Southern Vibes embraces being unique 'local hangout'

Southern Vibes Tasting Room and Wine Cellar got its start in the most grassroots of ways, as an idea that was simply created while sitting at a table and sharing good wine and conversation with friends.

Alayna Brewer is the owner of Southern Vibes, after deciding to try something different and opened the business in June 2020 after years of working in the medical field.

She decided to learn more about wine and began completing certifications to be a sommelier or wine steward.

"We got the idea after my husband and I spent several days tasting wine in California," Brewer said. "The atmosphere was so relaxed, and the people were so nice. We wanted a place to share good wine and conversation without the rushed pace of a restaurant or noise of a bar. I wanted to bring a tasting room to our area like we experienced in California."

However, creating a relaxing atmosphere is just half of the experience Southern Vibes is attempting to capture, with the other half being education and striving to create more wine lovers within the local community.

"Our mission at Southern Vibes is to create a comfortable and relaxing atmosphere for our customers to enjoy wine and learn more about what is in their glass," Brewer said.

There are currently five employees on staff, with chef Jason Klob and Brewer as an advanced sommelier as the main faces customers see and interact with.

The interaction Brewer hopes to make with each customer that comes into the tasting room and wine cellar is what she believes makes her stand out from others in the industry.

"We love talking with our customers, sharing recipes and ideas, and getting to know our customers' palates," Brewer said. "We want to make a suggestion that we know they will enjoy based on their preferences."

Although the Southern Vibes tapas menu rotates quarterly and there are weekly menu specials, the staff always looks to find the right fitting wine for each customer.

"Our chef loves speaking with customers to get their feedback and requests and getting ideas for the next quarter menu," Brewer said. "He is happy to share cooking techniques, recipes, tips and tricks of the trade. Alayna, our advanced sommelier, likes introducing people to new wines and helping find their favorites. All of our wines have been handpicked by Alayna and our prices are competitive in the retail market. Every menu item, including deserts are made in house."

Some of the offerings include wine by the glass, craft beer, cider by the glass, wine bottle retail, tapas menu, wine tasting, private wine pairing dinners, and off-site tastings are also available. There is also a monthly wine club.

"We will track down hard to find wines and make special orders for clients, if possible," Brewer said.

Live music from local artists is played on Wednesdays and trivia nights are on Thursdays.

Alayna Brewer decided to open Southern Vibes in June 2020.

"We have hosted birthday parties, wedding rehearsal dinners, wine glass paintings, wine tastings and other private events," Brewer said.

At the end of the day, she wishes that her customers have a relaxing, quiet and friendly experience after a visit to Southern Vibes.

"We want them to feel relaxed and welcome and find their local hangout," Brewer said.

Viral sensations Try Guys bring their brand of comedy to Food Network with 'No-Recipe Road Trip'

Keith Habersberger, Zach Kornfeld, Ned Fulmer and Eugene Lee Yang are all about trial and error. In fact, it's practically baked into the name of their comedy troupe – the Try Guys.

And now they're bringing their comic approach to cooking with "No-Recipe Road Trip With the Try Guys."

Premiering Wednesday, Aug. 31, on Food Network, the hourlong series finds the quartet going on the road to cities such as Atlanta, Los Angeles and Nashville and dropping in on two establishments to try their signature dish and then try to recreate it without the aid of a recipe or any instruction but with 100 percent commitment.

The twist here is that the Try Guys, who cut their comedic teeth as viral sensations on YouTube, have no culinary training but a few chops in the kitchen, so they're going on mainly their own intuition and past experience.

"When we're trying to recreate a dish," Habersberger explains, "we're always trying to recreate the core of the dish, then put a fun twist on it that makes it so that it's something that no one's had before. Not always a good something no one's ever had before, but it was definitely something no one's ever had before. So there's the tasting the dish and then trying to creatively create something new without actually being trained chefs who are good at that."

In Wednesday's opener, the Try Guys visit Nashville and the Indian restaurant Chaatable, where they try their hands at making dosas, which are similar to a crepe but made with fermented dough.

"That was challenging," Kornfeld says. "I would say half of us ended up making pancakes."

"I would say all of us made pancakes," Habersberger adds. "I don't think anyone successfully made a dosa as a dosa should be. Also, none of us really knew what a dosa was ... so we had to figure out how to make a quick dosa, which is really something that kind of – I wouldn't say doesn't exist but is not the popular version of it. So it was super hard and very confusing. None of us did anything right."

At the end of each episode, the chef with the most successful dish, as determined by a local chef and a guest judge, wins and gets the chance to have their dish put on that restaurant's menu. However outside the box it may be.

"We're judging on taste, presentation and creativity," Kornfeld says. "So depending on how lost we are, we may find ourselves leaning more into creativity."
