Lois Marris continues as third-generation agent

Real estate is something that is a family tradition for Lois Marris, who works with Ponte Vedra Club Realty, and is a third-generation real estate agent.

“My grandfather started his own real estate brokerage in the 1940s,” Marris said. “He had seven kids, and three of the four boys eventually opened their own real estate brokerages, including my dad. One uncle created a large brokerage for residential real estate and developments. Another uncle specialized in investment properties. My father chose to have a boutique residential brokerage and invested for himself.”

Having grown up around the real estate world, she was able to get to know the ins and outs of the business and what it entailed.

“Before becoming an agent, I learned a great deal about real estate as I had a front-row seat to my family’s different real estate practices,” Marris said.

When she knew real estate was for her as well, she made the decision to follow in her father’s footsteps when opening her own practice.

The teachings she learned from him growing up are still reflected in her practice today.

“I’ve followed my father’s approach to real estate, which is always serving and helping people with their transitions in life that involve a move,” Marris said. “Changes can be challenging, and I strive to provide sound counsel throughout the entire process and beyond, making the moving process as stress-free as possible.”

In 2000, her husband David joined the family real estate business, and she left a career in computer science to be a stay-at-home mom and manage the family’s investment properties.

However, only a year after joining her father in real estate, he passed away unexpectedly, and the family spent the next three years managing his estate and getting his 72 properties and business through the probate process.

“Those years taught us a special lesson in how real estate is so much more than a business,” Marris said. “It is also a way to partner with people as they live their lives. So many people told us stories of how dad had helped them get their first house, often sharing his commission to help a family find stability in a new home. My goal and passion are to always put the customer’s unique needs first and partner with them through the moving process.”

Other than carrying on her father’s legacy in how she works with her clients, she believes the experience she has gained in the field over the years is another aspect that separates her from other real estate agents.

“I now have over 20 years of experience in real estate, and I have experience with international buyers and sellers and am experienced with the Foreign Investment in Real Property Tax Act (FIRPTA) that can impact these transactions,” Marris said. She is a member of the Institute for Luxury Home Marketing (ILHM) and a Certified Luxury Home Marketing Specialist (CLHMS).

Although she leans on her personal experience and the wisdom of her father, she also realizes that real estate is an ever-shifting landscape, and the best realtors are the ones that can quickly adapt and be prepared to handle whatever is thrown at them.

“I strive to keep current in all things real estate, taking at least 15 hours of continuing education each year and keeping up-to-date on the latest technology and market data,” Marris said. “The real estate market in 2022 has been very interesting, and we expect to see some changes as we enter 2023. We’ve been in a very hot seller’s market but rising interest rates should slow things down.”

No matter how the market takes shape in the coming months and years, Marris believes she is ready to handle it head on.

“Whatever the market brings, I’m confident I’ll be able to guide people through it,” Marris said. “I watched my father successfully navigate the 17% mortgage interest rates of the 1980s, and I’ve been through two booming real estate markets and the great recession of 2009. Whatever the market does, there is always a strategy to help clients successfully navigate through.”

'America's Test Kitchen: The Next Generation' – Competition series brings home cooks to the next level

For those looking to raise their culinary game, "America's Test Kitchen: The Next Generation" should be required viewing.

Premiering Friday, Dec. 9, on Amazon Freevee, the 10-episode competition series tasks 11 home cooks with creating and presenting their dishes throughout a series of culinary challenges designed to test their kitchen skills as well as their ability to present and explain what they made.

The winner of each episode, as determined by a rotating judging panel of ATK regulars Dan Souza, Julia Collin Davison, Elle Simone Scott and Jack Bishop, wins the opportunity of a lifetime—to join the ATK team, write their own cookbook and get a $100,000 prize to fund a culinary business. Or as one contestant put it, you're winning a career. Jeannie Mai Jenkins ("The Real") is the host.

There's lots of good foodie info here, especially pertaining to cooking techniques, and viewers of all skill levels will certainly pick up something. But what sets this show apart is the presentation skills, which Souza says is critical to being a member of the ATK team.

"At the end of the day, it's whether someone can connect with an audience ...," he explains. "One of the things we're always looking for is confidence in presenting it. You know, even if the dish wasn't perfect, we wanted to see that you were confident and you could describe it. Obviously, we're looking at presentation right off the bat."

And, of course, the dish has to present as enticing because as the old adage goes, you eat with your eyes first.

"But once you get past presentation," Souza says, "it's taste and texture. We had a lot of issues with: Is it seasoned properly? You know, being able to use salt properly in a kitchen is probably the greatest skill you can have because it's what makes food pop and taste just right. And so you can put tons of stuff into it – herbs and cook it right and all that stuff – but if you don't season it right it kind of falls flat."

Through it all, the judges give their criticism, which is always diplomatic, constructive and kind. Because even if a contestant doesn't win, Souza and his fellow judges want each home chef to come away with new skills, knowledge and confidence. Because that's what the "America's Test Kitchen" brand is all about.

"This is a supportive environment," Souza says, "and we want to you to succeed, everyone's in this together and we felt it was really important to kind of send out that message of goodwill at the start. And so I think if you're into kind competition shows and you've seen 'Great British Baking Show' and stuff like that, you're going to like the vibes."
