Beyond the buzzer with Coach Maya's philosophy on winning

JEWEL DOMINGUEZ

For the Bulletin

When George Maya took over the Mayfield girls' basketball team, he did not just aim for historic win records and state championships. He wanted to prove he could lead a successful program regardless of gender. Maya remains steadfast in his philosophy – that building a successful program is more than winning championships – after 600 wins, three state championships and over 40 years of coaching experience.

Maya made history on “Pink Night,” Feb. 7, securing his 600th win, a Trojan victory against long-time rivals, the Las Cruces High School BullDawgs.

The game was a nail-biter. The Mayfield fans were on the edge of their seats when the Trojans clinched a two-point victory. The gym erupted in cheer for the Hall of Fame coach as the final buzzer sounded. The girls' team jumped on their coach, presenting him with shirts congratulating Maya, and a large gold chain with the number 600 on the front. Mayfield High graduate and Las Cruces Mayor Eric Enriquez also honored Maya with a trophy presentation to celebrate his milestone win.

Maya and the rise of girls' basketball

When the now 12-time winner of the 3-A Coach of the Year award first started in 1994, the NCAA Women's Basketball Final Four was far from generating 14.2 million views, as it did in 2024, according to ESPN.

Girl's basketball lacked the influence it has now with young girls. According to the Women's Sports Foundation, girls are not only less likely to join sports teams but drop out of their sport by high school due to a lack of opportunities, social stigma and inaccessibility.

Maya says the girls' lack of experience was the biggest challenge initially. His teams would vary between girls who had played before and others who hadn't. His coaching would have to evolve from telling the boys what plays to run and critiquing their form to teaching some girls the sport while the few experienced players helped on the court.

But Maya says coaching girls has made him a better coach. Before he could worry about winning games, Maya prioritized ensuring his players learned and improved each season. This is when he says he realized what it takes to build a program.

“You can't judge how good your season was based solely on whether you win district and State. That's not how you build a program. If you are always waiting for talented players, you will go to State every ten years. I learned to develop players, so a good season for me is when everyone shows up and works hard. Or a player got better. That's a good season to me.”

Maya doesn't see himself as a girl's head coach. He thinks

Jury convicts ex-cop Lunsford in fatal shooting

JUSTIN GARCIA
Las Cruces Bulletin

A jury found former Las Cruces Police Officer Brad Lunsford guilty of voluntary manslaughter after three hours of deliberation on Feb. 12.

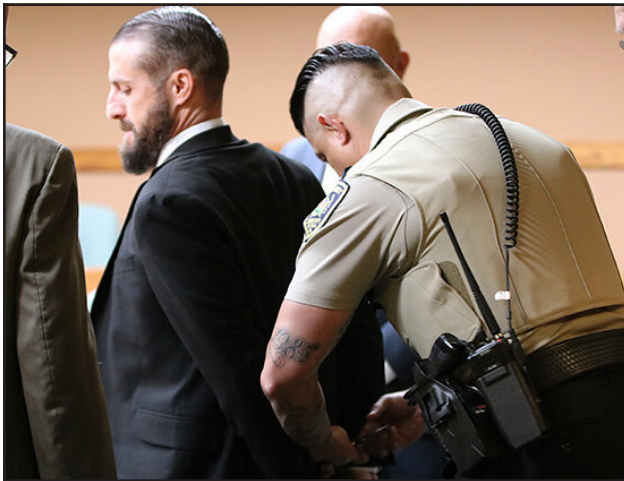

The jury's decision follows eight days of exhaustive testimony from four experts, several witnesses, and Lunsford himself, who said he feared Eze was reaching for another officer's gun, which inspired him to place his pistol against Eze's head and shoot him dead on Aug. 2, 2022.

The New Mexico Department of Justice oversaw the prosecution. Two of their prosecutors, John Duran and Greer Staley, argued to the jury that Lunsford had many options when Eze and Lunsford's partner, Keegan Arbogast, were pressed on the pavement outside the former Chevron on Valley Drive.

"In this case, the defendant used his last resort first," Staley said.

Body camera and witness video displayed at the trial showed Lunsford and Arbogast pulling Eze out of his car after the officers had been called to investigate shoplifting committed by Eze. No one disputed that Eze, after being denied the opportunity to buy cigarettes from Chevron, stole a beer from the store.

As the two officers pulled Eze from the car, Eze tried to flee. Arbogast then wanted to bring him to the ground, crashing his own head against the pavement.

Who had control as the three men tussled on the floor was a significant disagreement between the prosecutors and the defense. Arbogast was on the bottom, with Eze above him. Lunsford was a top both men.

They struggled for about 20 seconds, video shows before Lunsford pulled out his pistol. He pressed the gun to the side of Eze's head so that the bullet would not go down into Arbogast. Eze died instantly.

Afterward, Arbogast told Lunsford he was healthy enough to continue securing the scene. Later, Arbogast said he was confused and concussed in the fight's aftermath.

Prosecutors opposed that point. They called Arbogast an unreliable witness and suggested he exaggerated his testimony to protect his friend.

But Lunsford's lawyer, Jose Coronado, said Arbogast and Lunsford should be fully believed and be the best experts in their own situation. Moreover, Coronado argued that the evidence showed Eze was attacking Arbogast, while Lunsford testified that he saw Eze reaching for Arbogast's gun.

Eze also had gotten ahold of one of the officer's tasers, something prosecutors said was not significant since Eze would not have known how to use it, but Coronado said it was proof of Eze's intentions to hurt the officers.

"This guy wanted to do some serious harm," Coronado said.

In the end, the jury sided with the prosecution.

Still outstanding is the civil matter. Eze's family is suing the city and police department in federal court, claiming they violated his civil rights by killing him. There's a high threshold to clear in federal court when it comes to police killings, and there's no accompanying state lawsuit, where police settlements are more common.

It's unclear how the verdict will affect that case.

Lunsford could face up to six years in prison for the charge. He could face an additional three years as part of firearm enhancement. He was taken to the Luna County jail following the conviction.

After this article published, the New Mexico Department of Justice released a statement.

"Today's verdict reaffirms a fundamental principle: no one is above the law – not even those sworn to uphold it. Officer Lunsford's actions were not just a tragic lapse in judgment; they were an egregious abuse of power that cost Presley Eze his life," said Attorney General Raúl Torrez in the statement. "The jury's swift decision underscores the gravity of this case and sends a clear message that excessive force will not be tolerated in New Mexico. Our office will continue to hold law enforcement officers accountable when they violate the public trust and betray the communities they are meant to protect."

Tension between DASO, County over new deputies

JUSTIN GARCIA
Las Cruces Bulletin

“We rise as one.” That was the mantra for the 29th Doña Ana County Sheriff’s Office Academy. And for Class Commander Jessie Ramirez Jr., it’s more than just a few words.

“It is a reflection of our collective spirit,” Ramirez said in a speech during the graduation ceremony on Feb. 13. “We rise as one to face the challenges that lie ahead. We rise as one to protect the safety and dignity of those we serve. We rise as one because only by standing together can we truly make a difference.”

Ramirez was among 14 graduating deputies set to join the rank and file of DASO. Family, friends, and other onlookers celebrated the class at a ceremony on Feb. 13. Each young man had family members and loved ones pinning badges to their chests. All brimmed with pride as they took a step closer to becoming deputies.

Sitting behind them during the ceremony was Sheriff Kim Stewart, who, according to court records, refused to commission the new deputies.

“I have cadets graduating Thursday,” Stewart said in an email obtained by the Bulletin. “I will not commission them or anyone again based on my efforts yesterday.”

Shortly after the graduation ceremony, County Manager Scott Andrews filed an emergency petition for a writ of mandamus requesting a judge force Stewart to commission the cadets. The same petition suggests the county may have grounds to remove her from office.

A statement from Stewart suggests that she commissioned at least seven of the cadets. However, Stewart also claims the county’s Human Resources Department wanted those same cadets fired following their psychological evaluations.

Lawsuit’s allegations

According to the petition, Stewart was told on Feb. 10 that she had no power to “demote or de-commission” employees because of the county’s merit-based system, which requires all demotions and promotions to be based on merit.

The same day Stewart emailed all her staff, stating, “It begs the question of why I commission at all, and I am thinking of giving that practice up.”

That email was attached to the court records.

“I took unusual steps because I do not deserve to be called a ‘liar’ by a subordinate. Neither I nor my Undersheriff deserved to be the target of frivolous EEO claims which were dropped almost immediately upon filing. I didn’t deserve to have my home address publicized in a lawsuit, which I then had to have my own attorney act to seal from public view. I didn’t deserve six years of being lied to by those closest to the top in order for them to advance personal agendas. I didn’t deserve to be screamed at when I pointed out that owning a cultivation license is something that must be disclosed on a yearly conflict of interest report. There is so much more I truly have not deserved,” Stewart wrote.

She added, “I signed up for a lot when I chose to be the Sheriff. It’s been an interesting ride. The most hate and betrayal I have received has been from those who wear our uniform. It certainly says something about us.”

The mandamus petition continues, saying that Acting County Attorney Cari Neil requested a meeting with Stewart on Feb. 12, to hash out the issue. Stewart did not respond, according to the petition.

The lawsuit then said that Neil and an unnamed County Commission went to the DASO headquarters to confront Stewart on Feb. 13. But they were told Stewart was not in the office.

“As a matter of public safety, it is necessary for the graduating deputies to be commissioned. The Sheriff has been tasked with this duty,” the petition said, citing a state law.

“The refusal of the Sheriff to perform her duties in this manner is unprecedented and must be remedied by the Court,” the petition states.

A hearing on the mandamus writ was set for Mar. 3, but a statement from Stewart suggested that a judge had already compelled her to commission the deputies.

Stewart’s response

Stewart did not respond to the Bulletin’s request for an interview except to say in a text message, “I’m going public. I’ll be in touch.”

Stewart then posted a 730-word Facebook post about the situation. In the post, she said that the Sheriff did not make the final decision to hire deputies. The county’s human resources department does.

“They go through extensive vetting, to include pre-employment psychological testing,” she said.

Five months into the academy, Stewart said she received an email telling her to fire 7 of the 14 cadets. She said that the county’s human resources had taken “a sentence out of a comprehensive evaluation and used it against them.”

She did not provide any additional information about how or why the county’s human resources felt the seven deputies failed their psychological evaluations. Instead, Stewart said that interim County Manager Stephen

Haaland talks healthcare, safety and changing the game

JUSTIN GARCIA
Las Cruces Bulletin

After a brief speech in front of a packed Alameda House, Kasey and Marshall Schroeder were eager to talk with Deb Haaland.

Haaland's stop in Las Cruces as part of a statewide gubernatorial launch party was brief, as was her speech. But for the Schroeder's, it resonated.

"I think she really just has the New Mexico experience, Kasey Schroeder said, adding, "She wants health care for all, she wants to solve the crime problem... there's something for everyone."

That was the essence of Haaland's message – that she cares about bread-and-butter issues like the cost of food, housing, community safety, and access to healthcare because she's lived the life of the everyday New Mexican.

"I'm running to change the game for New Mexicans because we can't keep doing the same thing and expect different results, and it's why I challenge the system in every position I serve," Haaland, who would be the first Native American women to become a governor in

The speech was stop number four in a 19-town tour following Haaland's announcement she'd run for governor. Current Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham is termed out, meaning she cannot seek reelection in 2026.

That leaves the field for democrats in New Mexico wide open. No Republicans have announced as of this article's publication.

While the election is not until November 2026, with the Democratic primary in June 2026, the former Secretary of the Interior is wasting no time getting her name in the news and talking with New Mexicans.

She's also garnered endorsements from most federal delegates, including Rep. Gabe Vasquez, Rep. Melanie Stansbury, Rep. Teresa Leger-Fernandez and Sen. Ben Ray Lujan. Only Sen. Martin Heinrich has not endorsed Haaland. He was rumored to be running against Haaland before he de-

House passes public safety package

SOURCE NEW MEXICO STAFF REPORT

On Feb. 15, the New Mexico House of Representatives passed a six-bill package of public safety legislation on a 48-20 vote, sending the bills to the Senate.

House Bill 8 includes several components, including: enhanced penalties for fentanyl trafficking; increased fourth-degree felony charge for making a shooting threat; criminalization for possession of a weapon conversion device; increased penalties for vehicle thefts; legislation to make it easier for police to conduct blood tests in DWI cases; and a controversial criminal competency bill that prompted criticism last week from a coalition of community organizations, which described said the package of legislation “focuses on new crimes, increased punishments, and forced hospitalization.”

Following the House passage, its co-sponsors and House leaders released statements lauding their work. “We are taking a thoughtful, holistic approach to make New Mexicans safer,” Rep. Joy Garratt (D-Albuquerque), co-sponsor of the competency legislation, said. “This public safety package will help us address the pressing issues facing our communities today, and our investments in behavioral healthcare, housing, prevention, and treatment will help us to tackle the root causes of crime.”

Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham, who traveled the state in advance of the session building support for her public safety agenda, also released a statement following the House package, which she described as “a first step towards ensuring accountability for criminals and updating our criminal competency and civil commitment procedures. While it is an important step forward, our work isn’t finished. I urge the Legislature to advance the remaining public safety bills. Each day that passes without action means more people get hurt and neighborhoods suffer. Get these public safety bills to my desk now—our communities deserve real protection, not more excuses. I will not stop until New Mexicans feel safe.”

Other crime bills still making their way through the legislative process include House Bill 12, which makes changes to the state’s extreme firearm protection law, as well as bills related to human trafficking, behavioral health and crime victims, among others.

Prior to the session, House Democrats previewed their public safety agenda, which also includes a $200 million toward expanding the state’s behavioral healthcare infrastructure, which the Senate passed on Friday and will now proceed through the House committee process.

“We promised to work closely with our colleagues in the Senate to develop well-vetted solutions to the public safety and behavioral health challenges facing our state and we are delivering on that promise,” Speaker of the House Javier Martínez (D-Albuquerque) said in a statement over the weekend.

U.S. Attorney for NM resigns

SOURCE NEW MEXICO STAFF REPORTS

New Mexico U.S. Attorney Alexander M.M. Uballez has announced his resignation, which he said came at the request of President Donald J. Trump, reportedly one of more than 20 U.S. attorneys the administration has asked to step down.

Nominated by President Joseph R. Biden on Jan. 26, 2022, the U.S. Senate confirmed Uballez on May 17 of that year. A news release announcing his departure highlighted Uballez’s work in the Project Safe Neighborhoods project, as well as his outreach to Tribal communities and efforts to modernize the office.

“Today, I say farewell to a Department that I love,” Uballez said in a statement. “Together, we have made our community safer by delivering swift and certain justice to the most prolific violent offenders, human and drug traffickers, and child abusers. We have saved lives by intervening to prevent violence and by supporting those who strive to return to our community from incarceration. Most importantly, we fought to build a community united in the pursuit of justice for all by choosing prevention before punishment, delivering consequences but not indignity, and seeking redemption not isolation.”

Raul Bujanda, special agent in charge of the FBI Albuquerque field office, described Uballez in a statement as “an incredible partner in our mission to protect the American public. “Throughout his time as U.S. Attorney, Mr. Uballez has been dedicated to ensuring the safety of the citizens in our community and relentless in his pursuit of justice for victims of crime. There is no doubt his work has made a positive impact on our community.”

Las Cruces' first-of-its-kind treatment court - part 2

TED ALCORN

New Mexico In Depth

This is the second part of two-part series. Part one was published in last week's issue. The full story is available online.

At 8 a.m. on a mid-December Wednesday, James Ketcherside – who helps manage the state's first competency diversion program – was in the near-empty courthouse, reading through a list of 23 people arrested the previous day. A former corrections officer with a gentle demeanor, he referees football for a university league some weekends and is getting a graduate degree in social work on the side.

On his monitor, he could see which defendants had raised competence after previous arrests. The jail was also supposed to screen anyone arrested in the county for serious mental illness. People flagged by both processes could potentially benefit from the diversion program.

Among this group, however, only people facing a narrow set of charges are currently eligible to participate — misdemeanors, excluding DWIs — and no one qualified that day.

If Ketcherside isn't visiting the jail to enroll new participants, he's out on the streets connecting with people like the woman behind the firehouse. Then it's up to local organizations to do the heavy-lifting necessary to manage their conditions.

One is La Clinica de Familia, a federally qualified health center that offers services through its Assertive Community Treatment program, led by social worker Maria Bagwell. Handling a caseload of 100 patients requires a team of over 20 people — including a nurse practitioner, therapists, and case managers — who meet the patients wherever they are in the city, day or night. Asked what would happen to the clients without their program, Bagwell ticked off the likely outcomes on her fingers: "Hospital, jail, death."

Magistrate Judge Alexander Rossario, who oversees the competency diversion program, holds hearings every other week to check on participants who appear to be falling out of the program, and to get updates from court staff on how they are reeling them back in.

TED ALCORN, DECEMBER 2024

La Clinica de la Familia's Assertive Community Treatment team in Las Cruces cares for nearly 100 patients with serious mental illness, wherever and whenever they need it. Maria Bagwell, who leads the team, calls it "a hospital without walls."

That afternoon's hearing would be the final one for several people who participated throughout the fall, the program's first graduates. The courtroom was nearly empty but, on a wall-projection of a video conference, more than a dozen callers were visible. The judge allows participants to phone in, since few own cars, and being in the courtroom provokes anxiety for many.

Alex, a 26-year-old with a roman nose and a wispy blond beard, was one of the graduates. Three months earlier, after an argument with his grandfather had gotten physical, he'd been arrested and charged with attempted battery. "I don't understand why something sets me off," he said outside the courtroom, as his eyes roamed the hallway.

The manager of the supportive housing where he lived said he'd had a rocky start, punching a wall at one point and disappearing on a few occasions. But they'd made some adjustments to his

NMSU elevated to prestigious R1 designation

JUSTIN GARCIA
Las Cruces Bulletin

New Mexico State University is once again a “Research 1” university, placing it in a prestigious class of American institutions.

The designation recognizes NMSU’s investment in the highest levels of research in the U.S. It signifies that NMSU invests in cutting-edge research, academic opportunities and high-quality resources for students.

“From NMSU’s founding as New Mexico’s first land-grant institution, it’s been our responsibility to pursue research that would advance knowledge for the well-being and benefit of New Mexico and its citizens,” said NMSU President Valerio Ferme in a news release.

Carnegie Classification of Institutions of Higher Education announced it had bestowed the designation on Feb. 13. According to Carnegie, there are 187 R1 institutions in the U.S. These include Arizona State University, the University of New Mexico, and the University of Texas at El Paso. All three are schools that NMSU competes with for student enrollment, academic hires, and administrators.

“This R1 achievement is the direct result of years of intentional, strategic work that prioritized our research and creative enterprise and allowed us to fulfill the institutional vision of becoming a leader in transforming and empowering our state,” Ferme said.

Carnegie gives R1 designations to institutions that spend at least $50 million on research and development and award at least 70 research doctorates annually.

NMSU achieves that. According to a news release, NMSU spent more than $126 million on research last fiscal year and awarded an average of 102 research doctorates yearly since 2020.

In an article published in January, NMSU Vice President of Research, Creativity and Economic Development Luis Cifuentes said the R1 designation will allow NMSU to support public, private, and nonprofit growth. He said this will be primarily through knowledge transfer, talent development, and commercialization of research.

“Amidst the challenges of an uncertain national research landscape, our Carnegie R1 designation is a testament to the excellence, energy, resilience and resourcefulness of our faculty, staff and students,” Cifuentes said in the news release. “This recognition comes at a critical time, reinforcing the vital role of research universities. Bravo, NMSU.”

Achieving R1 status has been a stated goal of NMSU since at least 2019. Then-Chancellor Dan Arvizu and former President John Floros made it the centerpiece of a 2019 speech.

NMSU said it would host a celebration of the designation later this semester.

TENSION

Lopez created an appeal process. But Stewart felt this process was inadequate.

Ultimately, Stewart said that she’d been ordered to commission the 14 cadets following the petition. She said she’d commissioned the seven that HR wanted her to fire. She added that two had been fired.

“There’s so much more to unpack here as it speaks to the power of those you have elected versus those who operate outside the will of the people,” Stewart said. “In short, however, this county government is faltering in many more ways.”

Stewart vs. everyone else

This is far from the first time that Stewart and the county have been at odds. Under the previous county manager, Stewart lambasted Fernando Macias for forcing her employees to work from the office in 2021. It was one of many spats between Stewart and Macias.

Former District Attorney Gerald Byers also sued Stewart after she refused to serve dozens of subpoenas in 2022.

Stewart was first elected to the Sherrif’s office in 2018 and then again in 2022. She styled herself as a reformer when running for election. Stewart was also fired from the county in 2011. She successfully sued the county, arguing that she was subjected to months of retaliation from county managers for investigating complaints of racial discrimination within the animal control and codes enforcement department.

She was awarded $1.5 million in the ensuing settlement.

medication, according to his grandfather, and it had stabilized him.

When Alex appeared before Rossario, the judge lifted up a folder and said, with the enthusiasm of a game show host, “We’re here to dismiss this case.”

Alex seemed perplexed. “So, I have no record at all?”

“It’s the work you did,” replied the judge. “Now do me a favor: don’t come back and see us.”

Other participants were not doing as well. The judge didn’t have much leverage, since he could return their case to the regular docket, but if they successfully raised competence their charges would likely be dismissed.

One participant had ceased responding to court staff entirely and his grandfather, who was losing sleep over his inability to locate him, had called in to plead his case. “I have a limited number of spaces, and we have thousands of defendants,” said Rossario, removing the man from the program.

Another man’s name was called, in absentia. When court staff had approached him earlier that week, he’d responded with inappropriate words and the middle finger. The judge removed him as well.

A third no-show was living out of an animal shed behind his aunt’s house, the staffer said.

“The biggest obstacle is the unhoused,” said Rossario. “Those are the ones that are hard to find, the ones that aren’t engaged.”

Another participant, also homeless, had called in with a cell phone he could only use when connected to a free wireless network. Since enrolling in the diversion program, he’d missed an intake appointment at La Clinica de Familia and been rearrested for criminal damage, and court staff were ready to cut him loose. But he told the judge he’d made a new appointment at the clinic after the holidays.

“I’m not going to pretend I understand the difficulty you’ve been going through, but I sympathize,” Rossa-rio said, opting to give him another chance.

Changing the competency law

In eight months of operation, participation in the program has been modest. As of early February, Ketcherside said he and his colleagues had identified 293 arrestees with a history of raising competence who were showing signs of mental illness. But only 65 were charged with crimes that made them eligible to participate. (People charged with non-violent felonies might stand to benefit from the program but under current law are not allowed).

And of those, nearly half declined to participate, including one person who had been offered the program after each of five separate arrests, refusing it every time. Others failed to complete it. There were five graduates and 11 people currently enrolled.

No one involved believes there has been enough time to measure the program’s impact on the small group who have embraced it. But most agree it should ultimately be judged by whether participants are less likely to be arrested and more likely to accept services.

“It’s incumbent on the state to do a lot of evaluation of this program, because we need to learn,” said Michael, the county’s Health and Human Services director. Because incarceration and hospitalizations are costly, preventing even a few such instances would save money. The bar for success is fairly low, she reasoned, because the courts were doing so little before. “Even if you help one or two people, that’s one or two people that would not have had any help.”

But policymakers are not waiting for definitive results.

During the 2024 special session, the legislature appropriated funding to establish competency diversion programs in three more judicial districts. The 4th (San Miguel, Mora, and Guadalupe counties) and 12th (Otero and Lincoln counties) districts began enrolling participants last fall, and the 1st (Santa Fe, Rio Arriba, and Los Alamos counties) will establish a program after its AOT program is up and running.

This year, the governor and some legislators have argued that competency diversion is not sufficient and are pushing to change the competency law itself.

In her State of the State address, Lujan Grisham called on the legislature “to reform criminal competency laws that let too many dangerous people remain on our streets.”

Competency is far from the only reason cases are dismissed, however. According to a report from the Legislative Finance Committee, only 2% of felonies are dismissed due to incompetence each year, and it ranks far behind errors in evidence collection and failures of witness cooperation in the number of cases it scuttles.

Democratic leaders have deferred to Rep. Christine Chandler, D-Los Alamos, to craft legislation. In mid-January she introduced House Bill 4, which would make it easier to direct arrestees who raise competence to some form of civil commitment. It would also broaden the definition of dangerousness, allowing judges to order more people criminally or involuntarily committed. Last week, the House Consumer & Public Affairs committee passed the bill unanimously, and the next day the governor announced she was supporting it.

Doña Ana’s competency diversion program is “great,” Chandler said in an interview, but “not sufficient.” Because people enter it voluntarily and don’t always follow through, many continue to treat the courts as a revolving door.

“I do believe sometimes the system has to be used to encourage people into treatment,” she said.

Las Cruces to hold town hall on lead/copper rule

BULLETIN REPORT

The city of Las Cruces will host a town hall on March 4 to discuss efforts to identify lead and galvanized water lines throughout the service area.

The town hall is set for 6 to 8 p.m. at the Las Cruces Council Chambers. It follows the city’s sending out hundreds of letters titled “Unknown Service Line Material” to customers, telling them that the city did not know what materials some water pipes were made of and thus could be made of toxic materials.

“We are happy to report that we have started the inventory, and to date, we have found no lead service line and only two customer side galvanized service lines,” the city said in letter sent to customers in the February utility bill.

The situation has generated some concern about Las Cruces’ water system despite the fact that no lead pipes have been discovered.

Late last year, the Environmental Protection Agency proposed its updated Lead/Copper Rule. The rule requires utilities like Las Cruces to identify and replace lead pipes within 10 years and mandates communication with customers about risks, the location of lead pipes, and plans to replace them.

The latter requirement led to letters from the city. Those letters said that about 20,000 city-owned pipes are made of “unknown material.”

According to the World Health Organization, lead exposure can severely damage the brain and central nervous system, and there is no safe level of lead exposure. Lead exposure can cause significant health challenges and especially affects children and people having children.

Although the effects of lead poisoning have been known for most of human history, builders in the 19th century frequently used it to construct water lines across the U.S. The EPA banned lead pipes completely in 1986, but the U.S. had largely moved away from them in the decades before.

More official information can be found at lascruces.gov/lead-andcopper, including a guide on how to conduct self-inspections of pipes.

More oversight of regents needed

It's no secret that America's colleges and universities are big spenders. The highest-paid state official in 43 states is a college coach.

And it's not just in athletics, as demonstrated by the lavish spending of former Western New Mexico University President Joseph Shepard that was not only tolerated by WNMU regents, but was also defended by them.

A recent report by the state auditor uncovered more than $350,000 in improper expenses on luxury travel and the misuse of state purchasing cards. That included a stay at the Ritz-Carlton, Rancho Mirage resort for Shepard and five others, as well as international travel to Zambia, Greece and Spain with his wife, former CIA agent Valarie Plame.

In all, the audit found 402 instances of domestic and international travel in violation of state policies, costing taxpayers $214,261; and 91 instances of improper use of a state purchasing card, costing $149,264. Spending included high-end custom furnishings for the presidential residence, as well as items like alcohol and room service which are not allowed.

The audit also found that a state expense account and purchasing cards were issued to somebody who was not a state employee.

"The governing body's lack of proper oversight and management's non-compliance with policies and procedures resulted in the waste of public funds and resources entrusted to the university," the audit said.

Members of the WNMU Board of Regents, who had accompanied Shepard on some of his trips, were well aware of the allegations in July when their annual performance review for him was "Exceeds Expectation," and he was given a $50,000 bonus.

Shepard resigned in January, and, at the request of Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham, four of the five regents have stepped down. But none have conceded that they did anything wrong. Shepard repeated an old saying about lies traveling faster than truth, suggesting that all of this has somehow been fabricated.

WALT RUBEL

The View
From Here

The most concerning part is that there is nothing to prevent this from happening again. Once appointed by the governor, university regents operate without accountability or oversight. At NMSU, regents blundered into a million-dollar mistake when their search to replace Garrey Carruthers resulted in two people being hired for the job.

A proposed constitutional amendment co-sponsored by Rep. Nathan Small, D-Las Cruces, would finally provide for some oversight. If passed by the Legislature and approved by voters, it would allow for the removal of regents in cases of incompetence; neglect; breaches of fiduciary or other duties and malfeasance in office. The removal process could be initiated by a majority of the board or the Attorney General. Removal proceedings would be conducted in district court.

It took way too long and was far too difficult to remove Shepard from office after his wasteful spending had been exposed. We can't rely on regents, who may have been complicit in some of that wasteful spending, to be the only ones in a position to stop it.

The governor has worked hard to make a college education available to every New Mexico high school graduate. But it's hard to support increased funding for higher education if the money is being blown on room service at the Ritz Carlton.

More on the Omnibus

Last week I wrote about the potential Omnibus bill rumored to be planned for crime legislation in Sante Fe. In summary, I was concerned about other legislation being lumped with the critical public safety bills that New Mexico desperately needs to combat the violent and property crime that have exploded in our city in the last couple of years.

I was right and wrong.

The Omnibus bill has come to pass. House Bill (HB) 8 now combines individual bills as follows: HB4 Criminal Competency, HB16 Fentanyl Trafficking Sentences, HB31 Fourth Degree Felony for Shooting Threat, HB38 Possession of Weapon Conversion Device, HB50 Penalties for Vehicular Theft, HB106 DWI Blood Testing.

I, and probably most lawful gun owners, don't ever plan to convert our semi-automatic firearms to function as an automatic using the notoriously easy to obtain "Glock Switch" so I am okay with HB38, especially because Las

Cruces youth are being caught with them regularly in the commission of other crimes like car thefts, shoplifting, etc.

I am thrilled that the Democrat-controlled House has passed this crime legislation and, at least on the surface, appear to be taking public safety seriously. Next it heads to the Senate for similar committee hearings and eventually, hopefully, a vote.

But let's scratch the surface a bit, shall we? There are notable issues with the crime legislation as presented. For example, a representative voted no on this bill because it specifically excludes HB134 (Juvenile) Delinquency Act Changes that she is sponsoring. Her reasoning – her son was murdered

Dismantling US Foreign Assistance

MARK LUSK
Guest Columnist

United States foreign assistance programs, notably the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), are being annihilated as its activities are put on hold and its foreign service officers and civil servants are being forcibly retired.

Current US foreign assistance has its roots in the post-WW2 era, when the United States, flush on the heels of victory over European and east Asian fascism, led global efforts to consolidate its allies in support of peace, economic growth and stability.

Under Present Truman, Point Four was established to provide technical assistance and investment in developing nations. While this effort was designed to deter the advance of Soviet communism in the Global South, Point Four and its sequelae agency USAID, focused on enhancing economic growth, advancing democracy, and promoting social development.

For over sixty years, USAID has invested in building allies through partnerships that built schools, advanced access to health care, and promoted democracy. As the federal agency that is engaged in the diplomacy of soft power, USAID, invests in social development – those activities that are aimed at improving social indicators of development, such as literacy, longevity, educational achievement, food production, access to political participation, civil rights, health care, and quality of life.

Support for US foreign assistance has historically not been a partisan issue. Conservatives have been supportive because such assistance builds political alliances, develops international markets, increases wealth, reduces international tension, and globally advances American foreign policy. Liberals have backed foreign assistance because it reduces hunger and extreme poverty, advances girl's and women's education, promotes human rights, and enhances mutual beneficial cultural alliances.

While some have argued that it more important to invest those dollars here in the United States, they fail to see that USAID's funding at a mere 1.2% of the total federal budget, reaps untold benefits in programs that develop markets for American products and ideas. Such aid is not a giveaway, it is an investment that yields over the long term.

To abandon American foreign assistance opens the doors for our global adversaries to fill the void. China has been investing a fortune in courting American allies in the Global South and will seize this opportunity to accelerate its economic and political position. But more profoundly, discarding our humanitarian mission will result in hunger, disease, and reduced economic opportunities for countless families around the world, and preventable loss of life.

Withdrawing into "Fortress America" is a losing strategy for advancing American interests through the strategic use of soft power.

OMNIBUS

several years ago by a juvenile delinquent and her bill is currently stagnating in its first committee and doesn't appear to be on any track to being passed, despite its critical need.

Additionally, HB4 still does not contain any means for a judge to compel inpatient treatment in the event that the defendant is unable or unwilling to complete out-patient treatment. And the competency issue revolves around a relatively small number of criminals who have figured out how to game the system and/or are the sickest people on the streets. These are folks who are least likely to comply with out-patient treatment and thus will end up with the same outcome – dismissed due to an inability to work toward restoring their competency so they can be held accountable or even eventually get well. Despite numerous email campaigns and even testimony from law enforcement leaders, district attorneys and residents around the state, they have refused to budge to add this requirement.

Finally, they have refused to address child abuse in the context of fentanyl. Both HB 136 and HB 383 have attempted to hold parents accountable by exposing their children to fentanyl, yet both bills appear to be stagnated, tabled, dead in the House Consumer and Public Affairs Committee.

So, my takeaway: are the legislators really interested in tackling the massive crime problem in New Mexico? Or are the bills that have passed meant to appease their constituents on the surface, but without actually addressing the root causes of the problems?

Public Lands Deja Vu

PATRICK NOLAN
Guest Columnist

Attacks on our public lands are at an all-time high, but all these assaults to dismantle protected landscapes have been kept on the down low. From a lawsuit that attempted to transfer federal lands over to state ownership, to bills and resolutions condemning the 119-year-old Antiquities Act in hopes to undo it, and now a secret review of our national monuments.

Under the previous Trump Administration, our very own Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks was listed in their monument review to roll back its National Monument status and open it up to development. The Trump administration's review of national monuments resulted in Bears Ears National Monument and Grand Staircase-Escalante having their borders altered and acreage reduced to open those lands for extractive purposes.

Our national monument is once again facing threats to be undone for private companies, and unlike Trump's first administration, Secretarial Order 3418: Unleashing American Energy is happening in secret. The administration is manufacturing a false energy crisis to review already protected lands and then illegally privatize and sell them off to the highest bidder.

As Executive Director of Friends of the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks, I was often asked what our plan was when President Trump was re-elected. For those paying attention, the president has been clear from day one that he will work to undo land protections and prioritize the extractive industry. And his Interior Secretary, Doug Burgum, was quick to execute under the cover of darkness. Planning exactly how we oppose these efforts is a challenge.

We in the conservation and environmental communities plan on doing what we have always done. We will continue to build, develop and celebrate our communities' love for our protected places. We will engage citizens in the fight to defend our public lands and engage our community in resisting efforts to roll back hard fought and important gains.

I want to emphasize that our conservation community needs to grow larger. Threatening our national conservation lands goes beyond the outdoor recreation industry. It impacts our educational institutions who count on the cultural, historical, and biological wealth found in our public lands. Threatening our public lands impacts the health of our friends and neighbors who depend on the outdoors for physical and mental well-being. Secretarial Order 3418 is an aggressive, and shady scheme to sell off America's public lands, na-

Policy organization urges medical malpractice overhaul

DANIELLE PROKOP
Source New Mexico

In a largely rural state defined by long distances to health care, the loss of 248 doctors across New Mexico in recent years means that patients face longer wait times and further travel to access the care they need.

Moreover, “New Mexico was the only state to lose doctors in that five-year period,” Think New Mexico Executive Director Fred Nathan pointed out to Source in a recent interview.

The nonpartisan policy organization is backing several proposals it claims will alleviate some of the pressures on the health care workforce.

One of the biggest structural fixes, Nathan said, is addressing the insurance system for medical malpractice.

“Medical malpractice shouldn’t make your eyes roll to the back of your head, because it’s probably the leading factor in why we have a shortage of doctors,” he noted.

Medical malpractice

refers to the legal consequences to acts of negligence or omission of care that results in injuring or killing a patient. No federal law requires doctors to have medical malpractice insurance, but New Mexico requires the insurance if physicians participate in state programs; in addition, many hospitals require doctors to carry it.

In a 60-page report, Think New Mexico said the current system benefits attorneys to the detriment of patients, doctors and taxpayers.

New Mexico has one medical malpractice lawsuit for every 14,000 New Mexicans, more than twice the national average, the report found. A recent spate of high-dollar judgements has raised costs of medical malpractice insurance, sometimes by as much as 500%.

“The main beneficiaries of the variety of loopholes in New Mexico’s current Medical Malpractice Act are lawyers, including some who work for law firms based outside New Mexico,” the report stated. “The reforms proposed here would prioritize the needs of patients while making New Mexico a better place for health care providers to practice.”

Nathan said proposed changes this year would cap attorneys’ fees from medical malpractice lawsuits; end lump-sum payments to patients; and assign portions of punitive damages from court cases to a public fund for medical malpractice prevention.

Think New Mexico also backs legislation enabling more interstate compacts for health care workers. “This is the single most important thing the Legislature can do this session to reduce the healthcare worker shortage; it is so easy,” Nathan said.

New Mexico’s loss of health care workers between 2019 and 2024 bucked national trends for all other states and worsened the gap of doctors, nurses and others to treat patients.

Nathan said solutions will need sustained work over the next couple of years to stop the hemorrhage of doctors, which is expected to double between 2020 and 2030, due to retirements.

New Mexico is a member of one compact that allows nurses licensed in other states in the agreement to more easily practice in New Mexico. Several bills before lawmakers would allow the state to join compacts in the following fields: doctors; psychologists; counselors; audiologists and speech therapists; physical therapists; occupational therapists; physician assistants; emergency medical personnel.

Bill status

Senate Bill 176, sponsored by Sens. Martin Hickey (D-Albuquerque) and Pat Woods (R-Clovis), changes the medical malpractice laws by instituting the caps, ending lump-sum payouts and giving 75% of putative damages to a public fund. Senate leadership assigned SB176 to three committees on the Senate side. The bill’s first committee, Senate Health and Public Affairs, has still not scheduled it for a hearing. That leaves little time for the bill to pass through both chambers as the session nears the halfway point.

Outside of SB176, Think New Mexico is supporting bills for New Mexico to join compact agreements with other states to lower barriers for already-licensed health care workers to practice in the state.

The following bills passed their first committee, House and Human Services, on a unanimous vote: Doctors compact in House Bill 243, one for psychologists House Bill 242, a bill for counselors compact House Bill 217, physical therapists in House Bill 82. The bills now head to House Judiciary. If approved, they would need to proceed through the House floor vote and through committees and a full Senate vote before becoming law.

Two bills for compact agreements for audiologists and speech therapists, and occupational therapists, House Bill 79 and House Bill 81, respectively, were scheduled for a Monday afternoon hearing in their second committee, House Judiciary, which was delayed after the joint session.

Legislation for joining a compact for physician assistants, House Bill 413, has not been heard in its first committee, House and Human Services. House Bill 412, which allows New Mexico to join a compact for emergency medical personnel, is also awaiting its first hearing in House Government, Elections and Indian Affairs.

tional treasures, and outdoor access to the wealthy and well-connected.

When we take a classroom of 4th graders out for a hike at Dripping Springs, we are protecting public lands. When we lead a hike at Picacho Mountain to learn about the geological history, we are protecting public lands. When we take high school students out for their first overnight bikepacking trip, we are protecting public lands. When 150 riders from across the country travel to southern New Mexico to ride the Monumental Loop, we are protecting public lands.

On New Year’s Day, I joined one of our organization’s guided hikes on the Sierra Vista Trail. We had a good group of about 25 people. There were people from the area and people who were not. Families with small children. Folks there for the Gram. And some attendees were just looking to learn more about the history and the values that drove the community campaign to protect these places.

These trips are a perfect example of the deep love and value our community has for our public lands and shows how successful and important the designation of the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument has been for Southern New Mexicans. As we work our way through this tumultuous period in our country’s history it is important we keep sight of what connects us. For our community, it’s our public lands.

HAALAND

clared he would remain in Congress.

Haaland also garnered the endorsement of a local politico, City Councilor Johana Bencomo, who gave opening remarks for Haaland’s speech.

“I want a governor who feels our pain,” Bencomo, an outspoken progressive and anti-poverty advocate, said, adding that Haaland’s 2018 stint as Albuquerque congressperson was a personal source of inspiration.

After a stint as chair of the state Democratic party, Haaland was elected to Congress in 2018 by defeating Republican Janice Arnold-Jones by 23 points. Lujan Grisham, who was running for governor, left the seat.

In 2020, then-President Joe Biden appointed her as U.S. Secretary of the Interior. She remained in that position for four years.

Haaland’s message

But in her 15-minute speech on Sunday, Haaland outlined her life before politics as an ordinary New Mexican. She described her time as a teenager working at an Albuquerque bakery and selling homemade salsa to make ends meet. She also spoke about being a single mother and brought up her struggles with alcohol.

“I’ve struggled, like so many New Mexicans. I know what it’s like to work hard and still barely scrape by, and of course, things should not be this hard. It’s expensive to be poor,” Haaland said.

However, the former interior Secretary avoided specific policy promises in the speech.

“I’m running to make sure every new Mexican feels safe in their neighborhood. I’m running to lower costs and make sure we all have a share in our state’s success. I’m running so our kids can enjoy learning and have opportunities right here in New Mexico when they’re grown. I’m running to protect our state’s beautiful landscapes and sacred spaces,” she said.

To the crowd’s amusement, Haaland also took a few shots at President Donald Trump. She joked that, in his first term, Trump “lowered himself” by signing into law bills Haaland helped pass.

She said that as governor, she’d work to insulate New Mexico from Trump’s Oval Office.

“Governors will be the first line of defense against this Trump chaos. In the midst of the cruelty and chaos our entire country faces, we must look ahead and decide who do we want to be. How do we want to fight for the place we call home? It’s long past time that we take real action, so we don’t have to struggle to get by,” she said.

Indeed, Gov. Haaland would likely face a steep and aggressive Trump administration, who has used its first weeks in office to create fear of mass deportations of immigrants in the U.S. and attempted to seize congressional spending powers, while threatening to slash Medicaid – a program that about 784,300 New Mexicans utilize, according to the KFF.

Increased and improved access to healthcare – especially for LGBTQ people – was another of the Schroeders’ hopes for a Haaland gubernatorial term.

“I am really excited to know that there’s someone out there that’s going to be protecting our trans kids,” Kasey Schroeder said. “And knowing that she, and excuse my language, gives a fuck, because those kids are worth it.”

For Marshall Schroeder, a local psychologist who works with LGBTQ youth, his expectations for Haaland revolve around practitioners and specialists.

“The biggest thing that I really hope that she can work on is the retention of specialists, of medical specialists, because we are having such a mass exodus of medical specialists leaving the area,” Schroeder said.

Healthcare will likely be a big issue in the upcoming campaign, as will public safety, something Haaland also touched on but did not discuss in depth.

“It will mean making sure law enforcement has what they need, keeping criminals off our streets, but also addressing the root causes of crime,” she said in one of her few remarks on public safety.

Doña Ana County a likely win for Haaland

It’s unclear when or if Haaland will return to this region, as it is unlikely to be the deciding factor in 2026.

In 2018, Lujan Grisham carried the county by more than 20 points and about 18,000 votes. It was a similar story in 2022, when Lujan Grisham won the county by 16 points and about 11,000 votes.

But at least for now, Haaland’s next stop on her launch tour included Deming, Silver City and Socorro before she heads elsewhere in the state.

Kate Hudson stars in "Running Point"

Kate Hudson holds court in Netflix comedy series "Running Point"

celebrityupdate

BY JAY BOBBIN

Q: When filmmaker David Lynch passed away, I heard that his movie "Mulholland Drive" — which starred Naomi Watts — was meant to be a TV project instead. Is that true?

A: It is. By the time he made that 2001 release, Lynch had established his reputation as one of television's most unique series providers via the 1990-91 ABC run of the legendary "Twin Peaks." He tackled "Mulholland Drive" toward the end of that decade, with ABC again intended as its home ... but he ran into resistance after a network executive watched the pilot and expressed dislike for it, resulting in the cancellation of the project before it ever got on the air.

Reportedly, Lynch felt constrained by the deadline he had to meet for the pilot, giving him no time to "finesse" it (as he put it) the way he would have liked to. The network's complaints were said to have included the ages of stars Naomi Watts and Laura Harring, who were deemed too old for their roles as two women drawn together by a complex mystery in Los Angeles.

Though "Mulholland Drive" was initially made without an ending, which is standard practice for a series pilot, Lynch came up with one after the rejection by ABC. He reworked much of the script as a whole, and with funding from the French company StudioCanal, he filmed the new material and shaped it into the movie that ultimately was released in America by the Universal Pictures subsidiary Focus Features.

Watts has given much credit to Lynch for boosting her career, via "Mulholland Drive," to a degree that made her one of the more prominent actresses working in movies. It had its unveiling at the 2001 Cannes Film Festival, and it earned Watts a number of award nominations. Among the accolades she won for it were a National Board of Review Award and a National Society of Film Critics Award, and she said upon Lynch's passing, "He put me on the map."

“The 31st Annual Screen Actors Guild Awards” (Feb. 23)

Awards season is in full swing, and the Screen Actors Guild Awards ceremony makes its 31st annual showing Sunday, Feb. 23, live on Netflix. Hosted this year by Kristin Bell, the event celebrates the contributions of talented actors to their craft through the last year. Voted on by SAG-AFTRA's robust and diverse membership of 130,000-plus performers, the ceremony presents 13 awards across film and television.

“Full Swing” - Season 3 (Feb. 25)

This immersive documentary series follows a diverse group of professional golfers — both returning favorites and some new faces — on and off the course through all the triumphs and challenges of a relentless competition season. As they take on the nonstop, high-stakes schedule of the PGA Tour, cameras follow the golfers, their families and their teams as they train for and play in The Players, The Masters, the PGA Championship, the U.S. Open, The Open Championship and FedExCup Playoffs.

“Toxic Town” (Feb. 27)

Based on one of the UK's biggest environmental scandals, this is the story of the people at the heart of the Corby poisonings. Focusing on the mothers, who took on a David and Goliath battle for justice, the series traces through the years of their fight as a terrible truth comes to the surface. The series stars Aimee Lou Wood, Jodie Whittaker, Lauren Lyle, Claudia Jessie, Robert Carlyle, Rory Kinnear, Joe Dempsie, Brandon Coyle, Stephen McMillan, Matthew Durkan and Michael Socha.

“Demon City” (Feb. 27)

Framed for his family's murder and left for dead, ex-hitman Shuhei Sakata (Toma Ikuta) will stop at nothing to exact revenge on the masked “demons” who have taken over his city. Matsuya Onoe, Masahiro Higashide, Masanobu Takashima and Mio Tanaka also star.

“Daredevil: Born Again” - Season 1 (Disney+ — March 4, Series Premiere)
Matt Murdock (Charlie Cox), a blind lawyer with heightened abilities is fighting for justice through his bustling law firm, while former mob boss Wilson Fisk (Vincent D'Onofrio) pursues his own political endeavors in New York. When their past identities begin to emerge, both men find themselves on an inevitable collision course. The series also stars Margarita Levieva, Deborah Ann Woll, Elden Henson, Zabryna Guevara, Nikki James, Genneya Walton, Arty Froushan, Clark Johnson, Michael Gandolfini, with Ayelet Zurer and Jon Bernthal.

“The Leopard” (Netflix — March 5, Series Premiere)
Based on what many consider to be one of the greatest Italian novels of all time, this series is a dazzlingly sensuous epic, set against the backdrop of revolution in 1860s Sicily. At its heart is Don Fabrizio Corbera (Kim Rossi Stuart), the Prince of Salina, who leads a life surrounded by beauty and privilege. But as Italy moves towards unification and the old aristocratic order is threatened, he realizes that his family's future is in jeopardy. New allegiances must be made, each one a threat to his principles.

"House of David" - Season 1 (Feb. 27)

This series tells the story of the ascent of the biblical figure, David (Michael Iskander), who eventually becomes the most renowned and celebrated king of Israel. The series follows the once-mighty King Saul (Ali Suliman) as he falls victim to his own pride. At the direction of God, the prophet Samuel (Stephen Lang) anoints an unlikely, outcast teenager as the new king. As Saul loses his power over his kingdom, David finds himself on a journey to discover and fulfill his destiny, navigating love, loss, and violence in the court of the very man he's destined to replace.

Pilar must prove to the country that she is not the irresponsible, insolent, lazy and useless woman that everyone believes her to be. The thing is, they might be right.

"The Nutty Professor" (Feb. 1)

"It's been an amazing experience, these almost 10 years! Watching my Little grow, mature, and unlock her potential every day. We have built a strong relationship side by side and have become a family. When we started the program, we enjoyed doing arts and crafts and hung out at the park. Now our outings consist of going to the movies, having lunch and in-depth and meaningful conversations about life and her future! I have been there for Camila for different life events, birthday parties and her 15th birthday celebration, to cheer her on and encourage her participation in the school ROTC. It's been a wonderful experience and appreciate the opportunity to be part of my Little's life - it literally feels like she is my little sister!"

"When I first heard about the BBBS program, it was through my older sister that had participated in the program as well. I thought it would be neat to have a person to do new things and explore my community. Never did I imagine building such a powerful, influential, and meaningful relationship with Delia. She really is like a big sister to me, she is a source of knowledge, guides me, gives me advice and options about my life and future, encourages me, and is such a great outlet for me to just talk! We enjoy our long conversations, cooking, and baking. We are always up to try new TikTok recipes! It's been wonderful to have Delia as my Big Sister!"

Powerful, prestigious and polished, the Dupree family reigns over their Maryland suburb with an air of class and sophistication — but they certainly don't live on easy street. Starring Tamara Tunie and Clifton Davis, "Beyond the Gates" — the first Black-led daytime soap opera to premiere in 25 years — makes its debut on CBS this Monday, Feb. 24. Couple Lisa and Mikey take a walk down memory lane, revisiting the unbelievable details of their pre-prison lives before sharing what eventually landed them behind bars. For Lisa, nature and nurture both play a role, while Mikey recounts meeting a local celebrity: the town sheriff. Struggling with his sobriety, writer Don Birnam (Ray Milland) agrees to spend the weekend with his brother, Wick (Phillip Terry). Instead of leaning on his family for support, however, Don convinces Wick to take him to a bar, where he quickly loses the battle of the bottle and tumbles into a seemingly never-ending spiral. Directed by Academy Award-winner Billy Wilder, 1945's "The Lost Weekend" airs on TCM this Saturday, March 1. ## NMSU Theatre presents that drive thru Monterey

BULLETIN REPORT

The stage is set for the opening of the NMSU Theatre Department's next production, "that drive thru Monterey," opening Friday, February 21 and running through March 2. Written by award-winning playwright Matthew Paul Olmos, the poetic and moving memory play was inspired by the life of his mother, and explores a Mexican American woman's journey from first love to heartbreak during a turbulent time in U.S. history.

Directed by senior theatre arts major Eva Cullen, the play explores the concept of machismo and how it is passed down from father to son, generation after generation – something those raised in Latino households can understand more than most.

"Now more than ever, it is important to share Chicano stories," Cullen said. "This story shares a beautifully tragic love story while touching on important issues of oppression and racism."

The characters in this show are real and raw, but also so young, and I see a lot of myself in all of them and I think the audience will too."

In an interview with the Las Cruces Bulletin, which ran in December of 2024, Cullen revealed that acting in NMSU's 2023 production of "Carmela Full of Wishes," helped them connect with their culture, which led to doing research into the Chicano and feminist movements of the 1970s that contributed to their vision for the production. Shedding light on social justice issues has become a passion for the young thespian.

In talking about this particular project, Cullen stresses the path to empathy and community the production offers. "The team and cast are full of students, and many of us are Mexican-American," they said. "Not too often does this borderland community get to see stories about people who look like them and who have lived similar lives. To see your community represented and to be able to relate to their struggles, but also their joy and culture, can be a really amazing and empowering experience."

"that drive thru Monterey" was the winner of the 2020 Miranda Family Nuestra Voces Latinx Playwriting Competition, and 2021 finalist for both the Bay Area Playwrights Festival and the National Playwrights Conference. The NMSU production features theatre students Daniela Galloso, Miguel Martinez, Athena McPeake, Okalani Ventura, Erick Granillo, and roles understudied by Chrys Trujillo, and Adan Hernandez.

Having earlier stated that they see theater as a "powerful tool," that can "bring us together," Cullen heartily endorses this project, stating, "The more and more that we go through rehearsals, the more and more I see just how relevant this story is and how we NEED this play now."

"that drive thru Monterey" opens at 7:30 p.m., Friday, February 21, with a public reception to follow. The show continues its run at 7:30 p.m., Saturday, February 22, Friday, February 28, and Saturday, March 1, with a matinee showing at 2 p.m., Sunday, March 2. All performances are held at the NMSU Center for the Arts, 1000 E. University Ave., Las Cruces. # Saddle up for Hope

MIKE COOK
For the Bulletin

Country western star and Las Cruces native Bri Bagwell will perform live during “For the Love of Girls and Horses Gala,” a fundraiser benefitting Bridle Up Hope (BUH) Las Cruces that will begin at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 25, at New Mexico Farm and Ranch Heritage Museum, 4100 Dripping Springs Road.

BUH Las Cruces was founded about a year and a half ago by Kelly Koerper, whose Horsegirls Charities nonprofit affiliates with Bridle Up Hope: The Rachel Covey Foundation.

The fundraiser’s keynote speaker will be BUH Executive Director Nicole Holgreen, who is traveling to Las Cruces from the foundation’s home base in Alpine, Utah. Las Cruces is the only BUH location in New Mexico, along with others in the U.S. states of Texas, California and Idaho and in Ukraine, Estonia and the Netherlands.

All BUH locations use an equine assisted learning (EAL) curriculum that integrates the principals of “The 7 Habits of Highly Effective People,” the international best seller written by Steven R. Covey in 1989. Covey was the grandfather of Rachel Covey, a horse lover who struggled with depression and died at age 21 in 2012, after which the Covey family created the foundation and the EAL curriculum to help “girls and women to recognize their inherent worth and potential,” according to www.bridleuphope.org.

Some of the more than 20 women and girls Koerper has worked with on her 4.25-acre site south of Mesilla have suffered from trauma and anxiety, she said, including two widows who came to BUH because nothing else was helping them cope with the loss of their husbands.

and women learn life skills and how to become “better horsewomen and better people,” Koerper said. “The horses are the therapists.”

Koerper said she has seen girls and women gain in hope and confidence through the relationships they develop during private lessons with horses Tasha, Blake, R Vee, Yogi Bear (that’s the pony), Invy, Sugar and Premium, as guided “in a completely safe space” by Koerper and four other teachers, who include professional horse trainers, a licensed pilot, a yoga instructor and one who has worked with both sled dogs and abused horses.

The meal served during the gala will include smoked beef tri tip and green chile mashed potatoes and is catered by Marci Dickerson. There

Jim Graham champions the benefits of adobe homes

MIKE COOK
For the Bulletin

“The acoustics of it, the feel of the inside of an adobe,” is one of its most appealing aspects, said long-time Las Cruces home builder Jim Graham. That’s because adobe “doesn’t reverberate as much as frame walls,” he said.

They may cost a little more and take a little longer to build, but adobe houses are also more sustainable and more energy efficient than other types of home construction and have higher resale value, Graham said. They are also often more appealing inside and out, and welcoming to any style of furniture, he said. And adobe is bulletproof!

The owner of Sun & Earth Construction LLC, Graham has built more than a dozen adobe houses in Las Cruces in the past 40 years. A native of Albuquerque, he came to Las Cruces in 1976 to attend New Mexico State University, where he earned a degree in biology. He got a builder’s license in 1984.

Graham and a four-man crew are currently at work on a custom-built

1,800-square-foot adobe house on McFie Street, just west of downtown Las Cruces. Graham said he has subcontracted out for plumbing, electrical, stucco, and concrete work on the house, which he said should be ready for the owners to occupy in March.

In addition to about 3,500 adobe bricks that were handmade in Las Cruces, the house includes an air-to-water heating and cooling system, with delivery tubes embedded in the cement floor, Graham said.

and cooling is cleaner and quieter than heating and cooling systems that utilize air vents, he said, and “pets love it.”

The house also has an all-electric photovoltaic energy system. As a result, part of the financing for the house has come through the New Mexico Sustainable Building Tax Credit, Graham said.

The house has fiberglass windows (most houses in the United States have vinyl windows), which Graham said are energy efficient, seal tightly and have a special coating that reflects heat. The solid-core doors, wood trim throughout the house (including window sills) and cabinets are made of alder, he said. Alder trees, which grow in the Pacific Northwest, and are known for their sustainability.

The house also has rainwater and gray-water collection systems, Graham said, and is handicapped accessible, with a 36-inch-wide front door with no step down from the front porch into the house.

Plasterwork for the house is being done by Larry Limon, a fourth-generation Mesilla “maestro yesero” (a traditional plasterer of historic adobe structures) whose work is recognized throughout the Southwest.

“It’s not just chicken wire and spread cement,” said Limon, who is using gypsum plaster in a multi-step process for the interior of the McFie house.

Limon, who received a cultural preservation award from the New Mexico Department of Cultural Affairs in 2017, has taught plastering in multiple venues and has worked on projects that include Phillips Chapel CME in Las Cruces, the oldest African-American church in New Mexico, and the historic Amador Hotel.

Graham said adobe is the most common building material in the world, with a history dating back 10,000 years. Sustainable building became more popular in the United States during the energy crisis of the 1970s, he said, and is making a comeback because “it’s much cheaper in the long run (and is) built to last a thousand years, we hope.”

Graham said he lives in a cinderblock house in Las Cruces, but is working on the design for an adobe home of his own.

Las Cruces passes landmark zoning reform after intense public discussion

JUSTIN GARCIA
Las Cruces Bulletin

After hours of public participation, the city of Las Cruces council voted 6-1 to pass a comprehensive reform to the city’s zoning and development laws on Feb. 18.

The plan, called Realize Las Cruces, amends zoning regulations, maps, subdivision rules, sign regulations and design standards – something Las Cruces has not done since 2001.

“It’s an opportunity to have flexibility in our community,” said Mayor Eric Enriquez after the vote.

According to a presentation by Community Development Deputy Director Chris Faivre, streamlining and simplifying development procedures was a key focus of the years-long effort.

Realize Las Cruces has been in the works since the city approved its most recent comprehensive plan, Elevate Las Cruces, in 2020. There have been public meetings, town halls, and news articles about it from the start. But the Tuesday meeting saw over two hours of public participation, with residents speaking in favor of and against Realize Las Cruces.

Realize Las Cruces creates more flexible zoning districts. That includes character-based zoning, which values the desired character or aesthetic qualities of a neighborhood or district instead of focusing on simple and traditional categories like “residential” or “commercial.” The plan keeps some of those legacy zoning types in some areas.

Realize Las Cruces also aims to streamline the development process by clarifying the roles of the city council, Planning and Zoning Commission and other bottleneck points.

The plan also affects historic preservation efforts and tries to promote sustainability by emphasizing low-impact development practices and green infrastructure incentives and introducing drainage and flood control requirements to reduce the impact on the environment.

For many against, the top concern revolved around a fear that certain commercial zoning – such as dispensaries – would be allowed near housing. Realize Las Cruces does allow for more mixed-used areas, Faivre explained. But that would be limited to uses like bed and breakfasts, small grocery stores and cafes.

“The idea was to add a few features to neighborhoods that have low intensity, low impact,” Faivre said. “I think the key point to realize is that they still have to meet all design standards.”

Faivre added that those standards created restrictions that make it extremely unlikely for undesirable commercial properties to be near housing.

“And that’s where I can’t vote yes on this,” said Councilor Bill Mattiace. “You talk about probable. We probably won’t let that happen. But it could happen.”

Dozens of people echoed Mattiace’s concerns, but so too did dozens of residents express support for the plan. Ultimately, Mattiace was the only councilor to vote against the measure.

After the regular business of the council,

Councilor Cassie McClure characterized the discourse as civil.

“I was anticipating a lot of commentary. But it was good, and it was civil, and I appreciate that,” McClure said.

The actual vote repealed chapters 23 through 40 of the Las Cruces municipal code and replaced them. The Planning and Zoning Commission unanimously passed the same changes in November 2024.

Realize Las Cruces does not go into effect immediately. There will be an eight-month transitional period where developers can use the new or old code.

Fabric and craft store closing

BULLETIN REPORT

Joann, a fabric and crafts store located on east University Avenue, will shutter its Las Cruces location after the company said it will close over half its stores nationwide.

The company said in February that it would close 500 of its 850 locations, including one in Las Cruces and one in Santa Fe, after filing for bankruptcy in January.

“This was a very difficult decision to make, given the major impact we know it will have on our Team Members, our customers and all of the communities we serve,” the company said in a statement released to news media. “A careful analysis of store performance and future strategic fit for the Company determined which stores should remain operating as usual at this time.” The company did not say when the stores would close.

Police auditor to host meeting

BULLETIN REPORT

OIR Group, an independent police auditor hired by the city of Las Cruces to review the Las Cruces Police Department’s policies and practices, will host a town hall on Feb. 14.

The meeting at 6 p.m. at Las Cruces City Council Chambers is meant to connect residents with the OIR Group and gain insight into the firm’s purpose, function, and types of services.

“Participants are encouraged to ask questions of the police auditors in an open forum and share experiences, information or concerns to help the OIR Group get a pulse on policing in our community,” a news release said.

The same day, OIR will present its semi-annual report on the police department to the Las Cruces City Council. That meeting will be at 1 p.m.

“The OIR Group reviews LCPD Internal Affairs investigations into alleged misconduct and provides feedback on the accuracy of the findings. The firm presents its findings and recommendations to City Council twice a year,” the news release said.

NMSU GOLF

Klose crowned champ

MICHAEL NAVARRETTE
For the Bulletin

LAREDO, Texas – For the second time this season, an Aggie has played his way to an individual title.

After posting a 67 (-4) in the final round on Tuesday, Ethan Klose earned the individual crown at the Border Olympics hosted by the University of Houston at Laredo Country Club. Klose ultimately finished the week at five under to earn the victory over No. 50 Hunter Thomson of Michigan. NM State's Aidan Thomas also turned in a top-10 finish as he finished at even-par to end the week in a tie for sixth place.

The efforts of Klose and Thomas also helped the Aggies improve one spot on the team leaderboard as they finished tied for second alongside host and 47th-ranked Houston. NM State has now logged three consecutive top three finishes as a team dating back to October when they took home the team title at the Herb Wimberly Memorial.

Across the two-day event, the Aggies totaled 861 strokes to finish nine over par. This would fall just six strokes shy of tournament champion Louisiana who shot a combine one-under on Tuesday to finish three strokes over par for the week.

of himself as just a coach, just like he doesn't see his players as female athletes, just athletes. Arguing about putting labels on the players does little to actually help them, he said.

When asked what he wants to see out of his players during a game, he said, "Hard work. Winning is always the goal, but I expect hard work."

A lifetime of success, reflection

Maya led Mayfield to their very first state championship in 2004.

That's when Maya's self-doubts about whether he was cut out for the job were silenced. The girls' team became a powerhouse, and when Maya's daughter Jeneca Maya Montoya joined the coaching staff five years ago as the freshman coach, Montoya had to cut 15 girls at the time.

Now, a new challenge surfaces as Maya has no retirement date set.

The Trojans are almost back to square one. There are only 17 players on the 2024-2025 team, and seven seniors will leave next season. The team will lose nearly half its members, with only three junior varsity players and three first-year students waiting in the wings.

and won a state title with her dad in 2007, says the eagerness to join the team isn't the same.

"Now we're in the hallway asking girls to try out for the team," Maya Montoya says.

Although Maya is happy with his program and has built relationships with past players that will last a lifetime, the coach thinks it is only a matter of time before school sports programs become obsolete.

He recounts the past years of low fan turnout for the team, but the lack of commitment has never been this severe. Maya blames multiple factors for their struggling attendance numbers, saying kids today have better things to do than join a team, and the commitment to the team is seen as a waste of time.

Maya also says the lack of community, which used to be the backbone of any good sport, makes it hard to keep players committed. Maya used to take in kids struggling with school or family life, giving them a stable and supportive environment to thrive.

This change comes at a significant moment for girls' sports, especially basketball, where the popularity of pro and college teams continues to grow.

Maya said he could be as demanding on his team as he wanted at some point because he had girls waiting to take someone's spot. Now, the coach who has never talked about retiring says he's glad about the end of his career being on the horizon.

"These kids want to get paid before doing work," Maya said.

Maya says he still loves coaching and has no plans to quit soon unless "the good Lord has a different plan for him."

His granddaughter plays on the varsity team, and the dwindling numbers haven't affected another successful season for Maya and his team, which is ranked first in the district and third in the State.

Dottie Pepper takes on-course golf commentary to new heights

My favorite on-course analyst/announcer for PGA Tour tournaments is CBS's Dottie Pepper. She's a professional's pro.

Pepper started with CBS in 2016. After 16 years playing LPGA tournaments, she retired from tour events at the end of the 2004 season. In 2005, she began working as a golf commentator for NBC and The Golf Channel, reporting events for men's and women's. After a hiatus from 2012 to 2015, she began a contract with CBS in 2016, replacing David Feherty.

Pepper was born in Saratoga Springs, NY, and still resides there. Her father, Don Pepper, was a major league baseball player for the Detroit Tigers.

Dottie Pepper won the New York State Amateur title in 1981 and the 1981 and 1983 New York Junior Amateur titles. She attended Furman University, where she earned five collegiate victories and was named All-American three times. Her play on the LPGA Tour spanned 1988 through 2004. She tallied 17 LPGA Tour victories, including two majors – the Nabisco Dinah Shore in 1992 and 1999. She was the recipient of the 2016 William D. Richardson Award presented by the Golf Writers Association of America for her “consistently outstanding contributions to golf.” In 2024, the Golf Course Superintendents Association of America awarded her with its highest honor, the Old Tom Morris Award, for her commitment and impact on the game of golf.

There is no doubt that Dottie Pepper has the credentials to call live golf. But her mastery of on-course narration covering golf's biggest stage puts her in her own exclusive category. James Colgan, writing for Golf.com, observes: “For two decades she has ... (been) gracing the overwhelmingly male airwaves of men's golf television with such precision and skill that her status as a trailblazer – as the first woman ever on a Masters telecast, and the first walking reporter ever, male or female, at the Masters – is often forgotten.”

CHARLIE BLANCHARD
Golf Doctor

The TV viewer can't really tell, but Pepper is not alone on the golf course with a mic in her hand.

She has some help from a group known affectionately as the “Dot Squad.”

They are Wayne, the spotter; David, her graphics help; Dorothy, a nurse serving as cart driver; Gus, who carries the monitor that lets her see the telecast; and a cameraman. The Squad manages to stay off camera, while Pepper goes about her business seamlessly, tying together storylines, brilliant shots and mistakes.

“I believe my job is much more a listening job than a talking job,” she says. Speaking of a recent tour event, she recalls, “I was listening for three-and-a-half hours and probably talked for a total of three minutes.”

In my view those few minutes are more insightful and valuable than the continuous jabber of the booth announcers. Several of Pepper's CBS teammates suggest that the profound seriousness she carries to her work is a significant piece of her skill, noting that the work reflects her but has never been about her.

In his piece on golf.com, Colgan notes that Pepper's “greatest skill is not an ability to articulate better than anyone else, but a willingness to do so fearlessly.” He cited the prime example of that when she walked the course at Torrey Pines in late January at the Farmers Insurance Open with the final group that took nearly six hours to finish, and in a fit of exasperation, she stated, “I think we're starting to need a new word to talk about this pace of play issue, and it's respect. For your fellow competitors, for the fans, for the broadcasts, for all of it. It's just got to get better.”

It was a shot heard 'round the world.
