Sylvester Stallone stars in "Tulsa King," which begins streaming Sunday on Paramount+.

Sylvester Stallone becomes the 'Tulsa King' for Paramount+

Sylvester Stallone has dabbled in home-screen acting, but now, he's going all-in.

The action icon who made Rocky Balboa and John Rambo household names tackles a new character tailored to his style in "Tulsa King," a Paramount+ drama that begins streaming Sunday, Nov. 13. Created by Taylor Sheridan ("Yellowstone") – also an executive producer of the series alongside Stallone and "The Sopranos" alum Terence Winter – the show gives the star his first continuing weekly role as Dwight "The General" Manfredi, who leaves a 25-year prison term expecting to be rewarded for literally having killed for his Mob boss.

Instead, he's exiled from New York to Tulsa, Okla., where he builds a new "crew" of his own from some of the diverse people he encounters. The regular cast also includes Emmy winner Dana Delany, Martin Starr, Max Casella ("Doogie Howser, M.D."), Andrea Savage, Jay Will ("The Marvelous Mrs. Maisel") and Garrett Hedlund.

Stallone's history with "Tulsa King" dates back to the start of his familiarity with Sheridan. "I met Taylor a while back, actually," the actor-filmmaker says, "riding horses in California. I wanted him to write the screenplay for 'Rambo,' because I was getting lazy. Anyway, we moved on. Then he became very, very successful with 'Yellowstone,' and one day, he just had this idea (for 'Tulsa King'), called me up and pitched it to me in, like, three seconds. And I went, 'I'm in.' "

Having such an underworld role has been v"kind of a fantasy" for Stallone, he notes, "since I was rejected to be one of the 200 extras who basically stood behind a wedding cake in 'The Godfather.' I'd been trying to get in gangster films, and it just never happened. Everything comes to those who wait.

"Also, I wanted to play a different interpretation of a gangster," adds Stallone. "This is a fellow who's very educated ... reads Marcus Aurelius, reads Plato. He's into Machiavelli. He's a different animal than you would normally see in a, quote, 'gangster film.' "

Long after landing TV jobs on "Kojak" and "Police Story" in the mid-1970s, Stallone made appearances on "Las Vegas" and (as himself) "This Is Us." As he now shoulders his own series, he deems it "harder, faster, and longer" than making a movie.

"You really have to be quick. You have to work out of sync a lot of times, with sequences that don't follow the natural order of things. But most importantly, you have to keep your energy up. The amount of time we did ten episodes is the equivalent of doing five 'Rockys' in a row, with no break in-between. I have great respect for the crew in their diligence and endurance."

“Movie: The Passion of the Christ”

Mel Gibson sparked one of the biggest controversies in film history by producing and directing this graphic and emotionally powerful depiction of the final hours of the life of Jesus, portrayed by James Caviezel. Monica Bellucci plays Mary Magdalene in the 2004 drama, which makes extensive use of the Aramaic and Latin languages.

“Movie: Georgia Rule”

Jane Fonda delivers some tough love in this 2007 dramedy from director Garry Marshall (“Runaway Bride”) in which she stars as the title Idaho woman who takes in her troubled granddaughter (Lindsay Lohan, “Mean Girls”) for the summer while concealing a potentially destructive secret of her own. Felicity Huffman, Dermot Mulroney, Cary Elwes and Garrett Hedlund are also in the talented cast.

“Movie: My Old School”

This 2022 documentary from first-time director Jono McLeod recalls the case of Brandon Lee, who enrolled at a Scotland secondary school as 17-year-old fifth-year student only to have it discovered that he was a 30-year-old ex-student named Brian MacKinnon. Alan Cumming stars as MacKinnon in recreations of events.

“Movie: The Forgiven”

“Coriolanus” co-stars Jessica Chastain and Ralph Fiennes reunited for this 2021 drama about the reverberations of a random accident on the lives of local Muslims and Western visitors to a house party in the mountains of Morocco. Matt Smith, Abbey Lee and Marie-Josée Croze are also in the talented cast for director John Michael McDonagh (“Calvary”).

Going meatless doesn't have to be boring, says 'Today Food' correspondent Samah Dada

As a food blogger and an advocate for plant-based eating, "Today Food" correspondent Samah Dada is all about easy and healthy recipes. In fact, her go-to snack is pretty healthy as well.

"I could eat hummus for every single meal and be totally happy," she admits. "And I think that might be weird for others but for me it's perfectly normal. It's just so good and it's interesting because depending on where you are getting it, there's just a lot of different variations. ... You know, I was actually in Spain with my family and I was in Grenada and there is, of course, a lot of Arab influence over there. And eating hummus there is so much different than eating it somewhere else."

Now in her third season as the host of "Cooking," Dada travels the U.S. to explore the meatless food and culinary industries, interview farmers, chefs and experts and then use what she's learned to create recipes that viewers can make at home. From meat substitutes to vegetarian comfort foods, the California native of Indian descent endeavors to sort out the substance from the hype while exploding a few myths about going meatless.

"I think the most important one for me," she says, "is this idea that plant-based cooking and eating is boring, that it's a plate of steamed broccoli or that it's a salad. And I think that really misses a huge portion of plant-based cooking, which is being able to work with vegetables in a way where you can add heat, you can add spice and it totally transforms the flavor profile of a dish.

"I obviously am Indian and I've learned to work with spice for as long as I can remember," she continues, "and I think a lot of people are kind of intimidated by that so they don't really know how to work with spice in order to amp up the flavor of their vegetables or in order to make it more interesting."

She's also a subscriber to the philosophy of less is more, which is why most of the recipes she creates for "Cooking" and for her videos on TikTok, Instagram and YouTube are eight ingredients or fewer.

"I like to look at ingredients and pare them down to things that people can pronounce and things that people can recognize," she explains. "For example, most of my baked goods are made with mint flour and coconut flour and coconut sugar. ... And using those minimal ingredients not only makes it I guess digestible for somebody to make at home because it's easy, but it also makes the recipes a lot more inclusive for people who have dietary preferences or restrictions. ...

"But I think by making my recipes with really minimal ingredients and making them accessible, I hope to encourage more people to cook and feel really empowered while doing so."
