J.R. Martinez is among the hosts of "American Veteran," a four-part, four-hour series that premieres Tuesday on PBS.

There is an unspoken understanding among combat veterans that just escapes civilians. PBS attempts to shed light on the veteran experience in an upcoming documentary series.

In "American Veteran," a four-part, four-hour series that premieres Tuesday, Oct. 26 (check local listings), those who fought in conflicts ranging from World War II to the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan tell their stories of military service – why they joined, how it changed them and how those who served should never be forgotten. There are nearly 18 million veterans in this country and at times throughout history they've been honored, reviled, ignored or forgotten but always they've returned to a world that doesn't understand them. And they always feel comfortable around their own.

Each of the four episodes is hosted by a veteran: former Marine and "The Price Is Right" host Drew Carey; Sen. Tammy Duckworth, an Iraq War Army veteran and Purple Heart Recipient; actor Wes Studi, a Vietnam War veteran with the National Guard; and actor J.R. Martinez, an Army veteran.

"I wanted veterans who had a range of experiences," explains Leah Williams, the series' director and producer, "to see how whatever it is that they're dealing with, that someone else, another veteran is also dealing with that as well, whether that's physical, emotional wounds, highs, lows, whatever that may be. That is literally one of the reasons why we wanted to create this series."

One theme that surfaces in "American Veteran" is boot camp. Talk to any veteran and they'll tell you that you don't come out the same as when you went in, which was certainly the case for Martinez when he enlisted in the Army in 2002.

"One of the biggest things my recruiter told me right before I left to basic training," Martinez explains, "he said, 'Whatever you do, you do not want the drill sergeants to know your name.' ... Within the first, I think, day of arriving at basic training, they knew my name, and I quickly understood why I didn't want them to know my name. Because then it just became a target on my back: Martinez, Martinez, Martinez.

"But I believe honestly those are the things that really allow service members that are that naive about the world and that innocent in many ways to be broken down mentally and emotionally and find that thing inside of them so that those drill sergeants, the military can then shape them to be prepared to be these incredible service members they become."

"American Veteran" is part of an initiative that also includes a 10-part series of digital shorts on the PBS Voices YouTube Channel and a nine-part podcast available on all major podcast platforms.

DISCOVER FLORIDA'S FIRST LIGHTHOUSE

Where it all began...

To understand the significance of Menorcan's at the St. Augustine Lighthouse, we must recognize their role in its history. Many lightkeepers were of Menorcan descent, including Juan Andreu, the first lighthouse keeper in the newly lit St. Augustine Lighthouse, Juan Carrera, Joseph Andreu, Maria Andreu, and Siladonio Pellicer. These individuals, whose ancestors traveled to New Smyrna to work as indentured servants, were instrumental in the rise of Menorcan culture in St. Augustine.

Perhaps the most notable of Menorcan Lighthouse Keepers was Maria de los Delores Menstre Andreu, a woman of many firsts. After her husband Juan's tragic passing, Maria became the first female lighthouse keeper and Hispanic-American woman to serve in the United States Coast Guard and command a federal shore installation, setting a precedent for Hispanic American women serving in the military. For over 150 years, Maria Andreu's trailblazing experience has inspired generations of women to serve their country.

Bronx-born Kemba Walker comes home to the Knicks

For Kemba Walker, landing in New York with the Knicks was a dream realized.

So when he stepped onto the court at Madison Square Garden for the Knicks' preseason opener on Oct. 5 wearing the familiar blue, orange and white of the team he rooted for growing up, the Bronx-born and -raised point guard felt all was right with the world. Now, he just has to produce.

The four-time NBA All-Star certainly possesses the skills. A team-first player, Walker knows how to read the game, hit the open man and sink the crucial shot. And he provides veteran leadership.

But the shelf life of 31-year-old point guards can be perilously short and the 11th year veteran most definitely has a few miles on his odometer. He signed with the Knicks this offseason after being waived by Oklahoma City following a trade from Boston, his team the past two seasons. He suffered through an injury-riddled 2020-21 season that limited him to only 43 games. He also has an arthritic left knee that scared a lot of teams off. Still, his per-game numbers last season – 19.3 points, 4.9 assists, 1.1 steals – were solid.

This season, he'll alternate with returning vet (and former MVP) Derrick Rose to run the offense for the Knicks, pairing with fellow offseason acquisition Evan Fournier to form a dynamic new-look backcourt. Given New York's offensive flameout in its five-game loss to Atlanta in last season's Conference Quarterfinals, the new configuration figures to be a welcome change.

Walker and the Knicks can be seen in action Tuesday, Oct. 26, at home against the Atlantic Division rival Philadelphia 76ers in a game airing on TNT.

How 'The Lost Kitchen' chef Erin French learned to roll with the COVID-19 blows

Viewers of Season 1 of "The Lost Kitchen" on discovery+ got to bear witness to an entrepreneur's mind in action, as restaurateur Erin French brainstormed ways to keep her Freedom, Maine, eatery The Lost Kitchen afloat amid the lockdown conditions of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Among her solutions was to create an online farmers' market, where she could peddle the meats, seafood, cheeses, produce and other locally sourced ingredients that would normally go into her menu items to retail customers, a venture that turned out to be quite successful.

Needless to say her vendors, who were also feeling the financial stresses of quarantine, loved her for it. But it also underscored to her an important point about the industry she's in: That it's not just a group of buyers and sellers but a financial ecosystem, where if one piece falters, the community feels it.

"To be able to support people and small makers in a place you call home, I think there's no greater way (than) to eat the food that's grown in the place you live ...," French reasons. "I had this black box of the most amazing farmers who were making the most food and it was like my Rolodex of the best makers around. And I got to share that through COVID with my customers and saying, 'I'm going to get this food straight to you because I can't cook it for you right now.' And that was a really nice piece of joy to be able to share all of those secret ingredients and to introduce people to those farmers in this place because that's how you thrive in the place you call home."

"The Lost Kitchen" returns for its second season Friday, Oct. 29, continuing to follow the day-to-day machinations of French and her staff at the rural Maine eatery about 30 miles northeast of Augusta, where she has a long waiting list of diners from around the country and world waiting to feast on dishes created from the best of locally sourced ingredients.

"If I had to tell you (one of the) things that made this place successful, it would be sourcing local food," she says. "I mean, part of it is that I believe that vegetables feel jet lag and the closer (to harvest) you get them, the fresher they're going to taste. And even as a cook, it's shaped me because I never make a grocery list and go shopping. I look at what there is available and then it's my job to figure out what to do with it."
