. Catch the drift or you'll be left at the dock watching the ship sail out to the victory party.

Las Cruces Aquatic Team coaches Sean Muncie and Alex Reed kneel in front of their team at the NMSU swimming pool.

White Sands Golf Club, the ultimate getaway course Voted Sun Country's best nine-hole facility

You won't find any course that's prettier

than this one.

MARK SANDERS,

White Sands Golf Club Pro

By John Keith

Mark Sanders, the pro at White Sands Golf Club, calls it the "road course.

An attractive getaway for Las Cruces area players who want a quick trip to tee it up in foreign surroundings.

"Number one, it's a short drive from town," he said. "Number two, it's an attractive layout. A beautiful setting with the Organ Mountains as a backdrop. You won't find any course that's prettier than this one. Nor one with a similar person-ality. Par is 73. The course plays 6,822 yards and features 11 holes instead of the usual 18.

Sitting quietly at the base of of the Organ's east side, the fairways are flat, tree-lined and green. "Very walkable," Sanders said.

Occasionally you'll hear gun-fire, compliments of the National Guard practicing on a nearby firing range. Aside from that, it's golf in uncrowded, peaceful conditions.

"The greens are tough but fair," Sanders said. "And we're putting in a new state-of-the-art sprinkler system in September using a good water conservation plan.'

Why the 11 holes? Simply put, the powers that be decided to move the clubhouse years ago. Eleven holes was the best solution for the new configuration. Golfers play holes 1 through 7 twice.

We're talking a golf course used to change. "In 1978, when we were a nine-hole course, a flood took out six holes," Sanders said. "We were forced to play three holes three times.

"After several changes, we finally settled on our current configuration in 2003.'

The course is approximately a 40-minute drive east of Las Cruces on Highway 70 and located on the White Sands Missle Range. It opened to the public three years ago

Golfers must show a driver's license, proper identification and proof of automobile insurance at the gate. Sanders welcomes club tournaments as well as individual play. "We have a restaurant, bar, a pro shop with all the equipment golfers need. There's housing on the base for those wishing to stay overnight and play another day," he said.

"For tournaments, we can cater hamburgers or steak dinners, which-ever you choose."

The golf course features full practice facilities, complete with driving range, putting and chipping greens.

The course was built "sometime in the 1960s," Sanders said. "It's still ranked as the Sun Country's best nine-hole course even though you play 11 holes."

The golf course is open Tuesday through Sunday each week. The hours are 8 a.m. until 7 p.m. Tuesday through Friday and 7 a.m. until 7 p.m. on weekends. Greens fees cost $18 weekdays and $20 on weekends. Carts are $12 per person. "Once we get you here, you'll want to come back," Sanders said. "I guarantee it."

NIKI RHYNES I The Las Cruces Bulletin

For tee times and information, golfers should call

678-1759

The greens are well groomed and difficult, but treat the average golfer fairly. See more photos on the following page.

The fairways are flat and tree lined.

The clubhouse features a restaurant, bar and a pro shop with state-of-the-art equipment.

Mark Sanders is the pro and director of golf.

The White Sands Golf Course sits below the east face of the Organ Mountains. It is a picturesque site and lends to the ambience of the 11-hole course.

Old World style in a mountainside home Extraordinary appeal and unique details make this home a special find

By Melissa St. Aude

Every house has a story that if it could talk, it would surely tell. But in builder Greg Green's Ladera Canyon house, the special details that comprise the home's interior - from the 100-year-old wooden doors leading to the media room to the antique stone pillars imported from India – each has its own story.

Green enjoys finding a special place in homebuilding for reclaimed materials and his own personal home, 5825 Ladera Canyon Road, is no exception. As he favors building in an Old World style, using reclaimed Old World pieces is a perfect fit.

"Our style of building sets us apart," Green said. "We're not afraid to try new things."

Green said that seeing the beauty in something that others might pass by, and using those things in his homes, gives him an edge. Such is the case with a pair of antique, hand-carved columns imported from India that frame the hammered copper bathtub in the master bathroom.

When I saw these, they were dirty and covered in cobwebs," he said. "But I knew they were special."

Green designed his bathroom around the columns, using them as support for a Spanish-inspired tiled "roof" that covers the tub.

He said unique elements like the columns will often inspire a design, but other times, he will look for a place in the home that needs a unique touch.

Such was the case with the kitchen -atravertine-tiled room with slate-covered ceiling beams. Green said he wanted something unique that would add character and allow for a transition from the dining/living area to the kitchen. He found that unique something in a pair of antique wooden doors. Weather worn and marked with dents and scratches, Green saw the beauty and potential in the doors and placed them at the entrance of the kitchen. "The doors were taken off a store," Green said. "The holes and marks are from nails that posters and notices hung on. That's the story that goes with the doors - I don't know if that's true or not, but I like the story.'

Green's house is filled with unique touches - antique wooden doors from a church in Mexico lead to the large theater-style media room, travertine-tiled steps lead to the office and Moroccaninspired wine room and wrought iron flourishes abound.

In building his home, Green was inspired by the desert view and the lot's location at the base of the Organ Mountains. The view, he said, should play a vital role in any home. Green began his design with high ceilings throughout the home and large windows on the far side to capture the views and make them a focal point of several rooms. He also brought in elements of the outdoors inside. Floors are hickory, many walls are slate tiled and brick and stone elements are incorporated throughout the house. Artistic faux finish is used on walls throughout the house to add depth, color and character.

"My brother does all the faux finishes in all our houses. He's an artist," Green said.

To highlight the iron-edged ceiling beams in the living room, Green built an interior balcony from the upper-level office that overlooks the lower floors.

As well as giving the home a sense of blending in with its natural surroundings, these elements also give the home a Continued on following page

So that the outdoors could be enjoyed to the fullest potential, Green built a covered back patio and included a grilling area behind the kitchen. He positioned the patio to take advantage of cool afternoon breezes. A pool is being constructed and artificial grass was installed for low maintanence.

Green designed the upper-level rooms, the office and wine room, each with its own private balcony, which offers spectacular views of the area.

The home is 5,825 square feet and has three bedrooms, a media room, office, wine room and fitness room, along with the kitchen, dining room and kitchen.

GL Green & Associates, which is run by Green and his business partner Caleb Neskahi, builds homes that range in price from $200,000 to more than $1 million.

To find their unique ideas, the partners travel extensively to other communities around the country and even to distant continents like Europe to study styles and trends.

"We do like the Old World style of building," Green said. "But we like to include our own style and tastes as well."

Shiny pines?

Look up in the sky, in the trees, it's a pine, it's glossy, it's shiny, it's squeaky clean. No, it's probably infested. Your tree is probably infested with aphids or scale. The shiny sticky stuff is called honeydew; it drips out of the insects and drops on the leaves or anything below it. Ants love this stuff. Sometimes a black powdery substance called sooty mold feeds off this and can weaken plants by blocking light that gets on the leaves. These insects can infest many other types of plants as well.

Sometimes you don't even have to look up at the tree. You can see the evidence on the ground, sidewalk, plants underneath, or even on your vehicle. It will show up as clear small droplets that harden on your car's surface. (Now that you know what it is you can rule out space alien waste!)

So your problem lies not in removing the honeydew but in removing the insects that cause it. There are sprays you can use, or you can use systemic insecticide that can be applied around the soil next to the trunk of your tree or shrub. Bayer has a new product that protects trees and shrubs for up to one year with only one application! A fall application is preferred for this, but it can be applied any time of year.

Sprays will give you immediate results, if applied correctly, but you may have to reapply within a few days or weeks.

CSI: Crime Solving Insects

Critter clues help investigators crack murder mysteries

They can help solve murders by pinpointing the time and location of death, the month a crime was committed and chemicals ingested in a body. They also can help determine if there was abuse and even the circumstances of automobile accidents. Meet the newest brigade of crime fighters: insects.

Forensic entomology has been in existence for centuries, however, it has only in the past decade gained widespread application toward criminal investigations. The use of insects in murder cases and other crimes is becoming quite significant - with police, FBI and other crime investigators now being trained in this area.

The most forensically important insects are those that undergo incremental growth in larval form, such as the blow fly and beetle.

According to Fred Baxendale, member of the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resource's forensic entomology team, insects are usually the first to arrive to the scene of a murder crime – sometimes as early as minutes after a person's death. Within 30 minutes, insects begin to lay eggs. The growth and reproduction of cold-blooded insects correlates with temperatures in their surroundings. By observing the stage of insect development and matching temperatures with the weather station nearest the crime scene, forensic entomologists can very closely estimate the time of death. The accuracy of the forensic entomologist is very important as a difference in even three degrees in temperature could cause a variation of three or four days.

Insects can also help determine where someone was killed or if a body was moved after death, according to M. Lee Goff, entomologist and author of "A Fly for the Prosecution: How Insect Evidence Helps Solve Crimes.' Different species of bugs are native to certain areas of the country, and some are characteristic to specific areas within a region. Goff believes that if someone finds evidence of "city" bugs in a person found in the country, you know the body was moved. Goff has helped solve cases where the blood inside an insect matched that of a rape suspect and has used maggots to detect nursing home abuse because a severely infested sore can reveal how long an elderly person was ignored.

According to Dr. Michael Weiss of North Dakota State University's Department of Entomology, maggots are especially helpful in detecting drugs and other chemicals when they can no longer be detected in a human. While traceable hints of various substances diminish as a corpse decomposes, they multiply as ingested by these insects.

Forensic entomologists have also been called onto the scenes of automobile accidents where the presence of bee stings or wasps have been suspected of cause and in per-

Hands on home safety

A new survey by the national nonprofit Home Safety Council reveals that while the vast majority of U.S. adults think about home safety, most are not taking action to make their homes a safe environment. Results show only one-third (36 percent) of respondents said they have ever taken a safety action in their own home.

To help the public take action and make their homes safer, the Home Safety Council is providing simple steps families can follow to protect against the five leading causes of home injury: falls, poisonings, fires and burns, choking/suffocation and drowning. While many people feel safest in their homes, Home Safety Council research shows that nearly 20,000 deaths and 21 million medical visits occur on average each year from injuries in and around the home. In an effort to reduce the toll of home injuries, the Home Safety Council is issuing a national call to action and encouraging all families to be hands-on with home safety.

"Taking a hands-on approach to protect against the leading causes of home injury requires a daily commitment, but the actions we are encouraging families to take are simple and do not require a lot of time or money," said Meri-K Appy, Home Safety Council president. "Making even a few small changes today can go a long way toward improving safety and preventing injuries in the home."

Simple Tips to a Safer Home

Follow these simple steps to protect your family from the leading causes of home injury.

Prevent Choking and Suffocation

round foods, such as peanuts and hard candy, out of children's reach.

Clip the loops in window cords and place them up high where children can't get them.

Use baby gates at the top and bottom of the stairs if babies or toddlers live in or visit your home.

When Shawn Stalls returned to Las Cruces, a builder was born

BY MELISSA ST. AUDE The Las Cruces Bulletin

Building high-quality, custom-crafted homes is a passion for homebuilder Shawn Stalls of Phoenician Custom Homes, and it is a career path he says he's glad he's found.

Although Stalls spent much of his childhood in Las Cruces attending local schools, his family moved to California when he was a teen. After college, he embarked on a career as a professional soccer player, but after he was injured and discovered he no longer play, some friends encouraged him to return to Las Cruces.

"I have lots of friends who are homebuilders in Las Cruces, and they encouraged me to give it a try and helped me to get started," Stalls said.

When he returned to Las Cruces and started a new life building homes, Stalls chose the Phoenix as the symbol of his company.

"The Phoenix is a symbol of rebirth and starting over," he said.

As well as adopting the name of the bird as his company name, Stalls also uses the symbol of the bird on his business cards and incorporates the symbol in some of his homebuilding projects, such as in the tile work of the foyer of the home Stalls built for himself and his wife Amy.

From the beginning, Stalls made strives to set himself apart from the crowd by adding unique touches to his homes. With an emphasis on designing high-quality homes that are warm, comfortable, homey and adaptable to the lifestyles of the homeowners, Stalls began building homes in such neighborhoods as Mesilla Verde Terrace, Puerta de Mesilla and other relaxing, desirable locations. He said that while location is very important in homebuilding, respect for the land is equally important.

In building his own home in Mesilla Verde Terrace, Stalls took extra efforts to preserve and accentuate the lot's natural landscaping. Of the 1.1-acre lot's 33 mature pecan trees, Stalls designed a home that would leave 25 of them intact. The result is a spacious home with a peaceful, secluded feel that Stalls says is an important element in any home.

To enhance the home's welcoming feel and to take full advantage of the shady setting, Stalls placed the garage at an angle to allow more room for a front yard. He also added a wrap-around porch in the front and an oversized, covered patio in the back.

Whether building his own home or one for a client, Stalls tries to incorporate elements that make a house feel like home - flowing floor plan, quality construction and interesting focal points such as floorto-ceiling windows, stacked-stone fireplaces, wooden accent beams and rounded walls

Amy is also an important member of the Phoenician team. She designs the interiors and does the company's faux finishes on the walls.

"It is a lot of work," Shawn said.

Phoenician Custom Homes has recently completed construction of its 14th home .and Stalls said he is excited for his future in homebuilding.

Even though it's delicious to eat, this popular summertime veggie is also used in many grocery items including cereals, soda and soap.

Don't chuck the hus A-maiz-ing uses for summer's favorite veggie

BY MELISSA ST. AUDE The Las Cruces Bulletin

Whether it's grown in a backyard garden or purchased at a roadside stand or supermarket, nothing signals the summer eating season better than corn. Roasted, sautéed, boiled or served up in a soup, the ways to enjoy corn are abundant enough to suit even the most finicky of palettes.

A versatile member of the grass family, corn shows up in many unexpected ways in the groceries we buy- many snack items, cereals, instant pie and pudding mixes, vegetable oil and even soda and soap contain ingredients derived from corn. As corn refining technology improves, such things as ethanol and corn bioproducts like degradable plastics are becoming more mainstream. As well as using corn husks to make toys and baskets, early cultures, who frowned on waste, found numerous uses for all parts of corn including the cob, the husk and the silk. While cobs were often used to insulate homes in colonial times, husks were put to use wrapping and stor-ing food, stuffing pillows or bedding, and sometimes, were even woven together to make shoes.

For those who hate the idea of wasting anything, even a bit of husk, consider the following corn-inspired ideas.

1. Start a garden. An average ear of corn can have as many as 800 kernels in its 16 rows and each kernel can produce a stalk. Try planting a few uncooked kernels and see what grows.

2. Make a bird feeder. Slather an empty cob with pea-nut butter and coat with bird seed. Push a nail into the cob and tie a piece of twine to the nail. Hang it on a tree.

3. Make a cornhusk doll. This ancient doll-making technique dates back to the early Native Americans, and it's easy. The how-to steps below are appropriate for adults and children age 6 and up.

4. Weave a basket. Early American baskets were often made of corn husks. Use the softer, inner husks and make sure they are soft and pliable by soaking first. Weave "placemat" style or use any basket weaving technique.5. Make a wreath. Use clean husks and soak them first to make them more pliable. 6. Decorate a gift. Make a corn husk bow with clean husks and use as the perfect topping for a gift.7. Make a braid. Cut husks into thin strips and soak until they are pliable. Gather a handful and tie at ends and braid. Secure ends with string. Braids can be hung as decoration or used to make a basket. Accent with a corn husk bow.

8. Wrap tamales. Clean and dry husks and store in a plastic zipper bag until you're ready to make tamales.

9. Great grilling. Beyond wrapping tamales or grilling corn, try wrapping fish or chicken in a clean and dry corn husk before grilling. 10. Make corn silk tea. Clean and air dry the silk for a day or two. Make tea either with the silk alone – by steeping in boiling water and sweetening with honey - or mixed with chamomile or lavender. Corn silk is used in many cultures as a diuretic. With its dose of iron, it's also good for nails, hair and skin.

11. Condition your hair. Use leftover unsweetened corn silk tea to condition your hair. Making sure it's not hot, drizzle over hair, rub in and allow to sit for several minutes before rinsing. 12. Add to your compost. Corn cobs are great additions to any compost pile.

13. Dry and decorate. Dry uncooked, uneaten cobs and use in fall themed crafts.

1	How to make a cornhusk doll
	For each doll you will need 8 clean corn husks, still green (do not attempt this with dried husks) Yarn or string Scissors Water
	Glue

Thoroughly clean husks and soak in warm water before beginning. The doll is easier to make when the husks are damp. Trim husks so that they are all even with one another. Gather 6 husks and tie together at the top of the bunch. Hold the tip and turn the husks inside out – covering the knotted tip. Tie a piece of string around the neck to form the doll's head. To make the arms, take one husk and use yarn or string to tie near the center of the husk and again near the end. Repeat on other side. Make a waist for the doll by tying a piece of string around the center of the remaining four husks. Separate the four remaining husks below the waist, two on each side, and secure at the bottom with yarn to make legs. Use remaining loose husks to dress the doll, using one as a shirt and another as a skirt, or decorate your doll using doll clothes or fabric scraps. Use extra yarn to make hair.

Get a hold on your corn cob

This gadget is designed to keep your fingers cool, clean

By MELISSA ST. AUDE

Few summer barbecues or cook-outs are complete without corn on the cob. Fresh, sweet corn is a favorite of many, and although there are numerous ways to enjoy it, corn on the cob is the easiest and by far the most fun way to enjoy summer's favorite veggie. Corn on the cob holders - sometimes called "kob knobs," corn skewers, corn spears or corn picks - are simple gadgets designed to keep fingers clean and cool while devouring hot corn on the cob.

What is it?

Corn holders are simple gadgets that resemble a twopronged tack. On one end, it has two prongs, usually one to two inches in length that are inserted into a cooked corn cob. At the other end is a handle.

Usually sold in a set of eight (four pairs per set), corn cob holders can be plain or whimsical. Many are shaped like corn, golf balls, pigs, chickens or other shapes and bring a sense of fun to summer time dining. The prongs are often made of stainless steel while the handles are generally made of plastic, but sometimes handles are made of wood, bamboo, chrome and some are even silver plated.

What to look for when buying a set: Look for strong, durable prongs that are long enough to attach firmly to the corn. Handles should be comfortable for a secure grip. This is where many of the fancier and whimsical shapes can be a disadvantage as their shape often makes them difficult to grip.

Dishwasher safe, stainless steel pins are a plus. Also look for a set that either interlocks with one another for storage or comes with its own hard plastic, glass or stainless steel storage case, as loose corn on the cob holders can cause serious injury when they are left loose in a gadget drawer. If holders do not come with a storage system, do your fingers a favor and store them in a plastic zipper bag or an empty pill bottle. This will also keep them together.

How much does it cost?

Depending on style preference, a set of corn cob holders can be found for as little as $1 or more than $20 for the fancier styles.

Collectina:

Like other gadgets that have been around for a while and have changed very little over the years, corn holders are popular collectors' items. They are easy to find ,and compared to other collectible items, inexpensive.

Hint:

Corn begins to lose its sweetness about 24 hours after it is picked. If corn is not prepared the day it is picked, add a teaspoon of sugar to water when boiling corn to replace lost sweetness.

Perfect roasted corn

Remove tough outer layers of husk, leaving the softer, thinner husks in place.

Gently fold husk back and remove silk. Soak corn in water for about 10 minutes.

Remove from water and pat dry. Brush with olive oil. Sprinkle with salt or other seasonings.

Replace remaining husks over corn. Place on medium-hot grill and allow to roast for 10 minutes on one side. Turn and allow to cook another 10 minutes on the other side.

Featured Kitchen Gadget: Corn Cob Holders

Corn is a favorite summer treat, but eating it can be messy and painful to the fingers without the right tool. Corn cob holders are easy to find and inexpensive.

Trouble free road travel tips Making summer travel fun and hassle free

Every year millions of Americans take to the roads with their trailers in tow. Whether you're towing a boat, a horse or a houseful of furniture, driving with a trailer presents challenges to both the driver and the tow vehicle. Here are the top tips from hauling experts on how to keep your travel trouble free.

Be Cool

Towing season is usually during the summer months with temperatures regularly between 80 to 120 degrees. Keeping your tow vehicle's fluids cool is critical to keep the engine from overheating or worse. You may want to upgrade to a larger radiator to keep those fluids cool.

Engine temperatures can more easily and inexpensively be reduced by adding a coolant additive to your radiator. These products decrease the surface temperature of water in the radiator to improve heat transfer and therefore lower temperatures. One of the more popular coolant additives, Purple Ice, may reduce engine temperatures as much as 30 degrees.

Another easy way to keep things cool is by upgrading motor oil. Premium synthetic motor oils typically have a lower coefficient of friction and better heat transfer than conventional motor oils.

Remain Level-Headed

Trailers have a tendency to load down the rear of a tow vehicle. As the vehicle rocks further back, the dynamics of the vehicle change. This means that the tow vehicle will not stop, steer, and handle as well as it does when it's not towing something. Investing in overload springs, air bags and/or a weight distributing hitch will help the tow vehicle ride level; which will translate into a safer and better ride.

Breathe Deep During the life of your engine, thousands of cubic feet of air will pass through the cylinders. Dust and other material in the engine can cause excessive wear and operating problems. It's imperative that you keep air filters clean by regularly replacing them. To further enhance performance, you may want to consider upgrading to a high performance air filter or complete intake system. The relatively low cost of a high performance filter and ease of installation (about 5 minutes) makes upgrading a no-brainer.

Don't Go Bald or Flat

Whether towing or not, checking the condition of your tires and tire pressure is vital. Tires that are under-inflated or over-inflated may wear out prema-turely or potentially blow out and cause an accident. Ideally, tire pressure should be checked every time you fill up your gas tank. By keeping your tires properly inflated, you'll also help reduce fuel consumption and increase your safety while towing.

The U.S. Energy Department reports that under-inflated tires can actually increase fuel consumption by up to 6 percent.

Don't Strip (a gear)

Two components that take the most abuse and are most neglected in tow vehicles are the transmission and differential.

Make sure you know how to change the tires of the vehicle you are traveling in and have the right tools for the job before taking a summer road trip.

In most cases, neither is adequately cooled and both undergo extreme pressure in towing conditions. Keeping the fluids cool is vital for a healthy transmission. The cheapest and easiest solution is upgrading fluids to high quality synthetics.

Consider Hardware and Software Upgrades

Aftermarket manufacturers produce a wide variety of parts from brakes to computer chips that can dramatically improve the performance of your tow vehicle and make towing easier. Upgrading brakes with a larger rotor or better caliper will help slow or stop everything quicker. Premium brake pads that dissipate heat also improve stopping. Aftermarket exhaust systems increase exhaust flow and reduce backpressure for increased torque. Finally, engine management software that optimizes engine performance is available from a variety of manufacturers.

Don't Forget to Brush

Following good maintenance procedure is a lot like brushing your teeth. Failure to do so can cause a lot of pain and unnecessary expense. Checking all of the fluid levels, the air filter and regularly replace the fuel filter will keep the vital components clean and clear of debris. Cleaning windows and mirrors will reduce glare and make the trip a safer and easier for you and your eyes.

It's also a good time to consider adding trailer mirrors which dramatically improve rear-view visibility. And don't forget to check your trailer's brake fluid, electrical wiring and tires. Make sure the lights work properly and everything is in working order.

Questions to ask before you build

A contractor has the answers

Imagine the excitement and anticipation of building a new home. You spend months choosing all the right details: the color of the paint and carpets, the style of the light fixtures, even the landscaping to welcome you and your guests. After a long wait and hundreds of thousands of dollars, the day arrives when you unlock the door and step inside. As you walk in, the floor creaks and feels bouncy. Everything else seems perfect, but a squeaky floor makes you wonder about the quality of the home. You can avoid this and similar disappointments by taking time up front to ask your builder some simple, yet critical, questions about the home's structural framing. Structural framing includes wall studs, rafters, floor joists, beams and headers, floor panels and sheathing. The quality of these materials and how they work together is critical for the long-term value and comfort of your home. In addition to avoiding annoying floor squeaks and bounces, the framing impacts how straight and even the walls are and how well cabinets, doors and windows function. Quality framing also helps ensure crisp rooflines and improves the home's resistance to earthquakes and high winds.

Good decisions regarding structural framing can save money further down the road, experts say.

Consider asking the following questions before construction begins.

"What types of framing materials will be used?"

Different materials offer different performance characteristics. For example, many builders use engineered wood products, such as TimberStrand laminated strand lumber (LSL), TJI floor joists and Structurwood Edge Gold floor panels all from iLevel, because of their strength, consistency and resistance to warping, shrinking and buckling. Engineered wood can either be used throughout the home, or in key areas where extra straightness is needed, such as kitchen and bathroom walls, or where straightness and strength are important, such as two-story entry foyers and great rooms.

"What warranties, if any, does the manufacturer offer on the materials?" Some manufacturers offer 25year to lifetime limited warranties on the framing materials, which is an important consideration given that structural framing accounts for one of the single largest costs in building a new home.

In addition to these two general questions, homebuyers should ask about a few specific areas of the structural frame including:

frame including: For floors: "Will the builder provide a rating number of the floor's anticipated performance, such as a TJ-Pro Rating from iLevel, and will materials be used that help reduce potential squeaks?"

Such ratings can help predict how stable the floor will feel based on the materials used and how they are assembled in the frame. Homebuyers should also ask about any specific floor warranties available, such as a no squeak guarantee.

For walls: "Will engineered wood studs be used where strong and straight walls are critical, such as those supporting kitchen cabinets and kitchen and bathroom tiles, and in walls taller than 10-feet high?" Engineered wood studs can help cabinets hang straight and avoid unsightly cracks and nail pops in finished walls. In addition, the long lengths of such studs eliminate the need to stack walls to form tall walls, which can create a "hinge" point and lead to leaky windows and cracked finishes.

For roofs: "What type of sheathing will be used?" A range of options is available, including high quality oriented strand board (OSB) that can protect against costly buckling, warping and sagging. In sunny climates, radiant barrier sheathing (RBS), a form of OSB with a reflective foil, can help reduce ever-rising home cooling costs.

As you dream and plan for your new home, remember that everything in it depends on a strong structural frame. Taking time to ask a few key questions shows that you care about all aspects of your home and provides a way for you and your builder to work together to help ensure it will meet your family's needs from the first day and into the future.

Asking questions about the materials used to build your home may save money and hassles down the road.

Paving the way to a beautiful yard

School is out. Summer is here and now is the best time for home improvement projects. Whether you are looking to enhance your property value or building a new patio, paving can set the tone an dcharacter of your yard.

Before you begin a paving project, brush up on the proper paving materials that can turn your project into your home's crowning achievement. Most homeowners want to keep cost low on home improvement projects, but they also view upgrading the exterior of their home as an investment that can create a striking base for furnished seating areas, fountains, spas, and even full-service outdoor kitchens.

When planning any project that includes pavement, there are quite a few elements to take into consideration. Think about the space the pavement will occupy. Will it be used as a large backyard patio, sweeping circular driveway, or a quaint garden path?

For large paving projects, concrete is a vastly popular option because of its versatility, durability and economical cost. Regular concrete, with its uninterrupted flat surface, needs virtually zero maintenance and is easily cleaned. For a driveway that is not only functional but also increases your home's aesthetic value, dress up your poured concrete by adding a dash of color. Colors range from sand to charcoal and light grey to crimson. The color possibilities of concrete are virtually endless. To color your concrete, the cement contractors will mix in the color you request, and then it will be poured. A word of caution; colored concrete is never the same color poured twice, so be sure to have same color poured at the same time.

For those who do not fancy the rudimentary and somewhat unfinished look of flat concrete, there are many professional paving companies now offering concrete that can be pattered to resemble stone, slate and even brick. This method is called "stamping" and can be used to create dramatic pool scapes, luxurious driveways and inviting patios.

If you want your driveway to send an eco-friendly message, install a grass-concrete combination call "turf slab." This material combines the tough surface of a concrete slab with a pleasing look of a lawn.

For smaller paving projects such as walkways and paths, use concrete pavers. Also called "paving stones," these pieces can perfectly interlock to form a beautiful patterned surface. Pavers are manufactured in various textures and colors and can be easily removed.

Tile is a popular product in the Southwest and can be permanently installed to cover existing poured concrete. However, not all tiles are rated for outdoor installation due to freezing. Be sure to check the outdoor rating before installing any tile outside. If you are pouring new concrete, you might want to consider acid washing and staining the concrete. This may all sound easy if you are one who likes do-ityourself projects, but as with any homeimprovement project, you should choose pavement based on your particular skill, budget and time constraints.

certainly economical. Also, crushed stone or pebbles can lend a beachy, informal feel to an outdoor space, while brick and stone will give your home a sophisticated air. Bricks provide a variety of flooring patterns and can be used to pave almost any space. Brick wears well in almost all weather conditions and its color is permanent.

Stone is another classic paving option which can be laid in precut slabs or blocks. Stone is a general term that encompasses many substrates so the color of the stone you use will depend on the type you choose for your paving project. Slate is one commonly used paving stone that ranges from greenish purple to gray or black. Travertine is also a popular paving stone. This stone is commonly available in pre-cut sizes. Most stone pieces can be cut into uniform shapes or split to create pieces with unique variable edges. One note when working with stone: all stones are naturally porous substances and can stain easily. Stone paving is best used on smaller paths and covered terraces versus large, open-air paving projects.
