Joe Cole stars in the AMC+ series version of "The Ipcress File," which premieres Thursday.

'The Ipcress File' opens anew in AMC+ espionage drama

Harry Palmer may not be James Bond, but he's had his own longevity in the spy game ... with a number of common threads.

Novelist Len Deighton's working-class sleuth has displayed investigative smarts over a six-decade history in literature and film, and the story that introduced him – "The Ipcress File" – gets a fresh workout in a limited series premiering Thursday, May 19, on AMC+. Joe Cole ("Gangs of London," "Peaky Blinders") assumes the role Michael Caine famously played in a series of films, as military veteran Palmer is arrested for smuggling in early-1960s Berlin.

His only way out of a long prison term is to agree to act as an operative for British intelligence, with his first case apparently linking someone he knows to the disappearance of a nuclear scientist. Lucy Boynton ("Bohemian Rhapsody"), Tom Hollander ("The Night Manager") and David Dencik ("No Time to Die") also star as the globetrotting tale takes Palmer to Beirut and the Pacific over its six episodes.

The executive producers of "The Ipcress File" include Hilary and Steven Saltzman, a highly notable fact since their father Harry – who, in partnership with Albert R. Broccoli, also made the early James Bond movies – was the producer of the Harry Palmer screen capers in the 1960s. (The elder Saltzman also enlisted such Bond-series staples as composer John Barry, production designer Ken Adam and editor Peter Hunt for the first version of "The Ipcress File.")

Though Christopher Plummer and Richard Harris reportedly were among the first choices to play Palmer, Saltzman is said to have started considering Caine after seeing the actor in his first major movie role in 1964's "Zulu." Spotting Caine at another table while eating out, Saltzman summoned him over ... and by the time Caine returned to dining partner Terence Stamp, he had the part of Palmer.

For the new "Ipcress File," star Cole has retained the bespectacled look associated with Caine, who went on to portray Palmer in two other Saltzman-produced theatrical pictures in successive years, "Funeral in Berlin" (1966) and "Billion Dollar Brain" (1967). As it turned out, he wasn't done with the role after those projects: He would reprise it in two mid-1990s cable movies originally presented on Showtime in the United States, "Bullet on Beijing" and "Midnight in Saint Petersburg" (both teaming him with Jason Connery, son of Sean Connery, who played Bond for Saltzman).

Whether the remake of "The Ipcress File," which already has been shown in England, prompts further revisitations of the adventures of Harry Palmer remains to be seen. For now, fans of the 1965 movie are likely to find it interesting to see the new take on a truly classic spy story.

Get educated and hungry with tantalizing fare on Discovery Networks

The U.S./Mexico border has long been a hotbed of culinary delights and now a new series on discovery+ takes viewers on a tour of the places where travelers can find some interesting and unexpected fare.

In the currently streaming “Taste of the Border,” Claudia Sandoval (“MasterChef,” “Food Network Challenge”) is your host for this journey along our country’s southern border, from the Pacific Coast to the Gulf of Mexico, as she takes in the cuisines and the stories behind them while exploring the towns.

So in the episodes, she’ll make stops in places such as Mexicali for Chinese food and a history lesson; San Luis Colorado, Mexico, to sample incredible tacos and check out a date and fig farm; Monterrey, Mexico, where she tries suckling pig mole and local barbecue; and Hatch, N.M., for a visit to a chili farm and a date with a Sonoran hot dog.

So if you thought you knew all about Mexican food, you might get a few surprises in this new offering.

Also worth checking out on discovery+ is the recently premiered “Messy History of American Food.” As the title indicates, the series offers a wild and educational ride through the chaotic histories of some of the country’s most iconic foods, highlighting the messiest origin stories of American food and food culture.

So get ready to learn about the truth behind chicken wings, the real story behind burgers and the evolution of bread. It’s information inquiring foodie minds want to know.

Over on cable, Andrew Zimmern is always up to interesting things on Cooking Channel’s “Bizarre Foods: Delicious Destinations,” and in the episode airing Monday, May 16, he visits Santorini, the idyllic Greek island that boasts much natural beauty and a rich culinary history. Here, he samples tomato fritters, lamb fricassee and a local favorite, grilled octopus. Fare that’s exotic and mouth-watering.

Wednesday, May 18, on Cooking, “Food Paradise” offers up a cornucopia of iconic culinary delights such as swordfish tacos in Los Angeles, steamed crabs in Baltimore and key lime pie in the town that made it famous, Key West, Fla. Yum!

And if plant-based eating is of interest, you might want to check out the Sunday, May 15, episode of Food Network’s “Inside Eats With Rhett & Link,” which finds hosts Rhett McLaughlin and Link Neal at the labs and kitchen of Beyond Meat to try their innovative products and learn about the science behind them.
