"McEnroe"
premieres Sunday
on Showtime.

Showtime's 'McEnroe' takes an intimate, eye-opening look at tennis' bad boy

Whatever you think you know about tennis great John McEnroe, throw it away. Because a documentary upcoming on Showtime might prove you wrong.

In "McEnroe," premiering Sunday, Sept. 4 (and available two days earlier to Showtime subscribers in streaming and on demand) takes an intimate look at the life and career of tennis' uber-decorated bad boy, whose brilliance on the court (World No. 1 ranking for four years; seven Grand Slam singles titles) was marred by temper tantrums and erratic behavior on and off it.

But that was during a pro career that spanned 1978-94, a far cry from the mature, introspective 63-year-old who is interviewed in "McEnroe." Here, the Queens, N.Y., native delves into his life and career in deeply personal fashion, touching on such topics as his family life with his wife, singer Patty Smyth, and their children; his rivalry with Bjorn Borg; his distant relationship with his late father John; his powerful will to be the best and his appalling behavior. Archival footage and interviews with Borg, Smyth, the McEnroe offspring, Billie Jean King and rock musicians Chrissie Hynde and Keith Richards, among others, augment the commentary.

The film almost has the feel of a psychiatry session as McEnroe bares his soul about aspects of his life, which was the goal for the film's director, Barney Douglas ("Warriors").

"(I wanted it) to be something where he's almost exploring himself and 'Why was I like that? Are there other things I haven't looked at? Am I going to make the same mistakes as my father?' " Douglas says, "And I feel like that is kind of a parable for me, it's a parable for John to himself. He's going, 'This great man, who had all these things going for him when he just self-destructed.' He's talking about his father but I feel like it's a warning to himself with his own kids, not to mess it up, not to be disconnected."

Indeed, his relationship with his father is what seems to weigh on him most in "McEnroe." But he has a soulmate in Smyth, his second wife and mother of two of his five children. He talks about feeling an immediate connection with her and she seems to have a window into his psyche. She even talks about writing a song that has the lyrics, "I married a bad boy who turned out to be a really good man."

"She brings so much of the poetic insight to John," Douglas says, "and she talks about, 'I wish I'd been with him since the beginning.' I think she just understands him in a way that perhaps other people haven't ... and I think that enabled him now to be in this place where he accepts himself as well. He's found that connection he was looking for."

Toward that end, the series features beautifully photographed dishes and food preparation. Many came from the novels on which the series is based, Sally Andrew's "A Tannie Marie Mystery," but others came from writer/director/executive producer Karen Jeynes, who adapted the books for television.

"We wanted the food to be meaningful to the story and the plot and also to the location where possible," Jeynes explains. "We wanted to perhaps showcase some food that is a bit unusual for people, that's quite South African or that's specific to the Karoo (the region in South Africa where the show is set and was filmed), so for example where sheep are farmed in great quantities in the Karoo. So we had kind of all these elements playing out and the first episode features the mutton curry."

Indeed, the mutton curry was arguably the star of the opening episode as there are scenes of mixing spices, sauteeing onions and mutton and frying mustard seed. Jeynes says that most of the food prep scenes in the series were done by Doyle Kennedy, a more than competent cook, though the more intricate knife work was filmed with a hand double.

"We just spent a lot of time with Maria doing kind of food choreography, really I would call it," Jeynes explains. "We'd go through the steps of the recipe with the chefs with that great team that we had, we'd obviously shoot it stage by stage. As you know, you've got to do it over and over again and you've got to take that bite over and over again and make it look delicious every time."

Other dishes made on the series include a berry sorbet, a chocolate cake, a vegan cake and a shepherd's pie. Viewers interested in trying their hand at these recipes can find them on Acorn's social media platforms.

“Movie: Sonic the Hedgehog 2”

This 2022 sequel to the 2020 hit “Sonic the Hedgehog” picks up the animated adventure eight months after the first film, which ended with Sonic (voiced by Ben Schwartz) defeating the evil Dr. Robotnik (Jim Carrey). The new story follows Sonic in another fight with Robotnik, who has returned with a new villainous sidekick (Idris Elba). James Marsden and Tika Sumpter also star.

“Post Malone: Runaway”

Filmed pre-pandemic in September 2019, this documentary from first-time filmmaker Hector Dockrill captures the rapper born Austin Richard Post — aka Post Malone — in the midst of his 37-stop North American tour and includes exclusive backstage access, live performances, intimate interviews and a peek into the Grammy-nominated artist’s world. (ORIGINAL)

“Sprung”

Garret Dillahunt (“Fear the Walking Dead,” “Raising Hope”) stars in this comedy series as Jack, a convict just released from prison because of the pandemic, who must shelter in place with other former inmates and band together to use their criminal expertise for good. Kate Walsh, Clare Gillies and Martha Plimpton also star. (ORIGINAL)

“Movie: Mamma Mia!”

The musical inspired by the songs of ABBA makes for a very entertaining movie, enhanced by lovely Greek locations. Amanda Seyfried plays a young bride-to-be who wants to know her father’s identity before she walks down the aisle. Her mother (Meryl Streep) isn’t much help with that, so she invites the likeliest candidates (Pierce Brosnan, Colin Firth, Stellan Skarsgard) to the nuptials.
